On August 19, 1982, we had a very interesting conversation with Scott Smith concerning “The Tanner Project.” Mr. Smith confirmed the admissions he had made on August 1, 1982. He said that he used the alias “Steven Scott,” and that this was not the only alias he had used during his lifetime. He went on to reveal that he had written an article published in Seventh East Press under the name Steven Scott (see the issue for February 7, 1982, page 2). In the letter which Scott Smith wrote under the alias Steven Scott on April 9, 1982, he said that “Kirk Vestal . . . has taken over the editing of this project.” Kirk Vestal and Arthur Wallace wrote the book, The Firm Foundation of Mormonism (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 368-69, for a few comments about this book). Scott Smith was apparently involved in the production of The Firm Foundation of Mormonism. In a letter dated September 30, Smith wrote: “We have been editing Vestal’s book this week and guarantee you will be impressed. Shadow or Reality looks pretty weak in comparison. . . . This book is going to stun everyone.” In another letter Smith told of “a book I am assisting the writing of, which we hope to have out by the end of the year. You will find ample archaeological and scientific support for the B of M therein . . .” In the Acknowledgements on page iv of The Firm Foundation of Mormonism, we find the following: “Special thanks are also extended to Jennifer Garrison and Scott and Vicki Smith who typed and helped edit the manuscript in its various stages, . . .”

When The Firm Foundation of Mormonism finally appeared, it did not have the effect that Scott Smith had anticipated. Instead of running a favorable review, The Sunstone Review, March 1982, published a very critical assessment by the Mormon Egyptologist Edward H. Ashment. Scott Smith was incensed over the review, and, in a letter to the editor, April 1982, he referred to it as “essentially a hatchet job.” Smith went on to say that “Ashment’s attitude is exactly what critics want us to have and this will continue to give them the field with the resulting damage.” Not satisfied with having just one letter critical of Ashment published in The Sunstone Review, Scott Smith, or one of his friends in “The Tanner Project,” wrote a second letter under the assumed name of “Steven Scott” (The Sunstone Review, June 1982, page 33). The address is given as Calabasas, California, which is of course the city where the box for “The Tanner Project” is located. Sunstone magazine and The Sunstone Review have carried many letters from Scott Smith and other members of the Tanner Project. It has been suggested that Scott Smith may have used another alias in these publications. There is one name which we are very suspicious of, but we can only say at this time that a letter from this individual in behalf of the “Tanner Project” appears to have been written on the same typewriter as the letters from Scott Smith and “Steven Scott.” There are also similarities in style. In any case, Scott Smith and members of the Tanner Project have really tried to use their influence in those publications. In one issue of Sunstone, (July-August 1981) there are eight letters in the Reader’s Forum. Three of these letters are written by people who are now identified as participants in the Tanner Project, and slightly over half of the space in this issue is given to these individuals. In the issue for July-August 1980 (page 4), a letter from Scott Smith’s wife, Vicki, appears with the address given as “Thousand Oaks, CA.” In the same issue (page 2) we find a letter from “Scott S. Smith Calle Roble, California.” Calle Roble, of course, is the street which Smith lives on, not the city. As we have already shown, Smith lives at 2455 Calle Roble in Thousand Oaks.
Since the Tanner Project seems to have been working on the same matters as Robert and Rosemary Brown, it has been speculated that the Browns may be involved. At the present time, we have no real evidence to prove that this is the case. We do know that Scott Smith, Michael Griffith and Kirk Vestal have all been in communication with the Browns at different times, but this does not prove that the Browns had anything to do with setting up the Tanner Project. Although he acknowledges contacts with the Browns, Scott Smith seems to feel that they are more interested in finding scandals than dealing with the real issues. We know that Michael Griffith had been in contact with the Browns, but they became disturbed with him when he told us they had secretly tape-recorded a telephone conversation with us (see a letter by Griffith cited in Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith, page 20). Kirk Vestal has probably spent the most time with the Browns. According to an undated letter we received in February 1981, Vestal had prepared a manuscript for the Browns’ book, They Lie in Wait to Deceive:

... There is a man in Mesa, Az. ... His name is Robert L. Brown. He claims to know you and Jerold and is absolutely vicious in his denunciations of you and your work ... he assured me that answers would shortly be forthcoming through the efforts of himself, his wife ... and this young man Kirk Vestal. I never had an opportunity to examine any of the material he claimed he and Vestal were preparing to publish at that time, but I requested that he supply me with a copy of Vestal’s “Approach to the Book of Abraham” which he said would comprise the last chapter of their joint publication. Bob refused to supply me a copy claiming he wanted to keep it under wraps until the book was published. ...

About two weeks ago my brother called and said that another man he knew in Mesa, a Richard Finlenson ... had Kirk Vestal as a house guest and if I would call Kirk would be glad to talk to me. I spent subsequently about 60 to 70 minutes on the Phone with Mr. Vestal ... He told me that Mr. Finlenson had a copy of his Book of Abraham material and would be glad to send me a copy. I called back to the Finlenson home today and spoke with LaVonne [Lavon], Richard’s wife. She apologized for not calling me back but explained that she had spoken with Bob Brown and had been instructed not to send me a copy of the material, that I could wait until the book he was working on was published to read it.

We were able to obtain a copy of Vestal’s “Approaching the Book of Abraham” (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 368-69), but it was not published in the Browns’ book, They Lie in Wait to Deceive. They did, however, highly recommend the book The Firm Foundation of Mormonism by Vestal and Wallace (see page 171). We understand that the Browns sent Vestal’s manuscript to an Egyptologist for evaluation and that the Egyptologist recommended against publication. Scott Smith suggests that there was another reason why the Browns dropped Vestal’s work from their book, but we will not go into that matter here. In any case, in a letter dated April 9, [1982], “Steven Scott” said that “Kirk Vestal” has “taken over the editing of this project. You can reach him by writing c/o Helen Schlie at Temple-view Books, 409 E. 1st Av, Mesa, AZ 85204.” Since Robert Brown lives in Mesa, we suspected that the two probably were in contact with each other. It did not take us long to discover that an advertisement mentioning the Browns’ book said it could be obtained at the “Mesa Temple View Book & Supply Inc.” As it turns out, Helen Schlie was commended for “her encouragement” on page ii of the Browns’ book. Scott Smith told us that Kirk Vestal had originally planned to go to Mesa and stay with the Browns, but by the time he arrived they no longer had the room. He worked for Mrs. Schlie for a time and then left for South America. Mr. Scott felt Vestal’s trip to South America was probably financed by someone in Mesa. In any case, even if the Browns had nothing to do with setting up the Tanner Project, they seem to have had close contact with the man who may have been “the main motivator in the beginning.” Since “Vestal has a lot of the material in his files,” the Browns are probably in a good position to gain access to it.

According to Scott Smith, “The Tanner Project” is not going very well. He would like to see Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought or the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies pick up the ball. John L. Sorenson, Professor of Anthropology at Brigham Young University, has shown some interest in this matter. In a handwritten note, he remarked: “Some of us here are talking about holding a conference with enough experts taking on the Tanners’ garbage to blow them out of the water.”

Now that we have exposed the dubious foundation of “The Tanner Project,” we doubt that any respectable Mormon scholars will want to associate their names with it. The Tanner Project seems doomed to failure. Nevertheless, there is growing unrest among Mormon scholars who are not satisfied with the Church’s silent treatment. They feel that something has to be done. Steven Mayfield’s desire “to organize” is shared by many Mormons. Robert Brown’s non-profit organization is certainly a move in that direction, and Professor Sorenson’s threat of assembling “enough experts” to blow “the Tanners’ garbage” out of the water may also be a sign of things to come in the future. The Mormon leaders, of course, are trying to prevent a confrontation because they know a discussion of the issues will hurt the Church. Apostle Marvin J. Ashton, for instance, pleaded with his people to ignore those who find fault with the Church:

Whether accusations, innuendos, aspersions, or falsehoods are whispered or blatantly shouted, the gospel of Jesus Christ reminds us that we are not to retaliate nor contend... we declare there is no time for contention... Probably we will never be free of those who are openly anti-Mormon. Therefore, we encourage all our members to refuse to become anti-anti-Mormon. (The Ensign, November 1982, page 63)

After telling of Apostle Ashton’s attempt to restrain people like the Browns from contending with the Church’s critics, Linda Ostler Strack comments that “it remains to be seen if the LDS membership can restrain themselves” (The Sunstone Review, November 1982, page S). In the same article she says that “LaMar C. Berrett, professor of Church history at BYU, has been appointed by those ‘he is not at liberty to disclose’ to coordinate research on a number of anti-Mormon issues. Berrett points out that their work is directed largely to the missionary and others who are confronted with questions for the first time and have no resources available to them.” Professor Berrett says, however, that those who are involved in the research are “not going to enter into any dialogue with anti-Mormon writers. The main purpose is to help the poor innocent person who has never been confronted by those things.” Berrett feels that the Church must deal with the issues even if it costs thousands of members:

... The church must eventually answer these things but we’re old and big enough now that the Church isn’t worried about a falling away. If we have a few thousand fall away, we say “So what?” It’s a weeding out of those who have faith in the Church and those who don’t. (Ibid., page 4)

This is a very exciting time for us. After many years of laboring in the vineyard, we now see many Mormons turning to the Lord. There are thousands of ex-Mormons and concerned Christians who are working to bring the truth to the Mormon people. The best days of all appear to be ahead. We feel that prayer has been the real key to the success of God’s work among the Mormons, and we ask those who support our work to hold up Utah Lighthouse Ministry in prayer. We believe that God “is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Ephesians 3:20).

NOTICE: We may be writing more concerning “The Tanner Project,” the Browns and those who use similar tactics. If you have any information or photocopies of letters or other documents which throw light on this subject please let us know by writing to Utah Lighthouse Ministry, P.O. Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.

JOSEPH SMITH’S USE OF MAGIC CIRCLES AND ANIMAL SACRIFICE

As we indicated in the last newsletter, we are preparing a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. Because of the amount of material that has become available on this subject and because of typesetting problems and the time we have spent forming our non-profit corporation, we have not yet finished it. If things work out as we hope, we should have it completed in about a month.

Among the many things we will be discussing in this book, we intend to deal with Joseph Smith’s use of magic practices in his money digging activities. Mormon apologists used to try to discredit testimony that Joseph Smith used a “seer stone” which he placed in his hat to try to discover buried treasures. In 1971, however, Wesley P. Walters discovered an original document which proves that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, N.Y., in 1826. This document is Justice Albert Neely’s bill showing the costs involved in several trials held in 1826. The fifth item from the top mentions the trial of “Joseph Smith The Glass Looker.” Below is a photograph of this portion of the document (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 33 for a photograph of the complete document).

The importance of this discovery cannot be overstated, for it establishes the historicity of the account of the trial which was first published in 1873. We quote the following from the court record:

---

The importance of this discovery cannot be overstated, for it establishes the historicity of the account of the trial which was first published in 1873. We quote the following from the court record:
STATE OF NEW YORK v. JOSEPH SMITH.

. . . .

Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826. Prisoner examined: says that he came from the town of Palmyra, and had been at the house of Josiah Stowel in Bainbridge . . . That he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and had looked for Mr. Stowel several times, . . . at Palmyra he pretended to tell by looking at this stone where coined money was buried in Pennsylvania, and . . . had occasionally been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, . . . (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality, page 32)

Joseph Smith’s mother, Lucy Mack Smith, seems to have been willing to concede that magic was an “important interest” of her family. Wesley P. Walters quotes her admission in an article entitled, “From Occult to Cult With Joseph Smith, Jr.”:

. . . it is quite clear that Joseph Smith surrounded his money digging activities with a religious atmosphere that flavored of the occult. . . . One such feature was the use of a circle marked off on the ground, a practice inherited from medieval magic and considered to aid the magician in his dealing with dangerous spirits. Joseph’s use of such magic devices in his early years gave his mother concern in later life that the family not be thought of as having devoted their entire time to such occult matters. In the preliminary draft of her history of that early period (but omitted from the printed version) she wrote:

. . . let not the reader suppose that . . . we stopt our labor and went at trying to win the faculty of Abrac, drawing magic circles, or sooth saying, to the neglect of all kinds of business. We never during our lives suffered one important interest to swallow up every other obligation.

Thus it is quite clear from all sides that Joseph wove occult religious material into his money digging practices, and this led the communities where he dug for treasure to associate him with divination, necromancy, and wizardry. (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y. Court Trials, Part 2, pages 126-127)

One of the most important parts of magic ritual is the drawing of circles to gain control over evil spirits. In magic books it is claimed that a circle drawn within a circle has great power. In The Ancients Book of Magic, page 10, we learn that a person who wants to contact the spirits must draw a circle, and once he enters into the circle with his books, wands, incense and all things he needs, he draws the outer circle about 3 inches away from the circle he has already drawn . . . The operator must remember not to leave this circle during the whole invocation until the closing words have been said, for as long as he remains in the circle, no matter how fierce the demons may be they cannot break through the walls of the circle, . . .

Joseph Capron tells how Joseph Smith used stakes to form a circle around the treasure:

The sapient Joseph discovered, north west of my house, a chest of gold watches; but, as they were in possession of the evil spirit, it required skill and stratagem to obtain them. Accordingly, orders were given to stick a parcel of large stakes in the ground, several rods around, in a circular form. This was to be done directly over the spot where the treasures were deposited. A messenger was then sent to Palmyra to procure a polished sword: after which, Samuel F. Lawrence, with a drawn sword in his hand, marched around to guard any assault which his Satanic majesty might be disposed to make. . . . But, in spite of their brave defender, Lawrence, and their bulwark of stakes, the devil came off victorious, and carried away the watches. (Mormonism Unveiled, pages 259-60)

William Stafford gave the following information in his affidavit:

Joseph Smith, Sen., came to me one night, and told me, that Joseph Jr. had been looking in his glass, and had seen, not many rods from his house, two or three keys of gold and silver, some feet under the surface of the earth; and that none others but the elder Joseph and myself could get them. I accordingly consented to go, . . . Joseph Sen. first made a circle, twelve or fourteen feet in diameter. This circle, said he, contains the treasure. He then stuck in the ground a row of witch hazel sticks, around the said circle, for the purpose of keeping off the evil spirits. Within this circle he made another, of about eight or ten feet in diameter. He walked around three times on the periphery of this last circle, muttering to himself something which I could not understand. He next stuck a steel rod in the centre of the circles, and then enjoined profound silence upon us, lest we should arouse the evil spirit who had the charge of these treasures. After we had dug a trench about five feet in depth around the rod, the old man by signs and motions, asked leave of absence, and went to the house to inquire of young Joseph the cause of our disappointment. He soon returned and said, that Joseph had remained all this time in the house, looking in his stone and watching the motion of the evil spirit—that he saw the spirit come up to the ring and as soon as it beheld the cone which we had formed around the rod, it caused the money to sink. (Ibid., pages 238-239)

Animal sacrifices sometimes play an important role in magic ritual. In The Greater Key of Solomon, page 122, we find the following:

In many operations it is necessary to make some sort of sacrifice unto the Demons, and in various ways. . . Such sacrifices consist of the blood and sometimes of the flesh.

There seems to be evidence that Joseph Smith participated in blood sacrifices in his money-digging operations. For instance, in his affidavit William Stafford related:

. . . Old Joseph and one of the boys came to me one day, and said that Joseph Jr. had discovered some very remarkable and valuable treasures, which could be procured only in one way. That way, was as follows:— That a black sheep should be taken on to the ground where the treasures were concealed—that after cutting its throat, it should be led around a circle while bleeding. This being done, the wrath of the evil spirit would be appeased: the treasures could then be obtained, . . . To gratify my curiosity, I let them have a large fat sheep. They afterwards informed me, that the sheep was killed pursuant to commandment; but as there was some mistake in the process, it did not have the desired effect. (Ibid., page 239)

The reader will notice that it was a “black” sheep that was supposed to have been sacrificed. This is interesting because The Greater Key of Solomon, page 122, says that “Sometimes white animals are sacrificed to the good Spirits and black to the evil.” In any case, W. D. Purple, who attended Joseph Smith’s 1826 trial, related the following concerning another blood sacrifice:

Mr. Thompson, an employee of Mr. Stowell, was the next witness. . . . The following scene was described by this witness, and carefully noted: Smith had told the Deacon that very many years before a band of robbers had buried on his flat a box of treasure, and as it was very valuable they had by a sacrifice placed a charm over it to protect it, so that it could not be obtained except by faith, accompanied by certain talismanic influences. . . . the fruitful mind of Smith was called on to devise a way to obtain the prize. Mr. Stowell went to his flock and selected a fine vigorous lamb, and resolved to sacrifice it to the demon spirit who guarded the coveted treasure. Shortly after the venerable Deacon might be seen on his knees at prayer near the pit, while Smith, with a lantern in one hand to dispel the midnight darkness might be seen making a circuit around the spot, sprinkling the flowing blood from the lamb upon the ground, as a propitiation to the spirit that thwarted them. They then descended the excavation, but the treasure still receded from their grasp, and it was never obtained. . . .

What a picture for the pencil of a Hogarth! . . . it was declared under oath, in a Court of Justice by one of the actors in the scene, and not disputed by his co-laborers . . . (A New Witness For Christ In America, by Francis W. Kirkham, 1959, vol. 2, pages 366-67)

Wesley P. Walters has discovered a letter written in 1842 by Joel King Noble, a justice of the peace who tried Joseph Smith in a trial held in Colesville, N.Y., in 1830. Justice Noble relates that when Joseph Smith and others were digging “for a chest of money,” they procured a black dog and offered it as “a sacrifice [blo]od Sprinkled prayer made at the time (no money obtained) the above Sworn to on trial . . .” (Letter by Justice Noble, dated March 8, 1842, photographically reproduced in Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y. Court Trials, Part 2, page 134).

In the Book of Mormon Joseph Smith condemned the practice of animal sacrifices after the death of Christ (3 Nephi 9:19), but he later wrote that “These sacrifices, . . . will, when the Temple of the Lord shall be built, and the sons of Levi be purified, be fully restored and attended to in all their powers, ramifications, and blessings (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 211). Wandle Mace, a devout Mormon, recorded this statement in his journal:

Joseph told them to go to Kirtland, and cleanse and purify a certain room in the Temple, that they must kill a lamb and offer sacrifice unto the Lord which should prepare them to ordain Willard Richards a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. (“Journal of Wandle Mace,” page 32, microfilmed copy at Brigham Young University)
MORMON RESEARCHER FINDS SMITHS' 1825 MONEY-DIGGING AGREEMENT

In Lippincott’s Magazine we find this strange story about Joseph Smith’s money-digging activities in Pennsylvania:

...On a wilderness hill...his peek-stone discovered a ton of silver bars...The third hole had been sunk fifteen out of the necessary twenty feet when the treasure once more jumped to the other side of the big hole. Then the prophet had a vision: the blood of a black sheep must be shed and sprinkled around the diggings. Black sheep were scarce,...At Length, no sheep appearing, Joe said that a black dog might answer. A dog, therefore, was killed, and the blood sprinkled on the ground. After that the silver...waltzed about the big hole in such a lively manner that frequent tunnelling to effect its capture availed nothing. At last the prophet decided that it was of no use to dig unless one of their number was made a sacrifice. None of the faithful responded to his call, and thus the magnificent scheme was abandoned. Oliver Harper, one of the diggers who furnished the money, was soon afterward murdered. The prophet thought this might answer for a sacrifice: he again rallied the diggers, but the charm remained stubborn and would not reveal the silver. (Lippincott’s Magazine, 1880, pages, 199-200)

On April 23, 1880, the Salt Lake Tribune published a very important document which shows that Joseph Smith was involved with Oliver Harper’s widow in a money-digging agreement after Mr. Harper was murdered:

Ed. Tribune: Knowing how interested you are in any matter pertaining to the early history of our church, I enclose a slip cut from the Susquehanna, P. Journal of March 20,...

Respectfully yours,
B. Wade

The following agreement, the original of which is in the possession of a citizen of Thompson township was discovered by our correspondent, and forwarded to us as a matter of local interest.

The existence of the “buried treasure” referred to was “revealed” to Joe Smith, Jr., who with his father the prophet, at that time resided on what is now known as the McCune Farm,...upon the strength of which revelation a stock company was organized to dig for the aforesaid treasure. After the company was organized, a second communication was received by Joseph Jr., from the “other world” advising the seekers to suspend operations, as it was necessary for one of the company to die before the treasure could be secured.

Harper the peddler, who was murdered soon after,...was one of the original members of the company, and his death was regarded by the remainder of the band as a Providential occurrence, which the powers had brought about for their special benefit. The death of Harper having removed the only obstacle in the way of success, the surviving members, recommended operations, and signed an agreement giving the widow Harper the half of one-third of all the treasures secured. The following is the agreement, written by the old humbug, Joseph Smith, himself:

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT

We, the undersigned, do firmly agree, and by these present bind ourselves, to fulfill and abide by the hereafter specified articles:

First: That if anything of value should be obtained at a certain place in Pennsylvania near a William Hales, supposed to be a valuable mine of either gold or silver and also to contain coined money and bars or ingots of gold or silver, and at which several hands have been at work during a considerable part of the past summer, we do agree to have it divided in the following manner, viz: Josiah Stowell, Calvin Stowell and Wm. Hale to take two-thirds, and Charles Newton, Wm. I. Wiley, and the widow Harper to take the other third. And we further agree that Joseph Smith, Sen. and Joseph Smith Jr. shall be considered as having two shares, two elevenths of all the property that may be obtained, and shares to be taken equally from each third.

Second: And we further agree, that in consideration of the expense and labor to which the following named persons have been at (Johs F. Shepherd, Elijah Stowell and John Grant) to consider them as equal sharers in the mine after all the coined money and bars or ingot are obtained by the undersigned. Their shares to be taken out from each share; and we further agree to remunerate all the three above named persons in a handsome manner for all their time, expense, and labor which they have been or may be at, until the mine is opened, if anything should be obtained; otherwise they are to lose their time, expense and labor.

Third: And we further agree that all the expense which has or may accrue until the mine is opened, shall be equally borne by the proprietors of each third and that after the mine is opened the expense shall be equally borne by each of the shares.

Township of Harmony, Pennsylvania, November 1, 1825 in presence of:

Isaac Hale Joseph Smith Sen.
David Hale Isaiah Stowell
P. Newton Calvin Stowell
Charles A. Newton Joseph Smith Jr.
Wm. I. Wiley

(The Daily Tribune, Salt Lake City, April 23, 1880, as cited in A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 1, pp. 492-494)
We recently heard that a Mormon researcher had discovered the original handwritten copy of this money digging agreement. We have confirmed this report and also learned that the person who found the document does not intend to keep it a secret. The details of this discovery, therefore, will probably be announced soon.

At any rate, the History of Susquehanna County, page 97, says that “Oliver Harper was murdered by Jason Treadwell, . . .” Wesley P. Walters, who has done original research into the murder of Harper, feels that Treadwell was originally part of the money-digging group. After the murder he stopped at Isaac Hale’s house (Hale, of course, later became the father-in-law of Joseph Smith). During the trial Treadwell admitted involvement with money obtained by trading counterfeit coin. The History of Susquehanna County, page 325, says that Treadwell was executed on January 13, 1826. This was only two months before “Joseph Smith The Glass looker” was tried before Justice Neely. We could probably overlook Joseph Smith’s association with the occult during his youth if it were not for the fact that he later claimed that during this period he was being visited by the Angel Moroni who was preparing him for the translation of the Book of Mormon. In our new book, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, we present a great deal of evidence linking the Smiths to magic. Because this book has taken a great deal of time to prepare and is larger than anticipated, we are going to have to raise the price to $3.00 a copy. However, all those who have ordered it already or place their orders before April 15, 1983, will receive it for ONLY $2.00 A COPY.

NEW BOOKS

LDS Apostle Confesses Brigham Young Taught Adam-God Doctrine. Contains a photographic reproduction of a ten-page letter written by Bruce R. McConkie. Also includes photographs of manuscripts in the Church Archives which prove Brigham Young taught that Adam was God and that Jesus Christ was his son. In addition this book has a six-page introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. PRICE: $2.00

Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered—Extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s secretary William Clayton. A very revealing glimpse into Joseph Smith’s private life in Nauvoo. These diaries, which have been suppressed for 140 years, throw a great deal of light on the doctrine of plural marriage. PRICE: $3.00

Lucy Smith’s 1829 Letter. A photographic reproduction of a recently discovered letter written by Joseph Smith’s mother on January 23, 1829. Refers to the portion of the Book of Mormon which was lost. Contains an introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. PRICE: $0.75

Our Relationship With the Lord. By the Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie. An attack on the concept of a personal relationship with Christ. A very shocking speech given by one of the highest officials of the Mormon Church. PRICE: $2.00

Joseph Smith’s 1838-39 Diaries. Transcribed and edited by H. Michael Marquardt. Contains an important reference to the secret band known as the “Danites.” PRICE: $2.00

(Mail orders please add 10%)
SUING THE TANNERS

Legal Action to Suppress Diaries About Joseph Smith

In the last issue of the Messenger we reported concerning the anti-Tanner movement and some individuals who were using aliases in an attempt to discredit our work. In a notice accompanying that newsletter, we also announced that the Federal Government approved our non-profit organization, Utah Lighthouse Ministry, and that “any gifts given to the ministry are tax-deductible.”

Since publishing the March newsletter things have been very exciting at Utah Lighthouse Ministry. On May 7, 1983, we were served with a summons to appear in court. The paper made it clear that we were being sued for reproducing extracts from William Clayton’s diaries. This is the first time that anyone has actually taken legal action against us. In 1961 the Mormon Apostle LeGrand Richards threatened to sue us, and in 1965 Apostle Mark E. Petersen made a similar threat. Neither of these men followed through with any action (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 12-13). The plaintiff in the suit that has been filed against us is Andrew F. Ehat, and the attorney is listed as Gordon A. Madsen, the “authorized agent of Religious Studies Center” at the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University. In the Complaint, we find the following:

4. The plaintiff is a research historian . . . having received a Master’s Degree from Brigham Young University . . . During the course of said graduate historical research, plaintiff was given permissive access to the private, heretofore-unpublished Nauvoo Journals of one William Clayton then deposited with the Office of the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from which he permissively extracted certain notes, quotes and extracts.

5. From said notes plaintiff, in collaboration with one Lyndon W. Cook, produced a book titled “The Words of Joseph Smith,” the proprietary interest and copyright interest of which were assigned by Ehat and Cook to the Religious Studies Center, an agency of Brigham Young University. . . . At no time has the plaintiff given the defendants, or either of them, any permission to publish or print any notes taken by him from the William Clayton Journal.

The complaint alleges that we violated Mr. Ehat’s rights when we produced the book Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. The suit asks for damages of up to “the sum of $50,000,” and the costs of the action to the plaintiff, which could, of course, amount to thousands of dollars. The plaintiff also requests that we “be ordered to deliver up on oath for destruction all infringing copies of said notes, together with all plates, molds, matrices and other means for making such infringing copies.”

WHY THE LAWSUIT WILL FAIL

We feel that this suit cannot be successful because it is based on an erroneous assumption—i.e., that Ehat can copyright the writings of William Clayton. We find the following plainly stated in Section 103(b) of Title 17, United States Code:

> The copyright in a compilation or derivative work extends only to the material contributed by the author of such work, as distinguished from the preexisting material employed in the work, and does not imply any exclusive right in the preexisting material.

Since Ehat’s notes are composed of extracts from “preexisting” material (the diaries of William Clayton), he cannot claim copyright protection. If Mr. Ehat had made a unique compilation or translation of Clayton’s words, he could have sought protection under the copyright law. The notes which we have published do not meet either of these requirements. They are only typed quotations which are not organized for publication. They could not, therefore, be considered to be a manuscript prepared for publication. Although they are typed out, they would only be considered to be equivalent to photocopies of a document.

Because Mr. Ehat was able to put a copyright on the book The Words of Joseph Smith, he seems to feel that he has the exclusive rights to the quotations from William Clayton’s diaries. Using the same reasoning, we could maintain that Moody Press (the publisher of our book The Changing World of Mormonism) holds a copyright on the recently discovered sheet containing characters which were supposed to have been taken from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. We could argue that a photograph of the document appears in the book, and since the book has a copyright at the front, it must cover this important document. We could also put a copyright on the three Joseph Smith diaries we have published and claim we have the exclusive rights to these diaries. Such claims, of course, would be ridiculous and would never hold up in court. If such a thing could be done, it would have some serious implications for the Mormon Church. For instance, an ex-Mormon by the name of Chuck Sackett has recently published the Mormon temple ceremony with a copyright at the front of the pamphlet. According to Ehat’s reasoning, this would mean that a non-Mormon now owns the literary rights to the temple ceremony. It is, of course, true that Mr. Sackett can copyright his own introduction, comments, footnotes, etc., but the text of the ceremony is in the public domain.

When we printed the extracts from William Clayton’s diaries we took special precaution to see that we did not violate Mr. Ehat’s rights. In the Introduction to Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered, we wrote:

> . . . several months after Mormon scholars began circulating the typed extracts, we were given permission to make a copy. At first we were reluctant to print the material. Andrew Ehat was vigorously opposed to anyone publishing the material. In fact, one man who was preparing to print it, received a letter from Ehat’s lawyer which threatened legal action if he did not desist. We tried to weigh the rights of the Mormon people to know the truth about the diaries their leaders had suppressed against Ehat’s desire to keep the extracts out of the hands of the public. From what we were able to learn, Ehat could not copyright the material taken from Clayton’s diaries. However, he could possibly claim a copyright on his own comments which appear in the manuscript. Comments of Lyndon Cook also appear in the margins. To solve this problem we have cut off the sides of the photocopies and blacked out Ehat’s notes which appear in the text. Therefore, we have a photographic printing of the document which does not violate Ehat’s manuscript rights. . . . we feel we have arrived at a good solution to the problem.

One thing about Ehat’s notes which really interests us is that they appear to have been typed on four different typewriters. The typewriter styles change frequently throughout the manuscript. It is possible, of course, that Ehat typed all the pages on different typewriters, but there is reason to suspect that at least some of them came from a different source or sources. One Mormon scholar claims that the manuscript is actually a compilation of material from three individuals—Andrew F. Ehat, Lyndon W. Cook and James B. Allen. Allen, who formerly served as Assistant Church Historian, used some of these quotations in an article on William Clayton which was published in Journal of Mormon History, vol. 6, 1979, pages 37-59. This was an excellent article, but Allen was apparently fearful of revealing that these diaries were in the First Presidency’s vault. In a footnote on page 42, he only revealed that they were in “private custody”: “William Clayton, Journals, November 1842 to January 1846 (in private custody and used here by special permission), 9 February 1843.”

A handwritten note at the beginning of the manuscript which Ehat claims as his own says that the portions which have been underlined (at least 43 places) have been published by Allen. We cannot help but wonder if these are the original pages Allen used to prepare his article. We will probably get to the bottom of this when we take the depositions of Ehat, Cook and Allen. In any case, the book by Ehat and Cook contains a footnote which could destroy Ehat’s entire case. It seems to indicate that the quotations used in The Words of Joseph Smith really came from James B. Allen:

> 23. William Clayton 1842-1846 Diaries. Citations from these diaries are used by permission and were provided by Dr. James B. Allen, professor of history at Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah. In sharing with us these quotations, Dr. Allen has substantially assisted this work. (Hereafter cited as William Clayton Diary.) (The Words of Joseph Smith, page 263)

There seems to be a number of other serious weaknesses in Ehat’s case which we intend to point out as the suit progresses. We will probably find it necessary to take testimony from a number of Church officials and to seek access to the original Clayton diaries because they contain material which is important to our case.

“IT COULD DESTROY THE CHURCH”

Although Ehat claims in the suit that he will suffer “irreparable harm, damage and injury” if we are allowed to continue printing the Clayton material, we feel that there are probably other reasons for his actions. The devastating nature of the material in the diaries probably has a great deal to do with Ehat’s attempt to sue us. The Seventh East Press told how copies of the Clayton notes began to circulate around Brigham Young University. When Ehat found out, there was a real confrontation in “a campus office.” According to individuals who were present, “Ehat was extremely upset and at one point said, ‘if this gets out it could destroy the Church” (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982, page 11). Mr. Ehat was apparently horrified when he learned that a copy he had given to Lyndon Cook was secretly duplicated by a member of a bishopric who shared an office with Cook. The same article says that “Ehat implied he had made copies for others as well, but declined to mention any names” (Ibid., page 1). In any case, Ehat felt a personal responsibility to keep this embarrassing material from getting into the hands of critics of the church. After Mr. Ehat discovered the leak, he worked diligently to try to retrieve all of the copies that were in the possession of students and faculty at Brigham Young University. His efforts, however, were to no avail. He claimed that the situation “cost me getting a master’s degree here at the university in the sense that I lost twelve weeks of my life trying to track down all the people who had copies” (Ibid., page 11). According to Seventh East Press, the “unauthorized circulation of Andrew Ehat’s notes from William Clayton’s Nauvoo diaries . . . and other materials from the Historical Department of the Church prompted President Holland last November to appoint Noel Reynolds, Vice President over General Education, Religion, and the Honors Program to investigate the situation and retrieve unauthorized historical materials” (pages 1 and 10).

It was only about a month after Seventh East Press reported on the Ehat affair that the Mormon leaders began to implement very repressive measures to see that no more sensitive material comes to light. The Mormon “underground” (a group composed mostly of liberal Mormon scholars) spread the “unauthorized circulation of Andrew Ehat’s notes from William Clayton’s Nauvoo diaries . . . and other materials from the Historical Department of the Church” (Ibid., page 11). Mr. Ehat was apparently horrified when he learned that a copy he had given to Lyndon Cook was secretly duplicated by a member of a bishopric who shared an office with Cook. The situation “cost me getting a master’s degree here at the university in the sense that I lost twelve weeks of my life trying to track down all the people who had copies” (Ibid., page 11). According to Seventh East Press, the “unauthorized circulation of Andrew Ehat’s notes from William Clayton’s Nauvoo diaries . . . and other materials from the Historical Department of the Church prompted President Holland last November to appoint Noel Reynolds, Vice President over General Education, Religion, and the Honors Program to investigate the situation and retrieve unauthorized historical materials” (pages 1 and 10).

More recently, indeed, just within the past few days, I understand that the archives of the LDS Church have been closed to all research in the diaries, the letter books and other sensitive materials of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve back to the 1830s—diaries and letters long open to and currently used by scholars. Many projects of considerable worth are now stymied or will be finished with incomplete sources.

At a recent meeting of the Mormon History Association, David Whittaker, University Archivist at BYU, has admitted that the Church has tightened up its policy as far as access to documents is concerned:

... It’s clear that there are collections closed, presidential collections for example, now closed in Salt Lake. It’s clear that there are some collections closed. Some scholars see it as closing the barn door after the horse is gone... I was one of those for a number of years that had pretty full access... like most private libraries, those who criticize much of the policies of both BYU, for example, or the church archives, fail to see that they’re basically private libraries... it’s obvious that there are a lot of collections that from my point of view ought to be open. Part of the criticism has to do with material in the vault. For example, the first presidency. Which material has never been available. It was never available even in the sixties. (Eighteenth Annual Meeting of the Mormon History Association, May 6, 1983, typed copy)

At any rate, Mr. Ehat is probably deeply troubled because his notes have caused so much embarrassment to the Church. It is possible that one of Ehat’s motives for filing the suit is to vindicate himself in the eyes of the church leaders. If this is the case, Ehat has made a great mistake. The suit is only going to cause more embarrassment to church leaders. Since we feel that we have a very good case, we do not intend to make any compromises. We will continue publishing the Clayton extracts, and the publicity surrounding the suit will certainly tend to make more people aware of the whole affair.

In the Introduction to Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered, we show that the Clayton diaries cast early Mormonism in a very bad light. William Clayton records that Joseph Smith told his first wife, Emma, he would “relinquish all” his plural wives for her sake, but in reality he didn’t intend to “relinquish anything.” According to Clayton, Joseph Smith was willing to go so far as to initiate a fake excommunication against him to cover up the practice of polygamy: “Says he... I will give you an awful scouring & probably cut you off from the church and then I will baptise you & set you ahead as good as ever” (William Clayton Diary, October 19, 1843, typed extracts). Joseph Smith’s secretary’s journals clearly show that Smith used “untruth” as an important tool to advance his work. Not only was he deceiving the outside world, but he was deceiving his own wife and other members of the Church.

The diaries also contain important evidence that the History of the Church, which the Church claims was written by Joseph Smith himself, was actually compiled after his death. Portions of Clayton’s diary were plagiarized and changed to the first-person to make it appear that Smith was the author. Furthermore, instead of confirming Joseph Smith’s famous prophecy concerning Steven A. Douglas, the Clayton diary provides devastating evidence against it.

The Mormon leaders should have come to grips with these important matters, but instead they have been engaged in a cover-up. They kept the Clayton diaries locked in a vault, and after the extracts leaked out, they took measures to see that other sensitive materials did not come to light. The Mormon “underground” (a group composed mostly of liberal Mormon scholars) spread
THE MORMON “INQUISITION” BEGINS

For a number of years we have been predicting that Mormon scholars are in for some very rough times. For instance, in the January 1979 issue of the Messenger, we wrote that, “There is reason to believe that Benson [Ezra Taft Benson, the man who will become the next president of the Church if he outlives Kimball] wants to remove Arrington from his position as Church Historian.” As our readers now know, Dr. Arrington was removed from his position and the 16-volume History of the Latter-day Saints, which had been approved by Church leaders, was aborted because it proved to be too revealing. When we made our assessment of the situation four years ago, a number of Mormon scholars disagreed with us. They felt that we were exaggerating and that there was no need for concern. Recent developments, however, prove beyond all doubt that Mormon scholars who print the truth stand in danger of being punished by the Church. One scholar has been forced to resign from his job with the Church, and the Salt Lake Tribune for May 26, 1983, said that there has been an “‘Inquisition’ Reported.”

One of the reasons for this “inquisition” is that Mormon leaders feel that Church scholars are putting too much ammunition into the hands of critics. The so-called “anti-Mormon” movement is now prospering to the point that Mormon leaders feel drastic action must be taken to save the Church. They want to isolate us from Church scholars, and to be sure that nothing they print will help our cause. This was made very plain in an article which recently appeared in the Provo Herald:

Latter-day Saint stake presidents and bishops are warning Mormon writers who publish intellectual material to write faith-promoting stories or their church membership will be in jeopardy.

The writers say the stake presidents and bishops are acting under orders from high-ranking general authorities, a charge LDS officials neither confirm nor deny. . . .

Linda and Jack Newell, co-editors of Dialogue, a 17-year old independent historical journal, say the integrity [sic] of Mormon writers is being questioned.

“We are aware that some Mormon scholars have recently been questioned by (LDS) church authorities about their research, some of which has been published in Dialogue,” said the Newells in a prepared statement.

“We are gravely concerned that the faith of any Latter-day Saint would be questioned on the basis of his or her commitment to legitimate scholarship.”

James Clayton, a Utah professor of history, says, “This type of behavior is despicable. Interviewing writers will have a chilling effect on scholarly research and it will drive intellectuals out of the church.”

Scott Faulring, a writer for Seventh East Press, an independent student newspaper banned at Brigham Young University, said his stake president warned him to be cautious in his writings.

“My stake president refused to tell me who had asked him to talk to me,” says Faulring. “He admitted, however, that he had never read my stories.” . . .

Gary Bergera, who has published articles in Seventh East Press and Dialogue, also has been questioned by his stake president in Provo.

“My stake president told me that if the prophet told me to do something wrong, I would be blessed if I obeyed,” said Bergera. “He said what I had written was anti-Mormon because it wasn’t uplifting.”

Bergera says his stake president objected to the headline of an article Bergera had written entitled “Anti-Mormons Prompt Better Church History.” He says the stake president also disapproved of an article Bergera had written about anti-Mormon publishers Jerald and Sandra Tanner.

“My stake president said it was clear in the article that I didn’t support the Tanners,” says Bergera. “But because I interviewed them I came close to supporting them.”

Free-lance LDS history writer George Smith, from San Francisco, says he knows of eight writers who have been interviewed by their stake presidents, and three “told me told me [sic] LDS Church general authorities had initiated these interviews.”
“The writers felt intimidated,” says Smith. “We say we value honesty but to intimidate those who are honest is to discourage integrity in the Mormon community.”

David Buerger, a free-lance LDS history writer from Campbell, Calif., says his stake president questioned him about his writings.

“At the recent request of a member of the LDS Church Council of the Twelve, my stake president initiated an inquiry with my bishop regarding my writing of LDS Church history,” says Buerger. “I was informed that this apostle was concerned about me and the possible negative impact my writing might have among some church members.” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, May 22, 1983)

We have always maintained that the original records of the LDS Church are the most “anti-Mormon” documents in existence. In other words, these records are extremely embarrassing to the Church and also contain doctrines that are diametrically opposed to the teachings of present-day Church leaders. The attempt by the General Authorities to suppress these records and the present “inquisition” against church scholars who want to study these documents certainly shows that the Church’s own documents are far more damaging than the vicious attacks of anti-Mormons like John C. Bennett.

The Salt Lake Tribune for May 26, 1983, contained this interesting information:

In a Wednesday article in the Provo Daily Herald newspaper, reporter Dawn Tracy said she had talked to 14 Mormon writers in four states who said they had been questioned by their local bishops or stake (diocese) presidents and told the church was worried about their faithfulness.

Three of the 14 writers are faculty members at the church-owned Brigham Young University. All of the authors had contributed to Dialogue, a bimonthly magazine called Sunstone, or a former independent BYU student newspaper called the 7th East Press.

Earlier this year, BYU officials banned the 7th East Press from campus sales outlets, and the paper soon folded.

Roy Doxey, former BYU dean of education, said Mormon Church Apostle Mark E. Peterson ordered the investigations of the writers.

Richard Cracroft, dean of BYU’s College of Humanities and a stake president in Provo, said recent anti-Mormon activities prompted church leaders “to closely examine Mormon writers.”

Cracroft said, “All good LDS (Mormons), including scholars, must accept the judgment of the church’s General Authorities. If this is what the brethren want, then good LDS must say it is appropriate. This may be difficult for scholars, but obedience is an important concept of the Mormon Church.”

However, University of Utah political science Professor J. D. Williams called the questionings of writers “an inquisition.”

Williams, who is a member of the church, said, “Passing ecclesiastical judgment on writers who have conducted serious, historical research is a denial of everything the church stands for.”

We have been asked by one Mormon scholar for our assessment of what the future holds for historians in the Mormon Church. While we do not really know the answer to this question, an examination of the seniority structure in the Church points to a grim future for thinking Mormons. To begin with, President Spencer W. Kimball seems to be close to the point of death. The first in line to succeed him is Ezra Taft Benson, a man who has constantly fought the advancement of true historical research in the Church. Benson seems to have been instrumental in the suppression of the book The Story of the Latter-day Saints. The Sunstone Review, March 1983, page 2, maintains that Benson was the one responsible for stopping the sale of the Seventh East Press at Brigham Young University:

Whether the decision to ban Seventh East Press was made by the Board of Trustees . . . or the school administration, Richards wouldn’t say. Our sources confirm that it was . . . the initiative of one man—Ezra Taft Benson. . . . His efforts to ban the Press were resisted by President Holland, but finally Holland bowed to the demand. Huffaker also said that at least two sources have confirmed that Benson was responsible for the banning.

However this may be, the reader will find more information concerning Benson’s anti-historical views in our publication Answering Dr. Clandestine, pages 40-43.

Mark E. Petersen is second in line to the presidency of the Church. Petersen has spent a great deal of his time searching for heretics in the church. We have already quoted the Tribune as saying that Roy Doxey, former BYU dean of education, claimed that Petersen “ordered the investigation of the writers.”

As we go on down the line, we find three others who have given historians a bad time. Gordon B. Hinckley, for instance, is fifth in line. We have seen documents linking Hinckley with the suppression of the 16-volume history. Boyd K. Packer, who is seventh in line, made a scathing attack on Church historians who want to “tell it like it is” (see BYU Studies, Summer 1981, pages 259-278).

In position number nine we find Bruce R. McConkie. McConkie, of course, is the Apostle who warned the Mormon scholar Eugene England that he held “the scepter of judgment” over him. In the same letter McConkie stated:
It is not in your province to set in order the Church or to determine what its doctrines shall be. . . It is your province to teach to the Church what the doctrine is.

If I lead the Church astray, that is my responsibility, but the fact still remains that I am the one appointed with all the rest involved so to do. . . if I err, that is my problem; but in your case if you single out some of these things and make them the center of your philosophy, and end up being wrong, you will lose your soul. . . .

Now I hope you will ponder and pray and come to a basic understanding of fundamental things and that unless and until you can on all points, you will remain silent on those where differences exist between you and the Brethren. . . . if you do not, perils lie ahead. (Letter from Apostle McConkie, dated February 19, 1981, photographically reprinted in our publication LDS Apostle Confesses Brigham Young Taught Adam-God Doctrine)

It would appear that the Apostles who believe in absolute obedience and suppression of history are now in full control of the Mormon Church, and there in nothing to indicate that there will be any change for the better in the near future. In fact, these same Apostles can also keep any who are sympathetic to the historian’s point of view from coming into leadership positions in the Church.

In June 1945, the church’s official publication, Improvement Era, counseled Mormons to blindly follow their leaders: “When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done” (page 354). Today, many members of the Church are faced with a situation where they must choose between blindly following their leaders’ suppressive policies or stand up for the truth and face excommunication. The General Authorities are asking them to follow a course which they know is morally wrong. We must agree with James Clayton’s observation that the inquisition now taking place will tend to “drive intellectuals out of the church.” The Bible warns against putting trust in men. It says that we are to rely only on God and put our trust in Him. In Jeremiah 17:5 we read: “Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord.”

JACK ANDERSON TO EXPOSE CRITICS

The Latter Day Sentinel for May 6, 1983, reported the following:

The country’s most famous investigative reporter, Jack Anderson, has a new target: Anti-Mormon groups. The well-known newspaper and TV personality has announced he plans to publish a magazine later this year titled For Mormons Only which will investigate and expose Mormon hate groups in America.

“We don’t plan to do it in a negative way,” Brother Anderson, a high priest in the Chevy Chase Ward, Washington D.C. Stake, told the Latter-day Sentinel. “We’re not interested in getting into any rhetoric exchanges. We want to look into their backgrounds and let Mormons know what they’re doing.

“What we want to do is isolate these hate groups and keep this sewage from seeping into the respectable and responsible press. Once our findings are published under my name, then responsible journalists are going to have to deal with me before they use their (the hate groups’) material.”

He said the magazine, to be published monthly, will be produced by a team of investigative reporters completely separate from his own corps of column writers.

“I’m not doing this for any purpose except to help the Church and my fellow members,” . . .

Brother Anderson said he decided to start such a publication when he was approached by a number of “high-powered Mormons” who offered to come up with the financing of such a project.

He said the idea has received “neither approval nor disapproval” from Church leaders.

The idea of Jack Anderson and his “team of investigative reporters” looking into the backgrounds of critics of the Church might intimidate some people. We feel, however, that since we have nothing to hide, the publicity would only do us good.

The reader will notice that Anderson claims that the Church itself is not sponsoring his activities. Instead, he says “He was approached by a number of ‘high-powered Mormons’ who offered to come up with the financing of such a project.” Newsweek for March 14, 1983, page 15, says that it will be a “nonprofit publication.” Although we cannot actually prove it, we feel that this new organization is suspiciously similar to another group set up by the Church itself last year. Sunstone Review learned of this Church group and reported that Jack Anderson was a part of it:

Ending a long tradition, which goes back at least as far as Brigham Young, of disregarding all the barbs and errors regarding the Mormon people, the Church has decided to fight back. It has formally organized a “Public Communications Advisory Council” which will be composed of twenty-five prominent media representatives and business leaders from all over the country. They met for the first time on April 2, 1982, in Salt Lake City under the direction of Gordon B. Hinckley of the First Presidency of the LDS church and will continue to meet semi-annually . . .
According to Heber Wolsey, managing director of LDS Public Communications Department, “We have organized this group to coalesce the best thinking of those familiar with or involved in the media.”

At the initial meeting . . . items of press coverage were mentioned and ways of handling them were discussed, for example, the 60 Minutes presentation of the Baum lawsuit against the Church . . . Jack Anderson suggested, however, that we should have organized a large-scale letter campaign as well as numerous phone calls from well-placed Mormons in the media. We should be applying subtle pressure, he said, so they begin to realize they can’t get away with that sort of irresponsibility . . .

The Church’s media problems surrounding the Equal Rights Amendment and, specifically, the excommunication of Sonia Johnson were of obvious concern. . . . Anderson proposed that one-half of the speeches given at General Conference be by women, but his idea was met with some resistance . . . When the Sunstone Review called Wolsey for a list of members of the committee, he seemed both surprised and a bit rankled at the request . . . he refused to give out the names . . . Such secrecy does not bode well for the future of this group. One inside observer called it “the Public Communications Council of 50” (referring to a nineteenth-century secret Mormon political group.) . . .

Other questions arise from the formation of such a committee. Once a group becomes institutionalized (in this case, it is a Church “calling” and therefore a religious obligation), it is forced to protect institutional interests. It then becomes suspect as an objective source for information . . . Does the presence of non-media, high-powered corporate representatives indicate a willingness to use economic or political pressure to insure a positive media image? Would the group in any way attempt to abort potentially damaging news items even if they were true? (Sunstone Review, May 1982, pages 1 and 5)

There are a number of reasons why we suspect that Anderson’s group may be an outgrowth of the Church committee. To begin with, both groups were set up to deal with criticism of the Church. The Sunstone Review claimed that at the initial meeting of the Church committee, “there was some talk of modelling this group after the Jewish Anti-Defamation League.” This is very interesting because after Anderson announced the formation of his organization, Newsweek reported: “Anderson will also alert his readers to criticism of the church in the press and elsewhere, in the manner of the Anti-defamation League of B’nai B’rith” (March 14, 1983, page 15).

In both cases powerful Mormons seem to be involved. According to Sunstone Review, the famous businessman J. Willard Marriott, Jr., president of the Marriot Corporation is involved with the Church committee. Jack Anderson admits that a number of “high power Mormons” are in his organization. When we add to all this the fact that Anderson himself is involved in both groups, we cannot help but wonder if the publication For Mormons Only is a part of the plan formulated by the original Church committee. The Church, of course, would probably not want to give any outright endorsement to Anderson’s work. If his efforts were to fail, this would give Church leaders “deniability” and save the Church from embarrassment.

According to the Latter-Day Sentinel, Jack Anderson says “he plans to use some of the material produced by the Religious Research Association based in Mesa.” This is the organization headed by Robert Brown, a man who has used misrepresentation in an attempt to discredit us. It is also a non-profit organization and has asked for a donation of $1,000 for Charter membership. Mr. Brown has some important Mormon businessmen on the board of his organization. The Latter-Day Sentinel for May 6, 1983, reports that, “Henry W. Richards, president of Granite Furniture” is now serving on the Board of Directors. The addition of Mr. Richards is a very important development because of the “special” work he does in behalf of the Church. The Sentinel East (not to be confused with the Latter-Day Sentinel) reported the following on January 17, 1980:

Regional Representative Henry W. Richards . . . has served in various church assignments . . . He is also under special assignment from the First Presidency to work directly with Elder Mark E. Peterson regarding apostate groups or apostate related problems.

From all this the reader will see that we have some “big guns” pointed at us. Jack Anderson and Robert Brown will undoubtedly have large sums of money to use to try to discredit us. In addition to all this, we have a lawsuit facing us. While we have no fear of losing the suit, it may cost thousands of dollars to win it. In spite of all this opposition, we feel that we have the truth on our side. If we can obtain the necessary support from our readers, we are confident that we will prevail. As we indicated earlier, any gifts give to Utah Lighthouse Ministry are tax-deductible. The most important thing, however, is the prayers of God’s people. Prayer is the most powerful force in all the world.
EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS RECEIVED

“. . . . . and I have been reading, researching, end cross referencing your excellent book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. The Good Spirit has attended us and the Lord continues to give His Light and love. Your work, in its thoroughness and accuracy and completeness, has given us the strength, information, and direction to come out from the company of Joseph the sorcerer.” (Letter from California)

“I have just finished reading your book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. . . . I to[o] would like my name taken off the church membership. I have always believed in the church but now I feel free.” (Letter from Texas)

“I’m over half-way through your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and thought I should let you know how marvelous that book is. I have been a Mormon for seven years now but have always had doubts. Your book answered my doubts plus showed me so much more. . . . I have asked to be excommunicated and am looking forward to truly being free.” (Letter from Wisconsin)

“We are a small group here who are interested in the truth of the Mormon Church as we are all Mormons. We would like some literature and a copy of Shadow or Reality . . . Please send unmarked as I’m sure you understand.” (Letter from Utah)

“I feel compelled to tell you that I am just coming out of the Mormon Church. . . . have found the truth through Jesus Christ, and the Bible. I now know that nice, peaceful feeling I had longed for. . . . Your book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? did complete my separation from the Church.” (Letter from Oregon)

NEW BOOKS

LDS Apostle Confesses Brigham Young Taught Adam-God Doctrine. Contains a photographic reproduction of a ten-page letter written by Bruce R. McConkie. Also includes photographs of manuscripts in the Church Archives which prove Brigham Young taught that Adam was God and that Jesus Christ was his son. In addition this book has a six-page introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. PRICE: $2.00

Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. Extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s secretary William Clayton. A very revealing glimpse into Joseph Smith’s private life in Nauvoo. These diaries, which have been suppressed for 140 years, throw a great deal of light on the doctrine of plural marriage. PRICE: $3.00

Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Contains photographs of Joseph and Hyrum Smith’s magic material and a study of its significance. Also deals with the question of spiritualism and the temple ceremony. PRICE: $3.00

Our Relationship with the Lord. By the Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie. An attack on the concept of a personal relationship with Christ. A very shocking speech given by one of the highest officials of the Mormon Church. PRICE: $2.00

Joseph Smith’s 1838-39 Diaries. Transcribed and edited by H. Michael Marquardt. Contains an important reference to the secret band known as the “Danites.” PRICE: $2.00

(Mail orders add 10% for postage and handling.)

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT 84110
On April 28, 1983, the Mormon scholar Andrew Ehat filed a lawsuit against us (Jerald and Sandra Tanner) in an attempt to stop publication of some extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton. Because these diaries contain embarrassing material on the origin of polygamy and other matters, they have been suppressed in the vault of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church. Some time prior to 1981, Mr. Ehat gained access to the diaries and made the revealing extracts. Ehat tried very hard to keep the material from falling into the hands of critics of the Church, but a member of a bishopric in Provo duplicated the material and it was widely circulated by Mormon scholars at Brigham Young University. These extracts subsequently found their way into our hands and we printed them in the book Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. We feel that the copyright laws do not support Ehat’s contention and believe that the suit is doomed to failure. In response to Mr. Ehat’s accusations, our lawyer subpoenaed the President of the Mormon Church and/or his representative to appear with the original Clayton diaries to give testimony on our behalf.

On July 22 attorneys for the Corporation of the President of the Church filed a motion which asked that our subpoena “be quashed and the discovery requested therein not be had on the grounds (1) that the requested discovery is not needed by the parties, nor relevant to the subject matter of this action, and not likely to produce admissible evidence, and (2) that the requested discovery is an annoyance and oppression, and an undue burden upon the Corporation of the President, . . .” In an accompanying Memorandum of Law the Church’s attorneys stated: “The Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and President Spencer W. Kimball of the Church, have standing to object to the production of documents which are unnecessary to the parties and irrelevant to the subject matter herein and with respect to which production may be sought for ulterior motives.” On September 6 a hearing was held before Judge A. Sherman Christensen. The Church’s attorney, Wilford W. Kirton, vigorously opposed the subpoena. Mr. Kirton argued:

The church, Mormon Church, has now been subpoenaed through its principal officer, Spencer W. Kimball, to appear and produce the original documents referred to as diaries, or the diary of William Clayton, . . . I’m here representing a third party who is required by subpoena duces tecum, unless the court gives protective order which we seek, to produce documents from its archives which have not heretofore been published in order to satisfy what the defendant conceives to be an issue in this case . . .

Now, this is a matter of some serious moment as far as we are concerned; and we call the court’s attention to those authorities that have been cited to it in support of this motion, and particularly at this time to Mc Cormick on Evidence at section 77. I will very briefly read, “It is evidence that for many people, judges, lawyers and laymen the protection of confidential communications from enforced disclosure has been thought to represent rights of privacy and security too important to relinquish to the convenience of litigants” . . . suddenly we find ourselves being subpoenaed to come in to court and make public certain writings, which up to the present time remain unpublished, . . .

Now, the defendants in this case, as I conclude, have, since the motion has been filed to quash, published another document here. It goes without saying any cursory reading of this document or any of their other writings discloses without question of doubt that they are self-appointed critics of the church that I represent, seek to find from whatever sources they can matters that they think are important in their minds enough to make public a part of their general criticism of the church. I am confident that which motivates them to require the public, or the publication or the bringing in to court of the materials that they seek to subpoena are for those purposes rather than to assist them in the defense of the cases being brought against them by the plaintiff. (“Hearing to Quash Subpoena Duces Tecum and Objections Before the Honorable A. Sherman Christensen, Tuesday, September 6, 1983,” certified copy, pages 4, 5, 7)

On page 20 of the same hearing, the Church’s attorney stated: “. . . I represent an organization that is very concerned about parties attempting to frame issues through which its own private materials may be discoverable. It has no desire to submit to the scrutiny of the parties.”
JUDGE’S DECISION

Andrew Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen, who is the “authorized agent of Religious Studies Center” at the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University, joined with the church’s attorney in urging that the diaries be suppressed:

... their principal reason for wanting to see the original journal of William Clayton is to further embarrass the Mormon Church.

There is no reference about the rights of the plaintiff in this lawsuit, just rather we want more. Having stolen the horse, or gotten possession of the horse, we want the bridle and the saddle so we can embarrass you... I believe that the defendants are hoping in trying to get this discovery of this otherwise private journal of William Clayton, never before published... They’re hopeful, I believe, in order to put pressure on the Mormon Church to produce Clayton’s journal, the church will put pressure on the plaintiff to withdraw the lawsuit to protect his rights in order not to have the Mormon Church embarrassed. (“Hearing...”, pages 8-9)

Judge Christensen took the matter “under advisement” and on September 16, ruled that the church would not have to produce the diaries. (A photomechanical printing of the judge’s decision as well as the hearing itself is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry for $1.00.) In order to get the ruling to suppress the diaries, Ehat’s lawyer had to back off from one of the charges made in the original complaint against us. This charge stemmed from some personal comments Ehat added to the Clayton extracts. Before we published the manuscript we noticed these comments. While we knew that Ehat could not copyright material from the diaries, we felt that he could possibly claim a copyright on his own comments. To solve this problem we blacked out Ehat’s own notes which appear in the text. We explained this matter in the Introduction to Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. In the lawsuit, however, it was charged that our claim to have “blacked out” Ehat’s comments was “false” (page 5). Now, since it was sometimes difficult to tell when Ehat had added a comment, it could be possible that some of Ehat’s material filtered through. If it amounted to less than a few hundred words (which we feel is most likely), we could claim “fair use” and could easily win the suit. If, on the other hand, Ehat could show that a considerable amount of material written by him was not blacked out, there is a possibility that we could lose the suit. The only way we would ever be able to determine the truth about the matter would be by examining the original diaries. In order to keep the diaries suppressed, Mr. Ehat’s lawyer decided he would have to admit that the charge he had made against us was irrelevant to the outcome of the suit. Mr. Kirton (the church’s lawyer) also argued for this position:

The defendant... indicates to the court by answer and other documents that the materials which are the subject matter of the lawsuit were not any infringement of any copyright of the copyrights of the plaintiff, but simply were the reproduction of certain notes made by the defendant in connection with the preparation of his publication; and that exercising due care, these instruments came into the hands of the defendant, exercising due care that not be a violation of any of his original works. Care was taken though, as alleged by the defendant, to blot out in its reproduction of his notes whatever they could conceive to be his original work... Now, in a conversation before this hearing with counsel for the plaintiff, I believe he is prepared to say that the only things that are in the paragraph notes of Mr. Ehat, the plaintiff, on which there could be any question are a few dates, a couple of little marginal notes or this sort of thing which would not be material to his theory of the case that he is urging the court to consider... it could be only on a technical date or two that appear in the margins that perhaps have not been blacked out. That can’t be material to whether or not there has been a violation of the rights of the plaintiff which he has brought to this court with respect to the total publication. I respectfully urge this court to give the protective order that we have respectfully requested and protect the information that cannot serve any useful purpose in the determination of the issues as they have been framed in this lawsuit. (“Hearing...”, pages 3, 4, 6-8)

The following exchange occurred between Judge Christensen and Ehat’s lawyer:

THE COURT: Suppose the defendant is correct though that with regard to quotations from the journal, they are not subject to your client’s proprietary interest? Suppose that were held?

MR. MADSEN: Then it wouldn’t matter whether some parts are blacked out or not blacked out, matters why he would be entitled to publish.

THE COURT: He would be entitled to publish not only the extraction but the commentary of your client concerning them?

MR. MADSEN: They make an argument in their memorandum if he isn’t successful in all blacking out what notes are left are exempt under fair common notion of copyright. They also —
THE COURT: You’re not responding to my question.

MR. MADSEN: I’m sorry. Maybe I misunderstood your question.

THE COURT: Do you concede that if the law is that the quotations of your quotation from the journal doesn’t violate any proprietary interest of your client that your case fails?

MR. MADSEN: I think it does. I think if they can say this is not copyright material and they therefore are at liberty to print it. (“Hearing . . .”, pages 10-11)

In his ruling on the motion to quash the subpoena, Judge Christensen wrote:

Plaintiff’s complaint is not a model of clarity or certainty and talks in general of copyrighted works completed or to be completed, and of the notes from the Clayton Journals upon which these publications have been or will be based that have fallen into the hands of the defendants and which have either been republished or he fears will be republished by them. . . .

It is true that in argument plaintiff’s counsel claimed some work product interest in his research in general or in his arrangement of his research material. The complaint, however, negates any such separate actionable claim. Indeed, in response to the question of the court, plaintiff’s counsel conceded that if quotations from the Clayton Journal were not protectible under plaintiff’s claimed copyrights or proprietary interest, his “case would fail,” despite the fact that there may have been some of plaintiff’s own comments commingled with the quotations. The defendants on their part have disaffirmed by their own writings any claim of right or intent to publish protected work products of plaintiff as distinguished from the extracts he has made from the Clayton Journals. (“Ruling on Motion to Quash Subpoena Duces Tecum,” pages 2 and 4)

While the Church and Ehat’s lawyer were able to keep us from seeing the original diaries at the present time, we will be seeking them again if Mr. Ehat continues to press the suit. We maintain that Ehat cannot copyright the writings of William Clayton. The following is plainly stated in Section 103(b) of Title 17, United States Code:

“The copyright in a compilation or derivative work extends only to the material contributed by the author of such work, as distinguished from the preexisting material employed in the work, and does not imply any exclusive right in the preexisting material.” Since Ehat’s notes are composed of extracts from “preexisting” material (the diaries of William Clayton), he cannot claim copyright protection. If Mr. Ehat had made a unique compilation or translation of Clayton’s words, he could have sought protection under the copyright law. The notes which we have published do not meet either of these requirements.

Mr. Ehat’s lawyer argues that “the arrangement of the actual original Clayton material are proprietary rights of my client . . .” We feel, however, that the extracts are not organized in any way for publication and therefore do not qualify as copyrightable material. In any case, we do not see how that could possibly win the suit if the Church does not produce the original diaries for inspection by the court. We do not believe that any judge would convict us of a copyright violation without allowing us to compare the original diaries with Ehat’s version, and we would not accept such a decision without making an appeal to a higher court. The claim of a unique arrangement could not possibly be proven without the diaries themselves.

At any rate, one Mormon scholar said that Ehat’s notes are actually a compilation of material from three individuals—Andrew F. Ehat, Lyndon W. Cook and James B. Allen, who formerly served as Assistant Church Historian. When Ehat and Cook published their book, The Words of Joseph Smith, in 1980, they credited James B. Allen with providing material they used from the Clayton diary. In a footnote on page 263 they stated:

“23. William Clayton 1842-1846 Diaries. Citations from these diaries are used by permission and were provided by Dr. James B. Allen, . . .” It seems very likely that Ehat is claiming a copyright on some material he derived from other scholars. In order to get to the bottom of this matter, we are going to subpoena Ehat, Cook, Allen and possibly other Mormon scholars to testify concerning the matter. We are also thinking of subpoenaing a Mormon Apostle who talked to Ehat about the extracts. (If some of our readers have information about the Ehat affair, we would certainly appreciate it if they would contact us.)

FOR OUR GOOD

Fighting this lawsuit will cost thousands of dollars and a great deal of time, but we feel that it will all work out for our good. The publicity surrounding it has already helped our work a great deal. Some of those who oppose our work have been hoping that the suit will drive us into bankruptcy, but we feel that it will have just the opposite effect. As Joseph told his brothers who had sold him into Egypt, “. . . ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive” (Genesis 50:20). In Romans 8:28 we read:

“And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.”
Although Andrew F. Ehat is attempting to destroy our work with a suit which asks damages of up to “the sum of $50,000,” and the costs of the action to the plaintiff, we do not hold any bad feelings toward him. He apparently feels that he is doing the right thing and that he is working to save the Mormon Church. When Ehat originally discovered that the extracts were circulating at Brigham Young University, he exclaimed: “If this gets out it could destroy the Church” (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982, page 11). In his misguided zeal to protect the Church, Mr. Ehat is actually causing it more embarrassment by bringing a great deal of attention to the matter. If we did not know otherwise, we would almost think that Mr. Ehat is working for our side.

MUST SUPPRESS

At the beginning of this Messenger we indicated that the Church is fighting to suppress the Clayton diaries because they “contain embarrassing material on the origin of polygamy and other matters.” One of the most important reasons for suppressing the diaries relates to the fact that they discredit Joseph Smith’s History of the Church—one of the most important publications issued by the Mormon Church. Below is some very revealing information which is taken from the Preface of our publication Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142D, we show that the History of the Church, which was supposed to have been written by Joseph Smith himself, is filled with serious problems and that over 60% of it was actually compiled after Smith’s death. The Mormon leaders plagiarized from diaries, newspapers and oral accounts of other people to complete the history. To make it appear that the history was written by Joseph Smith, these accounts were changed to the first-person. The extracts from Clayton’s diaries throw important light on this subject. Even a superficial examination reveals that Clayton’s writings were the source for entries attributed to Joseph Smith in the History of the Church. For instance, under the date of May 1, 1843, Clayton recorded this statement concerning the Kinderhook plates in his diary: “Prest J. has translated a portion and says they contain the history of the person with whom they were found & he was a descendant of Ham . . .” (page 18). In the History of the Church this has been falsified to make it appear that Joseph Smith was the author: “I have translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, . . .” (vol. 5, page 372).

On May 16, 1843, Clayton wrote: “Before we retired the Pres. gave bro Johnson & wife some instructions on the priesthood. He put his hand on my knee and says . . .” (page 40). This has been rewritten as follows in the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 391: “Before retiring, I gave Brother and Sister Johnson some instructions on the priesthood; and putting my hand on the knee of William Clayton, I said:”

The extracts from William Clayton’s diaries not only provide evidence that third-person sources were changed to appear that Joseph had authored them, but they also cast doubt upon one of Joseph Smith’s most famous prophecies—the prediction that Steven A. Douglas would “aspire to the presidency of the United States.” This prophecy appears in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, vol. 5, page 394, under the title, “The Great Prophecy on the Head of Steven A. Douglas”:

> Judge, you will aspire to the presidency of the United States; and if ever you turn your hand against me or the Latter-day Saints, you will feel the weight of the hand of Almighty upon you; . . .

The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts made the following comment concerning this prophecy: “Two great prophecies by Joseph Smith belong to this period. The first was in relation to the removal of the saints to the valleys of the Rocky Mountains; the other was a most remarkable prediction concerning Steven A. Douglas, . . .” (A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 2, page 181)

In his book Prophecies of Joseph Smith and Their Fulfillment, Nephi Lowell Morris maintained that the prophecy concerning Steven A. Douglas provides “incontrovertible evidence to the divine mission and inspiration of Joseph Smith” (page 215). On pages 201-202 of the same book, Morris argued that “At the time of the event, Steven A. Douglas was in his thirtieth year and though a bright and promising young man, he was scarcely known outside of his own state.”

In the History of the Church a note appearing in brackets on page 393 of vol. 5 indicates that this prophecy was actually taken “from the journal of William Clayton, who was present.” In other words, it was supposed to have been copied from Clayton’s diary into the “Manuscript History” of the Church. Since Ehat’s extracts from Clayton’s diary cover the same day, one would expect to find the prophecy recorded there. An examination, however, reveals that while the diary does mention Douglas, the prophecy concerning him is not included. Joseph Smith is quoted as saying the following on May 18, 1843:

> . . . “I prophecy in the name of the Lord God that in a few years this government will be utterly overthrown and wasted so that there will not be a potsherd left” for their wickedness in conniving at the Missouri mobocracy. The Judge appears very friendly & acknowledged the propriety of the prests. remarks. (William Clayton’s Diary, May 18, 1843, typed excerpts, page 42)

The account published in the History of the Church is about 160 words longer than the one found in Clayton’s diary. It differs in two very important aspects: One, additional words appear in Joseph Smith’s prophecy that the United States would be “utterly overthrown.” These words change the prophecy to make its fulfillment conditional upon the performance of the United States Government. Two, the entire prophecy concerning Douglas has been inserted. In the quotation from the History of the Church which is printed below we have marked the important additions with italics:

> . . . I prophecy in the name of the Lord God of Israel, unless the United States redress the wrongs committed upon the Saints in the state of Missouri and punish the crimes committed by her officers that in a few years the government will be utterly overthrown and wasted, and there will not be so much as a potsherd left, for their wickedness in permitting the murder of men, women and children, and the wholesale plunder and extermination of thousands of her citizens to go unpunished, thereby perpetrating a foul and corroding blot upon the fair fame of this great republic, the very thought of which would have caused the high-minded and patriotic framers of the Constitution of the United States to hide their faces with shame. Judge, you will aspire to the presidency of the United States; and if ever you turn your hand against me or the Latter-day Saints, you will feel the weight of the hand of Almighty upon you; and you will live to see and know that I have testified the truth to you; for the conversation of this day will stick to you through life.
To the left is a photograph which contains Andrew Ehat's extract from William Clayton's diary for May 18, 1843. Notice that the circled portion contains only 78 words. The two pages to the right are from volume 5 of the History of the Church, printed by the Mormon Church. These pages quote the entry for the same day “from the journal of William Clayton.” Notice, however, that they contain 456 words and include the famous prophecy concerning Stephen A. Douglas which is not found in Ehat's version.
Instead of confirming the famous prophecy concerning Douglas, William Clayton’s diary seems to provide evidence against it. All it contains is the false prophecy that the United States will be destroyed. Joseph Smith’s private dairy for May 18, 1843, is also silent concerning the prophecy. The manuscript for the History of the Church cannot be used as evidence for the prophecy because this portion was NOT written during Joseph Smith’s lifetime. In an article published in 1971, Dean C. Jessee, who was serving on the staff of the Historical Department of the Church, published a chart which shows that this portion of the History of the Church was not written until 1854 or 1855 (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, page 441). This, of course, would be 10 or 11 years after Joseph Smith’s death! If the prophecy concerning Douglas was made up in the 1850s, as the evidence seems to indicate, then it has no real value.

By the middle of that decade it was well known that Douglas wanted to be President of the United States. T.B.H. Stenhouse informs us that in 1856 “Senator Douglas was a candidate for the Presidency” but that his party (the Democrats) chose James Buchanan to represent them. In 1860 Douglas finally received the nomination of the convention but was defeated by Abraham Lincoln in the election (The Rocky Mountain Saints, pages 347-48). Since Douglas died shortly after his defeat, Mormon historians seem to feel that God punished him for turning against the Church. These same apologists do not seem to realize that this type of reasoning could be used against Joseph Smith.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 416-17, we show that Smith also aspired to be President of the United States. In 1844 he announced himself a candidate and the Elders of the Church were sent out to “electioneer for Joseph to be the next President” (History of the Church, vol. 6, p. 325). Before the election ever took place, however, Joseph Smith was murdered in the Carthage Jail. B. H. Roberts maintained that Douglas died “while yet in the prime of manhood—forty-eight years of age . . .” (Ibid., page 396). For those who are not already committed to the defense of Mormonism, this does not provide any evidence that God was judging Steven A. Douglas for opposing the Church. After all, Joseph Smith was ten years younger than Douglas when he was murdered. If Douglas died in the “prime of manhood,” what can be said about Joseph Smith? B. H. Roberts claimed that Joseph Smith’s prophecy concerning Douglas “is one of the most remarkable prophecies either in ancient or modern times” (History of the Church, vol. 3, p. 395). When all of the evidence is examined, however, it becomes clear that this purported prophecy does not furnish any evidence favorable to Mormonism.

HELP NEEDED

Utah Lighthouse Ministry is a non-profit organization which is helping thousands of Mormons to come to the knowledge of the truth. This ministry also provides help to two Rescue Missions (Rescue Missions preach the Gospel to the unfortunate, alcoholics and drug addicts, as well as feed, clothe and sleep the poor). All gifts given to Utah Lighthouse Ministry are tax-deductible.

At the present time a number of Mormons are trying to find ways to stop this work. We feel, however, that we have the truth on our side, and if our readers continue to support the work, we are confident we will prevail. Even those who cannot help financially, can stand with us in prayer.

---

LOST & FOUND?

Spalding’s Manuscript and 116 Book of Mormon pages

A few months ago a reporter from one of the largest newspapers in the United States asked us if it was true that the Mormon Church had bought the long-lost Solomon Spalding manuscript for $6,000,000. We replied that we had no information to support such an accusation. It is known, of course, that Spalding prepared a manuscript on the inhabitants of ancient America, and we have published it in its entirety in our book, Did Spalding Write the Book of Mormon? Many people, however, feel that Spalding wrote another manuscript (now lost) which was the true source of the Book of Mormon. Although we have tried to keep an open mind on this matter, we have never put much stock in this theory. In any case, it was this manuscript to which the reporter was referring. In other words, he was trying to find out if it was true that the Mormon Church had paid $6,000,000 to suppress the fact that Spalding was the real author of the Book of Mormon.

Some time after this, we received a phone call which seems to explain the source of the rumor. The woman on the phone told us that if we would call a Mr. D_____ in St. James, New York, within half an hour, he could give us the details concerning the rediscovery of Spalding’s manuscript. The number we were given was 516-862-6448. We believed that someone might be playing a joke on us, but since the area code (516) was for the state of New York, we decided to take a chance. At first Mr. D. seemed rather indignant about the intrusion and was reluctant to talk about the matter, but with some prompting, he finally told us that he had discovered Spalding’s lost manuscript. In this and other phone conversations he revealed that he had found the 339-page manuscript in an old piano. He not only claimed that he found the manuscript, but he maintained that he also had a sixteen-page document written by Sidney Rigdon in which he confessed the part he played in the whole deception. This was not all, however; he also found an 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon which was marked to reveal the portions which were plagiarized from the Spalding manuscript.
We must admit that at first this all sounded very impressive, and we were certainly prepared to revise our views on the Spalding controversy if Mr. D. had the documents which he spoke of. Unfortunately, however, it soon became apparent that there were serious problems in this man’s story—problems that make it almost impossible to believe. To begin with, the claims are so sensational that they tend to make a person suspicious. If Mr. D. had claimed to have either the Spalding manuscript or the Rigdon confession, this would have been exciting enough, but for him to have stated he had both seemed just too good to be true. It is now obvious that although Mr. D. makes fantastic claims, he does not seem to be willing to back them up with any evidence. When we asked if we could examine the documents, he replied no, but said we could talk to Howard Davis and he could tell us all about the matter.

We were surprised that we were referred to Mr. Davis. The reader will remember that in Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon? Davis maintained that at least part of the Spalding manuscript was in the Mormon Church archives and that handwriting experts have verified this claim. To admit that Mr. D. had the original manuscript would seem to cast doubt on this idea. In any case, we have since learned that Mr. Davis has not actually seen the documents but is merely depending on this man’s word. Mr. D. also stated that Walter Martin had been to his home in St. James, N. Y., to see the documents. When we called Martin’s office, however, his staff told us that they knew absolutely nothing about the matter.

In a telephone conversation with Wesley P. Walters, Mr. D. claimed that a newspaper reporter had been out to his house to see the material. When Walters called the reporter, however, he said that he had never been to the man’s house, although he had talked to him on the phone. Mr. D. also told Wesley Walters that he had a report prepared at the F.B.I. laboratory which proved that the paper in the Spalding manuscript dated to the period between 1808 and 1811. He also said that he had sent information verifying the authenticity of the document to Dartmouth College. We felt that it was unlikely that an employee of the F.B.I. would use its laboratory to authenticate private papers which have no relationship to law enforcement, and when Mr. Walters called Dartmouth College, he was told that Mr. D. had not provided any documentation concerning the manuscript.

Mr. D. stated that he was thinking of using the manuscript to stir up the Spalding family to sue the Mormon Church, or else he might just lock it up and not let anyone see it for a hundred years. Taken as a whole, his story reminded us of some of the tales we have been told by con men who pass through the Rescue Mission. They always give tantalizing accounts of what they can provide in the future, but when they are pressed for evidence, they are unable to come up with anything tangible. Now, we certainly would not accuse Mr. D. of forgery. We have no evidence that he has forged any documents. As far as we can tell, the manuscripts either exist only in his own fertile imagination, or he is committing a deliberate hoax. One supporter of the Spalding theory has strongly urged that nothing be printed about this matter and it has been suggested that Mr. D. is so eccentric that he might burn the manuscripts if we publish a critical article. We believe, however, that the whole matter sounds suspiciously like Joseph Smith’s story of the gold plates, and we feel that Mr. D. should be pressured into either bringing forth his evidence or admitting that he has none.

LEHI’S LOST BOOK

Mormon leaders often charge that a number of books have been lost or suppressed from the Bible, but they seldom mention the fact that Joseph Smith lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript. This portion was known as “the book of Lehi.” The first edition of the Book of Mormon, published in 1830, contains a “Preface” by “The Author.” This “Preface” has been completely removed from later editions. It was apparently embarrassing to the Mormon leaders because it told how Joseph Smith lost the “Book of Lehi”:

PREFACE.

To the Reader—

As many false reports have been circulated respecting the following work, . . . I would inform you that I translated, by the gift and power of God, and caused to be written, one hundred and sixteen pages, the which I took from the Book of Lehi, . . . which said account, some person or persons have stolen and kept from me, notwithstanding my utmost exertions to recover it again—and being commanded of the Lord that I should not translate the same over again, for Satan had put it into their hearts to tempt the Lord their God, by altering the words, that they did read contrary from that which I translated and caused to be written: and if I should bring forth the same words again, or, in other words, if I should translate the same over again, they would publish that which they had stolen, and Satan would stir up the hearts of this generation, that they might not receive this work: but behold the Lord said unto me, I will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil design in this thing: therefore thou shalt translate from the plates of Nephi, until ye come to that which ye have; and behold ye shall publish it as the record of Nephi; and thus I will confound those who have altered my words. . . . The Author.
Joseph Smith’s mother gave this information concerning the lost “Book of Lehi”:

Martin Harris, having written some one hundred and sixteen pages for Joseph, asked permission of my son to carry the manuscript home with him, in order to let his wife read it, . . .

Joseph . . . inquired of the Lord to know if he might do as Martin Harris had requested, but was refused. . . . Joseph inquired again, but received a second refusal. Still, Martin Harris persisted as before, and Joseph applied again, but the last answer was not like the two former ones. In this the Lord permitted Martin Harris to take the manuscript home with him, on condition that he would exhibit it to none, save five individuals . . . Mr. Harris had been absent nearly three weeks, and Joseph had received no intelligence whatever from him, . . . we saw him [Harris] walking with a slow and measured tread towards the house, . . . Harris pressed his hands upon his temples, and cried out, in a tone of deep anguish, “Oh, I have lost my soul! I have lost my soul!”

Joseph, . . . sprang from the table, exclaiming, “Martin, have you lost that manuscript?” . . .

“Yes, it is gone,” replied Martin, “and I know not where.”

“Oh, my God!” said Joseph, clinching his hands, “All is lost! All is lost! What shall I do? I have sinned—it is I who tempted the wrath of God.” . . . He wept and groaned, and walked the floor continually . . . Joseph continued, pacing back and forth, meantime weeping and grieving, until about sunset . . .

The manuscript has never been found; and there is no doubt but Mrs. Harris took it from the drawer, with the view of retaining it, until another translation should be given, then, to alter the original translation, for the purpose of showing a discrepancy between them, and thus make the whole appear to be a deception. (Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet, pages 117, 118, 120-123)

We have always believed that if the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon could be found, it would be one of the most important developments in Mormon history. There is at least one printed report that these lost pages were not destroyed immediately. In a statement published in 1888, W. R. Hine wrote:

Soon I learned that Jo claimed to be translating the plates in Badger’s Tavern, in Colesville, three miles from my house. . . . Martin’s wife cooked for them, and one day while they were at dinner she put one hundred and sixteen pages, the first part they had translated, in her dress bosom and went out. . . .

Dr. Seymour came along and she gave them to him to read and told him not to let them go. Dr. Seymour lived one and a half miles from me. He read most of it to me when my daughter Irene was born; he read them to his patients about the country. It was a description of the mounds about the country and similar to the “Book of Mormon”. . . . Martin Harris . . . has many times admitted to me that this statement about his wife and the one hundred and sixteen pages, as above stated, is true. (Naked Truths About Mormonism, Oakland, California, January 1888, page 2)

Wesley P. Walters did some original research and found that Dr. Seymour was in the area at about that time, but he was unable to find if there was any truth to the story that he had the missing pages. At any rate, Mark Hofmann, who has become famous because of his discoveries of early Mormon documents, has been diligently searching for the 116 pages. In the Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 18, we read the following:

REVIEW: Is there anything you know exists that you are looking for specifically?

HOFMANN: I’m hoping the lost 116 manuscript pages exist.

REVIEW: Do you have any evidence that they exist?

HOFMANN: I’ve heard a lot of rumors, and I’ve tracked down lots of leads. In fact, I have spent thousands of dollars in the pursuit of them, phone calls, research, and trips back and forth to the East.

Some time after this was written, we heard that the missing pages had been located and read by different individuals and that the contents were “dynamite.” We now believe that a document purporting to be the missing portion of the Book of Mormon has been located. Unfortunately, however, there seems to be concern that it is a forgery. It is apparently not the original document, only a handwritten copy. Furthermore, it is supposed to bear some evidence of being written after the Book of Mormon was printed. It is reported that it resembles (at least to some extent) the Book of Mormon story as we have it today but also contains information on money-digging—a practice Joseph Smith was involved in just before he wrote the Book of Mormon (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 32-49D).

We cannot, of course, make any real judgment as to the authenticity of the manuscript until we have a chance to examine it. At the present time we are trying to track down the exact location of the document. If any of our readers have any information about the matter we would certainly appreciate it if they would contact us. We hope to print more on this matter in the future.
A TIGHT SPOT

The theft of the 116 pages placed Joseph Smith in a very embarrassing position. Arthur Budvarson observed:

This “Preface” of the 1830 Edition (omitted in later editions) explains how, “one hundred and sixteen pages” of the original translation were stolen by “designing persons.”

This afforded a remarkable opportunity for Joseph Smith to have proven to the world that the work was true. All he needed to do was to reproduce an exact copy of the stolen pages, then perhaps even the thieves would have been converted! (The stolen pages were written in longhand and any alterations could have been easily detected.)

But Joseph had failed to make a copy of his writings, so it was not possible for him to make an exact duplicate. In order to get around this, he says that God commanded him that he “should not translate the same over again . . .”

This one incident alone (the above “Preface” by the “Author”) furnishes positive proof that the Book of Mormon is not a God-given, angel-protected book! (The Book of Mormon Examined, La Mesa, California, 1959, pages 13-14)

The Mormon writer Sidney B. Sperry attempted to reply to Mr. Budvarson’s charges:

Now, there might be some logic to Mr. Budvarson’s allegations if Joseph Smith had translated the Book of Mormon in the mechanical fashion suggested by David Whitmer and dealt with in our previous chapter. But Joseph Smith did not simply read off a word-for-word translation dictated by a divine source. If the translation had been effected in that manner, he doubtless could have reproduced an “exact copy of the stolen pages” for the thieves who had purloined the manuscript. Since he did not make a mechanical translation, he was in the position of any translator who would find it impossible to reproduce exactly his original translation, amounting to one hundred and sixteen pages in longhand. Another translation could reproduce the sense of the original but would not duplicate it word for word. The Lord knew this, and therefore instructed the prophet to translate other plates that gave a somewhat parallel but more spiritual account than that contained in the hundred and sixteen pages of stolen material. Thus we see again how Mr. Budvarson’s case breaks down . . . he is making woefully extravagant claims. He is whistling in the dark in the dark cemetery of his alleged “proofs.” (The Problems of the Book of Mormon, page 196)

From Dr. Sperry’s statement it would appear that he missed the whole point of Joseph Smith’s “Preface” to the first edition of the Book of Mormon. The “Preface” indicates that Joseph Smith could “bring forth the same words again,” but that if he did his enemies would alter the words in the stolen manuscript so that they would “read contrary from that which I translated . . .”

Although the “Preface” concerning the lost “Book of Lehi” has been deleted, the Doctrine and Covenants still contains a revelation which plainly shows that Dr. Sperry was wrong concerning this matter:

Now, behold, I say unto you, that because you delivered up those writings . . . into the hands of a wicked man, you have lost them.

And you also lost your gift at the same time, and your mind became darkened . . .

And, behold, Satan hath put it into their hearts to alter the words which you have caused to be written, or which you have translated, which have gone out of your hands . . .

Behold, I say unto you, that you shall not translate again those words which have gone forth out of your hands;

For, behold, they shall not accomplish their evil designs in lying against those words. For, behold, if you should bring forth the same words they will say that you have lied and that you have pretended to translate, but that you have contradicted yourself.

And, behold, they will publish this, and Satan will harden the hearts of the people to stir them up to anger against you, that they will not believe my words. (Doctrine and Covenants 10:1, 2, 10, 30-32)

The revelation published in the Doctrine and Covenants and the “Preface” found in the first edition of the Book of Mormon both seem to teach exactly the opposite of what Dr. Sperry would have us believe.

M. T. Lamb devotes a great deal of space to this matter in The Golden Bible, pages 118-126. We do not have room to quote all of this material, but on page 119 this interesting comment appears:

The general belief was that she [Mrs. Harris] burned it. But the prophet Joseph evidently was afraid she had not, but had secretly hid it, for the purpose of entrapping him, should he ever attempt to reproduce the pages. If the work was really of God, the manuscript could be reproduced word for word without a mistake. If, however, Joseph inspired it himself, his memory would hardly be adequate to such a task, without numberless changes or verbal differences—and thus “give himself away,” since he loudly professed to be all the time aided “by the gift and power of God.”
LETTERS

Utah Lighthouse Ministry receives many letters from those who read our publications. While most are favorable, we do receive some that are critical. Below are extracts from some of the letters.

I appreciated receiving the slanted and false information concerning the Mormon Church. I do like your title, but it should be changed to more directly represent you. The new name should be Utah Lighthouse for the Blind because you certainly try to blind people from the truth.

Please keep me on the mailing list and let me know what other material you have available because I can read it in lieu of the funny papers and get a better laugh which is very healthful. (Letter from Texas)

Thank-you for having sent me your book while I was in Japan. It was instrumental in helping a girl who got saved out of the Church clear up some lingering doubts as well as help another Mormon girl come to Christ on August 11. Both are friends of mine and are Japanese.

The first girl . . . was saved in December. She needed to clear some things up before requesting to be excommunicated. The book was so overwhelming because its so thoroughly documented and that’s what’s needed. She used it to help write a witnessing letter that she sent out to over 50 of her friends telling why she left the Church.

____ and I met with her friend____ to tell her why ____ was leaving the Church and so we could witness to her . . . . After our 3rd meeting she renounced the Church and accepted Christ. Now ______ and ______ are happily rejoicing together now that they are sisters in the Lord.

I thank the Lord for having helped you do your excellent research in your books. It definitely is bringing forth fruit. John 4:36 . . . Please send me another copy of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? . . . (Letter from Japan)

Every now and then I recieve literature from you in the mail and I want it to stop!

I believe in Mormonism with every fiber of my being and I know for a fact that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the only true church on the face of this earth! . . . Your book real[ly] strengthened my testimony!

All I can say to you now is that I don’t want any more of your literature to arrive in my mail box again.

I do not want the literature from the Sons and Daughters of Perdition in my house.

There is a law against those who repetedly keep sending mail to someone who doesn’t want it.

And I won’t hesitate one second to take you to court. You may have been in contact with Mormons that won’t fight. Well I’m not that way and you’re no match for me! I can make you regret the day you ever heard of Mormonism and I won’t hesitate to prove it.

Consider yourself warned! (Letter from Arizona)

I was raised a mormon all my life and three ago I accepted Jesus as my Lord and Savior.

I first became acquainted with your writings in an article in the Moody Monthly (June 1980). I noticed the magazine at a friend’s house and the cover caught my eye . . . the Lord blessed me with a christian neighbor. . . I started attending a Bible Study class and for the first time in my life I heard “God’s Word.” . . . when I saw the Moody Monthly and read your article and others who had been mormons just like myself I knew what I had to do.

I got down on my knees and prayed to receive Jesus into my heart. Such peace and joy I had never known. (Letter from California)

I was saved because of your ministry. I have a deep love for you both. I hope to support you more in the future. (Letter from Wyoming)

I’m 18 years old and technically a Mormon, though I havn’t believed in it for about 4 years now. I was raised in a very active Mormon family . . . I was lucky enough to be born with a some what open mind and began to slowly realise the falsity of the Mormon church. Though I am attending Brigham Young University, it is for academic reasons, not religious.

I stumbled upon your book, “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality,” and it was the answer to my prayers. At last a comprehensive, scholarly debunking of Mormonism . . . Thank-you for writing it, . . . (Letter from Utah)
Please send . . . “Mormonism: Shadow or Reality.” . . . Being in Cedar City—so largely Mormon, and being Mormon myself, I have found it necessary to research both sides of Mormonism. Thus far, your indepth research is so overwhelming! It has changed my life. (Letter from Utah)

We wish we had a Million to send you. We are so greatful for all your efforts. You have done and are doing more than anyone to reach our Mormon friends. We do pray for your safety & efforts. (Letter from Utah)

I am always delighted to read your newsletter—Your material was partly responsible for my total emotional detachment from Mormonism, after I was saved. . . . Thank you for pointing it out for what it really was. I hope this small gift will help your cause in the lawsuit. . . . I look forward to hearing all about your court victories in a future newsletter. (Letter from Arkansas)

I want you to know that your ministry has been a major influence on my life! All for the better. Praise God and thank you. My father is on the high counsel and my whole family is Mormon. . . . I saw Sandra on John Ankerburg—What an impact. I love you guys you helped set me free! free indeed! We ordered Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? WOW. Then after reading some of that we ordered seven more in faith for my family. You have such an important ministry, . . . You sell those books so cheap and I wanted to be a small part of your ministry with this offering . . . and a big part with prayer. . . . we are now in the process of selling our possessions and preparing ourselves to be full-time missionaries. . . . We feel you are a part of our lives and ministry. You are a big part of why we’re going. . . . we love you. (Letter from Colorado)

I very very rarely correspond with publishers, editors, etc. concerning their work, but in your case I felt it was quite necessary not only to commend your work but to encourage its furtherance. . . . In an effort to learn more about the Mormon church in order to effectivly share Jesus with my wife’s friend, we began searching for sources in the University of Arizona Library, . . . and came across some fascinating materials. One such item was your Mormon Scriptures and the Bible, . . . Last week I read your Mormonism Like Watergate? Not only have these books opened my eyes to many facts about the Mormon church I did not know, but my own faith in the reality of Jesus has been strengthened.

One evening several weeks ago my wife . . . came home with your names as the definitive authorities on Mormon doctrine. I shared with her that I had been reading some of your work and was so impressed that I felt we should give a copy of one of your books to her Mormon friend. My wife said that she had met someone who had given her the name of a book which she felt would be better to give to a Mormon. To my amazement the book my wife had been referred to was Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? the same book I was recommending . . . Anyway, we have been so blessed and educated by your works that we would like to add as many as possible to our own resource library . . . you are in our prayers as we know the Mormon people are in yours. Be encouraged as you carry on with what God has called you to. (Letter from Arizona)

I read your book [Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?] . . . and “astonishment” is the only word I can find to describe what I felt. My astonishment was due to a very simple reason: I had never read such an excellent work about Mormonism and I didn’t even suspect that such a thing could have been written. . . . Some characteristics of your book caused me a very strong impression:

1. the avalanche of documents you quote and reproduce to prove your point;
2. the hability [sic] you show in dealing with all this material;
3. the scholarly way you treat every subject;
4. the honesty, rightness and inescapability of your conclusions;
5. the exegetical skill in the use of biblical texts to demonstrate, beyond any reasonable doubt, the fallacy of Mormon doctrines and claims;
6. the total absence, throughout the whole book, of defamatory and abusive language, imprecation, cursing and the like so commonly found in works of this sort.

The result, I tell you without any favour or flattering intention, is “a marvelous work and a wonder.” . . . It is to be lamented that a book like “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality” cannot be found in Portuguese. . . . What possibilities do you see of having one of your books translated into Portuguese? (I offer my services as a translator without charges, fees or costs of any kind). (Letter from Brazil)
MORONI OR SALAMANDER?
Reported Find of Letter by Book of Mormon Witness

For a month or two there have been rumors circulating that an extremely important letter written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris has been discovered. Although there has been an attempt to keep the matter quiet until the document has been published, we have been able to piece together the story and to learn of the remarkable contents of this letter. The document was apparently purchased by Mark Hofmann, a Mormon scholar who has made a number of significant discoveries in the last few years. Mr. Hofmann in turn sold the document to Steven Christensen, who is planning to publish it in Sunstone. (The mailing address for Sunstone is Box 2272, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.)

Is It Authentic?

At the outset we should state that we have some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris. The serious implications of this whole matter, however, cry out for discussion. If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be mislead. We will give the reasons for our skepticism as we proceed with this article.

Since Martin Harris was one of the three special witnesses to the gold plates of the Book of Mormon (see his testimony in the front of the book), he is held in high esteem by the Mormon people. Mormon writers have commended him for his honesty. Although many Mormon critics may disagree with this view, everyone agrees that Harris played such an important role in early Mormonism that anything coming from his pen is of great significance. In this letter, written just after the Book of Mormon was published, we find these revealing statements concerning how Joseph Smith obtained the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated:

...I found it 4 years ago with my stone but only got it because of the enchantment the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream & says dig up the gold but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole ... (Letter purported to have been written by Martin Harris to W. W. Phelps, dated October 23, 1830, typed extract)

The letter goes on to state that the “old spirit” struck Joseph Smith three times. This story definitely links Joseph Smith to the magical practices attributed to him in the affidavits published in E. D. Howe’s book in 1834. For instance, Willard Chase testified:

In the month of June, 1827, Joseph Smith, Sen., related to me the following story: “That some years ago, a spirit had appeared to Joseph his son, in a vision, and informed him that in a certain place there was a record on plates of gold, ... He repaired to the place of deposit and demanded the book, which was in a stone box, ... He saw in the box something like a toad, which soon assumed the appearance of a man, and struck him on the side of his head. Not being discouraged at trifles, he again stooped down and strove to take the book, when the spirit struck him again, and knocked him three or four rods, and hurt him prodigiously. (Mormonism Unvailed, page 242)

The reader will notice that in the statements reported to have come from Joseph Smith’s father, the spirit which struck Joseph was transformed from “something like a toad.” The letter, of course, says that Joseph Smith identified the toad-like creature as a “white salamander.” Salamanders were important to those who practiced magic and dug for buried treasures in Joseph Smith’s time. Webster’s New Twentieth Century Dictionary of the English Language (Unabridged) gives this information about salamanders: “1. A mythological reptile resembling the lizard supposed to be able to endure or live in fire. 2. A spirit supposed to live in fire; an elemental spirit in Paracelsus’ theory of elementals.” In his book, The History of Magic, page 77, Kurt Seligmann reported:

Agrippa, basing his opinion on Aristotle, Dioscorides and Pliny the Elder, said that fire shelters salamanders and crickets. A simple experiment would have proven that salamanders and crickets die in fire, but Agrippa shared with the past an aversion to experimentation. From Pliny we learn that similar beliefs concerning the marvelous virtues of salamanders existed in Egypt and Babylon. . . . Thus did a superstitious belief perpetuate itself for about two thousand years.

Joseph Ennemoser said that “Paracelsus deserves one of the most eminent places in the history of magic.” Paracelsus, who was born in 1493, wrote a book entitled, A Book on Nymphs, Sylphs, Pygmies, and Salamanders, and on the Other Spirits. Henry E. Sigerist wrote the following in an introduction to this book:

Such strange creatures are the mysterious beings—Paracelsus usually calls them ding, things—that inhabit the four elements, the nymphs, sylphs, pygmies and salamanders and, related to them, the sirens, giants and dwarfs. . . . water is chaos to the nympha, earth to the pygmies, fire to the salamanders, while the sylphs have the same chaos as man. They are at home in their chaos and, therefore, nympha do not drown in water, pygmies are not choked in earth and salamanders do not burn in fire. This seems incredible but God is almighty. Why should he not be able to create such beings? . . . God created them for a special purpose—and here Paracelsus is writing as a theologian and scientist. God created these elemental beings as makers and guardians of the treasures of the earth. There is an infinite wealth of minerals in the earth. They are made in the depths of mountains under the influence of fire, and this is where the salamanders come in. Once the mineral ores are made they are guarded, those in the earth by the pygmies, those on the surface by the sylphs, and those at the bottom of the waters by the nympha. (Four Treatises of Theophrastus Von Hohenheim, Called Paracelsus, Baltimore, 1941, pages 216-220)

Since the gold plates of the Book of Mormon were considered to be a very valuable treasure, we can see why a believer in magic might choose to have a salamander guarding them.

According to the letter, Joseph Smith said he found the gold plates “4 years ago with my stone.” This statement seems to represent Martin Harris’ belief, for in an interview published in Tiffany’s Monthly about thirty years after the letter was supposed to have been written, Harris maintained that Joseph Smith found the plates by looking in a magical peep stone and that he also used the same stone to help a company of money-diggers search for buried treasure:

In this stone he could see many things to my certain knowledge. It was by means of this stone he first discovered these plates. . . .

Joseph had had this stone for some time. There was a company there in that neighborhood, who were digging for money supposed to have been hidden by the ancients. . . . They dug for money in Palmyra, Manchester, also in Pennsylvania and other places. When Joseph found this stone, there was a company digging in Harmony, Pa., and they took Joseph to look in the stone for them, and he did so for a while, and then he told them the enchantment was so strong that he could not see, and they gave it up. . . .

The money-diggers claimed that they had as much right to the plates as Joseph had, as they were in company together. They claimed that Joseph had been traitor, and had appropriated to himself that which belonged to them. . . . Joseph had before this described the manner of his finding the plates. He found them by looking in the stone found in the well of Mason Chase. (Interview with Martin Harris, published in Tiffany’s Monthly, 1859, pages 163, 164, 167 and 169)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 32-38, we show that Joseph Smith got in serious trouble because he used this stone to help the money-diggers. On page 33 of that book we have a photograph of a document written by Justice Albert Neely. This document proves that Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by Justice Neely in Bainbridge, New York, in 1826.

In an affidavit published on pages 237-239 of Howe’s book, William Stafford gives this information concerning the Smith family:

. . . I have heard them tell marvelous tales, respecting the discoveries they had made in their peculiar occupation of money digging. They would say, . . . in such a hill, on a certain man’s farm, there were deposited keys, barrels and hogsheds of coined silver and gold—bars of gold, golden images, brass kettles filled with gold and silver . . .
Joseph Smith, Sen., came to me one night, and told me, that Joseph Jr. had been looking in his glass, and had seen, not many rods from his house, two or three kegs of gold and silver, some feet under the surface of the earth; . . . After we had dug a trench about five feet in depth, . . . the old man . . . went to the house to inquire of young Joseph . . . Joseph had remained all this time in the house, looking in his stone and watching the motion of the evil spirit—that he saw the spirit come up . . . it caused the money to sink.

The letter which was supposed to have been written by Martin Harris also mentions the “kettles” containing treasures and the spirits who are in charge of the treasures: “. . . Joseph [Sr.?] often sees Spirits here with great kettles of coin money it was the Spirits who brought it up rock because Joseph made no attempt on their money . . .”

Just An Old Spirit

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 136-137, we discussed the problem over the name of the angel who was supposed to have revealed the gold plates to Joseph Smith. In Joseph Smith’s History, first published in the Times and Seasons in 1842, Smith gave the name of the Angel as NEPHI. The 1851 edition of the Pearl of Great Price also used the name Nephi: “He called me by name and said . . . that his name was Nephi” (page 41). Modern editions of the Pearl of Great Price and other Church publications now give the name as MORONI. The letter attributed to Martin Harris not only fails to give the name of the Angel, but it also omits the word “Angel” altogether! The personage who takes the form of a “white salamander” is only referred to as an “old spirit.” The letter gives far more support to the views which appear in a series of articles published in the Palmyra Reflector in 1831 than it does to the story now published by the Mormon Church. The following appears in one of the articles:

. . . the elder Smith declared that his son Joe had seen the spirit, (which he then described as a little old man with a long beard,) and was informed that he (Jo) under certain circumstances, eventually should obtain great treasures, and that in due time he (the spirit) would furnish him (Jo) with a book, which would give an account of the ancient inhabitants . . . (Palmyra Reflector, as cited in A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 1, page 289)

On page 291 of the same book, we find the following taken from the Reflector:

It is well known that Joe Smith never pretended to have any communion with angels, until a long period after the pretended finding of his book, and that the juggling of himself or father went no further than the pretended faculty of seeing wonders in a “peep stone,” and the occasional interview with the spirit, supposed to have the custody of hidden treasures . . .

Alvin’s Remains?

In his affidavit, Willard Chase gave this information concerning what occurred after the spirit struck Joseph Smith:

. . . he enquired why he could not obtain the plates; to which the spirit made reply, because you have not obeyed your orders. He then enquired when he could have them, and was answered thus: come one year from this day, and bring with you your oldest brother, and you shall have them. This spirit, he said was the spirit of the prophet who wrote this book . . . Before the expiration of the year, his oldest brother died; which the old man said was an accidental providence!

Joseph went one year from that day, to demand the book, and the spirit enquired for his brother, and he said that he was dead. The spirit then commanded him to come again, in just one year . . . (Mormonism Unveiled, pages 242-243)

This account is very similar to an account written by a faithful Mormon named Joseph Knight:

Joseph says, “when can I have it?” The answer was the 22nt Day of September next if you Bring the right person with you. Joseph says, “who is the right Person?” The answer was “your oldest Brother.”

But before September Came his oldest Brother Died . . . he went to the place and the personage appear and told him he Could not have it now. But the 22nt Day of September nex . . . if he Brot with him the right person. Joseph says, “who is the right Person?” The answer was you will know. Then he looked in his glass and found it was Emma Hale . . . (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1976, page 31)

In the letter purported to have been written by Martin Harris we find the same story. The letter has an additional element, however. After Joseph Smith tells the “old spirit” that his brother Alvin has died, there is a comment made about bringing what remains. If this refers to Alvin’s corpse, then it adds a very spooky element to the story. Graves and human remains are, of course, very important to some of those who use seer stones and practice magic. In this regard, it is interesting to note that there was a rumor that Alvin’s body had been disinterred. On September 29, 1824, just one week after Joseph Smith was supposed to have been visited by the Angel at the Hill Cumorah, his father printed the following in the Wayne Sentinel, the local newspaper:
WHEREAS reports have been industriously put in circulation that my son Alvin had been removed from the place of his interment and dissected, which reports, . . . are peculiarly calculated to harrow up the mind of a parent and deeply wound the feelings of relations—therefore, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of such reports, I, with some of my neighbors, this morning [September 25] repaired to the grave, and removing the earth, found the body which had not been disturbed. (Wayne Sentinel, September 29, 1824)

A Puzzling Find

Since we have been deeply involved in research having to do with the relationship of Mormonism to magic and have written a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, we were delighted to get the report that Martin Harris had written a letter relating to the subject. As we learned of the contents, we felt that it would provide additional evidence to support our thesis. Some time later, we were told of another letter, written by W. W. Phelps, which seemed to prove the authenticity of the letter attributed to Harris. This letter is printed in Howe’s book, pages 273-274. In the letter, Phelps tells of Martin Harris’ statements concerning the Book of Mormon. There are some remarkable parallels between the two letters. Both letters refer to the Urim and Thummim as “silver spectacles.” Both accounts tell of Martin Harris taking a copy of the Book of Mormon characters to “Utica, Albany and New York,” and both talk of the Book of Mormon language as “shorthand Egyptian.” Since Phelps’ letter is dated January 15, 1831, (less than three months after the letter which was reported to have been written by Harris), it seemed safe to conclude that Phelps used the Harris letter in preparing his own. In all fairness, however, we made another discovery which we feel we must report. Just two pages after Phelps letter, we found a statement written by E. D. Howe which is strangely similar to the “Harris” letter. The reader will remember that the letter said, “the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole.” E. D. Howe’s statement reads as follows “. . . looked into the hole, where he saw a toad, which immediately transformed itself into a spirit, . . .” Notice that both accounts use the words “the hole” as well as “spirit,” and the words “transfigured himself” resemble “transformed itself.” Howe’s statement appears to be his own summary of the Willard Chase affidavit which we have already cited: “He saw in the box something like a toad, which soon assumed the appearance of a man . . .”

That Howe’s statement (Mormonism Unvailed, page 276) is so much like the one in the “Harris” letter is a little disturbing. Even more disconcerting, however, is the fact that it appears just two pages from a letter by W. W. Phelps which also bears remarkable parallels. This, of course, might all be a coincidence, and if it can be established that the letter was actually penned before Howe’s book was published in 1834, it will probably be accepted as a genuine letter. As we understand it, the Church’s handwriting expert, Dean Jessee, feels that the signature was penned by Martin Harris, but so far no tests on the paper have been completed. We feel that the letter should be made available to other handwriting experts, and that the public should be informed where the letter was originally obtained. We have heard that there is a red postal mark on the original letter and that the amount of postage is correct for a letter from Palmyra to Canandaigua. Although the average person would have a difficult time forging these things, there are probably a number of people who could do the job. In an interview with Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 16, Mark Hofmann made these comments concerning forgeries:

There have been all kinds of Lincoln forgeries . . . To date that hasn’t been a real problem with Mormon documents. Now, however, with the publicity that’s been given the tremendous amount of money to be realized (for example, the Trib mentioned a $30,000 figure for the Lucy Mack Smith letter), there may be some temptation to forge.

Although a great deal of the contents of the “Harris” letter can also be found in Howe’s book, there are some portions that resemble other writings. For instance, the letter relates a conversation Joseph had with the “old spirit”: “. . . Joseph says when can I have it . . .” This is identical to Joseph Knight’s statement published in BYU Studies, Autumn 1976, page 31: “Joseph says, ‘when can I have it?’”

While we would really like to believe that the letter attributed to Harris is authentic, we do not feel that we can endorse it until further evidence comes forth. If any of our readers have any information about the matter we would appreciate hearing about it. We understand that an article concerning the subject will be published in Time magazine.

AT LAST!

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

Although Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is our most important work, we have never taken the time to prepare an index. Fortunately, Michael Briggs has seen the need and has prepared a 38 page index. This should be a great help to our readers. Price $2.00 (Mail orders add 10%)
COVER-UP ON LAWSUIT

As we have indicated in previous issues of the Messenger, on April 28, 1983, the Mormon scholar Andrew Ehat filed a lawsuit against us (Jerald and Sandra Tanner) in an attempt to stop publication of some extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton. Because these diaries contain embarrassing material on the origin of polygamy and other matters, they have been suppressed in the vault of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church. In 1979-80 Mr. Ehat gained access to a copy of the diaries and made the revealing extracts. Ehat tried very hard to keep the material from falling into the hands of critics of the Mormon Church, but a member of a bishopric in Provo duplicated the material and it was widely circulated by Mormon scholars at Brigham Young University. These extracts subsequently found their way into our hands and we printed them in the book Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered.

We feel that the copyright laws do not support Ehat’s contention and believe the suit is doomed to failure. The following is plainly stated in Section 103(b) of Title 17, United States Code: “The copyright in a compilation or derivative work extends only to the material contributed by the author of such work, as distinguished from the preexisting material employed in the work, and does not imply any exclusive right in the preexisting material.”

Since Ehat’s notes are composed of extracts from “preexisting” material (i.e., the diaries of William Clayton), he cannot claim copyright protection.

False Testimony

In the Messenger for November 1983 we indicated that “it seems very likely that Ehat is claiming a copyright on some material he derived from other scholars. In order to get to the bottom of this matter, we are going to subpoena Ehat, Cook, Allen and possibly other Mormon scholars to testify concerning the matter.” We have now taken the depositions of a number of Mormon scholars. These depositions clearly show that Mr. Ehat covered up the truth concerning how he obtained his material.

In his complaint against us, Mr. Ehat indicated that he “was given permissive access to the private, heretofore-unpublished Nauvoo Journals of one William Clayton then deposited with the Office of the First Presidency . . . from which he permissively extracted certain notes, quotes and extracts. . . . From said notes plaintiff, in collaboration with one Lyndon W. Cook, produced a book titled The Words of Joseph Smith, the proprietary interest and copyright interest of which was assigned . . . to the Religious Studies Center, an agency of Brigham Young University, . . . At no time has the plaintiff given the defendants, or either of them, any permission to publish or print any notes taken by him from the William Clayton Journal.”

We have always felt that Ehat had an extremely weak case. The depositions tend to support our position. Before citing these depositions we should say that they were provided by the Certified Shorthand Reporters and are subject to corrections before being filed with the court. In his deposition, James B. Allen, formerly Assistant Church Historian, revealed that the material which Ehat printed in The Words of Joseph Smith came directly from him. This amounted to 12 of the 88 pages we published in Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. Allen made it very clear that he had personally typed these pages and claimed that “I had kind of a moral obligation not to indiscriminately let my notes out. . . . I asked Mr. Ehat specifically . . . that when you put this in your book, The Words of Joseph Smith, please cite me as the source because I don’t want any questions about anything. . . . I said, cite me as the source because I’ve had legitimate access and everyone knows I’ve had legitimate access to the diaries” (Deposition of James B. Allen, Civil No. C-83-1593C, page 29).

As we indicated in a previous issue of the Messenger, Ehat did include a footnote thanking Allen for the material. In his deposition he admitted that the pages were actually typed by James B. Allen. While this seems to destroy his copyright claim on the quotations in The Words of Joseph Smith, he still maintains that he has a copyright on the other 76 pages. When we questioned Ehat as to how he got these pages, he replied:

In doing research in early LDS history in 1979 plaintiff approached Don Schmidt, Church Archivist, and inquired about some entries in William Clayton’s Journal in which he was interested. He ultimately received permission to read all three of the journals noted above. While reading he made notes of the dates of the journal entries in which he was primarily concerned. In 1979 and 1980 he was given permission to type out from a complete reproduction (a typescript) of those three diaries the extracts that he had earlier noted. (Andrew Ehat’s Answers to Interrogatories, November 21, 1983, pages 3-4)

It is plain from this that Mr. Ehat’s extracts came from a typed copy rather than the original diaries. In taking Ehat’s deposition, our lawyer, Brian Bernard, asked him who had given him permission to see the typescript. Ehat replied that it was Donald Schmidt (mistakenly recorded as Smith), the Church Archivist:

Q. Who gave you the permission to see that typescript copy? Did Don Smith do that?
A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Was anybody else involved in giving you permission to see that typescript that you’re aware of?
A. No, not that I’m aware of. (Deposition of Andrew Ehat, page 43)

After this testimony was given, we subpoenaed Donald Schmidt. The Church’s lawyers fought the matter and filed a motion to quash the subpoena. They apparently realized, however, that we would win and withdrew their objection. In his testimony, Schmidt not only denied that he had given Ehat access to a typescript, but he claimed that he was not even aware of a typescript of the Clayton diaries:

Q. He’s indicated in his deposition that after that time he had access to a type script of the Clayton Journals and that he acquired access to that type script from you.
A. From me?

MR. BARNARD. Okay. Prior to 1979, had you heard that there was a type script of those volumes of the Clayton Journals?
A. No.

Q. The deposition of Andrew Ehat, page 43, indicates that Andrew Ehat was given permission by you to see a type script copy. You have no recollection of that?
A. Not of those diaries. It is possible that he is confused with some type script which we have of other Clayton material.

Q. And to your knowledge there is no type script of those three volumes?
A. I’m not aware of any type script other than very recently. (Deposition of Donald Schmidt, pages 20-23)

The Church’s lawyer Bruce Findley indicated that he was the first one to tell Mr. Schmidt about the typescript: “I might interject I think he heard it from me in connection with this case” (Ibid., page 21).

We took the deposition of Professor Richard L. Anderson of Brigham Young University. Anderson had examined the original diaries, but was also unaware of a typescript. The truth about the typescript finally came out when we were taking the testimony of James B. Allen:

Q. Okay. Are you aware of any type script of those journals?
A. Well—.

Q. A verbatim type script of those three journals?
A. Yes, I’m aware of a verbatim type script of the journals.

Q. Okay. And when was the first time you were aware of that?
A. When I made one.

Q. The type script that Andy Ehat had access to he described as being approximately 300 pages long of double-spaced typing.
A. Mine could possibly fit into that category, yes.

MR. BARNARD. Did Andy Ehat ever have access to that type script?
A. Andy Ehat did not have access to that type script and I do not think Andy Ehat knew I was preparing the type script. . . . and certainly he did not have access to it. . . . when I left at night I locked the material I was making in my own desk and put the key in my pocket and went home. So I don’t know of any way that Andy could have had access to my type script.

MR. BARNARD. Did you tell Don Schmidt?
A. I did not tell Don Schmidt although I’m sure Don Schmidt was aware that I was taking very extensive notes but I considered what I was taking to be my own particular scholarly property and that is the way it remained. (Deposition of James B. Allen, pages 20, 22, 24 and 25)

Dr. Allen admitted that there was one other person who had helped prepare the transcript and had a copy of it, but he did not want to reveal the name. The lawyer from Brigham Young University, in fact, instructed him not to tell who the other person was:

MR. BARNARD. Well I’m going to flat out ask you who that person was.
MISS PARK. I’ll instruct him not to answer.
MR. BARNARD. Okay. You’re going to take your attorney’s advice and not answer that question?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you know if that person has made any distribution of copies of those, copies of the copy that you gave to that person?
A. To my knowledge he has not and my firm assumption is that he is the kind of person that would not have but I do not have personal knowledge. That is a strong assumption on my part.

Q. Do you know if that person has let anybody else see your type script?
A. I do not believe he has but again, I do not have sure knowledge of it. (Ibid., pages 27-28)
The reader will remember that in his deposition, Ehat testified he got permission from Donald Schmidt to use the typescript, and when he was asked if anyone else was involved in giving him permission, he replied: “No.” One can only speculate as to why Ehat would go to such lengths to cover up the involvement of Jessee. Since Jessee was not the Archivist and had no real authority to show him Church documents, it is obvious that it would be better to say that Schmidt gave him permission.

However this may be, James B. Allen claimed on page 25 of his deposition that the typescript was “my own particular scholarly property.” Although he apparently made the typescript on his own authority, he claims that he was given special permission by the First Presidency of the Mormon Church to use the diaries for a biography of William Clayton and that it was his understanding that other scholars were not allowed to use them. He claimed, in fact, that he was “miffed” when he learned Ehat had material beyond the 12 pages he had supplied him with:

A. . . . I do remember asking Don questions like where did he get it . . . I remember my concerns at the time as I talked with other people was where did Andy that get access to this material. . . . I remember talking with several people, Don Schmidt and other people up in the Historical Department and people at BYU like Noel Reynolds and others and I was miffed. I didn’t know where he got access to it and that was the nature of the conversations I had with anyone.

Q. After the notes were taken from Cook and distributed and you described yourself as being miffed, were you miffed because you discovered the extent of Ehat’s notes?

A. Yes, I think so. It was a surprise to me to know that he had that much verbatim material from the Clayton Diaries. I knew he had what I gave him and I, of course, knew he had things from here and there but I was not aware that he had that much from the Clayton Journals and that is why I was miffed, if that is the proper word. Surprised.

Q. And I take it from your previous testimony that the reason you were surprised or miffed was because you thought you had been given some sort of special permission or exclusive permission to have access to those diaries?

A. That’s correct.

Q. Have you ever told anybody that the Clayton Diaries were not available for others to do research in?

A. I assume that I have because that was my understanding. (Deposition of Allen, pages 79-82)
After the Ehat notes got out, the President of Brigham Young University appointed Noel Reynolds to investigate the situation. One of Reynold’s concerns was whether Ehat had obtained the material surreptitiously. When Allen was asked if anyone had inquired how Ehat procured the material, he said: “... I believe that Noel Reynolds asked me specifically as part of his efforts to find out.” In compliance with a subpoena, Noel Reynolds turned over to us a note he had written concerning a conversation he had with a BYU professor who had obtained a copy of Ehat’s notes. We find the following in this note: “I began by explaining . . . the nature of the charge made against him by Andy Ehat, that is, that he had received and retained research materials which were stolen from a doctoral candidate. He indicated immediately 1) the concern that Andy may not have acquired the materials legitimately himself, . . .” When we questioned this professor concerning the matter, he said that it was his understanding that Ehat would not tell BYU officials where he had obtained the Clayton material.

While we feel that Ehat never had a case to begin with, the cover-up and false statements made concerning the way he obtained the Clayton material tend to make the whole matter absolutely ridiculous. Ehat accused us of causing him “irreparable damage” because we used his scholarly work product.

The truth of the matter, however, is that he never even made the transcription from the handwritten diaries. Instead, he relied upon the Allen-Jessee transcript which Dr. Allen calls “my own particular scholarly property.” This, of course, was done without Allen’s permission or knowledge.

Fortunately, the fact that the material which Ehat obtained did not come directly from the diaries does not invalidate its authenticity. Former Assistant Church Historian James B. Allen has checked our publication, Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered, and found that it is an accurate reproduction of the original diaries:

I can stipulate this: That whatever I have obviously, in the copy that I made, and the material that the Tanners published is just almost verbatim. There is little, tiny differences here and there but almost verbatim of that . . . (Deposition of James B. Allen, page 27)

In examining our records we find that over $9,000 has either been deposited with our lawyer or used to provide transportation for a witness. Fortunately, our friends have responded in a very generous way and most of this amount has been contributed. We really thank God for this show of support. So far we have no reason to believe that Ehat is planning on dropping this unjust suit. Our lawyer has filed a motion for dismissal, but if the judge does not grant this request, the case will go into court and expenses will continue to mount. We feel very confident that we will prevail in the end, and even though it costs a great deal of money it will be worth it. In addition to the legal expenses we have been faced with, we have spent countless hours working on this suit. We hope that some of our readers will consider contributing at this time so that we will meet all of our legal expenses and have enough left over to publish the truth about the matter to the world. All checks which are made out to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY are tax-deductible. Our readers will notice also that we are still selling Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered for only $3.00 a copy (mail orders please add 10% for postage and handling).

NOW AVAILABLE

Divergent Paths of the Restoration, by Steven L. Shields. “Over 100 churches, organizations and individuals are discussed . . . Every church known to have existed since Joseph Smith’s time—which based its beliefs on some part of his teachings—is presented.” The author tries to give a fair overview of each group. The best reference book on the subject. Hardbound. $12.95 (Mail orders add 10%).

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY

PO BOX 1884

SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
“The atmosphere in the courtroom was electric,” wrote Christine Rigby. “Many of the big guns in Mormon history were there. They would finally be testifying in a case against Jerald and Sandra Tanner, the notorious anti-Mormon publishers. . . . For years the Mormon historical establishment has chafed under the Tanners’ continued publishing of sensitive documents and private letters, on many of which some historians complained the Tanners had violated copyright restrictions” (Utah Holiday, May 1984, page 13).

The Mormon scholar Andrew Ehat filed this lawsuit against us on April 28, 1983, in an attempt to stop publication of some extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton. Because these diaries contain embarrassing material on the origin of polygamy and other matters, they have been suppressed in the vault of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church. In 1979–80 Mr. Ehat gained access to a copy of the diaries and made the revealing extracts. Ehat tried very hard to keep the material from falling into the hands of critics of the Mormon Church, but a member of a bishopric in Provo surreptitiously duplicated the material and it was widely circulated by Mormon scholars at Brigham Young University. These extracts subsequently found their way into our hands, and we printed them in the book Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered.

Injunction Removed

Mr. Ehat claimed that we had violated the copyright law when we printed the Clayton notes. We argued, however, that Ehat could not possibly have a copyright interest in material taken from Clayton’s diaries and refused to settle out of court.

Judge A. Sherman Christensen commenced the trial on March 21, 1984, and on March 25 he announced that we were correct in saying that Mr. Ehat had no copyright in the Clayton material: “2. That the plaintiff has no copyrightable interest in the so-called Ehat notes nor their ideas nor content, and that the plaintiff’s claim should be dismissed with prejudice” (Court’s Ruling, page 17). Instead of dismissing the case, however, Judge Christensen apparently felt that we had to be punished in some way for printing the material. He, therefore, awarded $16,000 for what he said was “unfair competition” and damage to Ehat’s reputation. In addition to this, Judge Christensen said he was going to stop our publication of the Clayton material: “. . . Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered . . . cannot lawfully be continued to be sold and distributed by the defendant and those acting under them” (Court’s Ruling, page 16).

Just four days after making this statement, Judge Christensen began to have doubts about the wisdom of his decision to enjoin Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered, and on April 10, he held a hearing and completely reversed his decision with regard to the injunction. Although we have won the battle as far as the continued publication of this book is concerned, we still feel that Christensen’s decision concerning “unfair competition” is completely wrong, and we are appealing it to the 10th circuit court where it will be reviewed by a panel of three judges. We will even consider going to the U.S. Supreme Court if we feel that it is necessary to vindicate the rights of freedom of the press guaranteed to us in the Constitution.

Prejudice?

We believe that Judge Christensen’s decision is a serious blow to freedom of the press and could have some implications as far as freedom of religion is concerned. A number of people have asked us if Judge Christensen

NEW MATERIAL

The Tanners On Trial

By Jerald and Sandra Tanner

This book has well over 100 large pages with many photographs of the original court documents. Contains fascinating testimony by some of the Mormon Church’s top historians. Highly recommended.

PRICE: $5.95 (Add 10% for postage and handling)

The Money-Digging Letters

A preliminary report by Jerald Tanner on some recently discovered letters linking Joseph Smith to the occult (see story on pages 11-12).

PRICE: $1.00
is a member of the Mormon Church and whether this would have had an influence on his decision. While we do not know whether his religion had anything to do with the verdict, the book Who's Who In The West, page 31, states that A. Sherman Christensen is a Mormon and that he attended the Church’s Brigham Young University. In 1971, Judge Christensen wrote an article entitled “Justice and Mercy.” It was published in the Church’s official organ, The Ensign, in November 1971 (see pages 29-31). In this article Christensen quoted from the Church’s Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants to uphold his position.

While it is true that we were not directly battling the Mormon Church in this case, Judge Christensen was called on to decide whether the original Clayton diaries would be available for our defense. Christensen took the matter “under advisement” and on September 16, 1983, ruled that the Church would not have to produce the diaries. Whether he was right or wrong in his decision to keep the diaries suppressed, we feel that he should have withdrawn from the case because it involved a matter where he would have found himself directly opposing the wishes of his Church leaders if he had ruled in our favor. While our lawyer and a number of other people feel that Judge Christensen is a good judge and attempts to be impartial in his decisions, his religion could have been a factor in this case. Moreover, the fact that the scandal over the notes occurred at the Church’s university, where he had attended, probably did not help us any. Andrew Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen, apparently felt that he could capitalize on the religious issue, and in the depositions he took from us, he asked questions to make it clear that we had left the Mormon Church and were publishing sensitive Church documents. This could, of course, create a great deal of prejudice against us in the mind of a Mormon judge. We will never know whether there was religious prejudice involved, but we would have felt much better about the matter if the case had been heard before a non-Mormon judge or decided before an impartial jury.

Judge Very Upset!

On April 29, 1984, we published an advertisement in the Salt Lake City newspapers. In this article we criticized Judge Christensen’s handling of the case and told that he had reversed his decision on the injunction. We also stated that Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered “is still available for $3.00 a copy.” This article set off a chain of circumstances which led us back before the Judge. Gordon A. Madsen was very upset over the matter and filed a “Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment.” In this motion he asked the Court to reinstate “a restraining order as encunciated [sic] by the Court March 23, 1984.”

Much to our surprise, Judge Christensen granted Ehat’s lawyer a hearing concerning the matter. This, of course, ran up our legal costs even higher. It is our belief that he only granted the hearing so that he could rebuke us for criticizing his judgment in the newspapers. At this hearing, Judge Christensen made some remarkable statements which clearly showed his prejudice against us:

THE COURT: At the time this matter was before me for final decision with respect to injunctive relief, I was persuaded that an injunction would involve too many problems of enforcement and First Amendment rights to commend to the Court its issuance. . . .

The other thing that persuaded me was my assumption that Mr. Tanner was acting in good faith, was a law abiding citizen . . . I assumed that until, if at all, a decision was changed, there would be compliance with the spirit of the decision. I really didn’t expect that Mr. Tanner would insist upon continuing to commit what was adjudged to be an unlawful act, . . .

According to the showing before the Court, not only did he do that, but as I read the article, the advertisement . . . he really misrepresented the decision of the Court and flaunted his defiance of it. . . . supposing that the defendants would be content with their rights of free speech, which the court has no disposition to restrain . . . it leaned over backwards. . . . I see, however, that the Tanners not only insisted upon the continuation of the unlawful acts, but tried to capitalize on the court’s circumspection toward them . . .

I had assumed that the principle damage accruing to the plaintiffs. . . . accrued . . . it is appropriate for me to notice, however, that damages of a nature far beyond what were awarded heretofore could well flow from the crafted, misrepresentation of the Court’s judgment by way of justification and self-protection, and then contrary to the expressed holding of the Court, flaunting and emphasizing by apparently a prepared publication the very situation that gave rise to the prior damages; . . . And beyond that, the invitation to the public by a public announcement to come in and buy additional copies and to accentuate the damage that I thought the case was limited to by prior action of the Court . . .

The Tanners weren’t content with their rights under the First Amendment, . . . but had to advertize through misrepresentation their violation and invite the public to contribute to that violation. I guess I’m a little naive. I’m not used to dealing with the kind of people when I accord consideration on balance in faith that there would be at least an attempt to comply with the Court’s ruling. I’m not used to people advertising their noncompliance . . .

The Tanners have done about as much as they can do to flaunt the judgment of the Court to appropriate further, or for their own gain, plaintiff’s declared right. I don’t see that they can do very much else unless they went to publish another advertisement to try and market the matter. But if they do there is relief here. . . . In my judgment the amount of damages as a result of this additional publication under the circumstances I have mentioned may well be immeasurably more than the damage that was suffered by the plaintiff up to the time of the judgment. . . . if and when the case is affirmed, I assume the Tanners can be brought in and a full accounting made as to what other sales they have made which were unlawful. . . . The Tanners will be liable as a matter of law for such damages including punitive damages as may have been additionally caused by their unlawful act. (“Partial Transcript of Proceedings,” May 8, 1984, pages 3-11)

While Judge Christensen pretended that he was very shocked that there was “further publication,” his original Court’s Ruling, pages 15-16, plainly shows that he knew we were going to go on printing the book: “The Court finds that unless an order is issued enjoining the defendants from continuing to publish . . . the defendants will continue to do so to the irreparable damage of the plaintiff . . .” The Court recorded clearly show that we never entered into any kind of an agreement to cease publication. On the contrary, at the hearing on April 10, 1984, our lawyer, Brian Barnard, argued “And to enjoin the Tanners from distributing copies of those documents, . . . I think is inappropriate. . . . if, in fact, Mr. Ehat suffers further damage because of the distribution, that 45 cents a copy has been determined by the Court to be an appropriate compensation. And, I’d suggest that that would be the compensation that he should receive in the future if the Court would determine there was any liability” (pages 20-21).

That the Judge accepted Barnard’s argument is evident from his statement that Ehat could recover further damages “in the event of such future sales, publication, or distribution. I may say that I have been influenced to a degree by the suggestion of counsel for the defendant that this might be appropriate in lieu of injunctive relief” (“Partial Transcript of Proceedings,” April 10, 1984, pages 6-7).

In light of these facts, we find it impossible to believe that the Judge would be unaware that we were likely to continue publication of the book. Furthermore, we do not accept the Judge’s claim that he “leaned over backwards” to try and protect our “rights of free speech.” On the contrary, we believe that he only lifted the injunction because he found out that we were appealing the case and that he knew he would look very bad if his decision were overturned. The Judge’s attempt to make us appear to be without principles seems rather ridiculous. While it is true that he ruled that the publication was unlawful, he certainly does not have the final word about the matter. We completely disagree with his decision and feel that we have every right to continue selling the book until we are told not to by the 10th Circuit Court or the Supreme Court of the United States. If Judge Christensen really felt that it was an “unlawful” publication and that Mr. Ehat was going to suffer irreparable damages if we were allowed to continue publishing the book, he should have had the courage to stick by his original decision concerning the injunction.

We feel that Judge Christensen was not really as concerned about Ehat’s rights as he was about the fact that we had questioned his ruling and told how he had to reverse his decision on the injunction. On page 10 of the “Partial Transcript of Proceedings,” May 8, 1984, it became rather clear that our supposed “flaunting and misrepresentation” of Judge Christensen’s decision was the thing that really upset him:

. . . if the plaintiff suffered in the magnitude of $15,000 from the unlawful misappropriation and publication, the damages could well exceed that by many times because of the emphasis that hadn’t applied before through the public announcement and the Tanners’ flaunting and misrepresentation of the judgment of the Court . . .

It would appear from this that Judge Christensen is trying to intimidate us through threats of awarding vast sums of money to Mr. Ehat just so we will not publicly question his decision. On page 9 of the same document, he said that if we were to publish another advertisement, “there is relief here.” His statement on page 10 that he would award “many times” the $15,000 (actually $16,000) is certainly difficult to interpret. One might get the impression, however, that he is talking of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

We view Judge Christensen’s threats as nothing less than an attempt to keep us from exercising our freedom of speech, and feel that it is deplorable that a judge representing the United States Government would stoop to such methods to keep us from questioning his decisions. We feel that this is not the American way, and we do not intend to be intimidated by his threats. In any case, after severely rebuking us, the Judge ended up denying the motion to restore the injunction, and in a document prepared May 14, 1984, he wrote: “IT IS NOW HEREBY ORDERED that the motion of the plaintiff to alter or amend the judgment by granting injunctive relief as against the defendants is hereby denied, . . .”
Hurt Reputation?

We feel that one of Judge Christensen’s greatest mistakes occurred when he awarded Andrew Ehat $12,000 for loss of reputation:

6. The plaintiff’s entitled to a judgment for compensatory damages against the defendant in the sum of $960 representing profits made by the defendants for the unlawful publication of the Ehat notes, for the sum of $3,000 for the reduction by defendants unlawful acts of the potential market value of the publication of plaintiff’s master’s thesis, for the sum of $12,000 for damage to plaintiff’s reputation as a scholar and researcher; . . . (Court’s Ruling, page 24)

The Judge does not seem to make it clear whether we have actually hurt Ehat’s reputation or merely deprived him of being the first scholar to publish the Clayton material. On page 14 of the Ruling, however, Judge Christensen said “15. I further find that because of defendant’s publication of plaintiff’s notes, plaintiff’s access to private repositories is impaired to a degree.” Christine Rigby was far more observant than the Judge. In Utah Holiday, May 1984, page 14, she wrote: “. . . on Ehat’s loss of reputation, he testified that he had not once been denied access to private repositories since the incident. Yet, the judge made a finding of fact that ‘plaintiff’s access to private repositories is impaired to a degree.’” This testimony was given by Mr. Ehat at the trial:

Q. Has anyone in any library, archive, or repository said to you, You let your notes be distributed, your notes from the Clayton journal, therefore you can’t have access to any book or materials in our library?
A. No. (Trial Transcript, page 100)

In his deposition Andrew Ehat gave the following testimony:

Q. . . . Has anybody told you that you can’t have access to materials because of this incident?
A. Well, I can’t read others’ minds or know that if I’m denied access to something it’s a result of this. I can’t say that I’ve been denied any access.

Q. Nobody has specifically told you they won’t let you have access because of the incident?
A. That’s correct.

Q. And since the incident in ‘81, has it—has a situation ever arisen where you have asked for access and somebody said no for any reason?

THE WITNESS. I don’t know that I have been restricted from seeing anything. I may have asked for something, but for different reasons they would give me a no, but I don’t recall any occasions.

BY MR. BARNARD:
Q. Okay. That’s with regard to the LDS Church?
A. That was with regard to the LDS Church and any other repository.

Q. So you haven’t been refused to your recollection, since 1981 to have access to materials by anybody?
A. To my recollection, yes. (Deposition of Andrew Ehat, pages 115-116)

In spite of Mr. Ehat’s testimony to the contrary, Judge Christensen ruled that the “plaintiff’s access to private repositories is impaired to a degree.” We always thought that court decisions were supposed to be based on solid evidence. It would appear, however, that in this case the judge was acting on emotion rather than evidence.

With regard to the damage to Ehat’s reputation, Professor Richard L. Anderson testified: “He was I think more concerned with the personal professional loss of face and the very greater damage to his reputation as a scholar in allowing—appearing to allow these things to be published” (Trial Transcript, page 332). Dr. Anderson indicated, however, that when people learned the truth concerning how the material got out, there was no damage to Ehat’s reputation: “The people that knew the circumstances didn’t think ill of Andy because they knew it wasn’t his volition that contributed to the dissemination of the materials, . . .” (Ibid., page 336).

The important question, then, with regard to Mr. Ehat’s reputation is whether we told the truth concerning how the Clayton notes got out. If we tried to make it appear that Ehat had deliberately leaked a sensitive Church document to us for publication, this would have hurt his reputation as far as access to Church Archives is concerned. If, on the other hand, we indicated that he was opposed to the publication of the material, there would have been no damage to his reputation. A careful examination of the introduction to Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered clearly demonstrates we reported that Mr. Ehat did everything in his power to stop the dissemination of the notes. On the second page of the Introduction, we stated that, “Andrew Ehat was vigorously opposed to anyone publishing the material. In fact, one man who was preparing to print it, received a letter from Ehat’s lawyer which threatened legal action if he did not desist.”

“Stolen” Microfilms

Now, while Andrew Ehat did not suffer any damage to his reputation because of our publication, he will probably suffer a great deal of damage because of the things that came out in the depositions and the testimonies which were given at the trial itself. The testimony shows that Mr. Ehat took an active part in the Mormon Underground (a group composed mostly of liberal Mormon scholars who secretly disseminate documents that have been suppressed by the Mormon Church), and this information could very well impair his access to documents owned by the Church.

Since the Mormon Church has tried very hard to keep many of its documents secret, a person can easily understand why Ehat participated in the Underground. Many prominent Mormon scholars have become involved in the Underground because they feel that the Church’s policy concerning documents is too restrictive. A number of documents which we have printed have leaked out through Mormon scholars. At the time our deposition was taken, Mr. Ehat encouraged his lawyer to point his finger at us and accuse us of printing “stolen documents.” We feel that this is very hypocritical when the evidence shows that Ehat himself was part of the Underground.

While professing to be a faithful Mormon historian, Andrew Ehat was involved in the dissemination of underground documents. In our new book, The Tanners On Trial, we show that Mr. Ehat was not only a participant in the Underground, but that he was receiving material from some of the worst enemies of the Church—i.e., the Mormon “Fundamentalists.” The Fundamentalists believe in the present-day practice of polygamy and in the Adam-God doctrine. They are excommunicated from the Mormon Church when they are discovered.

In his deposition, a former Brigham Young University student told of his underground dealings with Mr. Ehat. He claimed that Ehat allowed him to borrow illicit microfilm copies of important Church documents, which he in turn duplicated and distributed to other people in the Mormon Underground. When Andrew Ehat was being questioned at the trial, his lawyer did his best to prevent us from learning the source of these unauthorized microfilms:

Q. Now, with regard to the collection that you have . . . do you have in that collection copies of any historical documents that are restricted or held in libraries to which the general public or most historians don’t have access?
A. Yes.
Q. And what are the nature of those documents that you have? Do you have microfilm copies?
A. Yes.

MR. MADSEN: Your Honor, what is the relevance of this? We are not talking about microfilm or documents being printed.
THE COURT: Is that an objection, Mr. Madsen?
MR. MADSEN: It’s an objection as to relevance, your Honor.
THE COURT: Overruled. He may answer. (Trial Transcript, pages 69-70)

Because the Judge overruled Madsen’s objection, Mr. Ehat was forced into telling the source of three microfilms we knew he had in his possession. He frankly confessed that two of these were received directly from the Mormon “Fundamentalists.” In the “Transcript of Proceedings,” April 10, 1984, page 25, Mr. Ehat’s lawyer conceded that Ehat “got a copy” of a microfilm that “had been stolen.”

As we indicated earlier, it is certainly possible that Andrew Ehat’s reputation will be hurt by the revelations which came forth in the depositions and at the trial. He only has himself to blame, however, because none of this would have come to light if he had not filed the lawsuit.

False Testimony

Another thing that will hurt Andrew Ehat’s reputation is the fact that he gave false testimony under oath about how he obtained the Clayton material. The original complaint against us seemed to indicate that Mr. Ehat copied the material directly from the original Clayton diaries. We had reason to believe, however, that at least some of the material came from a different source. In his Answers to Interrogatories, November 21, 1983, Mr. Ehat admitted that he had been given 12 pages of the extracts by James B. Allen and that he had copied the rest from a typescript. In taking Ehat’s deposition, Brian Barnard asked him who had given him permission to see the typescript. Ehat replied that it was Donald Schmidt, the Church Archivist:

Q. Who gave you the permission to see that typescript? Did Don Schmidt do that?
A. Yes.
Q. Was anyone else involved in giving you permission to see that typescript that you’re aware of?
A. No, not that I’m aware of. (Deposition of Andrew Ehat, page 43)

After this testimony was given, we subpoenaed Donald Schmidt. The Church’s lawyers fought the matter and filed a motion to quash the subpoena. They apparently realized, however, that we would win and withdrew their objection. In his testimony, Schmidt not only denied that he had given Ehat access to a typescript, but he also claimed that he was not even aware that the Historical Department had a typescript of the Clayton diaries in question:

BARNARD: Okay. Prior to 1979, had you heard that there was a typescript of those volumes of the Clayton Journals?
A. No.
The church’s lawyer, Bruce Findlay, indicated that he was the first one to tell Mr. Schmidt about the typescript: “I might interject I think he heard it from me in connection with this case” (Ibid., page 21).

The truth about the transcript finally came out when we were taking the testimony of James B. Allen, who served as Assistant Church Historian during the 1970s. When Dr. Allen was asked when he first became aware of the typescript, he replied: “When I made one” (Deposition of James B. Allen, page 20). Allen claimed that he was given special permission by the First Presidency to use the diaries for a biography he was writing on William Clayton. He admitted that he made the verbatim typescript without the Church’s permission and did not tell Donald Schmidt about it. When he was asked whether Ehat had access to it, he answered as follows:

A. Andy Ehat did not have access to that type script and I do not think Andy Ehat knew I was preparing the type script . . . and certainly he did not have access to it. . . . when I left at night I . . . locked the material I was making in my own desk and put the key in my pocket and went home. So I don’t know of any way that Andy could have had access to my type script. (Ibid., page 22)

Dr. Allen admitted that there was one other person who had helped prepare the transcript and had a copy of it, but he did not want to reveal the name. The lawyer from Brigham Young University, in fact, instructed him not to tell who the other person was. We already suspected that it was Dean Jessee, a noted Mormon scholar. In Scott Faulring’s deposition, he testified that when Ehat first found that his notes had been duplicated, he went into “a rage” and mentioned that Allen, Jessee and Cook would get in trouble if the notes fell into the hands of critics of the Church.

Although Dr. Allen did his best to protect Dean Jessee, he finally found himself backed into a corner. He then stated that rather than “perjure” himself he would admit that “Dean Jessee” was the man. As a result of Allen’s testimony we found it necessary to subpoena Dean Jessee. Mr. Jessee testified that Ehat wanted access to the typescript “to check some dates on some information that he didn’t have and wanted to double-check or whatever. And so he used it in that setting” (Deposition of Dean Jessee, page 26).

In the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, we pointed out that, “Mr. Ehat now finds himself in a real dilemma. In his Answers to Interrogatories, he has sworn that he did not use material from Jessee:

I'm not aware of any type script other than very recently. (Deposition of Donald Schmidt, pages 21-23)

Q. In preparing your notes . . . did you use or have access to any notes or other writings regarding or taken from the William Clayton diaries by (a) Lyndon Cook (b) Dean Jessie, . . .

ANSWER: (a) no, (b) no, . . .

If Mr. Ehat did not copy the material from Jessee’s copy of the transcript, then the only other alternative would be that it was purloined from Allen.

At the trial, Andrew Ehat finally revealed that he had obtained the Clayton material from Dean Jessee:

A. . . . I had a discussion with Dean Jessee.

Q. In a subsequent time did he give you permission to see the notes?

A. Un-huh.

Q. . . . what did you then do?

A. I made — I made notations from the dates that I had previously noted that I wanted to take copies of.

Q. And how many pages of typewriting manuscript did that amount to?

A. Approximately 77 pages. (Trial Transcript, pages 31-33)

The reader will remember that in his deposition Ehat testified he got permission from Donald Schmidt to use the typescript, and when he was asked if anyone else was involved in giving him permission, he replied, “No.” At the trial, Brian Barnard asked Mr. Ehat if he had previously testified that Schmidt had given him permission to use the typescript and that there was no one else involved, Ehat replied: “A. Yes” (Ibid., page 69). On page 94 of the Deposition of Andrew Ehat, Mr. Ehat was asked point-blank if there was “anybody else besides you, Allen and Anderson” who had had access to the original diaries “or the typescript of those three volumes?” To this Ehat replied: “A. No, not that I’m aware of.” In the written interrogatories, Mr. Ehat was asked the following question: “21. In compiling your notes which are the subject matter of this action did you use any material from the William Clayton diaries... which came directly or indirectly from (a) Dean Jessee, (b) James B. Allen or (c) Lyndon Cook?” (Answers to Interrogatories, page 10). The only names Andrew Ehat mentioned in his answer were “Donald Schmidt” and “James Allen,” and Allen’s name was only mentioned with regard to the twelve pages he had given Ehat for the book The Words of Joseph Smith.

Although Judge Christensen took the strongest possible stand against the publication of “stolen documents,” he appeared to be very soft on perjury. He seemed to be oblivious to the obvious cover-up and false statements made under oath. Perhaps this was because he was having a difficult time following the testimony. In any case, statements made by the plaintiff’s witnesses concerning access to the diaries were so contradictory that it was obvious that someone was not telling the truth. In our new book, The Tanners On Trial, we have more material on the question of false testimony at the trial. We always thought it was a serious matter to give false testimony under oath. We wonder if the Judge would have been so lenient with us if we had made false statements under oath and covered up how we obtained the Clayton extracts?

“Miffed”

James B. Allen claimed on page 25 of his deposition that the typescript was “my own particular scholarly property.” Although he made a complete transcript without permission from the General Authorities of the Church, a memorandum from the First Presidency’s office confirms the fact that he was given access to the diaries so that he could prepare his biography of William Clayton. Dr. Allen testified that it was his understanding that other scholars were not allowed to use them. He claimed, in fact, that he was “miffed” when he learned that Ehat had material beyond the 12 pages he had supplied him with:

A. I do remember asking Don questions like where did he get it . . . I remember my concerns at the time as I talked with other people was where did Andy Ehat get access to this material. That was my concern. And I remember talking with several people, Don Schmidt and other people up in the Historical Department and people at BYU like Noel Reynolds and others and I was miffed. I didn’t know where he got access to it and that was the nature of the conversations I had with anyone.

Q. . . . you just used the word “miffed”?

A. Yes.

. . . .

Q. After the notes were taken from Cook and distributed and you described yourself as being miffed, were you miffed because you discovered the extent of Ehat’s notes?

A. Yes, I think so. It was a surprise to me to know that he had that much verbatim material from the Clayton Diaries. . . . I was not aware that he had that much from the Clayton Journals and that is why I was miffed, if that is the proper word. Surprised.

Q. And I take it from your previous testimony that the reason you were surprised or miffed was because you thought you had been given some sort of special permission or exclusive permission to have access to those diaries?

A. That’s correct. (Deposition of James B. Allen, pages 79-81)

At the trial, Dr. Allen testified:

A. Well, I was miffed when I discovered that those extensive notes that he had taken . . . were being circulated. I was also surprised to know the extent of his particular notes. I was not aware of the extent of the notes he had taken or where he had received permission to see them. (Trial Transcript, page 239)

That Ehat was aware that he was copying from Allen’s typescript without his permission seems obvious from the testimony we have obtained. Scott Faulring, for instance, said that when Ehat learned the notes were circulating, he became very emotional and said that Allen, Cook and Jessee “are going to be shot.” The fact that Ehat would make the statement that Allen would get in trouble if the notes were distributed can only be explained if Ehat knew he had copied material from Allen’s typescript.

Although Mr. Ehat accused us of “unfair competition,” the evidence shows that he secretly used James B. Allen’s typescript of the dairies and later tried to cover up the matter. Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen, claims that we have “unclean hands.” We feel, however, that it is his client that has unclean hands. Our actions were done openly; Mr. Ehat, on the other hand, secretly gained access to Allen’s typescript, used it and then gave false testimony to cover up his actions. We will leave the reader to judge who has “unclean hands.” In our opinion the cover-up and false statements made concerning the way Ehat obtained the Clayton material tend to make the whole matter absolutely ridiculous. Ehat accused us of causing him “irreparable damage” because we used his scholarly work product. The truth of the matter, however, is that he never even made the transcription from the handwritten diaries. Instead, he relied upon the typescript which Dr. Allen calls, “my own particular scholarly property.” This, of course, was done without Allen’s permission or knowledge. If anyone is guilty of “unfair competition” it is Mr. Ehat. We openly announced that we were publishing material typed by Andrew Ehat.
Ehat, on the other hand, surreptitiously appropriated notes from James B. Allen’s typescript for his own purposes. Dr. Allen specifically made this typescript for a biography he is preparing on Clayton. We know that Ehat was aware of Allen’s plans for publication because he made this statement on page 49 of his deposition: “Dr. Allen was preparing to publish both a biography of William Clayton and an article on William Clayton.” How Ehat could have been involved in all this and then bring a suit against us is very difficult to comprehend. That Judge Christensen would award him damages is even more unbelievable.

Very Unfair

Andrew Ehat claimed that our publication of his notes hurt him in a number of different ways. He indicated that it was an infringement of his copyright on the book The Words of Joseph Smith. In addition, he stated that he had prepared a thesis he intended to publish in which he used the Clayton material. He also claimed that he was going to use it in his “intended doctoral dissertation.” While the Judge rejected the claim of damage on the published book, he did award Ehat $3,000 for “reduction of the potential market value” of his master’s thesis, “Joseph Smith’s introduction of Temple Ordinances and the 1844 Mormon Succession Question.” We felt that Judge Christensen was swayed by some unreasonable testimony given by Professor Truman G. Madsen of Brigham Young University. Dr. Madsen could hardly be considered an unbiased party in the suit. He has been a director of the Religious Studies Center at BYU—the organization that published Mr. Ehat’s book. In his testimony at the trial, Truman Madsen said that for “nearly five years” Ehat “was my research assistant and did in fact bring to me documentary materials that he had access to and copied in my behalf” (Trial Transcript, page 193). Dr. Madsen also said that he was the “brother” of Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen (Ibid., page 186). At any rate, Madsen testified that the Religious Studies Center had discussed the possibility of printing Ehat’s thesis. He claimed, however, that because we printed 2,000 copies of the Clayton material, 2,000 people might not buy the thesis if it were published:

A. Well, if those who have now published [purchased?] the material through the Tanners were not therefore interested in purchasing the thesis, that would be 2,000 less sold, and that would mean a royalty less of about $3,285. (Ibid., page 190)

Gordon A. Madsen used the same type of fallacious reasoning as his brother:

... since the Tanners have printed approximately 2,000 copies, sold approximately 2,000 of their publication, that would presumably reduce by approximately 2,000 the copies of the thesis to be sold, ... (Ibid., page 10)

We find this reasoning to be absolutely absurd. Would the Madsen brothers have us believe that we have exactly the same 2,000 customers that the Religious Studies Center has? Actually, only about one-fifth of the people on our mailing list live in Utah. The others are scattered throughout the United States and in other countries. While it is true that a large percentage of the customers that actually come to our store are from Utah, the majority of our sales are through the mail. Most of the people on our mailing list would probably never come in contact with books published by the Religious Studies Center. Furthermore, most of our customers are non-Mormons and ex-Mormons who would not be interested in any book published by the Religious Studies Center. While we find it flattering that Ehat’s lawyer would argue that the customers from the Religious Studies Center frequent our establishment in droves, we feel that it is very far from the truth.

Even if we were to accept the fantastic claim that our 2,000 sales were all to the same people who would have bought Ehat’s thesis, we still could not accept the claim that Ehat’s sales would be harmed by our publication. We have examined Ehat’s thesis and found that only about 2 to 3 percent of the material is taken verbatim from the Clayton diaries in question. Although it is true that Ehat claims he was going to add an appendix containing additional material taken from Clayton’s writings, this appendix was not in the thesis when it was approved, and he has produced no evidence that this plan predated the publication of Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. In any case, since 97 to 98 percent of the thesis is not copied from the diaries, we feel that Ehat would not lose sales because of our publication of the extracts.

Anyone who has ever written a thesis knows that there is far more to it than just quoting material from one source. It is the scholar’s organization of materials and observations that make the thesis of value. One noted Mormon scholar has made the interesting observation that it must show something concerning the quality of Ehat’s master’s thesis if our use of only the material copied from the Clayton diaries completely destroys a market for it. If Judge Christensen had taken the time to carefully examine how much material was actually quoted in the thesis, we doubt that he would have found us guilty of “unfair competition.” He apparently just relied on the testimony of Andrew Ehat and statements made by his lawyer.
When we printed Clayton's Secret Writings Uncovered we certainly had no idea that Ehat would claim “unfair competition” with his thesis. In fact, we had every reason to believe that he wanted the material suppressed. Although he would now have us believe that he was planning on eventually publishing almost all of his notes, the information we obtained from Seventh East Press indicated just the opposite:

Ehat also believes that use of the diaries should be limited out of respect to William Clayton, who “in a different sphere is still living.” Ehat feels that “we owe it to him” to observe certain restraints, even though he admits that there is nothing in the journal that explicitly requests it never be made public. Ehat says that Clayton “poured out his soul in there and . . . he’s going to face all of us again some day and we’re going to be associates with him too, and he didn’t write those things necessarily to expose himself to the world.” . . . (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982)

Although Ehat questioned some other parts of the article in Seventh East Press when we took his deposition, he made no attempt to deny the words which we have quoted.

Judge Wrong

In our new book, The Tanners On Trial, we tell of a case in Texas where a supposed copyright violation was linked with “unfair competition.” It was successfully argued in this case that Section 301 of the Copyright Act (“Preemption with respect to other laws”) makes it clear that “unfair competition” is preempted by copyright law:

> On motion to dismiss and/or summary judgment and partial summary judgment, the District Court, Sessions, Chief Judge, held that: . . . firms’ claim of unfair competition was preempted by Copyright Act; . . . (540 Federal Supplement, pages 928-29)

We were under the impression that if Ehat’s lawyer failed in his attempt to prove a copyright violation, the entire case would fail. It seems that Mr. Madsen also held this view at the time of the hearing regarding the request for the Church to produce the original diaries:

THE COURT: Do you concede that if the law is that the quotations of your quotation from the journal doesn’t violate any proprietary interest of your client that your case fails?

MR. MADSSEN: I think it does. I think if they can say this is not copyright material and they therefore are at liberty to print it. (“Hearing to Quash Subpoena Duces Tecum and Objections,” September 6, 1983, page 11)

Judge Christensen’s attempt to apply the law concerning “unfair competition” just because he wanted to make an example of us seems to be a miscarriage of justice. When Mr. Ehat was unsuccessful in proving an infringement of copyright law, the Judge should have dismissed the entire case.

On page 931 of 540 Federal Supplement, we find that one of the elements for a case of “unfair competition” is that the “plaintiff created his product through extensive time, labor, skill, or money; . . .” We can not see how Ehat’s notes meet any of the criteria mentioned. Ehat’s lawyer appealed to the case, Grove Press Inc., v. Collector’s Publication Inc., but our lawyer, Brian Barnard, demonstrated that this case does not provide support for a claim of “unfair competition” against us:

In Grove Press, supra, the Court in granting relief against unfair competition by the publication of an exact copy of an uncopyrighted book stated:

> In view of Plaintiff’s expenditure of substantial sums in setting type and engraving plates, it would constitute unfair competition for Defendants to appropriate the value and benefit of such expenditure to themselves by photographing and reproducing Plaintiff’s book through the offset-lithography process, thereby cutting their own costs and obtaining an unfair competitive advantage. [emphasis added] (supra, 607)

In Grove Press, the plaintiff had taken a public domain book and set it into book form. In excellent, easily-read type at a cost of about $26,000 and expended many thousands of dollars additional in printing, distributing and advertising that book. What the Court protected in Grove Press under the theory of unfair competition was not the uncopyrightable book but the substantial investment and expense that Grove Press had made toward the marketing of that “unprotected” book.

The case of International, Capitol and Grove Press all involve the expenditure of great sums of money and time by the plaintiffs in creating something different and protected from an uncopyrighted work. That is not the case at bar. Andrew Ehat did not even expend time and energy in reading the hand-written original journals in typing up his notes. He used the work of another, the typed Allen/Jessee transcript and made his notes. He spent several hours in doing so. What he did was the work of a photocopying machine; which, but for the fact that one was not easily available, he probably would have used any one with access to a photocopy machine could have done what Ehat did. Ehat’s contributions to the uncopyrighted Wm Clayton Journal extracts are not of the nature of substance to warrant protection under International, Capitol or Grove Press. (Defendants’ Trial Brief, pages 26-28)
Ehat’s lawyer argued that because “it was a direct copy from the original production of that work by Grove Press, Inc., there was indeed unfair competition . . .” This seems to be a very poor argument to support Ehat’s case. The notes which we reproduced were certainly not going to be the final product put out by Mr. Ehat. We didn’t photographically copy any of the typesetting in his book The Words of Joseph Smith, and the quotations he used in his master’s thesis were retyped in a far more presentable form. We would assume that if his thesis had been printed by Religious Studies Center, it would have been typeset like his other book. If we had photographically reproduced typeset material, then the Grove Press case would have applied As it is, however, we can see no just cause for a judgment against us.

In our new book, The Tanners On Trial, we present a great deal of evidence to show that Judge Christensen’s verdict was completely wrong. We also include many extracts from court documents which reveal the false testimony and cover-up which was used by the opposition. Some very important testimony is given on the Mormon Underground and how it functions. Andrew Ehat’s participation in this underground is detailed with an abundance of testimony showing that he has copies of “stolen” and unauthorized material obtained from the Church Historical Department. The testimony of some of the Church’s top historians is also included, as well as information on the suppression of documents and the “decline” of the History Division. We show how James B. Allen and Dean Jesse made the unauthorized typescript of the Clayton diaries and Ehat’s clever method of gaining access to it. Information concerning Noel Reynold’s investigation into the distribution of illicit copies of documents at BYU is also presented. The question of copyright violation on other Church documents is dealt with, and even testimony concerning our tax returns for 1982-83 is included. This book has well over 100 large pages with many photographs of the original court documents. It is filled with fascinating material. The Tanners On Trial is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry for only $5.95 a copy (add 10% for postage and handling).

Light Not Out

Although some people felt that Ehat’s suit might put the light out at Utah Lighthouse Ministry, we are happy to report that it is still shining brightly. God has answered the prayers that have been offered on our behalf in a marvelous way. While the legal fees have mounted to over $22,000, and another $10,000 may be expended in the appeal, we have already received an incredible amount of help. If we lose the appeal we will have to pay the $16,000 judgment. (This amount of money has been set aside in an account awaiting the outcome of the appeal.) We feel, however, that we will prevail in the end. We still have a great deal of faith in our system of justice.

This is certainly a critical time for Utah Lighthouse Ministry. Because of some large bills which the corporation is trying to pay off, we haven’t received any salary for four weeks. We do hope that many of our readers will hold us up in prayer and that some will consider contributing so that we will be able to effectively continue publishing the truth to the Mormon people. UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY is a non-profit organization and all donations are tax-deductible.

Although fighting this lawsuit has cost many thousands of dollars and a great deal of time, we feel that it will all work out for our good. In Romans 8:28 we read: “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.”

The Lord willing, the light from Utah Lighthouse Ministry will continue to shine and become even brighter in the future.

Good Letters

The Lord is beginning a real work among the Mormon people. We have been receiving letters and phone calls from all over the country. We recently received a letter which contained the following:

After having read (in part) Shadow or Reality, read much of the New Testament and prayed an awful lot my husband and I have come to believe the L.D.S. church is untrue. It is a painful realization but we now feel the Lord working in our lives bringing us to a true understanding of Him and what we are to do . . . The work you’re doing is such a blessing to us since we don’t have access to the documents etc. you have. Your work is one of courage and I know the Lord is working through you continually to bring about His purpose. . . .

We would like to obtain your book A Look At Christianity . . .

Thank you again for your work — it is a divine work and it has blessed our family immensely. (Letter from Ohio, dated July 5, 1984)

The following appeared in another letter.

Your book Changing World of Mormonism is “dynamite” to the church if key people got a hold of it. I am a Mormon 14 yrs. I’ve been RS pres — I dare not tell my husband what I have found out . . . I have turned this huge problem over to the Lord who I love dearly & want to serve. (Letter from Kansas)
During the past few months there have been a great many rumors circulating concerning the discovery of important letters proving that the Mormon prophet Joseph Smith was involved in the money-digging business and that he used magical practices in finding buried treasures. It is reported that there are three or four important letters concerning the subject. The first letter has recently been published by the Mormon scholar Dean Jessee in his book, The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, 1984, pages 358-59. A photograph of the letter is included in Jessee’s book. According to Jessee, it is in the handwriting of Joseph Smith and is addressed to his brother Hyrum. Jessee says that it was mailed from Far West, Missouri to Plattisgrove on May 25, 1838. The text is very short:

Verily thus Saith the Lord unto Hyrum Smith if he will come strateaway to Far West and in=quire of his brother it shall be shown him how that he may be freed from debt and obtain a grate treasure in the earth even so  Amen

Jessee says that this letter is stored in the “LDS Church Archives.” It was supposed to have been written just after Joseph Smith explored some mounds. His History of the Church, vol. 3, page 37, indicates that he believed these mounds contained treasures:

. . . I returned to camp . . . We discovered some antiquities about one mile west of the camp, consisting of stone mounds, . . . These mounds were probably erected by the aborigines of the land, to secrete treasures.

The reader will note that this is more than just a letter; it actually purports to be a revelation from “the Lord.” This appears to be the second false revelation Joseph Smith wrote concerning the location of hidden treasures. The other revelation is actually canonized in the Mormon Church’s Doctrine and Covenants, Section 111:1, 2, 4;

“I, the Lord your God, am not displeased with your coming this journey, . . . I have much treasure in this city for you, . . . I will give this city into your hands . . . and its wealth pertaining to gold and silver shall be yours.”

(For a more complete treatment of this revelation see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 49)

The second letter has never been published. It was sold to the Mormon Church by Mark Hofmann. Although its existence has been known by Mormon scholars for months, the Church has never publicly announced that it has possession of it. This is rather remarkable since it would be the earliest known letter of Joseph Smith. We have been told that Dean Jessee confirmed its existence, and when he was asked why he did not publish it in his book, The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, he said that it would take an entire volume to explain the letter. In any case, the text of the document has leaked out. A number of scholars received typed copies in the mail. The letters were sent anonymously from New York City. Although we were not sent a copy, we were able to obtain one from a friend. The letter was supposed to have been written to Josiah Stowel and reads as follows:

Canandaigua, New York
June 18, 1825

Dear Sir:

My father has shown me your letter informing him and me of your success in locating the mine of which you told me, but we are of the opinion that if you have not ascertained the particulars, you should not dig for it till you first discover if any valuables remain. You know the treasure must be guarded by some clever spirit, and if such is discovered, so also is the treasure. So do this. Take a hazel stick, one yard long, being new cut, cleave it just in the middle and lay it asunder on the mine so that both inner parts of the stick hang up one right against the other one inch distant. If there is a treasure, after a while it will draw them both together unto themselves. Let me know how it is that you were here. I have almost decided to accept your offer. If you should make the decision to come this way, I shall be ready to accompany you if nothing happens more than I know of. I am,

Respectfully yours,
JOSEPH SMITH, JUN.

Since the spelling and punctuation are too good for Joseph Smith, we conclude that they have been corrected by the person who made the typescript. Although we cannot say that this typescript is 100% accurate, we know from very good sources that it gives the substance of the letter.

As far as the historical setting of the letter is concerned, we see no obvious problems. Joseph Smith acknowledged in his History that “in the month of October, 1825, I hired with an old gentleman by the name of Josiah Stowel, . . . He had heard something of a silver mine having been opened by the Spaniards . . . After I went to live with him, he took me, with the rest of his hands, to dig for the silver mine, . . . Hence arose the very prevalent story of my having been a money-digger” (History of the Church, vol. 1, page 17).

In his 1826 trial Joseph Smith admitted that he had “a certain stone” he used to help Stowel locate buried treasures. There is also evidence linking him to the use of a hazel rod. We have a great deal of material on these matters in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? chapter 4.

Although we can see no obvious historical problems with the letter to Stowel, we will withhold judgment concerning its authenticity until we obtain more information concerning it.

The third letter was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris in 1830. In the last newsletter we published a few extracts from it. The most important portion is the following account of how Joseph Smith obtained the gold plates of the Book of Mormon (Harris is quoting Smith):

> . . . I found it 4 years ago with my stone but only got it because of the enchantment the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream & says dig up the gold but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole . . . (Letter purported to have been written by Martin Harris to W. W. Phelps, dated October 23, 1830, typed extract)

After our newsletter appeared, Steven Christensen acknowledged that he had the original letter. In a press release, dated March 7, 1984, he wrote:

> It is true that I am the owner of a letter written by Martin Harris to William W. Phelps, dated October 23, 1830. . . . Before I will release transcripts or photographs of the document to the public, I wish to first determine the document’s historicity . . . I look forward to the time when I will be able to offer a more complete presentation to the public and the media.

Five months have passed and no further statement concerning the document has appeared.

Recently we received a complete transcript of the letter. One thing about this letter that really surprised us is that it doesn’t mention anything about God or angels. This is certainly very strange. An interview with Harris published in 1859 in Tiffany’s Monthly, is filled with material on this subject. For instance, Harris quoted at least five portions of the Bible. He used the words revelation, Moses, Scripture and Christ at least once. He used the word prayed twice, and mentioned the devil four times. The word angel or angels appears five times. God is mentioned seven times, and the word Lord appears ten times. In the Salamander letter, however, all of these words are absent. In fact, there is nothing we can find concerning religion. Spirits are mentioned many times in the letter, but they are never linked to God in any way. Instead, they are linked to money-digging. This total lack of religious material seems to be out of character for Martin Harris. A person might try to explain this by saying that Harris was more interested in religion in 1859, but the evidence shows that he was always that way. One suggested reconciliation is that Phelps was a money-digger and this is why Harris emphasized this aspect of the story and suppressed the divine element.

We have learned that Mark Hofmann originally tried to sell this letter to the Mormon Church for a large sum of money. When his offer was turned down, he sold it to Steven Christensen. One of the most important things in determining a document’s authenticity is finding its pedigree. We have tried to find out where this letter came from but have not achieved any success. Hofmann claims that he has told the buyer (Christensen) the source, but cannot tell anyone else. We do hope that Christensen will reveal this important information soon. While we have expressed some doubts about the authenticity of the letter, they are based strictly on the text itself. The results of tests on the document as well as the establishment of a pedigree could alter our conclusions. We do hope that this will be the case. More information is found in our preliminary report, The Money-Digging Letters. Price: $1.00
In the March issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we announced the discovery of a very important letter which was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris. The existence of this letter was confirmed on March 7, 1984, when a Mormon bishop by the name of Steven Christensen issued a “press release” in which he stated:

> It is true that I am owner of a letter written by Martin Harris to William W. Phelps, dated October 23, 1830. . . . Before I will release transcripts or photographs of the document to the public, I wish to first determine the document’s historicity as much as possible.

The original plan was for the letter to be published in Sunstone. Later, however, Christensen announced that he had three researchers working on a book and that the public would have to wait until it was finished. Unfortunately, one of the researchers (the only one working full time on the project) was released from Christensen’s employment, and some people began to fear that the letter would not be published. In our publication, The Money-Digging Letters, we indicated that we would print the letter in the Messenger if there was an attempt by the Church to suppress it. The latest report is that it may be published in a forthcoming issue of Brigham Young University Studies.

A Summary

While we will not print the letter in this issue of the Messenger, we have a typed copy on display at the Utah Lighthouse Bookstore, 1350 South West Temple, and we are including a summary of its contents in this article. To begin with, Martin Harris stated that Joseph Smith first came “to my notice” in 1824. Harris was amazed that Joseph was able to do a great amount of work in a short period of time. When he asked about this, Joseph said he had special “assistance.” Harris asked Joseph Smith’s father about the matter and was told that “Joseph often sees Spirits here with great kettles of coin money.” Harris then told of a dream which he himself had in which he conversed with spirits and they “let me count their money.” He awoke with a dollar in his hand, and when he consulted Joseph Smith, Smith told him that the spirits were “grieved” because he kept the dollar. Harris, therefore, threw the dollar back. Harris then told about Joseph Smith relating how “the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream & says dig up the gold [i.e., the gold plates of the Book of Mormon] but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole & struck me 3 times . . .” The spirit then took the plates away from him because he had disobeyed his orders. Later the spirit said that he must bring his brother Alvin. Smith informed the spirit that “he is dead shall I bring what remains . . .” Joseph tried again to obtain the plates, but the spirit would not let him have them because he did not bring his brother (his body?). The spirit told Joseph to look to the seer stone, but he was unable to see who to bring. The spirit mockingly said, “I tricked you again.” Joseph finally saw his wife in the “stone” and obtained the “gold bible.”

Harris gave Joseph “fifty dollars” so he could move to Pennsylvania. Later Joseph gave Harris a copy of the hieroglyphics which appeared on the gold plates to take to Professor Anthon. Anthon confirmed that they were “shorthand Egyptian” and wanted the “old book” so he could translate it. Harris then told how Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon by putting the “giant silver spectacles” in an “old hat” and reading the words which appeared in the darkness. Harris concluded his relation of the facts concerning the coming forth of the Book of Mormon by saying the Joseph showed him the gold plates and that he (Harris) had the Book of Mormon printed with “my own money.”

The letter attributed to Martin Harris is now referred to as the “Salamander letter” or the “White Salamander letter.” Although we do not have a photocopy of it at the present time, the typed copy we have has been compared with a photocopy and is supposed to be rather accurate. No claims are made, however, for the spelling or punctuation. Typed copies of a slightly different version of the Salamander letter were mailed anonymously to different scholars from New York City. We obtained a copy of this version and found that the salutation on the letter presented a problem. In The Money-Digging Letters, we wrote:

If this copy is accurate, we may have another problem. One would expect the salutation to read, “Dear Mr. Phelps.” Instead, the letter is addressed to, “Dear Bro. Phelps.” If Phelps had been a member of the Church, one would expect such a greeting. . . . While the Salamander letter is dated October 23, 1830, Phelps did not join the church until June of 1831.

A comparison with a photocopy of the original resolved this problem; the words, “Dear Bro. Phelps” are inaccurate. The salutation actually reads, “Dear Sir.”

Making Tests

We are happy to report that Steven Christensen has submitted the Salamander letter to some of the best experts in the country to determine its authenticity. Recently we received a tip from someone in the East which led to the discovery that the tests on the Salamander letter are being performed by Kenneth Rendell Incorporated of Newton, Massachusetts. This company is in the process of a rigorous examination of the document. The signature on the letter was compared with four other signatures attributed to Martin Harris. Although we do not know whether a final verdict has been reached, the information which we have been able to obtain suggested that the verdict will probably be favorable to the document’s authenticity. Bill Kruger, the man who made the tests on the paper, told us that he could detect no evidence of forgery. We talked to Leslie Kress of Kenneth Rendell Incorporated about the test being conducted on the letter. Although she acknowledged the work was being done, she was not able to reveal to us the results of the various tests. We have heard from another source, however, that the sealing wax used on the letter has been tested. It is also possible that tests will be performed on the postmark.

One test which had apparently not been completed at the time we talked to Leslie Kress was that on the ink. Some people, however, are now claiming that the Salamander letter has passed all the tests. Since Steven Christensen has not issued any statement about the matter, we do not know whether the report is true. In any case, at least one of the researchers is very optimistic that the results of the tests will be positive.

The Handwriting

On pages 15 and 19 of The Money-Digging Letters, we pointed out the following problem:

Handwriting experts are going to be confronted with a real problem with regard to this letter. As far as we know, there are no samples of Martin Harris’s handwriting except for his signature on a few documents. The Deseret News for September 1, 1984, claimed that “Christensen said that as far as is known known [now?] this is the only letter in Harris’ handwriting that has surfaced.” Steve Eaton wrote the following in the Salt Lake Tribune on September 2: “Because the only known samples of Harris’ handwriting are his signatures, researchers will be ‘handicapped’ as they attempt to authenticate the handwriting, Mr. Walker said.”

There are very few alphabetical characters represented in Martin Harris’s signature. We find the letter r three times. The letters a and f both appear twice, but the letters h, m, n, s, and t only appear once. In our alphabet there are 52 different written forms—26 small letters and 2 capital letters. Thus we only have about 15% of the different forms represented. We understand that while a signature is very useful to compare against another signature, the form of the letters used may differ somewhat from one’s normal writing because a signature is done almost automatically.

One of the researchers is now claiming that an early Book of Mormon bearing a short inscription by Martin Harris has been located. An inscription of this nature could throw some light on the issue. Scholars, however, should be careful about this matter. A forgery in a book would be much easier to perpetrate than a postmarked letter, and there is always a possibility that a second forgery would be created to provide support for the first. If the book was known to have had this writing in it for a number of years prior to the discovery of the Salamander letter, it could be very important in determining the authenticity of the letter.

One interesting thing that has been called to our attention by H. Michael Marquardt is that the signature which we always believed was the genuine Martin Harris... signature was probably not written by Harris at all. This is the signature which appears under the printed testimony of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon in A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. When this signature is compared with a signature appearing on the Book of Mormon contract with E. B. Grandin, dated August 17, 1829, we find that there is no resemblance. The signatures which appear on other documents seem to agree with the one found on the contract. If we assume that these documents are authentic, then we have to conclude that the one which has been published by the Mormon Church for at least 50 years is not Martin Harris’s signature. The following is a photograph of the signature which appears in A Comprehensive History, vol. 1, page 139. Below this is the signature which appears on the Book of Mormon contract with E. B. Grandin. This was published by the

Why a false signature was used by the Church is not known, but it is possible that no good example of Harris’s signature was readily available when the Comprehensive History was first published. Someone has suggested that it may really be the signature of Harris’s son, Martin Harris, Jr.

Caution Urged

When we first published extracts from the Salamander letter in the Messenger (March 1984), we made these comments about the importance of determining the authenticity of the letter:

At the outset we should state that we have some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris. The serious implications of this whole matter, however, cry out for discussion. If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be misled.

Since Martin Harris was one of the three special witnesses to the gold plates of the Book of Mormon (see his testimony in the front of the book), he is held in high esteem by the Mormon people. Mormon writers have commended him for his honesty. Although many Mormon critics may disagree with this view, everyone agrees that Harris played such an important role in early Mormonism that anything coming from his pen is of great significance.

Because of some problems in the text of the Salamander letter we have been exceptionally cautious about endorsing it as authentic. The reader will find more information about these problems in The Money-Digging Letters and in the article “Dilemma of a Mormon Critic” which is published in this issue of the Messenger.

Suit Drags On

It has been a year and eight months since Andrew
Ehat brought a lawsuit against us for publishing the book, Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. Although Mr. Ehat was able to convince a Mormon judge that we were guilty of “unfair competition,” he was unable to prove the claim of copyright violation and was unsuccessful in this attempt to suppress the publication of the revealing extracts from Joseph Smith’s secretary’s diaries. We are still selling
Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered for $3.00 a copy.

We have appealed the decision on “unfair competition” to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals where we hope to get an unbiased examination of the case. Our appeal was delayed by Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen, when he tried to reinstate an unsuccessful injunction against our continued publication of Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. Our lawyer completed a “Brief of Appellants” on October 9, 1984, but Mr. Madsen did not respond.
On November 5, the Court sent him a letter in which the following appeared:

> Our file in the captioned appeal indicates that you > have failed to timely file an appellee’s brief. . . . That > brief was due to be filed on: November 1, 1984. . . . Your > failure to file an appellee’s brief precludes your being “heard > at oral argument except by permission of the court.”
> Accordingly, unless you file an appellee’s brief within ten (10) days . . . this case will be considered at issue > and ripe for consideration and disposition by the court.

On November 9, Mr. Madsen responded that he “was under the impression he had until November 9, 1984, in which to file the same.” He went on to request “an extension of time be granted allowing him until December 10, 1984, in which to file.” On December 6, however, Mr. Madsen asked that another “extension of time be granted allowing him until January 10, 1985, in which to file his brief.”

Although we have no idea when this case will finally be resolved, we are confident that the ruling of Judge Christensen will be overturned by the panel of three judges who will examine his decision.
DILEMMA OF A MORMON CRITIC
By Jerald Tanner

As we have indicated in the lead article, the evidence derived from physical testing seems to be pointed to the conclusion that the Salamander letter, attributed to Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris, is genuine. Since I have spent years proving that early Mormonism is linked to magic and money-digging, this news should have brought me a great deal of satisfaction. Instead, however, I find myself facing a real dilemma. While the tests and the opinions of noted Mormon scholars seem to indicate that I should relax and enjoy the victory, I still have serious reservations about the document’s authenticity. In fact, I find it very hard to believe that the Martin Harris I have learned about from numerous historical sources could have written the letter.

In the beginning I had full confidence in the validity of the letter. Everything seemed to be checking out, and when I was writing the story for the March issue of the messenger, I was very excited that we were going to be the ones who would break the story to the world. Unfortunately, however, I made a discovery that really disturbed me. Although there was a temptation to just forget what I had seen, I decided that it would be dishonest not to report the discovery. Consequently, the fourth page of the March issue of the Messenger contains this statement:

Since we . . . have written a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, we were delighted to get the report that Martin Harris had written a letter relating to the subject. As we learned of the contents, we felt that it would provide additional evidence to support our thesis. Some time later, we were told of another letter, written by W. W. Phelps, which seemed to prove the authenticity of the letter attributed to Harris. This letter is printed in Howe’s book, pages 273-274. In the letter, Phelps tells of Martin Harris’ statements concerning the Book of Mormon. There are some remarkable parallels between the two letters. Both letters refer to the Urim and Thummim as “silver spectacles.” Both accounts tell of Martin Harris taking a copy of the Book of Mormon characters to “Utica, Albany and New York,” and both talk of the Book of Mormon language as “shorthand Egyptian.” Since Phelps’ letter is dated Jan. 15, 1831 (less than three months after the letter which was reported to have been written by Harris), it seemed safe to conclude that Phelps used the Harris letter in preparing his own. In all fairness, however, we made another discovery which we felt we must report. Just two pages after Phelps letter, we found a statement written by E. D. Howe which is strangely similar to the “Harris” letter. The reader will remember that the letter said, “the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole.” E. D. Howe’s statements read as follows: “. . . looked into the hole, where he saw a toad, which immediately transformed itself into a spirit, . . .” Notice that both accounts use the words “the hole” as well as “spirit,” and the words “transfigured himself” resemble “transformed itself.” Howe’s statement appears to be his won summary of the Willard Chase affidavit which we have already cited: “He saw in the box something like a toad, which soon assumed the appearance of a man, . . .”

That Howe’s statement (Mormonism Unveiled, page 276) is so much like the one in the “Harris” letter is a little disturbing. Even more disconcerting, however, is the fact that it appears just two pages from a letter by W. W. Phelps which also bears remarkable parallels. This, of course, might all be a coincidence, and if it can be established that the letter was actually penned before Howe’s book was published in 1834, it will probably be accepted as a genuine letter.

About five months after we broke the story about the Salamander letter and printed extracts from it, the Los Angeles Times printed a story on the subject. In this article John Dart commented:

However, unusual caution about the letter’s genuineness has been expressed by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, longtime evangelical critics of the Mormon church. The Tanners wrote in their Salt Lake City Messenger newsletter last march that the purported Harris letter contains too many similarities to statements published in an 1834 book by E. D. Howe.

After the Los Angeles Times ran its story, the Deseret News printed an article which contained the following:

. . . outspoken Mormon Church critics Jerald and Sandra Tanner suspect the document is a forgery, they told the Deseret News.

Jerald Tanner has not seen the actual letter but says similarities between it and other documents make its veracity doubtful.

Tanner said he studied a typescript of the document and wanted to believe it. But when he compared it to the 1834 book “Mormonism Unveiled” by E. D. Howe, he found highly similar stories about Smith viewing a toad that turned itself into a man or a spirit. . . . Tanner feels the document is an extremely important find. “It deserves a lot of attention,” he said. “If it’s authentic, its extremely important in linking Mormonism to the occult. If it’s a forgery, then it’s important because there’s a document forger out there.” (Deseret News, September 1, 1984)
In his article in the Los Angeles Times, John Dart commented: “The Tanners’ suggestion of forgery has surprised some Mormons, who note that the parallels in wording also could be taken as evidence for authenticity.” While I agree with the statement that parallels “could be taken as evidence” for the authenticity of the Salamander letter, it is the close proximity of important parallels in Howe’s book that causes concern. It is, in fact, very disconcerting to find only two pages in the Howe book separating highly significant parallels. In addition to these parallels, I find many other things in the Howe book that could have provided structural material for the Salamander letter. It is interesting to note that a manuscript written by Joseph Knight also has some remarkable similarities. This manuscript, which is stored in the Church Archives, was first published by Dean Jessee in the Autumn 1976 issue of Brigham Young University Studies. One thing I noticed in the Knight account that could have had an influence on the Salamander letter is the use of the words “says he” and “says I.” On page 37, as published in BYU Studies, we find the following: “Says he... Says he... Says I... Says I... Says he... Says he... Says I... Says I...”

The following is a comparison of portions of the Salamander letter with quotations from three different publications which are well known to students of Mormon history. The first source used is E. D. Howe’s book Mormonism Unvailed (abbreviated as “Howe”). The second is Francis Kirkham’s A New Witness For Christ in America (NWFC). Kirkham cites an article from the Rochester Gem, September 5, 1829. The third is the Joseph Knight account which appears in Brigham Young University Studies (BYUS), Autumn 1976. Parallel No. 9 is from BYU Studies article, but it is a footnote Dean Jessee had taken from Lucy Smith’s book.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>THE SALAMANDER LETTER</th>
<th>POSSIBLE SOURCES</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. Joseph can see anything he wishes by looking at a stone</td>
<td>1. This light of the stone, he pretended, enabled him to see anything he wished. Accordingly he discovered ghosts, infernal spirits (Howe, 259)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph often sees Spirits</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. kettles of coin money</td>
<td>2. kettles filled with gold and silver (Howe, 237)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. the elder Smith... says... it was Spirits who brought up rock</td>
<td>3. Joseph, Sen. told me... the large stones... we call them rocks, ...are, in fact, most of them chests of money raised by the heat of the sun (Howe, 233)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. the enchantment</td>
<td>4. the enchantment (Howe, 267)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream &amp; says dig up the gold</td>
<td>5. after a third visit from the same spirit in a dream he proceeded to the spot (NWFC, vol. 1, page 151)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole</td>
<td>6. after the plates were taken from their hiding place by Jo, he, ... looked into the hole, where he saw a toad, which immediately transformed itself into a spirit (Howe, 275-76)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7. &amp; struck me 3 times</td>
<td>7. and struck him... the spirit struck him again, and knocked him three or four rods (Howe, 242)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8. to cover over the hole</td>
<td>8. that he would cover the place over (BYUS, 31)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9. the spirit said do not lay it down</td>
<td>9. he had been commanded not to lay the plates down (BYUS, 31, footnote 5)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10. Joseph says when can I have it</td>
<td>10. Joseph says, “when can I have it?” (BYUS, 31)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11. the spirit says I year from today if you will obey me</td>
<td>11. you have not obeyed your orders... come one year from this day (Howe, 242)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12. bring your brother</td>
<td>12. bring with you your oldest brother (Howe, 242)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
13. Joseph says he is dead

14. Joseph goes to get the gold Bible but the spirit says...you cannot have it

15. the spirit says...look to the stone Joseph looks but cannot see who to bring the spirit says...look to the stone

16. Joseph looks & sees his wife

17. I give Joseph fifty dollars to move him down to Pa

18. I take them to Utica, Albany & New York in the last place Dr. Mitchell give me an introduction to Professor Anthon says he they are shorthand Egyptian the same what was used in ancient times

19. Joseph found some giant silver spectacles with the plates

20. he puts them in an old hat & in the darkness reads the words & in this way it’s all translated

It is possible that Peter Ingersoll’s affidavit could have had an influence on the story about Joseph Smith telling Harris the “spirits are grieved” because Harris kept a “coin” which belonged to them. In Ingersoll’s story, however, it is Joseph Smith who tricked a “gate tender” into handing him some money that did not rightfully belong to him (see Mormonism Unvailed, page 235).

The Palmyra Reflector printed a series of articles which Francis W. Kirkham included in A New Witness For Christ in America, vol. 1. On page 290 of this book, we read as follows:

“This rogue of a spirit who had baffled all the united efforts of the money-diggers, . . . intended it would seem to play our prophet a similar trick . . . the father . . . probably fearing some trick of the spirit, having known him for many years: . . .” This could have suggested the following statement in the Salamander letter: “. . . the spirit says I tricked you again . . .” On page 289 of the same book, the following is cited from the Palmyra Reflector: “. . . the elder Smith declared that his son Joe had seen the spirit, . . .” This reminds me of the following statement in the Salamander letter: “. . . the elder Smith . . . says Joseph . . . sees Spirits . . .” The words “the elder Smith” seem to be a little too formal for Martin Harris. In an interview published in Tiffany’s Monthly, Harris never used this term. He referred to “old Mr. Stowel,” “Old Mr. Beman” and “old Mr. Smith’s.”

The series of Palmyra Reflector articles cited in A New Witness For Christ in America present the idea that Joseph Smith’s story evolved from the visitation of a spirit connected with the money-diggers to communion with angels. We find this statement on page 291:

It is well known that Joe Smith never pretended to have any communion with angels, until a long period after the pretended finding of his book, and that the juggling of himself or father went no further than the pretended faculty of seeing wonders in a “peep stone,” and the occasional interview with the spirit, supposed to have the custody of hidden treasures: . . .

This exact thesis is presented in the Salamander letter. The word “angel” is not found once in the entire letter, whereas the words “spirit” or “spirits” appear twelve times. Furthermore, these spirits are clearly revealed as guardians of the treasures. While I feel that there may be something to the idea that “the spirit” evolved into an “angel,” I find it hard to believe that Martin Harris would still be telling the older version of the story in 1830. The early newspapers certainly do not support such a conclusion.
The Salamander

After reading the letter attributed to Martin Harris, I became very interested in the reason why it was a “salamander” that was transformed into a “spirit.” I found that salamanders are connected to magic and money-digging. The word salamander is defined in one dictionary as “a spirit supposed to live in fire; an elemental spirit in Paracelsus’ theory of elementals.” (For more information on this subject see The Money-Digging Letters, page 13.) I spent a great deal of time trying to find the word salamander in literature connected with Mormonism. I was not successful, however, until I examined an unpublished manuscript by A. C. Lambert which is found in the Western Americana Department of the University of Utah Library. In this work of over 400 pages, Dr. Lambert claimed that people in Joseph Smith’s time were aware of the four elemental spirits. He then stated that “salamanders were to be placated and made helpful or were to be defeated and put under control” (page 76). If this statement had appeared in some other work, I might have considered it as evidence for the Salamander letter. As it is, however, it makes me even more suspicious of the letter’s authenticity. This manuscript happen to be written concerning Martin Harris and is entitled, “A Study that Gives Some Special Attention to Martin Harris.” It is the very type of manuscript that someone making up a letter concerning Harris would want to read for background material. Although this is an unpublished manuscript, Sharon Pugsley made its existence known to scholars the very year it was written (see Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, vol. 8, no. 2, 1973, page 100).

Something Missing

When we published the March 1984 Messenger, I had only seen extracts from the Salamander letter. Later I obtained a typescript of the text of the letter, and this only increased my concern about its validity. On August 22, 1984, I printed my preliminary report on the letter under the title The Money-Digging Letters. The following appeared on page 7 of this report:

We have already mentioned the interview with Martin Harris which is published in Tiffany’s Monthly. . . . This article is used by both Mormon and anti-Mormon writers. In this interview, Harris says that Smith “found them [the gold plates] by looking in the stone” (page 169). The Salamander letter quotes Smith as saying, “I found it 4 years ago with my stone.” While there are a few other parallels with this interview, the dissimilarities seem to be much more significant. For example, the Salamander letter has very little to say about the gold plates of the Book of Mormon, whereas in the interview in Tiffany’s Monthly, Harris goes into great detail about the plates. He speaks of their size, thickness, weight and how they were buried. He gives a similar description of the Urim and Thummim. The Salamander letter give no description of these “silver spectacles.”

The interview in Tiffany’s Monthly also raises a very serious question about the lack of religious material in the Salamander letter. In the interview, Harris quoted at least five portions of the Bible. He used the words revelation, Moses, Scripture and Christ at least once. He used the word prayed twice, and mentioned the devil four times. The word angel or angels appears five times. God is mentioned seven times, and the word Lord appears ten times. In the Salamander letter all of these words are absent. In fact, there is nothing we can find concerning religion. Spirits are mentioned many times in the letter, but they are never linked to money-digging. They are the guardians of the treasures.

This total lack of religious material seems to be out of character for Martin Harris. A person might try to maintain that Harris was more interested in religion in 1859, but the evidence shows that he was always that way. E. D. Howe described him as follows:

He was naturally of a very visionary turn of mind on the subject of religion, . . . He frequently declares that he has conversed with Jesus Christ, Angel and the Devil. . . .

Martin is an exceedingly fast talker. He frequently gathers a crowd around him in bar-rooms and in the streets.—Here he appears to be in his element, answering and explaining all manner of dark and abstruse theological questions, from Genesis to Revelations; declaring that every thing has been revealed to him by the “power of God.” During these flights of fancy, he frequently prophecies of the coming of Christ, the destruction of the world, and the damnation of certain individuals. (Mormonism Unvailed, 1834, pages 13-15)

The article we have cited which was published in the Gem in 1829 claimed that Harris mentioned the “Almighty” in relationship to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. An article which appeared in the Pain[ef]ville Telegraph in 1831 contained this information: “Martin Harris . . . told all about the gold plates, Angels, Spirits, and Jo Smith.—He had seen and handled them all, by the power of God . . . Every idea that he advanced, he knew to be absolutely true, as he said, by the spirit and power of God” (Pain[ef]ville Telegraph, March 15, 1831, as cited in A New Witness for Christ in America, vol. 2, page 97.
Since printing this statement in The Money-Digging Letters, I have examined a number of other historical sources relating to Martin Harris. These references, from early newspapers up until the time of his death, point to the unmistakable conclusion that Harris could hardly open his mouth without talking about religion. That he could write a letter of over 600 words without mentioning the subject seems highly unlikely. This is especially true since the Salamander letter deals with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and gives ample opportunities to bring up the subject. While it is true that Martin Harris believed in money-digging and the superstitions connected with it, it seems very hard to believe that he would write a perspective convert like Phelps and leave out all the divine elements of the Book of Mormon.

It is claimed that the Salamander letter is the only letter in existence which is written in Martin Harris’s own hand. (There is a letter which bears his signature, but the handwriting resembles that of his son. We will have more to say about this later.) There are two other letters attributed to Harris which were published in the Latter-Day Saints’ Millennial Star on January 1, 1877. One of the letters claims to have been dictated by Martin Harris, but the other one might have been written in his own hand. The original copies of these letters have not been located, but there seems to be no reason to question their authenticity. While there could have been some editorial tampering, the letters undoubtedly came from Harris. They were published over a hundred years ago and bear internal evidence of having originated from the mind of Martin Harris. For instance, they conform very well with Howe’s early assessment of Harris: “Here he appears to be in his element, answering and explaining all manner of dark and abstruse theological questions, from Genesis to Revelations; declaring that everything has been revealed to him by the ‘power of God.’” In the first letter, Harris boasted: “I defy any man to show me any passage of Scripture that I am not posted on or familiar with.” The second letter is filled with quotations from the scriptures. We have previously quoted the March 15, 1831, issue of the Painesville Telegraph as saying: “Every idea that he advanced, he knew to be absolutely true, as he said, by the spirit and power of God.” In the second letter which appears in the Millennial Star, Martin Harris stated: “The Lord has shown me these things by his spirit . . .” Harris went on to claim that, “The Lord showed me there was no true Church upon the face of the earth, . . .”

The reader will find a photograph of these letters below. Notice that they are filled with Scriptures and material dealing with religion.
Smithfield, Utah, Nov. 23, 1870.

Mr. Emerson, Sir: I received your favor. In reply I will say concerning the plates, I do say that the angel did show to me the plates containing the Book of Mormon. Further, the translation that I married to Prof. Anthon was copied from these same plates; also, that the Professor did testify to it being a correct translation. I do firmly believe and do know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God; for without I know he could not had [sic] that gift; neither could he have translated the same. I can give if you require it, one hundred witnesses to the proof of the Book of Mormon.

I defy any man to show me any passage of Scripture that I am not posted on or familiar with. I will answer any question you feel like asking to the best of my knowledge, if you can rely on my testimony of the same. In conclusion I can say that I arrived in Utah safe, in good health and spirits, considering the long journey. I am quite well at present, and have been, generally speaking, since I arrived.

With many respects I remain your humble friend,

MARTIN HARRIS.

Smithfield, Cache County, U.T., January, 1871.

To H. Emerson, Dear Sir:—Your second letter, dated December, 1870, came duly to hand. I am truly glad to see a spirit of inquiry manifested therein. I reply by a borrowed hand, as my sight has failed me too much to write myself. Your questions: Question 1, “Did you go to England to lecture against ‘Mormonism’?”

Answer, I answer emphatically, No, I did not;—No man ever heard me in any way deny the truth of the Book of Mormon, the administration of the angel that showed me the plates; nor the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, under the administration of Joseph Smith, Jun., the Prophet whom the Lord raised up for that purpose, in these latter days, that he may show forth his power and glory. The Lord has shown me these things by his spirit—by the administration of holy angels—and confirmed the same with signs following, step by step, as the work has progressed, for the space of fifty-three years.

The Lord showed me there was no true Church upon the face of the earth, none built upon the foundation, designated by the Savior, “The rock of revelation,” as declared to Peter. See Matt. xvi, 16, 17, 18 verses. He also showed me that an angel should come and restore the Holy Priesthood again to the earth, and commission his servants again with the Holy Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth: See Rev. xiv, 6, 7 verses. He further showed me that the time was nigh when he would set his hand again the second time to restore the Kingdom of Israel, “when he would gather the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.” “When he would bring the record of Joseph which was in the hand of Ephraim, and join with the record of Judah, when the two records should become one in the hand of the Lord to accomplish his great work of the last days.” See Ex. 36th and 37th chap.; also Isaiah 29th chap.; also from the 58th chap. to the end of the book; also Psalms 50.

Question 2. What became of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated?

Answer. They were returned to the angel, Moroni, from whom they were received, to be brought forth again in the due time of the Lord; for they contain many things pertaining to the gathering of Israel, which gathering will take place in this generation, and shall be testified of among all nations, according to the old Prophets; as the Lord will set his ensign to the people, and gather the outcasts of Israel.

See Isaiah, 11th chap.

Now, dear sir, examining these Scriptures carefully; and should there still be any ambiguity relative to this great work of the last days, write again and we will endeavor to enlighten you on any point relative to this doctrine.

I am, very respectfully,

MARTIN HARRIS, Sen.

—Opden Junction.
I find it very difficult to believe that the two letters published in the Millennial Star came from the same mind that produced the Salamander letter.

There is another letter attributed to Martin Harris (apparently not in his own hand) which is in the Church Archives. It was sent to Brigham Young along with a printed proclamation purporting to be a revelation from Moses, Elias, Elijah and John. In this letter we find the following:

Respected Friend Brigham Young

enclosed I Send you a Proclamation as you will discover by reading it given by Moses, Elias, Elijah, and John —

You no doubt will recollect of a favor asked of me — of the lone of Some money upon the ground of relationship and in the name of God. I now make an appeal to you in the name of god and Command you in the name of god = to Publish = the Revelation I send you in = your deseret news . . . that the = world and Commandment of the Proclamation may go to all the world this done you will Serve the cause of god . . . (Letter attributed to Martin Harris, August 13, 1855, Brigham Young Collection, MSD, BX 39, fd 17, handwritten copy)

While there is no way to know for certain that this letter was written by Martin Harris, the attempt to command Brigham Young “in the name of God” seems consistent with what is known about Harris’s character. In any case, the reader will notice that the letter uses the word “God” four times and mentions Biblical names.

With the exception of the Salamander letter, historical sources (both Mormon and anti-Mormon) reveal that Martin Harris could not keep silent on the subject of religion. Besides the early newspapers which mention Harris’s zealous attempt to tie Mormonism to God and the bible, we have a number of people who spoke with him throughout the years he was associated with Mormonism. They all tell the same story. One of the most interesting accounts was given by an Episcopalian minister by the name of John A. Clark. In a book published in 1842, he claimed that he had an important conversation with Martin Harris in 1827—three years before the Salamander letter was supposed to have been written. Clark believed that the Smith family “were principally known as money-diggers = and that Joseph Smith claimed “second sight, a power to look into depths of the earth, and discover where its precious treasures were hid,” but he did not seem to remember Harris telling anything about a spirit which “transfigured himself from a white salamander.” Instead, he claimed that Harris told him it was an angel of God who directed Joseph Smith to the plates:

It was early in the autumn of 1827 that Martin Harris called at my house in Palmyra, one morning about sunrise. His whole appearance indicated mor than usual excitement, . . .

According to Martin Harris, . . . Jo, while he lay upon his bed, had a remarkable dream. An angel of God seemed to approach him, clad in celestial splendor. This divine messenger assured him, that he, Joseph Smith, was chosen of the Lord to be a prophet of the Most High God, and to bring to light hidden things, . . . (Gleanings By The Way, pages 222 and 225)

Mark Hofmann, who sold the Salamander letter to Steven Christensen, suggested that the lack of religious material in the letter may stem from Phelps being involved in money-digging. This would account for Harris emphasizing this aspect of the story and suppressing the divine element. While it is possible that Harris would stress the things that were appealing to a money-digger, it still seems somewhat strange that he would leave out all mention of God or angels. Phelps’s own letter, written less than three months after the one attributed to Harris, seems to show that he was receptive to religious material. It mentioned “God,” “the Holy Ghost,” “the millennium” and “divine things.” The Phelps letter, in fact, says that, “Mr. Harris, . . . declares upon his soul’s salvation that the book is true, and was interpreted . . . through a pair of silver spectacles, . . .” While the words “silver spectacles” appear in the Salamander letter, nothing about Harris’s “soul’s salvation” is found there.

The 1873 Letter

It is disturbing to note that the Salamander letter, which seems to remove all religious elements out of the Book of Mormon story, comes right on the heels of the discovery of another letter reported to have been written by Martin Harris in 1873. This letter is supposed to be in the handwriting of Martin Harris’s son, although it appears to bear the signature of Harris himself. It is a strong affirmation of the testimony concerning the angel appearing to show the gold plates:

. . . as I was praying unto the Lord that I might behold the ancient record, lo there appeared to view a holy Angel, . . . the angel did take up the plates and turn them over so as we could plainly see the engravings thereon, and lo there came a voice from heaven saying “I am the Lord,” and that the plates were translated by God and not by men, and also that we should bear record of it to all the world. . . . (The Ensign, December 1983, pages 44-45)

The Salamander letter almost appears to be a rebuttal to the powerful testimony in the 1873 letter. When it comes to Harris’s view of the gold plates it merely states: “. . . Joseph takes me together with Oliver Cowdery & David Whitmer to have a view of the plates our names are appended to the book of Mormon . . .”
I have made a comparison of the religious content of the two letters and found the following: the 1873 letter uses the word Lord three times. The words Angel and holy appear twice, and the words God, Christ, heaven, vision, Gospel and praying all appear once. In the Salamander letter all of these words are missing, and since it is almost three times as long as the 1873 letter the discrepancy becomes even more important.

In The Money-Digging Letters, page 19, I wrote:

The style of the Salamander letter seems to differ from that of the 1873 letter. Although Harris was in his late forties at the time the Salamander letter was supposed to have been written, it appears to have been penned by someone who did not have a very good education. The 1873 letter, on the other hand, is very well written. One very obvious difference is that it used the word and three times as often as the Salamander letter.

After sorting the words in the two letters alphabetically on our computer, I found that the figure should be 2.6 instead of 3. The Salamander letter uses and 2.9 times per hundred words, whereas it appears 7.5 times per hundred words in the 1873 letter. I also made this observation in The Money-Digging Letters: “The Salamander letter is composed mostly of short sentences (an average of 12 words in each sentence), whereas the 1873 letter has an average of 73 words per sentence.” If the original punctuation of the 1873 letter is not followed, it is possible to divide it into more sentences. While this would reduce the number of words per sentence, the new sentences would all have to start with the word and. The other letters attributed to Harris which I have examined do not seem to use the word and to start sentences. It is also interesting to note that the sentences in these letter are about twice as long as those in the Salamander letter. I really do not profess to know how significant the length of sentences and the number of times and is used are for determining authorship. It would seem that both could be affected by the contents of the letter. I do feel, however, that the two letters bear little resemblance to each other. The differences have led me to question whether both could be genuine. Although the 1873 letter seems to fit more comfortable with the picture I have obtained of Martin Harris from many other sources, I must admit that I am not absolutely convinced that it is authentic.

If I accept the statement that Martin Harris was a man “of small literary acquirements” when he was over forty years of age, then I find it very hard to believe that he would have improved his style to the point where he could have written the 1873 letter. One explanation for this, however, might be that Martin Harris’s son imposed his own style into the letter. For that matter, he could have composed the entire letter, and as long as his father signed it, it would be considered the work of Martin Harris, Sen. The most important thing, then, is the signature. In The Money-Digging Letters I observed:

One signature that is rather remarkable is the one found on the 1873 letter. Although Martin Harris was supposed to have been “eighty-nine years old” when he wrote it (The Ensign, November 1982, page 97), it looks almost the same as the one on the 1829 contract with Grandin (see The Ensign, December 1983, pages 41 and 45). It is certainly not what one would expect from a man who was just four month from his ninetieth birthday.

I would expect Harris’s signature to be somewhat shaky by the time he was supposed to have signed the 1873 letter. I have been told by a scholar who has seen the original that it does show evidence of an unsteady hand. If this is the case, the photograph published in The Ensign does not seem to reveal it. In any case, after I published The Money-Digging Letters, I received a photocopy of an application for a U.S. Military pension which Martin Harris signed on April 21, 1871. Since it was signed 21 months before the 1873 letter was supposed to have been written, I would expect it to be as good as or even better than the one appearing on the letter. Instead, it seems to bear evidence of deterioration. Below is a comparison of Harris’s signatures as they appeared in 1829, 1871 and 1873.

While the 1871 signature does raise some questions about the signature on the 1873 letter, caution must be used. It could be that when Harris signed the document in 1871 he was having an exceptionally bad day. Although I am suspicious of the signature on the 1873 letter, I cannot say for certain that it did not come from Martin Harris’s pen. It is interesting to note, however, that in the letter dated January 1871, which was published in the Millennial Star, Harris commented: “I reply by a borrowed hand, as my sight has failed me too much to write myself.” If Harris was having such a severe problem when he was 87, I would think that it would even be worse by the time he was 89. This could not only affect the appearance of the signature but also its orientation to the writing which had already been dictated. A close examination of the photograph in The Ensign shows that the signature is placed perfectly between the lines on the paper and that it is parallel to the other writing.

I do not know whether any physical tests have been made on this letter. The Church’s press release dated October 5, 1982, only told that, “Preliminary studies, comparing the handwritings in the letter with known examples of handwritings of both Martin Harris and his son, substantiate the letter’s authenticity.”

As to the pedigree of the letter, the Church’s press release said that Brent F. Ashworth “declined to identify the collectors from whom” he obtained it. We have since learned that it passed through the hands of Mark Hofmann—Hofmann, of course, is the same man who sold the Salamander letter to Steven Christensen. Martin Harris’s 1873 letter was addressed to Walter Conrad. Mr. Ashworth was apparently unsuccessful in tracing the letter back to the Conrad family. In the press release, we read as follows:

> He said the Martin Harris letter was previously owned by at least three collectors. The first of these, he said, kept the letter in a collection of postmarked covers from early Utah and apparently didn’t realize its import.

> It would appear, then, that the first person known to have had the letter was a collector. This, of course, provides no real evidences for the document’s authenticity. (It could be of some value, of course, if the collector furnished evidence that it was in his collection for a number of years.) In my opinion, the fact that a document has been in the hands of a collector does not really give it a pedigree. A forged document could be funneled through an unsuspecting collector to help convince someone else of its authenticity. The important thing, then, is where the document was before it arrived in the hands of the collector. Although many authentic documents have no pedigree, I would still feel better about the 1873 letter if it could be traced back beyond a collector.

The 1873 letter is worth a great deal of money because it fills a real vacuum for believers in the Book of Mormon. While Harris often claimed that an angel showed him the gold plates of the Book of Mormon (see his two letters published in the Millennial Star), he seems to have had little to say about the details of the vision. According to a number of sources, when Harris was questioned about the matter, he said he “never saw the plates with his natural eyes only in vision . . .” (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 96-C; Gleanings By The Way, pages 256-257). In the A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, page 142, Mormon historian B. H. Roberts concluded that “So far as any direct personal statement is concerned, Martin Harris is silent as to the manner in which the plates were shown to him, . . .”

The following appeared in the Church’s press release which announced the discovery of the 1873 letter: “Through the years several interviews with Martin Harris have been published, reaffirming his testimony . . . But this letter is the first statement to be discovered since then that carries his signature.”

Mormon officials were elated with this remarkable discovery. The managing director of the church Historical Department called it “one of the most significant discoveries regarding [the] coming forth of the Book of Mormon, . . .” (Deseret News, Church Section, October 9, 1982). The rejoicing was short-lived, however. Scarcely a year had elapsed when rumors began to surface that another letter by Martin Harris had been discovered. Instead of confirming the divine origin of the Book of Mormon, the Salamander letter turned out to provide devastating evidence against it by linking it to money-digging and the occult.

At any rate, the 1873 letter contains some interesting parallels with two documents printed in the A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 142-143. The first is a statement by Edward Stevenson in which he claimed that Martin Harris gave important details concerning the vision of the gold plates at his (Stevenson’s) home. B. H. Roberts’ source for Stevenson’s statement is listed as Millennial Star, vol. 48, pages 367-389. When this reference was checked, it became evident that it was only a reminiscence. It was not published until June 21, 1886—eleven years after Martin Harris’s death. Furthermore, Stevenson seemed to have been relying at least to some extent on James T. Wood’s memory: “. . . Brother James T. Woods, who is now present while I am writing this article, reminds me that himself and G. D. Keaton were present on that occasion, and asked him [Harris] to explain the manner in which the plates containing the characters of the Book of Mormon were exhibited to the witnesses.” Since a number of similar statements by Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer had already been published, it is possible that some of Whitmer’s ideas were unconsciously attributed to Harris. However this may be, Stevenson said that Harris related that “the angel stood on the opposite side of the table . . .” The 1873 letter told of “a holy Angel, and before him a table, . . .” Stevenson’s account said “the angel . . . took the plates in his hand and turned them over.” The Harris letter also claimed that “the Angel did take up the plates and turn them over . . .” Both accounts use the words to all the world. Stevenson went on to say that Harris claimed “he lied not.” In the 1873 letter Harris said that “I lie not . . .”
While there are a number of interesting parallels between the two accounts, there is one significant difference. Stevenson claimed that Harris spoke of the “angel” who declared that the Book of Mormon was translated correctly, whereas the 1873 letter said it was “the Lord.” This is interesting because the other document used by Roberts in the A Comprehensive History, page 143, agrees with the 1873 letter in this matter. This is a report of an interview with David Whitmer which appears on the same page Stevenson’s account ends. In this report we find Whitmer (who seems to be borrowing heavily from the printed “Testimony of the Three Witnesses”) quoted as saying: “... I heard the voice of the Lord, ... declaring that the records of the plates ... were translated by the gift and power of God.” In the letter attributed to Harris, we read that, “there came a voice ... saying ‘I am the Lord,’ and that the plated were translated by God ...”

These parallels, of course, do not prove that the 1873 letter was created from the accounts used by B. H. Roberts. They only show that there was a source available which was printed after Harris’s death which someone could have used to write the letter.

Unscientific?

As I pointed out at the beginning of this article, some of the tests which the experts have completed on the Salamander letter seem to indicate that it is genuine. My study of the text, however, has led me to have serious doubts about its authenticity. In view of the tests, I have to ask myself whether I am being unscientific. Can the case I have built against the document possibly outweigh the findings of the experts? Everyone would probably agree that if the letter mentioned Joseph Smith watching television before he was visited by the spirit, it could not be accepted as authentic no matter what the scientific tests revealed. The evidence furnished by the text of the letter would override all physical tests. With the Salamander letter, however, I must admit that I do not have anything which is that convincing. My doubts are based solely on circumstantial evidence. As I investigated the matter, the evidence seemed to grow, and I found it increasingly difficult to believe in the document’s authenticity. I originally entered into the research with a strong desire to prove that the letter cam from the pen of Martin Harris. Unfortunately, however, the inconsistencies seemed to swallow up all my enthusiasm. Some of the evidence against the letter seemed to be similar to that which led me to the conclusion that a large portion of the History of the Church was not actually authored by Joseph Smith as the Church had always claimed. Mormon scholars later admitted that my conclusions about the matter were correct. Over 60% of the history had been compiled from many sources after Joseph Smith’s death, and references were changed from the third person to the first person to make it appear that Smith was the author (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 127-135).

At any rate, I now find myself wondering how much I can rely on the scientific tests which are available. I am convinced that the average person could not come up with a forgery that would stand up against these tests. On the other hand, I wonder how difficult if would be for someone who is seriously involved with old documents to create a forgery that would pass the tests. In The Money-Digging Letters, I questioned whether handwriting analysis is an exact science and pointed out important cases where the experts have differed. In the same pamphlet I pointed out that we had talked with Bill Kruger, the man who had tested the paper the Salamander letter was written on. Mr. Kruger stated that there was nothing in the chemical composition of the paper which would preclude its having been manufactured around 1830. Mr. Kruger informed us, however, that it is possible for a very clever forger to manufacture paper at the present time which will pass through his tests without detection.

We also talked with Dr. Antonio Kantu, one of the world’s greatest experts on the detection of forgery by testing ink. Dr. Kantu had been approached about making tests on the Salamander letter, but due to a mix up in communications someone else ended up doing the work. In our conversation with Kantu, he said that he could examine the ink to determine if its chemical properties were like those of ink used at this early period, but he would not be able to say for certain that this was actually ink in use in 1830 or if it was added to the paper at that date. He indicated that by merely applying heat to a document, a forger could give the appearance of great age. He knew of no ink test that could be made on the Salamander letter that would be absolutely conclusive.

If I were certain that the tests could not be thwarted by an expert forger, I would feel compelled to accept the document as authentic. As it is, however, the circumstantial evidence makes it very difficult for me to accept the letter as having come from the pen of Martin Harris.

After I published my views concerning the letter, a few scholars began to have questions about its authenticity. I understand that one professor has put forth the idea that the letter was really written by Harris’s wife, Lucy. Since she was known to be an enemy of the Book of Mormon, it is proposed she wrote the letter in an effort to discredit Mormonism. This theory would allow one to accept the results of all the tests except the handwriting analysis and still maintain that the letter is fraudulent. I personally find this idea to be rather hard.
to accept. While one could conceivably maintain that Phelps received it as genuine and used quotations from it in the letter published by Howe, it does not explain the other parallels to Mormonism Unveiled. If the letter was really written by Lucy Harris in 1830, Phelps probably would have learned that it was a fraud when he talked to Joseph Smith and others connected with the work. These conversations occurred prior to his response to Howe’s letter on January 15, 1831. I am of the opinion that if the Salamander letter was actually written in 1830, it probably came from Martin Harris’s own pen. If Steven Christensen’s researchers can convince me that the letter was in existence before Howe wrote his book, I will have to accept it as a genuine letter.

In The Money-Digging Letters, pages 8 and 9, I wrote the following:

We feel that one of the most important tests of the letter’s authenticity is its history since it was written. If Mr. Hofmann will tell historians where he obtained the letter, then it may be possible to trace it back to its original source. If, for instance, it had been in the Phelps family for many years, this would add a great deal to a case for its authenticity. We would feel much better about the matter if it could even be traced back prior to 1976 when Knight’s account of the finding of the Book of Mormon plates was first published. Mr. Hofmann is usually very cautious about this information, claiming that it will hinder his work as a document collector if people know his sources.

While we sympathize with Hofmann’s desire not to reveal the source of his discoveries, we feel that it is very important that historians know the source of these finds. Some kind of compromise need to be worked out.

On August 23, 1984, Sandra Tanner talked to Mark Hofmann concerning the authenticity of the Salamander letter. With regard to the question about revealing the source of the letter, Mr. Hofmann said that he had told the buyer (Steven Christensen) where he obtained it, but could not reveal this information to anyone else. According to Hofmann, we will have to wait until Christensen decides to release this information. I thought that this information might appear in the forthcoming article in BYU Studies. Unfortunately, however, I have been told that two other collectors involved in the transaction want to keep a low profile so they can acquire other documents, and therefore information concerning the document’s pedigree might not be given. I hope that this is an inaccurate report, but even if these collectors want to keep their identity secret, they could at least tell where the letter originally came from. If no information about the pedigree appears in BYU Studies, I will have to assume that it cannot be traced back beyond the hands of collectors. I do hope that scholars will not side-step this important issue. Too many of the documents which have recently come forth appear to be like Melchisedec, “Without father, without mother, without descent, . . .” (Hebrews 7:3).

In The Money-Digging Letters, I reported that Hofmann tried to sell the Salamander letter to the Mormon Church for a large amount of money. In the past Mr. Hofmann acted under the theory that the Church will buy up embarrassing documents to suppress them. This is very clear from his own account of how he handled the discovery of the Joseph Smith III Blessing. In a paper given at the Mormon History Association, Mr. Hofmann stated that he did not want “to come across like I was trying to blackmail the Church,” but he acknowledged that if the Church had wanted him to, he would have been “willing to promise not to breathe a word of its existence to anyone . . .” (Sunstone Review, August 1982, page 1). That the Salamander letter was offered to the Church before it was sold to Christensen was confirmed by Church spokesman Jerry Cahill (see Salt Lake Tribune, September 2, 1984).

The 1873 letter which was attributed to Harris was obviously worth a great deal of money to collectors who were interested in proving Mormonism. The Salamander letter, on the other hand, could have been sold to liberal Mormons, anti-Mormons or even to those who would want to buy it to keep it out of the hands of critics. It has been suggested that a letter written by Joseph Smith’s mother sold for $30,000 (see Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 16). I would think that the Salamander letter would bring at least that amount of money.

In conclusion I would like to say that my mind is still open concerning the Salamander letter. If anyone has any information about the letter (either pro or con) I would really like to hear about it. Those who want to know more about the matter should read my preliminary report, The Money-Digging Letters. This report sells for only $1.00 a copy. It includes the interview Martin Harris had with Tiffany’s Monthly in 1859. This interview alone is worth the price of the pamphlet.

“Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; all things are become new.”

(2 Corinthians 5:17)
UTAH LIGHTHOUSE & WORLD NEEDS

When we originally set up Utah Lighthouse Ministry, we indicated that we were going to provide some assistance to Rescue Missions. These organization preach the Gospel and help the poor and afflicted. Since beginning our operations we have been able to give about fifteen hours a week to this ministry. In addition, we purchased a computer for one mission and have furnished another mission with $100 a month to help pay a chaplain.

Recently the Lord has been moving on our hearts to expand this work into the area of world relief. Although most people are now familiar with the desperate needs in Ethiopia, this is only one of a number of countries where many people are dying of starvation. In 1 John 3:17 we read:

But whoso hath this world’s good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

We have been praying about what part the Lord would have Utah Lighthouse Ministry play in the area of world relief, and how we should go about it. Recently our prayers were answered when $1,000 was designated for relief in Africa—i.e. providing food, medical relief, shelter and a demonstration of true Christian love. Since the Lord has been so gracious in opening this door, we have decided to step out in faith and provide monthly support for five children under the World Vision Childcare Partner plan. We would really like to provide support for hundreds of people, and if the Lord provides the means, we will expand this ministry. In the meantime we have our regular expenses. It is necessary that we meet these obligations so that we can continue an effective work among the Mormon people. We do hope, however, that our friends will pray earnestly about Utah Lighthouse Ministry and world relief. We really want the Lord’s will in this matter.

It seems very obvious from Matthew 25:34-40, that He would have all His children helping to alleviate suffering throughout the world:

Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?
Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?
And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

Psalms 82:3 tells us that we should “Defend the poor and fatherless do justice to the afflicted and needy.” In James 1:27 we read:

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Those who are interested in helping out with this important ministry can send their tax-deductible contributions to Utah Lighthouse Ministry, P.O. Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.
Important Find?

On November 27, 1967, the Deseret News announced the rediscovery of some of the Joseph Smith Papyri. In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March 1968, we demonstrated that the piece of papyrus from which Joseph Smith was supposed to have translated the Book of Abraham was among the papyri which had been located at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. When this fragment was translated by Egyptologists it was discovered that it was nothing but an Egyptian funerary document know as the “Book of Breathings.” This pagan document had absolutely nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. The original of Fac. No. 1 for the Book of Abraham was also found among the papyri. In the May 1971 issue of the Messenger, we quoted from a letter which related that Dr. Hugh Nibley had told someone that “there was more papyri found and that it quoted from a letter which related that Dr. Hugh Nibley had the papyri. In the May 1971 issue of the Fac. No. 1 for the Book of Abraham was also found among nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. The original of “Book of Breathings.” This pagan document had absolutely nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. The original of Fac. No. 1 for the Book of Abraham was also found among the papyri. In the May 1971 issue of the Messenger, we quoted from a letter which related that Dr. Hugh Nibley had told someone that “there was more papyri found and that it was discovered in Texas. . . . Mention was made by Nibley that Facsimile No. 2 was among the papyri.” Another individual was supposed to have said that Nibley claimed the papyri were in a small town safe which was owned by an antique dealer. Research by Michael Marquardt and Wesley P. Walters led us to believe that the papyri might be in the possession of a Mr. Markham, the owner of Markham’s Trading Post in Cleveland, Texas. Mr. Markham apparently died or left the area a number of years ago, and we did not take the time to search for his descendants.

In any case, it has recently been reported that mark Hofmann has obtained the original Egyptian Papyrus which Joseph Smith used as Fac. No. 2 in the Book of Abraham. It is also claimed that Hofmann plans to secretly sell the document to the Church so that it can remain hidden from the eyes of the public. A prominent Mormon scholar, however, told us that although he had heard the Church was buying the document, he was not aware of any plans for a cover-up. Mr. Hofmann has acknowledged that the original of Fac. No. 2 is in existence and that paste up work has been done on it. Another individual, who has seen the original, claims that there are pencil and ink drawings on the paper it is pasted to which fill in missing portions.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 335-343, we maintained that strong circumstantial evidence showed that the original of Fac. No. 2 was badly damaged when Joseph Smith obtained it and that he made false restorations from other pieces of papyrus to fill in missing portions. Some of the Egyptian writing was even inserted upside down! We believe that if Mr. Hofmann or the Church will release the original, it will prove our charges of fraudulent reconstruction. The false restorations and the erroneous translation of the Egyptian writing show beyond all doubt that the Book of Abraham is a work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination.

Videos Available

On February 16, 1984, the Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois, established the “Tanner Annual Lectureship on Cults.” At that time Sandra delivered two very important lectures, “Is One God Enough: Monotheism to Polytheism” and “Learning the LDS Language: Terminology Differences Between Mormon and Christians.” While we were back in the Midwest, Sandra was also interviewed by a television station in Milwaukee. We are no happy to announce that we are having video cassettes (VHS) made of both the lectures and the interview. The first cassette includes both the lectures given at the First Annual Tanner Lecture and sell for $30. The second cassette contains both the lectures and the interview on the television station in Milwaukee. It is an excellent presentation and is highly recommended. The price is $20. Please include an additional 10% for handling and shipping.

Mormon Archaeology

In an article published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1969, Dee Green, who had been deeply involved in archaeological work at the Church’s Brigham Young University declared:

The first myth we need to eliminate is that Book of Mormon archaeology exists. . . . no Book of Mormon location is known with reference to modern typography. Biblical archaeology can be studied because we do know where Jerusalem and Jericho were and are, but we do not know where Zarahemla and Bountiful (nor any location for that matter) were or are.

Although some people have been misled into believing the situation has changed since Dee Green made his comments, it is clear that Mormon archaeologists are still in the same predicament. This was pointed out at the Sunstone Symposium held on August 25, 1984. After a non-Mormon scholar made some critical comments concerning the relationship of the Book of Mormon to archaeology, two Mormon anthropologists responded to the challenge. Their comments were anything but encouraging to believers in the Book of Mormon. Ray T. Matheny, Professor of Anthropology at BYU, admitted that what had been found so far is disappointing:

No evidence has been found in the New World for a ferrous metallurgical industry dating to pre-Columbian times. And so this is a king-size kind of problem, it seems to me, for so-called Book of Mormon archaeology. . . . I really have difficulty in finding issue or quarrel with those opening chapters of the Book of Mormon. But thereafter it doesn’t seem like a translation to me. It seems more like a transliteration. And the terminologies and the language used and the methods of explaining and putting things down are 19th century literary concepts and cultural experiences on which Joseph Smith and his colleagues would experience. And for that reason I call it a transliteration, and I’d rather not call it a translation after that 7th chapter. And I have real difficulty in trying to relate these cultural concepts as I’ve briefly discussed here with archaeological findings that I’m aware of . . .

If I were doing this cold like John Carlson is here, I would say in evaluating the Book of Mormon that it had no place in the New World whatsoever. I would have to look for the place of the Book of Mormon events to have taken place in the Old World. It just doesn’t fit anything that he has been taught in his discipline, nor I in mine discipline in anthropology, history; there seems to be no place for it. It seems misplaced . . . . I think there’s a great difficulty here for we Mormons in understanding what this book is all about. (“Book of Mormon Archaeology,” response by Professor Ray T. Matheny, typed copy transcribed from a tape-recording, pages 21, 30 and 31)

Bruce Warren, who is also a Professor of Anthropology at BYU, said that he hoped that the situation would change in the next 25 years, but he admitted that “today there really is not Book of Mormon archaeology” (Ibid., page 42).

For those who are interested in learning more about the Book of Mormon and archaeology we recommend our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

NEW BOOKS

The Tanners on Trial, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Has over 100 large pages with many photographs of the original court documents. Contains fascinating testimony by some of the Church’s top historians. Price: $5.95

The Money-Digging Letters, by Jerald Tanner. Contains important information on the Salamander letter and other letter which were recently discovered. Also contains a photographic reprint of Martin Harris’s interview with Tiffany’s Monthly. Price $1.00

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? This 38-page index by Michael Briggs should be a great help to our readers. Price: $2.00

The Book of Abraham Revisited. by H. Michael Marquardt. A critical look at the Book of Abraham. Also contains a review of Hugh Nibley’s Abraham in Egypt. Price: $1.00

Tract Pack. An assortment of 12 tracts from other publishers. Price: $1.50

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Contains hundreds of photos from old Mormon publications. Price: $5.95

An Address to Believers in the Book of Mormon, by Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer. Contains some information not found in his Address to All Believers in Christ. Price: $1.00
BLOOD FLOWS IN UTAH

Brigham Young’s Teachings Put Into Practice

In the Old Testament we read: “And thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot” (Deuteronomy 19:21). When Jesus came into the world he introduced a higher law of love:

Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth:
But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. (Matthew 5:38-39)

In 1 Kings 18:40, Elijah the prophet ordered the destruction of the “prophets of Baal.” The disciples of Jesus remembered this Old Testament story, and when the Samaritans “did not receive” Him, they wanted to know if they should “command fire to come down from heaven and consume them, even as Elias [Elijah] did?” The account in Luke 10:55-56 says that Jesus “turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men’s lives, but to save them.”

The New Testament teaches that we are not to desire vengeance on our enemies. Instead we are to leave judgment in the hands of the Lord.

Blood Atonement

The early leaders of the Mormon Church seem to have reverted to Old Testament thinking when they formulated some of the doctrines of the Church. The New Testament clearly teaches that we are not to curse our enemies: “Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not” (Romans 12:14). The Mormon prophet Joseph Smith, on the other hand, gave a revelation which sanctioned the cursing of his enemies: “And inasmuch as mine enemies come against you . . . ye shall curse them; And whomsoever ye curse, I will curse, and ye shall avenge me of mine enemies” (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 103:24-25). In a manuscript written in 1839, Reed Peck said that Joseph Smith claimed that he had a revelation in which the Apostle Peter told him that he had killed Judas: “He [Joseph Smith] talked of dissenters and cited us to the case of Judas, saying that Peter told him in a conversation a few days ago that himself hung Judas for betraying Christ . . .” (The Reed Peck Manuscript, page 13). On December 13, 1857, Heber C. Kimball, a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, made this statement in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City:

Judas lost that saving principle, and they took him and killed him. It is said in the Bible that his bowels gushed out; but they actually kicked him until his bowels came out. . . . I know the day is right at hand when men will forfeit their Priesthood and turn against us and against the covenants they have made, and they will be destroyed as Judas was. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, pages 125-126)

Brigham Young, the second president of the Mormon Church, publicly preached what is known as the “blood atonement” doctrine—i.e., that a man might be killed to save his soul. His sermons were published in the Church’s own newspaper, Deseret News, and were later reprinted by the Mormons in England in the Journal of Discourses. There can be no question, therefore, regarding the accuracy of the printed reports. In one sermon, President Brigham Young made these comments:

There are sins that men commit for which they cannot receive forgiveness . . . and if they had their eyes open to see their true condition, they would be perfectly willing to have their blood spilt upon the ground, that the smoke thereof might ascend to heaven as an offering for their sins; and the smoking incense would atone, for their sins, whereas, if such is not the case, they will stick to them and remain upon them in the spirit world.

I know, when you hear my brethren telling about cutting people off from the earth, that you consider it is strong doctrine, but it is to save them, not to destroy them. . . .

And furthermore, I know that there are transgressors, who, if they knew themselves, and the only condition upon which they can obtain forgiveness, would beg of their brethren to shed their blood. . . . I will say further; I have had men come to me and offer their lives to atone for their sins.

It is true that the blood of the Son of God was shed for sins through the fall and those committed by men, yet men can commit sins which it can never remit. . . . There are sins that can be atoned for by an offering upon an altar, as in ancient days; and there are sins that the blood of a lamb, of a calf, or of turtle doves, cannot remit, but they must be atoned for by the blood of the man. That is the reason why men talk to you as they do from this stand; they understand the doctrine and throw out a few words about it. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pages 53-54; also published in the Deseret News, 1856, page 235)

On another occasion President Brigham Young went so far as to claim that his blood atonement doctrine fulfilled Jesus’ command to “love thy neighbor as thyself”:

Now take a person in this congregation . . . and suppose that he is overtaken in a gross fault, that he has committed a sin that he knows will deprive him of that exaltation which he desires, and that he cannot attain to it without the shedding of his blood, and also knows that by having his blood shed he will atone for that sin, and be saved and exalted with the Gods, is there a man or woman in this house but what would say, “shed my blood that I may be saved and exalted with the Gods?”

All mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves, even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers or sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of their blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood?

I could refer you to plenty of instances where men have been righteously slain, in order to atone for their sins. I have seen scores and hundreds of people for whom there would have been a chance (in the last resurrection there will be) if their lives had been taken and their blood spilled on the ground as a smoking incense to the Almighty, but who are now angels to the devil . . . I have known a great many men who left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them, the wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbids this principle’s being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

This is loving our neighbour as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind. (Sermon by Brigham Young, delivered in the Mormon Tabernacle, February 8, 1857, printed in the Deseret News, February 18, 1857; also reprinted in the Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pages 219-20)

In another sermon, Brigham Young made it plain that a man could blood atone his own wife:

Let me suppose a case. Suppose you found your brother in bed with your wife, and put a javelin through both of them, you would be justified, and they would atone for their sins, and be received into the kingdom of God. I would at once do so in such a case; and under such circumstances, I have no wife whom I love so well that I would not put a javelin through her heart, and I would do it with clean hands . . .

There is not a man or woman, who violates the covenants made with their God, that will not be required to pay the debt. The blood of Christ will never wipe that out, your own blood must atone for it; . . . (Journal of Discourses, vol. 3, page 247)

On another occasion Brigham Young warned:

Shall I tell you the law of God in regard to the African race? If the white man who belongs to the chosen seed mixes his blood with the seed of Cain, the penalty under the law of God is death on the spot. This will always be so. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 110)

Brigham Young taught that in the case of miscegenation with blacks, the children should also be blood atoned. Wilford Woodruff, who became the fourth president of the Mormon Church, recorded in his journal an address delivered by Brigham Young in 1852. In this address we find the following:

Any man having one drop of the seed of Cane in him cannot hold the priesthood. I will say it now in the name of Jesus Christ. I know it is true & they know it. The Negro cannot hold one particle of Government. I . . . if any man mingles his seed with the seed of Cane the only way he could get rid of it or have salvation would be to come forward & have his head cut off & spill his blood upon the ground. It would also take the life of his children. (Wilford Woodruff’s Journal, vol. 4, page 97)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 400-403, we demonstrate that the early Mormon leaders recommended blood atonement for murder, adultery, immorality, stealing, using the name of the Lord in vain, not receiving the Gospel, marriage to an African, covenant breaking, apostasy from the Mormon Church, lying, counterfeiting and speaking evil of Joseph Smith or consenting to his death.

Joseph F. Smith, who became the sixth President of the Church, admitted that he was about to stab a man with his pocket knife if he even expressed approval of the murder of Joseph Smith. The Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon recorded the following in his journal under the date of December 6, 1889:

About 4:30 p.m. this meeting adjourned and was followed by a meeting of Presidents Woodruff, Cannon and Smith and Bros. Lyman and Grant. . . . Bro. Joseph F. Smith was traveling some years ago near Carthage when he met a man who said he had just arrived five minutes too late to see the Smiths killed. Instantly a dark cloud seemed to overshadow Bro. Smith and he asked how this man looked upon the deed. Bro. S. was oppressed by a most horrible feeling as he waited for a reply. After a brief pause the man answered, “Just as I have always looked upon it—that it was a d—d cold-blooded murder.” The cloud immediately lifted from Bro. Smith and he found that he had his open pocket knife grasped in his hand in his pocket, and he believes that had this man given his approval to that murder of the prophets he would have immediately struck him to the heart. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” December 6, 1889, pages 205-206; original journals located in Special Collections Dept. of Brigham Young University)

There can be no doubt that many people in early Utah lost their lives because of the doctrine of blood atonement. John D. Lee, who had been a member of Joseph Smith’s secret Council of Fifty, related the following:

The most deadly sin among the people was adultery, and many men were killed in Utah for that crime.

Rosmos Anderson was a Danish man who had come to Utah . . . He had married a widow lady . . . and she had a daughter that was fully grown at the time of the reformation. The girl was very anxious to be sealed to her step-father . . . At one of the meetings during the reformation Anderson and his step-daughter confessed that they had committed adultery, believing when they did so that Brigham Young would allow them to marry when he learned the facts. Their confession being full, they were rebaptized and received into full membership. They were then placed under covenant that if they again committed adultery, Anderson should suffer death. Soon after this a charge was laid against Anderson before the Council, accusing him of adultery with his step-daughter. This Council was composed of Klingensmith and his two counselors; it was the Bishop’s Council. Without giving Anderson any chance to defend himself or make a statement, the Council voted that Anderson must die for violating his covenants. Klingensmith went to Anderson and notified him that the orders were that he must die by having his throat cut, so that the running of his blood would atone for his sins. Anderson, being a firm believer in the doctrines and teachings of the Mormon Church, made no objections, but asked for half a day to prepare for death. His request was granted. His wife was ordered to prepare a suit of clean clothing, in which to have her husband buried, and she was informed that he was to be killed for his sins, she being directed to tell those who should inquire after her husband that he had gone to California.

Klingensmith, James Haslem, Daniel McFarland and John M. Higbee dug a grave in the field near Cedar City, and that night, about 12 o’clock, went to Anderson’s house and ordered him to make ready to obey the Council. Anderson got up, dressed himself, bid his family good-bye, and notified him that the orders were that he must die by having his throat cut, so that the running of his blood would atone for his sins. Anderson, being a firm believer in the doctrines and teachings of the Mormon Church, made no objections, but asked for half a day to prepare for death. His request was granted. His wife was ordered to prepare a suit of clean clothing, in which to have her husband buried, and she was informed that he was to be killed for his sins, she being directed to tell those who should inquire after her husband that he had gone to California.

As soon as he was dead they dressed him in his clean clothes, threw him into the grave and buried him. They then carried his bloody clothing back to his family, and gave them to his wife to wash, when she was again instructed to say that her husband was in California. . . . The killing of Anderson was then considered a religious duty and a just act. . . . I knew of many men being killed in Nauvoo by the Danites. It was then the rule that all the enemies of Joseph Smith should be killed, and I know of many a man who was quietly put out of the way by the orders of Joseph and his Apostles while the Church was there. (Confessions of John D. Lee, photomechanical reprint of the original 1877 edition, pages 282-284)

In The Mormon Kingdom, volumes 1 and 2, we have documented the fact that many people were put to death in the early history of the Mormon Church. A good condensation of this material appears in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 398-404A, 428-450, 493-515.

Its Practice Today

Although the Mormon Church no longer encourages the practice of blood atonement, some of the Church leaders still believe in the basic principles underlying the doctrine. Joseph Fielding Smith, who served as the tenth president of the Church, made these comments about the doctrine:

TRUE DOCTRINE OF BLOOD ATONEMENT. Just a word or two now, on the subject of blood atonement. . . . man may commit certain grievous sins—according to his light and knowledge—that will place him beyond the reach of the atoning blood of Christ. If then he would be saved he must make sacrifice of his own life to atone—so far as in his power lies—for that sin, for the blood of Christ alone under certain circumstances will not avail. . . . And men for certain crimes have had to atone as far as they could for their sins wherein they have placed themselves beyond the redeeming power of the blood of Christ. (Doctrines of Salvation, 1954, vol. 1, pages 133-136)

After expressing a belief in the doctrine of “blood atonement,” however, Joseph Fielding Smith turned right around and said that it was never actually practiced by the Mormon Church. At any rate, the teaching that the blood of Christ can not cleanse from all sin is diametrically opposed to the teachings of the Bible. In 1 John 1:7 we read that “the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.” Even though it is completely unscriptural, the Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie still maintains that “under certain circumstances there are some serious sins for which the cleansing blood of Christ does not operate, and the law of God is that men must have their own blood shed to atone for their sins” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 92).

Fortunately, the present leaders of the Mormon Church have not promoted the blood atonement doctrine, and we know of no credible evidence linking them to its practice. On the other hand, some of the Mormon fundamentalists have sought to keep the blood atonement doctrine alive. Mormon fundamentalists are people who strongly believe in the original teachings of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Since Joseph Smith received a revelation commanding polygamy (see Doctrine and Covenants, Section 132), they believe that it should be practiced today. When the Mormon Church finds any of its members advocating fundamentalist doctrines, they are excommunicated. In 1966 Wallace Turner said that “William M. Rogers, a former policeman and an investigator who has studied polygamy for many years” estimated that “there are about 100 ‘splinter’ groups living in various forms of polygamous society” (The Mormon Establishment, page 214). In 1979, Jerry Cahill, director of press relations for the Mormon Church, estimated that there were “between 6,000 and 8,000” men, women and children in polygamist families in Utah. A man who was actually involved in the practice, however, put “the polygamy population of Utah at about 35,000” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, January 31, 1979). Whatever the actual figure is for Utah, thousands more live in other parts of the United States, Canada and Mexico.

The great majority of the Mormon fundamentalists are peaceful, and although they may break the laws regarding polygamy, they are generally good citizens. Some of the fundamentalists profess a belief in the teachings of the early Mormon leaders regarding blood atonement, but they are hesitant to actually put the doctrine into practice. In his book, Blood Atonement, Ogden Kraut, a Mormon fundamentalist who has been excommunicated from the Church, quoted extensively from the early Mormon leaders and then said: “Scoffers and unbelievers may mock and refute the doctrine of blood atonement—but it remains a true principle of the gospel of Jesus Christ” (page 102). Even though Kraut maintains a belief in the doctrine, we seriously doubt that he will be influenced to the point where he will put his belief into action. Unfortunately, however, there are a few fundamentalists who have become convinced that blood atonement should actually be practiced at the present time. The first we heard about this matter was probably about fifteen years ago when a Mormon fundamentalist came into our bookstore and told us that his group had restored the secret Council of Fifty which was originally formed by Joseph Smith (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 414-427B). He claimed that his organization was going to set up... the Kingdom of God on earth and that certain people would have to be eliminated in order to accomplish this objective. We did not take this too seriously and cannot remember which group he was affiliated with. In the 1970s, however, it became apparent that blood atonement was being restored. A number of assassinations have occurred since that time, and although there may be a question as to whether the murderers were more interested in avenging God’s enemies than saving souls, the victims were killed in such a way that their blood was “spilt on the ground.”

In August 1972 Joel LeBaron was murdered. The following year the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

ENSENADA, MEXICO (AP) — A man excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) has been sentenced to 12 years in prison for the killing of his brother. Ervil Morerel LeBaron . . . said his brother Joel, 49, was violating church doctrine in his teachings and was killed in August 1972 as a result. (Salt Lake Tribune, November 11, 1973)

Unfortunately, Ervil LeBaron’s “conviction was overturned by a higher court on an appeal” (Ibid., May 29, 1980), and the violence did not end. On December 28, 1974, the Salt Lake Tribune carried a story which contained the following:

ENSENADA, Mexico (AP) — A woman was reported slain Friday in a new outbreak of fighting between rivals in a dissident religious sect founded by polygamists from the United States.

Francisco Kraus Morales . . . said first reports indicate a house was set afire and occupants shot as they ran out . . . Kraus said as many as 10 other persons were reported wounded . . .

In 1972 the slaying of sect leader Joel LeBaron was blamed on unidentified men trying to take over his Church of the First Born of the Fullness of Time.

LeBaron, 47, founded the sect in Salt Lake City, in 1955, . . .

His brother, Ervil, was among a group of men who took issue with LeBaron’s leadership and philosophy.

The LeBaron family was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints several years before the sect was formed because of what Mormon church officials said was apostasy and polygamy.

On December 31, 1974, the Tribune reported:

A second man cut down by bullets fired in what authorities describe as a religious cult war died Monday. The assailants . . . wounded 13 persons who ran from the flames, police said.

The Tribune for July 13, 1978, reported the following concerning a murder committed in 1975:

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Vonda White was just one of a “squad of assassins” controlled by her husband, polygamous cult leader Ervil LeBaron, Deputy District Attorney Gary Rempel said Wednesday.

In his opening statement in the murder and conspiracy trial of Mr. White, Rempel said he would prove that she killed Dean Grover Vest, 40, National City, by order of LeBaron to achieve “blood atonement.”

Vest was planning on “defecting” from the Church of the Lamb of God at the time of the killing, Rempel said, and had already packed his belongings the afternoon of the shooting.

Vonda White was sentenced to “life in prison” for the blood atonement slaying of Mr. Vest. According to a story published in the Tribune, Vest “was going to give FBI agents weapons, including machine guns, that belonged to LeBaron’s cult . . .” (June 14, 1979). On July 20, 1978, the Tribune printed the following:

Don Sullivan, 24, who said he was a member of the church from 1972 until 1977, testified Wednesday that LeBaron told him of a message from God he received concerning the murder of Vest.

“He stated that he had had a revelation,” Sullivan said. “And that in the revelation it was revealed to him . . . that Vest was a defector—he would run to police and was about to reveal top secrets of the kingdom of God.”

Sullivan said LeBaron told him that God said “to have a woman, Vonda White, to blood atone him (Vest) without his knowledge. She would sit down and fix him a hot meal. While he was sitting at the table enjoying the dinner she would . . . get behind him and shoot him in the back of the head until he was dead.”

In April 1975 Robert Simons was assassinated in Utah. LeBaron and his group were later linked to the murder:

The complaint alleges that Marston, LeBaron and Chynoweth lured Simons to a desolate spot six miles east of Wellington, Carbon County, and killed him on or about April 23, 1975. The three are members of the Church of the Lamb of God. (Salt Lake Tribune, July 22, 1978)

The Deseret News, September 29, 1977, claimed that Ervil LeBaron “has been linked to more than a dozen deaths and disappearances in the West, . . .” The Tribune, however, claimed that “Investigators have said he may be responsible for between 20 and 29 slayings stemming from his leadership of the Church of the Lamb of God” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 25, 1978).
Ervil LeBaron’s group became very notorious because of a murder committed about four miles from our bookstore. On May 11, 1977, the Tribune reported:

MURRAY — Rulon C. Allred, Fundamentalist leader and naturopathic physician who once served a Utah State Prison term for his religious beliefs, was gunned down at 4:45 p.m. Tuesday in his office at 133 E. 4800 South. . . .

Dr. Allred was a practicing polygamist, according to David Briscoe, an Associated Press writer . . .

In the AP story, Dr. Allred said his family was among 35,000 Fundamentalist Mormons, most of whom were excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

According to an article printed in the Tribune on March 4, 1979, two women “went into Dr. Allred’s office with guns blazing, shooting the victim seven times and then attempted to administer a ‘coup de grace’ to his face but the shot missed.” The same article reported the following:

Isaac LeBaron, who has been hidden by lawmen since August 1977, said his father told cultists that he had a revelation that Dr. Allred should die and called the naturopath a “false prophet” during a meeting in Dallas, . . . his father warned that anyone who turned “traitor” to LeBaron’s Church of the Lamb of God would be executed.

This information appeared in the Tribune on March 13, 1977:

Donald Eugene Sullivan . . . who was allowed to plead guilty to attempted homicide in return for his testimony, said LeBaron also told his followers, as they planned the murder of Dr. Allred and Verlan LeBaron, “We would go to heaven for what we did” and become “God” whether they died or not.

Sullivan, 26, said LeBaron had a “revelation” in April 1977, that Dr. Allred would die May 3, 1977.

Although Ervil LeBaron was able to escape the penalty of the law for many years, on May 28, 1980, he “was found guilty . . . of first degree, capital homicide in the 1977 murder of Dr. Rulon C. Allred. . . .

“After the verdict was announced, one of LeBaron’s 14 wives . . . stood behind her husband as he was led from the courtroom by bailiffs” (Salt Lake Tribune, May 29, 1980).

On August 16, 1981, Mr. LeBaron was found dead in his cell at the Utah State Prison. An autopsy “was inconclusive in determining the cause of death,” and it was assumed by officials that he died of natural causes (Ibid., August 17, 1981).

It is interesting to note that Ervil LeBaron was also found guilty of planning to murder his brother Verlan. The assassination team was to blood atone him at the funeral of Dr. Allred. As it turned out, however, they were unable to carry out the plan because of the presence of a large number of police and members of the press. It is fortunate that this foolish scheme was aborted. Ben Bradlee, Jr., and Dale Van Atta feel that if the assassins had actually decided to carry out the plan, they “would have to go inside with guns drawn, . . . They probably would not be able to escape. They would have to spray their automatic rifles at random and scores would be killed” (Prophet of Blood: The Untold Story of Ervil LeBaron and the Lambs of God, New York, 1981, page 245). According to the same book, LeBaron did not seem to care how many people were killed at the funeral:

Ervil had one final comment for Don, Eddie and lack about the murder of Verlan LeBaron: “The Lord wants this guy more than anything . . . do whatever has to be done. Anybody gets in the way—men, women or children—it doesn’t make any difference.” (Ibid., pages 238-239)

After the failure of this mission, the LeBaron group tried to find Verlan in El Paso, Texas, so they could assassinate him. This plan also failed. Ervil had apparently been plotting for years to find a way to blood atone his brother. At one time he “asked a follower to rig up a fake police car, rent a home on the Baja highway and come screaming out of the garage with a siren when they saw Verlan go by. He’d think they were police and stop, giving them the perfect opportunity to shoot him” (Ibid., page 172). Strange as it may seem, Verlan died in “a Mexican car crash” at about the time that Ervil died in prison. The Lubbock Avalanche Journal, August 20, 1981, reported that the two deaths occurred on the “same day,” but Bradlee and Van Atta claim Verlan was “killed two days later . . . Police said Verlan’s car was struck head-on by another vehicle that had veered out of its lane.

“Verlan, . . . had recently told friends he still feared Ervil’s followers were stalking him. He only felt safe when on the move” (Prophet of Blood, page 350).

In any case, it seems obvious that Ervil LeBaron derived his blood atonement doctrine from the teachings of the early Mormon leaders. Bradlee and Van Atta inform us that Ervil served as a missionary for the Mormon Church “during the early 1940s when proselytizing in Mexico was particularly difficult” (Ibid., page 42). LeBaron, however, found himself leaning toward the Mormon fundamentalists and was finally excommunicated from the Church. He became deeply immersed in the teachings and plans of the early Mormon prophets, and began to believe that he was required to take vengeance on God’s enemies and blood atone people to save their souls. As we have indicated earlier, the slaying of Dean Vest was a blood atonement killing. Bradlee and Van Atta provide this important information in their book:

... Ervil motioned Don Sullivan over to a couch in the corner... the prophet leaned over and quietly said: “I’ve had a revelation.”... “the Lord told me that Dean Vest is going to defect from the church; that he is going to go to the police, if he hasn’t already, and reveal the secrets of the Kingdom of God. Those who betray the kingdom must be condemned to death, but the Lord has let it be known to me that to save his soul, Dean should be blood-atoned.”... “The Lord,” he said, “has named Vonda White to carry out the blood atonement.” (Prophet of Blood, page 195)

According to Lloyd Sullivan, Vonda White told him that “it had been she who had blood-atoned both Naomi Zarate and Dean Vest” (Ibid., page 201).

Like Brigham Young, Ervil LeBaron believed that in certain cases a man should blood atone his own wife. Lloyd Sullivan claimed that he had been having problems with his wife, Bonnie, and that LeBaron told him the Lord wanted him to take Bonnie to the “deep south and deep-six her there” (Ibid., page 273). Ervil also believed that children who failed to obey should be executed, and according to witnesses, he “ordered his own daughter, Rebecca killed” (Ibid., pages 281-282). On pages 229-231 of the same book, we find the following:

At about 8 A.M., the next April morning, Lloyd was in the Perth Street warehouse when he noticed Ervil’s pride and joy, a green-over-white LTD, was sagging measurably. “I wonder if Rebecca’s in the trunk.,” Ervil commented idly to Lloyd, who opened the trunk about four inches and was stunned to see Rebecca Chynoweth lying there, blood running from her nose. She was obviously dead.

Later, Ervil called and instructed Lloyd to tell nephew John Sullivan to get a shovel and bring it over to Thelma Chynoweth’s house immediately. Don Sullivan would recall that the talkative LeBaron was a passenger in a car Don was driving, when Ervil began a conversation with the blunt statement that he had “gotten rid of Rebecca.”

“What do you mean you got rid of Rebecca?” Don asked hesitantly.

“Well, we sent her a one-way ticket,” LeBaron replied. “She couldn’t get along and the Lord ordered to send her a one-way ticket.”

“What did you send her to?”

“Well, we know what a one-way ticket is,” Ervil chided his driver. But Sullivan was still incredulous at the implication. He later confessed “astonishment at the idea that he could kill his own daughter.” At the time, he pressed as if he were a prosecutor: “Well, what do you mean exactly by a one-way ticket?”

“The Lord ordered her to be blood-atoned, so he had her blood-atoned,” LeBaron replied still cryptically. Finally, as if taking pleasure in his oblique comments, Ervil said, matter-of-factly, “Rebecca is no longer with us.”

In the same book (page 230) we learn that “LeBaron also ordered the bloodstained mat in the trunk, where his pregnant daughter had been lying, be burned. ... He traded in the car for another green-over-white LTD shortly thereafter.”

Ervil LeBaron seems to have taken Brigham Young’s words very literally. The reader will remember that President Young said, “This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it” (Deseret News, February 18, 1857). Heber C. Kimball, who was the first counselor to Brigham Young commented:

... when it is necessary that blood should be shed, we should be as ready to do that as to eat an apple ... as brother Taylor says, you may dig your graves, and we will slay you, and you may crawl into them. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, pages 34-35)

Ervil LeBaron apparently felt that God wanted him to assassinate a large number of people. One of LeBaron’s followers reported that he told her “the reason he was getting boats to run a fishing business was so that the boats could be used to haul dead bodies out into the ocean, when they started to execute everyone who opposed his doctrine. ... they would also have some kind of a cement business going so they could make cement boxes to seal the bodies in ... he planned to execute lots of people—just everyone who opposed him in his thinking and did not uphold what he taught and did” (Prophet of Blood, pages 129-130).

Lafferty Murders

While the death of Ervil LeBaron may have ended the practice of blood atonement by his followers, by 1984 Don and Ron Lafferty arose to carry on the bloodshed. The Laffertys had been associating with a Mormon fundamentalist group known as “The School of the Prophets.” Robert Crossfield, the founder of the group, “claims The School of the Prophets dates back to the early days of the Mormon Church when it was mentioned in 1833 by church founder Joseph Smith Jr.” (Salt Lake Tribune, February 2, 1985). Mr. Crossfield maintains that the Laffertys were dismissed from the group “in April of 1984” (Ibid.). Prior to this, the Lafferty brothers were members of the Mormon Church: “Both Don and Ron . . . are excommunicated members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 9, 1985). Ron Lafferty was quoted in the August 11, 1984, issue of the Tribune as saying the following:

“I love the church with all my heart . . . but I love the church as it was set up by Joseph Smith. I believe Joseph Smith was a prophet, but I don’t believe that the leadership of the church today are prophets. . . .

“I’ve served in three bishoprics . . . I’ve been a faithful member, a faithful tithe payer to the Mormon Church for all my life, for over 40 years. I’d devoted my life to it and to my family and to those two things only.”

In a meeting with church officials, Lafferty said he told them the book by Mormon leader Ezra Taft Benson, “God, Family, Country,” supported everything he stood for. . . .

“I must say, however . . . that I do believe in plural marriage because I was taught plural marriage by the Mormons . . . because they believe in it. But I do not belong to any splinter group, nor have I ever practiced plural marriage,” he said.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints banned polygamy in 1890 and now excommunicates polygamists, but “they believe that it will be taught again someday, at least that’s what they’ve taught me,” he said.

On July 24, 1984, Ron and Dan Lafferty forced their way into their brother Allen’s home in American Fork, Utah, and brutally murdered his wife and her 15-month-old daughter. On August 17, 1984, the Tribune reported that, “The victims’ throats were slashed in what police speculated may have been a ritualistic murder.” American Fork Police Chief Randy Johnson claimed that “the victims were listed on a hand-written ‘religious revelation’ which told Ronald Lafferty to commit the murders” (Ibid., July 31, 1984). The revelation, which was found in the pocket of Ron Lafferty’s shirt, was later produced as evidence at the trial of Dan Lafferty. The Salt Lake Tribune printed the important portion of the revelation on January 8, 1985:

The document, which was read to the jury, states:

“Thus sayeth the Lord unto my servants the prophets. It is my will and commandment that ye remove the following individuals in order that my work might go forward, for they have truly become obstacles in my path and I will not allow my work to be stopped.

“First thy brother’s wife Brenda and her baby, then Chloe Low and then Richard Stowe. And it is my will that they be removed in rapid succession that an example be made of them in order that others might see the fate of those who fight against the true saints of God. . . .”

At his trial, Dan Lafferty claimed that the murders were a fulfillment of the revelation:

PROVO—The brutal killings of Brenda Lafferty and her infant daughter are not crimes, but are “the fulfillment of a revelation from God,” Daniel Charles Lafferty told the jury during his murder trial Tuesday. (Salt Lake Tribune, January 9, 1985)

In a pre-trial hearing, Ron Lafferty used the Book of Mormon story of Nephi cutting off Laban’s head to try to justify the murders (see Salt Lake Tribune, January 3, 1985). The reader may remember that God commanded Nephi to decapitate Laban so that he could obtain the scriptures written on the brass plates (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 4:10-18). At his trial, Dan Lafferty maintained that “the state has failed to prove a crime has been committed because I feel the evidence shows it could very well be the fulfillment of a revelation of God” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 9, 1985). His defence failed, however, and on January 11, 1985, the Tribune reported:

PROVO — Daniel Charles Lafferty, a self-professed prophet who claimed God ordered the deaths of his sister-in-law and her baby daughter, Thursday was found guilty as charged of two counts of capital homicide and four other felonies in connection with their brutal deaths and plans to kill two other people.

One essential element of the blood atonement doctrine is that the sinner’s blood be shed. The Mormon prophet Joseph Smith said he was “opposed to hanging, even if a man kill another, I will shoot him, or cut off his head, spill his blood on the ground, and let the smoke thereof ascend up to God; . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 296). The original source for this quotation appears to be Joseph Smith’s diary. In his diary, however, Smith talks of cutting the murderer’s throat rather than complete decapitation. The effect, of course, would be the same, as the blood would be spilled on the ground. As we have shown, Brigham Young emphasized that sinners must have their “blood spilt upon the ground, that the smoke thereof might ascend to heaven as an offering for their sins; . . . whereas, if such is not the case, they will stick to them and remain upon them in the spirit world” (Deseret News, 1856, page 235). In a sermon delivered in the Mormon Tabernacle,
Brigham Young declared: “To diverge a little, in regard to those who have persecuted this people . . . if any miserable scoundrels come here, cut their throats. (All the people said, Amen.)” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 311) In early Utah the throat of the person being blood atoned was often cut from ear to ear (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 547-550). One of the penal oaths which the early Mormons took in the temple ceremony referred to the throats of traitors being cut from ear to ear. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 474, we reproduced the oath before it was modified to tame down the bloody message:

“We, and each of us, covenant and promise that we will not reveal any of the secrets of this, the first token of the Aaronic priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Should we do so; we agree that our THROATS BE CUT FROM EAR TO EAR AND OUR TONGUES TORN OUT BY THEIR ROOTS.”

The bloody nature of this oath was verified by testimony given in the Reed Smoot Case (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 476-477). J. H. Wallis, Sr., for instance, testified that the oath contained this wording: “. . . ‘I agree that my throat be cut from ear to ear and my tongue torn out by its roots from my mouth.’” This oath was later changed to read as follows: “I, ____ (think of the new name) do covenant and promise that I will never reveal the First Token of the Aaronic Priesthood, together with its accompanying name, sign and penalty. Rather than do so I would suffer my life to be taken.” While the bloody wording has been removed, those who take this oath still refer to the “PENALTY” and draw their thumbs across their throats to demonstrate how their lives ran so; we agree that our THROATS BE CUT FROM EAR TO EAR AND OUR TONGUES TORN OUT BY THEIR ROOTS.”

Ron Lafferty seemed to feel that it was very important that their victims’ throats be cut. According to the Salt Lake Tribune, January 9, 1985, Charles Carnes testified:

“Mr. Watson, his voice cracked with emotion, said that then Dan Lafferty took the razor-edged knife “and walked down the hallway to that bedroom—with the baby crying “Mommy!“ “Mommy!”—and he cut her throat.

Fortunately, the Laffertys were unable to kill the other people mentioned in the revelation. Now that they are in custody, many people can sleep easier. Nevertheless, there is still cause for concern. There are other people who still believe the blood atonement doctrine who might be willing to actually practice it. The founder of the School of the Prophets claims that “he has received a half dozen death-threat letters. . . .” One was signed “God’s avenger” and another “The Avenger.” One letter said: “We’ve got your number. We are going to do to you what the Laffertys did to Brenda Lafferty” (Salt Lake Tribune, February 2, 1985).

According to the Tribune (January 11, 1985) there are “a number of people involved in similar renegade fundamentalist sects. Those people, as part of their beliefs, often belong to armed paramilitary and survivalist groups, the official said. Another deputy put it this way: ‘You’d be frightened if you knew who some of these people were.’ Apparently, some of these individuals attended Dan Lafferty’s trial.”
By Their Fruits

In Matthew 7:15-16 Jesus is reported to have said:

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

While Joseph Smith and Brigham Young claimed to be prophets who were restoring God’s true Church to earth, they brought forth some very questionable fruits. Joseph Smith gave a revelation commanding the practice of polygamy while the Mormons were in Nauvoo, Illinois. He also gave a revelation which sanctioned cursing and taking vengeance on his enemies. This planted the seeds for the blood atonement doctrine which Brigham Young openly taught in Utah. In addition, Brigham Young violated the command, “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Exodus 20:3) when he publicly proclaimed in 1852 that “our father Adam . . . is our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom WE have to do” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 50). The journal of L. John Nuttall shows that he was still teaching this doctrine just before his death (see photograph in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 178-D). On June 8, 1873, he even claimed that God Himself had revealed the Adam-God doctrine to him:

How much unbelief exists in the minds of the Latter-day Saints in regard to one particular doctrine which I revealed to them, and which God revealed to me—namely that Adam is our father and God . . . (Deseret Weekly News, June 18, 1873)

Fortunately, the present leaders of the Mormon Church have declared the Adam-God teaching to be false doctrine and have made it clear that neither polygamy nor blood atonement should be actually practiced at the present time. In the 1979 printing of his book, Mormon Doctrine, Apostle Bruce R. McConkie made these comments concerning the blood atonement doctrine:

President Joseph Fielding Smith has written: “Man may commit certain grievous sins . . . that will place him beyond the reach of the atoning blood of Christ . . . Joseph Smith taught that there were certain sins so grievous that man may commit, that they will place the transgressors beyond the power of the atonement of Christ. If these offenses are committed, then the blood of Christ will not cleanse them from their sins even though they repent. Therefore their only hope is to have their own blood shed to atone, as far as possible, in their behalf.” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 1, pages 133-138.)

This doctrine can only be practiced in its fulness in a day when the civil and ecclesiastical laws are administered in the same hands. It was, for instance, practiced in the days of Moses, but it was not and could not be practiced in this dispensation, except that persons who understand its provisions could and did use their influence to get a form of capital punishment written into the laws of various states of the union so that the blood of murderers could be shed. (Mormon Doctrine, page 93)

While many of the Mormon leaders have tried to hide the fact that Brigham Young taught the Adam-God doctrine, the Apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote a letter to Eugene England in which he frankly confessed that “President Young” taught the doctrine:

. . . I am a great admirer of Brigham Young and a great believer in his doctrinal presentations. . . . He was a mighty prophet. . . . Nonetheless, as Joseph Smith so pointedly taught, a prophet is not always a prophet, only when he is acting as such. Prophets are men and they make mistakes. Sometimes they err in doctrine . . . Sometimes a prophet gives personal views which are not endorsed and approved by the Lord.

Yes, President Young did teach that Adam was the father of our spirits, and all the related things that the cultists ascribe to him. This [i.e., Brigham Young’s teaching on Adam], however, is not true. He expressed views that are out of harmony with the gospel. (Letter by Apostle Bruce R. McConkie, dated February 19, 1981, pages 5 and 6; photographically reproduced in LDS Apostle Confesses Brigham Young Taught Adam-God Doctrine)

On page 7 of his letter, Apostle McConkie went so far as to say that if Mormons follow the “false portions” of Brigham Young’s doctrines, they are in danger of losing their souls:

I do not know all the providences of the Lord, but I do know that he permits false doctrine to be taught in and out of the Church . . . If we believe false doctrine, we will be condemned. If that belief is on basic and fundamental things, it will lead us astray and we will lose our souls . . . people who teach false doctrine in the fundamental and basic things will lose their souls. The nature and kind of being that God is, is one of these fundamentals. I repeat: Brigham Young erred in some of his statements on the nature and kind of being that God is and as to the position of Adam in the plan of salvation, but Brigham Young also taught the truth in these fields on other occasions. And I repeat, that in his instance, he was a great prophet and has gone on to eternal reward. What he did is not a pattern for any of us. If we choose to believe and teach the false portions of his doctrines, we are making an election that will damn us.

According to Apostle McConkie’s reasoning, Brigham Young could teach the Adam-God doctrine and go “on to eternal reward,” but those who accept this doctrine today stand in danger of losing their souls!

It is easy to understand the growth of the Mormon fundamentalist movement when we look at the way the Mormon Church handles its problems. The Adam-God doctrine was swept under the rug until the evidence became so strong that Apostle McConkie had to face it. While McConkie now concedes that Brigham Young taught false doctrine with regard to Adam being “our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom WE have to do,” he still clings to plural marriage and blood atonement as true doctrines. Although he maintains that these two doctrines should not be practiced at the present time, he does claim that “plural marriage . . . will commence again after the Second Coming of the Son of Man . . .” (Mormon Doctrine, page 578).

A Mormon who seriously studies the teachings of the first two presidents of the Church and tries to follow McConkie’s logic is faced with some very serious problems. Some of the doctrines taught by these early prophets are supposed to be true, and a faithful Mormon is required to practice them. Other doctrines are true but they cannot be practiced at the present time. In fact, a person who practices Joseph Smith’s teaching concerning polygamy will be excommunicated from the Church. As if this is not confusing enough, Apostle McConkie confesses that sometimes the Mormon prophets “err in doctrine” and that if we follow them into error, “we are making an election that will damn us.”

Many Latter-day Saints who have studied the early history of their Church have ended up in the fundamentalist camp because they cannot see why a “prophet” would restore doctrines which cannot be practiced today. They feel that since Joseph Smith claimed God commanded the practice of polygamy, it must be practiced even though it is against the law. Although we do not believe in the teachings of Joseph Smith or Brigham Young, we can understand why many believing Mormons turn into fundamentalists. After all, if the teaching of baptism became unpopular with the world, we would not expect Christians to give it up just so they could get along with the world.

In any case, the Mormon fundamentalists bring us face to face with the real teachings of the founders of Mormonism. Most Mormon fundamentalists believe in polygamy and the Adam-God Doctrine. Many of them believe in the theory of blood atonement, but they have no desire to actually practice it. Ervil LeBaron and the Laffertys, on the other hand, restored the violence and bloodshed of early Utah. If these men had lived in the 1850s, they could have worked hand in hand with Brigham Young as he put his blood atonement doctrine into practice. Orrin Porter Rockwell, Bill Hickman, John D. Lee and a number of other men caused a great deal of blood to flow in early Utah (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 444-450, 493-515). These murderers were protected by the Mormon Church for many years. Brigham Young once boasted: “We have the meanest devils on the earth in our midst, and we intend to keep them, for we have use for them; . . .” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 176) Ervil LeBaron and the Lafferty brothers would have been right at home with Brigham Young and his “destroying angels.”

At any rate, the brutal and senseless murders which have been committed since 1972 serve as reminders of the danger of trusting in the teachings of the early Mormon leaders. If we rely on Joseph Smith and Brigham Young we are liable to end up believing in blood atonement, plural marriage and the Adam-God doctrine. These doctrines should be recognized for what they are—i.e., the “evil fruit” which Jesus attributed to “false prophets.” If, on the other hand, we put our trust in Jesus, he will produce his “good fruit” within us:

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, Meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.

Tanners’ Riches

The following appeared in a letter which we received from Minnesota:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Tanner: . . . I have a Mormon friend that claims that you . . . are involved in anti-Mormon publishing because of the money involved. . . . Would you folks like to address the charge that you are only “in it for the money.”

The following is written in response to this letter. In the lawsuit that Andrew Ehat recently brought against us, Gordon A. Madsen (Ehat’s lawyer) demanded that we produce our “1982 and ’83 tax returns and financial computation of profit of the defendants regarding the publication Clayton’s Secret Writing Uncovered; . . .” These records effectively destroy the charge that we are getting rich from our publications. In the Deposition of Jerald Tanner, pages 106-107, the following appears:

A Well, I took my income tax form for 1982, and I grossed $64,374.49. And my total income after all the expenses is $9935.83. Now, that is all that I’ve gotten on sales. I received gifts besides that, but this is the sales, all the books I have done together.

Q 9,000 subtotal revenue from book sales?
A Yes. That also includes my royalty from Moody Press,....

Q And then you had a net profit of just under 10,000—
A Yes.

While some Mormon apologists have accused us of making vast sums of money through the sale of our publications, our tax records certainly do not support this malicious accusation. On our 1983 income tax return we reported an adjusted gross income of $22,285.15. Since we both worked full-time for Utah Lighthouse Ministry, this would amount to just over $11,000 each. Considering the amount of hours we have to work and the stress that comes from this type of ministry, we do not feel that we are taking advantage of the public.

Photographs of the first pages of our tax returns and some additional testimony concerning our finances are reproduced in our book, The Tanners On Trial, pages 138-141. One thing about our tax returns that seems to put to rest the idea that we have become rich off of our work is the fact that we show an “interest income” of only $24.37 in two years. It is obvious from this that we do not have any vast sums tucked away in savings accounts. The only real estate we own is our home.

While we could have charged twice as much for our publications, we have chosen to provide them at the lowest cost possible so that we can reach a larger number of Mormons. The expense of putting out just one issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, which we distribute free of charge, now amounts to quite a bit of money. If it were not for the donations given by our friends, we would have to either raise our prices or quit.

At the present time we find ourselves a little short of funds, and we would certainly appreciate any donations that our readers are able to make. Remember that UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY is a non-profit organization and all donations are tax deductible.

---

BOOKS & VIDEOS

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with Milwaukee television station. Price: $20.00

The Tanners on Trial, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Over a hundred large pages with many photographs of original court documents. Price: $5.95

The Money-Digging Letters. By Jerald Tanner. Has important information on the Salamander letter and other recent discoveries. Price: $1.00

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Michael Briggs. Price: $2.00

Tract Pack. An assortment of 12 tracts from other publishers. Price: $1.50

Where Does It Say That? By Bob Witte. Contains hundreds of photos from old Mormon publications. Price: $5.95
“SALAMANDERGATE”
MORMON CHURCH CAUGHT IN MAGIC COVER-UP

On April 6, 1830, the very day the Mormon Church was organized, the prophet Joseph Smith gave a revelation in which he was commanded to see that a history of the Church was kept:

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you; and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, . . . (Doctrine and Covenants 21:1)

Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery was appointed to keep this history. Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the tenth President of the Church, claimed that the Historian’s Office had preserved this important history:

Oliver Cowdery was the first one appointed to assist Joseph in transcribing and keeping a history of the Church; John Whitmer took his place, when Oliver Cowdery was given something else to do. We have on file in the Historian’s Office the records written in the hand writing of Oliver Cowdery, the first historian, or recorder of the Church. (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 201)

In 1961 we tried to get the Church to make Cowdery’s history and other documents available. We were informed by the Assistant Church Historian, however, that Joseph Fielding Smith was “not interested in the project you have in mind.” In our book, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry (published 22 years after our request was turned down), we reported that the Cowdery history could provide important information on the relationship of Mormonism and Magic:

We have been told that there is a very important document being suppressed which may relate to the involvement of the early Mormon leaders in magic. This is a history of the Church written by Oliver Cowdery. Cowdery, of course, was one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. According to Joseph Fielding Smith, he was “appointed to assist Joseph in . . . keeping a history of the Church . . .” John Whitmer was commanded “to keep the church record and history continually; for Oliver Cowdery I have appointed to another office” (Doctrine and Covenants 47:3). In John Whitmer’s history of the Church, he wrote that “Oliver Cowdery has written the commencement of the church history, commencing at the time of the finding of the plates, up to June 12, 1831” (John Whitmer’s History, page 4). . . .

We understand that a number of documents which were originally stored in the Church Historian’s Office were later moved to the vault of the First Presidency. This was undoubtedly done to keep them out of the hands of the public. The Mormon leaders were especially concerned about this matter when Dr. Leonard J. Arrington became Church Historian. In any case, we understand that the Cowdery history of the Church (not to be confused with the history that was published in the Messenger and Advocate) is now located in the First Presidency’s vault. At one time an inventory was made of what was contained in the vault. When the Cowdery history was opened, it was discovered that it contained magic characters! . . . Since Cowdery’s history is supposed to go back to the time Joseph Smith found the plates, it may contain many things that would be embarrassing to the Church. If any of our readers have any additional information on the contents of Cowdery’s history (especially with regard to the charge that it contains magic characters) we would appreciate hearing about it. (Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 43 and 46) [first edition]

“Taunting Salamander”

We heard nothing more concerning the Cowdery history until just recently. On May 15, 1985, we read this startling heading in the Salt Lake Tribune: “Researcher Says LDS History Disputes Golden Plates Story.” In the article we find the following information:

A little-known history written by an important early Mormon leader contains an account of Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin finding the gold plates, rather than the Mormon prophet himself, according to a research historian.

An LDS spokesman will neither confirm nor deny the contents of the history. . . .

Brent Metcalfe, who worked on authenticating an earlier Mormon letter, said officials of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have the history written by Oliver Cowdery, who at one time was second in importance only to Joseph Smith. . . .

Mr. Metcalfe said his source is a private eye-witness account of the Cowdery history. The document tells of Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin first finding the gold plates by means of a stone, according to Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. Metcalfe quoted the document as saying: “A taunting Salamander appears to Alvin and prevents him and his companions from digging up the gold plates.”

Early Mormon letters, recently released by LDS Church officials, link Joseph Smith to folk magic and to an “old spirit” that commanded Mr. Smith to return with his brother Alvin, who was dead at the time.

Traditional accounts of the founding or “restoring” of the LDS Church tell of heavenly visitations from angels, rather than salamanders. A cornerstone of Mormonism is the belief that Joseph Smith, not his older brother Alvin, found the gold plates. . . .

LDS spokesman Jerry Cahill said the LDS Historical Department does not have the Cowdery history. He said he would not ask members of the church’s ruling First Presidency if the history is locked up in a special presidency’s vault.

When asked about references to a Cowdery history in a book written by former President Smith, Mr. Cahill said he assumes the church has the history but it is no longer in the church’s Historical Department.

“I don’t intend to respond to every report or rumor of documents in the First Presidency’s vault,” said Mr. Cahill. “I have no idea if the history is there, nor do I intend to ask. I can’t have my life ordered about by rumors. Where does it end? . . .”

Former LDS President Joseph Fielding Smith wrote: “The earliest records of the Church are in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery. . . .”

President Smith said the records “are invaluable.” . . . Mr. Cahill said he has no way of “confirming or denying rumors,” and he will “not pursue the matter” of the Cowdery history.

The document which Brent Metcalfe cites is apparently a summary of the Cowdery history by an individual who had access to it. In an interview on KUER Radio, May 17, 1985, Mr. Metcalfe gave further details:

Brent Metcalfe . . . I do know that Joseph Fielding Smith on at least two occasions claimed that the Church did in fact have possession of the document and so I don’t think that there’s too much question there. Perhaps a possible reconstruction of its genealogy after that time is that Joseph Fielding Smith may have placed it in his own private vault which we know he kept, and then at the time of his death it may have been assimilated into the First Presidency’s vault. However, in the course of my research and trying to get more historical insight regarding the Harris letter, I did come across a document which claimed first-hand knowledge of the content of the Cowdery history relating to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon . . . and apparently . . . the information in the Cowdery history does go back prior to 1827, and it does discuss, it mentions, the Salamander three times and it appears to Joseph Smith much like we have in the Martin Harris letter. But perhaps what I found after spending a year full-time with the Harris letter, what I found to be intriguing was that it apparently indicates that the salamander first appears to Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin and that it was, in fact, Alvin who first discovers the gold plates and not Joseph Smith. And that at the time of the death of Alvin in November of 1823, Joseph Smith then takes over as the seer who then proceeds to try to break the enchantment to get the plates, and then his story begins in 1824. This, by the way, . . . may in fact solve a great perplexing situation for historians who have tried to reconstruct this event because there has in fact been quite a lacuna in what some have supposed to be 1826. Where we suppose that there’s a year missing, but apparently we have all the information. The event that we have missing is the first year which appears to be Alvin’s experience and not Joseph’s.
In any case, the cover-up situation the Mormon Church finds itself in is reminiscent of the Watergate scandal. The reader will remember that it was discovered that President Nixon had made tape-recordings of his conversations. He claimed that these tapes would support his side of the story, but he refused to release them. As it turned out, the tapes turned out to be the smoking gun which caused his downfall. Nixon’s tapes might be compared to the Cowdery history. As far as the Church is concerned, this history should provide the best evidence concerning its origin, having been written closest to when the events occurred, yet the Mormon leaders stubbornly refuse to release it. This refusal can only lead people to conclude that Brent Metcalfe has told the truth. If the history supports the traditional version of Joseph Smith’s story, why not release it and silence him?

The “Salamandergate” cover-up even has its own “Deep Throat”—that mysterious and unidentified person who had access to Nixon’s secrets and leaked them to the press. Only a very limited number of people could have had access to the material in the vault of the First Presidency. It is reported that Brent Metcalfe will not name his source for fear that he will get the individual into trouble with the Church.

Alvin the Prophet?

The Salt Lake Tribune for May 15, 1985, reported that Brent Metcalfe “said Alvin Smith was a great influence on the prophet Joseph Smith, and perhaps even played a greater role of prophet, in light of the history written by Mr. Cowdery.”

There does seem to be some evidence that Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin was originally supposed to be the prophet. J. H. Kennedy wrote the following in 1888:

... long before the removal to New York she [Lucy Smith] announced the advent of a prophet in her family, and on the death of Alvah [Alvin], the first born, the commission that had been intended for him was laid upon Joseph. (Early Days of Mormonism, page 12)

This footnote is found on the bottom of the same page: Littell’s Living Age, vol. 30, page 429:

... Mrs. Smith was of strong, uncultivated intellect; ... The incipient hints, the first givings out that a prophet was to spring from her humble household came from her; ... Their son Alvah was originally intended or designated, by fireside consultations and solemn and mysterious outdoor hints, as the forthcoming prophet. The mother and the father said he was the chosen one; but Alvah, however spiritual he may have been, had a carnal appetite; ate too many green turnips, sickened and died. Thus the world lost a prophet, and Mormonism a leader. ... The mantle of the prophet, ... fell upon their next eldest son, Joseph Smith, Jr.
less than two months that Alvin could have known about the plates. In her history, Joseph Smith’s mother gives the impression that Alvin was more interested in the gold plates than anyone in the family:

Alvin manifested, if such could be the case, greater zeal and anxiety in regard to the Record that had been shown to Joseph, than any of the rest of the family; in consequence of which we could not bear to hear anything said upon the subject. Whenever Joseph spoke of the Record, it would immediately bring Alvin to our minds, with all his zeal, and with all his kindness; and, when we looked to his place. . . . we all with one accord wept over our irretrievable loss. . . . (Joseph Smith’s History By His Mother, pages 89-90)

Now that we have the story about Alvin being the one who discovered the gold plates, we can understand why mention of the plates “would immediately bring Alvin” to their minds. Before his death, Alvin instructed Joseph to “do everything that lies in your power to obtain the Record” (Ibid., page 88). The reader will remember that according to the report in the Salt Lake Tribune, Cowdery’s history is supposed to tell about “Alvin first finding the gold plates by means of a stone.” Peter Ingersoll’s affidavit confirms that Alvin did use a stone to find treasures:

The general employment of the [Smith] family, was digging for money. . . . When we arrived near the place at which he thought there was money, he [Joseph Smith, Sen.] cut a small witch hazel bush and gave me direction how to hold it. He then went off some rods, and told me to say to the rod, “work to the money,” which I did, in an audible voice. . . . Now, says he, if you only knew the value there is back of my house, . . . there, exclaimed he, is one chest of gold and another of silver. He then put the stone which I had given him, into his hat, and stooping forward, he bowed and made sundry maneuvers, quite similar to those of a stool pigeon. At length he took down his hat, and being very much exhausted, said in a faint voice, “If you knew what I had seen, you would believe.” . . . His son Alvin then went through the same performance, which was equally disgusting. (Mormonism Unvailed, 1834, pages 232-233)

According to Willard Chase, he employed Alvin to help dig the well in which Joseph Smith’s seer stone was discovered (Ibid., pages 240-241).

The claim that Cowdery’s history mentions Alvin as the one who originally discovered the gold plates also seems to clarify an account written by one of Joseph Smith’s best friends, Joseph Knight. Knight was a faithful Mormon whose wagon was used by Joseph Smith to obtain the gold plates. Knight’s account mentions that Joseph Smith was denied the plates when he was unable to bring Alvin to the Hill Cumorah:

Joseph says, “when can I have it?” The answer was the 22nd Day of September next if you Bring the right person with you. Joseph says, “who is the right person?” The answer was “your oldest Brother.”

But before September Came his oldest Brother Died. Then he was disapinted and did not [k]now what to do. But when the 22nd Day of September Came he went to the place and the personage appeard and told him he Could not have it now. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1976, page 31)

The Mormon historian Dean Jessee informs us that this “manuscript is incomplete, missing at least one beginning page” (Ibid., page 30). Since the manuscript now begins with Joseph Smith coming to the hill to get the plates, there is no way of knowing whether it originally mentioned Alvin finding the plates with his stone. It would, of course, be impossible to determine whether the first part of the manuscript was deliberately suppressed or just fell off. In any case, Willard Chase also claimed that the “spirit” told Joseph he must bring his “oldest brother” to obtain the plates and that when he showed up the next year without Alvin, the “spirit” would not let him have the plates.

The Salamander letter, which we will discuss in more detail as we proceed, adds a very spooky element to the story. This letter, which was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris in 1830, claims that when Joseph Smith looked in his stone, “the spirit says bring your brother Alvin Joseph says he is dead shall I bring what remains . . .” That Joseph Smith would offer to bring his own brother’s body to the hill is shocking, to say the least. In Mormonism, Magic and Masonry we point out that graves and human remains are very important to some of those who use seer stones and practice magic. If Alvin originally found the plates, Joseph Smith may have felt that his corpse would be highly prized by the spirit. It is reported that when Joseph Smith was digging for money in Pennsylvania, he claimed at one time that the “enchantment” was so strong “that it was necessary that one of the company should die” before it could be broken. One of the company was in fact murdered (not by anyone in the money-digging group) and this was considered “a Providential occurrence.” (For more details on this matter see Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 34-36.) Willard Chase claimed that after Alvin’s death, his father said it “was an accidental providence.”

However this may be, it is interesting to note that there was a rumor that Alvin’s body had been disinterred. On September 29, 1824, just one week after Joseph Smith was supposed to have been visited by the angel at the Hill
Cumorah, his father printed the following in the Wayne Sentinel, the local newspaper:

> WHEREAS reports have been industriously put in circulation that my son Alvin had been removed from the place of his internment and dissected, ... for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of such reports, I, with some of my neighbors, this morning [September 25] repaired to the grave, and removing the earth, found the body which had not been disturbed. (Wayne Sentinel, September 29, 1824)

Since Brent Metcalfe relates that the Cowdery history tells that Alvin had companions who were with him when he tried to dig up the gold plates, it is possible that Mr. Smith was worried that one of these money-digging companions had taken his son’s remains to the Hill Cumorah so that he could gain favor with the spirit and obtain the treasure.

Even without access to the Cowdery history it seems clear that there were magic elements in the early story of how Joseph Smith obtained the gold plates. That some material has been suppressed is evident from the minutes of a meeting held October 21, 1831:

> Brother Hyrum Smith said that he thought best that the information of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon be related by Joseph himself to the Elders present, that all might know for themselves.

> Brother Joseph Smith, Jun., said that it was not intended to tell the world all the particulars of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon; and also said that it was not expedient for him to relate these things. . . . (History of the Church, vol. 1, page 220)

Salamander Letter

We now give the full text of the letter which Martin Harris, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, wrote to W. W. Phelps on October 23, 1830:

> Palmyra Oct 23d 1830

Dear Sir

Your letter of yesterday is received & I hasten to answer as fully as I can—Joseph Smith Jr first come to my notice in the year 1824  in the summer of that year I contracted with his father to build a fence on my property  in the course of that work I aproach Joseph & ask how it is in a half day you put up what requires your father & 2 brothers a full day working together  he says I have not been with out assistance but can not say more only you better find out  the next day I take the older Smith by the arm & he says Joseph can see any thing he wishes by looking at a stone  Joseph often sees Spirits here with great kettles of coin money  it was Spirits who brought up rock because Joseph made no attempt on their money  I latter dream I converse with spirits which let me count their money when I awake I have in my hand a dollar coin which I take for a sign  Joseph describes what I seen in every particular says he the spirits are grieved so I through back the dollar in the fall of the year 1827 I hear Joseph found a gold bible I take Joseph aside & he says it is true I found it 4 years ago with my stone but only just got it because of the enchantment the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream & says dig up the gold but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole & struck me 3 times & held the treasure & would not let me have it because I lay it down to cover over the hole when the spirit says do not lay it down Joseph says when can I have it the spirit says one year from to day if you obey me  look to the stone  after a few days he looks  the spirit says bring your brother Alvin Joseph says he is dead  shall I bring what remains but the spirit is gone  Joseph goes to get the gold bible but the spirit says you did not bring your brother you can not have it  look to the stone  Joseph looks but can not see who to bring  the spirit says I tricked you again  look to the stone  Joseph looks & sees his wife on the 22nd day of Sept 1827 they get the gold bible—I give Joseph $50 to move him down to Pa  Joseph says when you visit me I will give you a sign  he gives me some hiroglyphics  I take them to Utica Albany & New York in the last place Dr. Mitchell gives me a introduction to Professor Anthon  says he they are short hand Egyptian the same what was used in ancient times  bring me the old book & I will translate  says he it is made of precious gold & is sealed from view  says he I can not read a sealed book—Joseph found some giant silver specticles with the plates he puts them in a old hat & in the darkness reads the words & in this way it is all translated & written down—about the middle of June 1829 Joseph takes me together with Oliver Cowdrey & David Whitmer to have a view of the plates our names are appended to the book of Mormon which I had printed with my own money—space and time both prevent me from writing more at present  if there is any thing further you wish to inquire I shall attend to it

Yours Respectfully

Martin Harris

W W Phelps Esq
Dear Sir,

Your letter of yesterday is received & I hasten to answer as fully as I can. Joseph Smith is first come to my notice in the year 1834 in the summer of that year I contracted with his father to build a fence on my property in the town of that word. I engaged Joseph & asked him if he is in a hurry to get up what because your father & I both must go & work together he says I have not been with your father but can not say more exactly you letter find me out the next day & take the old bible by the arm & he says Joseph can do any thing he wishes in looking at a stone Joseph often was visited there with great hitherto & I can't say who brought me such because Joseph made no attempt at them before. Joseph had no contact with spirits which let me count their money while I was in my hand a dollar coin which take for a day Joseph described what I seen in every particular days in the spirits are envious do I through back the dollar. In the fall of the year 1834 I have Joseph found a gold bible I take Joseph aside & he says it is true I found it 4 years ago with my stone but only just yet it because of the enchantment the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream 3 days dig up the gold but when I take it up the next evening the spirit transformed himself gone in white calabash in the bottom of the hole & I turned one 3 times & held the treasure I would not let me have it because I lay it down to come over the hole when the spirit says he not lay it down Joseph says when can I have it the spirit says one year soon to day if you obey one look to the stone after a few days then look the present days being your birthday tonight days he is dead shall I bring what remains but the spirit is gone. Joseph goes to get the gold bible but the first days you did not bring your brother you can not have it look to the stone Joseph looks but cannot see who is bring the present days I tracked you again look to the stone Joseph looks & dey his wife on the 21st day of Sept 1829 this got the gold bible & gave Joseph $50 to move here.
down to the Joseph days when you visit me I will give you a sign he gives the same hieroglyphics I take them to Washington & New York in the last place I a blacked eyes are a introduction to Professor Wright says he they are about here in Egypt the same what was used in ancient times bring me the old book & I will translate days & it is made of precious gold & is sealed from from view days & I cannot read a sealed book—Joseph found some giant Caleb explicitly with the plates he put them in a old box & in the shadings near the woods & in this way it is all translated & written down—about the middle of June 1839 Joseph takes me together with Peter Cowdery & David Whitmer to have a view of the plates our names are appended to the books of Mormon which is had printed with my own money—since & time both prevent me from writing more at present—If there is any thing further you wish to inquire I shall attend to it

W.W. Phelps Esq

Lemurian N.Y.
In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March 1984, over a year before the Salamander letter was officially released, we quoted from its contents and told of its relationship to magic. On the first page of that newsletter we stated:

For a month or two there have been rumors circulating that an extremely important letter written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris has been discovered. Although there has been an attempt to keep the matter quiet until the document has been published, we have been able to piece together the story and to learn of the remarkable contents of this letter. . . . If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be misled.

In the Messenger for January 1985, we commented: “Because of some problems in the text of the Salamander letter we have been exceptionally cautious about endorsing it as authentic.” One of the editors of this publication (Jerald Tanner) expressed serious doubts concerning the letter’s authenticity and prepared a list of parallels between it and books that were published after the date which appeared on the letter. It was noted that these parallels could be viewed in two totally different ways: One, that the letter is a forgery which was plagiarized from printed sources. Two, that the letter is authentic and that the parallels only tend to confirm that a common story was known by Martin Harris and other writers. The parallels, then, could become evidence for the letter’s authenticity. In any case, the most disturbing parallel was to Howe’s toad into a “white salamander.”

In the Messenger for March 1984, over a year before the Salamander letter was officially released, we quoted from its contents and told of its relationship to magic. On the first page of that newsletter we stated:

For a month or two there have been rumors circulating that an extremely important letter written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris has been discovered. Although there has been an attempt to keep the matter quiet until the document has been published, we have been able to piece together the story and to learn of the remarkable contents of this letter. . . . If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be misled.

In the Messenger for January 1985, we commented: “Because of some problems in the text of the Salamander letter we have been exceptionally cautious about endorsing it as authentic.” One of the editors of this publication (Jerald Tanner) expressed serious doubts concerning the letter’s authenticity and prepared a list of parallels between it and books that were published after the date which appeared on the letter. It was noted that these parallels could be viewed in two totally different ways: One, that the letter is a forgery which was plagiarized from printed sources. Two, that the letter is authentic and that the parallels only tend to confirm that a common story was known by Martin Harris and other writers. The parallels, then, could become evidence for the letter’s authenticity. In any case, the most disturbing parallel was to Howe’s toad into a “white salamander.”

In the Salamander letter, Joseph Smith used the “stone” to contact the “old spirit” “salamander.”

Webster’s New Twentieth Century Dictionary of the English Language (Unabridged) gives this information about salamanders: “1. a mythical reptile resembling the lizard, supposed to be able to endure or live in fire; an elemental spirit in Paracelsus’ theory of elementals.” In his book, The History of Magic, page 77, Kurt Seligmann reported:

Agrippa, basing his opinion on Aristotle, Dioscorides and Pliny the Elder, said that fire shelters salamanders and crickets. . . . From Pliny we learn that similar beliefs concerning the marvelous virtues of salamanders existed in Egypt and Babylon. . . . Thus did a superstitious belief perpetuate itself for about two thousand years.

Joseph Ennemoser said that “Paracelsus deserves one of the most eminent places in the history of magic.” Paracelsus, who was born in 1493, wrote a book entitled, A Book of Nymphs, Sylphs, Pygmies, and Salamanders, and on the Other Spirits. Henry E. Sigerist wrote the following in an introduction to this book:

Such strange creatures are the mysterious beings—Paracelsus usually calls them ding, things—that inhabit the four elements, the nymphs, sylphs, pygmies and salamanders and, related to them, the sirens, giants and dwarfs. . . . water is chaos to the nymphs, earth to the pygmies, fire to the salamanders, while the sylphs have the same chaos as man. They are at home in their chaos and, therefore, nymphs do not drown in water, pygmies are not choked in earth and salamanders do not burn in fire. This seems incredible but God is almighty. Why should he not be able to create such beings? . . . God created them for a special purpose—and here Paracelsus is writing as a theologian and scientist. God created these elemental beings as makers and guardians of the treasures of the earth. There is an infinite wealth of minerals in the earth. They are made in the depths of mountains under the influence of fire, and this is where the salamanders come in. Once the mineral ores are made they are guarded, those in the earth by the pygmies, those on the surface by the sylphs, and those at the bottom of the waters by the nymphs. (Four Treatises of Theophrastus Von Hohenheim, Called Paracelsus, Baltimore, 1941, pages 216-220)

Since the gold plates of the Book of Mormon were considered to be a very valuable treasure, we can see why a believer in magic might choose to have a salamander guarding them.

One concern we had with regard to the Salamander letter was that we could not find its genealogy. We wrote that “one of the most important tests of the letter’s authenticity is its history since it was written. If Mr. Hofmann will tell historians where he obtained the letter, then it may be possible to trace it back to its original source. If, for instance, it had been in the Phelps family for many years, this would add a great deal to a case for its authenticity.” We did suggest that a man by the name of Lyn Jacobs may have been involved in the matter. This was confirmed in the Church Section of the Deseret News, April 28, 1985:

The letter was part of a stamp collection in New England until discovered by Lyn Jacobs, an LDS collector. The letter was purchased in late 1983 by Jacobs and Mark Hofmann, another LDS collector.

On May 10, we called Lyn Jacobs to see if he would provide specific information. Unfortunately, Mr. Jacobs said he would not give us any information with regard to the discovery. Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs are both dealers in rare Mormon documents and it is felt by some people that if they reveal their sources it may tend to hurt their business. While we sympathize with their desire not to reveal the source of their discoveries, we feel that it is very important that historians know the source of these finds. Some kind of compromise needs to be worked out.

Although we can not get their side of the story, we have been told that the letter was considered somewhat defective by the collector who had it (possibly because of an unclear postmark) and was sold to Jacobs for $20 or less.

One problem with allowing the suppression of important information concerning the source of discoveries is that it could encourage forgers to enter the Mormon document business. Since there is already a great deal of money involved in these transactions (the Lucy Smith letter was reported to have been sold for $30,000), there would be a temptation to create such documents and palm them off on unsuspecting collectors by merely saying: “I obtained these from a collector in ______.” If we allow this type of thing to go on, it will certainly encourage the forgery of Mormon documents. Since these documents have an important affect on the religious beliefs of many people, it is crucial that their pedigree be revealed to historians.

Secret Dealings

On October 24, 1984, we reported that before the Salamander letter was sold to Steven Christensen, there was an attempt to sell it “to the Mormon Church for a large amount of money.” The Salt Lake Tribune for September 2, 1984, confirmed that the letter was originally offered to the Church: “Jerry Cahill, church spokesman, said that someone had offered to sell the letter to the church before it was sold to its present owner earlier this year.”

In the past Mr. Hofmann acted under the theory that the Church would buy up embarrassing documents to suppress them. This is very clear from his own account of how he handled the discovery of the Joseph Smith III Blessing. In a paper read at the Mormon History Association, Mark Hofmann stated that he did not want to give the impression that he was trying to blackmail the Church, but he acknowledged that if the Church had wanted him to, he would have promised to never tell anyone about the discovery:

On February 16th 1981 I first showed a xerox of the Blessing to the LDS Archivist, Don Schmidt. . . . I was also willing to promise not to breathe a word of its existence to anyone . . . (Not wanting to come across like I was trying to blackmail the Church) I fully expected to relinquish ownership immediately. (Sunstone Review, August 1982, page 1)

The whole transaction seems to have been rather bizarre. Hofmann told Schmidt that he thought the Reorganized LDS Church “might possibly trade a Book of Commandments for it,” yet he was “willing to trade the document [to the Mormon Church] for about a quarter of the value of a Book of Commandments” (Ibid.). This would mean that Hofmann would take approximately $5,000 when he could have obtained $20,000. In the September 1982 issue of Sunstone Review, page 17, Hofmann says, “I’m in this for the money.” If this is the case, we find it a little hard to understand why he would be willing to sacrifice $15,000 just so the Mormon Church could hide the blessing document. Mr. Hofmann, who has served as a Mormon missionary, may be concerned about protecting the Church’s image, or it could be that he feels that he receives some other compensation which makes up for the loss. We do know, for instance, that he has had special access to the First Presidency’s vault. (As we pointed out earlier, only the most trusted individuals can see documents from that vault.) On September 28, 1982, the Seventh East Press reported that since the discovery of the Anthon transcript, Hofmann has “enjoyed privileged access to otherwise restricted Church archive material, including the First Presidency’s vault. One reason for this privileged access, Hofmann thinks, is the fact that ‘I am not a historian. I’m not going to write an expose of Mormonism.’”

In our research with regard to the Joseph Smith III Blessing, we discovered that Mr. Hofmann was apparently helping the Church cover-up some important documents relating to President Brigham Young. When we heard that Hofmann would not reveal the exact source from which he obtained the blessing document, we questioned him about the matter. He indicated that he had given the Mormon Church an affidavit which stated where he had obtained it. He could not reveal that source to the public, however, because the member of the Bullock family from whom he had purchased the document also had important papers concerning Brigham Young’s finances that would be embarrassing to the Church. While Mr. Hofmann did not indicate whether he had sold these papers to the Church, in the interview published in the Sanstone Review, August 1982, page 1, he said that he “had previously made several trades” with the Church Archivist before obtaining the blessing.

As we will show later, in 1983 Mr. Hofmann sold an important letter written by Joseph Smith on divination and money-digging to the Church, and it was suppressed for two years before scholars forced the Church to make it available. This whole business of secret dealings with the Church is very disturbing. While dealers have a right to operate in this way, from a historian’s point of view it is deplorable. We can not see any real reason for all the secrecy that surrounds these transactions. It would seem to us that it would be far better if Hofmann and other collectors would make a public announcement of each find, release photographs and then sell it to the highest bidder.

God is Missing

The reader who takes time to carefully examine the Salamander letter, will find that there is no mention of God, angels or religion. As we have pointed out in our earlier writings, the evidence shows that Martin Harris could hardly open his mouth without mentioning these subjects. This presents a problem which we do not really have an answer for. That he would write a letter of over 600 words, detailing the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, without mentioning religion seems remarkable. While Professor Anthon claimed that Harris suppressed the fact that the plates were translated “by the gift of God” when he talked to him (Mormonism Unvailed, page 271), there seems to be a reasonable explanation for this—he would not want religious bias to enter into Anthon’s judgment on the Book of Mormon characters. Anthon wrote that when Harris visited a second time, he spoke of the “curse of God.”

It is hard to understand why in the letter to Phelps, Martin Harris would suppress all the divine elements and emphasize the aspects of the story relating to money-digging and magic. In fact, he seems to deliberately link the “old spirit” who reveals the Book of Mormon plates to the spirits connected with buried treasures. He says that, “Joseph often sees Spirits here with great kettles of coin money . . .” The letter goes on to say that “Joseph made no attempt on their money,” and therefore the spirits gave him supernatural help. The letter even says that the spirits let Harris “count their money.” When it comes to the part of the story where Joseph Smith is told to get the plates for the Book of Mormon, it quotes Smith as saying, “the old spirit . . . says dig up the gold but when I take it up . . .” The absence of the word plates after “gold” seems to emphasize the fact that the Book of Mormon was a valuable treasure which was controlled by the “old spirit.” The letter shows an obsession with money and treasures which is reminiscent of the wife’s statement that he was very materialistic: “. . . I told him he had better leave the company of the Smiths, as their religion was false; to which he replied, if you would let me alone, I could make money by it” (Mormonism Unvailed, page 256). There can be little doubt that Martin Harris was a money-digger himself. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 38, we show that after Joseph Smith found the gold plates, Harris admitted that he went out to the hill to dig for some more boxes or gold. He claimed, in fact, that he found a box but that it slipped back into the hill.
Mark Hofmann has suggested that W. W. Phelps, the recipient of the Salamander letter, may have been a money-digger and that this would account for Harris emphasizing this aspect of the story and suppressing the divine elements. So far we have not found any evidence to this effect, but in a letter dated January 15, 1831, he did seem to be aware of the fact that the Mormons had been actively involved in digging in Joseph Smith’s neighborhood: “The places where they dug for the plates, in Manchester, are to be seen” (Mormonism Unveiled, page 273). While we do not know for certain what Phelps’s position was on magic and money-digging, he did reprint an article in his anti-Masonic newspaper just a month before the Salamander letter was supposed to have been written which ridiculed the practice of trying to win the “faculty of Abrac”:

A very ancient Masonic charm, or the way of winning the Faculty of Abrac,—is meant the chimerical virtues ascribed to the magical term—ABRACADABRA, written or repeated in a particular manner, and is thought to be efficacious in curing agues, and preventing Fits and other masonic diseases. (Ontario Phoenix, August 25, 1830)

The evidence seems to show that the Smith family was involved to some extent in trying to win the “faculty of Abrac” (see Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 20-21).

Church Says Authentic

Steven Christensen, the man who purchased the Salamander letter after the Church decided not to buy it, has to be commended for his work with regard to the letter. He not only enlisted some of the top Mormon scholars to help him determine its authenticity, but he also sent it to a noted document examiner, Kenneth Rendell, Incorporated, for a careful examination. We understand that these tests cost about $6,000. The Salt Lake Tribune reported:

Tests included where the paper had been milled. Ink, sealing wax and the stamp were also studied, along with seemingly insignificant determinations such as whether the letter had been folded after it had been written and pressure points in drawing individual letters. (April 28, 1985)

On April 12, 1985, Steven Christensen donated the Harris letter to the Church. As the meetings of the Mormon History Association approached, it became apparent that someone was going to print it. We have been told, in fact, that a reporter from Time magazine actually had a photograph of the letter. The Mormon leaders apparently felt that it would be best if the Church itself published it with comments which would make it appear in the most favorable light possible. They must have reasoned that even though the contents of the letter are absolutely devastating, they could not keep their members from reading it, and therefore it would be best to put it forth as if they were not ashamed of it. It was published in the Church Section of the Deseret News on April 28, 1985. The title on one of the articles about the letter reads: “1830 Harris letter authenticated.” In another article we find the following:

A letter purportedly written by Martin Harris to W. W. Phelps was recently presented to the Church by Steven F. Christensen. . . . With the letter was presented a copy of a report which points out factors which indicate that the letter was written about the time of the date it bears and on materials which were likely manufactured about that time. The examiner concludes his statement by saying “that there is no indication that this letter is a forgery.”

In another article published in the Church Section, these comments appear:

A letter written early in Church history by Martin Harris and sent to William W. Phelps is almost certainly authentic and has been donated to the Church

Dean C. Jessee, research historian and handwriting expert at the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History at BYU, and others have studied and tested the letter extensively for almost a year. . . . In the letter, Harris confirms the 1823 date of the Angel Moroni’s visit to Joseph Smith. He also reconfirms in his own writing the experience with Prof. Charles Anthon and the “sealed book” prophecy. . . .

According to Jessee, handwriting analysis “shows that the writer of the 1830 letter is the same person who wrote the authentic Harris signatures. On the basis of the paper, ink and handwriting tests, the Harris letter appears authentic.

“However confusing the letter appears by present standards, neither Martin Harris in writing the letter, nor William Phelps in receiving it, perceived its message as out of the ordinary. That readers in our time do probably tells more about our present mind-set than anything else.” . . . Dr. Ronald W. Walker, another historian with the Smith Institute, said that in order to appeal to Phelps, Harris used a traditional sort of “religious folk language” that was extremely prevalent at the time. . . .

“My hunch is that Harris was talking to someone whom he knew had an understanding of the folk customs of the region,” said Walker, “a person to whom this way of describing that experience would have appealed.” . . .
“Members should realize this letter was written very early in the church, long before the restoration of the gospel was complete. At that point, it was logical that the religious folklore of the time was prevalent, and had not been replaced with the language of the gospel.”

This language involves two aspects that can be understood only in the context of the times, said Walker.

First, Harris makes reference to . . . “an old spirit that transforms himself from a white salamander.” In this context, said Walker, a salamander was a supernatural contact with spirits, and could mean a spirit or intermediary. A salamander was commonly believed to be a spirit that lived in fire. The “old spirit” referred to by Harris was surely synonymous in his mind with the Angel Moroni.

Second, continued Walker, this folk religion was thoroughly tied up in treasure hunting. “Seeking buried treasures for some people, particularly those coming out of Vermont, was extremely prevalent,” he said . . . “Josiah Stowell, who once hired Joseph to dig for treasure, was a prosperous man and a deacon in the Presbyterian Church, an outstanding citizen. There was no dichotomy in his mind between religion and treasure hunting in those days. Men like Stowell and Harris saw them as a package. Here are men with a reputation for veracity, hard work and good judgment.” (Deseret News, Church Section, April 28, 1985)

While the Church Section of the Deseret News tried to soften the blow for the faithful, Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the First Presidency, gave the whole thing away when he stated: “No one, of course, can be certain that Martin Harris wrote the document. However, at this point we accept the judgment of the examiner that there is no indication of forgery. This does not preclude the possibility that it may have been forged at a time when the Church had many enemies” (Ibid.).

The astute reader will perceive that President Hinckley is saying that the letter really looks like something written by an enemy of the Church rather than by Martin Harris, one of the three special witnesses to the Book of Mormon.

During the first week in May we went back to Kansas City to attend the meetings of the Mormon History Association. We felt it was important to keep abreast of recent developments with regard to the Salamander letter. In his presentation, Dean Jessee gave some information concerning the handwriting examination. He said that there were three letters which could have been actually penned by Martin Harris—i.e., the 1830 Salamander letter, an 1846 letter and a letter written in 1855. A comparison with examples of Harris’s signature from other documents revealed that two of the three letters were not from the pen of Harris. According to Jessee, the only letter that checked out was the Salamander letter. There was one document bearing four words in addition to Harris’s signature. Jessee felt that this document was written by Harris. It was the longest document used to check the Salamander letter. Jessee reported concerning a number of important tests that had been conducted and said that he felt the tests proved the letter authentic. Comments were made on the document by three Mormon scholars and Richard Howard of the Reorganized LDS Church. Ronald Walker gave an excellent presentation of the research he had done with the assistance of Brent Metcalfe. Their findings certainly cast the whole Book of Mormon story in the context of magic and money-digging practice of the time.

All four of the speakers at the Mormon History Association freely admitted Joseph Smith’s connection to magic and money-digging, and as far as we could tell, those who attended the meetings seemed to agree with their research. Mormon historians, who have fought against these charges for many years, seemed to just cave in under the weight of the evidence.

Forgery Charged

As we indicated earlier, when the Salamander letter first came to our attention we publicly expressed doubts concerning its authenticity. Rhett James, a Mormon scholar who has done extensive research on the life of Martin Harris, did not seem to share our reservations about the letter. In an article published in the Church Section of the Mormon newspaper, Deseret News, September 9, 1984, we find the following:

The so-called “Martin Harris letter” is no repudiation of Joseph Smith, but rather probably is a further witness of the Prophet’s own account of the discovery of the golden plates.

This is the feeling of historian Rhett S. James of Logan, . . . James spent about 2 1/2 years researching the life of Harris . . .

“Martin Harris was enamored of classic Greek culture and its symbolism,” said James. . . . James said it was “highly likely” that Harris would use the kind of language and symbolism purported to be contained in the Harris letter.

“Martin Harris . . . was writing to Phelps, who himself was an author and a poet, and so he likely would have written in a poetic style.”

James . . . said it is the salamander imagery that intrigues him.
As time went on Rhett James began to develop serious doubts about the letter. These doubts did not subside with the announcement by the Church that the letter had been authenticated. On May 19, 1985, the Deseret News reported the following:

Rhett James, a Mormon bishop . . . said Thursday he has completed a computer analysis that indicates the letter by Martin Harris may have been forged . . .

James said there are only eight known Martin Harris letters. The others have averaged 30 words per sentence, compared to 13 words per sentence in the 1830 letter. The computer also analyzed the types of words used.

“I’ve found differences in the comparisons too great to ignore,” James said.

We had pointed out that there were discrepancies in style and length of sentences between the 1830 letter and other letters attributed to Martin Harris in The Money-Digging Letters (updated portion, October 24, 1984). Although we still feel that this type of approach has some merit, it has one serious flaw—i.e., according to Dean Jessee, none of the other letters are actually written in Martin Harris’s own hand. We do not know how much influence the scribes and editors may have had on the style of the letters. If we could find just one letter which we could prove was written in Harris’s own hand, it would throw important light on the subject.

In any case, the Salt Lake Tribune, May 20, 1985, reported that Mr. James claimed that he “had been assured that church officials were looking anew at the Harris letter in light of his doubts. “I was assured the document will be very carefully examined during the next few weeks,” James said.

The same article stated that “Cache Valley historian A. J. Simmonds, in charge of special collections at the Utah State University Library, says he agrees with James’ suspicions about the letter.” A. J. Simmond’s opposition to the Salamander letter comes as somewhat of a surprise. Simmonds was the one who assisted Mark Hofmann with one of his most important finds—the Anthon transcript. Writing in BYU Studies, Spring 1980, page 327, Danel W. Bachman stated:

To avoid the risk of damaging the document further, Mr. Hofmann took it the next day to the office of A. J. Simmonds, curator of the Utah State University Special Collections and Archives, who helped him separate the glued edges.

The Salt Lake Tribune for May 20, 1985, quoted Rhett James as saying: “I don’t know whether or not I think the “Salamander Letter” is a modern forgery or a forgery from the 1830s, but I do think it is a forgery . . .” A. J. Simmonds seems to feel that if the Salamander letter is a forgery, it comes from recent times.

As we have indicated earlier, President Gordon B. Hinckley has said that the Church accepts the opinion of the document examiners that there is no evidence of forgery, but he has also hinted that there is a possibility that the Salamander letter could have been forged “when the Church had many enemies.” We feel that the idea of a forgery in Martin Harris’s lifetime is untenable. It seems highly unlikely that a forger would create such a document while the sender and recipient were both alive and could deny its authenticity. (It is interesting to note also that Harris and Phelps lived into the 1870s.) Even if this were the case, a person would have to explain why the letter was never used. It would seem like a lot of effort for nothing. The postmark alone would be a real problem to forge. To maintain that the letter is a forgery, one is almost forced to the conclusion that it would have to be a recent forgery. Brent Metcalfe’s revelation that the Cowdery history mentions a salamander three different times throws important light on this question. Most scholars will probably use the Cowdery history as evidence that the letter is genuine. Those who still suspect forgery will almost be forced to the conclusion that it is a modern forgery. Since knowledge of the salamander’s role in early Mormon history was suppressed in the First Presidency’s vault until just recently, no one would have known to create a document mentioning that fact until after the leak occurred.

In the light of the new evidence, President Hinckley’s suggestion that the Salamander letter could have been written when the Church had many “enemies” seems to be very unlikely. Furthermore, it seems improbable that any open enemy of the Church could have had access to the information which Mr. Metcalfe mentioned. Those who had access to the vault would probably be very tight-lipped about the matter. They would only want to share this information with Mormons who could be trusted not to leak it to the enemy. It would seem, therefore, that it is unlikely that anyone but a Mormon could have had the knowledge necessary to commit such a forgery.

The tests which have been made on the Salamander letter, indicate that no ordinary person could have forged it. It would have to be the work of a very skilled forger. Only a person familiar with old documents, chemistry and the process of document authentication could prepare a letter that would have a chance of passing through these tests.

Editors Divided

Unfortunately, the editors of the Messenger find themselves divided over how to deal with the Salamander letter. We feel that it is best, therefore, to give our readers both viewpoints.
Sandra Tanner: As Jerald has pointed out, there are impressive parallels between the Martin Harris letter and different printed versions. These can be viewed either as proofs of plagiarism or authenticity. I, too, am bothered by the lack of information on the history of the letter and the lack of specific information on the tests given the letter. However, the information I have been able to gather on the testing seems impressive. I was told that the letter was sent to a paper specialist who removed a small piece for testing and found it was consistent with the type of paper used in 1830. In addition, it was determined the ink was put on the paper before the letter was folded. This establishes that someone didn’t use an old blank piece of paper that had been used as a cover for another letter.

The ink was also tested and is consistent with that used in 1830. The ink was also sufficiently faded for the age of the letter and was applied before the paper aged. The ink used for the postmark and postage amount was faded red, as it should be. Also, the amount of the postage was correct. The wax seal on the letter also seems authentic.

The flow of the ink was examined to determine the speed of writing. The letter appears to have been written at an even speed and normal rate. Presumably a forger would need to write slower with additional pauses in order to imitate someone else’s handwriting.

In looking at the actual writing on the letter it seems to be consistent with a few samples we have of Martin Harris’s handwriting. He had a distinct way of making his capital “P,” capital “M,” capital “H” and his lower case “r.” Another item of interest is the way the double “s” is made in the words “assistance” and “Professor.” In 1830 many people still used this old form which is foreign to us today.

When I look at all the different items used in authenticating the letter I wonder if it would be possible for a forger to have faked all these points without detection? I don’t think so. Those Mormon scholars who have read the test results all seem satisfied that the letter is indeed authentic.

Jerald Tanner: At the outset I will state that I originally approached the Salamander letter with a strong bias towards its authenticity. It seemed to completely substantiate the thesis I had worked for years to prove—i.e., Joseph Smith was deeply involved in magic and money-digging and that the Book of Mormon was a product of this involvement. No one could possibly have had a greater desire to prove the Salamander letter authentic, and I doubt that many people have invested the time and effort that I have in sifting the evidence. This letter has been constantly on my mind for well over a year. My desire has been to come up with a definite answer concerning its reliability. At the present time, however, I still find myself with some serious doubts. Notwithstanding the extensive tests that the letter has been submitted to and the proclamation by some of the Church’s leading scholars that it is authentic, I can not seem to gain an absolute “testimony” to the validity of the Salamander letter. While I do believe in miracles, I cannot help wondering if this is not just too good to be true. The Salamander letter fits perfectly into my case against the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, but I have to ask myself this question: if the Mormons brought out a letter which was supposed to have been written in 1830 which said that Joseph Smith saw both The Father and the Son in 1820, and this letter had strong parallels to sources printed at a later date and also contained elements which seemed foreign to the purported author, would I keep silent about the matter? The answer, of course, is no. I would proclaim these findings to the world.

When I originally took a stand against the Salamander letter, some people thought I was just trying to force the Mormon researchers to come out with their research. They felt that as soon as the letter was published I would jump on the band wagon. The truth of the matter, however, is that my statements were made out of a strong conviction, and the release of the letter has done nothing to calm the apprehension I have about the letter’s authenticity. At the present time I feel almost alone. Even the Mormon historians accept the letter, and I am under a great deal of pressure to get into step with the scholars.

As I have indicated in other issues of the Messenger, my doubts about the Harris letter come mainly from the text of the letter and from parallels to other printed documents. While most people seem to feel that physical tests are more important, everyone would concede that if the letter mentioned Joseph Smith watching television or using a flash light, it could not possibly be valid. In that case the evidence from the text would outweigh anything obtained from physical testing. The reader may remember the “Mormon Will” which was supposed to have been written by Howard Hughes. It was found in the Mormon Church Office Building in Salt Lake City. This will left a great deal of money to the Mormon Church and a Mormon named Melvin Dummar. It was later discovered that Dummar himself planted the will in the Church Office Building. Henry Silver, a noted handwriting expert, seemed willing to stake his reputation on the will’s authenticity. A number of experts joined Silver in proclaiming the will genuine, and the Mormon Church itself funded the side which was trying to prove its authenticity. We took a strong stand against the will. Within a month of the discovery, we published a booklet entitled Howard Hughes and the Mormon Will. In this booklet we pointed out parallels between things that had been published just prior to the will’s discovery and also pointed out discrepancies in the text. As it turned out, Melvin Dummar finally confessed that he lied about the will and it was declared a forgery.

It is also interesting to note that in 1972 Clifford Irving claimed to have some letters written by Howard Hughes. Wallace Turner reported that Irving’s “publishers took the handwriting samples to Osborn Associates, a New York firm that specialized in examining questioned documents. The Irving material was compared with known samples of Mr. Hughes’s writing, and the experts said it had all been written by the same person.

“This was not so, as Mr. Irving explained before going to jail to serve a term for fraud. He had written the letters . . .” (New York Times, May 3, 1976). Wallace Turner observed that “Handwriting identification is far from an expert science. When it is used in court, expert witnesses frequently take opposite sides on such matters” (Ibid.).

While I must admit that I see nothing in the handwriting that would show that the Harris letter is a fraud, I am certainly not qualified to pass judgment upon it. One thing that might cause me some concern is that it appears to have only one word written over the line and no words or letters crossed out. A Joseph Smith letter of this size would probably have about twenty mistakes of this nature. Unfortunately, there is no other material in Harris’s own hand to compare it with.

As far as the form of the double “s” is concerned, I am convinced that anyone who works with documents of this age would be familiar with this. In any case, a person could learn this from our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 33:

> When the letter “s” was repeated in documents of Joseph Smith’s time, as in the word, “glass,” the two letters appeared as a “p.”

The fact that the ink was put on the paper before the paper was folded does not impress me very much. If someone had tried to use a cover sheet from an old letter, the name and address would have been written in a different hand and it would therefore have been unusable.

As far as the examination of the paper itself, Bill Kruger, who performed the test on the Salamander letter, told me that it is possible for a very clever forger to manufacture paper at the present time which will pass through his tests without detection. Dr. Antonio Kantu, who is with the FBI and is considered to be one of the world’s greatest experts on the detection of forgery by testing ink, told me that he could examine the ink to determine if its chemical properties were like those of ink used at this early period, but he would not be able to say for certain that this was actually ink in use in 1830 or if it was added to the paper at that date. He indicated that by merely applying heat to a document, a forger would give the appearance of great age. He knew of no ink test that could be made on the Salamander letter that would be absolutely conclusive.

Before making any final decision with regard to the letter’s authenticity, I would like to do further research with regard to a number of items. For instance, I would like to find out if there is any evidence that someone owned the letter before Lyn Jacobs. I would also like to obtain a copy of the report from the document examiner, and the four-word inscription attributed to Martin Harris by Dean Jessee. So far these important items have not been made available to the public. Furthermore, I have been informed that Brent Metcalfe has a photocopy of a longer inscription attributed to Martin Harris which appears in a Book of Mormon. This inscription was not used in testing the document. Since it might be the longest example of Harris’s handwriting, I feel that it would be important to compare it to the Salamander letter.

Another thing that I feel should be made available is a purported forgery of the 116 pages which were lost from the Book of Mormon manuscript. It was Mark Hofmann himself who told me of this forgery. I feel that it could have a very important relationship to the Salamander letter. The reader will remember that although the Salamander letter removed the divine elements from the story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, it has some of the basic facts of the traditional version. Intertwoven with these facts, however, we find important elements of money-digging. At any rate, Mr. Hofmann claimed that he was aware of a forgery of the 116 pages which were lost from the Book of Mormon (the Book of Lehi) and that these pages contain money-digging interspersed with portions that are similar to the story found in the printed Book of Mormon. I told Mr. Hofmann that this forgery should be made available, but he has never given me the name of the person who is supposed to have it (see The Money-Digging Letters, page 21).

If this manuscript really exists, I can see no reason why Mr. Hofmann has suppressed its location. It could throw important light on the origin of the Salamander letter. If, on the other hand, the manuscript does not exist, it does show that the idea of money-digging being inserted into an important Mormon document was in somebody’s mind prior to the discovery of the Salamander letter.
Although I probably did not discuss the matter with Mr. Hofmann until after the discovery of the Salamander letter, he was telling others about it prior to that time, and we reported the story in the Messenger in November 1983. The Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 18, Mr. Hofmann claimed that he had “spent thousands of dollars in the pursuit” of the “lost 116 manuscript pages.” In any case, I cannot help thinking that there might be some connection between the story of the forged Book of Lehi pages and the Salamander letter.

The item I would like to see most of all, however, is the Cowdery history. The release of this document could answer many questions about the Salamander letter. Since we wrote the first part of this newsletter, Church spokesman Jerry Cahill has admitted that the Church does have the Cowdery history. In an Associated Press story, Michael White reported:

Brent Metcalfe, who researches old Mormon documents for a Utah publishing firm, says the multivolume history by Oliver Cowdery states that it was not Joseph Smith, but his brother, Alvin who first saw the golden plates by using a “seer stone.”...

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said that Cowdery’s history had been in the church’s possession since around 1900 and probably is locked away in the private vault of the governing First Presidency.

But Cahill said he did not know whether it contained the information described by Metcalfe, and he would not try to find out.

“Frankly, I don’t intend to raise the question. Obviously, it’s in the possession of the church, but what shelf it is on I don’t know,” he said.

He would not speculate on whether the First Presidency would make the history available for study. (The Oregonian, May 21, 1985)

It is reported that the Cowdery history may have been dictated by Joseph Smith himself. If this is the case, it could be far more significant than the Salamander letter. In fact, it could be the most devastating document that has ever been discovered. Since it undoubtedly has a good pedigree which would go back to early times, I doubt that I would have any question regarding its authenticity. If any question were to arise, it could be checked with numerous samples from Oliver Cowdery’s pen.

At any rate, I wish to withhold judgment on the Salamander letter until I have done further research concerning it. My mind is still open to any new information. If anyone has any information (whether pro or con) on the subject, I would be very happy to receive it. I would also appreciate any information regarding the discovery or concerning Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs.

Anyone who wishes to learn more about my position should read The Money-Digging Letters (Price $1.00), and issues 53 and 55 of the Messenger (free upon request).

In conclusion I should say that although I have serious doubts about the Salamander letter, I still stand behind the thesis we presented in Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. I feel that there is very good evidence linking Joseph Smith to magic.

Suppressed Letter

On May 10, 1985, the Mormon Church’s newspaper, Deseret News, announced what was claimed to be “The Earliest known surviving document written by Joseph Smith Jr. . . .” The article went on to state: “The letter, believed by church leaders to be authentic, was written June 18, 1825, five years before the church was organized.”

The text of the letter was also printed. It reads as follows:

Dear Sir

My father has shown me your letter informing him and me of your Success in locating the mine as you Suppose but we are of the oppinion that since you cannot asertain any particulars you Should not dig more untill you first discover if any valluables remain you know the treasure must be guarded by some clever spirit and if such is discovered so also is the treasure so do this take a hasel stick one yard long being new Cut and cleave it Just in the middle and lay it asunder on the mine so that both inner parts of the stick may look one right against the other one inch distant and if there is treasure after a while you shall see them draw and Join together again of themselves let me know how it is Since you were here I have almost decided to accept your offer and if you can make it convenient to come this way I shall be ready to accompany you if nothing happens more than I know of I am very respectfully

Joseph Smith Jr.

(Deseret News, May 10, 1985)

Although there is certainly nothing spiritual about this letter and it obviously relates to magic, it bears a remarkable resemblance to Ezekiel 37:16-17, a prophesy Mormons use to prove the Book of Mormon:

... take thee one stick, and write upon it, for Judah, . . . then take another stick, and write upon it, for Joseph, . . . And join them one to another into one stick; . . .
Cannondale, June 18th, 1825

Dear Sir,

My father has shown me your letter informing him and one of your surgeons in leading the mine as you state, but we are of the opinion that since you cannot ascertain any particular you should not dig more until you first discover if any valuable remains you know the treasure must be guarded by some clever spirit and if such is discovered do also in the treasure so do this take a lead stick one yard long being new but well cleaved at one end and lay it just in the middle and lay it across on the mine so that both inner parts of the stick may look one right against the other one inch distant and if there is treasure after a while you shall see them move and join together again of themselves let me know how it is since you were here I have almost decided to accept your offer and if you can make it convenient to come this way I shall be ready to accompany you if nothing happens more than I know if I am very respectfully,

Joseph Smith Jr.
According to Linda King Newell and Valeen Tippetts Avery, Joseph Smith’s widow, Emma, claimed that at the time he wrote the Book of Mormon, he “could neither write nor dictate a coherent and well-worded letter; let alone dictating a book like the Book of Mormon . . .” (Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith, 1984, page 26). The 1825 letter hardly seems to support this conclusion. Actually, the spelling in the letter is much better than we would have expected, and for some reason appears to be even better than in some letters written in the 1830s. This is surprising because the testimony Joseph Smith gave in the 1826 trial shows that he received some of his schooling after the date which appears on the letter (June 18, 1825). According to our research, Joseph Smith made only 2.8 spelling mistakes per hundred words in the 1825 letter. From Dean Jessee’s book, The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, we learn that the first extant letter in the handwriting of Joseph Smith after the 1825 letter is dated March 3, 1831. Using Dean Jesse’s typescript of the letter (pages 230-232), we find that Smith made 7.1 mistakes per hundred words. The next letter is dated June 6, 1832, and contains 4.9 mistakes per hundred words (see pages 238-239). The third letter is dated October 13, 1832. This letter has 6.2 mistakes per hundred words (see pages 252-254).

There is one other document which might be used to make a spelling comparison with the 1825 letter. This is the recently discovered Anthon Transcript. On the back side is some writing which Dean Jessee feels was written by Joseph Smith (see The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, pages 223-226). Although it is undated, Jessee believes it was probably written in February 1828—just about three years after the 1825 letter was supposed to have been written. This document, which has only 58 words, has 7 spelling errors (12.2 errors per hundred words). This is strikingly different from the 2.8 errors per hundred words in the 1825 letter.

One other thing about the 1825 letter which is somewhat different from Joseph Smith’s other writings is that it does not seem to have any words or parts of words crossed out and no words or parts of words are inserted above the lines. In the three later letters and the Anthon Transcript we find numerous examples of this type of thing. There are, in fact, an average of four words or portions of words added or deleted per hundred words in the four documents. The 1825 letter, therefore, should have about seven of these mistakes to be consistent with the other documents. That the 1825 letter has no examples of this nature could be a cause for concern, and we feel that it should be carefully checked by experts who are qualified to make meaningful judgments with regard to spelling, grammar and style.

Although Mark Hofmann, the dealer who discovered the letter, has not revealed where it came from, the handwriting appears to be the same as that found in the other Joseph Smith letters and writings. Of course we are not handwriting experts and cannot say for certain that it is the same hand. The Los Angeles Times for May 11, 1985, quoted Charles Hamilton, “a prominent New York City autograph collector,” as saying: “... the second I saw this one I recognized it as the Mormon prophet’s signature ...” The Church Section of the Deseret News for May 12, 1985, contained the following:

The 1825 Joseph Smith letter is almost certainly authentic, said Dean C. Jessee, associate professor of Church history and research historian at the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History at BYU. He is a leading expert on early historical documents relating to the Church.

“The document appears definitely to be in the hand of Joseph Smith,” he said. “As such, it is the earliest document we have that is written and signed by the prophet.”

Although it would not necessarily prove the letter authentic, its contents seem to fit well into the context of what we know Joseph Smith was doing at the time. For instance, the letter is addressed to Josiah Stowell. Joseph Smith acknowledged in his history that “In the month of October, 1825, I hired with an old gentleman by the name of Josiah Stowel, ... He had heard something of a silver mine having been opened by the Spaniards ... After I went to live with him, he took me, with the rest of the hands, to dig for the silver mine, ... Hence arose the very prevalent story of my having been a money-digger” (History of the Church, vol. 1, page 17).

Joseph Smith’s use of divination led him into trouble with the law, and while he was working for Mr. Stowell he was brought to trial. In the trial, which was held March 20, 1826, Joseph Smith testified that “he had a certain stone which he occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and had looked for Mr. Stowell several times, and had informed him where he could find these treasures, and Mr. Stowell had been engaged in digging for them.” (See Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 32, for the complete text of the trial.)

As to Joseph Smith’s use of “a hasel stick” to find treasures, C. M. Stafford said that Smith “claimed he could tell where money was buried, with a witch hazel consisting of a forked stick of hazel. He held it one fork in each hand and claimed the upper end was attracted by the money” (Naked Truths About Mormonism, April 1888, page 1).

In the Vermont Historical Gazetteer, 1877, vol. 3, pages 810-819, we find an article on the use of the hazel stick. This article says that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery “commenced their education with the use of the hazel-rod or forked stick, in searching for hidden treasures—though afterwards they used what they called enchanted stones.”

In a revelation given by Joseph Smith to Oliver Cowdery in 1829, we read that Cowdery had the “gift of working with the rod: behold it has told you things: behold there is no other power save God, that can cause this rod of nature, to work in your hands, . . .” (Book of Commandments, Chapter 7:3). When this revelation was reprinted in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 8:6-7, the words “the gift of working with the rod” were changed to “the gift of Aaron.” The other mention of the “rod of nature” was also replaced with the words, “this gift of Aaron.” The Mormon writer D. Michael Quinn presents some evidence that this same rod was brought to Salt Lake City and that Brigham Young used it to point out where the temple should be built (Brigham Young University Studies, Fall 1978, page 82).

The Church’s newspaper tried to defuse the explosive contents of the letter by saying:

The use of a device similar to the “dowsing rod” that is still used by some rural societies to find water is not unusual in context of the early 1800s, the First Presidency said. Folk magic was a common phenomenon, and Smith was reflecting the beliefs of the society in which he lived. (Deseret News, May 10, 1985)

Although the publication of the letter in the Mormon Church’s own newspaper would lead one to believe that the Church has been open and straightforward about the whole matter, all the evidence demonstrates just the opposite. Church leaders, in fact, did their best to suppress the letter and were caught in a cover-up situation. In his interview on KUER Radio, Brent Metcalfe related that he first learned of the existence of the 1825 letter in the spring of 1983. Charles Hamilton claimed that Mark Hofmann told him he sold the letter to the Church two years ago:

Charles Hamilton, . . . said Thursday by telephone that he was shown the Joseph Smith letter two years ago by manuscript collector Mark Hofmann of Salt Lake City, . . . “I said it was probably of great historical interest and was worth about $15,000. Hofmann told me he sold it within three weeks to the church for $25,000.” (Los Angeles Times, May 11, 1985)

Although the Church later claimed that it had possession of the letter, in a letter to the editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, May 6, 1985, the Mormon scholar George D. Smith said that it was his understanding that “Gordon B. Hinckley, second counsellor to President Spencer W. Kimball, purchased the letter in 1983 in his own name from collector Mark Hofmann (after authentication by chemical and handwriting analysis).”

If President Hinckley bought the document in his own name, this must have been an attempt to give the Church deniability—i.e., the letter could be safely kept out of the hands of the public, and yet the Church could officially deny that it had it. In any case, last year we became aware of the letter’s existence and discussed the matter with one of the top historians in the Mormon Church. He lamented that the Church had allowed itself to become involved in a cover-up situation with regard to the 1825 letter. In the September 1984 issue of the Messenger we published a typed copy of the text of this letter and commented that we would “withhold judgment concerning its authenticity until we obtain more information concerning it.” As far as we know, the first Mormon scholar to print anything about the letter was Marvin S. Hill of the History Department at Brigham Young University. Professor Hill did not quote the actual text of the letter nor mention where it was located, but he revealed the following:

The 1825 letter to Stowell makes it clear that Joseph, Jr., not his father, is the guiding genius in the money digging business. It is Joseph who answers Stowell’s inquiry. It is he who has the special knowledge and powers, and it is he who makes the decision to join Stowell and lead the search. . . . Joseph, Jr. alone, as far as the record shows, had the talent with the stone that was essential. (Journal of Mormon History, vol. 11, 1984, page 132)

On April 29, 1985, Salt Lake Tribune reporter Dawn Tracy wrote:

A letter reportedly written by Mormon church founder Joseph Smith describing money-digging pursuits and treasure guarded by a clever spirit seems to have disappeared from view.

If authentic, the letter could link Joseph Smith directly—by his own admission—to folk magic. . . .
Dr. Hill said he is convinced the letter is authentic or he wouldn’t have cited the document in the article. He said he doesn’t know where the letter is located now.

“It’s a sad business that the letter is buried,” said Dr. Hill. “With copies of the letter circulating, I can’t see much benefit.”

Research historian Brent Metcalfe said he knows from “very reliable, first-hand sources” the letter exists, and the Mormon Church has possession of it.

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill denied the claim.

“The church doesn’t have the letter,” said Mr. Cahill. “It’s not in the church archives or the First Presidency’s vault.” . . . He said none of the confidential documents is the 1825 letter.

Someone may be playing word games, said George Smith, president of Signature Books, a Mormon publishing house focusing on scholarly publications.

“The church clearly has possession of the letter,” he said. “If the exact question isn’t asked, someone can wink and say the church doesn’t have it.”

No, said Mr. Cahill, the church does not have possession of the letter. (Salt Lake Tribune, April 29, 1985)

George Smith was very disturbed about the Church denying that it had possession of the letter. He was so disturbed, in fact, that he read the letter at a meeting of the Mormon History Association. A few days later (May 6) the Salt Lake Tribune published his letter to the editor. In this letter he revealed that “some scholars have reported seeing it at the church offices, . . . A number of scholars have photocopies of the letter, . . .” When it became apparent to the Church leaders that the letter was going to be published without their consent, they decided to back down and admit the existence of the letter. Jerry Cahill, Director of Public Affairs for the Church, admitted in a letter to the editor that his earlier statement was incorrect:

... staff writer Dawn Tracy correctly quoted my statement to her that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints doesn’t have a letter purportedly written in 1825 by Joseph Smith to Josiah Stowell (or Stoal) either in the church archives or in the First Presidency’s vault.

My statement, however, was in error, for which I apologize and for which I alone am responsible. Some months ago I was asked the same question by another inquirer and made a thorough check before responding. Dawn Tracy called me twice as she prepared her article and I responded without checking again.

When my published statement came to his attention, President Gordon B. Hinckley of the First Presidency of the church, informed me of my error. The purported letter was indeed acquired by the church. For the present it is stored in the First Presidency’s archives and perhaps some day may be the subject of the kind of critical study recent given to the purported letter of Martin Harris to W. W. Phelps. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 7, 1985)

It is very obvious from all this that the Mormon leaders have been caught in a very embarrassing cover-up with regard to the letter and that they only published it because their own scholars were preparing to release it to the press. Since the Church or President Hinckley secretly bought this letter in 1983 and never mentioned its existence, it is obvious that Church leaders intended to suppress it. Time magazine for May 20, 1985, reported that “The church offered no explanation for withholding news of the earliest extant document written by Smith, . . .” John Dart commented:

As it became clear during this week that photocopies of the letter would soon be circulated by sources outside the official church, Cahill announced that the church would discuss the contents and release a photocopy of the letter. (Los Angeles Times, May 11, 1985)

It seems obvious that if the letter had supported the Church in any way, it would have been published immediately in the Deseret News with a large headline announcing its discovery. When Joseph Smith’s mother’s 1829 letter was discovered, Mormon officials proclaimed it to be “the earliest known dated document” relating to the Church, and it was hailed as a vindication of Joseph Smith’s work. Since the letter to Stowell was supposed to have been written by the Prophet himself some four years earlier, we would expect it to receive even greater publicity. Instead, the Mormon leaders buried it and engaged in a cover-up.

“Incredible Crisis”

The Bible strongly condemns the practice of magic. In the book of Deuteronomy we read:

When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

There shall not be found among you any one . . . that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,

Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee. (Deuteronomy 18:9-12)
The Mormon leaders have sided with the Bible in declaring that divination and all forms of magic are extremely evil. They have also done their best to cover up Joseph Smith's involvement with magic. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote:

Use of power gained from the assistance or control of evil spirits is called sorcery. Frequently this power is used in divination, necromancy, and witchcraft. . . . Sorcery has been a sinful evil in all ages. . . . sorcerers will be destroyed. . . . they shall be cast into that hell which is prepared for them. . . . and finally, having paid the utmost farthing for their crimes, they shall be debased with a telestial inheritance in eternity. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 747)

Now that a great deal of evidence has come to light linking Joseph Smith to magic, Mormon apologists are trying to play down the serious implication of Smith's participation in the occult. It is claimed, in fact, that Smith's divination with a hazel stick “is not unusual in context of the early 1800s, the First Presidency said. Folk magic was a common phenomenon . . .” (Deseret News, May 10, 1985).

While it may be true that there were many people involved in magic and money-digging in Joseph Smith's time (just as there are many people involved in the occult today), its prevalence should not be exaggerated. The reader will remember that E. D. Howe's book was published in 1834. In this book, Howe linked Joseph Smith to money-digging and the occult. The fact that the book caused Joseph Smith so much trouble shows that these practices were frowned upon by a large portion of the people in his day. Joseph Smith's 1826 trial seems to demonstrate the same thing. In any case, even if everyone else was practicing magic, this would not give a license for a man who professed to be a prophet of God to become involved in it. The Los Angeles Times, May 11, 1985, printed an important observation by Peggy Fletcher:

On the other hand, Peggy Fletcher, publisher-editor of the independent Mormon-oriented magazine Sunstone, questioned the approach by Walker and Howard: “Why does it not make me feel better to hear that everybody was into magic then? I think historians are naive if they think members are going to buy this.”

Although the Mormon leaders are now soft-pedalling their stand against magic, we cannot forget Apostle McConkie's statement that those who are involved in “False religions” are the ones who are “engaging in divination. . . . The Lord's people are commanded not to engage in divination of any sort” (Mormon Doctrine, pages 202-203).

In accepting the letters of Joseph Smith and Martin Harris as authentic, the Mormon leaders find themselves in a very strange position. These two letters and the report concerning the Cowdery history all combine to present a devastating case against the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. In fact, they give strong support to an idea referred to in our book Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, page 40:

Joseph Smith himself seems to have been convinced that there were guardians over the treasures. As we have already shown, in the 1826 trial Jonathan Thompson testified that when he was engaged in money digging with Joseph Smith, Smith claimed that he looked into his seer stone and discovered “distinctly the two Indians who buried the trunk: that a quarrel ensued between them, and that one of said Indians was killed by the other, and thrown into the hole beside of the trunk, to guard it, as he supposed.” After reading this a person can not help but wonder if Joseph Smith transformed the guardian of the treasure into the angel who gave him the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was supposed to have been translated. Support for this idea comes from a number of sources.

On pages 31-32 of the same book, we also quoted information from the affidavit of William Stafford which showed that Joseph Smith used his seer stone to spy on evil spirits:

I, William Stafford. . . . do say, that I first became acquainted with Joseph, Sen., and his family in the year 1820 . . . A great deal of their time was devoted to digging for money: . . . They would say, . . . Joseph, Jr. could see, by placing a stone of singular appearance in his hat, in such a manner as to exclude all light; at which time they pretended he could see all things within and under the earth,—that he could see within the above mentioned caves, large gold bars and silver plates—that he could also discover the spirits in whose charge these treasures were. . . .

Joseph Smith, Sen., came to me one night, and told me, that Joseph Jr. had been looking in his glass, and had seen, not many rods from his house, two or three kegs of gold and silver, some feet under the surface of the earth; and that none others but the elder Joseph and myself could get them. I . . . repaired to the place of deposit. Joseph, Sen. first made a circle, twelve or fourteen feet in diameter. This circle, said he, contains the treasure. He then stuck in the ground a row of witch hazel sticks, around the said circle, for the purpose of keeping off the evil spirits. . . . He next stuck a steel rod in the centre of the circles, and then enjoined profound silence upon us, lest we should arouse the evil spirit who had the charge of these treasures. . . . the old man by signs and motions, asked leave of absence, . . . He soon returned and said, that Joseph had remained all this time in the house, looking in his stone and watching the motion of the evil spirit—that he saw the spirit come up
Joseph Lewis later wrote that he “thought it was a forced to make a decision with regard to Joseph Smith.
that in 1828 members of the Methodist Church were available for only $3.00 a copy (please add 10% postage
Masonry Mormonism, Magic and our research on these matters.
the Mormon History Association publicly recommended the occult. One of the Mormon scholars who spoke at beyond all question that this paraphernalia comes from Smith magic parchments and knife. We have demonstrated photographs of Joseph Smith’s talisman and the Hyrum
Smith’s “restored” church seems to have been deeply and a knife which have been preserved until the present	pocket. His brother, Hyrum, had some magic parchments owned a “Jupiter talisman” which he carried in his
a figment of Joseph Smith’s imagination.
Joseph Smith owned a “Jupiter talisman” which he carried in his including the ring and as soon as it beheld the cone which we had formed around the rod, it caused the money to sink.

The reader will remember that in the letter to Josiah Stowell, Joseph Smith said, “the treasure must be guarded by some clever spirit and if such is discovered so also is the treasure.” Smith then recommends the use of “a hazel stick” for divination to discover the presence of the “treasure.” The reader will notice that in Stafford’s account a whole “row of witch hazel sticks” are used “for the purpose of keeping off the evil spirits.”

While the 1825 letter does not mention the gold plates of the Book of Mormon, it absolutely ties Joseph Smith to divination and shows that he was tampering around with evil or “clever” spirits at the very time he was supposed to be having dealings with the Angel Moroni. This letter lacks only one thing—i.e., it does not link magic and money-digging directly to the Book of Mormon plates.
The Salamander letter, however, picks up the story at this very point and completes the occultic picture. It clearly points out that the “old spirit” who reveals the gold plates is one of the clever spirits mentioned in the 1825 letter.
It claims, in fact, that “the spirit says I tricked you again . . .” As if this is not bad enough, on one occasion the spirit transformed himself from a magic salamander and violently struck Joseph Smith three times. According to Brent Metcalfe’s report concerning the Cowdery history, the “taunting Salamander” prevented Alvin from digging up the plates. Webster’s Twentieth Century Dictionary gives this definition of taunt: “1. to reproach with scornful or insulting words; to jeer at; to upbraid; to deride.” While this violent, tricky and taunting spirit/salamander fits well in an occult setting, it would be ridiculous to equate it with an angel of God.

If Joseph Smith’s participation in magic had been limited to the time previous to the Lord calling him, we could probably excuse the whole matter. Instead, however, we find that he is deeply involved at the very time the Angel Moroni is preparing him to receive the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. In his History he claimed that he was first visited by the angel in 1823 and that he continued to meet with the angel every year until he received the plates in 1827. In the 1826 trial, however, he admitted that he had been “looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, . . .” This would mean, then, that his involvement with the occult started at about the same time the angel first visited him, and according to the Mormon scholar Marvin Hill, “Joseph was still digging in 1827 . . . at no time did he give up belief in the usefulness of his stone to find treasure” (Journal of Mormon History, vol. 11, 1984, page 130). According to Book of Mormon witnesses Martin Harris and David Whitmer, Joseph Smith used the seer stone to translate the Book of Mormon itself (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 41-42). He used the stone to give revelations, and in one of the revelations he endorsed Oliver Cowdery’s gift of working with a divining rod. Six years after publishing the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith gave a revelation concerning money-digging. It is actually canonized in the Mormon Church’s Doctrine and Covenants—one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church. In Section 111, verses 1, 2 and 4 we read:

I, the Lord your God, am not displeased with your coming this journey, . . . I have much treasure in this city for you, . . . I will give this city into your hands . . . and its wealth pertaining to gold and silver shall be yours.

Although this revelation was a complete failure, this did not stop Joseph Smith from giving another revelation on the same subject. In 1838 Joseph Smith inspected some mounds “erected by the aborigines of the land, to secrete treasures,” and sent this revelation to his brother:

Verily thus Saith the Lord unto Hyram Smith if he will come strate-away to Far West and in=quire of his brother it shall be shown him how that he may be freed from de[b]t and ob=tain a grate treasure in the earth even so Amen (Revelation mailed May 25, 1838, photographically reproduced in The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith, page 358)

The “grate treasure,” of course, turned out to be only a figment of Joseph Smith’s imagination.

Mormon scholar Reed Durham pointed out that Joseph Smith owned a “Jupiter talisman” which he carried in his pocket. His brother, Hyrum, had some magic parchments and a knife which have been preserved until the present time. As we examine the evidence, we find that Joseph Smith’s “restored” church seems to have been deeply rooted in the occult. Our book Mormonism, Magic and Masonry deals in depth with these issues and also contains photographs of Joseph Smith’s talisman and the Hyrum
Smith magic parchments and knife. We have demonstrated beyond all question that this paraphernalia comes from the occult. One of the Mormon scholars who spoke at the Mormon History Association publicly recommended our research on these matters. Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, which contains a wealth of information, is available for only $3.00 a copy (please add 10% postage and handling).

In Mormonism, Magic and Masonry we point out that in 1828 members of the Methodist Church were forced to make a decision with regard to Joseph Smith.
He had taken steps to join their church, but they felt his dealings with the occult made him unfit to be a member.
Joseph Lewis later wrote that he “thought it was a disgrace to the church to have a practicing necromancer, a dealer in enchantments and bleeding ghosts, in it. So on Sunday we . . . Told him that his occupation, habits and moral character were at variance with the discipline, that his name would be a disgrace to the church, that there should have been recantation, confession and at least promised reformation—That he could that day publicly ask that his name be stricken from the class book, or stand investigation. He chose the former, and did that very day make request the his name be take off the class book.”

We summarized this section of Mormonism, Magic and Masonry by saying:

With the mounting evidence of Joseph Smith's involvement in magic, members of the Mormon Church are faced with a very weighty decision—i.e., can they accept as a prophet a man who was involved in occult practices at the very time he was supposed to have been receiving revelations from God? From the standpoint of the bible, the question can only be answered no. As one former follower of Joseph Smith expressed it, a person must “come out from the company of Joseph the sorcerer.”

With the evidence that has come forth since 1983, we feel that it is even more imperative for those who want to follow Christ to “come out from among them” (2 Corinthians 6:17). Time magazine for May 20, 1985, reported the following concerning the reaction of Mormons to the new material:

“It’s an incredible crisis of faith for me,” says Mormon Klaus Hansen, who teaches at Queen’s University in Ontario. “It means our historical foundation becomes a nice story that has no connection to reality.” To Denise Olsen, a law student and mother of three in Bountiful, Utah, “it’s another evidence to me that things have gone awry in the church.” A devout Mormon couple in Whittier, Calif., in a letter to friends explaining why they have left the church, say new revelations about the Mormons’ founding prophet have destroyed their belief.

We really expect that the new information with regard to Mormonism and magic will eventually bring thousands out of the Church. This may be the most important development since we began our ministry. Christians should pray diligently that the Mormon people will turn to the Lord and find the strength which is necessary to carry them through this crisis. Jesus himself has given this invitation:

Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. (Matthew 11:28)

Cause for Concern

We have recently become aware of a man who has been making up material and attributing it to Joseph Smith. Since such an individual has the ability to create the text of a document like the Salamander letter, we are making a very serious investigation into this matter. We hope to have more to report on this in the next issue of the Messenger.

The reader may have noticed that this is the largest issue of the Messenger which we have ever published. In spite of the additional costs involved, we felt that it was extremely important to keep our readers well informed on the new and startling developments that have taken place. It will probably take a great deal more time and money to continue our investigation into these matters. While we hope to continue furnishing accurate and up-to-date information, we do have financial needs that must be met. We would certainly appreciate any donations that our readers are able to make. Remember that all donations are tax-deductible.

Let Them Starve?

We have received some criticism of our ministry to help the starving people of the world. One letter expressed concern that the food may not be getting to those who need it. While we can understand this apprehension, we should point out that we are careful to see that the money does not go to questionable organizations.

One criticism that really bothers us, however, is that it is better to let the people starve so that the problem won’t be perpetuated. We feel that this is a very lame excuse and is completely unchristian. The Apostle John dealt with this type of thinking almost 2,000 years ago:

But whoever has this world’s goods, and sees his brother in need, and shuts up his heart from him, how does the love of God abide in him? (New King James Version, 1 John 3:17)

If the Lord is willing, we hope to expand our outreach to the needy. In the January 1985 issue of the Messenger we stated that we had stepped out in faith to provide support for five children through World Vision. We are happy to report that we have had the funds to meet this need and that we are now adding two more children to the list. We would ask our readers to pray that this work will continue to increase. Psalm 82:3 tells us that we should “Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.”
Blood Atonement Chosen

In the last issue of the Messenger we told how Daniel and Ronald Lafferty murdered their brother’s wife and daughter by cutting their throats. We pointed out that the Laffertys had been excommunicated from the Mormon Church. They had become what is known as “Mormon fundamentalists”—i.e., believers in polygamy and other doctrines taught by the early leaders of the Church. The Laffertys seem to have been influenced by Brigham Young’s doctrine of “blood atonement”:

Will you love your brothers or sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of their blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? . . . I have known a great many men who left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them, . . . (Deseret News, February 18, 1857)

On page 11 of the March 1985 issue of the Messenger, we pointed out that the Laffertys “could have worked hand in hand with Brigham Young as he put his blood atonement doctrine into practice. Orrin Porter Rockwell, Bill Hickman, John D. Lee and a number of other men caused a great deal of blood to flow in early Utah (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 444-450, 493-515).

In the same issue of the Messenger we printed part of a revelation in which Ronald Lafferty claimed God commanded the murder of his “brother’s wife Brenda and her baby.” We had not seen the complete revelation at that time, but it was printed in the Salt Lake Tribune on April 29, 1985. The complete text lends support to our observation that the Laffertys “could have worked hand in hand” with people like Orrin Porter Rockwell—one of Brigham Young’s “destroying angels.” The revelation states that the Lord had raised up “my servant Todd” to perform the murders and then asked this question concerning Todd: “. . . and is he not like unto my servant Porter Rockwell?”

At the time that we printed the March newsletter, only Daniel Lafferty had been convicted of the murders. On May 8, 1985, the Salt Lake Tribune reported that Ronald Lafferty was “sentenced to die for the throat slashing murders.” He chose death by a firing squad instead of lethal injection. His lawyer pointed out that his client “chose the firing squad ‘because of blood atonement.’”

Books and Videos

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with Milwaukee television station. Price: $20.00

The Tanners on Trial, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Over a hundred large pages with many photographs of original court documents. Price: $5.95

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Michael Briggs. Price: $2.00

Tract Pack. An assortment of 12 tracts from other publishers. Price: $1.50

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Contains hundreds of photos from old Mormon publications. Price: $5.95

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
Astronomers tell us that sometimes a star will “collapse into itself and become a black hole and, in a sense, exit the universe” (National Geographic, June 1983, page 717). William Unruh, a physicist at the University of British Columbia, says that, “You can’t see a black hole. Just its effects” (Ibid., page 735). On page 736 of the same magazine, we read that “Since not even light can escape a black hole, one can never be seen directly.” It is explained that “black holes theoretically occur when matter collapses into an exquisitely compact state. Its gravity grows strong enough to trap everything, including light, within the horizon of its gravitational field. The earth, for instance, would become a black hole, if it could somehow be squeezed to the size of a marble . . . Medium-size black holes result from the collapse of giant stars too massive to stop at the neutron star stage. They just disappear into their dark prisons” (Ibid., pages 734-735).

While we know very little about astronomy or the theories concerning black holes in space, we have observed a somewhat similar phenomenon in Mormon history. Important documents which could throw a great deal of light on Mormon history, seem to mysteriously “disappear into their dark prisons.” The suppressive tendencies of the Mormon leaders with regard to documents might be compared to the gravitational pull of black holes in space. Just as black holes sweep “up stars and gas within their gravitational reach” (Ibid., page 735), the fear of new discoveries coming out which do not fit the traditional views held by the General Authorities of the Church prevents Mormon scholars from bringing important research and documents to public view.

The Secret Vault

In the last issue of the Messenger, we demonstrated the role that Mormon leaders have taken in suppressing important documents. For instance, in 1983, Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, secretly acquired a letter which was later declared to be the “Earliest known surviving document written by Joseph Smith, Jr. . . .” Because the document linked Joseph Smith to money-digging and magic, the church leaders decided it would be best to suppress it. Unfortunately for the church, however, copies of the letter got out, and we published a typed copy in the September 1984 issue of the Messenger. Instead of admitting that it had the letter, the church decided to “stonewall.” On April 29, 1985, Dawn Tracy reported the following:

Research historian Brent Metcalfe said he knows from “very reliable, first-hand sources” the letter exists, and the Mormon Church has possession of it. Church spokesman Jerry Cahill denied the claim. “The church doesn’t have the letter,” said Mr. Cahill. “It’s not in the church archives or the First Presidency’s vault.” (Salt Lake Tribune, April 29, 1985)

Finally, when it became clear that some Mormon scholars had photocopies of the letter and were going to turn them over to the news media, the church backed down, and Jerry Cahill admitted his earlier statement was “in error”:

The purported letter was indeed acquired by the church. For the present it is stored in the First Presidency’s archives . . . (Salt Lake Tribune, May 7, 1985)

The First Presidency’s archive or vault, where the 1825 letter was concealed, is undoubtedly the ultimate “black hole.” Documents which are embarrassing to the Mormon Church disappear into this bottomless abyss and are seldom heard of again. The noted Mormon scholar James B. Allen testified in his deposition that the First Presidency’s vault was “very private” (The Tanners on Trial, page 132).
Cowdery’s History

Astronomers claim that if a black hole “lies between a distant star and a cosmic observer, the hole will act as a lens. As light rays from the star pass near the black hole, they will be bent by its intense gravity. The bending will create a mirage, and the observer will think he is seeing two stars. Actually, he is seeing what is not there—and not seeing what is” (National Geographic, June 1983, page 736).

The suppression of important documents has created many “black holes” which have seriously distorted our view of Mormon history. One of the most important documents which the Mormon leaders have hidden is the first history of the church by Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery. In a revelation to Joseph Smith, he was commanded to keep this history (see Doctrine and Covenants 21:1). We have been aware of the suppression of this document for many years. Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the tenth President of the church, had mentioned that the church had “the records written in the hand writing of Oliver Cowdery, the first historian, or recorder of the Church” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 201). We tried to get the Mormon leaders to make this important history available in 1961, but our request was turned down. In Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, published in 1983, we related that we had heard that the Cowdery history was in the First Presidency’s vault and that it contained magic characters. The church made no response to this accusation. Finally, on May 15, 1985, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

A little-known history written by an important early Mormon leader contains an account of Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin finding the gold plates, rather than the Mormon prophet himself, according to a research historian . . . Brent Metcalfe . . . said his source is a private eye-witness account of the Cowdery history. The document tells of Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin first finding the gold plates by means of a stone, according to Mr. Metcalfe.

Mr. Metcalfe quoted the document as saying: “A taunting Salamander appears to Alvin and prevents him and his companions from digging up the gold plates.”

The reader will remember that just two weeks earlier Brent Metcalfe had charged that the church had the 1825 letter. While the church originally denied this accusation, it was later admitted that the letter was in the First Presidency’s vault. In the case of the Cowdery history, the church took a more cautious position:

LDS spokesman Jerry Cahill said the LDS Historical Department does not have the Cowdery history. He said he would not ask members of the church’s ruling First Presidency if the history is locked up in a special presidency’s vault. . . . “I don’t intend to respond to every report or rumor of documents in the First Presidency’s vault,” said Mr. Cahill. “I have no idea if the history is there, nor do I intend to ask. I can’t have my life ordered about by rumors. Where does it end?” (Salt Lake Tribune, May 15, 1985)

Church leaders seem to have taken a position of silence with regard to the Cowdery history. The Brigham Young University paper, The Universe, May 16, 1985, reported:

LDS Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said he would not confirm or deny the contents of the history written by Oliver Cowdery. “Apparently the story says the history is in the First Presidency’s archives but they haven’t released any information about it and I don’t believe they intend to,” he said.

In an interview with Associated Press writer Michael White, Mr. Cahill admitted that the church has possession of the Cowdery history, but he still refused to give any details:

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said that Cowdery’s history had been in the church’s possession since around 1900 and probably is locked away in the private vault of the governing First Presidency.

But Cahill said he did not know whether it contained the information described by Metcalfe, and he would not try to find out.

“Frankly, I don’t intend to raise the question. Obviously, it’s in the possession of the church, but what shelf it is on I don’t know,” he said. (The Oregonian, May 21, 1985)

There seems to be no excuse for the Mormon leaders withholding the Cowdery history. In the last issue of the Messenger we argued that in not making the Cowdery history available . . . the Mormon Church finds itself in a cover-up situation. According to the Doctrine and Covenants, God Himself instructed Joseph Smith that “there shall be a record kept among you; . . .” it hardly makes any sense for the Mormon leaders to say that God commanded the history to be kept and then lock it up in a vault so that no one can read it. We have always suspected that this history provides no support for Joseph Smith’s First Vision of 1820, and it has recently been reported that it does not support the restoration of the Melchizedek priesthood by Peter, James and John . . .
The “Salamandergate” cover-up even has its own “Deep Throat”—that mysterious and unidentified person who had access to Nixon’s secrets and leaked them to the press. Only a very limited number of people could have had access to the material in the vault of the First Presidency. It is reported that Brent Metcalfe will not name his source for fear that he will get the individual into trouble with the Church.

An Eyewitness

Writing in the Los Angeles Times, June 13, 1985, John Dart reported that the individual who had seen the Cowdery history allowed himself to be interviewed:

Now an allegation is being made that the church possesses a 150-year-old handwritten history that claims that it was the church prophet’s older brother, Alvin, who actually found the golden plates. . . .

Church officials here have been vague in their response to questions about whether they have the history, . . . A highly reliable source told the Times in an interview here, however, that he has viewed it in the church’s headquarters.

The source, who insisted on anonymity in order to preserve his standing in the church, said the Cowdery history and the role it gives Alvin Smith lend further credibility to the documents disclosed earlier, which portray Joseph Smith’s involvement in occult methods to find hidden treasures without any references to religious events so familiar to present-day Mormons. . . .

Church Spokesman Jerry Cahill acknowledged that Joseph Fielding Smith, a church apostle who was church president from 1970 to 1972, wrote 60 years ago, “We have on file in the Historian’s Office the records written in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, the first historian or recorder of the Church.”

Cahill said, “I presume (they are) in the possession of the First Presidency” because they are not in the history department archives. He added that he would not ask the First Presidency if it has the purported history, saying he does not want to bother that office with questions about rumored or reported documents. A First Presidency staff member had no comment. . . .

The source interviewed by the Times described the Cowdery history as a book bound partly in leather, with marbled cardboard covers measuring about 8 inches by 10 inches in width and height and between half an inch and three-quarters of an inch thick. The pages are lined, he said.

The source said he decided to be interviewed about the history because the Cowdery documents provide corroboration for the salamander references in the Harris letter, which some Mormons are claiming is a forgery.

“I don’t remember the exact wording, but it said that Alvin located the buried gold with his seer stone,” he said. “I remember clearly that it was not a private venture. Alvin had other people with him, including Joseph.”

“There was no mention of a dream beforehand,” he said. The salamander appeared on three occasions, once to Alvin and twice to Joseph,” he added. . . .

. . . the church leadership’s unwillingness to speak further on the issue is being viewed by some as harmful to its public relations. “The church’s silence damages its credibility,” said George Smith . . . owner of the Mormon-oriented Signature Books publishing house.

Indeed, the church got caught with a credibility problem earlier, when it tried to deny that the earliest known letter written by Joseph Smith was in its possession.

“Conspiracy may be a bad word to use,” said the source who claims to have seen the Cowdery book, “but there must have been some sort of agreement that Joseph is the new seer now that Alvin is gone. Certainly the family and Oliver Cowdery knew. I can’t imagine that any more knew, because it’s an important aspect of the founding of the Church and it hasn’t come down in other histories that we know of.” . . . Mormon historian Ronald Walker of Salt Lake City said in an Interview, “If we found out that Alvin is involved, it would not be surprising. There is evidence that (Smith family members) were up on Hill Cumorah digging before 1823.”

Walker has shown that the Smith family was among many Americans who had engaged in a “money-digging” craze during the early 19th Century. “I’m not sure the pieces fit together,” Walker said. “What we need is to get the church to release it, if the church has it.” (Los Angeles Times, June 13, 1985)

As far as we know, Brent Metcalfe and John Dart are the only ones who know who the individual is who saw the Cowdery history. Dart’s article makes it clear that we are dealing with a man, and The Universe for May 16, 1985, informs us that he is one of Brent Metcalfe’s friends. The Universe reports that while Metcalfe was “going through several private collections, he found a firsthand account of someone who had seen this history written by Oliver Cowdery. A friend of Metcalfe, who had access to the church archives, wrote the account, Metcalfe said. He refused to release information about his friend or how the documents came into his friend’s hands.”

A number of Mr. Metcalfe’s friends have had special access to Church documents. For instance, both Dean Jessee and Ronald Walker worked for the Historical Department at one time. Dean Jessee, however, has publicly denied that he has seen the Cowdery history. According to the Phoenix Gazette, May 18, 1985, Jessee said:

... he was unaware of any writings that would indicate that Alvin Smith saw the golden plates, although he said he has not read the Cowdery history. He said he had been under the impression Cowdery’s work had been lost... “Metcalfe’s the world’s foremost authority on this,” Jessee said. “... there’s a lot that’s not available.”

We understand that Ronald Walker has also denied being the “Deep Throat” who exposed the Cowdery history. Brent Metcalfe was at one time a security guard for the Mormon Church and had a number of friends in the Church Office Building. Besides these contacts, it is reported that Metcalfe is well acquainted with Mark Hofmann. Hofmann, of course, was involved in the sale of the Salamander letter as well as the 1825 letter that links Joseph Smith to the occult. There is evidence that Mark Hofmann has had special access to the First Presidency’s vault. (As we pointed out earlier, only the most trusted individuals can see documents from that vault.) On September 28, 1982, the Seventh East Press reported that since the discovery of the Anthon transcript, Hofmann has “enjoyed privileged access to otherwise restricted Church archive material, including the First Presidency’s vault. One reason for this privileged access, Hofmann thinks, is the fact that ‘I am not a historian. I’m not going to write an expose of Mormonism.’” Through his discoveries and knowledge of documents, Mr. Hofmann has worked himself into the innermost circle of Mormon historians. He says that “The real reward in the whole business is being able to see things that no one else knows about. It gives me a kick to know that this is original stuff, that no one else on earth has pieced this together or knows what this says. So there’s the pleasure. It’s like being a detective.” (Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 17)

Since there are a number of people Mr. Metcalfe has had contact with who could be the source of the information concerning the Cowdery history, we are very reluctant about trying to make a positive identification of the individual. In any case, Metcalfe has revealed that the Cowdery history was actually dictated by Joseph Smith himself. This makes the document of even greater value for those who want to know the truth about Mormonism. It is reported that there is a letter containing information on the contents of the Cowdery history. In addition, it is claimed that there is also a smaller history by Cowdery which is stored in the church’s vault. The most sensational story, however, is that there may be a microfilm of the entire Cowdery history which has escaped the “black hole” of the First Presidency’s vault. If a microfilm does exist and a copy should arrive at Utah Lighthouse Ministry, we would waste no time in preparing it for publication.

Not Real Motive

The following is a copy of a letter written to us by George Smith on June 20, 1985:

To the Editors:

In your “Salamandergate” issue (No. 57, June 1985), you incorrectly attributed my motives for presenting Joseph Smith’s 1825 letter to Josiah Stowell before the Mormon History Association. Neither was I “very disturbed about the Church denying that it had possession of the letter” (p. 20), nor would such concern have seemed a pertinent reason to read this letter publicly. While I cannot endorse inaccurate denials of owning documents held in trust for the LDS membership at large, examination of this letter was important primarily for analytical reasons. The 1825 portrayal of Joseph Smith’s occult digging formulas in his own handwriting has singular relevance for Martin Harris’s 1830 “white salamander” letter, the main subject of discussion. The 1825 letter tends to validate Joseph Smith’s voice in Harris’s recital of Joseph’s “salamander” version of finding the gold plates. The letters together establish the use of seer stones, divining rods, and magical formulas to discern the presence of “clever spirits,” hidden treasure, and even the gold plates from which Joseph Smith claimed to translate the Book of Mormon. The 1825 letter is germane in demonstrating that occult practices were concurrent with Mormon origins.

Your article correctly noted that the LDS Church had acquired this earliest Joseph Smith holograph in 1983, following its authentication by Charles Hamilton Autographs, Inc., of New York. After two years of ownership, the last denial was printed in the Salt Lake Tribune on April 29, 1985. On May 2, the full text was read before the MHA. The following day, President Gordon B. Hinckley directed LDS spokesperson Jerry P. Cahill to acknowledge Church possession of the letter (Tribune 5/6/85), which he did in the May 5 Deseret News. The Church then released the text in the May 10 Deseret News, and on May 11, the Los Angeles Times published a photograph of the handwritten letter.

The yet-to-be-released “First Mormon History,” dictated by Joseph Smith to Oliver Cowdery in 1830, further corroborates Joseph’s “salamander” version of the gold plates story, once used to describe Mormon origins.

George Smith
Fake Documents & The Harris Letter

By Jerald Tanner

In the Messenger for June 1985, we reported that we had learned that someone had “been making up material and attributing it to Joseph Smith. Since such an individual has the ability to create the text of a document like the Salamander letter, we are making a very serious investigation into this matter. We hope to have more to report at this time in the next issue of the Messenger.”

(As George Smith’s letter pointed out, the Salamander letter was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris in 1830. This letter is very controversial because it links Joseph Smith to the occult.)

The following is a report on the investigation I conducted. On October 6, 1984, a man by the name of Kerry Ross Boren wrote a letter to Dean Jessee, a noted Mormon scholar who was making a critical examination of the Harris letter to determine whether it was authentic. In this letter, Mr. Boren offered important new information which could help Professor Jessee verify the Salamander letter:

I am an inmate at Utah State Prison, . . . My purpose in contacting you at the present time is due to the recent publicity pertaining to the letter of Martin Harris . . . Joseph Smith was my second great grandfather and I have access to, and have had the privilege of, examining some papers and personal effects of Joseph Smith which have never before been seen or published . . . . One of the important things that the information clarifies are the facts behind the Martin Harris letter . . . . I have an expanded version of the “white salamander” story from Joseph’s own account.

If we can trust copies of letters provided by Mr. Boren (they have every appearance of being authentic), Dean Jessee visited him at the prison and also sent him eight different letters. By January 9, 1985, Mr. Jessee seemed to be rather enthusiastic about the matter:

In reading over the material you have sent I see its importance more than ever for a proper understanding of the Harris letter . . . the most harmful thing we can do right now is to remain silent if there is information available that will put Joseph Smith in a better light. . . . there will be all kinds of questions asked, and much criticism brought against the Church. The best ammunition for facing this issue comes from the material you have presented. (Letter dated January 9, 1985)

Even though Dean Jessee seemed to be impressed with the copies of the documents Mr. Boren provided, he did note that “some of the phrasing and usage of words is foreign to Joseph Smith’s literary style. There are also a few contradictions of fact. . . . Being able to see the actual handwriting of the documents would possibly provide answers to these questions” (Ibid.). Mr. Boren only provided his own handwritten copies of the material, and when Jessee asked for xerox copies, Boren replied that he could not “gain access to the original materials until such time as I am released from this place, and therefore can only provide copies of the information . . .” (Letter dated March 17, 1985). The correspondence between Jessee and Boren apparently ended with this letter.

On May 23, 1985, Mr. Boren wrote us a letter in which he made some incredible claims. He related that he had had access to “some of the papyri, translations of portions of the plates, letters, personal history, genealogy, etc.” While I had serious doubts about these claims, I was very interested in any material relating to the forgery of Mormon documents. At that time I was unaware that Mr. Boren claimed to have material similar to the Salamander letter. In any case, I provided a researcher with the information I had about Kerry Ross Boren, and he was able to obtain copies of documents Boren had previously given to Dean Jessee.

One of the documents which Boren provided was his handwritten copy of an account of Joseph Smith’s early visions, which was supposed to have been authored by Smith himself! The account of the First Vision in this document is similar to Joseph Smith’s “Strange Account” of the First Vision (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 145-146). It goes on, however, to say that the Lord revealed “a curious stone” to Joseph Smith which he was to use to find the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. The Lord also told him that when he arrived at the place where the records were buried he would be given “a sign” of a “lowly frog but not just a frog but a white frog . . .” On the appointed day, Joseph Smith went to the hill and “saw a frog of the purest white I had ever seen proceed forth out of a hole in the ground at the bottom of a large stone . . .” Joseph removed the stone and saw “a large room or cavern” which contained “plates of gold” and other “ancient items of curious workmanship . . .” Before he could go into the cavern, however, Joseph “again saw the large white frog and immediately above it in the air a shaft of brilliant light descending [and] an angel appeared in the midst . . . and then said unto me behold my name is Nephi . . .”

Mr. Boren also provided a copy of a letter which was supposed to have been written by Joseph Smith to Isaac Morley in 1835. In this letter Joseph Smith detailed some of his early money-digging experiences. In another manuscript which is eight pages long, Mr. Boren gives a summary of a document written by Joseph Smith. This is also filled with material concerning Joseph Smith and money-digging.

Mr. Boren provided other documents and a list of 52 different items he has had access to. He claims that he has seen the “Mummy” of Pharaoh Necho, three rolls of papyrus, thirteen separate pieces of papyri, a revelation on polygamy that is “more lengthy and detailed” than the one published by the church, a large stack of “correspondence between early Church figures, including many by and to the Prophet,” a translation of the lost “Book of Lehi” and other lost books, a translation of the Book of Abraham which contains “much not found in the present published version,” and what appears to be original manuscripts of “Newton and also da Vinci.”

Although I was only able to examine copies of a small portion of this purported collection, it did not take me long to conclude that it was spurious. I could plainly see how material was plagiarized from different portions of published material and combined to give some very unique interpretations. Michael Marquardt also examined the purported documents and reached the same conclusion.

In all fairness to Mr. Boren, I should say that I do not know for certain that he made up the documents. He claims that Joseph Smith gave the documents to his “third great-grandfather, Isaac Morley,” for safekeeping and that they have passed down to one of his relatives who has them stored in the basement of a house in California. Although it seems very unlikely, Mr. Boren could have made his copies from material in someone else’s possession. In any case, there is not the slightest chance that the documents could be genuine. They bear all the earmarks of fabrication.

On June 18, 1985, I had a personal interview with Kerry Ross Boren at the Utah State Prison. While much of his story is very difficult to believe, some of his statements seem to have some basis in fact. One of his claims is that he was a ghost writer for the historical part of Robert Redford’s book, The Outlaw Trail, which was published in 1979. While it does not prove his assertion, I found him mentioned at least fifteen times in Redford’s book. In the Forward, Robert Redford gives “special thanks” to “Kerry Boren,” and on page 24 he refers to “Kerry Boren, our historian.” I have found that Mr. Boren has coauthored a book entitled, Footprints in the Wilderness: A History of The Lost Rhoades Mines, and has also written a number of articles for magazines. On page 173 of her book, Butch Cassidy My Brother, Lulu Parker Bentenson refers to “Kerry Ross Boren, a recognized authority on outlaw history, National Center for Outlaw and Lawman History, Utah State University, Logan, Utah.” While some historians do not have much respect for Mr. Boren’s work, it must be conceded that he has a great deal of ability as a writer.

Proves Letter?

Mr. Boren’s contention that the material he has copied helps clarify “the facts behind the Martin Harris letter” must be completely rejected. As I have already pointed out, the material Boren has presented bears unmistakable evidence of falsification. Furthermore, he has not produced any real evidence that the original manuscripts even exist.

While Kerry Ross Boren sets his material forward with the claim that it supports the Salamander letter, it could raise the question of whether Boren himself had the ability to produce such a document. In his letter of January 9, 1985, Dean Jessee mentioned an important similarity between the Salamander letter and Boren’s material:

> . . . the reference to Harris’s having a dream and waking with a coin in his hand, and upon seeing the cavern, throwing the coin back (which is also mentioned in the Harris letter), is very important right now for my work on the Harris letter.

The reference which Professor Jessee speaks of reads as follows in the Harris letter:

> I later dream I converse with spirits which let me count their money when I awake I have in my hand a dollar coin which I take for a sign Joseph describes what I seen in every particular says he the spirits are grieving so I through back the dollar.

This statement in the Salamander letter seems incomplete. It does not tell where Harris threw the coin back to. It would be very difficult to throw the coin back into the dream or into the spirit world. Mr. Boren’s material seems to provide a logical answer to this question. In Boren’s summary (“not a verbatim account”) of a manuscript written by Joseph Smith, we find the following:

Martin Harris and Joseph Knight, Sr. came down from Manchester together soon after the treasure was discovered. Harris had had a dream about the Treasure and had awakened with a silver coin in his hand. Taking this to be a sign, he went forthwith to Colesville . . . . Harris had expressed to Knight that he thought Joseph Smith was a fake, and had stolen the treasure from them . . . . but when they confronted Joseph, he related Harris’ dream in detail without being prompted.

Harris would not be content until he had seen the Treasure for himself, to be content that Joseph had not removed any of it. After much persuasion, Joseph agreed to take Harris as far as the place where the buckets of silver coins were located . . . . Upon seeing the piece, Harris was content and tossed his coin back.
The parallels between the two accounts are too strong to be ignored. If it could be established that Boren’s material was in existence before the Salamander letter was discovered in late 1983, it would seem to show that it (the Salamander letter) is a forgery—i.e., a condensed version of the material Boren provided us with. The other explanation, of course, is that the Salamander letter provided structural material for someone with a vivid imagination. In this case, it would not reflect on the Harris letter. Mr. Boren insists that his material is genuine and predates the discovery of the Salamander letter.

While I have not yet found any compelling evidence that Mr. Boren’s material predates the discovery of the Salamander letter, there are some stories in a book he coauthored with Gale R. Rhoades which sound like the account of Harris throwing the coin back. According to Boren and Rhoades, Joe Walker told of going into a sacred mine with Butch Cassidy. He claimed he found a rock that “shined like almost solid gold.” Cassidy, however, “told me anyone who took any part of that gold would have the curse of God placed upon him . . .

“I slipped a small piece of that gold in my pocket but when we stepped outside, Butch drew his gun and told me to put it back. . . . I went back and put that piece of rock—about the size of my hand—on top of one of those leather bags, . . .” (Footprints in the Wilderness: A History of The Lost Rhoades Mines, page 355).

The account of Cassidy chastising Walker for taking the sacred gold sounds similar to Joseph Smith rebuking Harris in the Salamander letter for taking the spirits’ coin. On page 378 of the same book, we read of a man named Joseph R. Sharp who went to the mine and tried to remove the gold. As he “prepared to climb from the mine,” he was met by two Indians—apparently “apparitions delegated to watch over the sacred Ute gold.” One of them “spoke with a voice of authority; calm, yet loud and in perfect English, saying: ‘Put the gold back, Leave here and never return or you will surely die.’

“As quickly as the Indians had appeared, they disappeared, and with no apparent means of departure; vanished, as it were, into thin air! Mr. Sharp was taken aback by this weird display and he tossed the gold back into the mine. . . .” (Footprints in the Wilderness, page 378).

The reader will notice that Mr. Sharp “tossed the gold back into the mine.” In the Salamander letter, Martin Harris throws “back the dollar.” While my copy of the book was not printed until 1984, I have located a copy printed in 1980 which contains the same stories. This would be at least three years before the Salamander letter was discovered.

In the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, we pointed out that the Salamander letter contains some striking parallels to Mormonism Unvailed (published in 1834) and a manuscript written by Joseph Knight (first published in BYU Studies, Autumn 1976). When I examined the Boren manuscript, which contains the report concerning Martin Harris’s dream, I found parallels to both of these publications. Furthermore, in a note to Dean Jessee, Mr. Boren specifically mentioned the “Willard Chase affidavit” which was published in Mormonism Unvailed and contains important parallels to the Salamander letter. The parallels between Boren’s manuscript and the Joseph Knight account are so strong that they cannot be explained away as mere coincidence. Some of the parallels are even to footnotes which Dean Jessee has provided to go along with Joseph Knight’s account. One of the more interesting parallels (which is also similar to the Salamander letter) is found on pages 5 and 6 of Boren’s manuscript:

. . . the angel instructed him that he could remove the plates one year from that date, if he would obey certain commandments and follow certain instructions. He would be required to bring someone with him. Someone who would be able to remove the plates.

When Joseph inquired as to whom that person would be, the angel told him only to look to the stone for instruction. Upon doing so, he saw Emma Hale, . . .

The reader will notice how similar this is to Joseph Knight’s account:

. . . and the personage appeared and told him he Could not have it now. But the 22nd Day of September next he mite have the Book if he Brot with him the right person. Joseph says, “who is the right Person?” The answer was you will know. Then he looked in his glass and found it was Emma Hale, . . . (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1976, page 31)

Perhaps it is only a strange coincidence that both the Salamander letter and the Boren material have parallels to Joseph Knight’s account and Mormonism Unvailed, but the parallels do raise the question as to whether Mr. Boren or someone who has seen his material could have written the Salamander letter.

Although physical tests which have been made on the Salamander letter seem to show that it is authentic, Lyn Jacobs has stubbornly refused to tell where he obtained it. The Deseret News, April 28, 1985, said that “The letter was purchased in late 1983 by Jacobs and Mark Hofmann . . .” The crime which Kerry Ross Boren was sent to prison for was apparently committed in August 1983. It would appear, then, that if he had anything to do with the Salamander letter, it would have been before he was jailed in August, 1983. Mr. Boren maintains that he has not had any contact with either Lyn Jacobs or Mark Hofmann. I have no way of knowing whether this statement is true.

The tests which have been performed on the Salamander letter indicate that if it is a forgery, no ordinary person could have produced it. It would have to be the work of a very skilled forger. Only a person familiar with old documents, chemistry and the process of document authentication could prepare a letter that would have a chance of passing the tests the Salamander letter was submitted to. As far as I know, Mr. Boren has never been charged with forgery, and he has not offered to sell me any documents. Boren claims that he is “not an expert in document authentication.” He maintains, however, that “as a genealogist and researcher I have spent most of my life working with such items and am fully capable of recognizing them as being of the period and scope in question.” (Letter dated June 15, 1985) Mr. Boren was obviously at home with old letters and journals. In his manuscript “The High Uintahs,” he spoke of the “Kerry Ross Boren Collection” of documents. The letters in this collection went back to the 1830s. I have been told that Boren even had original Jesse James material. A photograph of a portion of an important letter he discovered relating to Butch Cassidy was published in the Westerner, May-June 1973. One thing that is a little suspicious about the letter is that Boren chose to suppress the names of both the writer and the recipient (see pages 41 and 62).

It is interesting to note that like Joseph Smith, Mr. Boren has spent some time searching for treasures. In the book Footprints in the Wilderness, page 399, we “find a picture of Boren which has labeled: “Author Kerry Ross Boren with metal detector in search of Uintah Mountain treasure.” On pages 415-416 of the same book, Boren and Rhoades wrote:

... the Lost Rhoades Mines; those fabulous and fantastic... veins of pure and enticing gold still exist... Their various estimates range from “enough gold to pay off the national debt” to “enough gold to pave the streets of New York City”. . . .

Should any of our readers someday endeavor an expedition into the Uintahs in a quest for this gold, the authors would wish you the best of luck . . . Who knows? Maybe we’ll see you in the mountains.

Like the Salamander letter, the book by Boren and Rhoades also contains accounts of the treasure being guarded by “the spirits,” and on pages 367-371 we read of “the spirit” who was directing a clairvoyant who was searching for a lost gold mine.

One thing that should be of great concern to scholars is the fact that there seems to be an attempt in the Boren material to duplicate the spelling errors of Joseph Smith. This, of course, shows that there has been a very serious study of the writings of Joseph Smith with intent to deceive. Whether the author of the Boren materials has actually taken the final step and prepared documents which have the appearance of dating back to Joseph Smith’s time is not known. As Mormon documents increase in value, the possibility of forgery will also increase. I have recently learned that another man in Southern Utah has been forging documents relating to the Smith family. The forgeries were so good that they have passed into archival collections.

In my investigation I have been seriously handicapped by secrecy. Mr. Boren maintains that the basement of a house in California contains the original documents from which he made his copies. He claims, however, that he cannot release the location of this house. When I turn to the Salamander letter, I find the same problem. Lyn Jacobs refuses to tell me where he obtained it.

If I had investigative power like the FBI or could subpoena documents, it probably wouldn’t take me long to learn the answer to the question I have concerning Mr. Boren’s relationship to the Salamander letter. If, for instance, I could force Lyn Jacobs or Mark Hofmann to reveal where the Salamander letter was obtained, I might be able to learn if it was really in existence prior to the time Mr. Boren came on the scene. Furthermore, I could compel Mr. Boren to reveal the location of the “original” documents (if any such documents exist) as well as the material he has stored at the prison and material in the possession of his friends. His papers would probably prove very helpful in determining the truth about his claims.

Since I have no power to gain access to the documents and information I need most, I am unable to provide a conclusive answer regarding Mr. Boren’s relationship to the Salamander letter. Perhaps some of those reading this paper can provide help. If anyone has any pertinent information on the Salamander letter, Kerry Ross Boren, Lyn Jacobs or Mark Hofmann, it would really be appreciated.

The information I have used in this article is only a summary of a 10-page report I have written on Mr. Boren and his documents. The entire report is published under the title, Mr. Boren and the White Salamander.
More Discoveries!

In his book, Nightfall At Nauvoo, the Mormon writer Samuel W. Taylor commented that “the Salt Lake City Messenger, contains some of the liveliest reading ever to emerge from the city of the Saints.” In the Messenger we have tried very hard to provide information that is both accurate and up-to-date. Fortunately, we have had some very good sources and have been able to break some important stories. For instance, in March 1983 we reprinted a money-digging agreement which Joseph Smith and his father entered into with seven other men and stated that we had heard that “a Mormon researcher had discovered the original handwritten copy” of the document. We commented that the details of the discovery would “probably be announced soon.”

One year later, March 1984, we still had nothing further to report on the money-digging agreement, but we did announce the discovery of the Salamander letter and printed important extracts from it. In the September 1984 issue of the Messenger, we revealed that the Mormon Church had bought a letter which linked Joseph Smith to magic. We said that the letter was dated June 18, 1825, and bore the signature “Joseph Smith, Jun.” We printed a typed copy of the letter in that issue of the Messenger.

As the months passed, we realized that we had announced the discovery of three very important documents, but had no way to absolutely confirm their contents. In fact, we had no way to prove that the money-digging agreement and the 1825 letter even existed. Although we had complete confidence in our sources, we began to wonder if some of our readers might feel that we were listening to too many rumors. Nevertheless, on October 24, 1984, we went even a step further and reported that there was a possibility that William E. McLellin’s copy of Joseph Smith’s revelation to sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon to someone in Canada had been found (see The Money-Digging Letters, pages 21-22). (This revelation completely failed and caused Joseph Smith a great deal of embarrassment.) Finally, in the January 1985 issue of the Messenger we wrote that “it has recently been reported that Mark Hofmann has obtained the original Egyptian Papyrus which Joseph Smith used as Fac. No. 2 in the Book of Abraham.”

Since publishing the January 1985 issue of the Messenger, many things have come to light which tend to vindicate our statements concerning these documents. In the June 1985 issue of the Messenger, we were able to print photocopies of both the Salamander letter and the 1825 letter. Although the money-digging agreement has still not been released, the Mormon scholar Ronald W. Walker wrote concerning the “agreement” and said that “A facsimile of the original document has recently been obtained by Salt Lake businessman, Steven Christensen.” (“American Treasure Digging: A Persisting Idea,” unpublished paper, footnote 124)

McLellin Collection

On July 6, 1985, our statement concerning the discovery of the original of Facsimile No. 2 was verified in an article written by Dawn Tracy:

One of the most famous relics in Mormondom—considered by the faithful to be sacred scripture—has been located and sold in Texas. But the manuscript’s location and name of the buyer are secret, according to a collector who discovered the relic and other significant documents.

The relic, called Facsimile No. 2, is part of a collection containing papyrus fragments that members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believe church founder Joseph Smith translated into the Book of Abraham. . . .

Mark Hoffman, a Salt Lake seller of historical autographs and manuscripts, said he located a collection—including Facsimile No. 2—that at one time belonged to William McLellin, an early Mormon apostle. . . .

Mr. Hoffman said other items in the latest find are diaries of William McLellin, including “day-to-day and weekly activities, and papers, letters and affidavits written around the 1830’s.”

“The collection is of considerable historical value in regards to the early [Mormon] church,” he said. (Salt Lake Tribune, July 6, 1985)

We had been aware of the possibility of more of the Joseph Smith Papyri coming to light since 1971. In the May 1971 issue of the Messenger, we quoted from a letter which related that Dr. Hugh Nibley had told someone that “there was more papyri found and that it was discovered in Texas. . . . Mention was made by Nibley that Facsimile No. 2 was among the papyri.” Research by Michael Marquardt and Wesley P. Walters led us to believe that the papyri might be in the possession of a Mr. Markham, the owner of Markham’s Trading Post in Cleveland, Texas. Dawn Tracy contacted Mr. Markham’s children, and although she learned that Mark Hofmann had been in contact with their father, they claimed no knowledge of the McLellin documents. If Mark Hofmann did not obtain the McLellin collection from Mr. Markham, it is very likely that he found them in that area of Texas. It appears that J. L. Traughber, who had McLellin’s diaries at the turn of the century, lived in Tyler County, which is not very far from Cleveland, Texas. In a letter written from Mobile, Tyler County, Texas, on July 11, 1901, Mr. Traughber commented:

I have some little manuscript books written by Dr. W. E. McLellin. I also have his journal for parts of the years 1831-2-3-4-5-6. I have over thirty letters compactly written by Dr. McLellin containing much on the subject of Mormonism. (Handwritten copy made by Michael Marquardt)

The reader will remember that Dawn Tracy said that Mark Hofmann had obtained the “diaries of William McLellin.” These diaries must have been the same ones Mr. Traughber had in his possession in 1901. We have learned also that Mark Hofmann did obtain a copy of the revelation to sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon as part of the McLellin collection. In The Money-Digging Letters, page 22, we told of a letter in which McLellin said he had made a copy of this revelation. The following is taken from a typed copy of this letter in Michael Marquardt’s possession:

But again, Joseph had a revelation for Oliver and friends to go to Canada to get a copy-right secured in that Dominion to the Book of Mormon, it proved so false that he never would have it recorded, printed or published. I have seen and mad (sic) a copy of it, so that I know it existed. (Letter from William McLellin to Joseph Smith III, dated July 1872)

Dawn Tracy reported that Hofmann also obtained “papers, letters and affidavits written around the 1830’s.” We understand that these affidavits and/or statements were given by John and David Whitmer, Martin Harris, Emma Smith and Elizabeth Cowdery. In his letter to Joseph Smith III, McLellin claimed what Joseph Smith did not use the Urim and Thummin in translating the Book of Mormon “but translated the entire Book of M. by means of a small stone. I have certificates to that effect from E. A. Cowdery (Oliver’s widow,) Martin Harris, and Emma Bidamon. And I have the testimony of John and David Whitmer” (Ibid., page 5). Martin Harris’s affidavit could throw important light on the Salamander letter.

The McLellin collection is also supposed to have letters between McLellin and Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer, as well as other letters, documents and four fragments from the Joseph Smith Papyri.

While Mr. Hofmann’s statement that he had acquired the McLellin collection did not appear in print until July 6, 1985, he probably discovered it over three years ago. In an interview published in Sunstone Review, September 1982, Hofmann commented: “I can tell you about some of the things I have sold this last year since the Joseph Smith III blessing. One of my favorites is the 1831 journal of William E. McLellin.” Seventh East Press for September 28, 1982, reported:

. . . Hofmann has bought and sold many other important historical documents that have not come to the media’s attention. . . . Hofmann did not make copies of any of these historically significant documents for Church historians because, in his words, “of course, that would make the document less valuable.” Speaking specifically of the McLellin journal, Hofmann remarked that he was sorry that historians will not soon have the chance to study the journal, but “I am not in the business for historians: I am in it to make a living.”

At the time we read about the 1831 journal we were not aware that this was only part of a large collection. Consequently, we were not too disturbed about the fact that it was being suppressed.

Just before we published the January 1985 issue of the Messenger, an anonymous source informed us that Mr. Hofmann had said that he was selling the original of Fac. No. 2 to the Mormon Church and that it would never be seen again. According to Dawn Tracy, however, “Jerry Cahill stated the church does not own or possess the collection,” and “Brent Metcalfe said . . . evidence suggests the documents are owned by a private individual.” No one seems to know who this “individual” is or where the collection is now located. When the church was still suppressing Joseph Smith’s 1825 letter, George Smith stated that it was his understanding that President Gordon B. Hinckley “purchased the letter in 1983 in his own name from collector Mark Hofmann . . .” We have no additional information to support this accusation, but if President Hinckley bought the letter in his own name, the church leaders could say that the church did not own it. According to the Church Section of the Deseret News, June 30, 1985, “President Hinckley said he acquired” the letter “for the Church.”

In any case, it is not known if the individual who holds the McLellin collection is trying to suppress it for the Mormon Church. Dawn Tracy reported that “Mr. Hofmann said terms of the sale agreement stipulate he is not to divulge the name of the buyer nor the amount of the sale.” In the June 1985 issue of the Messenger, page 9, we quoted Mark Hofmann’s admission that if the church wanted him to, he was willing to help suppress knowledge of the Joseph Smith III Blessing document and “not breathe a word of its existence to anyone . . .” That Mr. Hofmann would even think of allowing such an important document to go into a “black hole” forever is deplorable, to say the least. We hope that the individual who has the McLellin collection will not continue to suppress it.

Archivists who are concerned with authenticating old documents are anxious to learn their provenance, i.e., their origin and how they came into the hands of their present owners. In the case of the Salamander letter, Hofmann and Jacobs refused to provide any information that would help scholars find out if it has a pedigree which can be traced back to the time it was supposed to have been written. With the McLellin collection, however, we find ourselves in a far better position. We know that J. L. Traughber had McLellin’s journals in 1901, and it may be possible to trace where they went from there. As we have shown, McLellin himself mentions some of the other documents. So far we have not found anything concerning McLellin having the original of Fac. No. 2. Although it has been alleged that McLellin may have stolen it from Joseph Smith in 1838, there is evidence that Smith still had it 1842. In any case, if the original should ever become available, we do have two different drawings to compare it with. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 335-336, we demonstrated that the circular object found in Fac. No. 2 of the Book of Abraham is in reality a magic disk or hypocephalus which Egyptians placed under the head of a mummy. We have presented good evidence to show that it was damaged when Joseph Smith obtained it and that his reconstruction has been falsified. We believe that the release of the original disc would vindicate our criticism of Fac. No. 2.

Smith’s 1826 Trial

At our request Wesley P. Walters has prepared the following:

1826 TRIAL RECORD RECOVERED

W. P. Walters

On March 20, 1826, four years before he published the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith, Jr. was hauled before the local court in Bainbridge, New York. He was accused of being “a disorderly person and an imposter” because of his claim to locate buried treasure through his peep-stone. The record of that trial, torn from the justice’s docket book and taken to Utah in 1870 by his niece, was published in three independent printings and then the original record disappeared. Consequently, Mormon writers like Francis Kirkham and Dr. Hugh Nibley questioned the authenticity of both the trial and the published record of it.

In 1971 this writer and his associate Fred Poffarl came across the bills which Justice Neely and Constable De Zeng had submitted to the county for this 1826 arrest and trial of Joseph Smith. Justice Neely’s bill listed the case as The People verses “Joseph Smith The Glass looker.” The date and the court costs were the same as that on the printed trial record, the costs totaling $2.68 in both instances. Accordingly, Mormon writers like Donna Hill and Dr. Leonard Arrington came to accept the trial as authentic. However, the original docket record still remained missing.

Recently reliable sources in the Salt Lake area have reported that Mormon document dealer Mark Hofmann of Salt Lake City has acquired this missing record. Several years ago we learned that the last person to have the trial record was Rev. Samuel Johnson Carroll. Rev. Mr. Carroll was the editor of the Methodist periodical, the Utah Christian Advocate and he published the record there. After considerable research we succeeded in tracking down the grandchildren of Mr. Carroll. One granddaughter, Miss Eleanor Carroll of Alamos, Sorora, Mexico, reported that her grandfather’s scrapbook was in storage with some family items in Sedona, Arizona. Lacking funds to bring Miss Carroll back to Arizona to retrieve the scrapbook, we shared this information privately with Mr. Hofmann. According to our sources, Mr. Hofmann followed up on this information, brought Miss Carroll to Arizona and purchased the scrapbook, which did contain the original trial record. A current letter, dated May 29, 1985, from Miss Carroll confirms that the scrapbook was indeed removed from storage and is no longer in her possession. It is not presently known if Mr. Hofmann has sold the document or if he still has it in his possession.

According to the agreement made when the information about the potential location of the document was shared with Mr. Hofmann, he was to supply us with photocopies of the document should the information prove correct. To date there has not been such reciprocation.

About the time this information was shared with Mr. Hofmann, he shared with us the news that he had located the original money-digging agreement of November 1825. This agreement spelled out the shares which Joseph Smith, his father and other members of the money-digging company were to receive if their treasure digging activities proved successful. It was Joseph’s involvement in that business agreement that led to his 1826 trial. According to Mr. Hofmann, it was the plan of Mr. Steven Christensen (who had purchased the 1830 Martin Harris letter telling of Joseph’s money digging activities) to publish the Harris letter along with the 1825 letter of Joseph’s to Josiah Stowell (telling of treasure-guarding spirits), as well as a photo of the 1825 agreement. That work did not materialize and the November agreement remains unpublished.

It is hoped that these valuable historical documents will soon be made public, especially because of the current interest in Joseph Smith’s early activities in magic and money-digging. * * * * *

The reader will notice that Wesley Walters tells of receiving a letter from Eleanor Carroll. In this letter Miss Carroll says nothing about Mark Hofmann, but only indicates that the scrapbook has been “lost.” If Mr. Hofmann did purchase the scrapbook from her, it is possible that there was a nondisclosure clause written into the sales agreement. If such is the case, she would not be able to reveal where it went to. We really do not know what the truth is about this matter, but we hope that if the record does exist, it will not remain another “black hole” in Mormon history.

Walter’s statement about Steven Christensen having a photocopy of the 1825 money-digging agreement is verified in another article in this issue of the Messenger.

IRS’s Final Ruling

On March 30, 1983, the IRS ruled that we were “exempt from Federal Income tax under section 501(c) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code.” This was a temporary ruling, however, and could have been changed if it were determined that we were a “private foundation.” Fortunately, on July 17, 1985, we received our final determination: “. . . you are an organization of the type described in section 509(a) (1). Your exempt status under section 501(c)(3) of the code is still in effect. Grantors and contributors may rely on this determination until the Internal Revenue Service publishes notice to the contrary.” We would be happy to provide a copy of this letter to anyone who needs it for tax purposes.

At the present time we are a little behind on our bills, and this is preventing us from getting enough paper to continue our work in an effective manner. We still owe our lawyer over $5,000. Any contributions would be appreciated.

---

BOOKS & VIDEOS

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with Milwaukee television station. Price: $20.00

The Tanners on Trial, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Over a hundred large pages with many photographs of original court documents. Price: $5.95

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Michael Briggs. Price: $2.00

Tract Pack. An assortment of 12 tracts from other publishers. Price: $1.50

Where Does It Say That? By Bob Witte. Contains hundreds of photos from old Mormon publications. Price: $5.95

---

UPDATE ON APPEAL

On May 15, 1985, the final hearing on our appeal of the Ehat lawsuit was heard before three judges of the 10th circuit court. The hearing went very well for our lawyer. Mr. Ehat’s lawyer, on the other hand, had a difficult time fielding the thorny questions the judges threw at him. We are hopeful that the outcome will be in our favor. The decision could arrive at any time.
LDS DOCUMENTS & MURDER

BY JERALD TANNER

As I left the Salt Lake City Post Office on October 15, 1985, I noticed that the east side of Main Street was blocked off by the police. Later I was to learn that a murder had been committed at the Judge Building—less than a block from where I obtained my mail. Steven F. Christensen, a Mormon bishop, had picked up a box in front of his office which turned out to be a “booby-trapped shrapnel bomb.” Mr. Christensen died instantly. It soon became apparent that the victim was the same man who bought the notorious “White Salamander Letter”—a letter which proved to be embarrassing to the Mormon Church. Later that morning another package exploded killing Kathleen Sheets. This package was addressed to her husband, J. Gary Sheets who was also a bishop in the Mormon Church. Mr. Sheets “had helped fund research that authenticated the [Salamander] letter” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 16, 1985).

Since Sandra and I had been the first ones to print extracts from the Salamander letter, we became somewhat concerned about our safety. The next day a bomb exploded in a car less than two miles from our house. Mark Hofmann, who sold the Salamander letter to Mr. Christensen, was critically injured in this blast. By this time we began to seriously consider the possibility that there was a systematic conspiracy to wipe out those who were bringing out information which was embarrassing to the Mormon church. Because of our connection with the Salamander letter we were deluged with phone calls from the news media and others who were concerned about our safety or just wanted to find out what was going on in Salt Lake City. The next day (October 17) the Deseret News reported a surprising development: “. . . police say Hofmann is considered not just a third victim but also a prime suspect in the Tuesday killings, and others may be involved as well.” Although police have continued to point to Hofmann as the “prime suspect,” no murder charges have been filed. If the situation should change before I finish this article, I will make a note of it. The Salt Lake Tribune for November 20, reported the following:

Mark Hofmann, who investigators continue to call their “prime suspect” in the bombing murders of two people last month, has passed a lie detector test indicating he is telling the truth when he says he did not plant the bombs, his defense attorney said Tuesday.

Mark Hofmann—Bomber or Victim?

Lie detector tests, of course, are usually not used as evidence in court, and so far Mr. Hofmann’s attorney has not allowed police to question him. A federal grand jury did indict Mr. Hofmann “on one count of possession of an unregistered Action Arms Ltd. Uzi machine gun” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 7, 1985), but Hofmann pleaded “not guilty.” This charge is not related to the bombings.

MEETING MR. HOFMANN

I first became acquainted with Mark Hofmann in 1980. Just after he discovered the Anthon transcript (a sheet of paper which is supposed to contain the actual characters Joseph Smith copied from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon), Mr. Hofmann came to our store and discussed the discovery. Although he had served as a Mormon missionary in England, it soon became evident that he did not fully trust the Mormon church leaders. He said, in fact, that he was suspicious that the church might be bugging his phone. He did not claim, however, to have any real evidence about the matter.

In the years that followed Mr. Hofmann would occasionally visit our bookstore and tell of the remarkable discoveries that he was making. In the latter part of 1983 (probably December) I first heard that Mark Hofmann had a letter which was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris. It was dated October 23, 1830, and was addressed to W. W. Phelps. When I learned of the contents of the letter, I realized that it could deal a devastating blow to the Mormon Church. Sandra and I had previously written a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. In this book we presented strong evidence that Joseph Smith was involved in money-digging and magic. Martin Harris’ letter seemed to provide new and exciting evidence which supported our thesis. This letter is known as the Salamander letter because Martin Harris wrote that Joseph Smith claimed when he went to get the gold plates for the Book of Mormon, a “white salamander” in the bottom of the hole “transfigured himself” into a “spirit” and “struck me 3 times.”

Fortunately, I was able to obtain some important extracts from the letter and was preparing to print them in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger. I was very excited that we at Utah Lighthouse Ministry would be the first to break this important story to the world. While in the midst of compiling evidence to support the authenticity of the Salamander letter, I made a discovery that shook me to the very core. I found that the account of the transformation of the white salamander into the spirit was remarkably similar to a statement E. D. Howe published in Mormonism Unvailed. This book, written four years after the date which appears in the Harris letter, told of a toad “which immediately transformed itself into a spirit” and struck Joseph Smith. Even more disconcerting, however, was the fact that other remarkable parallels to the Salamander letter were found just two or three pages from the account of the transformation of the toad into a spirit (see Mormonism Unvailed, pages 273, 275 and 276).

Some years before I had encountered similar evidence of plagiarism in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. The Mormon church leaders had always proclaimed that this History was actually written by Joseph Smith himself. My research, however, led me to the conclusion that the largest portion of it had been compiled after his death. I found that later Mormon historians had taken portions of newspapers and diaries written by other people and changed them to the first person so that readers would believe that they were authored by Joseph Smith himself. In agreement with my conclusions, Mormon scholars later admitted that over 60% of the History was compiled after Smith’s death (see Mormonism—Shadow at Reality? pages 127-135).

In any case, parallels I had discovered between the Salamander letter and Mormonism Unvailed reminded me very much of the work I had done on Joseph Smith’s History. Although what I discovered about the Salamander letter was not conclusive proof that it was a forgery, it was certainly suspicious. It seemed, in fact, to throw a monkey wrench into all my plans concerning the publication of the letter. Since I knew that it was very unlikely that anyone else would realize the significance of these parallels, there was some temptation to keep the matter to myself. I knew, however, that God knew what I had seen, and I began to feel that He had shown me these unpleasant facts to warn me against endorsing the letter. Furthermore, I knew that I would never be satisfied if my case against Mormonism was based on any material which had been forged. It was clear, therefore, that there was only one course of action which I could follow—i.e., print the whole truth in the Messenger. In the March 1984 issue, therefore, we raised the question by printing the title, “Is It Authentic?” Under the title we wrote:

At the outset we should state that we have some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris. The serious implications of this whole matter, however, cry out for discussion. If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be mislead. We will give the reasons for our skepticism as we proceed with this article.

On page 4, we wrote: “While we would really like to believe that the letter attributed to Harris is authentic, we do not feel that we can endorse it until further evidence comes forth.”

As soon as I noticed that there were problems with the Salamander letter, I began to realize the serious implications this would have for the study of Mormon history. Prior to Mark Hofmann’s appearance on the scene in 1980, the documents we had used in building our case against Mormonism seemed to have a good pedigree. For instance, the Joseph Smith Papyri were rediscovered in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 1967. Although officials at the museum did not acquire the papyri until 1947, they had been aware of them since 1918. The papyri could, in fact, be traced back to the Smith family. The documents which proved that Joseph Smith was tried as a “Glass looker” in 1826 could be traced back to the jail in Norwich, N.Y. Two men, in fact, signed affidavits that they were discovered in the basement of the jail. Joseph Smith’s “Strange Account” of the First Vision, as well as his diaries, could be traced directly to the Church Historical Department where they had been preserved.

When Mark Hofmann came on the scene everything seemed to change. Hofmann was vague about where his finds were coming from, and no one seemed to think of questioning his veracity. The Deseret News for October 27, 1985, said that Hofmann’s “reputation regarding documents was impeccable, and his friends in the historical circle defended it.” It was only after I began to have doubts about the Salamander letter, however, that I began to realize that Hofmann was not providing pedigrees for his discoveries. While Mormon scholars felt that the Bible in which Hofmann found the Anthon transcript (it was supposed to have been pasted between two pages) came from the Smith family, Hofmann refused to disclose where he had bought the book. Since book collectors sometimes have a policy of checking out every page of a rare book, I would like to have talked to the collector to see if he remembered anything glued between the pages. With regard to the Joseph Smith III Blessing, Hofmann only said that it came from a descendant of Thomas Bullock. When we pressed Hofmann to reveal which descendant (there must be hundreds), he refused to be of any help. Lucy Mack Smith’s 1829 letter, Joseph Smith’s 1825 letter and Martin Harris’ 1873 letter all seem to have no pedigree. In the case of the Salamander letter, I did learn that Hofmann claimed that it came from a man by the name of Lyn Jacobs. I also learned that Hofmann and Jacobs were working together in the document business. Since the documents were all coming from these two men, it was necessary to focus in upon their backgrounds.

Although the money involved in the sale of Mormon documents would provide a sufficient motive for forgery, I began to wonder if there might be some sort of plan or even conspiracy to control the direction of Mormon history by this method. In any case, while doing research with regard to the Salamander letter, I noticed something about Hofmann’s first discovery that bothered me. This was Charles Anthon’s letter describing the sheet of paper which contained the characters copied from the Book of Mormon. Anthon stated that the “letters . . . were arranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks, . . .” This description exactly matched the document which Mark Hofmann found in 1980—i.e., the Anthon transcript. Before Hofmann’s discovery, the church had another old sheet of paper containing Book of Mormon characters. It was believed that this was the sheet Harris had taken to Professor Anthon. Instead of having the characters running in vertical columns, this paper had them going horizontally. Furthermore, it does not have a circular object. When Hofmann made his remarkable discovery, Anthon’s letter was appealed to as evidence that the real “Anthon transcript” had been found. At the time, this seemed to be a good argument for the documents authenticity, but when I later examined E. D. Howe’s Mormonism Unvailed in the light of its possible relationship to the Salamander letter, I discovered that Anthon’s letter is printed on page 272 of that book. This could be quite significant because the important parallels to the Salamander letter begin on the very next page (page 273). I could not help but wonder if Howe’s book had provided the creative impulse for both the Anthon transcript and the Salamander letter. I later did a study of the Anthon transcript which suggested that there may be spelling problems in the material written on the back of the document which is supposed to be in the handwriting of Joseph Smith (see Mr. Boren and the White Salamander, pages 9-10). Moreover, I demonstrated that there were important parallels in both wording and spelling to “Joseph Smith’s 1832 Account of His Early Life.” The parallels in wording could easily be explained by saying that both documents came from the same author. The parallels in spelling, however, do present a problem because part of the material in the 1832 account is in the hand of Joseph Smith’s scribe.

On August 22, 1984, I printed the first part of the pamphlet, The Money-Digging Letters. On page 9, I wrote: “. . . a number of important documents have come to light during the 1980’s. The questions raised by the Salamander letter have forced us to take a closer look at some of these documents.” In the same publication I wrote the following concerning the Salamander letter: “The more we examine this letter attributed to Harris, the more questions we have about its authenticity” (page 6). I went on to show important parallels between other documents and the Salamander letter. I noted that the parallels to the Joseph Knight account (first published in 1976) seem to be extremely important. On page 7, I told of an interview with Martin Harris which was published In 1859:

The interview in Tiffany’s Monthly also raises a very serious question about the lack of religious material in the Salamander letter. In the interview, Harris quoted at least five portions of the Bible. He used the words revelation, Moses, Scripture and Christ at least once. He used the word prayed twice, and mentioned the devil four times. The word angel or angels appears five times. God is mentioned seven times, and the word Lord appears ten times. In the Salamander letter all of these words are absent. In fact, there is nothing we can find concerning religion. Spirits are mentioned many times in the letter, but they are never linked to God in any way. Instead they are linked to money-digging. They are the guardians of the treasures.

This total lack of religious material seems to be out of character for Martin Harris. A person might try to maintain that Harris was more interested in religion in 1859, but the evidence shows that he was always that way. (The Money-Digging Letters, page 7)
On the following page, I charged that Mr. Hofmann had originally tried to sell the Salamander letter “to the Mormon Church for a large amount of money.” Hofmann later told me that it was actually Lyn Jacobs who took the letter to the church. Hofmann seemed willing, however, to admit that he was involved in the decision to sell the letter to the church. However this may be, I went on to state:

In the past Mr. Hofmann acted under the theory that the Church will buy up embarrassing documents to suppress them. This is very clear from his own account of how he handled the discovery of the Joseph Smith III Blessing. In a paper given at the Mormon History Association, Mark Hofmann stated that he did not want “to come across like I was trying to blackmail the Church,” but he acknowledged that if the Church had wanted him to, he would have promised to never tell anyone about its discovery: . . . Hofmann later commented: “It surprised me a bit that the Church didn’t buy it up quick and stash it away somewhere, . . .” (Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 19) . . .

However this may be, it is reported that the Mormon Church felt that Hofmann’s price was too high on the Salamander letter and refused his offer. The document was later sold to Steven Christensen.

We feel that one of the most important tests of the letter’s authenticity is its history since it was written. If Mr. Hofmann will tell historians where he obtained the letter, then it may be possible to trace it back to its original source. (The Money Digging Letters, page 8)

The day following the publication of The Money-Digging Letters (August 23, 1984), Mark Hofmann came to our home and had a long talk with Sandra. He seemed very distressed and hurt that we, of all people, would question his discoveries. He had expected that opposition might come from those in the church, but he was amazed that Utah Lighthouse Ministry had taken a position which was critical to him. Mr. Hofmann tried to explain that he could not reveal the source of the Salamander letter because he had sold it to Christensen. With regard to the Joseph Smith III Blessing, Hofmann indicated that he had given the Mormon Church an affidavit which stated where he had obtained it. He could not reveal the source to the public, however, because the member of the Bullock family from whom he had purchased the document also had important papers concerning Brigham Young’s finances that would be embarrassing to the Church.

Sandra felt that Mark Hofmann was almost to the point of tears as he pled his case as to why we should trust him. He did not make any threats, however, nor did he show any sign of violence. At any rate, Hofmann’s explanations certainly did not satisfy me. On August 25, 1984, John Dart wrote the following in the Los Angeles Times:

. . . unusual caution about the [Salamander] letter’s genuineness has been expressed by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, longtime evangelical critics of the Mormon Church. . . . The Tanners suggestion of forgery has surprised some Mormons, who note that the parallels in wording also could be taken as evidence for authenticity.

The Deseret News for September 1, 1984, reported:

. . . outspoken Mormon Church critics Jerald and Sandra Tanner suspect the document is a forgery, they told the Deseret News.

Jerald Tanner . . . says similarities between it and other documents make its veracity doubtful. . . .

Another disturbing aspect, Tanner said, was the letter seemed out of character for Harris. “In the entire text of the letter, there is no mention of religion . . . If it’s a forgery, then it’s important because there’s a document forger out there.

By the time we printed the January 1985 issue of the Messenger, we had received word that the evidence derived from physical testing seemed to indicate that the Salamander letter was genuine. At that time I wrote the following:

Since I have spent years proving that early Mormonism is linked to magic and money-digging, this news should have brought me a great deal of satisfaction.

On the next page the reader will find a complete text of the Salamander letter. In bolder type I have added quotations from seven publications which resemble portions of the letter. (Colors added to aid referencing.)

The books and articles quoted are as follows:

1. Mormonism Unvailed, by E. D. Howe, 1834
2. Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1976
3. New Witness For Christ In America, by Francis W. Kirkham, 1951
4. Tiffany’s Monthly, interview with Martin Harris, 1859
5. A.B.C. History of Palmyra and the Beginning of “Mormonism,” by Willard Bean, 1938
6. Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, 1983
7. Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by B. H. Roberts, 1930
Dear Sir

Your letter of yesterday is received & I hasten to answer as fully as I can--Joseph Smith Jr first come to my notice in the year 1824 in the summer of that year I contracted with his father to build a fence on my property (During the summer of 1824 there was a small leak that soon grew larger. During the fall of 1824 Joseph Smith, sr., and his son, Hyrum, were walling a basement and digging a well for Martin Harris. 5:35) in the corse of that work I approch Joseph & ask how it is in a half day you put up what requires your father & 2 brothers a full day working together he says I have not been with out assistance (Nor was this the only assistance...he [David Whitmer] found to his surprise that he had accomplished more in a few hours than was do in two or three days. 7:Vol.1, p. 126) but can not say more only you better find out the next day I take the older Smith by the arm (I took him by the arm 4:169) & he says Joseph can see anything he wishes by looking at a stone Joseph often sees spirits (This light of the stone....enabled him [Joseph] to see any thing he wished. Accordingly he discovered ghosts, infernal spirits 1:259) here with great kettles of coin money (kettles filled with gold and silver 1:237) it was Spirits who brought up rock (Joseph, Sen. told me...the large stones...we call them rocks...are, in fact, most of them chests of money raised by the heat of the sun 1:233) because Joseph made no attempt on their money I latter dream I converse with spirits which let me count their money when I awake I have in my hand a dollar coin which I take for a sign Joseph describes what I seen in every particular says he the spirits are greived so I through back the dollar In the fall of the year 1827 I hear Joseph found a gold bible I take Joseph aside & he says it is true (They told me that the report that Joseph, Jun. had found golden plates, was true 1:253) I found it 4 years ago with my stone (He found them by looking in the stone 4:169) but only just got it because of the enchantment (the enchantment 1:267) the old spirit come to me 3 times in the same dream & says dig up the gold (after a third visit from the same spirit in a dream he proceeded to the spot 3:v.l, p.151) but when I take it up the next morning the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamannder in the bottom of the hole (after the plates were taken from their hiding place by Jo, he...looked into the hole, where he saw a toad, which immediately transformed itself into a spirit 1:275-76) (Sir Walter Scott says that the old astrologers “affirmed that they could bind to their service, and imprison in a ring, a mirror, or a stone, some fairy, sylph, or salamander, and compel it to appear when called, and render answers to such questions as the viewer should propose. 6:23) & struck me 3 times (and struck him...the spirit struck him again, and knocked him three times or four rods 1:242) & held the treasure & would not let me have it because I lay it down to cover over the hole (that he would cover the place over 2:31) when the spirit says do not lay it down (he had been commanded not to lay the plates down 2:31, footnote 5) Joseph says when can I have it (Joseph says, “when can I have it?” 2:31) the spirit says one year from to day if you obey me (you have not obeyed your orders...come one year from this day 1:242) look to the stone after a few days he looks the spirit says bring your brother Alvin (bring with you your oldest brother 1:242) Joseph says he is dead (he said that he was dead 1:243) shall I bring what remains ("Whereas reports have been industriously put in circulation, that my son, Alvin, had been removed from the place of interment 5:34) but the spirit is gone Joseph goes to get the gold bible but the spirit says you did not bring your brother you can not have it (he went to the place and the personage appeared and told him he could not have it now 2:31) look to the stone Joseph looks but can not see who to bring (Lawrence...asked him to look in his stone, he looked and said there was nothing; 1:243) the spirit says I tricked you again (This rogue of a spirit ...intended it would seem to play our prophet a similar trick 3:v.l, p.290) look to the stone (he told him to look again 1:243) Joseph looks & sees his wife (he looked in his glass and found it was Emma 2:31) on the 22d day of Sept 1827 they get the gold bible--I give Joseph $50 to move him down to Pa (He obtained fifty Dollars in money mid hired a man to move him and his wife to pensylvaniy 2:34) Joseph says when you visit me I will give you a sign he gives me some hiroglyphics I take them to Utica Albany & New York in the last place Dr Mitchel gives me a introduction to Professor Anthon says he they are short hand Egyptian the same what was used in ancent times (taken by Mr. Harris to Utica, Albany and New York; at New York, they were shown to Dr. Mitchell and he referred to professor Anthon who...declared them to be ancient shorthand Egyptian 1:273) bring me the old book & I will translate says I it is made of precious gold & is sealed from view says he I can not read a sealed book--Joseph found some giant silver specticles with the plates (Joseph Smith, through a pair of silver specticles, found with the plates 1:273) he puts them in an old hat & in the darkness reads the words & in this way it is all translated (he put the urim and thummim into his hat and Darkened his Eyes then he would take a sentence and it would apper...Thus was the hol [whole] translated 2:35) & written down--about the middle of June 1829 Joseph takes me together with Oliver Cowdery & David Whitmer to have a view of the plates our names are appended to the book of Mormon which I had printed with my own money-- (The whole expense of publishing an edition of 5,000 copies, was borne by Martin 1:13) space and time both prevent me from writing more at presant if there is any thing further you wish to inquire I shall attend to it

Yours Respectfully

Martin Harris

W W Phelps Esq
Instead, however, I find myself facing a real dilemma. While the tests and the opinions of noted Mormon scholars, seem to indicate that I should relax and enjoy the victory, I still have serious reservations about the document’s authenticity. In fact, I find it very hard to believe that the Martin Harris I have learned about from numerous historical sources could have written the letter. (Salt Lake City Messenger, January 1985, page 4)

I pointed out in that issue of the Messenger [January 1985] that I had recently examined a number of historical sources relating to Martin Harris, and that these references, from early newspapers up until the time of his death, point to the unmistakable conclusion that Harris could hardly open his mouth without talking about religion. That he could write a letter of over 600 words without mentioning the subject seems highly unlikely. This is especially true since the Salamander letter deals with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and gives ample opportunities to bring up the subject. While it is true that Martin Harris believed in money-digging and the superstitions connected with it, it seems very hard to believe that he would write a prospective convert like Phelps and leave out all the divine elements of the Book of Mormon.

On page 9 of the same issue, I showed that an Episcopalian minister by the name of John A. Clark claimed in 1842 that Martin Harris told him the story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon in 1827 and that Clark did not remember Harris saying anything about the white salamander that was transformed into a spirit. Instead, Clark related that Harris told him about a dream Joseph Smith had about an “angel of God” who visited him “while he lay upon his bed.” It seemed inconsistent to me that Harris would tell this story before the Book of Mormon came forth and then refer to an “old spirit” when he wrote the Salamander letter. In this same issue I expressed the hope that scholars would not “side-step” the issue of the pedigree of the Salamander letter and stated that “Too many of the documents which have recently come forth appear to be like Melchisedec, ‘Without father, without mother, without descent, . . .’ (Hebrews 7:3).”

On April 28, 1985, the Salt Lake Tribune reported that the noted document examiner Kenneth Randall proclaimed that the Salamander letter was authentic. Even the Church Section of the Mormon owned Deseret News (April 28) published an article entitled: “1830 Harris letter authenticated.” At the Mormon History Association, Church scholars Dean Jesse and Ronald Walker told of their research which confirmed the authenticity of the letter. The most noted Mormon scholars seemed to completely accept the letter’s authenticity.

In the June 1985 issue of the Messenger, I wrote the following:

. . . At the outset I will state that I originally approached the Salamander letter with a strong bias towards its authenticity. . . . No one could have possibly had a greater desire to prove the Salamander letter authentic, and I doubt that many people have invested the time and effort that I have in sifting the evidence. This letter has been constantly on my mind for well over a year. My desire has been to come up with a definite answer concerning its reliability. At the present time, however, I still find myself with some serious doubts. . . .

When I originally took a stand against the Salamander letter, some people thought that I was just trying to force the Mormon researchers to come out with their research. They felt that as soon as the letter was published I would jump on the band wagon. The truth of the matter, however, is that my statements were made out of a strong conviction, and the release of the letter has done nothing to calm the apprehension I have about the letter’s authenticity. At the present time I feel almost alone. Even the Mormon historians accept the letter, and I am under a great deal of pressure to get into step with the scholars. . . .

Before making any final decision with regard to the letter’s authenticity, I would like to do further research with regard to a number of items. For instance, I would like to find out if there is any evidence that someone owned the letter before Lyn Jacobs. . . .

In conclusion I should say that although I have serious doubts about the Salamander letter, I still stand behind the thesis we presented in Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. I feel that there is very good evidence linking Joseph Smith to magic.

In the same issue (page 13), we stated that if “the letter is a forgery, one is almost forced to the conclusion that it would have to be a recent forgery.” We also stated that “it is unlikely that anyone but a Mormon could have had the knowledge necessary to commit such a forgery.” The following comments appeared on pages 9 and 10:

One problem with allowing the suppression of important information concerning the source of discoveries is that it could encourage forgers to enter the Mormon document business. Since there is already a great deal of money involved in these transactions . . . there would be a temptation to create such documents and palm them off on unsuspecting collectors by merely saying: “I obtained these from a collector in . . .” If we allow this type of thing to go on, it will certainly encourage the forgery of Mormon documents. Since these documents have an important affect on the religious beliefs of many people, it is crucial that their pedigree be revealed to historians. . . . This whole business of secret dealings with the Church is very disturbing. While dealers have a right to operate in this way, from a historian’s point of view it is deplorable. We can not see any real reason for all the secrecy that surrounds these transactions.

A CONFRONTATION

In the Messenger for August 1985, pages 7-8, I indicated that “Lyn Jacobs has stubbornly refused to tell where he obtained” the Salamander letter. On August 24, 1985, Sandra and I had the very rare opportunity to speak with both Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs. After Marvin Hill had given his presentation at the Sunstone Theological Symposium, we found Hofmann and Jacobs at the back of the room. Both men treated us politely and answered some of our questions. I asked Hofmann and Jacobs if it were true that the letter was obtained for only about $20 from a postmark collector. They indicated that this was true. Since Marvin Hill had indicated that Jacobs may have purchased the letter from a collector by the name of Elwin Doubleday, I asked Mr. Jacobs if this were true. He replied that it was not true. He said he had purchased it from another collector and that collector could not remember where he got the document from. I asked him for the name of the collector from whom he obtained it. His reply was that he could not tell me because the collector had told him not to reveal his name. This, of course, did not ring true. Why would a collector who saw no value in the letter except that it had an early postmark worth $20 ask that his name not be revealed? Common sense told me that a collector would be happy to have other people know that he had such letters for sale. At any rate, Mr. Hofmann then stated that he had been the one who directed Jacobs to the collector. Hofmann, however, did not reveal the name of the collector.

I then asked Mr. Hofmann some very pointed questions that related to the Salamander letter. The answers he gave did not satisfy me, and I felt that Mr. Hofmann knew that I did not believe what he was saying. At one point he looked at me with a sad expression on his face. He seemed to be deeply troubled. It was almost as if he was trying to say, “Please believe what I am telling you.” Unfortunately, I could not believe his answers. They did not square with the facts that I already knew. Although this confrontation was very unpleasant for all of us, I must say that neither Hofmann or Jacobs showed any sign of vindictiveness.

It is reported that at a get-together which occurred late one night after a meeting of the Sunstone Symposium, Hofmann and Jacobs talked freely about the sale of both the 1825 letter and the Salamander letter. The letter attributed to Joseph Smith was sold to President Hinckley for a large sum of money. At that time Hinckley was supposed to have said that it would never see the light of day again. Later the Salamander letter was offered to Hinckley for $100,000 which was to be paid for in one hundred dollar bills. Hinckley rejected the offer. He said that word had leaked out about the 1825 letter and that the General Authorities had decided against continuing to buy up the documents. The Salamander letter was later sold to Steven Christensen for $45,000.

Although I do not know if this report is accurate in all its details, the part about payment in cash reminded me of a conversation I had with Mr. Hofmann on December 15, 1983. At that time Hofmann told me that when he was attempting to place a telephone call late one night, he heard a strange voice on the line which said something like, “Why is he calling out so late?” He said that he feared that agents of the IRS might be tapping his phone because of a problem he was having with them. They were apparently disturbed that he was involved in secret deals which could not be traced with any records. Hofmann said he told them that this was the way that some people he dealt with operated and that the IRS would have to take his word as to the amount of money that exchanged hands in these transactions. Mr. Hofmann did not acknowledge any crime on his part nor did he tell me whether these untraceable deals involved the Mormon church.

POLICE INVESTIGATION

When I began my investigation into the documents and activities of Mark Hofmann, I realized I was taking a very unpopular course. Mormon scholars felt that I was unjustly persecuting Mr. Hofmann. The only one who gave me much help was A. J. Simmonds, manuscripts librarian at Utah State University. Ironically, Mr. Simmonds, like Sandra and myself, is also a non-Mormon.

Although I had no reason to fear that Mr. Hofmann was dangerous, I knew that any time a person tries to uncover fraud there is some danger of retaliation. If the police are correct in their theory that Mr. Hofmann is guilty of murder, Sandra and I may have been in real danger. Although I do not want to pass judgment until I have heard all the facts, if Hofmann is the type of man who would engage in bombings, then the thing that probably saved us from his wrath was that hardly anyone believed my findings. While I have uncovered some important circumstantial evidence indicating fraud, I could not find the hard evidence necessary to convince historians. In the pamphlet Mr. Boren and the White Salamander, I told of my frustration:

In my investigation I have been seriously handicapped by secrecy . . . If I had investigative power like the FBI or could subpoena documents, . . . I could force Lyn Jacobs or Mark Hofmann to reveal where the Salamander letter was obtained, . . .

By the summer of 1985 I felt I had almost exhausted all my human resources. Although I had prayed about the matter from the beginning, I began to fervently seek God’s help. Then a remarkable thing happened. A young man felt the burden of prayer and began to pray with me. He became extremely interested in my problem with the documents and prayed earnestly that God would just open up the way so that the truth about the matter would be revealed.

In my wildest imagination I would never have thought that an investigation would be set into motion by the explosion of three bombs. Although I do not believe that God planned the bombings (they undoubtedly came from the wicked heart of man), the result seemed to me to be a real answer to prayer. While I had previously complained because I did not have “investigative power like the FBI,” now the federal bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the Salt Lake City Police Department and the Salt Lake County Sheriff’s Office are all working together on a major investigation. Mr. Hofmann’s car and home were thoroughly searched and many documents were confiscated by the police. The resulting investigation into Hofmann’s activities has revealed fraudulent activities on his part.

LOST 116 PAGES

Immediately after the police searched Mark Hofmann’s home the question of forgery began to arise. The Salt Lake Tribune for October 18, 1985, reported:

In fact, Sheriff Hayward and other police officials speculate that Mr. Hofmann may have been involved in a historical document forging scam in which he sold hundreds of thousands of dollars in forged papers to collectors and high LDS Church officials . . .

Mr. Hofmann’s possession of the white-salamander letter, the purported McClellin journals and numerous other documents . . . does raise some interesting questions, the sheriff said—the first being, “Why him?”

“Where does he get them? All of the sudden there’s this one guy who keeps coming up with these things, worth all that money. . . .

“I know for a fact that 50 of us couldn’t find these papers in 50 years if we were looking for them,” the sheriff said. “But he keeps coming up with them.” . . .

Also Thursday, detectives continued to seek and execute various search warrants in hopes of gathering more evidence. Police returned to his house with another search warrant after retrieving some evidence Wednesday night. Among that material, which included blank parchment-like paper, personal documents and clothing, were items which Sheriff Hayward said “that there is speculation that these things could be used in forging documents.”

The Deseret News, October 18, 1985, reported that “When police found evidence of forging in Hofmann’s possession, the case took another turn.” On October 20, the Salt Lake Tribune revealed the following:

Forgery, according to Chief Willoughby, continues to be a prime consideration as a motive. . . .

Speculation that the controversial 1830 Mormon “white salamander” letter . . . is a forgery has prompted the church to send that letter to the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s laboratory for authentication. Some of the voluminous documents found in both Mr. Hofmann’s home and his burned out car . . . also will be taken to the FBI lab for tests.

After I began having trouble accepting the text of the Salamander letter, I got the uncomfortable feeling that it and other discoveries Mark Hofmann was connected with might be preparing historians to receive a forgery of the “book of Lehi.” This manuscript of 116 pages was supposed to have been lost by Martin Harris. This was to be the opening portion of the Book of Mormon. After its loss, Joseph Smith translated the book of Nephi to take its place. There has always been a great deal of speculation as to what was contained in this manuscript. As far as I am aware, no one knew anything about the contents of the missing pages until Hofmann and Jacobs discovered a letter which was supposedly written by Joseph Smith’s mother, Lucy Smith, on January 23, 1829. As early as 1982, Mr. Hofmann publicly mentioned that he had “spent thousands of dollars in the pursuit” of the “lost 116 manuscript pages” (Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 18).

Joseph Smith claimed that Martin Harris was working as his scribe when he dictated the 116 pages which were lost. The handwriting, therefore, on these pages would have to match that of Martin Harris. (It is reasonable to believe, of course, that other scribes could have written some of the pages.) Up until Mark Hofmann arrived on the scene, there was hardly anything that one could compare Harris’ handwriting against. There were a few signatures attributed to him, but no letters actually written in his own hand. Moreover, there was not even a dictated letter which bore Martin Harris' signature. On October 5, 1982, however, the Mormon church issued a press release which told of the discovery of a letter Harris was supposed to have dictated to his son. The church claimed that it was actually signed by Martin Harris himself. From what I can learn, the letter came through the hands of Mark Hofmann. Its pedigree, however, was never revealed. Although the signature on the 1873 letter looks remarkably like one Harris penned in 1829, I could not help but think that it was too good for a man who was eighty-nine years old and going blind. I checked the 1873 signature against a signature written in 1871 on Harris' application for a U.S. Military pension and found it to be much better. Below is a comparison of the signatures of 1829, 1871 and 1873.

In the Messenger for Jan. 1985, page 10, I indicated that the “1871 signature does raise some questions about the signature on the 1873 letter, . . .” I thought that this was very suspicious. In any case, the 1873 letter was very favorable to the church. This letter seemed to prepare historians for the Salamander letter which followed right on its heels. The Salamander letter not only bore the signature of Martin Harris, but the entire text as well was supposed to be in the hand of Joseph Smith’s early scribe. With the authentication of Harris’ handwriting in the Salamander letter, the stage was well prepared for the ultimate discovery—i.e., the book of Lehi. It is conceivable that this manuscript might be worth millions of dollars. Although we cannot confirm it, it has been reported that at least some pages purporting to be from the book of Lehi were found by police in Hofmann’s possession. It has also been claimed that there were sheets of paper found which appeared to have been used to practice the handwriting of Martin Harris and Emma Smith. (The reader can imagine how embarrassing it would be if a 20th century sheet of paper contained handwriting that matched that found on the Salamander letter.) If attempts to imitate Emma Smith’s handwriting have indeed been found, it would fit very well with the idea of a plan to forge the 116 pages. It is believed that Emma Smith was Joseph Smith’s scribe for some of the first pages of this manuscript. It would be very convincing to have the manuscript begin in Emma Smith’s handwriting and then switch to that of Martin Harris. With respect to Emma Smith’s handwriting, it is interesting to note that the police found a photograph of her handwriting in Hofmann’s possession and it was traced to a museum owned by Mrs. Wilford C. Wood. This photograph would prove helpful to anyone trying to imitate Emma Smith’s handwriting.

It appears that the police feel that there may be something to the theory that Hofmann was planning a forgery of the book of Lehi. The Deseret News for October 23, 1985, reported:

One of the scenarios Willoughby admitted police are seriously investigating is the possibility that the Martin Harris letter, . . . may be forged and that it may be part of an elaborate scheme to set up a much larger forgery or scam. . . .

Police are investigating the possibility that the letter was forged by someone who later intended to forge pages from the 116 pages of missing Book of Mormon manuscript, known as the Book of Lehi—something police say would be worth millions of dollars. Many of those 116 pages are in Harris’ handwriting. . . .

“If (Hofmann) should just happen to come up with pages from the missing manuscript, they would be tested for authenticity against the Salamander letter,” said one police source. If the letter was forged, the manuscript “would be easier to authenticate. It would be worth millions.”

Police say physical evidence has been recovered that may corroborate that theory.

“You bet your bottom dollar,” said Willoughby when asked if police were seriously considering such a scenario.

As I will later show, Hugh Pinnock, of the First Quorum of Seventy in the Mormon church, admitted that he helped Mark Hofmann obtain a loan for $185,000 from First Interstate Bank so he could obtain the McLellin collection. Both Hofmann and Pinnock were interested in the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon. Pinnock, in fact, had a lead with regard to the 116 pages which Hofmann was supposed to have been following up on. Mr. Pinnock claimed that “during the years of 1973 to 1976” he served as “mission president in Pennsylvania” while he was there, “two of our missionaries claimed to have traced out a lady that said she had them, or that her brother had them” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985). The mission president who succeeded Pinnock “did some looking around for those 116 pages” but never found them. Hofmann was supposed to have picked up the trail after he found the Anthon transcript. In any case, it is possible that Hofmann could have discussed these missing pages with Pinnock. While I do not know that the book of Lehi had anything to do with the murders, this manuscript would be worth a tremendous amount of money. This, combined with the secrecy that would surround its transfer to the Mormon church, could very easily lead to disagreements and perhaps even to violence.

MCLELLIN DECEPTION

In the last issue of the Messenger we told that Mark Hofmann claimed he had obtained some documents known as the McLellin collection. He had mentioned these documents to Sandra on August 23, 1984. Four months later we received an anonymous letter (postmarked December 20, 1984). The letter contained this information:

I am writing you anonymously to tip you off to a cover up by the Mormon church and the document discoverer Mark Hofmann.

A few days ago Mark showed me the original actual Egyptian Papyrus of the round facsimile of the P. of G. P. It is in many pieces and is pasted onto a piece of heavy paper. There are pencil and ink drawings filling in the missing parts. There is another square piece of papyrus pasted on the same piece of paper. Mark told me not to tell anyone about this. He told me it would never be seen again after the church got it. He is keeping a large color photograph.

This letter has been turned over to the Salt Lake County Sheriff’s Office. We do not know whether it was a genuine letter from someone concerned about the suppression of the document or whether it was written by Hofmann or one of his friends for the purpose of giving publicity to the McLellin collection and driving the price up.

In an article published by the Salt Lake Tribune on July 6, 1985, Dawn Tracy reported:

Mark Hofmann . . . said he located a collection—including Facsimile No. 2—that at one time belonged to William McLellin, an early Mormon apostle.

While we found evidence from letters written between 1872 and 1901 that Apostle McLellin did have a collection of documents, in the Messenger for August 1985, we wrote:

So far we have not found anything concerning McLellin having the original of Fac. No. 2. Although it has been alleged that McLellin may have stolen it from Joseph Smith in 1838, there is evidence that Smith still had it [in] 1842.

Although I cannot say for certain that Mark Hofmann never had any of Apostle McLellin’s papers, his claims now appear to be doubtful. Furthermore, there is strong evidence that he fabricated at least a portion of the so-called McLellin collection. As strange as it may seem, Kenneth Rendell, the man who authenticated the Salamander letter, appears to be the strongest witness against Hofmann with regard to this attempt to deceive.

Just before the bombings occurred, I had become very suspicious that Hofmann did not really have the McLellin collection. I felt that the documents which he claimed to have might be forgeries. I knew, however, that it would be very difficult to forge the fragments of the Joseph Smith Papyri which Hofmann claimed were part of the McLellin collection. I decided to discuss the matter with the Mormon Egyptologist Edward H. Ashment. I told Mr. Ashment that we would have to be very careful about accepting the original of Fac. No. 2. I theorized that it might be possible for a person to obtain a real Egyptian hypocephalus that looked somewhat like the one Joseph Smith used for Fac. No. 2 in the Book of Abraham. The areas which did not agree with the drawing could be broken off or damaged. In this way, I reasoned, another piece of papyrus could be palmed off for the one owned by Smith. Mr. Ashment agreed that it might be possible to buy a hypocephalus, although it would be rather expensive.

While I do not know whether Mr. Hofmann ever actually obtained a hypocephalus, evidence now shows that he did, in fact, obtain some pieces of genuine Egyptian papyrus which he tried to palm off as part of the Joseph Smith Papyri in the McLellin collection. According to the Deseret News, October 28, 1985, Kenneth Rendell “said he also sent two pieces of Egyptian papyri to Hofmann on a $10,500 consignment. . . . He said he found it strange that Hofmann wanted something from the first or second-century A. D. containing hieratic script rather than hieroglyphics, which are much more desirable to collectors. He said Hofmann stressed how secret this transaction had to be.” The Salt Lake Tribune for October 28, 1985, printed this revealing information:

Detectives removed pieces of papyrus from Mr. Hofmann’s home and burned-out automobile. Officers, acting on a search warrant, also took a piece of papyrus from a safe deposit box used by Mr. Christensen. . . .

Detectives believe that Mr. Hofmann, 31, fragmented either one of both of the 30-inch by 9-inch papyrus scrolls lent to him on consignment by Mr. Rendell in mid-September, and then showed the pieces to various investors, telling them that they belonged to the missing McLellin papers. Some investigators feel that Mr. Christensen, hired as an “authenticator” of these documents by an anonymous buyer, may have told Mr. Hofmann he intended to go to Mr. Rendell for authentication of the Egyptian script, thus threatening to expose the scam.
The papyrus was apparently broken in such a way that it would make it very difficult for an Egyptologist to read the text. This, of course, would help disguise where it came from. In any case, the Deseret News for October 31, 1985, reveals that Mark Hofmann took the fragmented papyrus to the very man with whom I had discussed the possibility of a papyrus switch:

Ashment said he was first contacted by Hofmann in July about the papyri fragments in the McLellin papers. Ashment later photographed one fragment during a meeting in the Church History Library. But Ashment said the fragment did not match previous descriptions of the four papyri purported to be in the McLellin papers. . . . Rendell said the fact that the papyrus was fragmented suggested some sort of illicit dealings. He said there could be no legitimate reason for fragmenting the papyrus because the individual pieces would be worth dramatically less than the whole, which he valued at about $6,000.

“The document in pieces is worth 10 percent of what it is as a complete unit,” Rendell said. “The piece that now remains is worth well under $1,000.”

It is certainly ironic that the very man who authenticated the Salamander letter would turn out to be the one who speaks of fraudulent dealings with regard to the McLellin collection. Mr. Rendell’s statement that breaking up the papyrus greatly diminishes its value is certainly true in any regular transaction. In Mr. Hofmann’s case, however, this would not necessarily be true. That fact that he represented it as a part of the Joseph Smith Papyri greatly enhanced its value. Wade Lillywhite claimed that Mark Hofmann contacted him before the killings and “offered to sell for $100,000 a papyrus document purported to be an ancient papyrus facsimile from the McLellin papers” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 22, 1985). From this it would appear that Mr. Hofmann was greatly inflating the price of common Egyptian papyri by claiming it was part of the McLellin collection. Brent Metcalfe, who was doing some work for Mark Hofmann, acknowledged that Hofmann even deceived him by telling him” that the papyrus once belonged to Apostle McLellin.

CHURCH INVOLVEMENT

Up until the time of the bombings, Hofmann’s friends were leaking out all kinds of information concerning what was in the McLellin collection and how damaging it would be to the Mormon church if it fell into the hands of the public. The church leaders apparently became very concerned that the material be suppressed.

The Chicago Tribune for October 25, 1985, printed this interesting information:

SALT LAKE CITY—After questioning a leading authority on rare documents, police here are piecing together a theory that the wave of bombings that hit this city last week was part of a daring scheme to conceal an attempted blackmail of the Mormon church itself.

The scenario revolves around a plan to threaten the church leadership with a collection of artifacts deliberately concocted to appear particularly damaging to the credibility of Mormonism’s founder, Joseph Smith.

After the bombings occurred, a man by the name of Alvin Rust said that Mark Hofmann told him that he was selling the papers to Gordon B. Hinckley, of the First Presidency of the Mormon church:

Alvin Rust, who gave Mr. Hofmann $150,000 to purchase the documents last April, said Mr. Hofmann told him that President Hinckley had agreed to buy the documents for $300,000. . . .

It is apparent from Mr. Rust’s comments and the police investigation that, at some point, negotiations were under way between Mr. Hofmann and the church—either through a general authority or an intermediary buyer—that the LDS Church was attempting to buy the collection, a number of affidavits, letters and ancient Egyptian papyrus that may contain potential embarrassing materials for the church. (Salt Lake Tribune, October 23, 1985)

The Mormon church held a news conference on October 23 in which Gordon B. Hinckley admitted that Mark Hofmann had approached him about the McLellin collection but said that Hofmann “wanted to donate the collection to the church. There was no discussion of our purchasing it” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985). However this may be, Mr. Hofmann not only obtained $150,000 from Mr. Rust, but he also approached the church claiming that he needed $185,000 to buy the collection. Apostle Dallin H. Oaks revealed the following:

In late June, Mark Hofmann and Steve Christensen told Elder Pinnock that Hofmann had an option to buy the McLellin collection from a man in Texas for about $185,000. . . .

Elder Pinnock asked me if I thought the church would loan Mark Hofmann $185,000 for this purpose. I said, emphatically not. President Hinckley was in Europe at the time of this conversation. No one else could or would approve such a transaction . . . to have the church involved in the acquisition of a collection at this time would simply fuel the then current speculation reported
The LDS Church was interested in acquiring the McLellin papers . . . but wanted someone to donate them. West said Elder Pinnock approached the client, a Salt Lake man, and asked if he was interested in buying the papers.

It seems obvious that the church wanted someone to buy the collection and keep it secret for some time. During this period the church leaders could deny that they had it. When the pressure subsided, the anonymous buyer could donate it to the church. Apostle Oaks indicated that the church would probably be interested in receiving the collection “at some future time.” After they received the collection, church leaders could still deny that they had bought it. If any McLellin collection ever really existed, it probably would have disappeared into the “black hole” of the First Presidency’s vault forever. At the church press conference, Apostle Oaks said that he told Hofmann the McLellin transaction had “been handled on a confidential basis, . . .” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985). According to People magazine, November 4, 1985:

Steve Christensen . . . knew he was wading deeply into intrigue. “I feel like I’m living through an episode of Miami Vice,” he joked to a friend about a deal he was cutting. Four days later Christensen, 31, was dead . . .

The Salt Lake Tribune for October 25, indicated that Christensen wanted the closing of the sale to the anonymous buyer to be handled in a very unusual way with keys to safety deposit boxes being mailed later:

And, Mr. West noted, he did not believe from any conversation with Mr. Christensen that he had yet seen the documents. . . .

Mr. Christensen explained he had paid for safe deposit boxes and that when the deal was closed, the documents would be placed in the boxes and then he would mail the keys to the anonymous buyer after payment was made.

“I told him that was not acceptable. How was I to know [the documents] were ever put in the boxes?” he said.

About seven hours after Steven Christensen was murdered, Mark Hofmann met with Apostle Dallin Oaks. They discussed the possibility of completing the transaction with the anonymous buyer:

Dallin H. Oaks, a member of the Council of the Twelve, said in a memorandum about his meeting with Mr. Hofmann the day of the homicides that he had a conversation “from a potential buyer” referred to him by Elder Hugh W. Pinnock, . . .
Elder Oaks also suggested to Mr. Hofmann that he “ought to get in touch with the buyer’s attorney, who undoubtedly would be wondering what would be happening in view of the news reports about Christensen’s death,” and reminded Mr. Hofmann that another person would have to be found to verify the authenticity of the documents—a task that was to be Mr. Christensen’s, according to Mr. West and the church reports. (Salt Lake Tribune, October 25, 1985)

In the Mormon church’s press conference, President Gordon B. Hinckley said that the church has a “mandate” to obtain important historical documents. Apostle Oaks, however, indicated that the church was “intent on not getting” the McLellin collection:

FRED MOSS: “Fred Moss with KBYU News. I just have a question. Why is the church so intent on getting the papers? Is it to secure them in the right hands so that they are not taken advantage of and make the church look bad? And where does the money come to purchase these letters?”

ELDER OAKS: “Can I answer the first part . . .”

PRESIDENT HINCKLEY: “Yes, go ahead.”

ELDER OAKS: “Again, why, you say, is the church so intent on getting the papers? I thought it was clear from my statement that the church was very intent on not getting the papers, so that there would be no misunderstanding about this. Could you rephrase that question?” (Salt Lake Tribune, Oct. 27, 1985)

From all I can learn about the McLellin transaction, it appears obvious that while church leaders may have been “intent on not getting” the McLellin collection in a way that would become known to the public, they were working behind the scenes to see that the papers were acquired secretly. On November 15, 1985, KUTV News did a story concerning the discovery of Steven Christensen’s diary. Christensen was quoted as saying the following about the McLellin collection: “Elder Pinnock has saved the Church time, money and effort in countering an avalanche of negative publicity should the collection have fallen into the wrong hands.”

Just two months before the bombings we had printed some important information about the purported McLellin collection and condemned Mr. Hofmann’s attitude with regard to the church suppressing documents. We said that this behavior was “deplorable, to say the least” (Salt Lake City Messenger, August 1985, page 10). In the Los Angeles Times for November 8, 1985, we read:

According to Flynn, who often worked with Hofmann on deals, church officials and Hofmann had heard that anti-Mormon groups were “hot on the trail” of the McLellin Collection. Flynn said Hofmann told him the papers were being held by a Texas bank as loan collateral.

“I was told by Mark that President Hinckley was anxious to get this stuff,” Flynn said in an interview. “Evidently, they had caught wind the ‘antis’ were after it, and they were anxious to get it here to Salt Lake as soon as possible.”

About the middle of November it was reported to me that KSL, a television station owned by the Mormon church, had run a brief story at noon concerning Hugh Pinnock offering Mark Hofmann an armored car, an airplane and cash to obtain documents. I discussed this matter with an employee of KSL, who told me that the information came from the diary of Steven Christensen. Mr. Christensen claimed that when Mr. Pinnock offered to provide an armored car and an airplane, Mark Hofmann declined the offer saying that this would not be necessary. Pinnock said that since the transaction was to be made on a day when the banks were to be closed, the individual receiving the cashier’s check would not be able to call and verify that the check was legitimate. He wondered, therefore, if Hofmann would prefer to take cash from a fund that was available. Hofmann, however, thought that this would not be necessary. The fact that Hugh Pinnock felt that an armored car might be necessary to carry out the transaction shows that a large amount of money must have been involved. I would certainly like to know more about this fund.

In any case, if the church leaders had not continued to engage in secret dealings with Hofmann, they would not have found themselves in the embarrassing situation they are in today. The McLellin fraud cost Hugh Pinnock a great deal of money. He claimed that although he was not “legally obligated to the bank,” he felt morally responsible to pay back the balance of the $185,000 loan that Hofmann owed to First Interstate Bank. On October 26, the Deseret News announced that he had repaid the loan out of his own money. This, of course, avoided the sticky situation of the bank taking Hofmann to court and the embarrassing testimony that might follow. It is also obvious that neither Pinnock nor the church would want Hofmann to become an enemy. Alvin Rust, the coin dealer who also lent Hofmann $150,000 to buy the McLellin collection, filed a lawsuit in which he claimed “he was defrauded of $132,000 in the deal for the McLellin papers” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 15, 1985). Hofmann had repaid Mr. Rust $17,900, leaving a balance of $132,100.

RUSH TO OAKS’ OFFICE

That the Mormon church was involved in a highly secret operation (or operations) with Mark Hofmann became obvious at the church’s press conference. Apostle Oaks claimed that after the bombings began, three different men came to the Mormon Church Administration Building enquiring about what they should tell police:

...just before 3 p.m., Mark Hofmann came to the Church Administration Building and asked for Elder Pinnock, who was out at that time. ... Hofmann came to my office and said he thought the police would question him. What should he say when they questioned him? And I said, “You should simply tell them the truth. You don’t have any reason to believe that this bombing has anything to do with you, do you? And simply tell them the truth.” And then, when he seemed to be questioning whether we should tell them about the McLellin collection, I said, “Look. That’s been handled on a confidential basis, but there’s a murder investigation under way. You should tell the police everything you know and answer every question—and I intend to do the same.”... On Thursday, the following day, Shannon Flynn came to the Church Administration Building... I met with Flynn... In brief, Flynn wanted to know what he should say if he was questioned, and I told him to tell the truth, just as I had told Hofmann.”

On Friday, Alvin Rust came to the Church Office Building... He said, “I know some things. I’ve already talked to the police, but I know some more things.” And I said, “Whatever you haven’t told the police, tell them. Give them everything.”... (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985)

Alvin Rust was rather upset about Apostle Oaks’ comment concerning him:

“I didn’t run to the church asking what to say to the police,” said Mr. Rust. “I wanted to know about the McLellin papers. I love the church but Elder Oaks’ statement sounded funny.” (Ibid., October 24, 1985)

In any case, the fact that people would have to seek out an Apostle to know what to tell the police certainly reveals that there were secret activities going on. On November 18, the Salt Lake Tribune revealed that it was learned that church security officers had been a step ahead of the detectives in interviewing some of the people:

Early on, when it was learned that LDS Church officials had dealt with one of the victims, the prime suspect and key witness in the killings, the investigators’ lives suddenly became much more difficult. It was learned that some of the people detectives wanted to talk to had been interviewed first by church security officers, and nobody really knew how to approach church general authorities with questions about murder.

The Salt Lake Tribune for October 21, 1985, reported that “Friends of Mr. Hofmann have said he did regular business with President Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the church’s First Presidency.” At the press conference, President Hinckley admitted that the church had acquired “40-some documents” that came through Mark Hofmann:

I first met Mark W. Hofmann in April of 1980 when he was brought to my office by officers of our Historical Department... he had found what has come to be known as the “Anthon Manuscript” in Joseph Smith’s handwriting... On March 17, 1981, our Historical Department people again came with him to my office with the transcript of the blessing given by Joseph Smith to his son... Since that time, Mr. Hofmann has sold various documents to the church... The church has acquired by purchase, donation, or trade 40-some documents, some of relatively little importance, and some of significance. (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985)

The Los Angeles Times, November 8, 1985, claimed that “most” of these documents have not been made public. At the press conference, Gordon B. Hinckley said that he bought Joseph Smith’s letter to Josiah Stowell from Mr. Hofmann. In the last issue of the Messenger we told how this letter, purported to have been written by Joseph Smith in 1825, was suppressed for two years by the church. The Tribune for October 20, 1985, reported that even the Mormon Archivist was not told about Hinckley making this purchase:

Don Schmidt, retired LDS Church archivist, said members of the First Presidency didn’t tell him or church historians about the 1825 letter. Nor did they ask him or anyone in his department to authenticate the letter.

It has been alleged that Gordon B. Hinckley bought the 1825 letter in his own name so that the church itself could deny ownership of it. Hinckley was asked about this matter at the press conference:

RICK SHENKMAN: Second thing is, there has been speculation that President Hinckley, that you personally were buying documents from Mark Hofmann, either out of your own funds or using the church funds. Did you in your negotiations with Hofmann ever personally acquire documents from him and were any of the payments ever made in cash?

PRESIDENT HINCKLEY: The payments were made by check and they are fully authenticated, receipted for, on two occasions. Two items. Nothing like the figures you have been hearing today. Relatively small. What’s that?
REPORTER: Excuse me, can you tell us what items were paid for from Hofmann?

PRESENT HINCKLEY: One was the Joseph Smith, Sr. letter to Josiah Stowell and the other, I do not remember.

REPORTER: Can you tell us the price of the letter?

PRESIDENT HINCKLEY: Well, I don’t know that I’m going to tell you the price, but I’m going to tell you that it was nothing like the kind of figures that you’ve talked of this morning. Nothing like that. (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985)

If it should turn out that some of Hofmann’s documents are forgeries, the Mormon church will suffer great embarrassment. Church leaders not only gave Hofmann money, but they also traded some of the church’s own “historical materials” for his documents (see statement of Gordon B. Hinckley in the issue of the Tribune cited above).

“DEEP THROAT”

In the Messenger for June 1985, we stated that “The ‘Salamandergate’ cover-up even has its own ‘Deep Throat’”—that mysterious and unidentified person who had access to Nixon’s secrets and leaked them to the press.” This individual claims that he somehow got access to the first history of the Mormon church written by Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery and that this history tells that it was Joseph Smith’s brother Alvin who first discovered the gold plates of the Book of Mormon through the use of a seer stone. Alvin, however, was driven away by a taunting salamander. Subsequently, the salamander appeared twice to Joseph Smith. Although the person who gave this report does not say that the salamander was white or that it was transformed into a spirit, it has been used as evidence to support the Salamander letter. The argument, of course, is that the forger could not have known that the Mormon church had an extremely important document mentioning salamanders. Unfortunately, however, from what I can learn it seems very likely that Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs would have had this information prior to the time that the Salamander letter appeared, and it is even possible that one of these two men could have been the mysterious “Deep Throat” who was interviewed by the Los Angeles Times. While some Mormons have tried to deny the existence of the Oliver Cowdery History, Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the 10th president of the church, claimed that the church had it. The Oregonian for May 21, 1985, reported:

Church spokesman Jerry Cahill said that Cowdery’s history had been in the church’s possession since around 1900 and probably is locked away in the private vault of the governing First Presidency. . . .

“. . . Obviously, it’s in the possession of the church, but what shelf it is on I don’t know,” he said.

I have found that as early as 1981 Hofmann and Jacobs were trying to obtain information concerning the contents of the First Presidency’s vault. During the same year, Hofmann claimed that there was a leak of material out of the vault. By 1983 he privately boasted that he had even seen the “seer stone” which is stored in the vault. During the same year Hofmann discussed the Oliver Cowdery History with a friend. In the last issue of the Messenger, we wrote:

There is evidence that Mark Hofmann has had special access to the First Presidency’s vault. (As we pointed out earlier, only the most trusted individuals can see documents from that vault.) On September 28, 1982, the 7th East Press reported that since the discovery of the Anthon transcript, Hofmann has “enjoyed privileged access to otherwise restricted Church archive material, including the First Presidency’s vault. One reason for this privileged access, Hofmann thinks, is the fact that ‘I am not a historian. I’m not going to write an expose of Mormonism.’”

Through his discoveries and knowledge of documents, Mr. Hofmann has worked himself into the innermost circle of Mormon historians.

To my knowledge, only Brent Metcalfe and Los Angeles Times reporter John Dart know the identity of “Deep Throat.” Mr. Metcalfe says that he is one of his friends. While we know that Hofmann is a close friend of Metcalfe, this is not conclusive because Metcalfe has other friends who could have gained access to the vault. John Dart has agreed not to reveal the identity of the man. Therefore, he would neither confirm nor deny that it was Hofmann or Jacobs. If further investigation should establish that Hofmann, Jacobs or even a close friend of these two men is “Deep Throat,” then we would have to take a serious look at the possibility that there was a very treacherous scheme to defraud the Mormon leaders by using their own documents. Deep Throat could have obtained access to the Cowdery History and found that it mentioned salamanders. This, of course, would have provided the important element needed to produce the Salamander letter. Since some of the top Mormon leaders and scholars may have been aware that the Cowdery History mentioned salamanders, they would have taken this as evidence that the Salamander letter was authentic. A forger who had access to materials from the First Presidency’s vault and the Church Archives would have been in an excellent position to produce blackmail-like documents which the Mormon leaders would be willing to buy up in an effort to save the church from embarrassment.
It could, of course, be argued that the Oliver Cowdery History does not mention salamanders, but if this is the case, why has the church failed to produce it so that the false story about it could be squelched? In any case, there certainly must be something very embarrassing in this history that keeps the church leaders from bringing it to light.

A COVER-UP

On November 19, 1985, Brent Metcalfe, who worked as a historical researcher for Mark Hofmann appeared on a television show broadcast by KUED. Mr. Metcalfe claimed he had new and important evidence which helped verify the Salamander Letter. This was an inscription found in an 1830 printing of the Book of Common Prayer. Although the inscription is neither signed nor dated, Mr. Metcalfe claims that Dean Jessee’s preliminary analysis of it demonstrates that it is in the same handwriting that appears in the Salamander Letter. There is a signature at the front of the book, but it is not that of Martin Harris. The signature is that of Nathan Harris. It has been claimed that Nathan was Martin Harris’ brother, but I have not found that he had a brother by that name. Martin Harris’ father was named Nathan and Martin’s brother Emer also had a son by that name. The book has a date of “1833” written at the front and the words “Kirtland, Ohio.” Both Martin Harris’ father and his nephew were living during the year 1833. In any case, the inscription attributed to Martin Harris reads as follows: “If this book should wander and you this book should find please to kindly remember that what you hold is mine.”

It has been claimed that Mormon-owned Deseret Book has had the book since 1971, and that Mark Hofmann could not possibly have had access to it until after the Salamander Letter was discovered. Unfortunately, employees at Deseret Book have been instructed to keep quiet about this book, and therefore I was unable to learn how they knew that Hofmann had no access to it. In any case, Sandra and I had access to a good xerox copy of the inscription for a few minutes and agreed that it is remarkably similar to the handwriting found in the Salamander letter. I am looking forward to obtaining a good clear copy of the inscription so that I can make a more careful comparison.

In the meantime, there are a number of questions that need to be answered. To begin with, if the inscription was really written by Martin Harris, why didn’t he sign his name to it? It would be important, also, to know if Martin ever had the book in his possession. The inscription by the unknown hand says, “this book . . . is mine.” It is claimed that the book actually came down through Emer Harris’ descendants. Deseret Book is supposed to have the pedigree of the book, but employees refused to provide any information on the subject.

However this may be, if the handwriting in the book is verified to be the same as that found in the Salamander Letter, investigators will have to take a very close look at the book itself to see if there are any signs of foul play. It is known that Mark Hofmann obtained this book from Deseret Book before the bombings. On KUED, Brent Metcalfe said that “Mark had, in fact, purchased the book from Deseret Book who had it as early as 1971 . . .” He also said that “Mark Hofmann was, in fact, involved in the sale of it . . .” One person told us that Hofmann bought the book from Deseret Book in September 1985 and resold it to the Church Historical Department in October 1985. The reader will remember that September was the very month that Hofmann bought the papyrus from Mr. Rendell and broke it up for the purpose of deception. Brent Metcalfe says that employees of Deseret Book recall that the poem “was in the book” before they sold it to Hofmann, but they “didn’t pay particular significance to it” because they didn’t know “who the handwriting” belonged to. It is clear, then, that nobody knew that the handwriting was of any real significance until after it was obtained by Mark Hofmann. I feel that this whole transaction is very suspicious. If I were a detective, I would want to take a close look at the book to see if a page has been removed or substituted at the back of the book. If there were a number of blank pages at the back of the book, one could remove the page with the poem on it and rewrite it on the next page in a handwriting like that found in the Salamander Letter. If there were no blank pages following the poem, it would be possible to obtain another old copy of the Book of Common Prayer and substitute a page. Moreover, it would be possible to substitute the entire book and add in the Nathan Harris material at the front of the book. A good forger would make the substitute copy look just like the original. The poem, of course, would have the same words, but the writing would be changed to look like that in the Salamander Letter. It is doubtful that anyone who had seen the original book would remember what the original handwriting looked like. The forger, of course, would not be able to add the signature of Martin Harris after the poem because it would give the whole scheme away. It would, however, at least give the impression that handwriting that looked like that in the Salamander letter had been found in a book which had a pedigree which could be traced to Harris’ family. I do not, of course, know that this is what happened, but I feel that in view of what Mark Hofmann did to the papyrus, we must take a hard look at everything that passed through his hands.
There is something else that I feel I must relate which casts a very bad light on the new discovery. That is that both Mark Hofmann and Brent Metcalfe previously claimed that there was a Book of Mormon inscribed with the longest known sample of Martin Harris’ handwriting and also bearing his signature underneath it. Why, I ask, would they use an unsigned poem if an inscription bearing Harris’ signature had been located?

This inscription was originally mentioned by Mark Hofmann himself months before the Salamander Letter was supposed to have been discovered. The inscription was reported to have been found in an early edition of the Book of Mormon printed in England. Mr. Hofmann mentioned this matter to a scholar on May 8, 1983. This fact was recorded on a piece of paper that very day, and this piece of paper is still in existence. The remarkable thing about the conversation is that Mark Hofmann mentioned the contents of the inscription as containing a statement that Martin Harris had printed the Book of Mormon with his own money. This is a very important parallel to the Salamander Letter which has Harris writing about “the book of Mormon which I had printed with my own money—”

On December 10, 1983, which was after the discovery of the Salamander Letter, Mark Hofmann spoke to the same man about the inscription and the important parallel to the text of the Salamander Letter. In addition to this information being recorded in a contemporary note, I distinctly remember that it was relayed to me. From that time I looked forward to seeing the purported Martin Harris inscription.

In November 1984, after Brent Metcalfe had worked for Steven Christensen as a historical researcher who was attempting to validate the Salamander letter, he came to my house and tried to convince me that my criticism of the Salamander Letter was of no value because he had in his possession a photocopy of Martin Harris’ inscription in the early edition of the Book of Mormon printed in England. Mr. Metcalfe claimed that he had personally compared this with the Salamander Letter and found the handwriting to be identical. In the light of this evidence, he felt that I was foolish to continue criticizing the letter.

When the Mormon History Association met in May 1985, I was expecting Dean Jessee to produce this inscription as his main piece of evidence. Instead, however, he showed slides of samples of Martin Harris’ signature. Although he had one document containing four words and a signature supposed to have been written by Martin Harris, he did not use the longest inscription purported to be in Martin Harris’ handwriting. I was disturbed that this inscription was missing and asked Brent Metcalfe about it. His reply was something to the effect that Jessee had not received it in time to include it in his study. I assumed, therefore, that it was going to be used later. After some time had passed, I asked Mr. Metcalfe again why Dean Jessee was still not referring to this inscription. He replied that Jessee felt that it was unwise to use a photocopy. He wanted to see the original book to be certain that it was not a forgery. Metcalfe said he had the information telling of the book’s location at his home somewhere and was trying to locate it.

On August 24, 1985, I directly asked Mark Hofmann concerning the inscription. He replied that he had never heard of it. I could not imagine that Hofmann would forget the very best evidence for the authenticity of the Salamander Letter. In any case, the scholar Mr. Hofmann had spoken to on at least two occasions concerning the inscription was present during the conversation. Hofmann evidently remembered that he had told him the story, and his memory started to improve. He said that a man by the name of Jerry Kelly might be able to help me locate the book. Hofmann then asked me how I had learned about the inscription. I told him that Brent Metcalfe had told me he had a photocopy. For just a moment, Hofmann seemed to be angry. He regained his composure, however, and said that Mr. Metcalfe always shared with him but had not told him about the photocopy. I replied that Metcalfe was very reluctant to share anything with me, and yet he had told me about it. Later Metcalfe told me that Hofmann talked to him about his mentioning the photocopy to me. He did not reveal what Hofmann had said.

After the bombings (November 13, 1985), Brent Metcalfe came to our home again and tried to convince me of the authenticity of the Salamander Letter. I reminded him of the conversation we had had before about the Martin Harris inscription in the Book of Mormon. To my surprise (Sandra was also present during the conversation), Mr. Metcalfe completely denied that he had ever told me that he had a photocopy of it or had ever seen the inscription. He said that he was still looking for the notes which told where the original book was located. I was absolutely astounded at his answer. My first conversation with him concerning this subject is indelibly written on my mind. Mr. Metcalfe did, in fact, tell me that he had a photocopy and that he had personally compared it with the Salamander Letter and found that the handwriting was identical. He even spoke to me concerning the identical formation of one of the letters found in both documents. Furthermore, I asked him at that time if I could obtain a copy of his photocopy. His reply was that that would not be possible. His response on November 13, 1985, was also contrary to what he told me in our third conversation on the subject. This was that Dean Jessee had said the photocopy could not be used for comparison. They would need to obtain the original book. I really do not know what the truth is about this matter. I feel, however, that there are three possible explanations as to why the purported inscription has not been brought to light.

One, that it is a forgery that may not pass the critical examination of experts. Perhaps the proper ink was not used or the signature was not just right. It could even be possible that the inscription did not really appear in a book. All one would have to do is obtain a photocopy of the front portion of an early English printing of the Book of Mormon and then add an inscription on the photocopy.
If the photocopy were then recopied, it (the second copy) would give the impression that the inscription was in the original book. If this were the case, no original book could be produced. This might explain why Mark Hofmann was upset that Brent Metcalfe had told me about the photocopy and why he had a talk with Metcalfe about the matter. Hofmann would have known that I would be pressuring him and the researchers to produce the original book so that the inscription could be verified. If no such book existed, it would put Hofmann in an embarrassing position. On the other hand, if the inscription does exist in a book and is a forgery which could be detected, it might destroy the Salamander Letter. The reason for this is that it was supposed to be in existence months prior to the discovery of the Salamander Letter, and there is no way that the forger of the inscription could have known what Harris’ handwriting would have looked like. (The reader will remember that Mr. Metcalfe said the handwriting was identical.) It is interesting to note that Mark Hofmann claimed that when he was on his “mission to Bristol, England, I bought several early copies of the Book of Mormon in old bookstores” (Sunstone Review, September

Two, it is possible, of course, that the inscription is really in a book and that it is a genuine Harris inscription.
It could, in fact, have been used as a pattern to forge the Salamander Letter. If this were the case, the reason for suppressing the inscription would be that the larger the sample of real Martin Harris handwriting available to handwriting experts, the more likely they would be to detect the forgery. Writing in Utah Holiday, December 1985, page 84, Paul Larsen gave this interesting information:

The most crucial test is handwriting. Given the foregoing, it was the only test that could have actually authenticated the salamander letter—or, in other words, verified that it is what it is purported to be—a letter from Martin Harris. . . . With the salamander letter that presents a problem, since virtually nothing verified as written in Martin Harris’s hand is known to exist. . . .

Maureen Casy Owens, a handwriting expert with the Chicago police, and former president of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences, was asked by Utah Holiday if a page of writing could be authenticated from a comparison signature alone. “No,” she responded without hesitation. “It would require a minimum of two pages of the subject’s handwriting.”

The consensus of handwriting experts contacted by Utah Holiday is in unequivocal agreement on the question. In fact, there is, according to those experts, no way to authenticate the text of the document, given the lack of Martin Harris’s handwriting.

“I did not authenticate that the document came from Martin Harris’s hand,” Kenneth Randall now says.
“That would have been impossible with what little I had.
I didn’t even authenticate the signature, even though there were several Harris signatures, because I didn’t know for a fact that they were Harris signatures. All my report said was that the handwriting was consistent with the handwriting of the time and that there were no signs of forgery.”

Even though Brent Metcalfe is very intelligent and knows a great deal about Mormon documents, he is not a handwriting expert. Mark Hofmann, therefore, could have shown him a photocopy of such an inscription without fear of detection. Turning the inscription over to a handwriting expert, however, would be an entirely different matter.

Three, it is possible that no such inscription ever existed in a Book of Mormon and that Mr. Hofmann never had a photocopy. This explanation would not only cast serious doubt upon the honesty of both Metcalfe and Hofmann, but it would also present a serious problem to those who believe in the authenticity of the Salamander Letter. If the inscription does not really exist, then it is evident that Mark Hofmann was daydreaming about a Martin Harris inscription months before the Salamander letter was even discovered. Strange as it may seem, this imaginary inscription contained the same information about Harris publishing the Book of Mormon with his own money that was discovered later in the Salamander Letter. The serious implications of this matter cannot be ignored. If the inscription does not really exist, then one has to seriously consider the possibility that Mr. Hofmann himself could have created the text of the Salamander letter. It is believed by some that Hofmann’s handwriting is too poor to allow him to make a forgery that would pass examination. This may be true, but he had association with at least one man who is reported to be skilled in calligraphy. Furthermore, Hofmann had thousands of dollars to work with and could have hired a real expert to do the job.
Whatever the case may be, it is apparent that what should be the best evidence for the Salamander Letter (if it does, in fact, exist) is being covered up. Instead of bringing forth the signed inscription which also contains an important parallel to the Salamander Letter, Brent Metcalfe and Mark Hofmann have put forth a purported inscription which has neither a signature nor a date. Brent Metcalfe was the only full-time historical researcher who worked for Steven Christensen in authenticating the Salamander Letter. He later worked for Mark Hofmann. Mr. Metcalfe claims that somewhere in his material he has the information concerning the location of the Book of Mormon which has Harris’ signed inscription in it. To me it seems incredible that a historical researcher would not spend the time to locate the most important evidence. I feel that both Brent Metcalfe and Mark Hofmann owe us an explanation.

With the questions that are being raised by the investigation of Mark Hofmann, one would think that if the Salamander Letter is really genuine, Lyn Jacobs would now reveal to the public where it came from. Brent Metcalfe, however, says that the more pressure that is put on Jacobs, the more adamant he is in his refusal to reveal the source.

One man I talked to said that the FBI would be able to date the Salamander Letter by the Carbon 14 method and find out exactly when it was written. An FBI agent, however, stated that this was impossible. The plus or minus factor is too large to provide any meaningful results.

Metcalfe, however, says that the more pressure that is put on Jacobs, the more adamant he is in his refusal to reveal the source.

How specifically, then, can testing of paper and ink be used to date a document?

“Not very,” says Salt Lake forensic document examiner George Throckmorton, of Independent Forensic Laboratories. . . . “All we can determine with ink and paper is if they are consistent with what was used at the time the document was purportedly written. . . .” (Utah Holiday has learned that the paper in the salamander letter was a cotton rag, very common to that day.)

“Cotton rag paper was introduced to Europe from the Orient in about 1100 A.D.,” Throckmorton says. “And it’s still available today. So that’s basically your age range with the paper. It could have been made one year ago or eight hundred years ago. There’s no way to say for sure. If a modern chemical somehow got into it and was detected we would know it was recent.”

Bill Crueger, formerly of the Institute of Paper Chemistry, Appleton, Wisconsin, and considered among the most knowledgeable experts in the country on paper, agrees, “Whatever one man can make another man can, too.” The evaluation of paper, Crueger told Utah Holiday, is “not black and white. . . . There’s a number of people around who make that sort of paper [cotton rag]—it’s quite an art. It’s not illegal to make it. It’s what you do with it afterwards that counts.”

“Whatever one man can make another man can, too.” The evaluation of paper, Crueger told Utah Holiday, is “not black and white. . . . There’s a number of people around who make that sort of paper [cotton rag]—it’s quite an art. It’s not illegal to make it. It’s what you do with it afterwards that counts.”

Ink is “the same thing” claims Throckmorton. “Your iron gallotanic inks [the kind used in the salamander letter] have been around since the seventh century. And they’re still around today. Even if they weren’t, they’re easy to make.”. . .

“All that the ink and paper tests tell you in a case like the salamander letter is whether that document’s ink and paper were consistent with the inks and papers of 1830,” says Throckmorton. “But, you see, the same ink and paper are also consistent with 1985, since both are still available and in use.”. . .

But can’t ink and paper be tested for signs of aging? Both take on certain characteristics as they are exposed to the elements over the years. Paper may yellow or brown and become brittle. Iron gallotanic ink oxidizes and sometimes takes on a brown-reddish tint.

“You can [artificially] age them both,” says Bill Flynn, a forensic document examiner with the Arizona Crime Laboratory. “You can oxidize something by putting it into a pressurized oxygen atmosphere. That would age both the paper and the ink.” Heat can also be used. . . .

Soon an additional verdict may be rendered by the FBI, which has employed . . . one of the most experienced forensic document examiners in the country to look at the letter. He may, of course, be stymied by the same difficulties that plagued Rendell and his team of examiners. (Utah Holiday, December 1985, pages 85-86)

NEW DISCOVERY

As we were preparing to publish this issue of the Messenger, the Salt Lake Tribune (November 28, 1985) reported: “The Tribune has located what may be the McLellin collection, . . .” The discovery of this collection was made possible because of research done by Wesley P. Walters some years ago. Mr. Walters obtained a copy of a letter written by J. L. Traughber on August 21, 1901, from the New York Public Library. Mr. Traughber lived in Mobile, Tyler County, Texas. Michael Marquardt made a typed copy of a portion of this letter, and we printed it on page 10 of the August 1985 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger:

“I have some little manuscript books written by Dr. W. E. McLellin. I also have his journal for parts of the years 1831-3-4-5-6. I have over thirty letters compactly written by Dr. McLellin containing much on the subject of Mormonism.”
We felt that it was possible that the collection could have been preserved in the “area of Texas” where Mr. Traughber had lived. Dawn Tracy, a reporter for the Salt Lake Tribune followed up the lead furnished by Mr. Traughber’s letter and found at least a portion of the McLellin collection in the possession of his son, H. O. Traughber. While the collection does not appear to have the 1831-36 diaries, it does have the “little manuscript books written by Dr. W. E. McLellin.” I have compared the handwriting of the documents shown in photographs published in the Tribune with copies of letters written by McLellin. Although I am no expert, it does appear to me that the documents bear the handwriting of McLellin. Furthermore, the contents of the material appears to be exactly what one would expect from the hand of McLellin. For example, in his list of 55 reasons he could not be a Utah Mormon, McLellin wrote; “35. Polygamy. Mrs. Joseph Smith, the widow of the Prophet, told me in 1847 that she knew her husband, the Prophet practiced both adultery and polygamy.” This agrees with a letter McLellin wrote to Joseph Smith’s son. The letter is dated July, 1872, and is preserved in the RLDS Archives. This letter agrees in stating that McLellin talked with Joseph Smith’s widow concerning adultery in 1847:

Now Joseph I will relate to you some history, and refer you to your own dear Mother for the truth. You will probably remember that I visited your Mother and family in 1847, and held a lengthy conversation with her, . . . I told her some stories I had heard. And she told me whether I was properly informed. Dr. F. G. Williams . . . told me that at your birth your father committed an act with a Miss Hill—a hired girl. Emma saw him, and spoke to him. He desisted, but Mrs. Smith refused to be satisfied. He called in Dr. Williams, O. Cowdery, and S. Rigdon to reconcile Emma. But she told them just as the circumstances took place. He found he was caught. He confessed humbly, and begged forgiveness. Emma and all forgave him. She told me this story was true!! Again I told her I heard that one night she missed Joseph and Fanny Alger. She went to the barn and saw him and Fanny in the barn together alone. She looked through a crack and saw the transaction!! She told me this story too was verily true. (Letter from William E. McLellin to Joseph Smith III, dated July 1872, typed copy)

Unlike most of the documents discovered by Mark Hofmann, the documents Mr. Traughber has in his possession have a good pedigree stretching back to McLellin himself. There seems to be no reason, therefore, to doubt that the documents are genuine. While most of the material in H. O. Traughber’s possession is in the handwriting of his father, it still throws important light on the subject because it quotes from the original papers of Apostle McLellin. For instance, Traughber quoted McLellin as questioning the restoration of the priesthood by angels:

I joined the church in 1831. For years I never heard of John the Baptist ordaining Joseph and Oliver. I heard not of James, Peter and John doing so. These things were gotten up in after years in order to sustain them in their false priesthoods. (Salt Lake Tribune, December 4, 1985)

The reader will notice the similarity between this quotation and a statement that appears in the letter McLellin wrote to Joseph Smith’s son in 1872.

But as to the story of John, the Baptist ordaining Joseph and Oliver on the day they were baptized: I never heard of it in the church for years, altho I carefully noticed things that were said. And today I do not believe the story.

J. L. Traughber’s papers are extremely important in showing how unlikely it is that Mark Hofmann could have found the large collection of McLellin material he spoke of in the hands of one person in Texas. In one of the documents, Mr. Traughber indicated that the McLellin collection was scattered and some of it was even burned by his wife:

After the death of Dr. McLellan, his widow broke up housekeeping and left Independence, Mo., where they had been living from 1869 to 1883. As she had no particular use for them, she burnt a great many of the Doctor’s papers, and gave away others to persons who asked for them.

I believe that Mr. Hofmann undoubtedly made up the idea of a large and important McLellin collection after reading some of McLellin’s letters located in the RLDS Church Archives. On August 23, 1984, Hofmann told Sandra that he was aware of papers concerning McLellin which were possessed by that church. In McLellin’s letters he speaks of some items he had in his possession. In the July 1872 letter, for instance, McLellin stated:

Now all L.D.Sism claims that Joseph Smith translated the Book [of Mormon] with Urim and Thummim, when he did not even have or retain the Nephite or Jaredite interpreters but translated the entire Book of M. by means of a small stone. I have certificates to that effect from E. A. Cowdery (Oliver’s widow), Martin Harris, and Emma [Smith] Bidamon. And I have the testimony of John and David Whitmer.

From information obtained from Mark Hofmann, Brent Metcalfe helped an LDS Institute teacher compile a list of the material found in the McLellin collection. This list mentions the identical items contained in the McLellin letter: “d. Affidavits he collected about translation of Book of Mormon process: Elizabeth Ann Whitmer Cowdery, John Whitmer, David Whitmer, Martin Harris, and Emma Smith.”
The evidence provided by the papers in Mr. Traughber’s possession seems to show that although Mr. Hofmann knew from McLellin’s 1872 letter that he had these statements about the translation of the Book of Mormon, he never actually obtained them. Brent Metcalfe said on KUED that it was his understanding that some of the affidavits dated back to 1831 and that the one by Emma Smith cast doubt on Joseph Smith’s story of his first vision. Another report given by a local television station claimed that Steven Christensen wrote in his diary that the Emma Smith affidavit was very damaging to the Mormon church. The Traughber papers seem to demonstrate that Hofmann did not know what the Emma Smith statement contained and that he was probably trying to raise the price of the collection by claiming that there was embarrassing information found in it. If Mr. Hofmann really had a document with Emma Smith’s name on it which was exceptionally damaging to the church, I would be inclined to believe that it was a forgery created within the last few years. In any case, Dawn Tracy reported that J. L. Traughber was shown the Emma Smith affidavit by William E. McLellin and copied it “for a book.” The entry originally written by Emma Smith reads:

The first that my husband translated was translated by the Urim and Thummim, and that was the part that Martin Harris lost. After that, he used a small stone, not exactly black, but was rather of a dark color. March 29, 1870. (Salt Lake Tribune, December 3, 1985)

When I read Emma Smith’s statement in the Tribune, I felt that it had a familiar ring. In discussing the matter with Michael Marquardt, he correctly identified it as being a quotation out of a letter Emma Smith wrote to Mrs. Emma Pilgrim. We had printed this statement many years ago from an article by James E. Lancaster in the Saints’ Herald, an RLDS publication. It is found in Mormonism—Shadow of Reality? page 42:

Now the first that my husband translated, was translated by the use of the Urim and Thummim, and that was the part that Martin Harris LOST, after that he USED A SMALL STONE, not exactly black, but was rather a dark color. . . .

The reader will see that the statement is essentially the same as Traughber’s copy made from McLellin’s collection. Michael Marquardt gives the date of the letter as March 27, 1870. Richard Van Wagoner and Steve Walker give the same date in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1982, page 67, n. 78. Dawn Tracy’s article lists the date as “March 29, 1970,” but it is very likely that someone has just misread a seven for a nine. William E. McLellin seems to have copied the item from Emma Smith’s letter to Mrs. Pilgrim. Traughber, in turn, copied it into his manuscript and Dawn Tracy recopied it for publication in the Tribune. In the letter to Mrs. Pilgrim, Joseph Smith’s widow even asked about Mr. McLellin. This would indicate that Mrs. Pilgrim was in touch with McLellin. In his letter of July 1872, McLellin referred to the statements he had collected concerning the translation of the Book of Mormon as “certificates.” It may be that when he copied the material from the letter, he had Mrs. Pilgrim certify that it was a correct copy. This might explain why Emma Smith’s statement was later referred to as an affidavit.

While it is true that the statement that Joseph Smith used “a small stone” to translate the Book of Mormon is damaging to the Mormon position since it links Joseph Smith to magic, the fact that it had already been published in Mormonism—Shadow of Reality? and other publications would make it of very little value. That Steven Christensen was so worried about the “affidavit” seems to show that Mr. Hofmann had misrepresented its contents.

The statement of Oliver Cowdery’s widow, which Hofmann claimed he had found, was quoted by McLellin himself in a letter written in February 1870. It has already been published by Van Wagoner and Walker in their article in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1982, page 51:

I cheerfully certify that I was familiar with the manner of Joseph Smith translating the Book of Mormon. He translated the most of it at my Father’s house. And I often sat by and saw and heard them translate and write for hours together. Joseph never had a curtain drawn between him and his scribe while he was translating. He would place the director in his hat, and then place his face in his hat, so as to exclude the light.

H. O. Traughber insists that Mark Hofmann never contacted him. Nevertheless, he was summoned to appear before a grand jury investigating the bombings. Whether he can travel to Salt Lake City is in question because his wife has suffered a stroke.

Mr. Hofmann’s attempt to make the contents of the McLellin collection seem very sensational must have been motivated by a desire to extort more money from those who wished to keep it hidden from public view. His claim that some of the Joseph Smith Papyri were in the McLellin collection undoubtedly stems from a rumor that some of the papyri had been found in Texas. We had reported this in the Salt Lake City Messenger in May 1971. We quoted from a letter which related that Dr. Hugh Nibley had told someone that “there was more papyri found and that it was discovered in Texas. . . .” Mention was made by Nibley that Facsimile No. 2 was among the papyri. At first Hofmann only claimed that he had the original of Fac. No. 2 in the Book of Abraham and some fragments of papyri. I have recently learned, however, that just before
The bombings he also asserted that he even had the original of Fac. No. 3. Earlier in this newsletter I related that the Tribune reported Hofmann offered to sell Wade Lillywhite “an ancient papyrus facsimile from the McLellin papers.” Mr. Hofmann wanted “$100,000” for this document. I assumed, of course, that this was Fac. No. 2, but when I called Mr. Lillywhite, he informed me that it was really Fac. No. 3 that Hofmann offered him!

The reader will remember that Mr. Hofmann broke up the papyrus which Kenneth Rendell gave him on consignment. Randall claimed that because the piece was damaged, it would be “worth well under $1,000.” Hofmann had told Brent Metcalfe that this fragment was part of the McLellin collection. The Deseret News, November 30, 1985, reported that “Ashment said, that Hofmann wanted $100,000 for this document. I called Mr. Lillywhite, he informed me that it was really an ancient papyrus facsimile from the McLellin papers.” The same article says:

Many in the historical community attribute to Metcalfe their belief that Hofmann had the McLellin collection and was about to sell it. A number of people told the Deseret News that Metcalfe had told them since January that he had seen photographs of the collection or that he knew that the contents were controversial.

Metcalfe told the Deseret News after the bombings that he had believed Hofmann had the collection and that it was valuable. However, he said, all his information came from Hofmann and he had never seen the collection or photographs of it himself. [Deseret News, November 30, 1985]

On November 28, 1985, the Deseret News printed this information:

Police, however, are convinced Hofmann was involved in double dealings: selling documents he never had to different buyers under the pretext each was buying a valuable collection. He took one buyer with him to New York to buy the documents and even showed him shipping receipts, the police official said. “He then told another buyer the documents were in Texas. He can’t have it both ways.”

Alvin Rust, a Salt Lake coin dealer whose son accompanied Hofmann to New York to buy the papers, said Thursday he has believed all along that Hofmann has not been honest in his business dealings. . . .

“Why was he claiming to have pieces of papyri from the McLellin papers when he in fact bought it from someone else?” the police official asked.

CONSPIRACY THEORIES

Since the bombings, many theories have been put forth to explain what happened. Some people feel that the murders are related to the financial problems Steven Christensen and J. Gary Sheets had with their investment firm CFS Financial Corporation. Another theory is that a Mormon (or Mormons) committed the bombings to retaliate against those who were bringing embarrassing church documents to light. Some even feel that the church itself is involved in the murders. This idea seems to be very popular with those who are opposed to the church. While I must agree that the church was deeply involved in the financial transactions which may have led to the murders, it is rather hard to believe that the leadership of the church would be so foolish as to handle the situation in such a manner. The use of bombs, of course, brought immediate attention to everything church leaders wanted to conceal. It has brought a flood of reporters to Salt Lake City and a great deal of unfavorable publicity to the church. Anything, of course, is possible in such a bizarre case, and if we do find any evidence pointing to the church, we will certainly pursue it.

Still another theory is that the murders were committed by anti-Mormons or liberal Mormons who wanted to stop the sale of the McLellin documents and bring the whole clandestine operation to light. Under this scenario, the first bomb would have prevented the transfer of the documents because Mr. Christensen was supposed to authenticate and appraise them. Former Church Archivist Donald Schmidt was called in the second day to perform Christensen’s task, but the bomb in Hofmann’s car again prevented the transfer of the documents. This scenario would seem to require either intensive surveillance or a traitor among the friends of those involved in the transaction. No one was more concerned about security than Mark Hofmann, and it is highly unlikely that anyone could have learned when he was going to transfer the documents without inside information or electronic surveillance.

The scenario suggested by police is that Hofmann and possibly an accomplice (or accomplices) planted the bombs that killed Mr. Christensen and Mrs. Sheets. They feel that the next day Hofmann was in the process of transporting a third bomb (either to plant it or to get rid of it) when the explosion occurred. At first it was reported that the bomb exploded under the car seat, but this report proved to be false. The injuries Mr. Hofmann suffered obviously did not come from a bomb exploding beneath him. Furthermore, police claim to have a witness who saw the remains of the wrapping paper which surrounded the box in which the bomb was placed before the car burned up. It seems very unlikely that Mr. Hofmann would enter his car with a strange package setting on the seat after what had happened to the two bombing victims the day before. This is especially true in Hofmann’s case because he claimed his life had been threatened. Now it may be possible that a package could have been placed on the seat in some way so that it could not easily be seen by Mr. Hofmann. The police, however, claim that they have testimony that Hofmann was carrying a package, and they feel that he was placing it on the seat when it exploded. At this time I do not know how good the evidence is that Hofmann brought the package into the car, but if this can be established, it would almost certainly show that he was guilty of the bombings. It could, of course, be possible that he received the package from someone else, but if that were the case, he would know who the murderer was and could have helped the police solve the crime.

However this may be, police claim that the bombs used were pipe bombs placed in shoe-box sized containers with brown wrapping paper around them. The names of the victims were written on the packages with a felt marking pen. The Deseret News, December 1, 1985, reported: “Police have maintained that Hofmann was injured by a bomb of his own making, and they claim their evidence is substantial. Following the Oct. 16 blast, investigators searched Hofmann’s car and recovered a number of items, including pieces of pipe, brown butcher paper, a felt marking pen and surgical gloves.” Whether the pipe, wrapping paper and marking pen involved in the bombings are identical with the items found in Hofmann’s car remains to be seen. In all fairness, however, I should say that there is always a possibility that someone else placed the items into the car to frame Mr. Hofmann.

One thing that is particularly troubling, however, is that police found a copy of a book telling how to make bombs in the possession of Hofmann’s associate Shannon Flynn. The Deseret News for October 23, 1985, reveals that Hofmann was with Flynn when the book was purchased and that this occurred just days before the bombings:

> About eight months ago, Flynn accompanied Hofmann to purchase a machine gun, which both converted to a fully automatic weapon. Several days before the bombings, the pair purchased “Anarchists’ Cookbook,” a book on how to make bombs, from the Cosmic Aeroplane.

It is true, of course, that everyone who buys the Anarchists’ Cookbook does not actually make bombs. Brent Metcalfe, in fact, reports that he saw a copy of this book in the possession of Mormon church security when he worked there. The church has received many bomb threats and may have used the book to inform its personnel concerning the different types of bombs they might encounter. At any rate, it does seem strange that this book would be purchased just days before the bombings. On December 1, 1985, the Deseret News printed this information:

> Hofmann’s attorney, Bradley Rich, said last week that it was his understanding that Hofmann and Shannon Patrick Flynn, 27, a friend and associate, had discussed building a bomb.

> Hofmann and Flynn face federal charges of possessing a machine gun, but no charges have been filed in the bombings.

> Flynn’s attorney, James Barber, also said his client obtained two blasting caps earlier this year, but the lawyer declined to say what Flynn did with them. Attorneys for both men said the blasting caps have nothing to do with the bombings.

To my knowledge, police have not yet established exactly what Hofmann’s motive would have been for killing both Steven Christensen and J. Gary Sheets’ wife. Police seem to feel, however, that Christensen may have come to the conclusion that Hofmann was trying to perpetrate a fraudulent deal with regard to the McLellin collection and that Hofmann killed him to prevent exposure. It is possible also that there could have been some tension between Christensen and Hofmann over the $185,000 loan from First Interstate Bank that Hofmann had not paid back. It is claimed, in fact, that “Shortly before the murders Christensen waited in his car several nights in front of Hofmann’s home trying to catch up with him” (People magazine, November 4, 1985, page 123). The Deseret News for December 8, 1985, reported that “Under pressure from Pinnock, Christensen had gone with Hofmann to collect a $20,000 check which was turned over to the bank.” According to the Salt Lake Tribune, Nov. 28, 1985, Shannon Flynn claimed that “at one point, Mark Hofmann and bombing victim Steven Christensen came to him [his?] home at 12:30 am. to pick up that $20,000 check.” Furthermore, Christensen asked David E. West, the attorney representing the anonymous person who was supposed to buy the McLellin collection, to “add his name to the $185,000 check for Hofmann, . . .” (Deseret News, December 8, 1985). Christensen apparently wanted to be absolutely certain that Hofmann would use the check to pay his debt rather than use it for his own purposes. While Steven Christensen was undoubtedly justified in his actions, Mr. Hofmann probably felt that he was overbearing and may have resented his parental-like intrusion into his affairs. Under these circumstances it is easy to believe that there could have been friction between the two men. At this point, however, I have no evidence to show that this would have provided a sufficient motive for such a brutal murder.

While one could possibly theorize that Mark Hofmann would kill Steven Christensen so that he would be able to cash the $185,000 check without having to get his signature, we cannot prove that Hofmann knew that Christensen had asked for his name to be added to the check. Moreover, it is improbable that Hofmann could have obtained the check anyway unless he had some actual documents or forgeries that Donald Schmidt could have examined.

When it comes to the murder of Kathleen Sheets, I do not know of any reason why Mr. Hofmann would kill her. The package, however, was addressed to her husband, J. Gary Sheets and some have speculated that Hofmann was attempting to throw the investigation away from himself and towards the trouble Christensen and Sheets had with their investors at CFS Financial Corporation. In all fairness, however, it could be argued that a bomb was planted in Hofmann’s car to draw attention away from CFS.

There is another matter that should be considered with regard to J. Gary Sheets. This is the problem concerning a book about the Salamander Letter which never materialized. Before Mark Hofmann sold the Salamander Letter to Christensen, he was very concerned about its contents and how it should be presented to the world. After Christensen bought it, he apparently decided that he wanted it back. The Deseret News for December 8, 1985, claimed that:

Joe Robertson, Christensen’s close friend, Sheets’ son-in-law and a CFS employee, told the Deseret News that ... Christensen told him he was approached by Hofmann, who asked to re-purchase the Harris letter at nearly twice the $40,000 Christensen had paid. “Steve wrestled with selling it back to Mark or giving it to the church.” Christensen told another friend that he donated the letter last April after learning that the church would like to have it.

While Steven Christensen had the Salamander Letter, he and his business partner, J. Gary Sheets, planned to publish a book about it. This undoubtedly made Mr. Hofmann very happy. One of Hofmann’s best friends, Brent Metcalfe, was appointed to do research for this important book. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Sheets became worried about the affect the book might have on the testimony of, Mormons who would read it. According to Linda Sillitoe, “J. Gary Sheets . . . scrapped the Harris letter project when the letter’s contents became known and controversy ensued . . . . The research was discontinued, Metcalfe was removed from the payroll and was asked to return the computer and printer Christensen bought to write the book” (Deseret News, December 8, 1985). The fact that Sheets stopped the project must have been rather disturbing to Mr. Hofmann. In addition, one of his closest friends, Brent Metcalfe, found himself entirely removed from a project which had meant a great deal to him. Hofmann, of course, later hired Metcalfe as a research historian. While most people were not aware that Mr. Sheets stopped the project, Mark Hofmann undoubtedly learned all about it from Brent Metcalfe. Hofmann was probably upset at both Christensen and Sheets for scrapping the Salamander book, but whether this could have played a part in the violence that followed is only a matter of speculation.

While charges still have not been filed against Mark Hofmann, police continue to maintain that he is the prime suspect. Mike Carter wrote:

Despite a polygraph test indicating Mark W. Hofmann told the truth when he said he had no involvement in the bombings that killed two people last month, officials involved in the investigation Wednesday said “all of our evidence points in that direction.” . . .

“We never close our eyes to the possibility that there may be other persons involved or responsible for the killing,” said Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward. “The reason we have focused our investigation on Mr. Hofmann was because that was where the developments of the case have led us.”

Salt Lake Police Chief Bud Willoughby agrees. (Salt Lake Tribune, November 21, 1985)

While it seems very hard for me to believe that a quiet and mannerly man like Mark Hofmann could be involved in such violent crimes, I have often heard of people who lived very peaceful lives suddenly going berserk over small matters and killing innocent people. Sometimes people keep things within them until they suddenly explode. One thing we do know about Mr. Hofmann is that he was under a great deal of pressure at the time of the murders. Alvin Rust, who loaned Hofmann $150,000 to buy the McLellin papers, claimed that at one point Hofmann came to his shop at the point of tears and told him he was about to lose everything. Hofmann was not only double dealing with regard to the McLellin papers but was apparently doing the same on a Charles Dickens manuscript:

One group, working through Salt Lake City investment counselor Thomas Wilding, gave Mr. Hofmann $300,000 to purchase a rare handwritten manuscript of “The Haunted Man.” At least two other individuals gave $110,000 and $175,000 respectively for a piece of the manuscript, apparently without knowledge of the other investment deal. . . . Mr. Wilding, who said he feels his investors are victims of a fraud, said there is liable to be litigation over the Dickens book as investors attempt to regain their losses. (Salt Lake Tribune, November 8, 1985)
According to the Tribune, November 1, 1985, the notes for $300,000 “came due Oct. 14”—the day before the homicides.

Mr. Wilding said that Mr. Hofmann was to be penalized a total of $4,000 per day, plus interest, after that date due . . . Mr. Hofmann also owed $185,000 to First Interstate Bank . . . He also owed an additional $150,000 to Salt Lake City coin dealer Alvin Rust, . . .

Mark Hofmann was not only having a difficult time financially, but his dishonesty with regard to the McLellin collection was about to catch up with him. His entire reputation as a Mormon document dealer was at stake. Mr. Hofmann had already shown signs of irrational behavior when he broke up the Rendell papyrus for the purpose of deception. Under the mounting pressure, he could have decided to take more desperate action in an attempt to save himself from ruin.

One thing that really bothers me about the whole situation is that Mark Hofmann has refused to talk to police or to submit to a lie detector test administered by the police. His lawyers claim that he is not talking because the police have already made up their mind that he is the prime suspect. While it is certainly true that the police should have been more cautious in their statements to the press, Hofmann’s refusal to talk about the murders does not help the situation. If he is really innocent, then his silence is only tending to help the real murderer (or murderers) to remain at large and to increase the possibility that someone else will be killed. Even if he has no information about the real killer(s), an honest presentation of the facts could possibly help police redirect their investigation. Then they could focus their attention on more profitable areas. If, on the other hand, Hofmann is really guilty, then the less he says the harder it will be to convict him. His statements would only tend to incriminate him.

Although the evidence showing that Hofmann was guilty of fraudulent business dealings seems to be irrefutable, this does not necessarily mean that he is a murderer. It could be possible that he is being framed. While his silence tends to make me suspicious, I will try to keep an open mind. The Bible says that “He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him” (Proverbs 18:13). If anyone has any relevant information with regard to this subject, I would appreciate hearing about it. This issue of the Messenger contains only a very sketchy account of the Mark Hofmann story. I am, however, working on a book on the subject.

While we are sending a free copy to everyone on our mailing list, it costs us about ten times as much postage to send an individual copy which does not go bulk rate. This, plus the size of this newsletter, has forced us to put a charge on additional copies. There is still no subscription charge on the Messenger, and we will continue to send out free mailings as the Lord provides. We do, however, welcome donations by those who wish to help in the ministry. All donations to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY are tax deductible.

We are spending a great deal of time trying to get to the bottom of the Salamandergate scandal. Coming issues of this newsletter will probably have more on the bombings and the Mormon church’s attempt to suppress embarrassing documents.

Still More Developments

After the bomb exploded in Mark Hofmann’s car, investigators learned that Hofmann had a copy of the “Oath of a Freeman.” This is supposed to be the “oldest document ever printed on an American press.” He was trying to sell it to the Library of Congress for 1.5 million dollars. It is claimed that Hofmann bought this document for only $23 from Argosy Bookstore in New York. When I learned about this matter, I felt that this small sheet of paper, with printing only on one side, would have to be one of the greatest finds of the century or else a clever forgery. I reasoned that if a person were forging such an item, it would be easy to print more than one copy. The first copy could be sold for a very large amount of money and the other copies would go for smaller amounts at a later time. At any rate, after police began investigating Hofmann, it was reported to me that they had found three copies. Although police did not mention the broadside by name, they said they were concerned about forgery because they had found a duplication of documents. On December 21, 1993, the Salt Lake Tribune reported that Hofmann did, in fact, have more than one copy:

Shannon Patrick Flynn, however, said Friday that Mr. Hofmann claimed he found two copies of the oath, . . .

The Tribune Friday contacted Dickson D. “Duke” Cowley . . . who said he and another Arizona man were approached in September by Mr. Hofmann and Mr. Flynn, who represented that they were in possession of a second copy of the oath and wanted Mr. Cowley and co-investor Wilford Cardon to buy a 30 percent interest in that document for $175,000.

The Deseret News for December 22, 1993, reported:

Sources in the Salt Lake County attorney’s office and the Salt Lake City Police Department confirmed that, in addition to Hofmann being their prime suspect in bombings that killed two people last October, they are considering fraud and/or forgery charges against him. Richard P. Howard, RLDS Church historian, flew Tuesday to Salt Lake City . . . bringing with him three documents for study. One was the Joseph Smith III blessing. . . .

Allen Roberts, a local architect and historian, said Howard told him Tuesday that all documents relating to Hofmann were being examined. Howard said police told him “they had found a person who could sit down and write out a Joseph Smith III blessing in Thomas Bullock’s handwriting,” according to Roberts.

When I questioned why Hofmann would not tell where he obtained the blessing document, he claimed that he had made an affidavit for the church which revealed its source. On December 22, I was informed that the affidavit gave the name as Allen Bullock of Coalville, Utah, and that no such person could be found.
Writing in the Salt Lake Tribune, September 28, 1985, Dawn Tracy claimed that “Tumultuous times may be ahead as Mormons wrestle with scholarly works challenging traditional stories about the origins of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.” James L. Clayton, a Mormon scholar who teaches history at the University of Utah, made this interesting comment:

> There’s confusion swirling around the LDS community on how to handle new documents, appropriate methods to study sacred history and the role of church religion teachers. . . . If you aren’t confused, you may not have the full picture of what’s going on. (Ibid.)

As early as 1957, Thomas O’Dea predicted that the Mormon Church was facing a crisis. In The Mormon Establishment, pages 153-54, Wallace Turner wrote:

> Dr. Thomas F. O’Dea, a sociologist at Columbia University, who wrote a major study called The Mormons . . . said that “Mormonism is in a sleeping crisis. It is a strange crisis, one not easily noticed; a lotus-eating crisis, a sleeping crisis, an unrecognized crisis of prosperity and acceptance. It has met all its crises of adversity. But can it survive its own success?”

Dr. O’Dea claimed that the Church was facing “the threat of apostasy on the part of its intellectuals” (The Mormons, page 234). He maintained that “A final loss of the intellectual would be a wound from which the church could hardly recover. A liberalization of belief and an abandonment of traditional positions in faith would transform, if not destroy Mormonism. These potentialities slumber fitfully and insecurely within the present state of prolonged but regularized crisis” (Ibid., page 240).

LARSON FORCED OUT

That the crisis has become very severe became evident on September 28, 1985, when the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

> One church scholar said he was forced to resign his job after writing a research paper. . . .

Stan Larson, a scripture-translation researcher, said he was forced to resign his job at the church’s Salt Lake City Scripture Translation Division after writing a paper challenging traditional beliefs about the Book of Mormon.

Dr. Larson, who reads Greek, Latin, Syriac and Hebrew, compared passages in the Book of Mormon—sacred scripture to Mormons—with the King James Version and earliest existing biblical manuscripts. He concluded that because translation errors in the King James Version are mirrored in the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith copied passages from the Bible rather than translate Jesus Christ’s Sermon on the Mount from ancient plates.

Linda Olson, a primary president in Mr. Larson’s ward, asked for a copy of the paper from Dr. Larson, and then handed it over to the bishop, Forrest Bitten, who passed it along to church headquarters. Mrs. Olson and Bishop Bitten said church authorities had asked them for the paper.

Dr. Larson said the director of the translation division suspended him from his job the next day. He said he was given an option of immediately resigning with one month’s pay or submitting to scrutiny from two church committees. If either committee reached a negative conclusion, he would be fired, dating back to the day he had met with supervisors. Dr. Larson said he elected to resign.
While the Tribune titled this article, “Scholar Who Challenges LDS Beliefs is Forced to Resign,” the Mormon Church’s newspaper, Deseret News, carried the following title over its article: “LDS are told they need not fear honest research on the Book of Mormon” (September 29, 1985). Although the Deseret News reported that Dr. Larson was forced to resign, it quoted Richard P. Lindsay, public communications managing director for the church, as saying:

The church and its membership have nothing to fear from any honest scholarship which treats the subject of the Book of Mormon, its doctrine and its historical origins, . . .

While the Mormon Church has the right to fire those who do not believe in its teachings, Church leaders have picked an exceptionally bad time to deal with the issue in this manner.

That Joseph Smith plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible in creating the Book of Mormon is evident to those who have made a careful comparison of the two books. We have cited over 200 places where the Book of Mormon used quotations from the New Testament (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 74-79). Most of these quotations were supposed to have been recorded in the Book of Mormon between 600 B.C. and 33 A.D.—i.e., before the New Testament was even written! Furthermore, we have demonstrated that the early Greek manuscripts of the Bible do not support Joseph Smith’s Inspired Translation of the Bible (Ibid., pages 384-393). For example, in the King James Version, John 1:1 was translated as follows: “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.” In Joseph Smith’s Inspired Version, this unusual rendition of John 1:1 appears: “In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God.” Joseph Smith’s translation is not supported by the ancient Greek manuscripts. In fact, in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 384, we have made our own translation of John 1:1 as it appears in Papyrus Bodmer II, dated about 200 A.D. Our translation confirms the King James Version: “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.”

Mormon leaders claim that the Catholic Church altered the Bible and that Joseph Smith was restoring the true text. Since the Bodmer Papyrus predates the time when the Catholic Church came to power, it casts considerable doubt on Joseph Smith’s rendition. Robert J. Matthews, who is considered the Mormon Church’s top authority on the Inspired Revision of the Bible, made this revealing statement:

In the main the passages revised by Joseph Smith are not supported by the three great parchment manuscripts that now enjoy popularity, nor by the thousands of papyrus manuscripts and fragments, nor by the Dead Sea Scrolls. (“Joseph Smith’s Revision of the Bible,” by Robert J. Matthews, 1968, typed copy, page 17)

Stan Larson used a different approach to test the Book of Mormon, but he arrived at the same conclusion as we did—i.e., Joseph Smith was not translating ancient records. Dr. Larson examined the text of a sermon Jesus was supposed to have given to the ancient Nephites which is recorded in the Book of Mormon. It is almost identical to the Sermon on the Mount as published in the King James Version of the Bible. Larson desired to find out if the sermon in the Book of Mormon was an actual translation from the “gold plates” or whether it was merely plagiarized from the King James Version. He knew that the text of the King James Version was based on later manuscripts, and that after it was published much older manuscripts were found. These manuscripts demonstrate that some errors had crept into the Greek text and were preserved in the King James Version. He reasoned, therefore, that if the earlier and better manuscripts supported readings in Joseph Smith’s translation, it would tend to show that Smith was working from an ancient record. If, on the other hand, the errors were perpetuated in Joseph Smith’s “translation,” it would prove that Smith merely lifted his material from the King James Version. If the material was plagiarized from the King James Version, the Book of Mormon could not possibly be “Another Testament of Jesus Christ,” as the Mormon Church maintains.

Dr. Larson found twelve places in the Sermon on the Mount where the top Greek scholars agree that the King James Version is in error because of its dependence on later manuscripts. When Larson compared the Book of Mormon, he found that in every case Joseph Smith blindly copied the errors of the King James Version. The following statements are taken from Dr. Larson’s study:

The text of this BOM [Book of Mormon] sermon provides an ideal opportunity to ascertain its accuracy as a real translation, for Hugh Nibley has suggested that one must test the BOM “against its purported background” in antiquity. If at each of these twelve points the BOM has a variant version differing from both forms of the extant Greek—from both the earliest ascertainable Greek text and the later, derivative Greek text—then one would be unable to pronounce judgment on the BOM version. This is so because the differing text in the BOM could be the way the sermon was delivered in the New World. However, if the BOM text always sides with the secondary Greek text which is demonstrably a later development in the Greek, then this dependence would be strong evidence against the historicity of the BOM. . . Lastly, if the BOM text supports the better and demonstrably more ancient MSS which have become available in the last 470 years, it would be striking confirmation of the BOM’s historicity. That is to say, if the BOM text departs from the KJV to agree with the original text, it would indeed be independent verification of the BOM as a genuine document from antiquity.

... the question at hand is the historicity of the BOM account, ... It is this writer’s conclusion, arrived at after diligent study of the documents that have been utilized in the analysis of the twelve selected examples, that the historicity of the BOM text of the Sermon on the Mount has not been verified by modern MS discovery. The BOM text does not agree with the earliest Greek text at these twelve points, but does agree with the TR [Textus Receptus] and the KJV. (“The Sermon on the Mount: What Its Textual Transformation Discloses concerning the Historicity of the Book of Mormon,” unpublished manuscript by Stan Larson, pages 24-26)

At the front of this article the reader will find a photograph of a papyrus fragment containing a portion of the Sermon on the Mount. Bruce Manning Metzger lists it as Papyrus 67 (The Text of the New Testament, page 254). Larson, however, feels that it should be identified as Papyrus 64 because it is actually part of the same manuscript. In any case, both scholars agree that it was written about 200 A.D. This papyrus fragment contains the text of Matthew 5:27. In the King James Version this verse reads as follows: “Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery:”

Adam Clarke, who lived in Joseph Smith’s time, pointed out that the words translated as “by them of old time” were “omitted by nearly a hundred MSS., and some of them of the greatest antiquity and authority; also by the Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Gothic, and Sclavonian versions; by four copies of the old Itala; and by Origen, Cyril, Theophylact, Euthymius, and Hilary. On this authority Wetstetein and Griesbach have left it out of the text.” (Clarke’s Commentary, vol. 5, page 73)

The papyrus fragment spoken of above was found during the present century and confirms Clarke’s suspicion that the five words (translated from two Greek words) were an interpolation to the text. Below is our transcription and translation of the words which appear on the papyrus fragment beginning in the middle of the ninth line and extending to the middle of the tenth line.

!Transcription and Translation

The following shows how the text would have to read on the papyrus fragment to support the translation which appears in the King James Version. The interpolation has been circled.

When Joseph Smith wrote the Book of Mormon, he blindly copied the interpolation “by them of old time” into his book (see 3 Nephi 12:27). Stan Larson feels that the Greek words should actually be rendered “to them of old time” instead of “by them of old time.” He, therefore, accuses Joseph Smith of not only plagiarizing an interpolation but also of using the King James “mistranslation” of these words (see page 26). Larson’s translation appears to be more reasonable.

At any rate, Stan Larson says that the text of the Book of Mormon shows evidence of having been derived from the King James Version after “the italic typeface” was standardized in the 1769 printing. He maintains that “All of these considerations force one to place the origin of the BOM account of the Sermon on the Mount on the historical time-line somewhere after 1769 and before 1830 when the BOM was published. This analysis based on textual criticism independently confirms Krister Stendahl’s discussion from the perspective of redaction criticism and genre criticism that the BOM text of the Sermon on the Mount is not a genuine translation from an ancient language, but rather is Joseph Smith’s nineteenth century targumic expansion of the English KJV text” (pages 30-31).

In footnote 34, Stan Larson shows that Joseph Smith’s Inspired Version of the Bible also failed the test when it was compared with the Greek manuscripts:

Likewise, Joseph Smith’s revision of the KJV, which is known as the Joseph Smith Translation (hereinafter JST) has not been substantiated by modern MS discovery. . . . In each of these twelve secure examples from the Sermon on the Mount the JST fails to agree with the original text . . . In one instance the JST revises the text of the KJV and the BOM in a direction further away from the original text, . . . (page 40)

In 1978 Brigham Young University Studies published an article by Stan Larson. In his recent paper Dr. Larson claims that this article “was censored by Charles Tate, the editor of BYU Studies, who expunged the following statements . . .” Larson proceeded to restore the material which was censored in BYU Studies and then stated:
These points evidently demonstrated too clearly for the editor of BYU Studies that Joseph Smith plagiarized from the KJV when dictating the Biblical quotations in the BOM. (page 41)

Dr. Larson is considered to be one of the top scholars in the Mormon Church. Besides his work in languages, he has become known for his research with regard to the text of the original manuscripts of the Book of Mormon. The church has published articles by him in the official publication, The Ensign (see the issues for September 1976 and September 1977). The September 1977 issue, page 91, referred to him as “coordinator of the standard works translation in the Church Translation Services.”

Stan Larson’s study on the text of the Sermon on the Mount and its relationship to the Book of Mormon is a very scholarly piece of work. Church leaders have apparently realized that the paper is irrefutable. Instead of dealing with the issues, they have decided to get rid of the man.

The Los Angeles Times, October 5, 1985, quoted Dr. Larson as saying:

“I went into New Testament textual studies hoping that when I compared Greek and Syriac manuscripts with the Book of Mormon that I would find support for the Book of Mormon and be able to show its antiquity,” Larson said. “I hoped to find support for the church, but I haven’t, to be honest.”

ATTACK ON M.H.A.

The Mormon History Association was organized in 1965. Its membership has included some of the top historians in the Church. In May 1985 we went back to Kansas City, Missouri to attend the annual meetings of this organization. We were astonished to hear some of the church’s top scholars frankly admit Joseph Smith’s involvement in magic and money-digging. Mormon historians, who had fought these charges for many years, seemed to just cave in under the weight of the evidence.

The Mormon Church had originally given a great deal of support to the Mormon History Association, but now it seems to be backing away from the organization. Dawn Tracy reported:

At BYU, officials are reacting to other reevaluations of church history by “leaning away” from the Mormon History Association, an independent professional organization, and creating a program of their own. . . . Keith Perkins, chairman of the BYU Department of Church History and Doctrine, said officials have established their own symposiums because MHA wasn’t allowing orthodox views to be presented. He said the BYU symposiums “more meet our needs.” Employees may attend MHA meetings but BYU no longer pays travel costs.

“Like me, many people are upset. When I see things I hold sacred attacked, I’m offended,” he said.

Robert J. Matthews, director of the BYU Department of Religious Education, said he has issued a “suggestion, and invitation” to employees to support the BYU program.

“We’re not giving orders,” he said.

“Our invitation didn’t mention MHA but people were obviously aware we are leaning away from the organization.”

Former MHA president Davis Bitton, professor of history, U. of U., called the decision “Isolating and narrow.” He said that for 20 years MHA has not tried to do public relations for the church but also has not participated in anti-Mormonism.

Dr. Matthews and Perkins said they didn’t pressure associate professor Susan Easton to withdraw a paper from MHA’s May symposium to be held in Salt Lake City. When asked why she withdrew the paper, Dr. Easton said “no comment.”. . .

Two employees in the Church Education System, who asked not to be identified, said supervisors have questioned them about papers they’ve published. (Salt Lake Tribune, September 28, 1985)

On June 29, 1985, John Dart reported the following in the Los Angeles Times:

Two women who wrote a biography of Mormon founder Joseph Smith’s first wife say they have been barred from speaking about their research at church meetings although the book has won two Mormon prizes for history.

Linda K. Newell, who wrote “Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith” with Valeen T. Avery, said church authorities “decided to remove the possibility that anyone might interpret our occasional speaking at (Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints) meetings as (amounting to) church endorsement of the book.”. . .

Newell, of Salt Lake City, said that she learned indirectly of the ban from friends and could only find the reasons when she met, at her request, with two members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, the church’s top managerial body.

She said the two officials did not dispute the contents of the book, but they said that it conflicted with traditional interpretations of Joseph Smith—“particularly in regard to the initiation of polygamy in the early LDS church and therefore challenged the faith of some Latter Day Saints.”

Avery, a historian with Northern Arizona University in Flagstaff, said in a separate interview that their book says that Smith was “dishonest with Emma, taking his friends’ daughters or wives as his wives. Joseph comes across in the book as a human being with flaws in his character.”. . .
“Mormon Enigma,” in its fourth printing since publication last fall by Doubleday, was cited as the best book of 1984 by the Mormon History Assn. and was co-winner of the David W. and Beatrice Evans Award for excellence in Mormon and Western biography. The latter award presentation was made at church-owned Brigham Young University.

Mormon historian Thomas G. Alexander, director of the Charles Redd Center at BYU, said he found the speaking ban “very disturbing.”

We have read Mormon Enigma and consider it to be a very good book. It is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry for $19.95 (mail orders add 10% for postage and handling).

NOVEL OR HISTORY?

While we felt that Mormon scholars had yielded a great deal of ground at the meetings of the Mormon History Association in May, by the time the Sunstone Theological Symposium arrived in August, they had retreated even further. (This symposium, which attracts hundreds of Mormon scholars, is not officially connected with the church.) The burning question at the symposium seemed to be whether Joseph Smith really had “gold plates” from which he translated the Book of Mormon and whether the Book of Mormon should be considered as real history. When the question was raised at the first session, C. Jess Groesbeck jokingly responded: “David, I wish you hadn’t asked that question. . . .” In his reply, Levi Peterson pointed out that “There were remarks by those who observed him [Joseph Smith] that he could translate without the plates anywhere around, and we understand now that he translated by peering into the stone in the hat—using the hat to exclude light, so that he could see what was in the stone . . .” Professor Peterson went on to point out that if Joseph Smith didn’t really need the plates to translate, what “difference does it make if they were real or not?” Although many members of the audience seemed to be amused by this statement, it did not really answer the question. Obviously, it does make a great deal of difference whether the plates “were real or not.” Since Joseph Smith claimed that he received the “gold plates” from an angel, and since the Book of Mormon goes into great detail telling how the plates were prepared so they could be translated in the last days, it logically follows that a person cannot question the existence of the plates without making Joseph Smith a deceiver and the Book of Mormon a figment of his imagination. There is really no middle ground here.

At another session Marvin Hill, a professor of history at church-owned Brigham Young University, asserted that the Book of Mormon does not have to be history to be true:

. . . everybody’s questioning whether the plates existed and whether the Book of Mormon is history and so on. The stopping place for all of that is if you believe that Joseph is a prophet and if what he had to say is inspired. The Doctrine and Covenants doesn’t have to be history to be true, and my feeling is that the Book of Mormon may not have to be history to be true.

We do not see how Mormon historians can accept the Book of Mormon as true and yet claim that it doesn’t have to be historical. Apparently, what they are trying to tell us is that it is a good religious novel which contains inspiring thoughts, even though it was not written in ancient times as Joseph Smith affirmed. Some of the Mormon scholars who subscribe to the idea that the Book of Mormon is only a religious novel even refer to it as “scripture.” Their definition of scripture, however, is very different from that of a true believer. They are not saying that it is the “word of the Lord,” but only that it is accepted by the people as scripture. It is scripture in the same sense as the Koran or the Rig-Veda. If these historians are asked if Joseph Smith really had the plates, they may reply in the affirmative. They do not, however, believe that the plates date back to the time of the ancient Nephites but that they were created in the 19th century to convince the Book of Mormon witnesses that Joseph Smith really had an ancient record.

Lyn Jacobs, the man who was supposed to have discovered the Salamander letter, also spoke at one of the sessions of the Sunstone Symposium. Even though he indicated that he did not believe the Book of Mormon as history, he said that the church must continue to hold to its historicity:

If we don’t accept it [the Book of Mormon] as historical any longer, . . . then I think what we are doing, then, is . . . questioning the whole validity of the church itself—of Joseph Smith’s stance in it and . . . the stance of the living prophet today, etc. . . . if one still accepts what I do, that it really needs to within the church remain as a historical document—not that I believe that it is one, but nevertheless I think that the church has to remain believing that. It has to continue to believe it’s actual history . . .
ROBERTS’ DOUBTS

The fact that some of Mormonism’s top scholars have lost faith in the Book of Mormon as history certainly presents a serious problem to church leaders. The problem is compounded by the fact that newspapers and publishers have become interested in the subject. Just recently the University of Illinois Press released a book entitled, Studies of the Book of Mormon. This book contains the secret studies that the noted Mormon historian B. H. Roberts made with regard to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. We had already printed these manuscripts in 1980 under the title, B. H. Roberts’ Manuscripts Revealed (see Salt Lake City Messenger, July 1980, pages 11-12). Our publication, however, was of xerox copies of the manuscripts. The new printing by the University of Illinois Press has been nicely typeset with an introduction and footnotes by Brigham A. Madsen. It will undoubtedly have a much wider distribution than our publication.

B. H. Roberts, one of the greatest scholars that the Mormon church has ever produced, is noted for his defense of Mormonism and the Book of Mormon. In his New Witness for God he took a very firm stand on the Book of Mormon’s authenticity:

. . . if the book itself could be proved to be other than it claims to be, . . . then the Church . . . and its message and doctrines, which in some respects, may be said to have arisen out of the Book of Mormon, must fall; for if that book is other than it claims to be; if its origin is other than that ascribed to it by Joseph Smith, then Joseph Smith says that which is untrue; he is a false prophet of false prophets; and all he taught and all his claims to inspiration and divine authority, are not only vain but wicked; and all that he did as a religious teacher is not only senseless, but mischievous beyond human comprehending. (New Witness for God, vol. 2, Preface, as cited in Studies of the Book of Mormon, page 12)

As time passed, B. H. Roberts realized that there were some very serious problems with regard to the Book of Mormon which he was not able to answer. In his secret manuscripts he made these revealing comments:

. . . was Joseph Smith possessed of a sufficiently vivid and creative imagination as to produce such a work as the Book of Mormon from such materials as have been indicated in the preceding chapters . . . That such power of imagination would have to be of a high order is conceded; that Joseph Smith possessed such a gift of mind there can be no question. (Studies of the Book of Mormon, page 243)

In the light of this evidence, there can be no doubt as to the possession of a vividly strong, creative imagination by Joseph Smith, the Prophet, an imagination, it could with reason be urged, which, given the suggestions that are to be found in the “common knowledge” of accepted American antiquities of the times, supplemented by such a work as Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews, would make it possible for him to create a book such as the Book of Mormon is. (Ibid., page 250)

If from all that has gone before in Part I, the view be taken the Book of Mormon is merely of human origin; that a person of Joseph Smith’s limitations in experience and in education, who was of the vicinage and of the period that produced the book—if it be assumed that he is the author of it, then it could be said there is much internal evidence in the book itself to sustain such a view.

In the first place there is a certain lack of perspective in the things the book relates as history that points quite clearly to an undeveloped mind as their origin. The narrative proceeds in characteristic disregard of conditions necessary to its reasonableness, as if it were a tale told by a child, with utter disregard for consistency. (Ibid., page 250)

There were other Anti-Christs among the Nephites, but they were more military leaders than religious innovators, yet much of the same kidney in spirit with these dissenters here passed in review; but I shall hold that what is here presented illustrates sufficiently the matter taken in hand by referring to them, namely that they are all of one breed and brand; so nearly alike that one mind is the author of them, and that a young and undeveloped, but piously inclined mind. The evidence I sorrowfully submit, points to Joseph Smith as their creator. It is difficult to believe that they are the product of history, that they come upon the scene separated by long periods of time, and among a race which was the ancestral race of the red man of America. (Ibid., page 271)

In an article published in The Ensign, December 1983, pages 11-19, Professor Truman G. Madsen, of Brigham Young University, tried to minimize the importance of B. H. Roberts’ parallels between View of the Hebrews and the Book of Mormon:

Are there “striking parallels” between the Book of Mormon and Ethan Smith’s 1823 novel, View of the Hebrews, a fictional account of Israelites from the lost Ten Tribes who migrated to the Americas after the destruction of Jerusalem? Elder Roberts confirmed for his missionaries that any such parallels are abstract, even empty. Aside from the claim of Hebraic backgrounds, only two specific similarities occur: Ethan Smith quotes Isaiah at length and refers to the Urim and Thummim. . . .

Ethan Smith published a book on revelation in 1833, . . . He also republished View of the Hebrews, revised and enlarged, in 1835. Both books were published long after the Book of Mormon began circulation. If critics can claim that Joseph Smith was aware of Ethan Smith’s novel, it surely can also be claimed that Ethan Smith was aware of Joseph Smith’s.

Professor Truman Madsen (not to be confused with Brigham Madsen) made two very glaring errors in his article. The errors are so serious, in fact, that they would lead one to believe that he has never read View of the Hebrews.

1. He referred twice to Ethan Smith’s book as a “novel.” Anyone who has read the book knows that it is not a novel. In the Bibliography to Studies of the Book of Mormon, page 347, we read:

“Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews was, of course, not a ‘novel’ in any sense of the word, but was a serious analysis of current archeological discoveries and the known cultural studies of Indian tribes in order to prove the theory that the American Indians were of Israelitish descent.”

2. Truman Madsen also maintained that Ethan Smith “republished View of the Hebrews, revised and enlarged, in 1835 . . . long after the Book of Mormon began circulation.” Dr. Madsen is ten years off on his dating. The correct date appears on the title page as “1825.” This is substantiated in the preface “For The Second Edition” which ends, “Poultney, April 1, 1825.” Instead of the “enlarged” edition being published five years after the Book of Mormon (as Madsen maintains), it actually was in print five years before the Book of Mormon. We have photographically reprinted B. H. Roberts’ own copy of View of the Hebrews. This book, which contains some of Roberts’ handwritten notations, is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry.

In another article, Professor Madsen claimed that B. H. Roberts was only using “the ‘Devil’s Advocate’ approach to stimulate thought” when he wrote his controversial studies of the Book of Mormon. A careful examination of these manuscripts, however, leads one to believe that Roberts was struggling with grave doubts about the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The recent publication of B. H. Roberts’ secret manuscripts includes some new and important evidence concerning his frame of mind after he completed his studies. It comes from the “Personal Journal of Wesley P. Lloyd, former dean of the Graduate School at Brigham Young University and a missionary under Roberts in the Eastern States Mission.” Lloyd recorded this revealing information in his journal on August 7, 1933—less than two months before Roberts’ death:

Roberts went to work and investigated it [the Book of Mormon] from every angle but could not answer it satisfactorily to him self. At his request Pres. Grant called a meeting of the Twelve Apostles and Bro. Roberts presented the matter, told them frankly that he was stumped and ask for their aide [sic] in the explanation. In answer, they merely one by one stood up and bore testimony to the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. George Albert Smith in tears testified that his faith in the Book had not been shaken by the question. Pres. Ivins, the man most likely to be able to answer a question on that subject was unable to produce the solution. No answer was available. Bro. Roberts could not criticize them for not being able to answer it or to assist him, but said that in a Church which claimed continuous revelation, a crisis had arisen where revelation was necessary. After the meeting he wrote Pres. Grant expressing his disappointment at the failure and especially at the failure of Pres. Ivins to contribute to the problem. It was mentioned at the meeting by Bro. Roberts that there were other Book of Mormon problems that needed special attention. Richard R. Lyman spoke up and asked if they were things that would help our prestige and when Bro. Roberts answered no, he said then why discuss them. This attitude was too much for the historically minded Roberts. There was however a committee appointed to study this problem, consisting of Bros. Talmage, Ballard, Roberts and one other Apostle. They met and looked vacantly at one and other, but none seemed to know what to do about it. Finally, Bro. Roberts mentioned that he had at least attempted an answer and he had it in his drawer. That it was an answer that would satisfy people that didn’t think, but a very inadequate answer to a thinking man. . . . After this Bro. Roberts made a special Book of Mormon study. Treated the problems systematically and historically and in a 400 type written page thesis set forth a revolutionary article on the origin of the Book of Mormon and sent it to Pres. Grant. It’s an article far too strong for the average Church member but for the intellectual group he considers it a contribution to assist in explaining Mormonism. He swings to a psychological explanation of the Book of Mormon and shows that the plates were not objective but subjective with Joseph Smith, that his exceptional imagination qualified him psychologically for the experience which he had in presenting to the world the Book of Mormon and that the plates with the Urim and Thummim were not objective. He explained certain literary difficulties in the Book. . . . These are some of the things which has made Bro. Roberts shift his base on the Book of Mormon. Instead of regarding it as the strongest evidence we have of Church Divinity, he regards it as one which needs the most bolstering. His greatest claim for the divinity of the Prophet Joseph lies in the Doctrine and Covenants. ("Journal of Wesley P. Lloyd," August 7, 1933, as cited in Studies of the Book of Mormon, pages 23-24)

Utah Lighthouse Ministry is selling B. H. Roberts’ Studies of the Book of Mormon (paperback edition published by Signature Books). We are also handling another book concerning the relationship of View of the Hebrews to the Book of Mormon. This is David Persuitte’s in depth study of parallels between the two books. It is published under the title, Joseph Smith and the Origin of the Book of Mormon.

OVERREACTION?

The Mormon leaders seem to realize that they are facing serious historical problems. In an article entitled, “Keep the Faith,” Gordon B. Hinckley, of the church’s First Presidency, wrote:

We live at a time when old beliefs and old standards are being challenged. The Church of which we are members is being attacked on many sides. A few dissidents, apostates, and excommunicants have marshaled their resources in an effort to belittle and demean this work—its history, its doctrine, its practices.

There is another group presently receiving wide publicity across the nation. They are poking into all the crevices of our history, ferreting out little things of small import and magnifying them into great issues of public discussion, working the media in an effort to give credibility to their efforts. . . . I plead with you, do not let yourselves be numbered among the critics, among the dissidents, among the apostates. . . .

To all Latter-day Saints, I say, keep the faith. (The Ensign, September 1985, pages 4-6)

Just two months before Hofmann and Flynn came to his office to inquire what they should tell police who were investigating the bombings, the Mormon Apostle Dallin Oaks made an attack on the news media and also warned members not to criticize church leaders even if they are wrong:

My fellow teachers: in the six months since I accepted this invitation, there has been a flurry of excitement about Church history. . . . the news media are having a field day. Controversy makes good copy, especially when it concerns a church with some doctrines that diverge sharply from those of mainstream Christianity. . . .

The resulting publicity has stimulated attacks on the Church by seemingly religious persons. . . . I have chosen to speak on how Church history should be read, especially the so-called “history” that comes in bits and pieces in the daily or weekly news media. . . . the news media are particularly susceptible to conveying erroneous information about facts, including historical developments that are based on what I have called scientific uncertainties. . . .

Bias can also be exercised in decisions on what news stories to publish and what to omit. . . .

Criticism is particularly objectionable when it is directed toward Church authorities, general or local. . . . Evil-speaking of the Lord’s anointed is in a class by itself. It is one thing to depreciate a person who exercises corporate power or even government power. It is quite another thing to criticize or depreciate a person for the performance of an office to which he or she has been called of God. It does not matter that the criticism is true. . . .

The Holy Ghost will not guide or confirm criticism of the Lord’s anointed, or of Church leaders, local or general. . . .

Our individual, personal testimonies are based on the witness of the Spirit, not on any combination or accumulation of historical facts. If we are so grounded, no alteration of historical facts can shake our testimonies. ("Reading Church History," 1985 CES Doctrine and Covenants Symposium, BYU, August 16, 1985, pages 1, 2, 5, 16, 24-26)

The Mormon scholar L. Jackson Newell has publicly criticized the response by church leaders to the problems:

L. Jackson Newell, dean of liberal education at the University of Utah and co-editor of “Dialogue,” said the increasing cries coming from leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints urging members to be obedient to authority and the escalating action leaders are taking against LDS scholars attack the principles of free inquiry and free expression.

“My concern is that their response . . . itself looms as a grave threat to our traditions, values and doctrines. . . .” We are witnessing systematic efforts to undermine confidence in virtually all unofficial sources of understanding about our past. (Deseret News, August 25, 1985)

MAGIC NAMES?

When Fawn Brodie published her book, No Man Knows My History, in 1945, the Mormon scholar Hugh Nibley ridiculed her for accepting “the stories of the same witnesses regarding ‘seer stones, ghosts, magic incantations, and nocturnal excavations.’ Now scandal stories thrive notoriously well in rural settings, while the judgment of one’s neighbors regarding one’s general character over a number of years is far less likely to run into the fantastic. Yet Brodie can reject the character witnesses as prejudiced while accepting the weirdest extravagances of their local gossip” (No Ma’am That’s Not History, pages 11-12).

Today, Mormon scholars find themselves using the same sources which were once ridiculed. At the Sunstone Symposium, Levi Peterson pointed this out:

Ironically, Bushman has found it valid, as Professor Walker has found it, to use the same data which anti-Mormon historian Fawn Brodie employed in No Man Knows My History. And so it’s interesting that her book, which has been vilified for decades, basically is based upon the—utilizes the same sources that now faithful historians will be using, and are using.

We certainly feel that these sources are important and have used them in our publications Joseph Smith and Money-Digging and Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. We feel, however, that scholars will have to be cautious about seeing magic practices in things that could be more easily explained in other ways. The Mormon scholar D. Michael Quinn, for instance, has probably gone too far in this respect. The Deseret News, August 24, 1985, reported:

One Mormon historian says evidence is convincing that Mormon Church founder Joseph Smith and his family were involved in various forms of ritual and folk magic, but that evidence does not diminish his own faith in his religion.

D. Michael Quinn, a Brigham Young University history professor, Friday addressed a session of the Sunstone Theological Symposium. . . .

He said it’s clear that the family of Joseph Smith Sr., including his son, the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith Jr., believed in and practiced ritual and folk magic. . . .

Smith Sr. gave his sons Joseph, Hyrum and Alvin names with magical significance.

While we do agree that the evidence clearly shows that the Smith family was involved in magic, the claim that Joseph Smith, Sr., gave his children magic names seems to be based on speculation. According to the Salt Lake Tribune, August 25, 1985, Dr. Quinn “cited the biblical Joseph’s use of silver cups for divination.” Quinn believes that Joseph Smith’s father felt that the biblical Joseph was involved in divination, and therefore he named his son after him. This idea comes from the 44th chapter of Genesis. Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt taught that God “sanctified” a “silver” cup and that Joseph actually used it for divination:

The “silver cup” which Joseph in Egypt commanded the steward to put in Benjamin’s sack, in order to try his brethren, was, most probably, sanctified as a Urim and Thummim to Joseph. Hence, Joseph commanded the steward to pursue his brethren, and say to them, “Is not this in which my Lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divineth?” And when Joseph’s brethren were brought back, he said unto them, “What deed is this that ye have done? Wot ye not that such a man as I can certainly divine?” (Masterful Discourses and Writings of Orson Pratt, compiled by N. B. Lundwall, page 589)

Adam Clarke, a noted Protestant writer, had an entirely different view of the incident. He said it was “not at all likely that Joseph practiced any kind of divination. . . .” (Clarke’s Commentary, vol. 1, page 247). Clarke pointed out that since Joseph was trying to “deceive his brethren for a short time” (his brothers, of course, had previously sold him into slavery), he might pretend to have a cup he used for divining to help convince them that he was a harsh and idolatrous Egyptian governor. In Genesis 42: 7, 9 and 23, we read:

And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spoke roughly unto them; . . . and said unto them, Ye are spies; . . . And they knew not that Joseph understood them, for he spake unto them by an interpreter.

According to Clarke’s view, the statements about divination should not be given any more credence than Joseph’s charge that his brothers were “spies” and had stolen his cup. This interpretation seems to be compatible with the context of Genesis, and although Joseph interprets a number of dreams, there is no mention of a divining cup being used.

In any case, it may be possible that Joseph Smith, Sr. regarded the biblical Joseph as a diviner. The important question, however, is did he name his own son after him for this reason? While there is no way to know for certain, it would seem that the most likely explanation is that Joseph Smith, Sr., liked his own name and decided to bestow it on his son. As to the origin of the name Hyrum, Dr. Quinn felt that it came from Hiram Abif who plays an important role in Masonry. Masonic writers claim that Hiram Abif was the “Hiram” mentioned in 1 Kings 7:13-14. He was “a worker in brass.” Another explanation, however, might be that Hyrum Smith’s name came from “Hiram king of Tyre.” This king was David’s friend and cooperated with Solomon when he built the temple (see 1 Kings 5:1-18). Joseph Smith, Sr., gave one of his other sons the biblical name Samuel. Dr. Quinn has found a magic name which he feels is similar to Alvin. The Bible, however, contains a close parallel in “Alvan” (Genesis 36:23).
Wesley P. Walters, who has recently done some research in the census records, has informed us that the names Joseph Smith, Sr., gave to his sons are typical of those found in the vicinity of Palmyra. Mormon scholar Richard Anderson pointed out that there were other Joseph Smiths in the Manchester area, and . . . one ‘Hiram’ Smith signed Hurlbut’s general Manchester affidavit, . . .” (BYU Studies, Spring 1970, page 292). Under the circumstances, we feel that the claim that Joseph Smith’s father used magic names for his children is not very convincing.

JESUS A MAGICIAN?

In 1978 Dr. Morton Smith charged that Jesus had used a “magical formula” at the time of the “raising of Jairus’ daughter” (Jesus The Magician, page 95). In his attempt to excuse Joseph Smith for the role he played in the magic arts, Dr. Quinn tries to link Jesus to the occult. On August 25, 1985, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

Professor Quinn stated that the teachings of the occult have long been present to religion and have not been completely rejected by it. . . . He sees in Jesus’ words to the daughter of Jairus in the Gospel of Mark, “Tallitha, cumi,” a magical formula.

To those who are looking for magical formulas, the words talitha cumin (or talitha koum in some versions of the Greek text) may seem to have a mysterious sound. Below is a photograph of a photograph of the Greek text of Mark 5:41 from The Greek New Testament. The two important words have been circled.

To understand the problem here a person must realize that while the Gospels were written in Greek, Aramaic was the language Jesus and his disciples used most frequently. While Mark 5:41 is written entirely in Greek characters, the words talitha cumin are not Greek words. They are actually Aramaic words transliterated into Greek characters. The words mean, “Little girl, arise” (Wycliffe Bible Commentary, page 999; also Strong’s Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible). The words talitha cumin are certainly not secret magic words for Mark himself tells us that they are “translated” as “Little girl, I say to you, arise” (Mark 5:41). Luke relates the same story but does not use the Aramaic words talitha cumin. He merely says that Jesus took hold of the girl’s hand and said, “Little girl, arise” (Luke 8:54). Mark uses the Greek word korasion for “little girl,” while Luke uses pais. Either word, however, can be properly rendered as child, maid or little girl.

Since Jesus spoke Aramaic, it is not surprising that Mark would leave some of the words in that original language. He also did this on other occasions. When Jesus healed the deaf man, Mark quoted Him as saying, “Ephphatha, that is, be opened” (Mark 7:34). In Mark 14:36 we read: “And he said, Abba, Father . . .” Again, in Mark 15:22 we find the following: “And they bring him into the place Golgotha, which is being interpreted, the place of a skull.” Finally, in Mark 15:34 we read: “. . . Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is being interpreted, My God, my God, why halt thou forsaken me?”

In order to prove that Jesus was reciting a magic formula when he said talitha cumin, one would have to produce some evidence contemporary with Jesus. In his discussion of the matter in Jesus The Magician, Morton Smith fails to bring forth any such evidence. Smith does, however, try to link Mark 5:41 with Acts 9:36-40:

. . . talitha koum . . . became the basis of another phrase—if not an entire story—preserved in Acts 9:36ff. where Peter raises a dead woman conveniently named Tabitha by saying to her in Greek, “Tabitha, get up.” (Tabitha is a mispronunciation of talitha, which the storyteller mistook for a proper name.) (Jesus The Magician, page 95)

While there is a similarity between the words Tabitha and talitha (Tabitha contains the Greek letter beta, while talitha has the letter lambda koum (or cumin) bears no resemblance to the Greek word translated “arise” or “get up” in Acts 9:40. This word is anastethi. Furthermore, there is no evidence that “Tabitha is a mispronunciation of talitha.” In fact, there is convincing evidence from the original languages that it is not a mistake. Acts 9:36 says that the woman was named “Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorkas: . . .” Tabitha is “An Aramaic word meaning gazelle” (The Wycliffe Bible Commentary, page 1142). Dorkas is a Greek word which also means gazelle (Strong’s Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible). This all makes perfect sense. Peter is calling the woman by name and is telling her to “arise.” Morton Smith’s explanation, however, does not fit any of these facts. He would have us believe that it all arose through a misunderstanding.

In any case, the fact that some Aramaic words were preserved in Mark’s Gospel does not make them a “magic formula.” Even Morton Smith has preserved foreign words in his translation of ancient texts. For instance, on page 70 of Jesus The Magician, he translated from Plato’s writings but when he came to the word goeteia he merely transliterated it into English letters: “. . . in sacrifices and initiations and spells, and all prophecy and goeteia.”
Although Morton Smith, whose work is now used by a number of Mormon scholars who believe that Jesus was a magician, rejected the deity of Jesus, he did maintain that He did perform some “cures” through natural means:

He was born in Palestine, probably within eight or ten years of the beginning of the present era. He grew up in Galilee, was baptized by John the Baptist, formed a band of his own followers, and went about with them mostly in Galilee, but at least once visited Jerusalem and there was arrested and crucified—on these matters the gospels agree; we have no reason to question their reports.

Nor is there any reason to question their unanimous report that Jesus attracted attention as a miracle worker. Rationalists long assumed that miracles do not occur and that the gospel stories of Jesus’ miracles were legendary . . . Jesus’ “exorcisms” and “cures” are now commonly thought to have resulted from the sudden cessation of hysterical symptoms and cognate psychological disorders. . . .

Thus the external framework of Jesus’ life—the what, when, and where—is reasonably certain. Beyond these facts lie difficulties. For instance, some of his disciples thought he rose from the dead. (Ibid., pages 8 and 17)

Morton Smith argued that Jesus was actually a magician who “Initiated his disciples and bound them to himself by magical rites unknown to the prophets, . . . (Ibid., page 163). He also maintained that “Jesus’ exorcisms were accompanied by abnormal behavior on his part. Magicians who want to make demons obey often scream their spells, gesticulate, and match the mad in fury” (Ibid., page 32). Dr. Smith seemed to give some credence to the following:

The rabbinic report that in Egypt Jesus was tattooed with magic spells . . . The antiquity of the source, type of citation, connection with the report that he was in Egypt, and agreement with Egyptian magical practices are considerable arguments in its favor.

Another consideration in its favor is its close connection with the rabbinic report that he was “a madman”—that is, occasionally manic or hysterical. (Ibid., pages 150-151)

On page 47 of Jesus The Magician, Morton Smith argued that the following rabbinic report probably refers to Jesus coming out of Egypt with magic spells tattooed upon his body:

Rabbi Eliezer declared him guilty, but most scholars innocent. Rabbi Eliezer said to them, “But is it not [the case that] Ben Stada brought magic spells from Egypt in the scratches on his flesh?” They said to him, “He was a madman and you cannot base laws on [the actions of] madmen.” Was he then the son of Stada? Surely he was the son of Pandira? Rabbi Hisda [a third-century Babylonian] said, “The husband was Stada, the paramour was Pandira.” [But was not] the husband Pappos ben Judah? His mother was Stada. [But was not] his mother Miriam [Mary] the hairdresser? [Yes, but she was nicknamed Stada]—as we say in Pumbeditha, ‘s’tat da [i.e., this one has turned away] from her husband.”

Although Morton Smith links “the son of Pandira” with another rabbinic story about “Jesus the son of Panteri” (Ibid., page 46), he admits that the reference is confusing. He even states that the original Ben Stada was not Jesus:

. . . the rabbis are generally ignorant of chronology and constantly guilty of absurd anachronisms. . . . The original Ben Stada seems to have been a Jew who advocated some cult involving the worship of deities other than Yahweh. He was entrapped by Jews in Lydda, condemned by a rabbinic court, and stoned. Since Jesus also was accused of introducing the worship of other gods—notably himself—he was nicknamed Ben Stada. Hence it is often difficult to tell to whom the passages on “Ben Stada” refer. (Ibid., page 47)

While the Bible does mention the fact that Jesus was in Egypt, Matthew 2:20 says that he was only a “young child” (paidion) when he was brought back to Israel.

Morton Smith tries to convince his readers that the Apostle Paul also had magic tattoos on his body: “Moreover, Paul claimed to be tattooed or branded with ‘the marks of Jesus,’ Gal. 6:17—most likely, the same marks that Jesus had carried” (Ibid., page 48). The Wycliffe Bible Commentary, page 1298, presents a far more reasonable explanation. It states that the marks which Paul had were “the marks of persecution which he bore in his body, scars suffered for the sake of the Lord Jesus, . . .” Support for this interpretation is found in 2 Corinthians 11:24-25, where Paul himself commented: “Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, . . .”

In his book Jesus The Magician, Dr. Smith seems willing to go to great lengths to prove his case that Jesus was linked to the occult. For instance, he gives this translation of Matthew 27:62-63:

The word Dr. Smith translates as “magician” is planos. Strong’s Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible gives the meaning as, “roving (as a tramp), i.e. (by impl.) an imposter or misleader:—deceiver, seducing.” (Greek Word No. 4108) While it is true that a magician is a “deceiver,” there are many deceivers who are not magicians. Dr. Smith seems to be forcing his own opinion into his translation. Actually, the New Testament has a word for a magician or sorcerer. That word is magos. It is used, for instance, in Acts 13:6 and 8. On page 69 of his book, Morton Smith says that “The common Greek word for ‘magician’ in Jesus’ time was goes (plural goetes).” The word goetes is found in 2 Timothy 3:13 and is translated as “seducers” in the King James Version: “But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, . . .” This same word, however, can be translated as “wizard,” “waier” or “enchanter.” That Matthew used planos instead of magos or goes seems to destroy Morton Smith’s argument.

Dr. Smith made his own translations of most of the documents used in his book. It is hard to have a great deal of confidence in these translations after we see how he rendered planos from the Greek text of Matthew. On page 50 of Jesus The Magician, Smith translated some material from the historian Suetonius who wrote about the Christians around 120 A.D.: “Suetonius is brief: ‘Penalties were imposed on the Christians, a kind of men [holding] a new superstition [that involved the practice] of magic’ . . .” Martin A. Larson, who was convinced that Christianity had its roots in paganism, also quoted Suetonius. The reader will notice, however, that the word “magic” is not mentioned: “Suetonius, after detailing the enormities of which Nero was guilty, lists among his good works that he ‘inflicted punishment on the Christians, a class of men given to a new and mischievous superstition’” (The Religion of the Occident, page 308).

Tacitus, the famous Roman historian, wrote concerning the Christian religion in the early part of the second century. He referred to the Romans charging the Christians with “hating all mankind.” Although Dr. Smith could not find a direct charge of magic in the writings of Tacitus, this did not deter him from implying that this is what the Romans had in mind: “. . . hatred of the human race is a charge appropriate to magicians as popular imagination conceived them” (Jesus The Magician, page 52).

About 165 A.D. a pagan by the name of Lucian wrote concerning Christianity. There appears to be nothing in Lucian’s writings to support Morton Smith’s thesis. In fact, Smith himself concedes that “Nothing is said of miracles or magic” (Ibid., page 56).

Before the turn of the third century, Celsus wrote concerning Christianity. Although no copies of his work have survived, about 247 A.D. a Christian writer by the name of Origen “quoted a good deal of it, almost sentence by sentence.” Celsus does give support to the idea that Jesus was a sorcerer, but since he wrote about a century and a half after Jesus’ death, his words do not have the same weight as they would have if they were written by Josephus, Tacitus, Suetonius or Pliny. Furthermore, even Dr. Smith had to admit that Celsus “drew his material from both sides and that he must be used with caution” (Ibid., page 58).

One of the main sources Morton Smith uses to try to prove that Jesus was a magician is magical papyri which were penned many years after the crucifixion of Jesus. While Dr. Smith suggests that “some” of the papyri may have been originally written “at least as early as the gospels,” there is no way to know for certain, and in an article on “Magic in Early Christianity” David E. Aune informs us that “most of the magical papyri come from the third through the fifth centuries A.D. . . .” Morton Smith feels there are many important parallels between the magical papyri and the story of Jesus in the New Testament. If he could show that the papyri predated the lifetime of Jesus his parallels would be more impressive. Although Dr. Smith claims the papyri are basically pagan documents, it is clear that the Bible (either directly or indirectly) had an influence on the authors of these documents. Dr. Smith concedes that there are “references to Jesus in the papyri” (Jesus The Magician, Preface viii), and on page 69 of the same book, he says: “The Jews’ god, Yahweh . . . was particularly famous for his usefulness in magic. In the magical papyri (which contains a sprinkling of Jewish spells, but are mainly pagan documents) his name outnumbers that of any other deity by more than three to one.”

On page 109 of his book, Morton Smith wrote:

Chapter VI showed that the primary characteristic of a magician was to do miracles. In this Jesus evidently excelled. Through all antiquity no other man is credited with so many. The gospels contain well over 200 items about Jesus that directly involve something miraculous . . .

We certainly agree that many miracles are attributed to Jesus in the New Testament. If a person believes that all miracle workers are magicians, then Jesus would have to be described as a “magician.” However, anyone who has done any serious study of the rituals used by magicians knows that they are strikingly different than what we find in the New Testament. They are filled with mysterious names. For example, we find these statements in some of the magical papyri cited in Morton Smith’s book:

“I conjure you by the god of the Hebrews, Jesus, laba, tae, Abraoth, Aia, Thoth,” etc. (page 63)

Spell said to the cup. Say seven [times], “You are wine; you are not wine but the head of Athena. You are wine; you are not wine but the entrails of Osiris, the entrails of Iso Pakerbeth, Eternal Sun o o o . . . i a a a”—To make it compulsive [add] “Abianathanalba akrammacharei e e e, the [angel] put in charge of compulsion, Jacob lao Sabaoth Adonai Abrasax” . . . (page 111)
Adonai, Abrasax, Pinouti and Sabaos [sic], fire the soul and heart of him, Amonios, whom Helen bore, for him, Serapiacus, whom Threpta bore, now, now quick, quick! (page 124)

These complicated and mysterious rituals should be contrasted with stories in the New Testament where Jesus cast out demons:

And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. (Mark 1:25)

For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. (Mark 5:5)

When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him. (Mark 9:25)

The absence of all the hocus-pocus of magic is evident in these passages. Dr. Smith tries to explain away the lack of magical ritual by saying it was suppressed. Speaking of the report of Jesus' baptism, he said:

No gospel says anything of any ritual, though the baptism must have been accompanied by prayers and thanksgivings (possibly also by hymns) and effected with some regular form of actions and formula of words. The omission of such elements here—in spite of their importance to the event—should warn us that elsewhere the absence of reference to ritual does not prove that none was used. We have seen that rituals and formulae were apt to be taken as evidence of magic, and therefore to be deleted . . . (Jesus The Magician, page 96)

In discussing the story of the descent of the spirit we showed that its closest parallels are found in accounts of magical rites. Indeed it seems to be an abbreviated version of such a magical account—abbreviated to eliminate the magical traits. (Ibid., page 145)

Dr. Smith gives no manuscript evidence to support his serious accusations. He knows that the New Testament as we have it does not provide the support he needs to prove Jesus was a magician. Therefore, he claims that much of the magic material has been deleted. He seems to feel that even the original authors of the Gospels strove to remove magical elements out of Jesus’ life:

Sometimes it is clear that stories have been revised to get rid of magical details. The exorcism in Mk. 5 is a good example. According to Mark, Jesus makes the demon tell his name. This was standard magical practice; once you knew the name you could use it to order the demon out. But in Mark the exorcism proper has been deleted, so the question is useless. Even that was too much for Matthew; he deleted the question as well (8.29f.). Matthew's consistent deletion of magical traits has been demonstrated by Hull, Hellenistic Magic, 116ff. Such censorship left most references to magical procedure in the gospels scattered and isolated, one term here, another there. (Ibid., page 145)

On page 131, Dr. Smith even spoke of Matthew’s “dislike of magical traits.”

Morton Smith observed:

One of the commonest forms of exorcism was to order the demon out “by the name of” some more powerful being, usually a god whose “true name” or “true” title or function the magician knew. (Ibid., page 35)

David E. Aune, however, pointed out that although Jesus’ disciples used his name to cast out devils “there is no evidence to suggest that Jesus himself invoked the name of God or any other powerful names in the rituals which he used to effect exorcisms and healings, . . .”

Although it would be hard to deny that magic had some influence on the Israelites, the Bible condemns its practice in many places. In the Old Testament we read:

When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,

Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.

Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.

For these nations, which thou shalt possess, hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not suffered thee so to do. (Deuteronomy 18:9-14)

In the New Testament witchcraft is listed among the evil “works of the flesh”:

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies,
Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. (Galatians 5:19-21)

Acts 19:19 informs us concerning some people who “used curious arts” before they were converted. At the time they confessed the Lord, however, they “brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.”

JESUS AND JOSEPH

While Morton Smith would have us believe that Jesus was a magician, the evidence he presents is very weak. It is interesting to compare this evidence with that which has come to light concerning Joseph Smith. To begin with, Dr. Smith has to use a dubious translation of Matthew 27:63 to support his claim that the Jews told Pilate that Jesus was a “magician.” In Joseph Smith’s case, however, we have an original document which proves that he was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, N. Y. in 1826. This document is Justice Albert Neeley’s bill showing the costs involved in several trials held in 1826. The fifth item from the top mentions the trial of “Joseph Smith The Glass Looker.” According to the court record, which was first printed in Fraser’s Magazine in 1873, Joseph Smith himself confessed that “he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, . . . and . . . had occasionally been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, . . .” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 32).

The 1826 trial proves beyond all doubt that Joseph Smith used a stone which he placed in his hat to try to locate buried treasures. This was, of course, a common practice by magicians and those who were involved in the occult.

In Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 3-17, we have a photograph of a magic talisman which was owned by Joseph Smith and photographs of magic parchments which were owned by his brother Hyrum. Furthermore, we have a revelation which Joseph Smith published in which he endorsed the use of a divining rod. While Morton Smith is unable to find any evidence written during Jesus’ lifetime that would support his claim that He was a sorcerer, we have an abundance of affidavits and statements by people who personally knew Joseph Smith and witnessed his participation in magical activities (see our publications Mormonism, Magic and Masonry and Joseph Smith and Money-Digging).

Morton Smith had to resort to a great deal of speculation and wishful thinking in his attempt to prove that Jesus was a magician. The case against Joseph Smith, however, is built on contemporary documents and testimony which appears to be irrefutable.

BENSON TAKES OVER

The day Mormon historians and other liberal members of the Mormon church have feared for many years has finally arrived. With the death of Spencer W. Kimball, Ezra Taft Benson has become the thirteenth President of the Mormon church. Through the years Mr. Benson has been so dogmatic in his views about politics and religion that he has acquired many enemies. One Mormon, in fact, told us that if Benson ever became President of the church, he would know that there is no truth in Mormonism. Even some of the top leaders of the church have had problems with him. On January 4, 1964, Drew Pearson made the following comment concerning Benson: “Benson has become so extreme in his views that the Mormon Church, of which he is one of the Twelve Apostles, has quietly transferred him abroad to head the church’s European mission” (San Francisco Chronicle, January 4, 1964). President David O. McKay denied the accusation, but the newspapers let the “cat out of the bag” when they published two letters written to Rep. Ralph R. Harding. One of them was written by Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the tenth president of the Mormon church:

I am glad to report to you that, it will be some time before we hear anything from Brother Benson, who is now on his way to Great Britain where I suppose he will be at least for the next two years. When he returns, I hope his blood will be purified. (Salt Lake Tribune, February 21, 1964)

After the death of Joseph Fielding Smith, Mr. Benson rapidly rose to great power within Mormonism. On February 25, 1974, the Brigham Young University’s Daily Universe reported the following:

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — . . . Ezra Taft Benson, . . . said, in an interview this week, it is “entirely possible” the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) will one day declare support for a political candidate. . . . Benson, . . . said he has never had to separate his religion from his politics.

In 1980, with the failing health of President Kimball, Ezra Taft Benson must have realized that he was very close to becoming “Prophet, Seer and Revelator,” or as the Apostle McConkie phrased it, “king of the kingdom on earth” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, pages 415-416). At that time Benson made very clear the powers he would have when he became President of the Mormon church:
FIRST: The Prophet is the Only Man Who Speaks For The Lord in Everything. . . . We are to “give heed unto all his words”—as if from the Lord’s “own mouth.”

THIRD: The Living Prophet is More Important to Us Than a Dead Prophet. . . . The most important prophet so far as you and I are concerned is the one living in our day . . . Therefore the most important reading we can do is any of the words of the Prophet contained each week in the Church Section of the Deseret News, and any words of the Prophet contained each month in our Church magazines. Our marching orders for each six months are found in the General Conference addresses which are printed in the Ensign magazine . . .

Beware of those who would pit the dead prophets against the living prophets, for the living prophets always take precedence.

FOURTH: The Prophet Will Never Lead The Church Astray. . . .

FIFTH: The Prophet is Not Required to Have Any Particular Earthly Training or Credentials to Speak on Any Subject or Act on Any Matter at Any Time. . . .

SIXTH: The Prophet Does Not Have to Say “Thus Saith the Lord” to Give Us Scripture. . . .

SEVENTH: The Prophet Tells Us What We Need to Know, Not Always What We Want to Know . . . some so-called experts of political science want the prophet to keep still on politics . . .

NINTH: The Prophet Can Receive Revelation on Any Matter-Temporal or Spiritual. . . .

TENTH: The Prophet May be involved in Civic Matters.

When a people are righteous they want the best to lead them in government. Alma was the head of the Church and of the government in the Book of Mormon: ... Those who would remove prophets from politics would take God out of government. (“Fourteen Fundamentals in Following the Prophets,” February 26, 1980; full text available in Following the Brethren)

Since Ezra Taft Benson is 86 years of age, he will not be able to run for the presidency of the United States. (At one time he told a reporter that “he could have had the American Independent Party vice presidential nomination, but turned it down after consultation with President McKay.”) It seems unlikely, also, that he will be able to make the major revisions in the church that he might have made if he were younger.

BOOKS AND VIDEOS
(Mail Orders at 10% postage and handling)

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with Milwaukee television station. Price: $20.00

Tract Pack. An assortment of 12 tracts from other publishers. Price: $1.50

Where Does It Say That? By Bob Witte. Contains hundreds of photos from old Mormon publications. Price: $5.95

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
HOFMANN CHARGED WITH MURDER AND SELLING FORGERIES

In the last issue of the Messenger we reported that Mormon document dealer Mark Hofmann was not only a suspect in the October 15th Salt Lake City bombing’s case but that police were also investigating the possibility that Mr. Hofmann had been selling forged documents to the Mormon Church. On February 4, 1986, a statement was released to the news media which contained this information: “The Salt Lake City Police Department, the Salt Lake County Sheriff’s Department and the Salt Lake County Attorney’s Office today announced the culmination of a three-and-a-half-month investigation into the bombing deaths of Steven F. Christensen and Kathleen W. Sheets.

Mark W. Hofmann has been charged with two counts of first-degree homicide, a capital offense, and 26 other counts.

In the formal complaint (The State of Utah, Plaintiff, v. Mark W. Hofmann, . . .), Mark Hofmann was accused of stealing hundreds of thousands of dollars from Mormon church leaders and other unsuspecting individuals through the sale of forged or nonexistent documents.

ULM’S INVESTIGATION

Nineteen months before local and federal investigators began working on the Salt Lake bombing’s case, Utah Lighthouse Ministry began its own investigation concerning the authenticity of the documents Mark Hofmann was selling the Mormon Church and other collectors. In this inquiry we obtained information from Washington, D.C. and ten different states. We even interviewed a convicted murderer at the Utah State Prison.

Our investigation began in March 1984 when we were first given extracts from the so-called Salamander letter—a letter purportedly written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris to W.W. Phelps in 1830. We had just completed a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, in which we presented evidence linking early Mormonism to magic. We felt that the Salamander letter would provide additional evidence to support our case. As we read the extracts from the Salamander letter, however, we were shocked to find that there were important parallels to E. D. Howe’s Mormonism Unveiled, which was first published in 1834—some four years after the Salamander letter was supposed to have been penned. In the Messenger for March 1984 we wrote that we had “some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris.”

In the same issue of the Messenger, we pointed out the “disturbing” parallels to Howe’s book and said that although “the average person would have a difficult time forging these things, there are probably a number of people who could do the job. . . . While we would really like to believe that the letter attributed to Harris is authentic, we do not feel that we can endorse it until further evidence comes forth.”

On August 25, 1984, John Dart wrote the following in the Los Angeles Times:

. . . unusual caution . . .has been expressed by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, . . . The Tanners’ suggestion of forgery has surprised some Mormons, who note that the parallels in wording could be taken as evidence for authenticity.

Robert Lindsey wrote the following for the February 16, 1986, issue of the New York Times:

Court documents indicate that some prosecutors in the Salt Lake County Attorney’s office believe Mr. Hofmann’s goal was not only to obtain money from the church through the sale of the documents but also to establish enough credibility that he could shape the world’s perception of Mormonism.

This view is shared by a man here who was the first to suggest that Mr. Hofmann was forging his documents. He is Jerald Tanner, a former Mormon who heads the Utah Lighthouse Ministry, which for decades has been challenging the truth of much of Mormon doctrine.

In an interview, Mr. Tanner said he decided . . . that the Hofmann documents might be forgeries, even though some of them, many purporting to be in the handwriting of early Mormons not previously known to have left documents, supported his own iconoclastic views of Mormonism.

In a newsletter that he publishes with his wife, Sandra, Mr. Tanner began raising questions about their authenticity, in some cases comparing the texts with known Mormon writings.

But if senior Mormon officials were aware of his warnings, they apparently paid little attention. Several of the church’s highest officials have acknowledged negotiating to acquire documents from Mr. Hofmann until the day of the first two bombings.

Mr. Tanner said it appeared that Mr. Hofmann’s growing credibility as a source of documents was putting him in a position where the documents he presented were considered unassailable. If that continued, Mr. Tanner said, Mr. Hofmann “could control the direction of Mormon history.”

One of the documents that investigators list in the complaint as a forgery is the 1825 letter of Joseph Smith to Josiah Stowell. In the June 1985 issue of the Messenger, page 18, we reported that although we could not find any historical problems with the letter, the spelling seemed to be surprisingly good for the early date that is on the letter. Furthermore, we noticed that the letter did “not seem to have any words or parts of words crossed out and no words or parts of words are inserted above the lines.” We felt this was probably not consistent with other letters written by Joseph Smith and suggested that the letter “should be carefully checked by experts who are qualified to make meaningful judgments with regard to spelling, grammar and style.”

In the same issue of the Messenger we reported that George D. Smith claimed that it was his understanding that “Gordon B. Hinckley, purchased the letter in 1983 in his own name from collector Mark Hofmann . . .” We pointed out that “If President Hinckley bought the document in his own name, this must have been an attempt to give the Church deniability—i.e., the letter could be safely kept out of the hands of the public, and yet the Church could officially deny that it had it.” The complaint makes it clear that Hinckley did, in fact, purchase the letter in his own name. It says that Hofmann “exercised control over the property of President Gordon B. Hinckley by deception” when he sold him the 1825 letter. As long as Hinckley possessed the letter, the church could deny it owned the document, and even after the donation was made, the church could continue to deny that it had purchased the letter. In any case, it is obvious that there was a deliberate cover-up with regard to the 1825 letter.

STORY CHANGED

The complaint against Mark Hofmann states that eleven documents which he sold the Mormon church and other collectors are forgeries:

All of the above documents were given to George Throckmorton an experienced questioned documents examiner formerly employed with the Utah State Crime Laboratory, presently employed by the Utah Attorney General Office.

Mr. Throckmorton has done extensive scientific analysis on all of the documents described above and has concluded that none are authentic. (The State of Utah v. Mark W. Hofmann, page 6)

The Salamander letter is among the documents listed as forgeries. Originally, Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs claimed that the Salamander letter was discovered and purchased by Jacobs. Writing in Utah Holiday, January 1986, page 54, Allen Roberts and Fred Esplin reported: “It was from a New England postmark collector that Jacobs claimed that he obtained . . . the Salamander letter . . . Without disclosing his interest in the content of the letter, Jacobs said he purchased it for about $25, the value of the postmark.”

After investigators began raising the question of forgery with regard to the letter, Lyn Jacobs claimed that it was actually Mark Hofmann who originally purchased the letter. In an interview published in Sunstone magazine, Jacobs stated:

JACOBS: Unfortunately, my involvement in the discovery of the Martin Harris letter has been somewhat exaggerated . . . it was Mark who actually acquired it . . . I found out that a dentist in Cortland, New York, had a little group of Palmyra letters dating from the 1830s that might be of historical interest. So I called Mark and gave him that tip. Soon afterwards Mark purchased the Martin Harris letter . . .

It was about the middle of December 1983 and I was about to come home for Christmas vacation, so we waited until I got to Utah to discuss what to do with it. He turned the letter over to me and told me he did not wish to become involved with the publicity he felt the letter would probably generate. (Sunstone, vol. 10, no. 8, page 15)

When Jacobs was asked if it were true that he “did not see it [the Salamander letter] until Mark showed it to you,” he replied, “Yes” (Ibid., page 19).

The “dentist in Cortland, New York” has been identified as William Thoman. Unfortunately for those who would still believe in the authenticity of the Salamander letter, Dr. Thoman undercuts the entire story by claiming that he never had any dealings with Mark Hofmann after 1982 when Hofmann ran up a bill for $60 which he never paid. Mr. Hofmann, therefore, could not have obtained the letter from him in “December 1983” as Jacobs maintains. Even Kenneth Rendell, who originally authenticated the Salamander letter, now feels that there is a “high likelihood” that it is a forgery. In an interview on KUTV, February 6, 1986, Mr. Rendell commented: I could find no evidence of forgery. I could not prove it was authentic because there was no handwriting of Martin Harris to compare it to. . . . The FBI report has confirmed . . . there is no evidence to prove it’s a forgery. However, given the circumstances now that the history of the letter apparently is changing this week and that the person [Lyn Jacobs] is saying that it originally came from Hofmann, not from him, and given the circumstances of all these other forgeries, I think whether there is ever any physical evidence to prove it is a forgery, there is a high likelihood that it could be a forgery.

When Mr. Rendell was asked if he was “more suspicious now about the origin of the Salamander letter than you were when you first examined it,” he replied: “Certainly I am. There’s considerably more information now and considerably more evidence now.”

It now appears that both Lyn Jacobs and Mark Hofmann conspired to hide the truth concerning the origin of the Salamander letter. If Jacobs had knowledge that the letter was forged, he would be as guilty as Hofmann of “THEFT BY DECEPTION.” Mr. Jacobs claims that Hofmann was willing to “share any profits” that came from the sale of the document and that he was involved in its sale to Steven Christensen: “. . . I met Steve for the first time at Coordinated Financial Services. By that time, the sale contract had already been written and Mark and I signed it along with a few witnesses. It obligated Steve to pay $40,000 . . .” (Sunstone, page 15). Since Jacobs was deeply involved with Hofmann and was a party to an erroneous story concerning the origin of the Salamander letter, some have suggested that he may be a co-conspirator with Mark Hofmann in forgery. We find the following in the interview with Jacobs in Sunstone (page 19):

SUNSTONE: So as far as you know, no one living can claim to have read it [the Salamander letter] before it came from Mark Hofmann’s hands. You don’t have any first hand knowledge of its actual origins.

JACOBS: If you’re suggesting Mark forged it, it is not possible. Mark Hofmann is not a forger. . . .

SUNSTONE: Some have suggested that you might be a forger.

JACOBS: That’s ridiculous. . . . To my knowledge, such a thing has never been perpetrated either by Mark or myself. . . .

SUNSTONE: How do you suppose these questions of forgery arose?

JACOBS: The reasons for that are difficult for me to ascertain except that people just simply don’t like certain documents. . . . It seems to me it’s only when a document becomes particularly offensive to people or in any way controversial that people decide it’s a forgery. What’s the matter with everyone? . . .

SUNSTONE: One of the most outspoken proponents of the forgery theory has been the Utah Lighthouse Ministry. One would think that with their anti-Mormon mission, they would not question the Martin Harris letter’s authenticity without good reason, especially since it supposedly supports their case against the Church. What do they have to gain?

JACOBS: I’ve always wondered that. . . . So often such documents get stashed away; nobody talks about them anymore, and they just sort of fizzle out of public attention. That’s really what started happening to the Martin Harris [letter]. . . . Well the anti-Mormons may have wanted to keep the thing going by claiming it to be a forgery.

The other possibility is that because certain individuals were crying forgery from the beginning, the anti-Mormons may have become apprehensive about using a document in their ministry which might not be authentic. If it were a forgery, it would make them look like fools.

Lyn Jacobs seems to imply that because “certain individuals were crying forgery,” we were extremely cautious about endorsing the Harris letter. Actually, the truth of the matter is that we were the first to raise the question. Furthermore, Mr. Jacob’s assertion that we wanted to keep the “thing going by claiming it to be a forgery” is absolutely ridiculous. In any case, Sunstone has done a real service for researchers in providing this reveling interview with Jacobs. If any of our readers have additional material or information concerning Jacobs we would be happy to receive it.

As we indicated in the last issue of the Messenger, just before the bombings Mark Hofmann claimed he found a Book of Common Prayer which has a Martin Harris inscription in it. We suggested that this inscription may be a forgery created for the purpose of validating the Salamander letter. It is interesting to note that investigators now say that it is not authentic. It is included in the list of charges as one of the forged documents which were sold to the Mormon church. The list of forgeries also includes the “E. B. Grandin Contract.” This is very interesting because this contract purports to contain one of the earliest and best signatures of Martin Harris. This signature was probably used to validate the Salamander letter.

Investigators indicate that the forgeries began as early as 1980 when Hofmann “discovered” the Anthon transcript. This was a sheet of paper believed to contain copies of the characters which appeared on the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. After we became suspicious of the Salamander letter we reasoned that the Anthon transcript could also be a forgery. In The Money-Digging Letters, Part 1, page 9, published on August 22, 1984, we commented: “. . . a number of important documents have come to light during the 1980s. The questions raised by the Salamander letter have forced us to take a closer look at some of these documents.”

When the Anthon transcript first came forth historians were very excited about what it might reveal. Some people felt it might contain magic characters. We tried very hard to find evidence to support this idea, but we were finally forced to conclude that the “similarities” were not “sufficient to prove the case” (Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, page 42). We compared the Anthon transcript with many documents and samples of ancient writing, but in the end we found ourselves feeling frustrated and disillusioned with the transcript. Instead of containing anything related to any language, the Anthon transcript appeared to be composed of meaningless doodlings. In the beginning, Mormon scholars were rejoicing over the new find. Dr. Richard L. Anderson, of Brigham Young University, claimed “This new discovery is sort of a Dead Sea School [sic] Equivalent of the Book of Mormon,” . . . ” (The Herald, Provo Utah, May 1, 1980). The noted Mormon scholar Hugh Nibley was quoted as saying: “‘This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get as to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon,’ . . .” (Ibid.). In the same paper, Dr. Hugh Nibley triumphantly announced: “Of course it’s translatable.” According to The Herald:

Nibley also said he counted at least two dozen out of 47 characters in the Demotic alphabet that could be given phonetic value.

“This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get. Nobody could have faked those characters. It would take 10 minutes to see that this is fake.”

On May 12, 1980, the Provo Herald reported:

The Herald called Hugh Nibley to see if he was still confident about his earlier assessments.

“I still say just what I said before. It can be translated.”

In the last issue of the Messenger we related that the story which Mark Hofmann told concerning how he acquired the Joseph Smith III Blessing document did not check out. We first publicly questioned the source of this document on August 22, 1984, when we printed The Money-Digging Letters. Prosecutors now claim that this document is also a forgery.

TOO SENSITIVE

Allen Roberts and Fred Esplin reveal that “Police sources indicate that Steve Christensen’s personal journal records that Elder Hugh Pinnock asked Hofmann to find for him two important items: the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and something ‘too sensitive to mention,’ that the late ‘Elders Mark E. Petersen and G. Homer Durham were most involved in prior to their deaths’” (Utah Holiday, January 1986, page 58). It has been suggested that the item that is “too sensitive to mention” may be the gold plates of the Book of Mormon or a “seer stone.” Both of these suggestions appear unlikely. One thing that might qualify, however, is evidence that Solomon Spalding or Sidney Rigdon wrote material which Joseph Smith used for his Book of Mormon. Although we have never put a great deal of stock in the theory, many critics of the Mormon church have maintained that Sidney Rigdon stole a manuscript written by Spalding and that this was used to create the Book of Mormon. If this idea could be proven, it would destroy the claim that the Book of Mormon was divinely inspired. Any hard evidence on this subject would certainly be “too sensitive to mention.” Like the 116 lost pages of the Book of Mormon, such “evidence” might be sold to the Mormon church for millions of dollars. This, combined with the secrecy that would surround its transfer to the church, could very easily lead to disagreements and perhaps even to murder.

We have recently learned that investigators have been looking into a document which was in the possession of Hofmann or Jacobs which has the signatures of both Solomon Spalding and Sidney Rigdon on it. The document apparently bears clear evidence of falsification. It has been reasoned, however, that this document could have been used to promote a swindle. In this scenario, the forger would show the buyer the document and point out the evidence of falsification. After establishing his reputation as a good detective with regard to old documents and a seeker after truth, the forger could then say that he had acquired a legitimate document relating to Spalding and/or Rigdon.

However this may be, the fact that Hofmann and Jacobs had an interest in Spalding-Rigdon documents reminded us of a series of events that occurred in 1983. A reporter from one of the largest newspapers in the United States asked us if it was true that the Mormon church had bought the long-lost Spalding manuscript for $6,000,000. We replied that we had no information to support such an accusation. Some time after this, we received a phone call which seemed to explain the source of the rumor. The woman on the phone told us that if we would call a Mr. D____ in St. James, N.Y., within half an hour, he could give us the details concerning the discovery of the Spalding manuscript. The number we were given was 516-862-6448. At first Mr. D. seemed rather indignant about the intrusion and was reluctant to talk about the matter, but with some prompting, he finally told us that he had discovered the lost manuscript. In this and other phone conversations he revealed that he had found the 339-page manuscript in an old piano. He not only claimed he found the manuscript, but he maintained that he also had a sixteen-page document written by Sidney Rigdon in which he confessed the part he played in the whole deception. This was not all, however; he also found an 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon which was marked to reveal the portions which were plagiarized from the Spalding manuscript!

We, of course, concluded that these fantastic claims were ridiculous and published an article concerning this in the Salt Lake City Messenger in November 1983. Later we discussed the matter with Mark Hofmann. He told us that Mr. D. was a “kook” and no credence should be given to his story. Hofmann said that the noted document dealer Charles Hamilton could tell us all about Mr. D.’s bad reputation. Some time later we heard that Mark Hofmann had found the 116 lost pages of the Book of Mormon—i.e., the book of Lehi. We were told that the contents of the book of Lehi were “dynamite.” The manuscript was supposed to contain information about money-digging interwoven with material that reads like the book of Nephi—one of the books appearing in the published Book of Mormon. When we discussed the matter with Mark Hofmann, he admitted that a manuscript purporting to be the 116 missing pages had been found in Bakersfield, California. He claimed, however, that it was a forgery. In telling about this manuscript, Mr. Hofmann said that a Book of Mormon was found with the manuscript which was marked to reveal which parts of the printed Book of Mormon were the same as those appearing in the unpublished book of Lehi. Mr. Hofmann’s story concerning the marked Book of Mormon sounded strangely similar to Mr. D.’s claim that he found a Book of Mormon which was marked to show the portions which were plagiarized from the Spalding manuscript. We felt that the two stories were so similar that we were almost forced to the conclusion that one was borrowed from the other. This, of course, also raised the question of whether there was some connection between Hofmann and Mr. D. We later wondered if it were possible that Mr. D. was trying to get us to print an article on the matter so that the Mormon church would become concerned and try to buy up the purported Spalding manuscript.

It is also interesting to note that about the same time Church Archivist Donald Schmidt called us on the telephone. He seemed very concerned that we had the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and were preparing to print them. He claimed that he had been told that one of the editors of this newsletter (Jerald Tanner) had boasted in the library of the Utah State Historical Society that he had the missing pages. We, of course, assured Mr. Schmidt that there was no truth in the statement. In retrospect, we wonder if someone told Schmidt this story to stir the church leaders up so that they would pay a higher price to buy a forged copy of the manuscript.

In his interview in Sunstone, page 13, Lyn Jacobs tells of the report of the discovery of the book of Lehi manuscript in “southern California”:

Mark decided not to attempt to go after the stuff when he found out exactly what it is. It may have something to do with a fictional account supposedly written in the nineteenth century by Sidney Rigdon called “The Book of Lehi.” I suspect that’s what it is. It is certainly not the 116 pages, or Mark would have gone after it.

It is possible that someone could have been making plans to forge as many as three important manuscripts relating to the Book of Mormon. The first is the long-lost Spalding manuscript. The second might be Sidney Rigdon’s rewritten version of the Spalding manuscript, which Jacobs refers to as “The Book of Lehi.” The third, of course, would be the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon in the handwriting of Martin Harris and Emma Smith. Any one of these manuscripts would be worth millions of dollars. While at first glance it would seem unlikely that the Mormon church leaders would be gullible enough to buy more than one of these manuscripts, if a common thread ran through all three manuscripts, such a swindle might be rather convincing. For instance, the Spalding manuscript could be more of a secular history of the Nephites. The Rigdon version of the “Book of Lehi” might contain a great deal of the same material with some religious information interspersed. The final product (the lost 116 pages in the handwriting of Martin Harris) could contain essentially the same material as Rigdon’s manuscript with changes made to fit the vocabulary and style of Joseph Smith. While this all may be just a matter of speculation, an individual who talked privately with one of Mark Hofmann’s close associates just before the bombings informed us that he was told that a manuscript “like” the 116 missing pages of the Book of Mormon had been discovered. Moreover, the fact that police have been investigating a Spalding-Rigdon document makes us even more suspicious.

COVER-UP FEARED

Many people are concerned that when Mark Hofmann comes to trial there will be some kind of a cover-up to protect the Mormon church. One fear that has been expressed is that prosecutors might give preferential treatment to the Mormon leaders. Our greatest concern, however, is how Mr. Hofmann’s lawyers will handle their side of the case. From all indications Hofmann is deeply in debt and would have no way of paying for his defense. Since the case is so complicated, his legal fees could mount to a million dollars. While his lawyers were originally talking about setting up a public defense fund, they have now indicated that funds have become available to them. Our fear is that the church could either directly or indirectly provide funds for Hofmann’s defense. While there would be nothing illegal about this, the church certainly has its own vested interest in how the trial is conducted. If Hofmann’s lawyers were to receive money from the church or its leaders, they might feel somewhat obligated not to cause the church any embarrassment with regard to Hofmann’s document dealings with them. Such a move could possibly influence what witnesses Hofmann’s lawyers called and how Church leaders would be questioned. Furthermore, it might make it hard to subpoena documents the church has in its possession. For instance, if the Oliver Cowdery history really talks about salamanders appearing to Joseph Smith, it could be subpoenaed in an attempt to support the claims for the authenticity of the Salamander letter. If the church were paying the legal bills, however, it is unlikely that the lawyers would want to embarrass church leaders by demanding that it become a part of the public record. (It would, of course, be of no help if the prosecution could show that Hofmann had access to it.)

At this point we have no evidence that the church is paying any of Mr. Hofmann’s legal bills. We do know, however, that the church was willing to pay a great deal of money to get rid of embarrassing documents. It is also reasonable to conclude that church leaders would like to keep their secret dealings with the documents from coming to light. The General Authorities, therefore, will probably do their best to keep on the good side of Hofmann. He knows too much with regard to their secret document deals. Although church leaders could not resist the temptation to suppress embarrassing documents, we hope they have learned their lesson and will not try to influence the course of the trial with their money or power. In any case, the cancellation of Hofmann’s public defense fund is certainly another mystery in this bizarre case. Even if some persons or organizations were willing to give a large amount of money for Hofmann’s defense, we would think that they would let the defense fund be set up first and then pay only the amount which was over that raised through the publicly supported fund.

CHARGES AVAILABLE

The Salt Lake County Attorney’s charges against Mark Hofmann are now available in a pamphlet we have published entitled, The State of Utah v. Mark W. Hofmann. This 24-page booklet also contains the “probable cause” statements which were deleted when the information was first released by the County Attorney’s Office. This very revealing and controversial document sells for only, $1.00 a copy.

Besides the accusation that documents have been forged, the charges filed against Mark Hofmann contain other important information. For instance, in the last issue of the Messenger we demonstrated that Hofmann obtained a piece of papyrus from Kenneth Rendell and later claimed that it was part of the so-called McLellin collection—i.e., papyrus which Joseph Smith had in his possession and claimed were written by Abraham and Joseph in Egypt. The charges show that Hofmann misrepresented this papyrus to different individuals and tried to sell it to Curt Bench “for $40,000.” Pages 23-24 of The State of Utah v. Mark W. Hofmann, contain some very revealing information concerning Hofmann’s document dealings:

On May 9, 1985, Mark Hofmann completed an agreement with Thomas Wilding wherein Thomas Wilding agreed to put up $160,000.00 in order to have Mark Hofmann purchase a Charles Dickens “Haunted Man” manuscript. . . . Later, Mark Hofmann assured Mr. Wilding that the manuscript described above had been purchased by Mr. Hofmann and re-sold to an investor in Japan. Your affiant has learned from Justin Schiller, that Mr. Schiller has possession of the above described manuscript due to the fact that Mr. Schiller invested $170,000.00 of his own funds to purchase the manuscript. Mark Hofmann never gave the monies given to him by Mr. Wilding to Mr. Schiller for the acquisition of the manuscript. . . .

Thomas Wilding . . . gave the following information: On September 12, 1985, Mark Hofmann completed an agreement to purchase the “Oath of a Freeman” from Lynn Jacobs in New York State. This is the first time Mr. Wilding had heard the name, Lynn Jacobs. Mr. Wilding gave Mark Hofmann $170,000.00 in order to purchase the “Oath of a Freeman” from Lynn Jacobs. The next day, Thomas Wilding tried to verify if Mark Hofmann had traveled to New York and found that he had not. It has been determined by your affiant that the monies received by Mark Hofmann in this above described transaction did not go to Lynn Jacobs and that when this transaction was orchestrated by Mark Hofmann, he already had the “Oath” since he purchased it for $25.00 in a rare book shop.

Your affiant was told by Thomas Wilding that on or about the first week in August, 1985, Mark Hofmann completed a sale of what he maintained were Brigham Young Papers and received from Thomas Wilding over $10,000.00 in cash. . . .

On the evening of September 13, 1985 . . . Syd Jensen, Tom Wilding and Mark Hofmann met in Tom Wilding’s office. Mark Hofmann admitted to Mr. Wilding and Jensen that the “Oath of a Freeman,” had not been purchased by Mark Hofmann nor sold by him. Mr. Hofmann further confessed that the money purported to be obtained by Mr. Hofmann to purchase the Charles Dicken’s manuscript as described above had not gone for the purpose intended.

Lastly, that there were no “Brigham Young Papers” and the money obtained to purchase the nonexistent documents had gone elsewhere.

As far as the charges of murder are concerned, the legal papers do not reveal any “smoking gun.” They do, however, have some circumstantial evidence which could place Mark Hofmann in the vicinity of both Christensen’s office and the Sheets’ residence prior to the bombings. Lorie Loftin, one of the witnesses to the explosion of the bomb in Hofmann’s car who is spoken of in the complaint, has charged investigators with distorting her statements concerning what happened prior to the blast (see Salt Lake Tribune, February 8, 1986). While it appears that she will not be able to provide any meaningful evidence for the prosecution, the complaint indicates that the bomb was on the seat of the car when it exploded. This would appear to support the charge that Hofmann was transporting the bomb when it exploded. On page 14, the complaint states:

The defendant stated to detective J.F.G. Bell that when he opened his vehicle door, a package fell on to the vehicle floor and he went to grab for it, then there was an explosion. . . .

Investigation by agent Jerry Taylor, an explosives technology expert and reconstruction expert for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms reviewed all the physical evidence and laboratory reports and concluded that the position of the bomb at the time of detonation in defendant’s car was on the drivers seat, against the console in contrast to defendant’s statement that it was on the floor.

In the last issue of the Messenger we reported that the relationship between Steven Christensen and Mark Hofmann was strained by Hofmann’s failure to repay a bank loan and that Hofmann may have strongly resented Christensen’s “parental-like intrusion into his affairs.” The complaint against Mark Hofmann alleges that Christensen was threatening Hofmann with legal action and criminal charges before the bombings:

> . . . Curt Bench knew that Mark W. Hofmann’s personal debts exceeded the hundreds of thousands of dollars owed to several groups of people as a result of document dealings. Around the middle of September, 1985, Mr. Bench saw Mr. Hofmann and observed that Mr. Hofmann was [in a] highly agitated and distraught condition. When Mr. Bench inquired of Mr. Hofmann the reason for this condition, Mark W. Hofmann told Curt Bench that he owed a great deal of money and could be facing serious consequences, including criminal charges, if he could not get his financial problems solved.

Curt Bench was also an acquaintance of Steven Christensen and had been informed by Steven Christensen that he needed Mr. Bench’s assistance in contacting Mark W. Hofmann over a very serious matter which could result in “legal action,” possibly “criminal charges,” and Hofmann would lose his membership in the L.D.S. Church as well as lose his ability to do business with anyone in the L.D.S. Church forever. Steve Christensen told Curt Bench that he wanted Mr. Bench to relay this information to Mark Hofmann even though Steven Christensen had already told Mark Hofmann this as well . . .

> Your affiant has been informed by police investigators and reports that Mr. Robert Pitts, a business associate of Steven Christensen, . . . overheard Steven Christensen say to Mark Hofmann in a loud and agitated voice “You can’t hide that!” This is the only part of the conversation that was overheard due to its loud nature. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Pitts saw Mark Hofmann leave the office in a “solemn mood.” (The State of Utah v. Mark W. Hofmann, pages 16-17)

If Steven Christensen had uncovered illegal activities on the part of Mark Hofmann and was threatening criminal charges against him, this could give a motive for murder. Although investigators claim they have a very good case against Mr. Hofmann, they are not revealing what else they know. The preliminary hearing is scheduled for April 14, and more information will undoubtedly become available at that time. One of the prosecutors has said that it will take two weeks just to present the evidence against Hofmann at the preliminary hearing. It is claimed that 20,000 pages of material have been prepared by the prosecution and turned over to Hofmann’s lawyers.

Mark Hofmann’s lawyers still refuse to allow police to question their client. While Hofmann’s silence does tend to make us suspicious, we will try to keep an open mind. There is always a possibility that he is being framed.

Mark Hofmann’s trial for possession of an unregistered machine gun has been delayed because of the murder charges against him. His friend, Shannon Flynn, has changed his plea from innocent to guilty but has not been sentenced.

TALES OF HOFFMANN

In the last three issues of the Messenger we have discussed the possibility that the Oliver Cowdery history (which has been suppressed in the First Presidency’s vault) may have been the source for the reference to a salamander in the Martin Harris letter. A historian who has talked to Lyn Jacobs claims that Jacobs told him that Mark Hofmann had read the entire Oliver Cowdery history.

Another possible explanation for the appearance of a white salamander in the letter, might be that the forger read E.T.A. Hoffmann’s story “The Golden Flower Pot,” which was reprinted by Dover Publications in 1967 in the book, The Best Tales of Hoffmann. This is a story about “the Student Anselmus” who worked for “Archivarius Lindhorst” In this story a rope magically turns into a “white serpent” and attacks Anselmus (page 12). This is similar to the portion of the Salamander letter which tells of a “white salamander” that transforms itself into a spirit and strikes Joseph Smith three times. The Salamander letter speaks of the “old spirit.” The tale of Hoffmann refers to the “old earth-spirit” (page 29). Archivarius Lindhorst is also referred to as “the Old One” (Ibid.). As it turns out, the Archivarius was originally “a Salamander” in the “Fairyland Atlantis” (page 45). As punishment for his folly in Atlantis, the Salamander was turned into a man. Anselmus fell in love with the Archivarius’ daughter who was a “green snake.” On page 57 of The Best Tales of Hoffmann, Anselmus commented: “But of course you do not believe in the Salamander, or the green snake.” The whole story is filled with magic, and at one point Anselmus tells a witch that “the Salamander will catch you, you vile beet!” (Ibid., page 58).

Since E.T.A. Hoffmann originally wrote this tale in German in the early 19th century, some people have suggested that Joseph Smith may have heard about it. If there is a connection between the Salamander letter and the tale of Hoffmann, it would seem more likely that it came through the paperback edition of The Best Tales of Hoffmann, which was printed in 1967.

Although we do not know whether Mark Hofmann traces his roots from E.T.A. Hoffmann (Mark Hofmann only has one f in his name), the name Hoffmann on the cover probably would have caught his attention.
LAW SUIT OVER
UNFAIR VERDICT IS OVERTURNED

On April 28, 1983, the Mormon scholar Andrew Ehat filed a lawsuit against us (Jerald and Sandra Tanner) in an attempt to stop publication of some extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton. Because these diaries contain embarrassing material on the origin of polygamy and other matters, they have been suppressed in the vault of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church. In 1979-80 Mr. Ehat gained access to a copy of the diaries and made the revealing extracts. Ehat tried very hard to keep the material from falling into the hands of the critics of the Mormon church, but a member of a bishopric surreptitiously duplicated a copy which Ehat had given to Lyndon Cook and it was widely circulated by Mormon scholars at Brigham Young University. These extracts subsequently found their way into our hands, and we printed them in the book Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered.

We felt the law did not support Ehat’s charge of copyright violation and cited the following from Section 103(b) of Title 17, United States Code: “The copyright in a compilation or derivative work extends only to the material contributed by the author of such work, as distinguished from the preexisting material employed in the work, and does not imply any exclusive right in the preexisting material.” Since Mr. Ehat’s notes are composed of extracts from “preexisting” material (i.e., the diaries of William Clayton), we felt that he could not claim copyright protection.

On March 21, 1984, Judge A. Sherman Christensen commenced a trial which ended in a very unexpected way. On March 25 the Judge announced that we were correct in saying that Mr. Ehat had no copyright in the Clayton material: “2. That the plaintiff has no copyrightable interest in the so-called Ehat notes nor their ideas nor content, and that plaintiff’s claim against the defendants for copyright infringement should be dismissed with prejudice.” (Court Ruling, page 17) Instead of dismissing the case, however, Judge Christensen apparently felt that we should be punished in some way for printing the sensitive material. He, therefore, awarded $16,000 for what he said was “unfair competition” and damage to Ehat’s reputation. We felt that Judge Christensen’s decision was completely unjust and contrary to the law. Since Christensen was a Mormon, Andrew Ehat’s lawyer, Gordon A. Madsen, apparently felt that he could capitalize on the religious issue. In the depositions he took from us, he asked questions to make it clear that we had left the church and were publishing sensitive church documents. This, of course, could create a great deal of prejudice towards us in the mind of a believing Mormon.

JUDGE THREATENS US

In addition to the $16,000 judgment against us, Judge Christensen said he was going to stop our publication of the Clayton material: “Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered . . . cannot lawfully be continued to be sold and distributed by the defendant . . .” (Court Ruling, page 16). Just four days after making this statement, Judge Christensen began to have doubts about the wisdom of his decision to enjoin the publication, and on April 10, he held a hearing and completely reversed his decision with regard to the injunction. Since Christensen reversed the decision, we concluded that we could continue to sell the publication. On April 29, 1984, we published a full-page advertisement in the Salt Lake City newspapers in which we publicly criticized Judge Christensen’s decision on “unfair competition” and indicated that we would continue selling the publication. We felt that we were well within our rights of freedom of the press guaranteed to us in the Constitution. Incredible as it may seem, however, Judge Christensen granted Ehat’s lawyer a hearing concerning the newspaper article. It is our belief that he only granted the hearing so that he could rebuke us for criticizing his judgment in the newspapers and to try and intimidate us so that we would not continue selling the publication. At this hearing Judge Christensen made some remarkable statements which clearly showed his prejudice against us:

THE COURT: At the time this matter was before me for final decision with respect to injunctive relief, I was persuaded that an injunction would involve too many problems of enforcement and First Amendment rights . . .

The other thing that persuaded me was my assumption that Mr. Tanner was acting in good faith, was a law abiding citizen . . . I really didn’t expect that Mr. Tanner would insist upon continuing to commit what was adjudged to be an unlawful act, . . . not only did he do that, but as I read the article, . . . he really misrepresented the decision of the Court and flaunted his defiance of it . . . . damages of a nature far beyond what were awarded heretofore could well flow from the crafted, misrepresentation of the Court’s judgment . . .

The Tanners . . . had to advertise through misrepresentation their violation and invite the public to contribute to that violation. I guess I’m a little naive. I’m not used to dealing with the kind of people when I accord consideration on balance in faith that there would be at least an attempt to comply with the Court’s ruling. I’m not used to people advertising their noncompliance . . . The Tanners have done about as much as they can to flaunt the judgment of the Court . . . I don’t see that they can do very much else unless they want to publish another advertisement to try and market the matter. But if they do there is relief here . . . In my judgment, the amount of damages as a result of this additional publication under the circumstances I have mentioned may well be immeasurably more than the damage that was suffered by the plaintiff up to the time of the judgment. . . . the Tanners have done about as well as they could do to justify punitive damages. . . . if the plaintiff suffered in the magnitude of $15,000 for the unlawful misappropriation and publication, the damages could well exceed that by many times because of the emphasis that hadn’t applied before through this public announcement and the Tanners’ flaunting and misrepresentation of the judgment of the Court . . . if and when the case is affirmed, I assume the Tanners can be brought in and a full accounting made as to what other sales they have made which were unlawful. . . . The Tanners will be liable as a matter of law for such damages including punitive damages as may have been additionally caused by their unlawful act. (“Partial Transcript of Proceedings,” May 8, 1984)

It was plain from this hearing that Judge Christensen was trying to intimidate us through threats of awarding vast sums of money to Mr. Ehat so that we would not publicly question his decision. On page 10 of the transcript, he stated that he might award “many times” the “$15,000” (actually $16,000) because of our “public announcement and . . . flaunting and misrepresentation of the judgment of the Court . . . .” This statement is certainly difficult to interpret, but one could get the impression that he intended to award hundreds of thousands of dollars. In any case, we viewed these threats as nothing less than an attempt to keep us from exercising our freedom of speech, and felt that it was deplorable that a judge representing the United States Government would stoop to such methods to keep us from questioning his decisions. We felt that this was not the American way and did not intend to be intimidated by his threats. We believed, in fact, that the Judge’s decision against us and his subsequent threats were a serious miscarriage of justice. The case was appealed to the 10th circuit court to be reviewed by a panel of three judges.

Finally, on December 30, 1985, the U.S. Court of Appeals For The Tenth Circuit ruled in our favor and completely overturned Judge Christensen’s decision:

Andrew Ehat brought this action against Gerald and Sandra Tanner . . . . Judgment was entered against the Tanners, and they appeal. We reverse . . . . Ehat’s complaint asserted claims under the federal copyright statutes, on which the judge granted summary judgment for the Tanners. In addition, the complaint alleged state common law claims for unfair competition and unjust enrichment. Following a bench trial on these claims, the Court entered judgment for Ehat. On appeal, the Tanners assert that the district court erred in awarding damages on Ehat’s common law claims because those claims are preempted by the federal copyright statutes. We agree . . . . State law forbidding others to copy an article “unprotected by a patent or a copyright . . . would interfere with the federal policy, found in . . . the Constitution and in the implementing federal statutes, of allowing free access to copy whatever the federal patent and copyright laws leave in the public domain.” . . . We cannot agree with the district court that Ehat’s state claim was not within the scope of copyright because it was based on his right in the notes “as a physical matter and property.” . . . the court awarded Ehat $12,000 for general damage to his reputation as a scholar-that claim is preempted as well . . . . Ehat “cannot achieve by an unfair competition claim what [he] failed to achieve under [his] copyright claim.” . . . Ehat’s state law claim is preempted. The case is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion. (“Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Utah” [D. C. No. 83-0593C], pages 2-4, 6-8)

Andrew Ehat’s lawyer had originally argued before Judge Christensen that if he could not prove that there had been a copyright violation his entire case would fail:

THE COURT: Do you concede that if the law is that the quotations of your quotation from the journal doesn’t violate any proprietary interest of your client that your case fails?

MR. MADSEN: I think it does. I think if they can say this is not copyright material and they therefore are at liberty to print it. (“Hearing to Quash Subpoena Duces Tecum and Objections,” September 6, 1983, pages 10-11)

Mr. Madsen now argues that “uncopyrightable material” is also protected by law. After the U.S. Court of Appeals issued their decision against his client, Madsen submitted a “Petition for Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc.” He asked the Court to “rehear the appeal and reconsider the opinion heretofore rendered in this case . . . .” He claimed that if the decision was allowed to stand, the result would be “intolerable” and “immoral.” On February 10, 1986, the Court of Appeals responded that “the petition for rehearing is denied by the panel that rendered the decision sought to be reheard.

The petition for rehearing having been denied by the panel to whom the case was argued and submitted, and no member of the panel nor judge in regular active service [sic] on the Court having requested that the Court be polled on rehearing en banc, Rule 35, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, the suggestion for rehearing en banc is denied.

This, of course, means that our long nightmare has finally ended. Back in November, 1983, we printed the following in the Salt Lake City Messenger:
Fighting this lawsuit will cost thousands of dollars and a great deal of time, but we feel that it will all work out for our good. The publicity surrounding it has already helped our work a great deal. Some of those who oppose our work have been hoping that the suit will drive us into bankruptcy, but we feel that it will have just the opposite effect. As Joseph told his brothers who had sold him into Egypt, “. . . ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive” (Genesis 50:20). In Romans 8:28 we read: “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose.”

Although Andrew F. Ehat is attempting to destroy our work with a suit which asks damages of up to “the sum of $50,000,” and the costs of the action to the plaintiff, we do not hold any bad feelings toward him. He apparently feels that he is doing the right thing and that he is working to save the Mormon Church.

Now that it is all over, we really want to thank the people who stood with us through this terrible ordeal. The prayers and financial help we received have been a great help and we are rejoicing that the funds came to meet the expenses involved in this whole affair.

BOMBING VICTIM COULD NOT TESTIFY

As strange as it may seem, the “white salamander” question even found its way into our court trial. In the “Pre-Trial Order,” Gordon A. Madsen indicated that he was thinking of calling “Steven Christensen,” the man who bought the Salamander letter and was later killed by a bomb, as a witness against us. In the “Trial Brief” Mr. Madsen wrote:

> The deliberateness of defendants is further emphasized by the testimony of Christensen and the defendants that the printing of stolen and unpermissive material has been, and is, a habit with these defendants and is highlighted by the most recent issue of defendants’ publication, The Salt Lake Messenger, in which they both advertise the continued sale of the Clayton publication and print excerpts from Mr. Christensen’s [Salamander] letter without permission, knowing full well who owned the document, that the same has not been previously published, and completely disregarding the rights of Mr. Christensen.

At the trial itself the following exchange occurred between Gordon A. Madsen and Jerald Tanner.

Q. Indeed the forepart of that same Messenger has some quotes in it from a letter that hasn’t yet been printed that you acknowledge is owned by Mr. Steven Christensen, doesn’t it?

A. It has quotations from a letter, but that has not been stolen.

Q. But your quotations from it were without any permission from Mr. Christensen, were they?

A. I did not need permission from Mr. Christensen because the owner[ship] of the document is in the family, and it’s the family rights would be the descendant[s] of Martin Harris.

Q. You say in your own article that Christensen is the owner of that document, do you not?

A. Yes, but if you would read the copyright law there is a difference between ownership of the document and ownership of the manuscript rights.

Q. What effort did you make to determine who owned the copyrights in that Christensen letter?

A. I’m sure that it’s been so long that no one would.

(Trial Transcript, pages 391-392)

Steven Christensen was present at our trial, but because the Judge felt that Mr. Ehat’s lawyer was wasting so much time on irrelevant material, he was unable to call him as a witness. It was lucky for Mr. Madsen that Christensen could not testify. Madsen had tried to play down the idea of a “Mormon underground” which was secretly circulating sensitive church documents. In our attempt to find material that would nullify Steven Christensen’s testimony, we learned that he was deeply involved in this underground. He had even been dealing with some of the church’s worst enemies—i.e. the Mormon fundamentalists, who teach polygamy and the Adam-God doctrine. We had a list of over 2,000 books and manuscripts which Christensen had in his possession at that time and were prepared to question him concerning how he obtained copies of some of the restricted Mormon documents.

We do not believe that Steven Christensen had any manuscript rights to the Salamander letter, but even if he had, we quoted only a few sentences from it in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger. This would fall well within the limits of “fair use,” and therefore would not be considered a copyright violation. Furthermore, if Ehat’s lawyer had pressed the matter further, he would have learned that the extracts we published were obtained even before Steven Christensen purchased the letter. They certainly were not stolen. If Christensen had been called to the stand to give testimony, it would have had a disastrous affect on Mr. Madsen’s attempt to minimize the role of the “Mormon underground.” The whole thing, in fact, would have been very embarrassing for Mr. Christensen.

Steven Christensen seems to have been thoroughly converted to the Salamander letter. Instead of listening to the message of caution which we printed in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger, he wanted to fight us in court. He continued to believe in Mark Hofmann and his stories concerning the discovery of important Mormon documents for more than a year. Although he seems to have eventually come to the conclusion that Hofmann was involved in illegal activities, by this time it was too late. If investigators are correct in their theory, it was Christensen’s continued involvement with Hofmann which led to his untimely death.

DESERET FOUNDATION

Another interesting fact that has come out of the investigation of the bombings is that Andrew Ehat, the man who sued us, was employed by Steven Christiansen as a researcher. The Deseret News, for November 17, 1985, reported: “During the time Christensen was Sheets’ right-hand man at Coordinated Financial Services, he employed Ehat as a researcher through the Deseret Foundation, . . . Christensen left CFS hurting financially himself, and Ehat got another job.” When the trial took place Mr. Ehat said that he earned money as “a researcher,” but he did not mention that he was working for the Deseret Foundation. In the Trial Transcript, pages 54-55, he listed some of his expenses. One of them was the “Loss of work, November of 1983 approximately $560, . . .” We were a little puzzled by this statement because when we took his deposition on November 23, 1983, he said he was not employed:

Q. Are you currently employed?
A. No, I’m not employed.
Q. What’s your current source of income?
A. I’m a graduate student. I’ve had a fellowship and GI Bill.” (Deposition of Andrew Ehat, page 5)

We wondered why Mr. Ehat didn’t answer yes to the question of whether he was employed. The reason could be that he did not want to reveal to us his connection with Steven Christiansen and the Deseret Foundation. At the time we found it hard to believe that a man with a family who was struggling to go through school would have the money to press this lawsuit against us. We wonder now if the Deseret Foundation could have been helping Mr. Ehat finance the suit.

So far we have not been able to learn much about the Deseret Foundation. According to the Articles of Incorporation, it is a “non-profit corporation” set up for “charitable, educational and scientific purposes.” It was founded January 18, 1974, by Gary Sheets [whose wife was later killed in the bombings], Robert Raybould and C. Dean Larsen. Although we do not know when Steven Christiansen became involved in the organization, a report dated January 14, 1983, shows that “Steve Christiansen” was a trustee in the organization at that time. While we do not know if it means anything, reports submitted to the State of Utah for 1984-85 show that three members of the Board of Trustees (Steven A. Apple, C. Dean Larsen and Wayne A. Jenson) had offices at “200 North Main” in Salt Lake City. This is the address for the McCune Mansion. The Deseret News for October 17, 1985, reported that just before Hofmann was injured by the bomb, he had come out of “the McCune Center.” The article also states:

Detectives learned upon questioning witnesses . . . that Hofmann was seen carrying a briefcase or package into the building. Another witness said he returned to his car with the item. Police now speculate that the package he carried may have been a bomb, and that when he placed the bomb into his car, it detonated, . . .

If it could be established that Hofmann really did carry a bomb into the McCune Mansion, it would make us very suspicious that the target might have been a member of the Deseret Foundation. This, of course, would raise the question of whether Hofmann had some secret dealings with the Deseret Foundation. If anyone has any additional information on this foundation we would certainly appreciate it if they would contact us.

All those who are interested in obtaining a copy of the Court of Appeals’ decision against Andrew Ehat can obtain it for $1.00. We have just completed a new printing of Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. This booklet normally sells for $3.00 a copy, but because of our recent court victory we are offering it for only $2.00. We are also selling the The Tanners on Trial (a book that usually sells for $5.95) for only $4.95. This is a very important study of the trial. Both of these specials must be ordered before June 15, 1986 (mail orders add 10%).

Supporting 25 Children

In June 1985 we wrote the following:

If the Lord is willing, we hope to expand our outreach to the needy. In the Jan. 1985 issue of the Messenger we stated that we had stepped out in faith to provide support for five needy children through World Vision. We are happy to report that we have had the funds to meet this need and that we are now adding two more children to the list. . . . Psalm 82:3 tells us that we should “Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.” Because God has been so gracious in supplying all our needs, we have decided to take another step in faith. In the future we will be supporting 25 children. We really want to thank all of you who have made this move possible. All donations to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY are TAX DEDUCTIBLE.

ONLY ONE LIFE

In the book of James we read these startling words:

Come now, you who say, “Today or tomorrow we will go to such and such a city, spend a year there, buy and sell, and make a profit”; whereas you do not know what will happen tomorrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appears for a little time and then vanishes away.
(New King James Version, 4:13-14)

In our home we have the following poem mounted on the wall:

Only one Life,
Twill soon be past.
Only what’s done
For Christ will last.

This sign reminds us of the importance of letting the Lord have his way in our lives. All other things should be secondary. Jesus Himself said, “But seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added to you” (Matthew 6:33). On another occasion Jesus told of the futility of living one’s life with only selfish goals in mind:

Then Jesus said to His disciples, if anyone desires to come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. For whoever desires to save his life will lose it, and whoever loses his life for my sake will find it. For what is a man profited if he gains the whole world and loses his own soul? or what will a man give in exchange for his soul? (Matthew 16:24-26)

Although the things of this world seem so very important to us now, some day they will turn to ashes. The Apostle John expressed it very well:

Do not love the world, neither the things in the world If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life is not of the Father but is of the world. And the world is passing away, and the lust of it, but he who does the will of God remains forever. (1 John 2:1517)

The Lord has promised that if we receive Him as our personal Saviour and allow him to control our lives, we will have great peace here and unspeakable joy in the Kingdom of Heaven:

Do not labor for the food which perishes but for the food which endures to everlasting life, which the Son of Man will give you. For on him has God the Father set His seal. (John 6:27)

In God’s perspective it is certainly true that only what’s done for Christ will last.

---

VIDEOS AVAILABLE

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Price: $30.00

(Mail order add 10%)

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with a Milwaukee television station. Price: $20.00 (Mail orders add 10%)
After two and a half years of investigation into the documents and activities of the Mormon document dealer Mark Hofmann, we are now able to offer a book on the Salamandergate scandal which rocked Utah and the Mormon Church. This new book is entitled, Tracking the White Salamander—The Story of Mark Hofmann, Murder and Forged Mormon Documents.

“IT IS EXPLOSIVE”

On October 15, 1985, about a year and a half after we began our research into the authenticity of the documents Mark Hofmann was selling the Mormon Church and other collectors, we were startled to learn of two cruel murders. The first victim was a Mormon bishop by the name of Steven F. Christensen. Mr. Christensen picked up a box in front of his office which turned out to be a ‘booby-trapped shrapnel bomb.’ The Deseret News, April 15, 1986, reported:

In testimony Monday, an insurance representative [Janet McDermott] with an office directly across from Christensen’s office testified the force of the bomb blast knocked plaster off the walls of her office and sent glass flying. . . . she immediately ran behind her desk, fearing someone in the hallway had just been shot and that a gunman was in the hallway. “I crouched down,” she said, “I didn’t know what was going on.”

McDermott heard, not the sound of a gunman in the hall, but a “very high-pitched crying—like a little child dying,” she said, her voice cracking with emotion.

She walked out into the hall and found Christensen lying half in, half out of his office doorway. His chest was bloody. The crying noises she had heard were coming from Christensen, but they were much deeper now.

The amount of gun powder used in the pipe bomb together with the nails which were taped around the outside of the pipe insured that Christensen would not survive the blast. It soon became apparent that the victim was the same man who bought the notorious “White Salamander Letter”—a letter which proved to be embarrassing to the Mormon Church. Later that morning another package exploded killing Kathleen Sheets. This package was addressed to her husband, J. Gary Sheets who was also a bishop in the Mormon Church. Mr. Sheets “had helped fund research that authenticated the [Salamander] letter.” The next day a bomb exploded in a car less than two miles from our house. Mark Hofmann, who sold the Salamander letter to Mr. Christensen, was critically injured in this blast.

Mark Hofmann had a reputation for dealing in very controversial Mormon documents. In fact, Brigham Young University Professor Ronald W. Walker recorded the following in his journal on January 18, 1984, after examining the Salamander letter for the first time: “. . . it is explosive . . . It confirms several other documents that have been recently found, indicating the

A revealing study of the Salamandergate scandal. Contains a great deal of information on both the murders and the forgeries. This is the first book to print lengthy extracts from the preliminary hearing. An entire chapter is devoted to the Mclellin collection and its possible relationship to the murders. Another chapter deals with the embarrassing position the Mormon Church finds itself in and the possibility of a cover-up. This book also contains a number of photographs of important documents. The testimony from the hearing also is well worth the price of the book.

 Extra Copies of This Issue Will Be Sent Free **
attended all the sessions of the preliminary hearing. In addition to this, we were able to listen to a copy of the official tapes of the proceedings and to make lengthy extracts. Some of these extracts have been included in this issue of the Messenger.

HOFMANN’S ALIASES

At the preliminary hearing some very startling information came out that seemed to link Mark Hofmann to the construction of the bombs. The evidence showed that Hofmann used the alias “Mike Hansen” when ordering material for his forgery operation and that the same name was used by the person who bought important electronic components which were probably used in the bombs. The name “Mike Hansen” was originally discovered on a manila envelope found in Mark Hofmann’s basement. The name of a company, Utah Engravings, appeared on the opposite side of the envelope. Jorgen Olsen of Utah Engravings “identified the writing on the envelope as his own. He explained that the company uses previously used envelopes to put customer orders in, putting the customer’s name on the reverse side” (Deseret News, April 17, 1986). Olsen said that the name he wrote on the envelope was the name given to him by a customer who ordered an engraved plate for printing. When investigators searched through boxes at Utah Engravings, they found a negative used to make a plate to print the “so-called Jim Bridger notes allegedly sold by Mr. Hofmann to several investors for as much as $5,000.” Hofmann sold the Jim Bridger notes as authentic documents actually signed with the American frontiersman’s “X.” Microscopic examination of the negative, however, proved beyond all doubt that Hofmann’s Jim Bridger notes were nothing but modern forgeries. Negatives for other forged documents were found at other engraving companies:

A Salt Lake engraver testified Thursday he prepared two magnesium printing plates for “Mike Hansen”—a man prosecutors identified in earlier court testimony as Mark W. Hofmann. . . .

Jack Smith, DeBouzek Engraving and Colorplate Co., told the court that on Dec. 5, 1984, a man who said his name was Mike Hansen ordered an engraving plate with the signature of famed American novelist Jack London. On Nov. 1 of the same year, Mike Hansen ordered an engraving that police later found reproduced on the back page of a hymn book belonging to Emma Smith, wife of the founder of the LDS Church.

Prosecutors said Thursday they will tie the two engraving plates to six felony theft and fraud counts Hofmann faces. (Deseret News, April 17, 1986)
Employees of Salt Lake Stamp testified that Mark Hofmann obtained four rubber stamps from them in 1982. These stamps have now been linked to the forgery of notes Mark Hofmann sold which were known as the “Spanish Fork Notes.” In December 1984 a “Mike Hansen” ordered another stamp which was used to falsify a book by Jack London to give it more value. The Salt Lake Tribune, April 18, 1986, reported the following concerning the receipt for this transaction:

The fingerprint of Mark W. Hofmann was found on a receipt bearing the same name investigators believe Mr. Hofmann used as an alias when he allegedly bought components used in last October’s deadly bombings, an expert testified Wednesday.

State Crime Laboratory Latent Print Examiner Scott Pratt told 5th Circuit Judge Paul G. Grant that a single print found on a receipt for a rubber stamp from the Salt Lake Stamp Company that was purchased by a “Mike Hansen” in December 1984 matched the print of Mr. Hofmann’s left hand ring finger.

It was the most substantial piece of evidence thus far in the prosecution’s attempt to link Mr. Hofmann to the purchase of mercury switches and battery packs experts have said are identical to those used in the shrapnel bombs . . .

Barbara Zellner, of the Denver based Cox-Clark Engraving Co., testified that a “Mike Hansen” ordered plates for the Deseret Currency. Investigators later determined that these plates were used to print counterfeit copies of this early Mormon currency. Mark Hofmann made tens of thousands of dollars when he sold these forged notes.

It is interesting to note that “Mike Hansen” gave the following address to the engraving company in Denver: 2730 West 25th Street. When we checked this address on our mailing list of those who receive the Salt Lake City Messenger, we found that it was very close to an address we had—i.e., 3730 West 25th Street in Denver. That the address only differed in the first digit seemed very suspicious. I later learned that the address on my list was that of Mark Hofmann’s brother-in-law. It appears, then, that when Mark Hofmann (using the alias “Mike Hansen”) was asked for an address by the engraving company, he just gave his brother-in-law’s address with one digit altered.

Detective Bell said that there were “a total of three” items seized from Hofmann’s home that had the “Mike Hansen” name on them. One receipt had a date of “1982” on it.

When taken together, the evidence clearly establishes that “Mike Hansen” is Mark Hofmann. One alternative to this conclusion might be to say that Mike Hansen is one of Mark Hofmann’s associates. If this were the case, however, Hofmann would have to know who this individual is because he ended up with and sold the forgeries that came from the plates. This explanation does not really hold water because Mark Hofmann’s fingerprint appears on a “Mike Hansen” receipt.

The link between the bomber Mike Hansen and Mark Hofmann is clearly brought out in an article by Mike Carter:

. . . Detective Bell said, almost a dozen agents were sent out to canvas area Radio Shack stores after an ATF agent, searching the scene of the Sheets homicide for the second time, located a mercury switch identical to a brand sold by the retail electronics firm. In that search, investigators turned up two receipts from different stores for the purchase of mercury switches, battery cases and 12 volt lamps that an ATF agent later testified could be used to test a bomb’s firing circuitry.

One of those receipts has been entered into evidence at the hearing, but the clerk who made the sale was unable to identify Mr. Hofmann as the buyer.

That receipt bears the name “Mike Hansen.” Detective Bell testified the second receipt is made out to “M. Hansen.” The address on the receipts, 2034 E. 3900 South and 2056 E. 3900 South, are vacant lots, he said. (Salt Lake Tribune, April 17, 1985)

At the preliminary hearing it was revealed that “Mike Hansen” was not the only alias Mark Hofmann used. He also used the name “Mike Harris,” and when Detective Bell was asked if there were any other aliases, he said that Hofmann had used the name “Bill Edwards.”

SELLING TEMPLE RITUAL

In earlier issues of the Messenger, we have indicated that the first recollection we had of actually meeting Mr. Hofmann was in 1980. Recently we learned, however, that he may have been in our bookstore on June 16, 1978. On that day a young man came in and showed Sandra a copy of the Second Anointing—a highly secret ritual which was frequently performed in the early Mormon temples but is seldom even mentioned today. He claimed it had belonged to his grandfather and had come down through the family. Stamped at the top of the paper were the words “SALT LAKE TEMPLE,” and next to this was a handwritten notation which read: “Destroy this copy.” The man said he felt we should have a photocopy of it. He stressed that his family would be very unhappy if they thought that he was turning it over to us, and he claimed that he did not dare reveal his name to us because he belonged to a very prominent Mormon family. Sandra thought that this man was somewhat thinner than Mark Hofmann is today and also that his hair was lighter. Nevertheless, she remembers that he would probably have been about the age that Hofmann was at that time.

In talking with a writer who was doing research concerning Mr. Hofmann’s activities, we learned that investigators were looking into a document concerning the Second Anointing ceremony which A. J. Simmonds had purchased from Mark Hofmann. Mr. Simmonds was kind enough to send us a photocopy of the document and we compared it to the copy that had been given to us. We found that the two were identical. Simmonds revealed that he bought the document from Hofmann for $60 in October 1979—over a year after we were given the photocopy. If Mr. Simmonds’ recollection is correct, Mr. Hofmann must have been the one who brought the document to us. Simmonds seemed to recall that Hofmann told him at the time that he had already given a copy of the document to the Tanners.

Investigators are apparently skeptical concerning the authenticity of the document. The fact that the words “SALT LAKE TEMPLE” are stamped at the top causes us to doubt its validity because Hofmann used rubber stamps in some of his other forgeries. However this may be, Mr. Hofmann’s plan must have been to obtain publicity for the document by getting us to publish it. If this were the case, he was probably disappointed. Since we had no pedigree for the document and didn’t even know the name of the person who gave it to us, we did not feel safe to use it in any of our publications. Except for a few copies we gave to scholars who were interested, it has remained in our files since 1978. One can only speculate on what might have happened if we had taken the bait. Perhaps Mr. Hofmann would have used us as a publisher for his documents. As it turned out, however, the Mormon leaders became the ones who broke the news concerning most of his important “discoveries” at press conferences which they held. As Hofmann became more involved in dealing with the church, he naturally would have been worried that church leaders would find out that he had sold some of the secret temple ritual to Mr. Simmonds. This information could have had a very bad effect on his document business with the church. We have been told that he begged Simmonds not to reveal his part in the transaction.

In February 1984 we began to have some serious doubts concerning Mark Hofmann’s Salamander letter, and in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger we commented concerning our “reservations” concerning its authenticity. We pointed out that there were “disconcerting” parallels to the Salamander letter in the book Mormonism Unvailed, which was published four years after the Salamander letter was supposed to have been penned. It was our questions with regard to the authenticity of the Salamander letter that led us “to take a closer look” at some of the other documents sold by Mark Hofmann (see The Money-Digging Letters, August 22, 1984).

Both Mark Hofmann and Lyn Jacobs originally told us that Jacobs was the one who discovered the Salamander letter. At Mark Hofmann’s preliminary hearing, Lyn Jacobs acknowledged under oath that he had “fabricated” the story that he had obtained the Salamander letter in New England because Mr. Hofmann did not want any publicity:

Q—. . . did you have occasion to tell people that it was—that you were the one who located the item and purchased the item and that Mr. Hofmann was brought in to help you market the item?
A—Unfortunately, that is correct.
Q—And you’re doing this under Mr. Hofmann’s instruction?
A—Not instructions, under his request. Not his request that I fabricate a story, but that his request that I take full responsibility for the document. That was my decision, to fabricate a story several months later.

At the preliminary hearing the evidence against Mark Hofmann’s documents was finally revealed to the public. We had always felt that the best way to examine Hofmann’s documents would be to get them all together and see if there was something they shared in common that could not be found in other 19th century documents. For instance, if it could be shown that the paper or ink was exactly the same in many of Hofmann’s documents, this would certainly cast a shadow of doubt on their authenticity. At the preliminary hearing we learned that experts did, in fact, examine the documents as a group and concluded that there were features that many of the Hofmann documents exhibited which indicated they were forgeries. William Flyn, a noted forensic document expert, testified concerning the research that revealed the documents were forgeries. Mr. Flyn is the Chief Questioned Documents Examiner for the State of Arizona. He has been with “the Arizona State Lab for 14 years,” and prior to that he served as “the document examiner for the city of Philadelphia” for a period of about four and a half years.

William Flyn claimed he examined “about 461 documents.” In his testimony he disclosed that it was the contents of the ink used on the documents and the attempt to artificially age it that produced a flaky or cracked appearance which gave the whole scam away:

Q—With respect to the ink, did you find any peculiar or abnormal characteristics associated with any of the documents?
A—Yes.
Q—Can you tell us . . . what that would be?
A—Yes. On many of the documents, . . . there appeared a microscopic cracking on the surface of the ink. These appeared on the questioned . . . documents that we were examining.
Q—Besides the cracking, was there any other characteristics?
A—Yes. Under ultraviolet examination, on several of the questioned documents, there was a one-directional running of the inks or a constituent part of the inks, as if they had been wet.
Q—Were you able to determine if there had been any additions on any of the documents—any additional applications of ink?
A—Yes. On several of the documents, there were inks that were not consistent with the body of the document. That is to say that data had been added to the document with a different ink.
Q—Now, . . . besides these characteristics, was there anything common about the documents that you found these characteristics on?
A—Yes.
Q—What was that?
A—These anomalies that I spoke of all occurred on documents that had been dealt by the defendant in the case, Mark Hofmann.
Q—Can you tell us which documents these were?
A—Yes. The documents, in particular, that we found problems with were . . . the Anthon transcript, the Joseph Smith III Blessing, four different white notes, the Lucy Mack Smith document . . . the Josiah Stowell letter of June 18th, 1825, the document we call the E. B. Grandin contract, the Martin Harris–W.W. Phelps document called the Salamander letter, . . . the General Smith, General Dunham (I’m sorry)—Joseph Smith letter, the David Whitmer to Walter Conrad document, the document later called the Betsy Ross letter, the Solomon Spalding–Sidney Rigdon land deed, the letter to Brigham Young from Thomas Bullock, dated June 27, 1865, a promissory note to Isaac Galland from Joseph Smith, a letter called the Maria and Sarah Lawrence letter, the Samuel Smith Bible, the Nathan Harris prayer book, the Bithel ToddPeter and David Whitmer document, and then later there were several types of currency that were also examined.
Q—Did you mention Jim Bridger in that? I’m not sure.
A—The Jim Bridger notes would have been part of the currency . . .
Q—Let me ask you this. Besides these particular ones that you’ve mentioned, associated with Mr. Mark Hofmann, were there any other documents out of the 461 or so that you have examined that exhibit these characteristics?
A—No.
Q—And were there any documents that were not associated with Mark Hofmann that exhibit those characteristics?
A—No.

Mr. Flyn went on to testify that he read in one of the old texts” concerning the “artificial aging of iron gallotannic ink by exposing it to ammonia. . . . After I read that, I made iron gallotannic inks of various types myself and exposed them to . . . both ammonia and sodium hydroxide, and found that . . . it did, indeed, artificially age the inks. . . . The sodium hydroxide, in particular, will immediately take the iron gallotannic inks and turn them a deep rust color on the paper. It wont crack the inks, however. It was not until I began adding some of the additives that were typically added to the inks of that time period, in particular, the sugars and the gums and probably the most . . . commonly used additive in that time period would have been gum arabic, . . .” Flyn explained that gum arabic “was commonly added to the ink to give it body, as a viscosity adjuster to adjust the thickness of the ink, and also as a preservative. . . . When I mixed the iron gallotannic inks and added either the sugars or the gum arabic and then artificially aged them with the sodium hydroxide, I got exactly the same phenomenon that I described in the examination of the questioned documents. The ink both artificially aged and cracked.”

When Mr. Flyn was asked why the ink cracked, he replied:

The cracking effect . . . on the surface of the ink takes place, I believe, because of the viscosity change that the gums and sugars undergo when they go from an acidic state to an alkaline state. . . . And its amazing, under a microscope, you can put a drop of sodium hydroxide on iron gallotannic ink with gums or sugars and watch the ink crack. It will, as soon as the liquid portion evaporates. What remains will be a dark brown rusted ink with cracked surface morphology.

Flyn explained that the chemicals which cause the ink to artificially age can be put on a document in a number of different ways: “They can be fumed. . . . You can simply tape a document inside a tank and the fumes will attack the ink. You can spray them with a air gun. You can dip them.”

It appears from William Flyn’s testimony that the forger was tripped up by the use of gum arabic or sugars in the ink. Although I do not know that the ink found in the Hofmann documents was composed from the exact ingredients mentioned in the formula in Charles Hamilton’s book (a book found in Hofmann’s house), it is interesting to note that this formula “To Make Black Ink” calls for “one Ounce Gum Arabic” (Great Forgers and Famous Fakes, page 267).

Although William Flyn seems to have been the expert who solved the mystery of the cracked ink, George Throckmorton did a great deal of work on the documents. Paul Larson called Mr. Throckmorton “the only forensic document examiner now practicing in the State of Utah” (Utah Holiday, December 1985, page 84). In his testimony, Mr. Throckmorton said that “In this investigation, I examined 688 documents that were written in iron gallotannic ink.” George Throckmorton, like William Flyn, testified that when many of Hofmann’s documents were examined under a microscope, they had cracked ink. Mr. Throckmorton described the cracked ink as looking like the “skin of an alligator.” He claimed that “There were a total, if I recall from my memory, of the 688 I observed, 21 that had this characteristic cracking effect.” When Throckmorton was asked where the 21 documents that had cracked ink came from, he replied that it was his understanding that they all came “through Mark Hofmann.” When he was asked if the ink on any of the remaining 667 documents showed evidence of cracking, he responded: “No, there was none.”

George Throckmorton noticed that “many of the documents” had a “characteristic blue hazing effect under ultraviolet examination.” Mr. Throckmorton experimented and found that ammonium hydroxide, which was used by William Flyn to artificially age the iron gallotannic ink, gave the documents a blue hazing effect under ultraviolet light:

> The blue hazing effect which was observed could have been produced in two different manners . . . I noticed in my personal tests that on some of the papers—some of the old papers that we had for experimentation purposes—some of those papers after being dipped or treated with ammonium hydroxide did leave sort of a blue hazing effect under ultraviolet light. Others also when they were treated with a sodium hypochloride solution—a very weak solution—it left a blue hazing effect on the documents. So the hazing effect could have been duplicated by either one of those procedures. I’m not sure which.

It appears, then, that a solution used to age the ink on the Hofmann documents could cause all the peculiar characteristics found on them—i.e., cracked ink, a blue hazing effect under ultraviolet light and a one-directional running of the ink. At the hearing William Flyn testified:

> A—As I’ll use it in my testimony, it [bleeding] refers to a portion of the ink that would normally be invisible but is made visible under ultraviolet light. On several of the documents, . . . some constituent part of the ink . . . ran from the characters. In most instances, it ran in a unidirectional way. That is to say, it appeared that the document had been held vertically and wet so that the running was down, in one direction. It was not even haloing, where the running extended outward evenly in all directions, but rather it was more like a one-directional running.

Mr. Flyn also gave this testimony concerning the one-directional running of the ink:

> Q—. . . Did you find any indications of this same sign of running under ultraviolet light on any of the documents other than the Hofmann documents?
> A—No.
> Q—Out of all the hundreds you examined it was only on the Hofmann documents?
> A—Yes. Of the 461, I did not see it on those documents.

In the book, Tracking the White Salamander, a great deal of testimony is given concerning the authenticity of the documents. What we have presented here, however, should be sufficient to convince the reader that the case against the Hofmann documents is based upon very solid scientific evidence.

SPALDING-RIGDON SCARE

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for April 1986, we printed the following:

Allen Roberts and Fred Esplin reveal that “Police sources indicate that Steve Christensen’s personal journal records that Elder Hugh Pinnock asked Hofmann to find for him two important items: the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and something “too sensitive to mention,” that the late “Elders Mark E. Petersen and G. Homer Durham were most involved in prior to their deaths” (Utah Holiday, January 1986, page 58). It has been suggested that the item that is “too sensitive to mention” may be the gold plates of the Book of Mormon or a “seer stone.” Both of these suggestions appear unlikely. One thing that might qualify, however, is evidence that Solomon Spalding or Sidney Rigdon wrote the material which Joseph Smith used for his Book of Mormon. Although we have never put a great deal of stock in the theory, many critics of the Mormon church have maintained that Sidney Rigdon stole a manuscript written by Spalding and that this was used to create the Book of Mormon. If this idea could be proven, it would destroy the claim that the Book of Mormon was divinely inspired. Any hard evidence on this subject would certainly be “too sensitive to mention.” Like the 116 lost pages of the Book of Mormon, such “evidence” might be sold to the Mormon church for millions of dollars. This, combined with the secrecy that would surround its transfer to the church, could very easily lead to disagreements and perhaps even to murder.

We have recently learned that investigators have been looking into a document which was in the possession of Hofmann or Jacobs which has the signatures of both Solomon Spalding and Sidney Rigdon on it. The document apparently bears clear evidence of falsification.

At the Mormon Church’s press conference concerning the bombings, Apostle Dallin Oaks stated: “Mark Hofmann has shown Elder Pinnock a letter that he said was part of the [McLellin] collection . . .” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1986). When the preliminary hearing was held, it was revealed that the “letter” which Hofmann showed to Mr. Pinnock was actually the mysterious Spalding-Rigdon document which links the two men together. Hugh Pinnock, a member of the church’s First Quorum of Seventy, testified as follows:

Q—Could you tell us what transpired at that meeting?
A—. . . well, he reported he’d been able to get the collection . . . and showed me . . . a document that he reported was from that collection.
Q—Do you know what that item was?
A—It . . . was a deed or some legal document . . . between Asa and Solomon Spalding and Sidney Rigdon and some other parties. It dealt, if I remember correctly, with the transfer of property.
Q—Did he tell you anything else more about that particular item?

Hugh Pinnock seemed to believe that this document was genuine, and he probably realized that it could have a devastating effect if it became known by critics of the church. That Hofmann would show this particular document to Pinnock certainly supports the accusation that he was engaged in “an attempted blackmail of the Mormon church itself.”

As it turns out, the document is a very obvious forgery. Document experts have testified that the names Sidney Rigdon and Solomon Spalding were not on the document when it was originally written and that the date has been changed from 1722 to 1822. Even the altered date, however, presents a serious problem to those who are informed concerning the Spalding-Rigdon theory concerning the origin of the Book of Mormon. Solomon Spalding could not have signed any document in 1822 because he died in 1816!

In any case, although Hofmann represented to Pinnock that the document was part of the McLellin collection, he turned right around and sold it out from under the church. Steven Barnett gave some very revealing testimony concerning the Spalding-Rigdon document. Mr. Barnett claimed that “about the 18th of September, last year” (1985), Mark Hofmann came into Cosmic Aeroplane and showed him “a document with the signature of Sidney Rigdon and a Solomon Spalding.” He said that Mr. Hofmann told him that it was probably going to be a controversial item and that he would sell it to the store for “$2,000.” Mr. Barnett asked for some time to do some research with regard to the Solomon Spalding signature, and Hofmann granted his request. Barnett went on to testify:

Q—What did you do?
A—I researched that evening and found out that the Solomon Spalding had died several years prior to the date on the item.
Q—Okay. What did you do with that information?
A—Mark called me the following day and I just informed him of the discrepancy of the date.
Q—What happened then? Did he respond?
A—Yes. He said that he’d check back with me later in the day.
Q—Did he do so?
A—Yes, he did.
Q—Tell us about that conversation.
A—Well, what he told me was, would I be interested in the item as a Sidney Rigdon autograph?
Q—And your response?
A—I thought that could be arranged but I wouldn’t be able to pay as much money for it as such.
Q—And what did you pay him?
A—Two hundred dollars in two payments.
Q—A total of four hundred dollars?
A—Right.

At the preliminary hearing William Flyn gave this revealing testimony regarding the Spalding-Rigdon document:

Q—And as a result of your examination, were you able to make any findings concerning that document?
A—Yes.
Q—What are those findings?
A—The Solomon Spalding and Sidney Rigdon signatures that appear on that document were written with a different ink than the other text of the document and the other signatures that appear on the document.
Q—Were you able to determine if they were the same inks themselves?
A—Yes. It appears that the Solomon Spalding and Sidney Rigdon inks are the same inks within themselves but different than the remainder of the ink on...that document.
Q—Were you able to notice any other alterations or changes on that document?
A—Yes.
Q—What was that?
A—The date, anno Domini 1822, had been altered.
Q—Can you tell us from what to what?
A—It had been altered from anno Domini 1722 to 1822.
Q—And out of those eight signatures you mentioned, there are two that appear to be of a different ink.
A—Yes.
Q—And that is Spalding and Sidney Rigdon?
A—That’s correct.

In his testimony George Throckmorton brought out the fact that the ink used on the alteration of the date and the two signatures was cracked (indicating, of course, that it was artificially aged). When Mr. Throckmorton was asked with regard to the 1822 date, he replied: “The number eight exhibited not only a cracking effect but also a diffusing or running effect, which was not found on the one or the other twos.” Throckmorton also testified that the “Solomon Spalding signature also exhibited that characteristic cracking.” When he was asked about the Sidney Rigdon signature, he responded: “That was the other place I observed the cracking.” Mr. Throckmorton maintained that except for the three alterations, the document was genuine: “Other than the change of the date—that’s not an accurate date by any means—and also the two signatures, the rest of it appears to be a genuine document.” Throckmorton was absolutely convinced that the document had been falsified: “I do not believe that those signatures nor the date as we discussed was originally put on that document, nor is it from that time period.”

This document is certainly one of the crudest forgeries that Mark Hofmann ever sold. As we have already pointed out, even the altered date of 1822 does not fit historically because Solomon Spalding died in 1816! Another problem with this document is that it locates Spalding and Rigdon together in Connecticut at the time of the transaction. The evidence shows that Spalding spent his last years in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and Sidney Rigdon became a pastor in a Baptist church in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania in 1822. Even if Spalding had been alive in 1822, the only logical place for the two men to sign such a document would be in Pennsylvania. Another serious problem with the document is that the signature of Solomon Spalding does not resemble that found on a deed he signed in 1811. From all this it is obvious that the creator of this document did not do any real homework on the subject.

SCANDAL AFFECTS CHURCH

While some people originally subscribed to the theory that “the bombs were planted by people radically opposed to the teachings of the Mormon Church,” the facts completely discredit such an idea. At this point it appears that the entire Salamandergate scandal grew out of an internal problem which took root within the Mormon Church itself. Almost all of those who played a role in the transactions which brought international attention to Salt Lake City were members of the Mormon Church. Mark Hofmann himself was at one time a missionary for the church. According to the Church Section of the Deseret News, October 20, 1985, “Hofmann . . . served in the England Southwest Mission, 1974-76.” On February 4, 1986, the same newspaper said that on “one mission report of average proselyting hours, Hofmann’s name ranks 49th out of 208 missionaries. Part of the time, Hofmann served in the mission office in Bristol.” Utah Holiday, January 1986, page 53, reported that Hofmann married “in the Salt Lake LDS temple.” In an interview published in Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 19, Mr. Hofmann described himself as “an eighth-generation Mormon, and my mother is a stake Relief Society president right now.” Some of Hofmann’s closest associates (Lyn Jacobs, Shannon Flynn and Brent Metcalf) were returned Mormon missionaries. Like Hofmann, Brent Metcalf had served his mission in England. Lyn Jacobs was a missionary in Canada, and Shannon Flynn served in Brazil. One of the persons that Hofmann defrauded was Wilford Cardon. Mr. Cardon testified: “Mr. Flynn served a mission in Brazil and I was his mission president from July 1978 until the end of his mission.” Shannon Flynn introduced Mark Hofmann to Wilford Cardon, and Hofmann proceeded to talk Cardon into investing heavily in his schemes. Another faithful Mormon who lost a great deal of money by investing in Hofmann’s forgeries is Brent Ashworth. The Church Section of the Deseret News, June 23, 1985, said that Mr. Ashworth was “bishop of the BYU 82nd Ward.” On July 23, 1986, Brent Ashworth filed a lawsuit against Mark Hofmann in which he claimed that Hofmann had sold him many forgeries and that he had paid $225,100 for the documents:

6. The total amount paid by the plaintiff to the defendant for said documents was $225,100 . . .

16. The plaintiff had acquired a reputation in the community for being an expert in the history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and an authority on Church documents. The discovery that the documents which were sold to the plaintiff by the defendant were false and fraudulent and which were created by the defendant for the sole purpose of fraud and deception was equally newsworthy and the public portrayal has caused the plaintiff great embarrassment, humiliation and injury to his reputation and stature in the community, all to his general damage in an amount to be established upon proof. (“Brent Ashworth, Plaintiff, vs. Mark Hofmann, Defendant,” pages 2-3)

Alvin Rust, who invested in the McLellin collection and a number of Hofmann’s other forgeries, has served as a bishop in the Mormon Church. Steven Christensen and J. Gary Sheets, who invested in the Salamander letter and later had bombs delivered to them, were also bishops in the church. (Sheets’ wife, of course, opened the package addressed to him and died in the explosion.)

Mark Hofmann was well acquainted with Wade Lillywhite and Curt Bench who worked at the church’s Deseret Book. Many of Hofmann’s forgeries, in fact, were sold to the church’s bookstore. David Sorenson, who was to purchase the McLellin collection on the day Hofmann was injured, was serving as a mission president. Mr. Hofmann was well acquainted with the former LDS Church Archivist Donald Schmidt and sometimes met with Gordon B. Hinckley, of the church’s First Presidency. Donald Schmidt testified that Hinckley and Apostle Boyd K. Packer often gave approval for the church to purchase Hofmann’s documents.

Hugh Pinnock, of the First Quorum of Seventy, helped Hofmann find a buyer for the McLellin collection and secure a loan of $185,000, and even Apostle Dallin Oaks found himself meeting with Hofmann.

One thing that must be very embarrassing for Mormon Church leaders is that they not only gave Hofmann money for forgeries, but that they also traded genuine material stored in the archives for bogus documents. At the press conference, President Gordon B. Hinckley said that the “Historical Department later traded him other documents of interest for the ‘Anthon Manuscript’” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985). Hinckley also said that the Joseph Smith III Blessing “was acquired from Mr. Hofmann with a trade of historic materials . . .” (Ibid.).

The Hofmann documents which were not unfavorable to the Mormon Church were proudly displayed in Church publications. The Church’s Ensign magazine, December 1983, printed an article which was filled with pictures of documents that came through Hofmann. On the other hand, the unfavorable documents which the public were not aware of, were buried in the church’s vaults. In the Salt Lake Tribune, February 6, 1986, we find the following:

Sources close to the investigation have said the church apparently did little to authenticate many of these documents before they were purchased, stating that church historians felt “they had time and all eternity” to check their veracity. “They just wanted them off the streets,” the source said.

Although the story of Mark Hofmann and his document dealing is a real tragedy for everyone involved, it can provide some very helpful insights with regard to Joseph Smith and the origin of the Mormon Church. In fact, it even throws light on the actions of the present leaders of the Church. While it must be admitted that there are many dissimilarities between Mark Hofmann and Joseph Smith, there are some remarkable parallels between the two men. To begin with, Joseph Smith was only in his twenties when he brought forth the Book of Mormon. Because of his age many people have argued that it would have been impossible for him to produce a book like the Book of Mormon without divine help. Mark Hofmann was about the same age when he began making his discoveries. Hofmann’s followers have advanced an argument similar to that used for Joseph Smith—i.e., how could such a young inexperienced man fabricate so many remarkable documents and fool Church leaders, historians and document experts?

Both Joseph Smith and Mark Hofmann had many devoted followers. It is often argued that the rapid growth and dedication of the early Mormon Church is a strong argument for Joseph Smith’s divine calling. Joseph Smith himself once asserted:

I have more to boast of than ever any man had. I am the only man that has ever been able to keep a whole church together since the days of Adam. . . . Neither Paul, John, Peter, nor Jesus ever did it. I boast that no man ever did such a work as I. The followers of Jesus ran away from Him, but the Latter-day Saints never ran away from me yet. (History of the Church, vol. 6, pages 408-409)

While it is certainly true that Joseph Smith had many people who firmly believed in him, the same could be said of Mark Hofmann. In fact, the leaders of the Mormon Church had a great deal of faith in “Brother Hofmann” (see Deseret News, Church Section, May 3, 1980). In the Salt Lake Tribune, April 19, 1986, Mike Carter referred to the “blind trust of LDS officials in Bombing suspect Mark W. Hofmann . . .” Mr. Carter went on to say that it “was apparent that church leaders, including President Hinckley, trusted Mr. Hofmann implicitly . . .”

Another parallel between Mark Hofmann and Joseph Smith is that they both became famous because of a document they discovered. The Los Angeles Times, November 8, 1985, printed the following:

Indeed, the very founding of Mormonism was based on the discovery of a document of sorts. Church doctrine holds that . . . Joseph Smith was led by an angel named Moroni to a set of golden plates . . . Smith, the Mormons believe, translated a “reformed Egyptian” text on the plates into the Book of Mormon, which supposedly corrects the errors of other Christian religions.

Mark Hofmann, of course, found himself in the limelight when he discovered the Anthon transcript—purported to be Joseph Smith’s own handwritten copy of the characters from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Mr. Hofmann went on to discover the first extant letter of Joseph Smith—the 1825 letter to Josiah Stowell. As if this were not startling enough, he found the last extant letter of Joseph Smith, written on the very day of his death. Prior to Hofmann’s time, no one had ever found a letter signed by Martin Harris. Hofmann filled this gap by finding two letters signed by Harris—the Salamander letter of 1830 and the 1873 letter, which was written toward the end of his life. Both letters were extraordinary in their content. The 1873 letter contained a glowing testimony to both the Book of Mormon and the angel who showed Harris the gold plates. The Salamander letter, on the other hand, turned out to be a devastating account of how Joseph Smith found the gold plates. Mr. Hofmann also found the earliest known letter of Joseph Smith’s mother, Lucy Mack Smith. Besides these documents and many others, Hofmann claimed to have the McLellin collection—a collection containing extremely important and sensitive Mormon documents. Hofmann’s finds even went beyond Mormonism. For instance, he found an original Betsy Ross letter. Then, to top it all off, he discovered the “Oath of a Freeman,” the first document printed in colonial America. While the discovery of a copy of the Oath of a Freeman would be astounding enough, Mark Hofmann claimed that he found two copies of the document! Moreover, he said that these copies were worth $1,500,000 each—making a total of $3,000,000.

While Mark Hofmann’s claims almost leave one breathless, they seem insignificant when compared with the claims of Joseph Smith. In The Changing World of Mormonism, we wrote the following about Joseph Smith:

The validity of Mormonism rests upon the claims of Joseph Smith. When he was a young man, his family moved to the state of New York. Within a few miles of his home there was a hill, which Joseph Smith later called the Hill Cumorah. According to Joseph Smith, this was no ordinary hill, for on this hill two of the greatest battles in history were fought. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie says that “both the Nephite and Jaredite civilizations fought their final great wars of extinction at and near the Hill Cumorah . . . which hill is located between Palmyra and Manchester in the western part of the state of New York. It was here that Moroni hid up the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated” (Mormon Doctrine, 1966, page 175).

Apostle McConkie further stated: “It is reported by President Brigham Young that there was in the Hill Cumorah a room containing many wagon loads of plates (page 454). An ordinary person would probably see nothing of importance about this hill, but to the Mormons this is one of the most important places on earth.

While Joseph Smith was digging a well for Clark Chase, he found “a chocolate-colored, somewhat egg-shaped stone” (Comprehensive History of the Church, by B. H. Roberts, vol. 1, page 129). This might have been just an ordinary stone (maybe a little unusual in appearance), but to Joseph Smith it became a “seer stone.” This stone was supposed to have been prepared by God, and through it Joseph Smith received revelations.

Joseph Smith claimed that on the night of September 21, 1823, he had a visitor. But this was no ordinary visitor, it was an angel sent from God. The angel told Smith that gold plates were buried in the Hill Cumorah. The next day Joseph Smith found these plates, and, if his story is true, he made the greatest discovery in the history of archaeology. Archaeologists have searched for years trying to piece together the history of the ancient inhabitants of this land, but Joseph Smith turned over one stone and found all the answers. Underneath this stone he found a box which held the gold plates. The plates contained “an account of the former inhabitants of this continent, and the source from whence they sprang.” More important than this, however, they contained “the fullness of the everlasting Gospel.” According to the Mormon leaders, the Book of Mormon is far superior to the Bible because it contains the “pure” words of Christ. The Bible, they charge, has been altered by wicked priests.

After the Mormon church was organized, Joseph Smith gave a revelation which stated that the Saints were to gather at Jackson County, Missouri. To the Mormon leaders, this was no ordinary land; they taught that it was the place where the “Garden of Eden” was located. Apostle McConkie explains: “The early brethren of this dispensation taught that the Garden of Eden was located in what is known to us as the land of Zion, an area for which Jackson County, Missouri, is the center place” (Mormon Doctrine, page 20).

In Daviess County, Missouri, Joseph Smith found some rocks which he claimed were the remains of an altar built by Adam. McConkie continues: “At that great gathering Adam offered sacrifices on an altar built for the purpose. A remnant of that very altar remained on the spot down through the ages. On May 19, 1838, Joseph Smith and a number of his associates stood on the remains of the pile of stones at a place called Spring Hill, Daviess County, Missouri (Mormon Doctrine, page 21). . . .

In the year 1835 a man came to Kirtland, Ohio, with some mummies and rolls of papyrus. Joseph Smith examined the rolls and stated that “one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt” (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236). (The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 21-23)

Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham, and it is printed today by the Mormon Church as a part of the Pearl of Great Price—one of the four standard works of the church.

While Mark Hofmann claimed to have some very old and important autographs, Joseph Smith’s collection was far superior. When Josiah Quincy visited Nauvoo in 1844, Joseph Smith showed him the papyrus rolls. Quincy later wrote:

“And now come with me,” said the prophet. . . . Some parchments inscribed with hieroglyphics were then offered us. . . . “That is the handwriting of Abraham, the Father of the Faithful,” said the prophet. “This is the autograph of Moses, and these lines were written by his brother Aaron. Here we have the earliest account of the Creation, from which Moses composed the First Book of Genesis.” (Figures of the Past, by Josiah Quincy, as cited in Among the Mormons, 1958, pages 136-37)

After Joseph Smith’s death the Egyptian papyri were lost. Unfortunately for his claims, however, his collection was rediscovered in the Metropolitan Museum of Art (see Deseret News, November 27, 1967). Egyptologists translated the fragments from the very roll Joseph Smith declared was the Book of Abraham and found that it was nothing but a common Egyptian funerary text known as the “Book of Breathings.” This is a pagan text which has a great deal to do with Egyptian gods and goddesses but has nothing to do with Abraham nor his religion. (For a complete treatment of the Book of Abraham see our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 294-369-D.)

There is certainly an interesting parallel to Mark Hofmann with regard to this papyrus. It appears that both Smith and Hofmann misrepresented the papyrus they had obtained. Joseph Smith claimed that his papyrus was the Book of Abraham, when in reality it was nothing but a mortuary text written for a dead man named “Osiris Hor.” Mark Hofmann maintained that the papyrus he had was from the Joseph Smith Papyri which had been preserved in the McLellin collection. The truth, of course, was that Hofmann had obtained a common piece of papyrus from Kenneth Rendell.

Although Mark Hofmann’s actions can not be excused in the eyes of the law because of his background, we can not help but feel sorry for him. His involvement with Mormon history certainly could have played an important role in his problems. If we assume that he started out as a true believer in the church, the things he learned from his study of Joseph Smith and early Mormonism could have come as a shattering blow to his faith. Before Mark Hofmann went on his mission for the church, he would have been thoroughly instructed in the importance of Joseph Smith to those who wish to be good Mormons. For instance, in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 135, verse 3, we read: “Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer of the Lord, has done more, save Jesus only, for the salvation of men in this world, than any other man that ever lived in it. . . . He lived great, and he died great in the eyes of God and his people; . . . ” What a disappointment it must have been to Mr. Hofmann when he found out that Joseph did not tell the truth concerning his involvement in polygamy. History reveals that by 1844, Joseph Smith had dozens of plural wives, yet when he was accused of having “six or seven young females as wives” on May 3, 1844, Joseph Smith replied:

What a thing it is for a man to be accused of committing adultery, and having seven wives, when I can only find one.

I am the same man, and as innocent as I was fourteen years ago; and I can prove them all perjurers. (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 411)

If Mark Hofmann had learned from his study of history that the first Prophet of his Church had been a man of impeccable honesty, it could have made a great difference in his life. Perhaps he would have continued his study of medicine and become a doctor. Instead, he finds himself accused of deceit and treachery. Alvin Rust claimed that Mr. Hofmann told him four stories with regard to the McLellin collection. In this respect Hofmann was no different than Joseph Smith. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 143-150, we demonstrated that the Mormon Prophet told a variety of different stories concerning his most important vision—the First Vision of 1820. In a manuscript written in his own hand in 1832, preserved in the Mormon Church Archives, Joseph Smith clearly taught that only one personage (Jesus) appeared to him in this vision. In an entry in Joseph Smith’s diary for 1835, also stored in the Mormon Church Archives, Joseph Smith related a different story. He claimed that there were many personages in the vision. In the official account, written in 1838, Joseph Smith asserted that both God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ appeared to him.

It is very clear that Mark Hofmann knew Joseph Smith deceived his people with regard to the Book of Abraham papyrus. Smith had stated that the papyrus dated back to the time of Abraham and contained his signature. When Egyptologists examined the papyrus they claimed that it was not written until the time of Christ, which would be almost two thousand years after Abraham’s time. Even the church’s most noted apologist, Dr. Hugh Nibley, had to admit that “our Joseph Smith Book of Breathings” was written in the first century AD” (The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri, page 3). Is it any wonder that when Mark Hofmann approached Kenneth Rendell concerning some papyrus he could pawn off as that used by Joseph Smith, he asked for “something from the first- or second-century A.D.” (Deseret News, October 28, 1985)?

When it comes to the forgery of historical Church documents, Mark Hofmann could have read a great deal about Mormonism that might be used in an attempt to justify his actions. For instance, Mormon leaders claim that the Book of Mormon is a translation of an ancient history of the Nephites written on gold plates. The internal evidence in the book itself, however, clearly reveals that it is a 19th century production. It appears to have material taken from the Westminster Confession, which was not adopted until 1729 (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 68-69), and also reflects the anti-Masonic controversy which was raging in Joseph Smith’s time (Ibid., pages 69-72). The most devastating evidence against the Book of Mormon, however, is its use of material from the Bible. That Joseph Smith plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible in creating the Book of Mormon is evident to those who have made a careful comparison of the two books. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 74-79, we have cited over 200 places where the Book of Mormon used quotations from the New Testament. Most of these quotations were supposed to have been recorded in the Book of Mormon between 600 B.C. and 33 AD. i.e., before the New Testament was even written!

Joseph Smith’s successors also seemed to have little regard for truthful history. The Mormon leaders actually forged the greatest portion (60%) of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church after his death. While it is true that they used carefully selected portions from Joseph Smith’s diaries and letters written by him, other portions were taken from newspapers and diaries written by other people and some material was created specifically to fill in vacancies in the record. The portions taken from other authors were changed to the first person in an obvious attempt to mislead the reader into believing that they were written by Joseph Smith himself. For a more complete treatment of this subject see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142; also our book, Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History.

What Brigham Young and other Mormon leaders did when they fabricated Joseph Smith’s History and claimed that it was written by Joseph Smith “HIMSELF” (History of the Church, vol. 1, title page), is exactly what happened in the production of the Salamander letter. In both cases other documents have been plagiarized to create what appears to be an original document written in the first person singular. While the History of the Church and the Salamander letter both contain a certain amount of material that is historically accurate, neither of them can be really depended upon because the authorship has been misrepresented. The History of the Church, of course, presents a pro-Mormon position, whereas the Salamander letter is anti-Mormon in content. In both cases, however, the same deceptive method has been used.

Mr. Hofmann must have believed that his “discoveries” would tend to liberalize the Mormon Church as scholars and Church leaders came to accept them, and there is little doubt that this has turned out to be the case. Some Mormon scholars, in fact, have confessed that the Salamander letter served as the catalyst that led them to deeper studies regarding the connection between Mormonism and magic. Now that the documents have been exposed as forgeries, historians may have suffered some loss of credibility with the average member of the church. This would probably tend to strengthen the orthodox position in the church if it were not for another factor—i.e., the loss of credibility that the Mormon leaders have suffered. While it is true that both Mormon and non-Mormon historians were fooled, as a general rule historians do not claim to be inspired by God. The Mormon leaders, on the other hand, claim special guidance from the Lord. According to Ezra Taft Benson, the present Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Mormon Church, “The Prophet Will Never Lead the Church Astray” (“Fourteen Fundamentals in Following the Prophets,” an address given at BYU, February 26, 1980; printed in Following the Brethren, page 5). President Benson claims that the leaders of the church have special discernment which is far superior to “earthly knowledge”:

FIFTH: The Prophet is Not Required to Have Any Particular Earthly Training or Credentials to Speak on Any Subject or Any Matter at Any Time.

Sometimes there are those who feel their earthly knowledge on a certain subject is superior to the heavenly knowledge which God gives to His Prophet on the same subject. . . . We haven’t yet had a prophet who earned a doctorate degree in any subject, but as someone said, “A prophet may not have his PhD but he certainly has his LDS.” We encourage earthly knowledge in many areas, but remember if there is ever a conflict between earthly knowledge and the words of the prophet, you stand with the prophet and you’ll be blessed and time will vindicate you. (Ibid., page 6)

On page 10 of his address, President Benson said:

NINTH: The Prophet Can Receive Revelation on Any Matter—Temporal or Spiritual.

As I think of President Benson’s statements concerning the special powers of a prophet, I cannot help but remember a photograph of his predecessor, Spencer W. Kimball, the twelfth Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Mormon Church, which appeared in the Church Section of the Deseret News on May 3, 1980. President Kimball is flanked by Mark Hofmann, President N. Eldon Tanner, President Marion G. Romney, Apostle Boyd K Packer and Apostle Gordon B. Hinckley. Neither President Kimball nor any of the other General Authorities seem to be able to detect anything wrong with either “Brother Hofmann” or the Anthon transcript—a document purported to contain the characters Joseph Smith copied from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Although President Kimball was supposed to be a “seer” and have the power to “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8:13), he was unable to translate the characters which appear on the Anthon transcript. Instead of using the “seer stone,” he examined the characters which appear on the transcript with a magnifying glass. Not only did he fail to provide a translation, but he was unable to detect that the church was being set up to be defrauded of a large amount of money and many items out of its archives. Moreover, he entirely failed to see the devastating and embarrassing affect this transaction and others which followed would have on the Mormon Church. If ever revelation from the Lord was needed, it was on that day in 1980 when Mark Hofmann stood in the presence of President Kimball.

While the Mormon leaders claim to have the same powers as the ancient Apostles in the Bible, their performance with regard to Mark Hofmann certainly does not match up to that of the Apostle Peter when he caught Ananias and Sapphira red-handed in their attempt to deceive the church with regard to a financial transaction: “But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?” (Acts 5:3).

As President Kimball got older, he became less able to function and President Gordon B. Hinckley took over many of his responsibilities and became to all appearances the acting president of the church. Hinckley, who stood with President Kimball in the 1980 photograph, was deceived on a number of occasions by Mr. Hofmann. He, together with Apostle Boyd K Packer (also shown in the picture), approved many of the deals the church made with Hofmann. It appears that if the Mormon Church was ever led by revelation, it has been lacking since Mark Hofmann came into the church offices with the Anthon transcript. The inability of the Mormon leaders to detect the religious fraud perpetrated upon them raises the question as to their testimony with regard to the Book of Mormon. After all, if they could not determine that Hofmann’s documents—which were only 150 years old—were forgeries, how can we trust their judgment with regard to a record which is supposed to be ten times as old? They have seen and inspected Mark Hofmann’s documents, but they have never seen the gold plates the Book of Mormon was translated from. While it could be possible that Joseph Smith really had some kind of metal plates, how would the present leaders of the Mormon Church know if they were genuine or fabricated? With regard to the inability of the Mormon leaders to detect that the Hofmann documents were fraudulent, a person might try to argue that these documents were not really important spiritual writings, and therefore the Lord did not see fit to intervene when the General Authorities examined them. The truth of the matter, however, is that they contain extremely important material directly relating to spiritual affairs. The Salamander letter, for example, changes the story of the Angel Moroni appearing to Joseph Smith to that of a cantankerous and tricky “old spirit” who transforms himself from a white salamander and strikes Joseph Smith. Moreover, some of the purported Joseph Smith writings which Hofmann sold to the church contain revelations from the Lord Himself. For instance, the Joseph Smith III Blessing document gives this message from the Lord: “Verily, thus saith the Lord: if he abides in me, his days shall be lengthened upon the earth, but, if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant, unto myself.” The 1838 letter of Joseph Smith to his brother, Hyrum, is in its entirety a revelation purporting to come from the Lord. It begins with the words, “Verily thus Saith the Lord,” and ends with the word “Amen.” The fact that the Mormon leaders were unable to recognize the spurious nature of these revelations casts doubt upon their ability to discern the truthfulness of the other revelations given by Joseph Smith. It has always been claimed that it is virtually impossible for a person to write a revelation that would compare with Joseph Smith’s. It now appears that there is someone who can write revelations comparable to Joseph Smith’s and that it is even possible to get them past the scrutiny of the highest leadership of the Mormon Church.

The Mormon leaders teach that there has been “a restoration of the gospel” through Joseph Smith the Prophet. Smith restored the Book of Mormon and a great deal of other ancient Scripture. All of these purported Scriptures have no provenance—i.e., there is no proof of their existence prior to the manuscripts written on what was modern paper during Joseph Smith’s lifetime. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 375-376, we wrote the following:

The Apostle Pratt’s statement that there is “more than one thousand times” the amount of evidence to prove the Book of Mormon than to prove the Bible is certainly a misrepresentation. We have already shown that the only evidence for the Book of Mormon is the testimony of the witnesses and that this testimony can not be relied upon.

As far as historical and manuscript evidence is concerned, Joseph Smith’s scriptures have absolutely no foundation. The “records of the Nephites,” for instance, were never cited by any ancient writer, nor are there any known manuscripts or even fragments of manuscripts in existence older than the ones dictated by Joseph Smith in the late 1820’s. Joseph Smith’s Book of Moses is likewise without documentary support. The only handwritten manuscripts for the Book of Moses are those dictated by Joseph Smith in the early 1830’s. Since Joseph Smith’s revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants do not purport to be translations of ancient records, we would not expect to find any ancient manuscript evidence concerning them. There is one revelation, however, which purports to be a translation of a “record made on parchment by John and hidden up by himself.” This revelation is found in the Doctrine and Covenants as Section 7. There is no documentary support for this revelation. The Book of Abraham purports to be a translation of an ancient Egyptian papyrus. We have already shown, however, that the original papyrus is in reality the Egyptian Book of Breathings and has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. Therefore, we have no evidence for the Book of Abraham prior to the handwritten manuscripts dictated by Joseph Smith in the 1830’s. It would appear, then, that there is no documentary evidence for any of Joseph Smith’s works that dates back prior to the late 1820’s.

When we turn to the Bible, however, we find a great deal of evidence—some of which dates back more than 2,000 years—showing that the Bible was known and used in early times. While this in itself does not prove that the Bible is divinely inspired, it does give a person a basis for faith.

Mark Hofmann seems to have produced his own “restoration” of religious documents from the past. While he has not pretended to find the signatures of Abraham, Moses and Aaron, he has “discovered” Mormon material which was supposed to have been written as far back as the 1820’s. Mr. Hofmann restored important letters and revelations from Joseph Smith as well as material from other prominent Mormons. Hofmann’s “restoration” was even more convincing than Joseph Smith’s because he not only gave us the text of these significant documents, but he claimed to have the very original copies on paper dating back to the period in which they were supposed to have been written.
The exposure of Mr. Hofmann’s scheme to undermine the Mormon Church does not really help the church. On the contrary, it shows how gullible we all can be and that even the Prophet of the Mormon Church can be deceived. Once the fallibility of the present Prophet, Seer and Revelator is perceived, one begins to wonder about Joseph Smith himself. When the searchlight is focused upon him, we see that he looks remarkably like Mark Hofmann.

The action of the church leaders in buying up and suppressing Mark Hofmann’s documents raises another important question: if they were willing to pay thousands of dollars to buy forgeries which tended to discredit Joseph Smith, how many authentic documents have they bought up and locked away in the church Archives and the First Presidency’s vault? The fact that the General Authorities of the church believed in and bought Mr. Hofmann’s forgeries reveals a great deal about their own thinking concerning the original Prophet. They must have known from other things they have read that Joseph Smith was deeply involved in money-digging and magic or they would not have been so easily persuaded to buy Hofmann’s documents. The impression one gets is that the Mormon leaders know that Joseph Smith was not really like the image the church has presented to the people, but that they must maintain that image at all costs—even if it means they have to buy up and suppress documents.

We are only able to present a portion of the results of our investigation into the Hofmann affair in this issue of the Messenger. For a detailed study see our publication, Tracking the White Salamander.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

AN ETERNAL COVER-UP

The Salamandergate scandal reminds us of an article which we published in the January 1975 issue of the Messenger. Even though it was written concerning President Nixon’s problems, it could certainly apply to the Hofmann situation. We cite the following from that article:

> Although the Watergate scandal has really hurt our country, there is a real lesson that we all can learn from it—that is, that it does not pay to try and cover our sins. The Bible warns: “. . . be sure your sin will find you out” (Numbers 32:23). It is true that we can often hide our sins from men, but Jesus tells us that we cannot hide them from God: “. . . there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known” (Matthew 10:26).

> Our former President must have firmly believed that his tapes would never come to light, but through some very strange circumstances they did become public and caused his downfall. This is certainly a tragic example, and we cannot help but feel sorry for him and for his family. Nevertheless, it teaches us that even the President of the United States does not have the power to cover up his sins.

> It is certainly ironical that Richard Nixon should be trapped by his own tapes. The Bible, however, tells us that we all stand in jeopardy of being convicted by our own words at the judgment: “But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned” (Matthew 12:36-37).

> Although we do not feel that God has a secret tape recorder which he uses to bug us with, we do believe He has knowledge of everything through his Holy Spirit. The Bible says that God not only knows our every word and action but also the “thoughts and intents” of our heart: “For the word of God is quicker, and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do” (Hebrews 4:12-13).

> In I Corinthians 4:5 we read that the Lord “will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: . . .” Romans 2:16 tells us that “God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.”

> In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus it is clear that after death our memory will be restored and that if we have continued in sin and selfishness it will condemn us (see Luke 16:25). The Bible tells us that we are all sinners and in need of God’s forgiveness. To refuse to face this fact is to live a life which is founded on cover-up, and this will eventually prove disastrous to our souls. In the story of the Pharisee and the publican Jesus shows that we can appear to be very religious, but if we have not acknowledged that we are sinners in need of God’s grace we are still under condemnation.

> Now, while the Bible teaches that it is impossible for us to cover up our sins, it does state that God Himself can cover them up if we will turn to him and ask for forgiveness:

> But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

> If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

> If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. (I John 1:7-9)
In Psalms 32:1 we read: “Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.” This is the cover-up that really works. In Psalms 103:12 we find this statement: “As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.” Isaiah 43:25 gives this assurance: “I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.” Those who have received the Lord into their hearts know the great joy and peace that comes from accepting God’s forgiveness. The Bible says:

Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17)

BOOKS AND VIDEOS

(Mail Orders Add 10% Handling)
$1.00 Minimum Shipping Charge

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Michael Briggs. Price: $2.00

Divergent Paths of the Restoration, by Steven Shields. Information on over 100 different churches based on the teachings of Joseph Smith. Price: $12.95

Tract Pact—18 different tracts on Mormonism from various publishers. Price: $2.25

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Capt. Wm. Morgan’s Exposition of Freemasonry. (Photo-reprint of 1827 ed.) One of the works used in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to compile the parallels between Mormonism and Masonry. Price: $3.00

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Good for use in Christian groups as introduction to the differences between Mormon and Christian doctrine. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with a Milwaukee television station. Good for showing to either Mormons or non-Mormons. Discusses the Tanners’ struggles in coming out of Mormonism and turning to Christ. Price: $20.00

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
On the morning of January 23, 1987, word began to circulate in Salt Lake City that a major development had occurred in the Mark Hofmann case. That evening the Deseret News reported:

A grim-faced Hofmann entered the courtroom about 11 a.m. Friday and with little fanfare entered guilty pleas to two counts of second-degree murder in the slayings of Steven F. Christensen and Kathleen Webb Sheets. Hofmann had been charged with first-degree murder, which carries a possible death sentence, but in the plea agreement prosecutors agreed to allow Hofmann to plead guilty to lesser charges.

He also pleaded guilty to one count of communications fraud and one count of theft by deception involving the Martin Harris letter, better known as the White Salamander letter, and the William McLellin collection, a collection of documents Hofmann sold for hundreds of thousands of dollars but in actuality never possessed.

Tension and emotion flooded the courtroom as Hofmann stood to answer each of the judge’s questions.

“Did you intentionally and knowingly cause the death of Steve Christensen?” questioned Rigtrup. “Yes,” replied Hofmann in a soft, quiet voice.

“Did you intentionally and knowingly cause the death of Kathleen Sheets?” the judge intoned. “Yes,” the defendant replied.

“Do you desire to enter these guilty pleas because you are in fact guilty?” the judge asked.

“Yes,” Hofmann replied.

Hofmann made similar admissions of guilt involving the documents transactions. (Deseret News, January 23, 1987)

Judge Rigtrup sentenced Mark Hofmann to “one prison term of 5 years to life and three other prison terms of 1-to-15 years for his role in the bombing deaths of two people and the forgeries and frauds that led to those murders” (Ibid.). The judge pointed out the “indiscriminate nature” of the murders. (Mrs. Sheets was killed instead of her husband and a woman in the Judge Building almost picked up the “booby-trapped shrapnel bomb” which killed Steven Christensen.) Rigtrup then said to Mr. Hofmann: “. . . I will recommend that you spend the rest of your natural life at the Utah State Prison” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 24, 1987). After the hearing Mark Hofmann was handcuffed and transported to prison.

In making a plea bargain agreement Mr. Hofmann escaped the possibility of the death penalty and was assured that the federal government would drop its charge of possession of an unregistered machine gun. In addition, New York authorities promised that they would not charge him with selling a forged copy of the Oath of a Freeman in their state.
CHILLING CONFESSION

Mark Hofmann had kept absolutely silent concerning the crimes up to the time the plea bargain was being worked out. Jan Thompson reported that at that time he opened up and confessed how he had committed the crimes:

An interview with Mark W. Hofmann was the strangest and most fascinating experience Robert Stott has had as a criminal prosecutor. . . .

“It was chilling to have Hofmann look me in the eye and say he killed Steve Christensen and Kathleen Sheets,” Stott said in a Deseret News interview Saturday.

As Hofmann disclosed the details of how he made and delivered the bombs and how he manufactured the salamander letter and persuaded buyers to invest in the so-called McLellin Collection, Stott compared the information with the state’s evidence. Hofmann’s version of his crime matched the theories and evidence of prosecutors.

“It was disconcerting to realize that this man I was sitting across from had committed these terrible crimes in such a unique fashion. He was brilliant in forging documents and in manufacturing the bombs.”

Hofmann enjoyed sharing the details of his fraud scheme, Stott said.

“When he talks, he doesn’t act like a madman or say nasty things, so it’s easy to forget that he’s a violent killer and to treat him as a next-door neighbor. I had to remind myself that, foremost, Hofmann is a killer, and secondly, he is a swindler and a cheat.

“That’s what makes him so dangerous. When he’s triggered, he can be devastating.”

Hofmann showed little emotion during the interview.

(Deseret News, January 25, 1987)

As part of the plea bargain agreement Mr. Hofmann is supposed to meet with investigators and reveal the details concerning how he forged the other documents. The prosecutors maintain that they will make this material available to the public in a few weeks. We hope to have more on this in the next issue of the Messenger.

As we sit back and reflect about the Salamandergate scandal, we just feel fortunate to be alive. Brent Ashworth, the Mormon bishop who claimed Mark Hofmann sold him $225,100 worth of forged documents, has been quoted as making this comment about Hofmann:

“When I called him a liar or if I questioned one of the documents, he’d lose his temper. Nothing else seemed to make him mad.” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 25, 1987)

Utah Lighthouse Ministry had printed a great deal of material which questioned both Mark Hofmann’s documents and his honesty. Beginning as early as 1984, we suggested that the Salamander letter might be “a forgery” and noted that if this were the case, “it needs to be exposed” (Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1984). By August 1984 we had printed the first part of the booklet, The Money-Digging Letters, in which Mark Hofmann’s major discoveries were questioned and his document dealings condemned. One of the editors of this paper (Sandra Tanner) distributed copies of this material at the Sunstone Theological Symposium. Mr. Hofmann attended this symposium and was grieved when he learned that his integrity was being questioned. The day following the publication of this material (August 23, 1984) Mark Hofmann came to our home and had a long talk with Sandra. He seemed very distressed and hurt that we, of all people, would question his discoveries. He had expected that opposition might come from those in the Mormon Church, but he was amazed that Utah Lighthouse Ministry had taken a position which was critical of him. Mr. Hofmann seemed to be almost at the point of tears as he pled his case as to why we should trust him.

We, of course, knew that it was risky business to publicly question any forger, but we had no idea he was so devious that he would plant a bomb that killed Kathleen Sheets merely as a diversion to cover up his involvement in the murder of Steven Christensen. In retrospect, it appears that we were very fortunate that Mr. Hofmann arrived at our house armed only with arguments as to why we should trust his documents rather than a pipe bomb surrounded with nails.

Both the Los Angeles Times and the Deseret News printed the fact that we were questioning the Salamander letter. Mr. Hofmann grew concerned about our investigation and told an associate he was planning another visit to our house to try to convert us to the Salamander letter. We wonder now if we would have been so bold as to call for the public to send any information to us that they had concerning Mr. Hofmann’s activities if we had known that he was capable of murdering to preserve his document forging operation (see Salt Lake City Messenger, June 1985, page 16 and August 1985, page 8). When we located him at the August 1985 Sunstone Symposium and began to ask probing questions about the Salamander letter, he had a very sad and fearful expression on his face. It almost seemed as if he were trying to say, “Please believe what I am telling you.”

At first the Mormon bishop Steven Christensen trusted Mark Hofmann implicitly. Christensen, of course, bought the Salamander letter, and when we published extracts from it in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger and indicated the possibility of plagiarism from Mormonism Unvailed and Joseph Knight’s account of the discovery of the Book of Mormon plates, he rejected our research. He even tried to testify in federal court that we had violated his manuscript rights by printing extracts from the letter. Although we were all in the courtroom waiting for Mr. Christensen to step to the witness stand, the judge made it clear that such testimony was irrelevant to the case at hand and Steven Christensen was not allowed the opportunity of testifying against us (see our book Tracking the White Salamander, page 16). Mr. Christensen continued to believe in Mark Hofmann and his stories concerning the discovery of important Mormon documents for more than a year. Although he eventually came to the conclusion that Hofmann was a “crook,” by that time it was too late. When Mr. Christensen threatened to expose Mark Hofmann’s fraudulent dealings with regard to the McLellin collection, Hofmann retaliated by killing him. It seems like a strange twist of fate that the man who opposed the material we presented against the Salamander letter and even tried to testify against us in court would be the very one who later tried to blow the whistle on Mark Hofmann and ended up losing his life. It may very well be that the thing that saved our lives was simply that few people believed what we were publishing. Mr. Hofmann apparently felt that Christensen, who was a Mormon bishop with a great deal of influence, could destroy his Mormon document empire, and therefore he found it necessary to eliminate him. In any case, we feel grateful to God that we are alive and wish to thank those who have been praying for our safety. While we have always thought there was a possibility of being assassinated by someone opposed to our work, we never even considered that a well-mannered man like Mark Hofmann, who professed to be friendly to our work, would turn out to be a cold-blooded killer who would stop at nothing to shut the mouth of his opponents. We just thank God that he was not triggered by the exposes we published concerning his document deals.

Although most people felt that Mark Hofmann was a good Mormon, the evidence that is coming forth now seems to show that although he was a returned missionary, married in the temple and active in the church, he was not a believer. In fact, his close friend Shannon Flynn now says that he was an atheist:

“He was an atheist. He did not believe in God,” Flynn said. “If there is no God, a person obviously can’t believe there is a Christ or Christianity—no life after death.”

Flynn said he knows a lot of atheists who don’t go out and kill people, but this should give people a clue to why Hofmann did the things he did.

“Some people wouldn’t do anything wrong because they think God would punish them. He obviously didn’t worry about the punishment,” the young man said. “While I don’t think that is an excuse for what he did, I think psychologists who talk with him will see he is working from an entirely different frame of reference from most of us.” (Deseret News, January 30, 1987)

Mark Hofmann’s associate Brent Metcalfe has also confirmed Hofmann’s atheistic views and even a member of his family has written: “I think he is an atheist [sic].” His church activities appear to have been used as a cover for his phony document business. Recently it has been noted that Mark Hofmann was able to fool almost everyone with his dual life. Even his best friends now feel that they were used to further his selfish desire for wealth and fame. While Mr. Hofmann was once honored by Mormon and non-Mormon historians, he is now considered a villain—perhaps one of the greatest con men of the 20th century. On February 11, 1987, the New York Times published an article by Robert Lindsey which contained the following:

According to criminal investigators here and court documents, the 32-year-old Mr. Hofmann fooled not only senior members of the Mormon hierarchy but also scores of document collectors around the country and virtually all of the nation’s top forgery experts.

“Mark Hofmann was unquestionably the most skilled forger this country has ever seen,” said Charles Hamilton, a New York document dealer who is widely regarded as the nation’s preeminent detector of forged documents. . . .

Mr. Hamilton said Mr. Hofmann “perpetrated by far the largest monetary frauds through forgery that this country has ever had,” adding, “He fooled me—he fooled everybody.” . . .

Among those fooled by Mr. Hofmann’s documents were hundreds of specialists in Mormon history. . . .

Investigators have said that Mr. Hofmann was as successful in selling forged documents in New York as he was in Utah. They say he may have collected more than $2 million selling rare documents purportedly written or signed by such literary and historical figures as Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Jack London and Jim Bridger. . . .

After examining the white salamander letter, experts working for the Federal Bureau of Investigation said they could find no evidence that it was forged, a conclusion also made by Kenneth W. Rendell, a Newton, Mass., document dealer who is often ranked with Mr. Hamilton among the nation’s leading detectors of forged documents. . . .
Concluding his assessment of Mr. Hofmann, Mr. Hamilton said: “In a way, two murders are pedestrian crimes. But to fool me, to fool Ken Rendell, to fool the whole world, requires not only forgery but a packaging of himself. He packaged himself as a bespectacled, sweet, unobtrusive, hard working, highly intelligent scholar dedicated to the uncovering of history. Now we know he’s more than he appeared to be.”

While we certainly cannot defend Mark Hofmann’s actions, we must remember that he is still a human being who desperately needs God in his life. If the Lord could change a man like Paul, He could certainly work in Mr. Hofmann’s life. We would urge our readers to pray for both him and his family, and those who would like to send him a word of encouragement can reach him at the Utah State Prison, PO Box 250, Draper, Utah 84020.

EFFECT ON ULM

Mark Hofmann’s admission of guilt will undoubtedly have a far-reaching effect on Utah Lighthouse Ministry. Many people have tenaciously held to the theory that the Salamander letter is authentic and that Hofmann was being framed on the murders. Some people apparently felt that we had gone off the deep end or had sold out to the Mormon Church. Although our reasons for believing Hofmann was probably guilty were clearly laid out in our book Tracking the White Salamander, only a limited number of people were interested in reading it. When the story broke concerning Mr. Hofmann’s plea bargain, however, the situation was entirely reversed. A local radio station asked us to come on the air and discuss the situation, and we were able to publish a large advertisement for the book in both of the newspapers in Salt Lake City. After that we were flooded with orders for Tracking the White Salamander. It soon became obvious that among the people coming to our home or calling on the phone there were quite a number of devout Mormons who were interested in learning more about the Salamandergate scandal. We feel that it is a great privilege to be able to make contact with these people and believe that much good will come from it. On February 2, we received a letter which contained the following:

I am on your mailing list and have thoroughly been fascinated by your latest issues. You have been very accurate in describing what has happened. This helps me when I discuss your extensive research with the Mormons whom I work with. The accurateness of your latest newsletters give you a lot of creditability [sic]. It has opened the door for me to discuss other things with my Mormon co-workers. I am greatly anticipating your book.

One of our critics once argued that we believe “the end (destroying Mormonism) justifies the means (publishing anything which they believe could prove damaging to Mormonism).” Our work regarding Mark Hofmann’s documents certainly belies this accusation, and we feel that many Mormons will eventually come to realize that we are only seeking for the truth. Actually, this has always been our stand. As early as 1967 we published a pamphlet exposing the purported Oliver Cowdery Defence and the “Confessions of Oliver Overstreet” as forgeries. In the Introduction to this pamphlet we wrote:

One of the most serious problems facing a student of Mormon history today is the fact that those who have gone before us have not always been honest. Both Mormon and anti-Mormon writers have sometimes been guilty of deceit. This makes it very difficult to determine what the truth is with regard to some issues. . . . We have spent a good deal of time trying to learn the truth concerning these documents, and although we are not pleased with the results of our research, we feel that it would be dishonest and unfair to the Mormon people to suppress our findings. (A Critical Look—A Study of the Overstreet “Confession” and the Cowdery “Defence”)

We sincerely feel that if the case against Mormonism could not be supported with concrete evidence, we would want nothing to do with it.

While the fall of the Hofmann documents may cause some Mormons to have doubts about anything that is critical of the church, it has made many others become concerned about their spiritual leaders. The Mormon Church has always maintained that the current President is a prophet who receives revelations and guidance directly from the Lord. In Tracking the White Salamander, page 73, we have a picture of President Spencer W. Kimball, the twelfth President of the Mormon Church. He is flanked by Mark Hofmann, President N. Eldon Tanner, President Marion G. Romney, Apostle Boyd K Packer and Gordon B. Hinckley (who is now a member of the First Presidency). They are all gazing at Mark Hofmann’s first major discovery—a sheet of paper purporting to contain characters which Joseph Smith himself copied from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Although President Kimball was supposed to be a “seer” and have the power to “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8:13), he was unable to translate the characters which appeared on the transcript. Instead of using the “seer stone,” he examined the characters with a magnifying glass. Not only did he fail to provide a translation, but he was unable to detect that the church was being set up to be defrauded of a large amount of money and many historical items out of its archives. Moreover, he entirely failed to see the devastating and embarrassing effect this transaction and others which followed would have on the Mormon Church. If ever revelation from the Lord was needed, it was on that day in 1980 when Mark Hofmann stood in the presence of President Kimball and other notable Mormon leaders. The church gave Hofmann $20,000 worth of material from the archives for the sheet containing the forged Book of Mormon characters. It is obvious from this that the Mormon Apostles do not have the same power that Apostle Peter had when he caught Ananias and Sapphira red-handed in their attempt to deceive the church with regard to a financial transaction (see Acts 5:3).

President Gordon B. Hinckley, who is also shown in the photograph, approved many of Hofmann’s deals with the church. It was Hinckley who purchased the forged 1825 letter of Joseph Smith relating to magic from Mark Hofmann for $15,000. This controversial letter was suppressed for two years and the church even denied that it had the letter (see Tracking the White Salamander, pages 86-91). It appears that if the Mormon Church was ever led by revelation, it has been lacking since Mark Hofmann came into the church offices with the transcript of Book of Mormon characters. The inability of the Mormon leaders to detect the religious fraud being perpetrated upon them certainly raises a question with regard to their “testimony” concerning the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon.

NEW ON 116 PAGES

In the book, Tracking the White Salamander, pages 104-108, we have some important information regarding the possibility that Mark Hofmann was planning to forge (or had forged) the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon. Some time in 1982 or 1983 we heard that Mark Hofmann claimed he had discovered the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript—also known as the Book of Lehi. The reader may remember that Joseph Smith’s scribe Martin Harris borrowed the first 116 pages of the manuscript and lost them. Joseph Smith had not retained a copy of the Book of Lehi and therefore was unable to reproduce an exact copy. Since he feared that his translation of the Book of Lehi might still be in existence and that his enemies might bring it forth to refute his work if he tried to reproduce it, he found himself facing a serious dilemma. To solve the problem Smith claimed he “translated” the Book of Nephi in its place. He said that this book covered the same time period and its contents were even more spiritual than the Book of Lehi. As long as the Book of Nephi gave approximately the same story as was found in the missing 116 pages Joseph Smith did not have to worry about critics finding them. The two books would not have to agree in the exact wording of the story.

In any case, Mark Hofmann claimed that he was searching for the lost 116 pages. In an interview published in Sunstone Review, September 1982, page 18, Mr. Hofmann said that he hoped “the lost 116 manuscript pages exist” and that he had already “spent thousands of dollars in the pursuit of them, . . .” Sometime later Hofmann began confiding in friends that he had finally located the 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and that they were “dynamite.” The manuscript was reported to contain information about money-digging interwoven with material that reads like the published Book of Nephi. When we discussed the matter with Mr. Hofmann, he admitted that a manuscript purporting to be the 116 missing pages had been found in the possession of a woman in Bakersfield, California. He claimed, however, that it was a forgery.

Hugh Pinnock, one of the General Authorities of the Mormon Church, was very interested in the possibility that the missing Book of Mormon pages might still be in existence. Allen Roberts and Fred Esplin claim:

> Police sources indicate that Steve Christensen’s personal journal records that Elder Hugh Pinnock asked Hofmann to find for him two important items: the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and something “too sensitive to mention,” that the late “Elders Mark E. Petersen and G. Homer Durham were most involved in prior to their deaths.” (Utah Holiday, January 1986, page 58)

As we have already stated, Mr. Hofmann told us that he had located a forgery of the 116 pages in California. When we pressed him as to how he knew it was a forgery, he replied that it quoted verbatim things that were peculiar to the “Wright” edition of the Book of Mormon—an edition published after Joseph Smith’s death and used by at least some members of the early RLDS Church. Later when investigators searched Mark Hofmann’s home after the bombings, they found some of his handwritten notes concerning the Book of Lehi. The Mormon bishop Brent Ashworth also preserved some of Mr. Hofmann’s notes concerning the manuscript. The reader will find a photocopy of one page of Mark Hofmann’s notes on the next page. According to Hofmann the “BOOK OF LEHI” began as follows:

> “This record I Lehi make upon plates of gold, & I make it with my own hand, it being a history of my life and of the workings of God.”
MARK HOFMANN’S NOTES FROM THE BOOK OF LEHI

1. The Book of Lehi: “This round I Lehi make upon plates of gold, and I make it with my own hands; it being a history of my life and of the workings of God.”

2. Judgment may at any time befall the Jews.

3. He [God] shall cause to the land certain treasures; the hole of the earth, and out of the earth shall the righteous prosper...” (see Deut. 28:12).

4. Salt was also gold, silver, and jewels (also Is. 66:26).

5. Prophesy of a new land. (public discourse)

6. Prophesy of wars (Machinry of war) Forts

7. Burning of towns (p. 17-18)

8. Earthly-ties (p. 17) Family - only a ‘ LANDFUL’ survival.

21-22-23. And now it came to pass that when Lehi had finished these sayings... but there was one among them... But he was wise and counseled that Alma should be sent out from among them... (compare Wright BOA p. 123 par. 2. Underlined)
Mr. Hofmann had told us that the manuscript told of a mine Lehi had outside Jerusalem which contained many valuable treasures. Hofmann’s note concerning page 4 of the manuscript seems to agree with the information he gave us:

4. “he [God] should cause to be found certain treasures in the hole of the earth, and out of the earth shall the righteous prosper…” Location a secret.

Mark Hofmann originally represented to Brent Ashworth that the manuscript was genuine but later told him that it was a forgery. (Since Mr. Hofmann mentioned the “Wright” edition of the Book of Mormon in the notes he gave to Mr. Ashworth, we must presume that Ashworth obtained them after Hofmann began claiming that the manuscript was a forgery.) Mr. Ashworth realized that even if the manuscript were a 19th century forgery, as Hofmann maintained, it would be a unique forgery which would be of some value. He offered Mr. Hofmann $10,000 for the forged manuscript. Although Hofmann showed him evidence that he had traveled to Bakersfield, he never produced it. Consequently, Mr. Ashworth did not lose the money.

When we discussed the manuscript with Mr. Hofmann, we suggested that it would be an important forgery and that it should be obtained. He replied that the Mormon Church was also trying to obtain it but the church would not pay the amount of money the woman in Bakersfield was asking.

While the handwritten notes Mr. Hofmann made concerning “The BOOK OF LEHI” certainly seem to show that he was working on some type of forgery of the 116 missing pages, they also raise many questions. For instance, was the manuscript ever actually penned or are the handwritten notes extracts of something which only existed in Hofmann’s mind? Why did Hofmann first claim that the manuscript was genuine and then switch to saying it was a 19th century forgery? Could he have made a mistake in the manuscript which someone informed him about that caused him to abort the project? Is it possible that the manuscript was completed and secretly sold and that the story that it was a forgery was only a means of quieting publicity about the sale? Another theory might be that Mr. Hofmann was merely trying to impress the Mormon leaders that he was a great document detective who was only seeking the truth. By claiming that he had detected forgery in a copy of the 116 pages he had found and showing how he had pinned the crime down to someone who possessed a “Wright” edition of the Book of Mormon, Mr. Hofmann could have really impressed church officials with his honesty and skill. This would have thrown them off guard, and when he showed up with a sophisticated forgery of the 116 pages they might have become easy targets for his scheme.

When we began to consider the possibility that the Book of Lehi in Bakersfield might be nothing but a figment of Hofmann’s imagination, we realized that if he ever did create the 116 missing pages and used any quotations from the Book of Nephi, he would probably take into consideration readings obtained from the original manuscript pages of the Book of Mormon. Since changes were made in the text between the manuscript and the first printed version and even more changes were made in later editions, it would be very wise to consult the original manuscripts before making any quotations. From information we have been able to obtain, it appears that Mark Hofmann did, in fact, have a great deal of interest in the original manuscripts of the Book of Nephi and would therefore be in a good position to know how to forge the Book of Lehi so that it would be believable. If a manuscript came forth which purported to be the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and it contained portions similar to the printed Book of Nephi, a comparison of these portions with the original manuscripts would become very important. If the long-lost manuscript strictly followed the printed version, it might be declared a forgery. If, on the other hand, it contained peculiarities found only in the original manuscripts, this would probably be interpreted as evidence for its authenticity. Hofmann’s earlier work in disproving the manuscript which used quotations from the “Wright” edition could even suggest the idea of making such a comparison with the original manuscripts.

That Mark Hofmann was planning a very sophisticated version of the lost 116 pages seems to be supported by a number of things. To begin with, in 1982 he claimed to find a letter written by Joseph Smith’s mother. This is the only document accepted by the church which reveals anything concerning the contents of the missing pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript. At about the same time, Mr. Hofmann began to discover documents relating to Joseph Smith’s scribe, Martin Harris. This is important because Harris would have been the scribe for most of the 116 missing pages, and up until the time Mark Hofmann came on the scene, no known samples of his writing were available—there were only a few signatures. At first Hofmann only brought forth a letter which was signed by Martin Harris. The text of the letter was supposed to be in the hand of his son. Then came the Grandin contract which the Mormon Church obtained for $25,000. This document also contained only a signature purported to be that belonging to Martin Harris. Finally, in 1983 the Salamander letter came forth. This letter had over 600 words which were supposed to be penned by Harris himself. With the authentication of Harris’ handwriting in the Salamander letter, the stage was well prepared for the ultimate discovery—the Book of Lehi. It is claimed that investigators have in their possession a Book of Mormon in which every word has been given a number. This would be a massive project because the Book of Mormon is supposed to contain over 269,000 words! It has been speculated that this project might be tied to about 30 file drawers of note cards on the Book of Mormon and that the purpose might be to imitate Joseph Smith’s literary style in the missing 116 pages. While this would seem like a tremendous amount of work, the Book of Lehi could probably be sold to the Mormon Church for millions of dollars!

While the RLDS Church has a complete copy of the Book of Mormon manuscript (the printers copy), the Utah Mormon Church has only a partial copy. We now know that Mr. Hofmann was forging pages that are missing in the Mormon Church’s copy of the Book of Mormon manuscript. Brent Ashworth paid Mr. Hofmann $25,000 for just one sheet that was missing in the church’s copy of the manuscript. The Book of Lehi would obviously be worth much more than pages from known portions of the Book of Mormon, especially if the contents were controversial.

Although it seems very likely that Mark Hofmann was planning to forge the missing Book of Lehi and sell it to the Mormon Church for a large amount of money, at this point we have no evidence to show that the plan was actually carried out. We will, however, be looking for any information that points in this direction. For a more complete treatment of the Book of Lehi story we recommend our book Tracking the White Salamander, pages 104-108.

-------------------------------

BLOOD ATONEMENT

On January 24, 1987, the New York Times printed some strange information concerning the Hofmann case:

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 23 — Spurning his father’s appeal that he submit to execution to atone for two 1985 murders, a former Mormon missionary chose instead today to plead guilty to the crimes in return for a sentence of life imprisonment. . . . According to family members, the plea arrangement that spared his life was delayed in recent weeks by the intervention of his father, a Mormon, and other family members who said they believed that if the younger Mr. Hofmann was guilty of the murders he should be executed.

This belief is rooted in the Mormon doctrine of “blood atonement,” which holds that some crimes are so grievous that the crucifixion of Jesus had not redeemed their sins. The crimes that fall under the doctrine, promulgated principally by Brigham Young . . . include murder and adultery . . .

In the end, church experts said, Mr. Hofmann’s father accepted the idea that his son would not have to be executed. In an effort at atonement, Mr. Hofmann, through his attorney, apologized to members of his victims’ families at a meeting Thursday.

In Tracking the White Salamander, pages 148-150, we discuss whether the doctrine of blood atonement could have any effect with regard to Hofmann’s views about taking human life. The story in the New York Times certainly adds an unexpected element to this bizarre case.

-------------------------------

SPECIAL OFFER

Because of Mark Hofmann’s confession and the growing interest in the subject we have decided to have another special offer on the book Tracking the White Salamander—The Story of Mark Hofmann, Murder and Forged Mormon Documents. This book usually sells for $6.95, but if it is ordered before March 31, 1987, the price will be ONLY $5.95 (mail orders add 10% for postage and handling—minimum fee $1.00).

Two and a half years of research went into the productions of this book. It is a thorough investigation into the Salamandergate scandal which rocked Utah and the Mormon Church. Tracking the White Salamander presents a wealth of information on both the murders and the forgeries. An entire chapter is devoted to the McLellin collection and its possible relationship to the murders. This is the first publication to print lengthy extracts from the preliminary hearing. It contains testimony from Hofmann’s associates Lyn Jacobs and Shannon Flynn as well as from document experts and Mormon Church officials. This book has 185 large pages which contain photographs of 16 documents believed to be forgeries. Important and detailed information is also provided concerning the documents. The Salamander letter, the Oath of a Freeman, the 1825 Joseph Smith letter on money-digging, the Anthon transcript, the Joseph Smith III Blessing and many other documents are critically examined.

This book also discusses Mark Hofmann’s deep involvement with Mormon officials and how he virtually blackmailed them into buying up embarrassing documents. It also deals with different theories regarding the scandal and the possibility of co-conspirators and a cover-up. This book is a must for anyone who wants to be well-informed on the Hofmann affair and it implication for the Mormon Church.
NIGHTMARE ENDS
AT THE SUPREME COURT

In the April 1986 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we printed an article entitled, “LAW SUIT OVER—UNFAIR VERDICT IS OVERTURNED.” In this article we told how a man by the name of Andrew Ehat, with the help of a lawyer who represents Brigham Young University’s Religious Studies Center, brought a lawsuit against us in 1983 alleging that we had violated his copyright in printing extracts from Joseph Smith’s private secretary’s diaries which he had typed. Since these diaries contained information which was very embarrassing to the “Mormon leaders they had been suppressed in the First Presidency’s vault for many years. We were brought before a Mormon judge who seems to have been swayed by the plaintiffs arguments that we had printed a great deal of sensitive material from the Mormon Church’s archives. Although the judge had to admit that Mr. Ehat did not really have a copyright interest in the material, he nevertheless awarded Ehat $16,000 for what he called “unfair competition” and damage to his reputation! We knew that there was absolutely no basis in law for this unjust verdict and appealed to the U. S. Court of Appeals For The Tenth Circuit. A panel of three judges examined the case and ruled in our favor:

Andrew Ehat brought this action against Gerald and Sandra Tanner . . . Judgment was entered against the Tanners, and they appeal. We reverse. . . .

Ehat “cannot achieve by an unfair competition claim what [he] failed to achieve under [his] copyright claim,” . . . The case is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

While we firmly believed that this would end the whole matter, we were soon astounded to learn that the case had been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. We had previously told Mr. Ehat’s lawyer that we would go to the Supreme Court if necessary to obtain justice, but in view of the weakness of his case, we never expected that he would make such a foolish move. Finally, on October 6, 1986, Joseph F. Spaniol, Jr., Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, wrote us a letter stating that Ehat’s “petition for a writ of certiorari is denied.” This, of course, meant that our victory in the U.S. Court of Appeals For The Tenth Circuit was absolutely final. The costs in fighting this suit over a period of three years had mounted to between thirty and forty thousand dollars. In the “Stipulation For Settlement,” pages 1-2, Mr. Ehat acknowledged an obligation to reimburse us for some of the expenses:

1. The plaintiff ANDREW EHAT hereby acknowledges that as a result of the resolution of this action by the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, the ruling of this Court after the appeal and the denial of the plaintiffs petition for writ of certiorari to the United States Supreme Court, the defendants have the right to seek against the plaintiff an award from the Trial Court, of the attorneys fees incurred by defendants in this matter.

2. The plaintiff hereby acknowledges that as a result of the resolution of this action by the United States Court of Appeals . . . the plaintiff has an obligation to pay to the defendants the court costs (in an amount to be determined by the Court) that the defendants incurred in this matter.

Although we felt that there was a possibility of forcing Mr. Ehat into bankruptcy, we did not feel that this was the right course to pursue. Mr. Ehat paid us a very modest sum (only a fraction of the costs we had encountered) and we agreed to accept this “in full settlement of any potential obligations.” The final paper was signed October 17, 1986. We just feel thankful to God that the long nightmare is now finally and forever ended, and want to express our appreciation to the people who stood with us through this terrible ordeal. The prayers and financial help were a great encouragement, and we are happy to announce that all the bills are now paid.

JERALD TANNER’S TESTIMONY

One of the editors of this newsletter (Jerald Tanner) is now recording a set of tapes concerning his life and the work of Utah Lighthouse Ministry.
In these tapes Jerald tells some of his early memories concerning growing up as a Mormon in Utah. He discusses his battle with selfishness and pride and his disillusionment with the Mormon Church. He tells of going back to Missouri to search for the “only true church” and his startling discovery that he was a sinner in desperate need of God’s salvation. He goes on to relate how he received Jesus as his personal Saviour and the amazing changes God made in his life.

An account is given concerning how Jerald and Sandra first became acquainted and how God worked in their lives to start a ministry to Mormons. Jerald tells how a Mormon Apostle sternly warned him against starting a work critical of the church and later threatened a lawsuit to prevent important material from being published. He reveals some of the fears he has had and the problems encountered in keeping the work going. He also deals with a particularly traumatic incident in his life which helped convince him of the power of the adversary and the need for constant prayer. In these tapes, Jerald tells of the peculiar ways God has blessed the work of Utah Lighthouse Ministry and expresses his belief that if Christians will pray and be faithful tens of thousands of Mormons will come to know the Lord in a very personal way. Although these tapes were created mainly for the purpose of helping Mormons, they can also be a real encouragement to those who are working with them.

SUPPORTING 100 CHILDREN

In the January 1985 issue of the Messenger we told of our interest in the area of world relief. We related that $1,000 had been designated “for relief work in Africa—i.e., providing food, medical relief, shelter and a demonstration of true Christian love.” At that time we decided to provide monthly support for five children under the World Vision Childcare Partner plan. In the April 1986 issue of the Messenger we reported: “Because God has been so gracious in supplying all our needs, we have decided to take another step in faith. In the future we will be supporting 25 children.”

Since God has continued to bless our work in a marvelous way, we have decided to take an even larger step of faith and expand the ministry TO SUPPORT 100 CHILDREN! While we have some money designated for this work, it is basically a move made on faith that the Lord will continue to provide as the months go by. We still have our regular expenses. It is necessary that we meet these obligations so that we can continue an effective work among the Mormons. We do hope that our friends will pray earnestly about UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY and world relief. While we feel somewhat apprehensive about making this move, we know that God “is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that works in us,...” (Ephesians 3:20).

Those who are interested in helping out with this important ministry can send their tax-deductible contributions to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY, Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.

OBSESSION WITH LUCIFER?

For years we have pointed out that Dr. Hugh Nibley, the noted Mormon apologist, has been so zealous to prove Mormonism that he has used weak parallels and wishful-thinking in an attempt to establish his case. When Mark Hofmann forged a copy of the Anthon transcript (the sheet that is supposed to contain the characters Joseph Smith copied directly from the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was supposed to have been translated), Hugh Nibley latched onto it with a great deal of enthusiasm and immediately proclaimed: “Of course it’s translatable” (The Provo Herald, May 1, 1980). According to the same paper, “Nibley also said he counted at least two dozen out of 47 characters in the Demotic alphabet that could be given phonetic value.

“...This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get. Nobody could have faked those characters. It would take 10 minutes to see that this is fake.”

Barry Fell, whose work is often used by Mormon scholars to support their theories concerning ancient America, went even further than Dr. Nibley. He claimed that the forged Hofmann transcript actually contained Arabic characters and proceeded to translate them. His translation almost exactly matched the first part of the Book of Mormon!

While those of us who are critics of the Mormon Church may be amused by these examples, we must be very careful not to become so over zealous that we fall into the same trap. Unfortunately, we have noted a tendency in this direction during the last few years. This is especially true with regard to writings and lectures concerning the Mormon temple ceremony. One couple claimed that the Mormons are really calling upon Lucifer when they repeat the words “Pay lay ale” three times in the temple ceremony. Ed Decker and others picked up on this idea and it was printed in a number of publications which have been circulated throughout the world. It was claimed that the words pay lay ale were taken from the Hebrew language and could be translated: “WONDERFUL LUCIFER.” This is certainly an extremely serious charge. If it could be proven true, it would go a long way toward demonstrating that Mormonism is inspired by Satan.

Because we published an expose of the temple ceremony in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and were constantly being asked about this accusation, we published a statement about the matter on June 29, 1982. It was entitled, PAY LAY ALE An Examination Of The Charge That The Mormons Call Upon Lucifer In Their Temple, by Jerald Tanner. The following appeared on the first page of that statement:

. . . I feel that I owe the public a statement which sets forth my views. Although I do not profess to be a Hebrew scholar, I feel that my research throws some important light on the subject.

Since I have been active in bringing forth evidence against the authenticity of Joseph Smith’s work, I would have been very happy to have found that this new indictment was based on sound research. Unfortunately, however, a careful examination of the evidence has forced me to conclude that the charge is without foundation.

Wesley P. Walters, one of the top authorities on Mormon history who has had some training in the Hebrew language, also felt that the translation “Wonderful Lucifer” was incorrect. He tried to warn against the spread of this idea, but his protest availed nothing. In our statement we pointed out that if the words pay lay ale are really derived from Hebrew, a better rendering would be “WONDERFUL GOD.” While the identification of “wonderful” with “pay lay” is not certain (Wesley P. Walters, in fact feels that it is questionable), ale does correspond perfectly to a Hebrew word for God, אֵל. It is translated as ‘el and is pronounced ale (see Strong’s Concordance, Hebrew word #410). While the Hebrew word Elohim is usually used for God (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 168), El is also found in many places in the Old Testament.

After we published the statement on pay lay ale, some of the tracts containing the translation “Wonderful Lucifer” were changed. Unfortunately, however, some of those who had previously supported the translation “Wonderful Lucifer” put forth the idea that “the Hebrew translation of these words can be either marvelous false god or marvelous true god.” This of course is incorrect. The word El can only be translated as “God.” The word itself does not give any indication of whether the god spoken of is true or false. It is the same with our English word “God.” It cannot be translated into another language as “false god” or “true God.” It is true, of course, that the context of a statement can help us determine whether it is speaking of a false god. For instance, the words “my god is Satan” would be understood as referring to a false god.

In defense of the translation “Wonderful False God,” it has been claimed that the word El is “a generic term for God” and that it “is the word which is most often used to denote the false gods of the Bible.” Because we did not believe this statement was accurate, we decided to make a test. We looked up all of the passages we could find in the book of Isaiah which used the word El. We found 22 places where the word appeared. When we read the context of these verses, we found that 15 of the 22 were written concerning the God of Israel.

The word El appears as a part of many names found in the Bible. For instance, it is found in Israel and is also part of the name Immanuel. In Isaiah 7:14 we read: “. . . Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and call his name Immanuel.” This name is translated as “with us (is) God [El].”

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ENGLISH WORDS</th>
<th>WONDERFUL LUCIFER</th>
<th>WONDERFUL GOD</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>HEbrew WORDS</td>
<td>נלכ</td>
<td>נלכ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TRANSLITERATION</td>
<td>pele’ hayelel</td>
<td>pele’ ‘el</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PRONOUNCED</td>
<td>peh-leh hay-tale</td>
<td>peh-leh ale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TEMPLE CEREMONY</td>
<td>pay lay ale</td>
<td>pay lay ale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EXTRA LETTERS NOT FOUND IN TEMPLE CEREMONY</td>
<td>HAY-L</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Matthew renders this word correctly in the New Testament: “...they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us” (Matthew 1:23). We feel it is inconsistent to accept the translation of El as God in this passage and yet maintain it should be translated “False God” in the temple ritual. It should be noted also that the temple ritual itself indicates that the translation of the words pay lay ale is, “O God, hear the words of my mouth.”

It has been suggested that because Lucifer appears just after Adam prays that he is in fact Adam’s god. Actually, a careful examination of this part of the ritual shows that Adam rejects Lucifer’s message. Our reproduction of the temple ceremony as well as that published by Chuck Sackett makes this very clear:

LUCIFER: (arrogantly) I am the God of this world.
ADAM: (unsure, questioning) You, the God of this world?
LUCIFER: Yes, what do you want?

Both versions of the temple ritual quote Adam as saying: “I was calling upon Father” and indicate that Adam spurns Lucifer’s teachings. It should be noted also that in the version published in What’s Going On In There? page 33, Adam directly questions Lucifer’s claim to be the God of this world: “You, the God of this world?” If Adam were really calling upon Lucifer, why would he dispute Lucifer’s claim and say that he was “calling upon Father”?

Some have used Lucifer’s statement that he is “the God of this world” as evidence that the Mormons worship Lucifer. We feel that this is a very poor argument because most Christians feel that Paul was referring to Satan when he wrote: “In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them” (II Corinthians 4:4).

Another item which is used to try to link the temple ceremony to the worship of Lucifer is the fact that the Mormons wear fig-leaf embroidered aprons during the ritual and that Lucifer is supposed to be the one who originally suggested this idea:

LUCIFER: See, you are naked. Take some fig leaves and make you aprons. Father will see your nakedness. Quick, hide. (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 467)

This portion of the ceremony is dealing with the Garden of Eden and comes before the part in which Adam rejects Lucifer and his doctrine. One of the early accounts of the ritual seems to indicate that it was God who gave Adam and Eve the aprons. Mary Ettie V. Smith claimed that “The Lord then put aprons upon Adam and Eve, and upon us all, made of white linen, illustrated by means of green silk, to represent fig-leaves” (Mormonism: Its Rise Progress, and Present Condition, 1870, page 45). Fanny Stenhouse’s book, Tell It All, 1875, page 364, does not mention the Lord as being present but indicates that Lucifer was not:

Then the devil leaves her, Adam makes his appearance, and Eve persuades him also to eat of the fruit of the tree. After this they make a dumb show of perceiving their condition, and an apron of white linen is produced, on which are sewn pieces of green silk, in imitation of fig leaves, and in these they both attire themselves.

The accounts of the temple ceremony published in the Salt Lake Tribune, February 12, 1906, and in Temple Mormonism, 1931, do not link Lucifer with these aprons. The whole thing appears to be Adam’s idea. The idea that Lucifer instructed Adam and Eve concerning their aprons appears to have been a later addition to the ceremony. While it is not really Biblical, it would be more in accord with the Bible than having God supply the fig-leaf aprons. The fig-leaf covering is generally considered by Christians to represent man’s works which are not acceptable to God.

In any case, while it is true that in the present version of the temple ceremony Lucifer suggests the fig-leaf aprons, we do not feel that this proves that the Mormons worship him. This, of course, does not mean that we feel that the ceremony comes from God. On the contrary, the use of the aprons plainly shows that the ceremony is man-made. If the ritual were inspired by God, the participants would not wear a fig-leaf apron (the symbol of man’s own covering for sin) throughout the ritual. The apron, of course, is worn on the outside of the temple robes. The inconsistency becomes even more apparent when we learn that the temple garment is supposed to represent the “coats of skins” which God made for Adam and Eve. The idea of wearing the fig-leaf covering over the covering provided by God seems to show a great deal of confusion in the minds of those who created the ceremony.

People are often led to believe that those who pass through the temple put on the same type of apron that Lucifer wears. This is simply not true. The apron worn by patrons is green with fig leaves embroidered in it. The Devil’s apron, on the other hand, is not green. It is worn under his suit and only briefly displayed. One man says that it is blue while another claims that it is black with blue thread. Both, however, maintain that it contains two pillars and a checkerboard pattern.
as well as other Masonic symbols. It is supposed to resemble a Masonic apron worn even before the time of Joseph Smith. Those who have observed Lucifer’s apron seem to agree that it not only differs in color from those worn by temple patrons but also has an entirely different design from the fig-leaf pattern. When writers and lecturers tell people that the Mormons put on “Luciferic aprons” which are “similar” to the one worn by the Devil and thus put themselves under “his power and priesthoods,” they are misrepresenting what really goes on. One lecturer claims he has discovered that green is Lucifer’s special color. The Mormons, he maintains, are putting on the Devil’s color when they tie on their aprons. He does not explain, however, why Lucifer does not wear a green apron. It would seem more logical to believe that the apron is green because it represents fig-leaves. Following this man’s line of reasoning concerning the color green, a Mormon might argue that Christians who wear green chorus robes are worshipping the Devil, or that the “wearing of the green” on Saint Patrick’s day is a “Luciferian” plot to get people under his power.

While we agree that portions of the Mormon temple ceremony were borrowed from Masonry (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 484–492) and have roots in the occult, we feel that some people are becoming so obsessed with trying to find “Luciferian” influence in the temple ritual that they have lost sight of reality. Just as Hugh Nibley and Barry Fell strained their eyes to find parallels between the Hofmann transcript and ancient languages, these people are seeing many things that simply are not there. While it is true that the temple ritual tries to link Christians and ministers of other churches to the Devil’s work, a person who carefully reads the temple ceremony will see that the whole thrust of its message is a put down of Lucifer (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 462–473).

Although we certainly do not endorse the penal oaths and the attacks on our religion found in the temple ceremony, we feel that the picture being painted by some Mormon critics is badly distorted.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mark Hofmann’s documents have fallen into disrepute and some Mormon critics have overstated the relationship between “the temple ritual and Satanism, it is certainly true that Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders were involved in magic practices. Although we have demonstrated this in our book Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, in almost thirty years of research we have never found any secret LDS doctrine in which Lucifer is worshipped as God. If we had found any such evidence we would have been the first to publish it.

At Utah Lighthouse Ministry we encourage people to avoid extremes. We try to present good factual material. It is our belief that the truth will bear its own weight. It does not need to be embellished in any way. For a detailed study of Mormonism and the occult we recommend Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. We especially recommend Appendix A of this book for those who want to keep a good balance on the subject. It is entitled, “The Question of Satanic Influence in the Book of Mormon and the Temple Ceremony.”

IN THE MAIL

Please dont send any more anti Mormon garbage to this address . . . why don’t you find something new to make money on? The Church will grow inspite of you. You are defeating your purpose. . . .

Good luck you will need it especially after this life. Merry Christmas (Letter from California)

I was raised in the Mormon Church and I have always believed it was Gods only true church. My husband and I were married in the Temple and have always been very dedicated to the church. We have been especially involved in missionary work, which brought us into contact with anti-Mormon literature. Much of it was of such poor quality that we quickly disregarded it. When we were given your book The Changing World of Mormonism, however, it was more difficult to deal with.

It took a long time and a lot of research for us to come to grips with the fact that the evidence against the church is overwhelming. It was painful to then have to accept the fact that the church could not possibly be true, especially after we had given so much of ourselves to the church, but we are glad we took the step.

We realize now that it is due to your straight forward, well-documented and factual approach to Mormon claims that the evidence was able to make an impression upon us. (Letter from Kansas)

I have just gained access to your “The Changing World of Mormonism.” I recognize it for what it is. It is a scholarly work in its limited field. In that it tells the truth it is good. Where it conveys a destructive or false impression it is not good. . . . You have sought and are seeking to destroy. . . . You have sold yourself. . . . there are millions that do not share your view. . . . you will be held accountable for what you do. . . . I suggest you harmonize your work with Jesus Christ or be prepared for what must come. (Letter from California)

I’m reading your . . . “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?” Very interesting and the greatest book published. I was born a mormon but no longer believe it’s doctrine. . . . I’m so glad I found out the truth about the L.D. S. Church. (Letter from Oregon)

I have read with great interest, your works on Mormonism, as a matter of fact, I can say today, I am an ex-Mormon because of some of your works. Now I share your ministry, with gladness and fervor. I am currently witnessing to the Missionaries . . . (Letter from Wyoming)

As you can see by the heading, we EX RLDS have formed a group here in Independence . . . I thank God for your ministry, Gerald and Sandra, since I wrote to you 2 years ago when I was coming out of the RLDS church and you were kind enough to direct me to other RLDS who I got in touch with and helped me work through all the mess until I found the REAL Jesus! So praise God you are hanging in there and are committed to His work—thanks! (Letter from Missouri)

We have been members of the Mormon Church for the past ten years. We have finally “thought our way out,” so to speak and have asked for our names to be removed from the membership records of the church. We have read your books, The Changing World of Mormonism, and Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and various other literature. (Letter from Connecticut)

I have finally gotten my name removed from the records of the LDS church, . . . myself and daughters have all accepted Christ this year. . . . I have also found two friends who have recently accepted Christ and left the Mormon Church. We would like to start a group for other LDS members who are questioning or are in the process of leaving the LDS church. (Letter from Wyoming)

It sure marvels me that you help God unwittingly shaking out luke-warm & useless members of the Mormon church and strength[en] the stronger ones. It also encourages me all the more in wanting to join the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints — as soon as I work on quitting smoking and drinks and coffee. (Letter from Washington, DC)

I am a returned missionary, a former Bishops counselor, High Counselor, and Stake Young Mens President. Currently I’m a High Priest and teach the Gospel Doctrine sunday school class in my branch. I just wanted to personally thank you for trying to bring the truth out into the open about my Church. I want the whole truth no matter what. Thank you. You are doing a find job. I really do look forward to each Messenger you send me. (Letter from Tennessee)
TRACKING THE WHITE SALAMANDER

The Story of Mark Hofmann, Murder and Forged Mormon Documents

BY JERALD TANNER

* * SEE SPECIAL OFFER ON THIS BOOK ON PAGE 8 * *
BOOKS AND VIDEOS

(Mail orders add 10% handling)
$1.00 minimum shipping charge

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

Studies of the Book of Mormon, by B. H. Roberts. Edited by Brigham D. Madsen. A good reproduction of the secret manuscripts of a noted Mormon historian. Price: $21.95

Mormon Polygamy—A History, by Richard S. Van Wagoner. Price: $19.95

An Index to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Michael Briggs. Price: $2.00

Tract Pact—18 different tracts on Mormonism from various publishers. Price: $2.25

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Capt. Wm. Morgan’s Exposition of Freemasonry. (Photo-reprint of 1827 ed.) One of the works used in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to compile the parallels between Mormonism and Masonry. Price: $3.00

Mormon Enigma: Emma Smith (Prophet’s Wife, “Elect Lady,” Polygamy’s Foe, 1804-1879), by Linda King Newell and Valeen Tippetts Avery. Price: $19.95

Sandra Tanner Video No. 1. Two lectures on Mormonism given at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Good for use in Christian groups as introduction to the differences between Mormon and Christian doctrine. Price: $30.00

Sandra Tanner Video No. 2. Interview on Mormonism with a Milwaukee television station. Good for showing to either Mormons or non-Mormons. Discusses the Tanners’ struggles in coming out of Mormonism and turning to Christ. Price: $20.00

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT 84110
MORMONISM
AND PLAGIARISM

For almost thirty years the editors of this newsletter have studied the contents of LDS documents in an attempt to determine the truth about Mormon history. Over the years we have found a number of documents (both Mormon and anti-Mormon) that bear all the earmarks of forgery. The Mormon scholar Hugh Nibley gives this information about forgery in Since Cumorah, page 160: “A forgery is defined by specialists in ancient documents as ‘any document which was not produced in the time, place, and manner claimed by it or its publishers.’” Although we do not agree with Dr. Nibley on many things, we feel that the definition he cites with regard to forgery is very good.

One of the most controversial documents that we ever dealt with was the White Salamander Letter—a letter attributed to Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris which cast doubt on the origin of the Book of Mormon. Writing in the Los Angeles Times Magazine, March 29, 1987, page 12, Robert A. Jones related the following:

After nearly a year of testing the Salamander Letter’s paper, ink and the handwriting itself, Rendell reported that he could find no indication of tampering or forgery.

Still, there were some who were unsatisfied. The most unlikely of those was Jerald Tanner, a born-again Christian who has conducted a genteel campaign of intellectual warfare against the Mormon Church for 20 years. Operating from a Victorian home in Salt Lake, Tanner and his wife, Sandra, publish the Salt Lake Messenger, a newsletter that disgorges any and all items that might discredit the church’s claims to divine origins. A historian at Brigham Young University once remarked that the Salt Lake Messenger was read by more people who denied it than any publication in Utah save for Playboy.

The Tanners wanted dearly to believe that the Salamander Letter was real. But Jerald had a problem. . . . Tanner was familiar with the accounts of the gold plates contained in a critical 1834 volume titled “Mormonism Unvailed.” The more Tanner looked through the book, the more connections he saw between those accounts and the newly produced letter. . . . Could the Salamander Letter be a modern plagiarism of the old affidavits? It was spooky, and Tanner was suspicious. . . . Tanner . . . said the letter was a fake.

About two years after we began to criticize the Salamander Letter in the March 1984 Salt Lake City Messenger, it was revealed that document experts had come to the conclusion it was a forgery. Finally, on January 23, 1987, Mark Hofmann admitted the letter was a fake. In addition, he also pled guilty to two counts of murder. While many Mormons were relieved to find out that the letter is not authentic, the fall of the Hofmann documents does not sweep aside some serious problems that have been uncovered in the Mormon Church’s own documents.

ANCIENT OR MODERN?

One document which we have spent a great deal of time testing is the Book of Mormon. We originally believed that Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon from golden plates by the power of God. It seemed to have a scriptural sound to it, and we were convinced that it was genuine. We were, in fact, trying to find all the evidence we could to support its authenticity. The more we studied the Bible, however, the more problems we began to find. We saw that there were many parallels between the Bible and the Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon purports to give a history of a group of people (known as the Nephites) who came to the New World about 600 B.C. and were destroyed around 400 A.D. Since the Book of Mormon claims that the Nephites had portions of the Old Testament, we were not disturbed to find quotations from those Old Testament books in the Book of Mormon. As we became more familiar with the Bible, however, it became obvious that portions of the New Testament which had not even been written yet were used by the ancient Nephites.

We found well over a hundred quotations from the New Testament in the first two books of Nephi alone. These two books were supposed to have been written between 600 and 545 B.C., whereas the New Testament was written in the first century A.D. (For a list of some of these parallels between the New Testament and the Book of Mormon see our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 73-79.) In the Book of Mormon the writings of Paul, Luke, John and others are quoted extensively hundreds of years before these men were even born!

The ministry of Christ seems to have been the source for a good deal of the Book of Mormon. For instance, the story of Christ raising Lazarus from the dead appears to have had definite influence upon a story concerning Ammon (dated about 90 B.C.) which is found in the Book of Mormon: (1) In both stories a man seems to die. (2) In both cases the servant of the Lord comes to the scene. (3) A period of time elapses in both stories. (4) In both cases there is great sorrow. (5) Martha and the queen use the word “stinketh.” It is significant that this is the only time this word is used in the Book of Mormon and it is only used one other time in the Bible. (6) Both Ammon and Jesus use the word “sleepeth” with regard to the man. This word is only used twice in the Book of Mormon and only appears seven times in the Bible. (7) Ammon and Martha both use the words “he shall rise again.” (8) The conversation between Ammon and the queen contains other phrases that are similar to those used by Jesus and Martha. (9) In both cases the man arose. On page 3 the reader will find a photographic comparison of the two stories. The lines have arrows pointing from the Bible to the Book of Mormon because it is the only possible way the plagiarism could have occurred. The Nephites did not have the King James Version of the New Testament and the Apostle John did not have the Nephite scriptures. The only logical conclusion, therefore, is that sometime after the King James Bible was published in 1611 A.D. someone borrowed from it to create the story in the Book of Mormon. In our publication, The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, pages 87-102, we listed 400 parallels between the New Testament and the Book of Mormon, and we feel that we could have found more if we had the time to make a very careful search.

While the evidence of plagiarism we found in the Salamander Letter seems very strong, the evidence against the Book of Mormon on the grounds of plagiarism is much stronger. In fact, it is completely devastating. Although we have read the attempts by Mormon apologists to explain this matter, they just do not hold water. The only reasonable conclusion is that the Book of Mormon did not come from ancient gold plates but rather was written sometime after the King James Version appeared.

Around the beginning of the 20th century, B. H. Roberts, one of the greatest apologists the Mormon Church has ever produced, began to try to work out an explanation for the King James verses in the Book of Mormon. He claimed that it is possible that Joseph Smith did in fact use the King James Version in some cases when he was translating the Book of Mormon plates. B. H. Roberts’ attempt to plow around this serious problem did not impress one reader of the Salt Lake Tribune. On December 6, 1903, the following was printed in a letter to the Tribune:

The only way, therefore, to lift Nephi out of this fatal situation is for Elder Roberts to show that he had, in addition to the Jewish Scriptures, a copy of our English Bible with him back there in the wilderness [in] 600 B.C., or else a copy of Shakespeare. Or else let Mr. Roberts agree with me according to the evidence, that Mr. Nephi was simply a very modern gentleman from New York or Pennsylvania, having in his possession both the Bible and Shakespeare, and then the difficulty is solved.

... if Joseph Smith turned aside to quote from our English Bible, as Elder Roberts admits that he did, then what was to prevent him from putting into the Book of Mormon, when it suited him, quotations...
Selected verses from chapter 19 of Alma in the Book of Mormon (to the left) compared with verses from chapter 11 of John in the Bible (to the right). The verses in the Book of Mormon were supposed to have been written over a century and a half before the book of John was penned. The close relationship between the texts provides evidence that the Book of Mormon story was plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible.
A comparison of verses from the 7th and 10th chapters of Moroni in the Book of Mormon (to the left) with the 13th and 12th chapters of 1 Corinthians in the Bible (to the right). According to Moroni 7:1, in that chapter Moroni is quoting “the words of my father Mormon, which he spake concerning faith, hope and charity: . . .” In reality the words are plagiarized from Apostle Paul’s letter to the Corinthians (chapter 13), the 10th chapter of Moroni purports to be Moroni’s own words, but it is obvious that they are taken from the 12th chapter of Paul’s letter to the Corinthians. That both Mormon and Moroni would independently come up with almost the same words as Paul over three centuries after he wrote 1 Corinthians seems totally beyond belief. The evidence clearly shows that the author of the Book of Mormon plagiarized the Bible.
from other English books, from Shakespeare, from books on geography and history? . . . What prevented him from putting in his own views? Undoubtedly, that is just what he did, for the book utterly fails. The statement and admission of Elder Roberts gives us all the light we need as to its modern origin and spurious character. (Salt Lake Tribune, December 6, 1903, as quoted in Defense of the Faith and the Saints, vol. 1, pages 347 and 351)

As the years passed, Mormon apologist B. H. Roberts realized that the Book of Mormon problems were more serious than he had previously believed. Consequently, he prepared two manuscripts which he never released to the public. We finally published these secret manuscripts in 1980, and in 1985 the University of Illinois Press came out with a hard bound copy of Roberts’ work under the title, Studies of the Book of Mormon. Although Professor Truman Madsen, of Brigham Young University, maintains that B. H. Roberts was only using the “Devil’s Advocate” approach so that he could “stimulate thought” in these secret manuscripts, a careful examination of Roberts’ work seems to show that his investigation had tended to erode his faith in the Book of Mormon. On page 243 of Studies of the Book of Mormon, B. H. Roberts asked the question of whether Joseph Smith was “possessed of a sufficiently vivid and creative imagination” to produce the Book of Mormon from materials he had available to him. Roberts concluded “that Joseph possessed such a gift of mind there can be no question.” On page 250 Roberts suggested that the “creative imagination” of Joseph Smith combined with the “common knowledge” of his time and a book like View of the Hebrews “would make it possible for him to create a book such as the Book of Mormon is.” Roberts went so far as to admit that in the Book of Mormon “there is a certain lack of perspective in the things the book relates as history that points quite clearly to an undeveloped mind as their origin. The narrative proceeds in characteristic disregard of conditions necessary to its reasonableness, as if it were a tale told by a child, with utter disregard for consistency” (Ibid., page 251).

On page 271, B. H. Roberts conceded that some portions of the Book of Mormon “are all of one breed and brand; so nearly alike that one mind is the author of them, and that a young and undeveloped, but piously inclined mind. The evidence I sorrowfully submit, points to Joseph Smith as their creator. It is difficult to believe that they are the product of history, that they come upon the scene separated by long periods of time, and among a race which was the ancestral race of the red man of America.”

The evidence seems to show that while B. H. Roberts at first rejected the suggestion that appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune that “Mr. Nephi was simply a very modern gentleman from New York or Pennsylvania,” he later came to believe the evidence pointed in that direction. Since B. H. Roberts’ death, many scholars have wrestled with the evidence of plagiarism in the Book of Mormon. As we already indicated, in the early 1960’s the editors of this newsletter struggled with this painful question. Like B. H. Roberts, we were finally forced to admit that “The evidence . . . points to Joseph Smith” as the creator of the stories in the Book of Mormon. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 63-88, we presented a great deal of evidence to show that the Book of Mormon is a product of the 19th century. This evidence appears to be irrefutable, and many Mormon scholars are coming to the same conclusion.

JOSEPH’S EXPANSIONS?

The reader will remember that the letter printed in the Salt Lake Tribune asked the following questions:

. . . if Joseph Smith turned aside to quote from our English Bible, as Elder Roberts admits that he did, then what was to prevent him from putting into the Book of Mormon, when it suited him, quotations from other English books, from Shakespeare, from books on geography and History? . . . What prevented him from putting in his own views?

The evidence of plagiarism in the Book of Mormon has now forced some Mormon scholars into a very compromised position. Some are even beginning to maintain that the Book of Mormon is both ancient and modern. In the Spring 1987 issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Blake T. Ostler has a very long article which puts forth the point of view that there was an ancient record but Joseph Smith expanded the text with his own comments:

It is my purpose to . . . offer a theory of the Book of Mormon as Joseph Smith’s expansion of an ancient work by building on the work of earlier prophets to answer the nagging problems of his day. In so doing, he provided unrestricted and authoritative commentary, interpretation, explanation, and clarifications based on insights from the ancient Book of Mormon text and the King James Bible (KJV). The result is a modern world view and theological understanding superimposed on the Book of Mormon text from the plates. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1987, page 66)

Although Mr. Ostler seems to be arguing that Joseph Smith possessed ancient gold plates, he admits that “No clearly identifiable ancient sources appear in the Book of Mormon except as might derive from the King James version of the Bible” (Ibid., page 68). He goes on to state:

*The King James Bible. At least one modern source was undisputably used in the Book of Mormon—the King James Version of the Bible . . . the Book of Mormon adapts many phrases, particularly from the New Testament, to a new context. . . .

Jacob’s speech reinterprets the KJV snippets into a new synthesis on death, resurrection, and the judgment . . . these phrases may represent interpretation of an original text using the KJV New Testament and a nineteenth-century theological framework. Yet it is clear that the KJV New Testament phrases have become part of the structure itself. This mode of using the KJV, replicated throughout the Book of Mormon, suggests that Joseph Smith freely adopted KJV phraseology and concepts to present his “translation.” . . . Joseph Smith clearly used the KJV Old Testament to render the Book of Mormon translation. The Book of Mormon also quotes the KJV Sermon on the Mount from Matthew 5-7. . . .

What, then, may we conclude from the Book of Mormon’s use of modern sources? Only that the Book of Mormon as translated and presented by Joseph Smith relied on the KJV and was influenced by nineteenth-century American culture in rendering its message. . . . it is possible that an ancient source contained on gold plates underlies the Book of Mormon, but Joseph Smith uses the KJV both for language and to clarify, expand, and interpret the thought of the original text. . . . Both ancient and modern sources could have influenced the text published in 1829 without ruling out either. . . .

Many Book of Mormon doctrines are best explained by the nineteenth-century theological milieu. . . . it is likely that Joseph Smith expanded the Book of Mormon . . . some doctrines in the book’s pre-Christian sections are simply too developed and too characteristic of the nineteenth century to explain as pre-exilic ideas. The presence of the KJV in the book is, it seems to me, indisputable. . . .

The expansion theory of the Book of Mormon has far-reaching implications for our ideas of revelation and scripture. . . .

The model of revelation I propose here is that of creative co-participation. It seems to me that the Book of Mormon makes most sense if it is seen as both a revelation to Joseph Smith and as Joseph’s expansions of the text. . . .

It also appears that the usual relationship existing between a translator and an identifiable, objective text did not exist for Joseph Smith, for the ancient text merged with his own thought processes. Though Joseph Smith did not lose self-consciousness, the distinction between the text being revealed and the person receiving the revelation apparently dissolved.

What we have therefore is neither an ancient document nor a translation rendering an ancient document from one language into another. The Book of Mormon as we know it is a “text-as-revelation”—the revelation is the text.

However, the presence of translator anachronisms or expansions in the book show that Joseph Smith imposed an interpretation on the text which was foreign to the ancient text, . . . (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1987, pages 76-80, 102, 108, 109, 111 and 112)

It appears that Blake Ostler is using his expansion theory to solve two very difficult problems in the Book of Mormon—i.e., the presence of modern material in the text and the existence of doctrines which the LDS Church no longer believes:

But the voice heard in revelation is not a solo by God. It is a chorus in which the experience of the prophet and God merges. . . . The Book of Mormon reflects the influence of Joseph Smith’s earliest belief structure in its synthesis of passages from the KJV and contemporary theology with nineteenth-century concerns. Joseph Smith’s interpretive framework was largely derived from Christian Primitivism, a particular orientation within nineteenth-century Protestantism . . . In expressing the message of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith’s revelatory experiences naturally assumed the world view arising from his culture. Later revelations, however, necessitated so much revision in this basic set of assumptions that the paradigm reflected in the Book of Mormon was largely abandoned.

Book of Mormon doctrines of God, human nature, heaven, and hell have been refined, expanded, and perhaps superseded by further light and knowledge. The Book of Mormon doctrine of God, though not explicitly trinitarian, is not the developed tritheism that now characterizes Mormon thinking . . . (Ibid., page 112)

Mr. Ostler seems to feel that he can discern some of the portions which came from an ancient text and the ones which Joseph Smith inserted into the text:

1 Nephi 13-15 can be distinguished as Joseph Smith’s expansion through motif criticism. Its denunciations of the devil’s great and abominable church depend on Revelation and appear to express anti-Catholicism characteristic of nineteenth-century New York . . . These chapters contain ideas foreign to pre-exilic Israelites . . . The expansion can be distinguished from the original text because the angel’s purpose in 1 Nephi 11-12 is to explain the symbolic significance of Lehi’s vision. . . . In 1 and 2 Nephi, Jacob and Enos, however, expansions must come from Joseph Smith . . . Mosiah 3:1-23 (on Christ’s mission), 4:1-5 (the audience’s conviction of sin), 5:1 (Benjamin’s request for responses), and 6:4-5 (the beginning of Mosiah’s reign), do not reflect the covenant form. In my view, they are better explained as Joseph Smith’s nineteenth-century expansions. . . . Mosiah 3:5-4:8 seems to be nineteenth-century expansions on the atonement stressed at covenant renewal . . . I see the cry for mercy in Mosiah 4:2 as typical of revival preachers and hence a possible expansion by Joseph Smith . . .

The prophetic speech form and metaphors in Abinadi’s diatribe show evidence of an ancient text . . .

At the same time, Abinadi’s prophetic speech is interrupted by clearly identifiable expansions of the text . . . Mosiah 13:28-32 appears to be Joseph Smith’s expansion to clarify Abinadi’s view that the law of Moses was sufficient for salvation by having Abinadi explain that the law of Moses, then sufficient, would not always be so . . .

Mosiah 14-16 are also best explained as Joseph Smith’s expansions or interpolations. . . . Mosiah 15-16 appear to be Joseph Smith’s expansions to explain how God becomes man. Mosiah 15 . . . attempts to answer theological questions that were asked only after the council of Nicea in A.D. 325, and the answer is premised on Anselm’s medieval satisfaction theory. (Ibid., pages 86, 87, 92, 96 and 97)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 69-72 we demonstrated that the anti-Masonic controversy of the 1820’s is reflected in the Book of Mormon. While Ostler feels that some of this material came from an ancient record, on page 76 of his article, he admits that “Helaman 6:21-30; 8:3-4; 3 Nephi 6:28-30 and Ether 8:10-16, 22-26 appear to be influenced by anti-Masonic terminology and concerns. They may be explained best, it seems to me, as Joseph Smith’s independent commentary on Masonry, sparked by his reflection on Nephite secret combinations.”

On pages 64-65 of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we told of the revivals which swept through New York in the early 19th century and their effect on the text of the Book of Mormon. In his article in Dialogue, page 87, Mr. Ostler is willing to concede that

A Christian expansion in Mosiah’s speech is detectable on form critical grounds. Mosiah 2-5 would appear to be reminiscent of a nineteenth-century camp/revival meeting on first reading . . .

However, not all of Mosiah 1-6 can be explained as a nineteenth-century camp meeting and conversion experience.

In our book, pages 65-66, we showed that the Book of Mormon’s statements concerning baptism of infants probably came from the controversy that was going on in Joseph Smith’s day. On pages 80-81 of his article, Mr. Ostler admits that the discussion over baptism of infants came from 19th century teachings:

The Book of Mormon also addresses problems that simply were not, and could not be, problems for Israelites. For example, the salvation of infants and those who had not heard the gospel arises only if a soteriology is adopted which excludes the unbaptized or non-Israelites. In Hebrew thought non-Israelites are not thus excluded . . .

Nineteenth-century Methodist theology taught, however, that non-Israelites and the unbaptized could not be saved. The Methodist solution resembles the Book of Mormon’s. John Fletcher . . . a Methodist theologian . . . stated that “Christ died for the entire human race, first to procure absolutely and unconditionally a temporal salvation, for men universally, and secondly, to procure a particular redemption, or an eternal salvation, conditionally for all men, but absolutely for all that die in infancy . . .

Those who accept Blake Ostler’s idea that the discussion of the salvation and baptism of infants was not on the gold plates are forced to the conclusion that Joseph Smith put words into the mouths of the ancient “Nephite” prophets that they never uttered. In Mosiah 15:1 and 25 we read: “And now Abinadi said unto them: . . . little children also have eternal life.” In Moroni 8:1, 2 and 9 we find the following: “An epistle of my father Mormon, written to me, Moroni; . . . My beloved son, Moroni, . . . if I have learned the truth, there have been disputations among you concerning the baptism of your little children. . . . wherefore, my beloved son, I know that it is solemn mockery before God, that ye should baptize little children.”

On page 70 of his article in Dialogue, Mr. Ostler commented: “The prophecies of the discovery of America and the role of a gentile nation in the Book of Mormon can be most reasonably explained, in my opinion, as popular nineteenth-century concepts inserted in the text by Joseph Smith (1 Ne. 13:10-20).” The reader who takes the time to examine the verses cited by Ostler, 1 Nephi 13:10-20, will find that Nephi identifies himself three times in these verses as the actual author of the prophecies. The words “I, Nephi, beheld” are found in verses 16, 19 and 29. What we have in these examples goes far beyond adding some explanatory material to the text. If Blake Ostler’s theory is correct, this would mean that Joseph Smith was actually impersonating the ancient Nephite prophets Abinadi, Mormon and Nephi! That Ostler believes that Joseph Smith was taking the role of Abinadi to present his own views is obvious from his comment about Mosiah 15 on page 97 of his article: “. . . Joseph Smith here addresses, through Abinadi, how the Son can be both fully man and fully God.” It would appear to us that Mr. Ostler’s theory puts the Book of Mormon in the same class as the Salamander Letter. Actually, if Ostler’s theory is taken seriously, the Salamander Letter would be in a superior position to some portions of the Book of Mormon because it relates a number of historical facts that can be established from other sources. It is true that the letter was not really written by Martin Harris and that Mark Hofmann added some of his own ideas, but most of the letter is based on actual historical facts found in affidavits and early Mormon writings. Hofmann, of course, cannot be commended for his devious work on the Salamander Letter, but at least his document has some basis in fact. The portions of the Book of Mormon which Ostler cites as Joseph Smith’s expansions appear to be made up out of nothing but whole cloth and verses plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible. Ostler’s theory would have Joseph Smith making up large sections of material which were not based on historical facts and attributing them to the ancient Nephites.

To us the expansion theory seems like a theory of desperation put forth by someone who feels that the Book of Mormon must be salvaged at any cost. It might be compared to Hugh Nibley’s attempt to save the Book of Abraham when Egyptologists found that the papyrus it was translated from was in reality the pagan Book of Unveiled. Hofmann, of course, cannot be commended for his devious work on the Salamander Letter, but at least his document has some basis in fact. The portions of the Book of Mormon which Ostler cites as Joseph Smith’s expansions appear to be made up out of nothing but whole cloth and verses plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible. Ostler’s theory would have Joseph Smith making up large sections of material which were not based on historical facts and attributing them to the ancient Nephites.

To us the expansion theory seems like a theory of desperation put forth by someone who feels that the Book of Mormon must be salvaged at any cost. It might be compared to Hugh Nibley’s attempt to save the Book of Abraham when Egyptologists found that the papyrus it was translated from was in reality the pagan Book of Breathings (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 311-331). One of Dr. Nibley’s theories was that the characters may have had more than one meaning and that Egyptologists were unable to find the real text “concealed within it.” Rather than admit that any of Joseph Smith’s documents are forgeries, some Mormons will come up with fantastic theories. We all seem to have a difficult time adjusting to new evidence which does not fit our previous beliefs. There are, in fact, a number of people who still believe in the authenticity of the Salamander Letter. Some of them will probably find a way to continue to believe no matter what evidence is presented.

It might help those who subscribe to the expansion theory of the Book of Mormon to try to apply the same ideas to the Salamander Letter. It could be argued, for instance, that while the letter we have today is not really in the handwriting of Martin Harris, the majority of the text really came from him. Mr. Ostler finds evidence in the Book of Mormon that he feels points to the existence of an ancient record. We can also find plenty of evidence in the Salamander Letter to show that it could be ancient—i.e., could be dated to 1830. We could say, then, that some individual allowed Mark Hofmann to make a handwritten copy of a real letter written by Martin Harris in 1830. The person who let him make the copy has since disappeared and therefore the original cannot be checked against the present copy. This would be equivalent to the story of the angel taking back the Book of Mormon plates so that the text of the printed book cannot be checked. The problem concerning portions of E. D. Howe’s Mormonism Unveiled being found in the letter (which is equivalent to portions of the King James Version of the Bible in the Book of Mormon) could be explained by the expansion theory. That is that Mark Hofmann recopied the letter and added these portions because he thought they were also good history. This would explain how the text could really date back to 1830 and yet have portions that were plagiarized from a book printed four years later. While this might make a good sounding theory on paper, it is doubtful that it would find acceptance among scholars. If we have to admit that Hofmann would use plagiarism to create part of the letter, how can we be certain that the entire letter was not made in this way? It would, in fact, be much easier to get rid of the whole cumbersome theory and just admit that the letter is a forgery. So it is with the Book of Mormon. Once we admit that Joseph Smith used plagiarism and included his own ideas in the book, how can we trust the rest of his “translation”? Such incompetence would throw the entire book into question. It would be much easier to believe that Joseph Smith made up the Book of Mormon.

In the Articles of Faith, written by Joseph Smith himself, we find the following: “8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God so far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.” The reader will note that the Bible is only “the word of God as far as it is translated correctly,” whereas the Book of Mormon is accepted as “the word of God” without qualification. Blake Ostler’s theory would certainly make the 8th Article of Faith out of date. According to this theory, belief in the Book of Mormon would have to be qualified by the possibility of plagiarism of mistranslated verses from the Bible as well as Joseph Smith’s interpolation of his early theological views which were superseded by later revelations.

Mr. Ostler apparently realized that his theory was not very flattering to Joseph Smith’s image as a translator, and therefore on page 111 of his article he indicated that Smith might not have intentionally made the expansions:

It would not be necessary for Joseph Smith to be aware of his expansions and interpretations of the Book of Mormon simply because they were a part of his experience. In fact, he seems to have been unaware of how his nineteenth-century framework and theological categories or past experiences affected the Book of Mormon or his other revelations since he appears to have believed, despite recognitions in revelation to the contrary, that the words used were God’s . . .

While Ostler’s idea that Joseph Smith did not really realize that he was expanding the text may remove the sinister element in some people’s minds, it certainly does not instill confidence in the contents of the Book of Mormon. If Ostler is correct, then it is obvious that at least part of the Book of Mormon is the work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination. The reader will remember that Dr.
Hugh Nibley claimed that a “forgery” is defined as “any document which was not produced in the time, place, and manner claimed by it or its publishers.” If Ostler’s theory is correct, then at least part of the Book of Mormon must be considered as forged material. While it might make some people feel better to believe that Joseph Smith really thought he was translating this material from gold plates, it would not change the fact that the material is spurious.

Actually, Blake Ostler’s thesis concerning the Book of Mormon is quite similar to our own. While he maintains that part of the words attributed to the ancient Nephites really came from Joseph Smith’s creative imagination, the Bible or other sources, we believe that the contents of the entire book are a product of the 19th century. We feel that what Ostler identifies as an ancient text is in reality plagiarism of ideas and verses from the Old and New Testaments of the King James Bible. It is possible, of course, that Joseph Smith may have also used other ancient sources like Josephus which were available in his time. While Mr. Ostler’s theory seems to provide a way of escape from some serious questions about the text of the Book of Mormon, it opens up the floodgate to many other problems. How could a person really trust any of the text once it is admitted that Joseph Smith was capable of putting his own words into the mouths of the ancient Nephite prophets? Once a person goes so far as to admit that Joseph Smith made up part of the story, it is very easy to go one step further and conclude that the Nephites only existed in Joseph Smith’s own fertile imagination. While Mr. Ostler has not followed his research to its logical conclusion, he has presented a very interesting and provocative article. That Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought would print such a long article on this sensitive subject shows that there is a great deal of interest in the subject of the historicity of the Book of Mormon among Mormon scholars.

Even though Blake Ostler does put a great deal of trust in Hugh Nibley’s claim that the Book of Mormon comes from an ancient text, he has not fallen for some of the other sensational claims put forth by Mormon apologists. Concerning the wordprint analysis of the text of the Book of Mormon, he says that this “is a far-from-fixed field” (Ibid., page 101), and goes on to say that the claim that chiasms appear in the Book of Mormon does not prove the text is ancient: “Chiasmus can also be found in some nineteenth-century works, including the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Abraham . . . Thus, the assumption that chiasmus is an exclusively ancient poetic device appears to be false” (Ibid.). On the same page, Mr. Ostler also frankly admits that “Despite vigorous debate, no concrete evidence exists establishing a Book of Mormon archeology . . .”

On page 97 of his article, Mr. Ostler suggested that in one instance Joseph Smith may have suppressed “Nephi’s own prophecy” and copied some material from the King James Version in its stead. In our opinion, this would mean that Joseph Smith was falsifying the ancient text rather than providing a correct translation. This would certainly be contrary to Joseph Smith’s own statement about the translation. In one case he even cited an angel of God as certifying that the translation was correct:

... we heard a voice from out of the bright light above us, saying, “These plates have been revealed by the power of God, and they have been translated by the power of God. The translation of them which you have seen is correct, and I command you to bear record of what you now see and hear.” (History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 54-55)

In the History of the Church, vol. 4, page 461, we read that Joseph Smith stated he “told the brethren that the Book of Mormon was the most correct of any book on earth . . .” Joseph Smith’s own statements certainly do not leave any room for the expansion of the text which Blake Ostler speaks of, nor do they allow for the plagiarism which is apparent to everyone who makes a serious study of the Book of Mormon. As strange as it may seem, Joseph Smith even made an attack on those who translated and transcribed the text of the Bible: “I believe the Bible as it read when it came from the pen of the original writers. Ignorant translators, careless transcribers, or designing and corrupt priests have committed many errors” (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 57). In the Book of Mormon itself the Catholics were charged with altering the Bible:

... thou seest the foundation of a great and abominable church, which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away.

And all this have they done that they might pervert the right ways of the Lord, that they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men.

Wherefore, thou seest that after the book [the Bible] hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church, that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book. . . . because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book. . . . because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them. (Book of Mormon, 1 Neph 13:26-29)

The Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen made these statements concerning the Bible: “Many insertions were made, some of them ‘slanted’ for selfish purposes, while at times deliberate falsifications and fabrications were perpetrated” (As Translated Correctly, Salt Lake City, 1966, page 4). On page 14 of the same book, Apostle Petersen talked of “deliberate changes, deletions and forgeries” made in the Bible. Joseph Fielding Smith, Jr., the son of the tenth President of the Mormon Church, charged:

The early “apostate fathers” did not think it was wrong to tamper with inspired scripture. If any scripture seemed to endanger their viewpoint, it was altered, transplanted or completely removed from the biblical text. All this was done that they might keep their traditions. Such mutilation was considered justifiable to preserve the so-called “purity” of their doctrines. (Religious Truths Defined, Salt Lake City, 1959, pages 175-176)

Those who accept Blake Ostler’s theory concerning Joseph Smith expanding the text of the Book of Mormon with his own ideas will have a difficult time explaining away the statements by Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders concerning the evil practice of altering scripture. As we have already stated, our position is that the entire Book of Mormon is the product of Smith’s vivid imagination. Very few people would have the audacity to plagiarize the Bible and other sources to create a book of over 500 pages, claim that it was scripture and then turn around and condemn the Catholics for altering the Bible. This might best be compared with Mark Hofmann’s brazen-faced approach to the Mormon leaders—i.e., using the church’s own archives to obtain material to create forgeries to sell to the church.

As to the charge that the Catholics made serious changes in the Bible, since Joseph Smith’s time many ancient Bible manuscripts have been found. Some of the papyrus manuscripts of the New Testament date back to 200 A.D., and one fragment from the book of John goes back to about 125-130 A.D. With regard to the Old Testament, the Dead Sea Scrolls have provided a great deal of evidence for the text of the Bible. A copy of the Isaiah Scroll is dated about 100 B.C. and a fragmentary copy of the book of Samuel is believed to be 125 to 175 years earlier! These manuscripts reveal that there was no Catholic conspiracy to alter the scriptures as Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders have charged. We have a great deal of information on this matter in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 375-385.

In Mormonism we were always taught that the Bible was corrupted and that we needed Joseph Smith to restore the truth. Now that we understand his methods, it is clear that he just added his own confusion. While we would think that the doctrinal teachings in the Book of Mormon, which is supposed to contain “the fulness of the everlasting Gospel” (Book of Mormon, Preface), could be relied upon, it is obvious that the church has abandoned some of the most important doctrines of the Book of Mormon. Blake Ostler, in fact, says that “Many Book of Mormon doctrines are best explained by the nineteenth century theological milieu.” If this is the case, how do we know that Joseph Smith’s later doctrines are any more reliable? Since he originally claimed that the teachings in the Book of Mormon were the word of God, how can we be certain that his later doctrines didn’t come from sources that he became familiar with after he wrote the Book of Mormon? We known, for instance, that Joseph Smith became a Mason and right after this he brought forth a temple ceremony that has many parallels to Masonry (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 484-492).

So far the Mormon leaders have not been willing to come to grips with the question of plagiarism in the Book of Mormon. This was made very clear in 1985 when Stan Larson lost his job with the church. Dr. Larson, who is considered to be one of the top scholars in the Mormon Church, made a detailed study of 3 Nephi, chapters 12-14, and found unmistakable evidence that this portion of the Book of Mormon “is not a genuine translation from an ancient language” which appeared on the gold plates; instead, he discovered that it was plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible. He even found that the plagiarism occurred some time after the “1769 printing” of the King James Version. In the September 1977 issue of the church publication, The Ensign, page 91, Stan Larson was referred to as “coordinator of the standard works translation in the Church Translation Services.” After church officials learned of his study, he was forced to resign (see Salt Lake City Messenger, January 1986, pages 26-29).

JOSEPH SMITH’S HISTORY

Twelve years after Joseph Smith published the Book of Mormon, he came out with the Book of Abraham. As we stated earlier, the papyrus he claimed he translated from turned out to be nothing but a pagan document known as the Book of Breathings. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 365-367 we demonstrated that Joseph Smith plagiarized from the King James Version of the Bible in writing the Book of Abraham. Plagiarism in Mormon Church documents did not cease when Joseph Smith died in 1844. In fact, one of the most ambitious forgeries we have ever encountered occurred during the time Brigham Young was running the church. This is the History of the Church which is still published by the Mormon Church. On the title page to volume 1 it is claimed that it is the “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet BY HIMSELF.” In the Preface to the History of A comparison of part of the text from the newspaper, The Wasp, with the History of the Church. There can be no question that the newspaper article has been plagiarized to create part of “Joseph Smith’s History.” Notice that the words have been changed to the first person to deceive the reader into believing Joseph Smith was the author.
the Church, it is asserted that “a history more correct in its details than this was never published,” and that it is “one of the most authentic histories ever written.” As early as 1965 we published a book entitled, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, in which we demonstrated that the History of the Church is anything but “one of the most authentic histories ever written.” On the cover we charged that since the first printing more than 64,000 words had been added or deleted. Even more important, however, was our suggestion that “most of the history was not written by Joseph Smith.” Only a small portion of the History had been published before Joseph Smith’s death, and we concluded from evidence we found in the text that church historians under Brigham Young had made up the largest portion of Joseph Smith’s History after his death. We speculated that Joseph Smith’s diaries were probably used for part of the History, but that church historians interpolated material of their own “and tried to make it appear that Joseph Smith had written it.” This theory was finally confirmed in 1971, when Brigham Young University Studies published an article by Dean Jessee. At that time Mr. Jessee was working at the LDS Church Historian’s Office and had access to the manuscript of Joseph Smith’s History and diaries which told how the History was written. In his article Dean Jessee frankly admitted that the manuscript was only completed to page 812 at the time of Joseph Smith’s death. Since there were almost 2,200 pages, this meant that over 60% of Joseph Smith’s History was not compiled during his lifetime! Mr. Jessee also gave this information in his article:

At the time of Joseph Smith’s death [June 27, 1844], the narrative was written to August 5, 1838 . . .

By February 4, 1846, the day the books were packed for the journey west, the History had been completed to March 1, 1843 . . .

The rigors of establishing a new commonwealth in the mountains precluded even the unboxing of the historical records of the Church until June 7, 1853 . . . resumption of work on the History occurred on “Dec. 1, 1853 [when] Dr. Willard Richards wrote one line of History being sick at the time—and was never able to do any more.” . . .

The remainder of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church from March 1, 1843 to August 8, 1844, was completed under the direction of George A. Smith . . .

The Joseph Smith History was finished in August 1856, seventeen years after it was begun. (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, pages 466, 469, 470 and 472)

The Church historians who worked under Brigham Young plagiarized from many sources to complete Joseph Smith’s History. Material was taken from newspapers and diaries written by other people and changed to the first person in an obvious attempt to mislead readers into believing that it was written by Joseph Smith himself. A good example of the plagiarism is found in a comparison of an article from the newspaper, The Wasp with the History of the Church. The reader will find both texts in parallel columns on page 11. Our research has led us to conclude that the purported Joseph Smith prophecy concerning the Saints coming to the Rocky Mountains and the famous prophecy concerning Steven A. Douglas are both forgeries added to the History after Joseph Smith’s death. The reader will find a great deal more concerning the falsification of Joseph Smith’s History in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142.

AVOIDING THE PROBLEM

The Mark Hofmann affair raises some serious questions for the Mormon Church. For instance, in a statement published by the church, the General Authorities now acknowledge that they were the victims of fraudulent activities:

Like other document collectors throughout the nation, the Church has relied on competent authorities in document acquisition and with the others has been a victim of the fraudulent activities which have now been acknowledged in the courtroom. As earlier announced, the Church acquired forty-eight documents directly from Mark W. Hofmann . . . (The Ensign, April 1987, page 77)

It is good to see the Mormon leaders frankly admitting they were victims of fraud. The fact that they acknowledge that they relied only upon “competent authorities in document acquisition” when they acquired the forgeries seems to belie their claim that they are led by revelation. The important question, of course, is why was the Prophet, Seer and Revelator Spencer W. Kimball unable to detect that the church was being deceived when he examined the Anthon Transcript—a document supposed to contain Joseph Smith’s copy of characters from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon—with a magnifying glass? Instead of denouncing Mark Hofmann as a deceiver, as Peter did in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:3), the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” allowed Mr. Hofmann to have $20,000 worth of trade items for the forged document. That Spencer W. Kimball and all the other leaders of the church were deceived by Hofmann time after time does not seem to square with their claim to have the same powers as the ancient Apostles in the Bible. At least two of the documents they obtained contain revelations purporting to come from the Lord. It now appears that a wolf in sheep’s clothing can write revelations comparable to Joseph Smith’s and that it is even possible to get them past the scrutiny of the highest officials of the Mormon Church.

It also seems likely that if Mark Hofmann had not given himself away by planting bombs, the church might have bought an entire book of “scripture” from him. The book we are referring to is the book of Lehi—also known as the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon. In the Los Angeles Times Magazine, April 5, 1987, page 47, Robert Jones claims that “in Hofmann’s house detectives found evidence that the 116 Lost Pages of the Book of Mormon were being prepared.” Hugh Pinnock, the Mormon leader who helped Hofmann obtain a loan for $185,000 to buy the McLellin Collection, was apparently very interested in acquiring the book of Lehi for the church. Robert Jones reported:

The church officer [Hugh Pinnock] smiled and then said there was a favor he would like to ask in return. Christensen recorded the request in his diary:

“Elder Pinnock mentioned to Mark that sometime he would like to talk with him about retaining his services to track down two items. One was revealed as the missing 116 pages. Elder Pinnock was not in a position to reveal the second item. . . . The highest leaders of the church, by all appearances, had succumbed to his talents and were asking for his help. (Ibid., March 29, 1986, page 35)

On page 11 of the same article, Robert Jones reveals: “Hofmann said he thought the 116 pages were out there, somewhere; he was investigating some leads. At one dinner party he told a friend that the church had offered him $2 million for the Lost Pages. He said he thought the offer was low. He would ask $10 million.” One of Mr. Hofmann’s associates has confirmed to us that this story is essentially true—the only difference he noted is that he thought Hofmann said the church had offered him 2 to 3 million dollars for the missing pages. In Tracking the White Salamander, page 108, we reported that one Mormon scholar paid $25,000 for just one leaf” Hofmann had forged from the book of Nephi. We reasoned that since the book of Nephi exists in printed form in the Book of Mormon and the RLDS Church owns the handwritten copy of the manuscript the Book of Mormon was printed from, the lost pages from the book of Lehi “would certainly be worth far more.” According to Mark Hofmann’s associate, this was the very reasoning Hofmann used when he said the offer of 2 or 3 million dollars by the church was not enough for the missing portion of the Book of Mormon. In any case, the bombings ended Mark Hofmann’s career as a document dealer and the Mormon Church was apparently spared the ultimate embarrassment of being caught with a forged copy of the book of Lehi. The church’s own newspaper, Deseret News, had already reported that the Salamander letter had been “authenticated” as having come from the pen of Martin Harris, and since Harris was supposed to be the main scribe for the 116 missing pages, the Salamander letter would have been used to authenticate the book of Lehi.

Although we may never know the full story concerning the 116 missing pages and Mark Hofmann’s plan to sell them to the church, it is obvious that he already had the Mormon leaders in the palm of his hand. In an article written for the Salt Lake Tribune, April 19, 1986, Mike Carter talked of the blind trust the church authorities had in Hofmann:

Convoluted deals involving the attempted sale of million-dollar documents, the manufacturing of plates to counterfeit “Mormon money” and the seemingly blind trust of LDS officials in bombing suspect Mark W. Hofmann dominated the fifth day of his preliminary hearing . . .

It was apparent from Mr. Schmidt’s testimony that the LDS Church relied on its own people—who the historian acknowledged were “not forensic or handwriting experts”—to authenticate the more [part of] almost 50 documents the church purchased from Mr. Hofmann. It also was apparent that church leaders, including President Hinckley, trusted Mr. Hofmann implicitly, to the point where negotiations over the price the church was willing to pay for Hofmann documents reached the offices of the first presidency.

Now that the leaders of the Mormon Church have acknowledged that they were fooled by a young man who was about Joseph Smith’s age when he brought forth the Book of Mormon, they need to take a closer look at Joseph Smith’s remarkable discoveries. While the evidence against Hofmann’s forgeries seems irrefutable, that against the “scriptures” produced by Joseph Smith is much stronger. It is, in fact, absolutely overwhelming. In Chapter 3 of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we demonstrated photographically the serious textual changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations which are published in the Doctrine and Covenants. Chapter 5 shows how Smith plagiarized the King James Version of the Bible in producing the Book of Mormon and how he borrowed from other sources such as the Westminster Confession. Chapter 22 shows that he mistranslated the Egyptian papyrus which he claimed was the Book of Abraham. This pagan text has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. Chapter 24 proves that Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Revision” of the Bible finds no real support in the thousands of ancient manuscripts of the New Testament and that the Old Testament portion contradicts the evidence found in the Dead Sea Scrolls. As if this were not bad enough, Chapter 7 shows how Joseph...
Salt Lake City Messenger

Issue 63

Smith’s successors used plagiarism and falsification to create what they called Joseph Smith’s History “BY HIMSELF.”

Taken as a whole, the evidence clearly shows that the foundational documents of Mormonism are unreliable and must be viewed in the same class with Mark Hofmann’s forgeries. The seriousness of this matter cannot be overemphasized. What would be the difference between Joseph Smith plagiarizing the King James Version of the Bible to create the Book of Mormon and Mark Hofmann appropriating ideas and words from Mormonism Unveiled to write the Salamander Letter? In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 133-135 we discussed how after Joseph Smith’s death the church historians interpolated the prophecy into the History of the Church that the Saints would “become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains.” It is put in the first person (“I prophesied”) in a deliberate attempt to convince the reader that Joseph Smith himself had written it, and was obviously intended to bolster up the claim that the group which went west under Brigham Young was the true church. Mark Hofmann, on the other hand, forged a blessing document which was supposed to have been dictated by Joseph Smith which designated his son as his true successor. There is actually some evidence that Joseph Smith may have named his son as his successor to lead the Mormon Church. Much to Brigham Young’s dismay, Joseph Smith’s son became the prophet for a rival group known as the Reorganized Church. What Mark Hofmann did was supply a handwritten document which seemed to prove that Brigham Young was not the true successor. It would appear that Hofmann used the Mormon Church’s own method to create his forgery—i.e., put his own words into Joseph Smith’s mouth. What is the difference between Brigham Young having his historians insert a forged prophecy to promote his leadership and Mark Hofmann creating a blessing document that said the true successor was Joseph Smith’s son?

We are of the opinion that Mark Hofmann was well aware of the plagiarism and forgery that took place under the early Mormon leaders, and, although his actions cannot be excused, he may have decided to use their methods in an attempt to show what the true history of the church was really like.

Whatever the case may be, the serious nature of the crime of forgery became evident when Mark Hofmann was sentenced to “1-to-15 years” in the Utah State Prison for his deception in selling the forged Salamander Letter. While it could be argued that the early Mormon leaders did not receive the same type of financial remuneration that Hofmann did when he sold his documents, they undoubtedly received many benefits. David Whitmer, one of the three special witnesses to the Book of Mormon, indicated that there was some discussion about receiving a profit when the Book of Mormon was published:

When the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, . . . Brother Hyrum thought they should not wait any longer on Martin Harris, and that the money should be raised in some other way. Brother Hyrum was vexed with Brother Martin, and thought they should get the money by some means outside of him, and not let him have anything to do with the publication of the Book, or receiving any of the profits thereof if any profits should accrue . . . . Brother Hyrum said it had been suggested to him that some of the brethren might go to Toronto, Canada, and sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon for considerable money: . . . Joseph looked into the hat in which he placed the stone, and received a revelation that some of the brethren should go . . . sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon . . . but they failed entirely to sell the copy-right, returning without any money. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, by David Whitmer, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, pages 30-31)

Like Mark Hofmann, Joseph Smith seems to have gone through a great deal of money. He was unable to handle it, and in 1842 he petitioned to be declared bankrupt. United States Attorney for Illinois J. Butterfield said that he “defeated Joseph Smith . . . from obtaining the benefit of the Bankrupt Act.” In a letter to C. B. Penrose, Solicitor of the Treasury, dated October 13, 1842, Butterfield said that he had found that Smith was guilty of “fraudulent transfers of his property” to avoid paying his debts (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 534-535). Brigham Young, the second president of the church, became extremely wealthy. Stanley P. Hirshon says that “in the 1870 census he declared personal property worth $102,000 and real estate valued at $1,010,600” (The Lion of the Lord, page 247). Leonard J. Arrington, who later became Church Historian, wrote:

Brigham Young and other church authorities, when need required it, drew on the tithing resources of the church, and at a later date repaid part or all of the obligation in money, property, or services. No interest seems to have been paid for the use of these funds. . . . This ability to draw, almost at will, on church as well as his own funds, was a great advantage to Brigham Young and was certainly one of the reasons for his worldly success. . . . while Brigham Young was probably the largest borrower of funds from the trustee-in-trust, he was certainly not the only one. (“The Settlement of the Brigham Young Estate,” 1877-1879, Reprinted from the Pacific Historical Review, vol. 21, no. 1, February 1952, pages 7-8)

In addition to money, both Joseph Smith and Brigham Young derived a great deal of power over the people who were converted to Mormonism. If it were not for the questionable documents they published, they probably never would have gained such notoriety. It could be argued, of course, that Brigham Young was not aware of the truth concerning the Book of Mormon. While this may be true, he was directly responsible for the falsification of Joseph Smith’s History. This massive forgery was not completed until August 1856, over a decade after Joseph Smith’s death.

While the present leaders of the Mormon Church had nothing to do with the creation of this spurious history, they have continued to print it without giving any notice that the largest portion of it was not compiled by Joseph Smith. The title page still states that Joseph Smith’s History was written “BY HIMSELF.” In 1975 it did appear that the church was making a move to get an honest history. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 13-B, we reported that Church Historian Leonard Arrington was appointed to oversee the production of a sixteen-volume sesquicentennial history of the Mormon Church. These volumes were to be authored by prominent Mormon scholars. Contracts were signed with 16 Mormon historians and publication was scheduled for the 150th anniversary of the church (1980). Unfortunately, however, the church leaders decided not to publish the history when they found that the scholars were telling too much. Since they had binding contracts with the authors, they were forced to pay those who had completed their volumes $20,000. That the General Authorities would approve this immense project and then abort it after some of the church’s top scholars spent years working on it shows a total lack of inspiration and a desire to suppress the truth.

Some people felt that when the sesquicentennial history was published the Joseph Smith History would be phased out. As it turned out, Mormons are still stuck with the bogus history, and there is no indication that church leaders will face up to the issue. A statement by Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer concerning the changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations seems to apply equally well to this situation:

You have changed the revelations from the way they were first given . . . You have changed and altered the revelations to support the error of publishing those revelations in a book: the errors you are in, revelations have been changed to support and uphold them. You who are now living did not change them, but you who strive to defend these things, are as guilty in the sight of God as those who did change them. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, page 49)

Now that the Hofmann documents have been discredited and it is plain to see that church leaders have been deceived, Mormons need to take a closer look at the documents that came through the hands of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. Prior to the Salamandergate scandal, many Mormons believed that their leaders could not be fooled by fake documents or con men. It is now evident, however, that they are not infallible and that they make mistakes just like the rest of us. It is painfully obvious that they have no special insight even with regard to documents that are purported to be sacred. They cannot tell a Hofmann letter from a Joseph Smith letter, or even a Hofmann revelation from a revelation given by the Lord. The ward teacher’s message for June 1945 admonished Mormons to let the leaders do the thinking:

Any Latter-day Saint who denounces or opposes, whether actively or otherwise, any plan or doctrine advocated by the “prophets, seers, or revelators” of the Church is cultivating the spirit of apostasy. . . . Lucifer has a very cunning way of convincing unsuspecting souls that the general authorities of the Church are as likely to be wrong as they are to be right. . . . He wins a great victory when he can get members of the Church to speak against their leaders and to “do their own thinking.” . . .

When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they propose a plan—it is God’s plan. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. (Deseret News, Church Section, May 26, 1945, page 51)

In Jeremiah 17:5 we read: “Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord.” In the light of what has happened in the Hofmann scandal, it is time for the Mormon people to wake up and begin to examine their own faith with a prayerful attitude and an honest heart before the Lord.

For all those who would really like to investigate the truth, we highly recommend our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? The regular price is $11.95 for soft cover and $14.95 for hard cover, but if it is ordered before June 30, 1987, the price will be only $9.95 for soft cover and $12.95 for hard cover (mail order add 10% for postage and handling).
SALT LAKE CITY MESSANGER

16

Issue 63

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT 84110

SPECIAL OFFER

MORMONISM—
Shadow or Reality?
By Jerald and Sandra Tanner
1987 Edition
Updated to Deal With the Hofmann Forgeries
Regular Price: $11.95
If ordered before June 30, 1987:
ONLY $9.95
(Mail Orders add 10%)
Hardback Discounted From $14.95 to $12.95

TRACKING THE
WHITE SALAMANDER

The Story of Mark Hofmann, Murder and Forged Mormon Documents
By Jerald Tanner

THIRD EDITION
PRICE: $6.95
HOFMANN TALKS!
MORMON APOSTLE DALLIN OAKS UPSET WITH HIS CONFESSION

In earlier issues of the Salt Lake City Messenger we have printed a great deal of information concerning Mark Hofmann and his attempt to embarrass the Mormon Church with his forgeries. Hofmann, of course, finally admitted that he had murdered two people because his fraudulent dealings were about to be revealed and was sent to the Utah State Prison. As part of the plea bargain Mr. Hofmann agreed to meet with the prosecution and give details concerning his crimes. We are now pleased to announce that we have photographically printed the transcripts of Mark Hofmann’s discussions with attorneys from the Salt Lake County Attorney’s Office. They are published in 3 volumes under the title, Hofmann’s Confession.

Just after we published a large advertisement in the two major Salt Lake City papers stating that we would be printing the transcripts, a bizarre development occurred. A man reported to us that he had been told by someone in the County Attorney’s Office that a copyright would be placed on the transcripts. The news media investigated and found that the matter was being discussed. We publicly responded that even if a copyright notice appeared on the transcripts, we would publish them and force the County to take us to court. We had recently won a suit over copyright and were certain that there was no way that what had previously been described as a “public document” could be copyrightable. On July 30, 1987, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

The Utah Lighthouse Ministry and Bookstore . . . placed a one-half page advertisement in the Salt Lake Tribune announcing that . . . they will be re-printing and undercutting the county attorney’s $60 price by more than $40 for those who want to order early.

That prompted some members of the County Attorney’s Office to begin researching whether the transcript could be copyrighted. But County Attorney David Yocom, who was out of town last week, said Wednesday that he has no intention of copyrighting what he has referred to in the past as a “public document.”

We were very happy to learn of Mr. Yocom’s decision on the matter. Although we felt that we could win a lawsuit, we knew from our experience with the other suit (which we finally won after it was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court), that it would cost a great deal of money to take on the County.

CONFIRMS OUR THEORY

Mark Hofmann’s confessions corroborate the material which we have been printing in the Salt Lake

SPECIAL OFFERS

OFFERS END OCTOBER 31, 1987
(Add 10% for Postage and Handling)

HOFMANN’S CONFESSION
REG. $25 — SPECIAL $19

Tracking the White Salamander
REG. $6.95 — SPECIAL $4.95

EXTRA SPECIAL!
 BOTH PUBLICATIONS **
REG. $31.95 — SPECIAL $22.95

 Extra Copies of This Issue Will Be Sent Free ***
City Messenger for almost three and a half years. Our theory that the Hofmann documents may be spurious was criticized by both Mormon and non-Mormon scholars before the bombings. While at first we were impressed with Hofmann’s “discoveries,” we eventually came to have grave doubts about the authenticity of the documents. One of the editors of this newsletter (Jerald) wrote the following in the book, Tracking the White Salamander:

Nineteen months before local and federal investigators began working on the Salt Lake bombing’s case, Utah Lighthouse Ministry began its own investigation concerning the authenticity of the documents Mark Hofmann was selling the Mormon Church and other collectors. In this inquiry we obtained information from Washington, D.C. and ten different states. We even interviewed a convicted murderer at the Utah State Prison.

Our investigation began in March 1984 just after we were given extracts from the so-called Salamander letter. Sandra and I had been acquainted with Mark Hofmann for a number of years before he “discovered” this controversial letter. The first recollection I have of actually meeting Mr. Hofmann was in 1980. . . . Just after he discovered the Anthon transcript . . . Hofmann came to our store and discussed the discovery. Although he had served as a Mormon missionary in England, it soon became evident that he did not fully trust the Mormon leaders. He said, in fact, that he was suspicious that the Church might be bugging his phone. He did not claim, however, to have any real evidence about the matter.

In the years that followed our first meeting Mr. Hofmann would occasionally visit our bookstore and tell of the remarkable discoveries that he was making. In the later part of November 1983 I first heard that Mark Hofmann had a letter which was supposed to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris. It was dated Oct. 23, 1830, and was addressed to W. W. Phelps. When I learned of the contents of the letter, I realized that it could deal a devastating blow to the Mormon Church. Sandra and I had previously written a book entitled, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry. In this book we presented strong evidence that Joseph Smith was involved in money-digging and magic. Martin Harris’ letter seemed to provide new and exciting evidence which supported our thesis. This letter is known as the Salamander letter because Martin Harris was supposed to have written that Joseph Smith claimed when he went to get the gold plates for the Book of Mormon, a “white salamander” in the bottom of the hole “transfigured himself” into a “spirit” and “struck me 3 times.”

Fortunately, I was able to obtain some revealing extracts from the letter and was preparing to print them in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger. I was very excited that we at Utah Lighthouse Ministry would be the first to break this important story to the world. While in the midst of compiling evidence to support the authenticity of the Salamander letter, I made a discovery that shook me to the very core. I found that the account of the transformation of the white salamander into the spirit was remarkably similar to a statement E. D. Howe published in Mormonism Unvailed. This book, written four years after the date which appears in the Harris letter, told of a toad “which immediately transformed itself into a spirit” and struck Joseph Smith. Even more disconcerting, however, was the fact that other remarkable parallels to the Salamander letter were found just two or three pages from the account of the transformation of the toad into a spirit (see Mormonism Unvailed, pages 273, 275 and 276).

Some years before I had encountered similar evidence of plagiarism in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. The Mormon Church leaders had always proclaimed that this History was actually written by Joseph Smith himself. My research, however, led me to the conclusion that the largest portion of it had been compiled after his death. I found that later Mormon historians had taken portions of newspapers and diaries written by other people and changed them to the first person so that readers would believe that they were authored by Joseph Smith himself. In agreement with my conclusions, Mormon scholars later admitted that over 60% of the History was compiled after Smith’s death (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 127-135).

In any case, parallels I had discovered between the Salamander letter and Mormonism Unvailed reminded me very much of the work I had done on Joseph Smith’s History. Although what I discovered about the Salamander letter was not conclusive proof that it was a forgery, it was certainly suspicious. It seemed, in fact, to throw a real monkey wrench into all my plans concerning the publication of the letter. Since I knew that it was very unlikely that anyone else would spot these parallels and realize their significance, there was some temptation to keep the matter to myself. I knew, however, that God knew what I had seen, and I began to feel that He had shown me these unpleasant facts to warn me against endorsing the letter. Furthermore, I knew that I would never be satisfied if my case against Mormonism was based on fraudulent material. It was clear, therefore, that there was only one course of action which I could follow—i.e., print the whole truth in the Messenger. In the March 1984 issue, therefore, we raised the question of forgery by printing the title, “Is It Authentic?” Under this title we wrote:
At the outset we should state that we have some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris. . . . We will give the reasons for our skepticism as we proceed with this article.

(Tracking the White Salamander, pages 2, 4 and 6)

In the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we went on to reveal the disturbing parallels between the Salamander letter and E.D. Howe’s Mormonism Unveiled and then noted:

While we would really like to believe that the letter attributed to Harris is authentic, we do not feel that we can endorse it until further evidence comes forth.

This was the first criticism of Mark Hofmann’s documents to appear in print. While we had expected that some Mormon critics might be upset with our insinuation of forgery, we were surprised to find that the top Mormon scholars opposed our research. On August 25, 1984, John Dart wrote the following in the Los Angeles Times:

. . . unusual caution about the [Salamander] letter’s genuineness has been expressed by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, longtime evangelical critics of the Mormon Church. . . . The Tanners suggestion of forgery has surprised some Mormons, who note that the parallels in wording also could be taken as evidence for authenticity.

The Deseret News for September 1, 1984, reported:

. . . outspoken Mormon Church critics Jerald and Sandra Tanner suspect the document is a forgery, they told the Deseret News.

Jerald Tanner . . . says similarities between it and other documents make its veracity doubtful . . .

Another disturbing aspect, Tanner said, was the letter seemed out of character for Harris. “In the entire text of the letter, there is no mention of religion . . . if it’s a forgery, then it’s important because there’s a document forger out there.”

We will probably never know exactly what role our material on Hofmann’s forgeries played in the investigation made by the authorities. One investigator, however, did acknowledge to us that he was asked to test some of our theories. The Salt Lake County Sheriffs Office contacted us not long after Mark Hofmann became the chief suspect in the murders and wanted to know what material we had to establish forgery. After that we had many conversations with investigators. Our printed material was carefully examined by the Salt Lake County Attorney’s Office, and we spent two full days answering questions concerning it and the contacts we had with Hofmann and his associates. We were strongly encouraged to keep in touch with the County Attorney’s Office and give the prosecutors any new ideas or information that came to mind. One of the investigators felt that Jerald should give testimony at Hofmann’s trial. He believed that this would give historical perspective to the case they were trying to build against the documents. Although this investigator seemed to be rather excited about the idea, we seriously doubt that the County Attorney’s Office would have wanted to put a witness on the stand who was so deeply involved in controversy over the truthfulness of Mormonism. In any case, it would have been interesting to demonstrate how closely our evidence, derived from historical investigation, dovetailed with the hard evidence which document experts obtained from physical testing.

Before Hofmann was questioned at the Utah State Prison, we were asked by a detective to prepare a list of questions which we felt investigators should ask him. As it turned out, however, the detectives were not allowed to question Hofmann. The questions were all asked by the prosecutors from the County Attorney’s Office. Since Mr. Hofmann would not allow a detective to join in the questioning concerning the murders, the County Attorney’s Office terminated the interviews.

However this may be, in his confession Mark Hofmann finally admitted that the theory that we had proposed in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger for the origin of the Salamander letter was indeed correct. As we stated earlier, we had suggested that Howe’s book, Mormonism Unveiled was used and that the toad mentioned there was transformed into a Salamander. Mr. Hofmann gave this testimony:

Q And then the language about “the spirit transfigured himself from a white salamander in the bottom of the hole and struck me three times”?

A Yes, there’s a reference in Howe to Joseph Smith being struck. . . .

Q Now the white salamander, you were going to explain that?

A I was only going to say that the idea for the white salamander derived from the toad in A. D. Howe’s book. Salamander, from my reading of folk magic, seemed more appropriate than a toad.

. . . .

Q What was your significance of what the significance [sic] the white salamander had?
A I don’t believe I saw a reference to a white salamander, only a salamander, but I decided to spice it up.

Q There is two places in there [in Mormonism Unveiled] in reference to the toad.
A Yes.
Q In fact, it says on page 276, “which immediately transformed itself into a spirit.”
A Yes. I thought the word, not wanting to sound like I was plagiarizing [sic] from a book, I used the word transfigured rather than transformed.
Q “And gave him a tremendous blow.”
A Yes.
Q You made three blows out of it, struck him twice or three times I think, rather than gave a tremendous blow?
A Again, I didn’t want to sound like I was copying it word for word.
(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 440 and 445)

It it also interesting to note that Mark Hofmann seems to have used our photographic reproduction of Mormonism Unveiled in creating the Salamander letter:

Q . . . Is that Mormonism Unveiled . . . ?
A Yes.
Q Did you have a copy of your own?
A I had a Xerox copy published by the Tanners.
Q Is that similar to the one I have?
A Yes. (Ibid., page 444)

In the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, we mentioned a parallel between the Salamander letter and Joseph Knight’s account of the discovery of the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. In later issues we pointed out many significant parallels between the two documents. Since the Joseph Knight account was locked up in the LDS Historical department and was not published until 1976, we felt that this provided strong evidence that the Salamander letter was a modern forgery. If we could have believed that the forgery had been done many years ago, then we would not have been so suspicious of Mark Hofmann. As it was, however, the evidence seemed to point toward Mark Hofmann. We reasoned that if he was not guilty of the forgery, he probably knew who the person was who had done it. In his testimony in the transcripts, pages 508-509, Mr. Hofmann admitted that he had indeed used the Joseph Knight account in his forgery:

Q Are you telling us then that you were aware of that Joseph Knight letter and used some of that information in composing the information in the Salamander letter?
A That’s correct.

When Mark Hofmann was asked where he obtained the paper on which the Salamander letter was written, he replied: “I believe it came from the—It certainly came from a book at the University of Utah Library, I believe from the Niles Register” (Ibid., page 457). In response to a question concerning the lines that appear on the paper, Mr. Hofmann responded: “I forged those with a pen.” The reason for this was to “make it appear to be writing paper rather than an end sheet” (pages 458-59). He said that he probably used “ammonia” to age the ink and noted that the letter was “somewhat mildewed. I would have used bread mold in places to cause the spotting” (page 462). He claimed that the “postmark itself would have been photographed” off of a genuine letter and that the image was transferred to the paper obtained from the book (pages 463-465).

The reader may remember that a few months before the bombings a story was put forth that the Mormon Church had a secret document known as the Oliver Cowdery history which supported the Salamander letter. We became suspicious that the mysterious source of this report might be Hofmann himself. In the August 1985 issue of the Messenger, we suggested that Hofmann might be the “Deep Throat” who leaked the information. In his testimony, Mark Hofmann frankly admitted he “was the deep throat . . . described in the media.” Hofmann was questioned as follows concerning the Oliver Cowdery history:

Q Is there anything to that story?
A No.
Q Is that all a creation of yours?
A That’s pure creation.

A Yes, I was the deep throat or whoever I was described in the media. That [the person who wrote the story in the Los Angeles Times] would have been—

MR. RICH: That was John P.
MR. STOTT: Was it Dart?
A . . . Yes, I think it would have been John Dart is his name. . . . I told him this fabrication. It is purely made up. It’s not based on anything I saw in the First Presidency’s office or elsewhere.

Q The Oliver Cowdery [history] was made up by you?
A Right.

Q Why did you go to John Dart and why did you not go to a reporter and publish it?
A I didn’t. My intention wasn’t to have that happen . . . I said there were a couple reasons for the story. The other, obviously, would have been that part of the Oliver Cowdery History was there was a white salamander as far as Alvin’s involvement and that would have validated the history presented in the forged Salamander letter.

Q Again made up by you?
A Again made up by me. One forged idea to validate another forged idea.

Q Not only then the whole thing was made up but you were aware by people recounting this story it was causing, I suppose, some considerable embarrassment to the LDS authorities?
A Yes.

Q But you went along with it to the point of giving an interview. What were your feelings during this time? Why were you doing that?
A As far as my feelings, there was actually a mixture of emotions. One of which was amusement for the whole idea. As far as the embarrassment to the Church, it is true that it was embarrassing but I was also interested to see how the Church would react to the situation. As far as giving the interview, I ended up consenting but I did it reluctantly . . . it was almost like I ended up getting dragged along with my own creation to past where I wanted to. . . .

(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 451-456)

In our book, Tracking the White Salamander, we devoted an entire chapter to the McLellin collection—a group of documents Mark Hofmann maintained were embarrassing to the Mormon Church. We stated that “All the evidence, therefore, points to the inescapable conclusion that the McLellin collection was only a figment of Mark Hofmann’s imagination” (page 47). Mr. Hofmann himself has now admitted that he never had such a collection:

Q Did you ever attempt to find a so-called McLellin Collection?
A No. (Hofmann’s Confession, page 521)

After we discovered the parallels between the Salamander letter and the book, Mormonism Unvailed, we began to wonder if there might be some sort of plan or even conspiracy to control the direction of Mormon history through forgery. In an article published in the New York Times, February 16, 1986, Robert Lindsey wrote the following:

Court documents indicate that some prosecutors in the Salt Lake County Attorney’s office believe Mr. Hofmann’s goal was not only to obtain money from the church through the sale of the documents but also to establish enough credibility that he could shape the world’s perception of Mormonism.

This view is shared by a man here who was the first to suggest that Mr. Hofmann was forging his documents. He is Jerald Tanner, a former Mormon who heads the Utah Lighthouse Ministry, which for decades has been challenging the truth of much of Mormon doctrine.

In an interview, Mr. Tanner said he decided . . . that the Hofmann documents might be forgeries, even though some of them . . . supported his own iconoclastic views of Mormonism. . . .

Mr. Tanner said it appeared that Mr. Hofmann’s growing credibility as a source of documents was putting him in a position where the documents he presented were considered unassailable. If that continued, Mr. Tanner said, Mr. Hofmann “could control the direction of Mormon history.”

In the transcripts, Mark Hofmann commented concerning the charge that he was trying to rewrite Mormon history:

A I won’t go so far as to say I wanted to change Mormon history. Let me take that back. Maybe I did. I believed that the documents that I created could have been a part of Mormon history. I’m speaking specifically, for example, of the magic-related items. The 1825 Stoal letter, the so-called Salamander Letter. In effect, I guess, the questions I asked myself in deciding on a forgery one of the questions was, what could have been? I had a concept of Church history and I followed that concept. (Hofmann’s Confession, page 113)

On page 130, Mark Hofmann admitted: “. . . my version of the history is not sympathetic with the teachings of the Church.” Mr. Hofmann also stated:

It is true that I wrote the documents according to how I felt the actual events took place. In other words, I believe that Joseph Smith was involved with folk magic, but the idea there was more to keep it in harmony with what I thought potentially genuine, discoverable type documents may say. In other words, to make it fit the history as accurately as possible so that I wouldn’t be found out or whatever. (Ibid., page 427)

FOOLING THE CHURCH

Mark Hofmann is now considered to be one of the greatest con men of the 20th century. On February 11, 1987, the New York Times published an article by Robert Lindsey which contained the following:
“Mark Hofmann was unquestionably the most skilled forger this country has ever seen,” said Charles Hamilton, a New York document dealer who is widely regarded as the nation’s preeminent detector of forged documents. . . .

Mr. Hamilton said Mr. Hofmann “perpetrated by far the largest monetary frauds through forgery that this country has ever had,” adding, “He fooled me—he fooled everybody.” . . .

Among those fooled by Mr. Hofmann’s documents were hundreds of specialists in Mormon history . . . .

Investigators have said that Mr. Hofmann was as successful in selling forged documents in New York as he was in Utah. They say he may have collected more than $2 million selling rare documents purportedly written or signed by such literary and historical figures as Charles Dickens, Mark Twain, Jack London and Jim Bridger . . . .

After examining the white salamander letter, experts working for the Federal Bureau of Investigation said they could find no evidence that it was forged . . . .

In the confession, Mark Hofmann related that he was only in his teens when he fooled the U.S. Treasury Department by electroplating “a mint mark on a coin to make it more valuable to a collector.” He claimed that “a coin dealer . . . couldn’t believe that I could own such a valuable coin in my youth. I think I was only 15 years old. The coin being worth thousands of dollars even back in those days. Anyway a coin dealer sent it in to have it examined and it ended up going to the Treasury Department where it was pronounced genuine. And my feeling was that if the Treasury Department or I should say my rationalization was that if the Treasury Department pronounces it genuine that it is genuine by definition.” Mr. Hofmann went on to say “that’s also when I lost respect for forensic examination, I guess” (Hofmann’s Confession, pages 409-410).

Although Mark Hofmann served on a mission for the Mormon Church and was even married in the temple, he says that he “lost faith in the Mormon Church” when he was right “around the age of 14” (Ibid., page 112). On pages 425-426, Hofmann revealed:

No, that didn’t cause concern in my mind as far as my feelings where it’s not so much what is genuine and what isn’t as what people believe is genuine.

My example would be the Mormon Church, which may be a bad example since I’m sure you’re both believers in it. I don’t believe in the religion as far as that Joseph Smith had the first vision or received the plates from the Angel Moroni or whatever. It doesn’t detract from the social good that the Mormon Church can do. To me it is unimportant if Joseph Smith had that vision or not as long as people believe it. The important thing is that people believe it.

In his youth Mark Hofmann would have been taught that Mormon Church leaders received direct revelations from God. For example, in the Ward Teacher’s Message for June, 1945, we read:

Any Latter-day Saint who denounces or opposes, whether actively or otherwise, any plan or doctrine advocated by the “prophets, seers or revelators” of the Church is cultivating the spirit of apostasy. . . .

It should be remembered that Lucifer has a very cunning way of convincing unsuspecting souls that the general authorities of the Church are as likely to be wrong as they are to be right. This sort of game is Satan’s favorite pastime . . . . He wins a great victory when he can get members of the Church to speak against their leaders and to “do their own thinking.” . . .

When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they propose a plan—it is God’s plan. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. God works in no other way. To think otherwise, without immediate repentance, may cost one his faith, may destroy his testimony, and leave him a stranger to the kingdom of God. (Deseret News, Church Section, May 26, 1945, page 5)

According to Ezra Taft Benson, the present Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Mormon Church, “The Prophet Will Never Lead the Church Astray” (“Fourteen Fundamentals in Following the Prophets,” an address given at BYU, February 26, 1980; printed in Following the Brethren, page 5), President Benson claims that the leaders of the Church have special discernment which is far superior to “earthly knowledge”:

FIFTH: The Prophet is Not Required to Have Any Particular Earthly Training or Credentials to Speak on Any Subject or Any Matter at Any Time.

Sometimes there are those who feel their earthly knowledge on a certain subject is superior to the heavenly knowledge which God gives to His Prophet on the same subject. . . . We encourage earthly knowledge in many areas, but remember if there is ever a conflict between earthly knowledge and the words of the prophet, you stand with the prophet and you’ll be blessed and time will vindicate you. (Ibid., page 6)

On page 10 of the same address, President Benson said: “NINTH: The Prophet Can Receive Revelation on Any Matter—Temporal or Spiritual.”
Mark Hofmann, seems to have finally come to the conclusion that the Mormon Church was not led by revelation and that he could even deceive the “living prophets” and the top Mormon scholars as easily as he did the U.S. Treasury. On page 99 of his confession, Mr. Hofmann said that he could “look someone in the eye and lie” and didn’t believe that “someone could be inspired” in a religious sense as to what “my feelings or thoughts were.” On page 112 he claimed that he “wasn’t fearful of the Church inspiration detecting the forgery.”

Although he claimed his main motive for most of the forgeries was “money,” when he decided to palm off his first major forgery on the church (the Anthon transcript), he was more concerned about the “fame involved” (page 96). The Anthon transcript is supposed to contain Joseph Smith’s own copy of the characters found on the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. Hofmann was later to admit that the paper was in reality “an end page out of a book in the [LDS] Institute Library at Utah State” (page 54). The ink was aged with “hydrogen peroxide” (page 24). Although the paper was already very old it still appeared too white. Hofmann, therefore, ran a hot iron over it to make it appear “well aged” (page 60). Neither the “living prophets” nor the church’s most noted scholars were able to detect the diabolical scheme. In fact, Mr. Hofmann was honored for making the “discovery,” and the church’s Deseret News, May 3, 1980, printed a photograph of Hofmann standing with Spencer W. Kimball, the twelfth Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Church. Also present were President N. Eldon Tanner, President Marion G. Romney, Apostle Boyd K. Packer and Apostle Gordon B. Hinckley. Neither President Kimball nor any of the other General Authorities were able to detect anything wrong with either “Brother Hofmann” or the Anthon transcript. President Kimball, in fact, is shown making an examination of the transcript with a magnifying glass. In his confession, page 112, Hofmann said that he had “a combination of emotions. There was, of course, a little bit of fear involved since, of course, it was a forged document. There was some excitement involved, a feeling of duping them, I guess.” The church’s most noted apologist, Dr. Hugh Nibley, examined the transcript and claimed that it contained Egyptian characters. He, in fact, triumphantly announced: “Of course it’s translatable” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, May 1, 1980). According to the testimony of Church Archivist Donald Schmidt, the church gave Mr. Hofmann “$20,000” worth of trade items for the transcript.

After the Anthon incident, Mark Hofmann deceived church officials time after time with his phony documents and stories. Just after the bombings, President Gordon B. Hinckley acknowledged that the church had acquired “40-some” documents which came from Hofmann. Later it was admitted that in addition to these documents, Hofmann had given the church about 345 court records. Most of these were “returned to the Circuit Court clerk in Hancock County, Ill.” (Deseret News, April 12, 1986). There seems to have been a question as to whether these documents had been obtained illegally (see Salt Lake Tribune, April 12, 1986). In any case, Mark Hofmann deceived Mormon leaders even after the murders. In the Salt Lake County prosecutors’ summary of their first discussions with Mark Hofmann we find the following:

Hofmann said that he was very good at masking his emotions. As an example, he said that in the afternoon of the 15th he went to Dallin Oaks’ office to see if the McLellin transaction was to proceed. He said that even though Oaks talked and observed him, he fooled Oaks, and Oaks never suspected he was involved in the bombings. He also spoke with Hugh Pinnock in the basement parking lot and fooled him too. (Hofmann’s Confession, page SS-11)

As Mark Hofmann first began developing his nefarious plan to deceive the Mormon leaders, he noticed a weakness in them that he was able to exploit. This was that they were trying to hide the true history of the church from their people. He knew that church leaders were suppressing many early documents because they did not want members of the church to learn of their contents for fear that they would lose faith in Mormonism. Because of this Hofmann reasoned that there would be a market for controversial documents which the church leaders would buy up to suppress. In his confession, page 150, he noted that he felt “a controversial” document “always brings better money.” Hofmann, therefore, perceived church leaders as easy marks for a blackmail type of operation. His plan was to create embarrassing documents and offer them to the church with the pretext that this would keep them from falling into the hands of the “enemy.” The enemy, of course, would be those who would publish the contents of the documents to the world—i.e., Saints Alive, Utah Lighthouse Ministry, Christian Research Institute, etc. His modus operandi was to profess great loyalty for the church leaders while he was in reality stabbing them in the back. He gave this testimony concerning his contact with President Gordon B. Hinckley:

Q What was your purpose for giving it [the Thomas Bullock letter to Brigham Young] to the President?
A Probably the greatest purpose in my mind was to demonstrate to him my concern for the Church, or in other words, possibly, a potentially embarrassing document would not fall into hands that might use it against the Church. And to prepare him for future dealings as far as if my true interest and intent was for the welfare of the Church.

Q Was that something you were using to further your own purposes?
A Yes, it was.

Q Purposes of continuing to deal in similar types of forged documents?
A Yes. (Hofmann's Confession, pages 315-316)

In a speech given at the Brigham Young University Symposium, “Church History and Recent Forgeries,” the Mormon Apostle Dallin H. Oaks tried very hard to make it appear that the church was not trying to suppress documents:

What interested me most was the fact that these forgeries and their associated lies grew out of their author’s deliberate attempt to rewrite the early history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and that so many persons and organizations seized on this episode to attempt to discredit the Church and its leaders. . . .

In the course of this episode, we have seen some of the most sustained and intense LDS Church bashing since the turn of the century. In a circumstance where The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints could not say much without interfering with the pending criminal investigation and prosecution, the Church and its leaders have been easy marks for assertions and innuendo ranging from charges of complicity in murder to repeated recitals that the Church routinely acquires and suppresses church history documents in order to deceive its members and the public. . . .

A February 11, 1987, New York Times feature states:

According to investigators, the church leaders purchased from Mr. Hofmann and then hid in a vault a number of 19th-century letters and other documents that cast doubt on the church’s official version of its history.

This kind of character assassination attributed to anonymous “investigators” has been all-too-common throughout the media coverage of this whole event. . . .

Also conveniently omitted from mention in most of the repetitious media recitals of church suppression of documents is the fact that the most prominent Hofmann documents used to attack the origins of the Church—including Martin Harris’ so-called Salamander letter, Joseph Smith’s treasure-hunting letter to Josiah Stowel, and the Joseph Smith III blessing—were all made public by the Church many months before the bombings triggered the intense public interest in this subject. . . .

In his interviews with the prosecutors, Mark Hofmann has recited the contents of conversations he said he had with President Hinckley. . . . I urge everyone to be thoughtful about who they will believe on conflicts of this nature, General Authorities whose statements about this whole episode have been confirmed by all subsequent investigations, or Mark Hofmann, who is renown for his record of deceit and his efforts to discredit the Church and its leaders. (“Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents,” Brigham Young University, August 6, 1987, typed copy distributed to the news media, pages 1, 2, 4, 5 and 18)

Although Apostle Oaks would lead one to believe that the Mormon Church did not try to suppress Joseph Smith’s 1825 “treasure-hunting letter to Josiah Stowel,” a document which was actually forged by Mark Hofmann, all the evidence points in the other direction. Mark Hofmann’s testimony with regard to this letter seems to fit very well with evidence from other sources:

A I may have shown it originally to Elder Durham I believe and he and I took it to President Hinckley’s office.

Q Why would it have gone to Durham rather than Schmidt? Your other contact seems to have been with Schmidt.
A Only because of its controversial nature.

MR. BIGGS: What did President Hinckley tell you relative to this document?
A He told me that for the time being, or in other words, without giving a date as far as how long this would be in effect, that the Council of the Twelve and the First Presidency and Elder Durham would be the only ones to know about this document.

Q Did he ask you some other questions about who else knew about the document?
A Yes.
Q And did he ask you, does your wife know about the document?
A Yes.
Q What did you say?
A No.
Q Did he ask you, did he say who else knows about it?
A Yes.
Q What did you say?
A I told him that no one else within the Church knew about it. I left open the possibility that someone out of the Church. Obviously, I claimed to have acquired it from someone outside of the Church.

. . . .
MR. STOTT: . . . Did you have a subsequent meeting?

A I believe I had a total of three meetings concerning this document with President Hinkley. The last meeting when he gave me the the [sic] check and made the purchase.

. . . .

MR. STOTT: How did you come to settle on a price?

A I named a price and told him that I believed it was fair, and that that is what I would accept.

Q Was that the $15,000?

A Yes, I believe that was the amount.

. . . .

Q On a Church account?

A Yes.

Q . . . Do you know what he did with with [sic] it [i.e., the letter]?

A I left it with him and he told me at a later time that he handed it to Francis Gibbons with instructions to put it in the vault.

MR. YENGICH: Did you keep a xeroxed copy?

A Yes I did, although I told him that I didn’t.

. . . .

MR. STOTT: Rumors started circulating around that time about the letter. How did those rumors come up?

A Part of them came from me and part of them I believe came through Francis Gibbons . . . I believed at the time that Francis Gibbons had told Dean Jesse something concerning the document.

Q Who did you tell and what did you tell, basically?

A I mentioned the document to Lynn Jacobs, Brent Metcalf and Dean Jesse.

Q Was this something that you were not supposed to talk about once you sold it to Hinkley? Was it an agreement you weren’t going to talk to anybody else or did you feel free to go ahead and talk about it?

A Yes, that was the agreement that I would not talk about it.

Q But you went ahead anyway?

A Yes.

. . . .

Q Dean Jesse obtained a copy of that later on. Do you know where he got the copy?

A Yes. I believe that he obtained a copy from me of the document but I believe that he had a type script beforehand of what the document said.

(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 353-359)

That President Hinckley bought the letter so that it could be suppressed is obvious to anyone who really investigates the matter. The letter was purchased “on or about January 11, 1983” (The State of Utah v. Mark W. Hofmann, page 5), but Church leaders never admitted that they had it until May 7, 1985! In 1984 we obtained a typescript of the letter and published it in The Money-Digging Letters. On page 3 we stated that we would “withhold judgment concerning its authenticity until we obtain more information concerning it.” One would think that after we printed the contents of the letter, the Mormon Church would admit that it had the letter. Instead, however, the church decided to “stonewall.” At about the time we printed the letter, we had a discussion with one of the top historians in the church. He lamented that the church had allowed itself to become involved in a cover-up situation with regard to the 1825 letter. On April 29, 1985, Salt Lake Tribune reporter Dawn Tracy wrote:

A letter reportedly written by Mormon Church founder Joseph Smith describing money-digging pursuits and treasure guarded by a clever spirit seems to have disappeared from view. . . .

Dr. Hill said he is convinced the letter is authentic or he wouldn’t have cited the document . . . he said he doesn’t know where the letter is located now.

“It’s a sad business that the letter is buried,” said Dr. Hill. “With copies of the letter circulating, I can’t see much benefit.”

Research historian Brent Metcalf said he knows from “very reliable, first-hand sources” the letter exists, and the Mormon Church has possession of it.

Church Spokesman Jerry Cahill denied the claim. “The church doesn’t have the letter,” said Mr. Cahill. “It’s not in the church archives or the First Presidency’s vault.” . . . He said that none of the confidential documents is the 1825 letter.

Someone may be playing word games, said George Smith, president of Signature Books, . . . “If the exact question isn’t asked, someone can wink and say the church doesn’t have it.”

No, said Mr. Cahill, the church does not have possession of the letter. (Salt Lake Tribune, April 29, 1985)

On May 6, 1985, the Salt Lake Tribune published a letter George Smith wrote to the editor. In this letter he revealed that “some scholars have reported seeing it at the church offices. . . . A number of scholars have photocopies of the letter. . . .” These photocopies may very well have come from the copy which Mark Hofmann admits that he retained when he turned the letter over to Hinckley. When it became apparent to church leaders that the letter was going to be published in a major newspaper without their consent, they decided to back down and admit its existence. Jerry Cahill, Director of Public Affairs for the Mormon Church, admitted in a letter to the editor of the Tribune that his earlier statement was incorrect:

... staff writer Dawn Tracy correctly quoted my statement to her that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints doesn’t have a letter purportedly written in 1825 by Joseph Smith ... either in the church archives or in the First Presidency’s vault.

My statement, however, was in error. ... Some months ago I was asked the same question by another inquirer and made a thorough check before responding. Dawn Tracy called me twice as she prepared her article and I responded without checking again.

When my published statement came to his attention, President Gordon B. Hinckley of the First Presidency of the church informed me of my error. The purported letter was indeed acquired by the church. For the present it is stored in the First Presidency’s archives and perhaps some day may be the subject of the kind of critical study recently given to the purported letter of Martin Harris to W.W. Phelps. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 7, 1985)

It is very obvious from all this that the Mormon leaders were caught in a very embarrassing coverup with regard to the letter and that they only published it because their own scholars were preparing to release it to the press. Time magazine for May 20, 1985, reported that “The church offered no explanation for withholding news of the earliest extant document written by Smith, ...” John Dart commented: “As it became clear during this week that photocopies of the letter would soon be circulated by sources outside the official church, Cahill announced that the church would discuss the contents and release a photocopy of the letter” (Los Angeles Times, May 11, 1985). It seems obvious that if the letter had upheld the image of Joseph Smith that church leaders wish to portray to the public, it would have been published immediately in the Deseret News with a large headline announcing its discovery. When Mark Hofmann “discovered” Joseph Smith’s mother’s 1829 letter, Mormon officials proclaimed it to be “the earliest known dated document” relating to the church, and it was hailed as a vindication of Joseph Smith’s work. Since the letter to Stowell was supposed to have been written by the Prophet himself some four years earlier, we would expect it to receive even greater publicity. Instead, the Mormon leaders buried it and engaged in a cover-up. In the Salt Lake Tribune, October 20, 1985, Dawn Tracy revealed that even top Mormon historians, including the Church Archivist, were kept in the dark concerning the purchase of the 1825 letter:

Don Schmidt, retired LDS Church archivist, said members of the First Presidency didn’t tell him or church historians about the 1825 letter. Nor did they ask him or anyone in his department to authenticate the letter.

While Apostle Oaks is correct in stating that the letter was released before the bombings, he “conveniently omitted” (to use his own words) the fact that the letter was suppressed for 28 months and was only released after the press had been furnished with a copy! Mark Hofmann, on the other hand, has admitted that he sold the letter to President Hinckley as part of a blackmail-like scheme and that he broke his agreement with Hinckley by talking about it and by circulating a photocopy. Dallin Oaks asks if we are going to believe Mark Hofmann, “who is renown for his record of deceit” or the “General Authorities” of the church. Although we do not feel that we can put unconditional trust in Hofmann’s confession, in this particular case all the evidence seems to show that he is being forthright about the matter. It appears, in fact, that Apostle Oaks is trying to cover up what really happened with his smooth talk.

One of the documents which the Mormon Church obtained that has still not been released is the Thomas Bullock letter. Mark Hofmann testified:

MR. STOTT: I want to go back on that Brigham Young Letter. ... its dated January 27, 1865 from supposedly Thomas Bullock to Brigham Young. Are you familiar with that?

A Yes, I forged it, in fact.

Q Why did you create that document, and what did you do with it?

A I created it to give validity to the Joseph Smith, 3rd Blessing since it deals with the blessing. What I did with it, I gave it to President Hinkley.

Q What were the circumstances of your giving it to him?

A I made an appointment with him privately. I went in to his office and layed it on his desk. He expressed an interest in it and I left it there.

(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 309-311)

From what we can learn concerning this letter, Thomas Bullock accused Brigham Young of being the type of person who would destroy a document authored by Joseph Smith himself to protect his own position. The church kept this document locked safely away in a vault until prosecutors demanded access to the Hofmann documents. It has been suppressed for six years. Dallin Oaks tries to make it appear that the investigation into the murrers and forgeries prevented the Mormon Church from speaking about the Hofmann documents it had obtained:

During this same month of January, 1986, the Church turned all of its Hofmann-acquired documents over to the prosecutors, at their request. As a result, the Church could not make its Hofmann documents public to answer those innuendos of suppression without seeming to try to influence or impede the criminal investigation. ("Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents," pages 3-4)

We seriously doubt that the release of the contents of the documents which were taken by the prosecution could have affected justice in the Hofmann case, and it seems unreasonable to believe that the church would not retain photocopies of the items. Even if this were the case, this does not explain why church leaders suppressed the Thomas Bullock letter to Brigham Young for four and a half years before the bombings. Apostle Oaks boasts:

On April 11, 1986, after months of searching in its records and collections, the Church published a complete list of the 48 documents and the groups of court records then known to have been acquired from Mark Hofmann. (Ibid., page 4)

We suspect that the only reason church leaders published a list of documents was that they feared that the facts about these documents were about to be revealed at Hofmann’s preliminary hearing. Notice that the date given by Apostle Oaks was “April 11, 1986.” This was just a few days before the preliminary hearing began, but six months had elapsed since the bombings. Furthermore, the published description of the documents (see Deseret News, April 12, 1986) was obviously prepared by someone who was trying to prevent the controversial nature of the documents from becoming known. The description of the Bullock letter appears as item no. 48 and merely reveals that it is "concerning Bullock’s work in the Historical Department." This innocuous statement concerning the letter veils the fact that Bullock and Young were supposed to have been fighting over the possession of the Joseph Smith III Blessing document and that Bullock did not trust Young’s honesty. Apostle Oaks says that the “list spoke for itself. “ In reality, the descriptions published with the list tend to lull the reader to sleep rather than reveal the true nature of the documents.

With regard to the Salamander letter, Mark Hofmann indicates that he became nervous about approaching the church. He, therefore, allowed his friend, Lyn Jacobs, to pose as the owner of the letter:

Q Wasn’t his dealings mainly with the archivist?
A Yes.

Q Your dealings had actually been with some of the general authorities?
A Right.

Q Why did he believe he could get more than you then?
A My feeling was in offering it to the general authorities if I were to do it it would appear to be almost a blackmail type of attempt just because of the content of the letter and potential embarrassment to the Church, that I wanted to stay away from. He didn’t have any of those feelings as far as if he offended them.

Q Was there any concern on your part that this was maybe one too many documents for you to discover and let somebody else take the credit?
A Yes. That was also in my mind. Yes, I remember also thinking of that fact.

Q . . . . What was the purpose for coming up with the Salamander letter?
A Money. It’s a controversial type document, therefore it would be valuable and it was also, again somewhat of an experiment to see the Church’s reaction as far as, that always interested me.

Q Reaction in what way?
A As far as how they would handle it, if they would purchase it, if they would trust him enough, Lynn enough to keep his mouth shut. To enter into some sort of agreement to keep it confidential. If they would pay his exorbitant price he was demanding for it. . .

Q When you created the document was it your idea to sell it to the Church?
A Yes.

Q Did it surprise you when Lynn came back and said Hinkley wouldn’t buy it?
A No, not given the price that Lynn was asking for it.

Q Now with the Stoal Letter, you were aware that he bought the Stoal Letter and it pretty well had been publicized?
A That’s right.

Q Now, were you at all surprised that he refused to buy the Salamander Letter which was a very similar type document?
A No. Like I say, a lot of it was almost like an experiment, in my mind as far as what his reaction would be. Lynn doesn’t come across as being a faithful Mormon like I do.

Q You did?
A Or at least like I pretended to. I didn’t think that President Hinkley would trust his silence or that he would appreciate Lynn’s manner, or boastfulness or whatever. . .

A I speculate if I would have been the one to offer it that it would have had the same fate is [as?] the Stoal letter.
Q Would you have asked the same thing or different?
A I wouldn’t have asked for nearly the price.

Q Lynn comes back, it’s not sold. What do you do?
A . . . I believe it was the next day Don Schmidt knew about it from Lynn or the next day with Lynn’s meeting with President Hinckley and that morning I believe I told Don Schmidt that I could obtain complete control over it and would be willing to sell it to the Church for a price. I can’t remember, I would get 10 or 15 thousand dollars. Don Schmidt told me that he would check with his superiors.

That same afternoon, in a meeting with Don Schmidt again, he told me that he had talked with G. Homer Durham and I believe higher up, and that they would make that purchase. I told Don Schmidt that I believed that it could be handled confidentially and that Lynn could be sworn to secrecy. I told him that in the morning. Later . . . we had made contact with Steve Christensen and he had agreed to buy it and if, if we wanted to sell it— . . . I believe it was with the statement that if the Church would prefer we could see that it was sold to a faithful member of the Church. If they didn’t want—which I spoke very frankly with Don Schmidt about this but I didn’t talk to anyone higher up than Don Schmidt. That if the Church was afraid of the publicity of the document now that Lynn knew about it and possibly others, that we could arrange to have it sold to a faithful member who we thought would keep it quiet or handle it the way the Church thought would be appropriate but yet not having the Church officially making decisions.

Q Did he get back to you, Schmidt?
A After originally it was agreed the Church would make the purchase for the money that I asked, I can’t remember the exact sum. But then later . . . in talking with his superiors he told me that they thought it would, it might be more appropriate to have that happen to it as far as a faithful member making the purchase. I told him that I would keep him posted as far as the negotiation with this faithful member.

(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 471, 473-479)

In his testimony at the preliminary bearing, Lyn Jacobs said that he asked Gordon B. Hinckley to give him a gold coin valued at “60,000 to over 100,000 dollars” in exchange for the letter (see Tracking the White Salamander, page 162). When President Hinckley would not agree to that, he suggested a trade for a Book of Commandments. This offer was also turned down. Besides the high price which Jacobs asked, the fact that word concerning the 1825 Joseph Smith letter had leaked out may have discouraged Hinckley from trying to suppress the letter. He undoubtedly reasoned that if the church did purchase the Salamander letter, there would be no way to be certain that Jacobs would not talk about it or retain a photograph. An unsuccessful attempt to suppress the letter, of course, would be more damaging to the church than for the church to buy the letter and publish it to the world. Church leaders apparently did not feel that they could trust his silence,” and it was decided that Steven Christensen, who had a reputation of being friendly to the church leaders, should buy the letter for $40,000. In 1985 Christensen donated the letter to the Mormon Church.

If the church leaders had actually bought the letter to suppress it, they could have found themselves in a very compromising situation. While Mark Hofmann has testified that he originally created the Salamander letter to sell to the church, before Jacobs was sent to talk to President Hinckley, Hofmann had considered breaking the news about the letter in a major newspaper like the New York Times. During this time of uncertainty, Mr. Hofmann allowed H. Michael Marquardt to make a partial typescript of the Salamander letter. Hofmann testified as follows on pages 480-81:

Q Did there come a time you actually gave him a transcript of it?
A Yes, he made a transcript of it but I can’t remember the date when that would have been.

. . . .

Q Was your agreement with Steve Christensen and semi with the Church, something to the effect that, you know, it was going to be, the contents or even the idea that there was a letter would remain private with them?
A Yes.

. . . .

Q . . . Did you learn that there was some interest by other people in this?
A Let’s see. Now I think about it I think I did talk to Marquardt before it was offered to the Church or to Steve Christensen . . .

Mr. Marquardt allowed us to obtain a copy of his extracts from the Salamander letter, and it was these excerpts which were printed in the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger. The portions of the letter which Marquardt copied were, in fact, what led us to believe that the letter might be a forgery. As strange as it may seem, our publication of portions of the Salamander letter in March 1984 almost caused a serious altercation with Steven Christensen in federal court (see Tracking the White Salamander, page 16). Mr. Christensen was very upset that we had cited anything from the letter and apparently felt that we had obtained the extracts in an improper way. He, therefore, determined to testify against us in the Ehat suit—the case which we finally won after it was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court. In reality, Steven Christensen did not have any copyrightable interest in the Salamander letter. Furthermore, as we have shown, the extracts we published were obtained by Michael Marquardt directly from Mark Hofmann before Mr. Christensen purchased the letter. The extracts we printed certainly were not stolen. Although Christensen appeared in court ready to testify against us, the Judge felt this type of testimony was irrelevant to the case at hand and Christensen was unable to testify.

Steven Christensen seems to have been thoroughly converted to the Salamander letter. Instead of listening to the message of caution which we printed in the March 1984 issue of the Messenger, he wanted to fight us in court. He continued to believe in Mark Hofmann and his stories concerning the discovery of important Mormon documents for more than a year. Although he seems to have eventually come to the conclusion that Hofmann was involved in illegal activities, by this time it was too late. It was Christensen’s continued involvement with Hofmann which finally led to his untimely death.

After the Salamander letter was published in its entirety by the Mormon Church, the news media widely disseminated the story that Joseph Smith was involved in the occult. This publicity disturbed Mormon leaders. Apostle Oaks was very upset about the matter and on August 16, 1985, he accused the news media of “having a field day.” Since church leaders were very embarrassed by the publicity concerning the Salamander letter, this set up the climate for one of Hofmann’s greatest deceptions—his claim to have the so-called McLellin collection. Hofmann capitalized on the Mormon officials’ fear that the embarrassing documents in the McLellin collection would fall into the hands of the enemies of the church. We have already shown that in his confession Mark Hofmann testified that the McLellin collection never really existed. He also gave this testimony:

Q Let me ask you this: You say you approached President Hinkley directly. Is this before you were introduced to Pinock by Christensen?
A Yes.

MR. STOTT: Do you remember when you first talked to President Hinkley about this?
A President Hinkley, I told him that a person in Salt Lake had gone in with me on it, had put up the money for it. That I was anticipating being able to come up with the money from another source, which didn’t happen. That this other person was getting anxious to get his money out of it and that I might, and I was feeling him out as far as the possibility of getting money from the Church to make the purchase. We left it, after the meeting, we just left it at the point that if things got real desperate or if I needed to get some money to let him know.

Q Was there an idea here conveyed here that the collection would then be sold to the Church or donated to the Church?
A The idea was to prevent it from falling in to the enemy’s hands.

Q What did you tell him about what it contained and what the enemy was doing?
A Not too much. How can I put this?

MR. YENGICH: Put it honestly.
A Well, of course, I basically told him that I could tell him what my fears were concerning its getting in to the enemy’s hands, or whatever. And that I would, if he wanted to know, if he asked the questions or whatever, this was a previous technique or thing that we had done. I guess its almost a way of protecting him from knowing something he doesn’t want to know. And his interest wasn’t so much in having the Church obtain it as having it going someplace where—in fact, I would almost say he almost didn’t want the Church to obtain it, he just wanted to make sure it did not fall in to the enemy’s, hands which was good since I knew I didn’t have it, I knew the Church couldn’t obtain it.

Q Did you tell him there was controversial items?
A Yes.

Q Wasn’t that a problem that Al Rust was saying that, you know, I understand the Church has it and, of course, the Church knew they didn’t have it?
A Yes, no, that didn’t raise a problem in my mind because I knew that Hinkley knew that I was protecting the collection from Rust and anyone else as far as where it was. He knew I had previously told him that I had the material in a safe deposit box in Salt Lake City and that.

See, Hinkley, his concern was that if this disgruntled investor, he wanted to make sure he didn’t reach the point where he would make public or try to obtain the collection.

Q What was in your mind. Because you didn’t have a collection?
A What was in my mind is President Hinkley would be happy if eventually I could tell him that I had seen to it that the document would not fall in to the wrong hands. My speaking with Hinkley, like I said wasn’t so much—, see you have to remember that this was after the time of the Salamander Letter and the Church was a little bit concerned as far as its public relations in what they were obtaining, if they were trying to buy up embarrassing documents or whatever. He wasn’t so concerned, especially when he found out other people knew about this material, to actually obtain it, as to just see the right people got it. . .

Q The last day or so in June, how many times did you meet with President Hinkley abut the McLellin Collection?
A Altogether?

Q . . . in the last week of June?
A I would guess three times.
Q After meeting with Pinock and up to the bombings, how many times did you meet with President Hinkley about the McClellin Collection?
A I believe once or twice/
(Hofmann’s Confession, pages 527-529, 531, 533 and 534)

In a Mormon Church press conference, held October 23, 1985, Apostle Dallin Oaks revealed that through the influence of Hugh Pinnock, a General Authority in the Mormon Church, Mark Hofmann obtained a loan for $185,000 to obtain the McLellin collection:

In late June, Mark Hofmann and Steve Christensen told Elder Pinnock that Hofmann had an option to buy the McLellin collection from a man in Texas for about $185,000. . .

Elder Pinnock asked me if I thought the church would loan Mark Hofmann $185,000 for this purpose. I said, emphatically not. President Hinckley was in Europe at the time of this conversation. No one else could or would approve such a transaction. . . We discussed whether the church would be interested in receiving the collection as a gift. It was my judgment that the church probably would at some future time, . . . Elder Pinnock inquired whether it would be appropriate to put him in touch with banking officials. I said I saw no harm in that provided it was clearly understood by all parties that the church was not a party or a guarantor and that Hugh Pinnock was not a party or a guarantor to such a loan. . . The bank made the loan to Hofmann. . . The loan came due and it was not paid by Hofmann. . . Elder Pinnock mentioned at that time that he knew of at least two individuals who might be interested in purchasing the collection. . .

I was later informed that a buyer was interested but he wanted to remain anonymous. . . the potential buyer phoned me. . . He also asked whether the church would be interested in receiving it as a gift at some future time if he purchased it and later saw fit to give it. I said I supposed so, . . . (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27,1985)

During the press conference, Apostle Oaks was asked the name of the potential buyer, but he refused to reveal his name, stating only that “he is person who is a member of the church” (Ibid.). At Hofmann’s preliminary hearing, Hugh Pinnock had to reveal that the name of the anonymous buyer was “David Sorenson” and that “He’s a mission president in Nova Scotia, Canada” (Tracking the White Salamander, page 42). The evidence seems to clearly show that the Mormon leaders were trying to get someone to temporarily keep the collection from falling into the hands of the “enemy” until talk about it died down. Then it could be secretly donated to the church. Steven Christensen, who was to authenticate the collection, became aware that Hofmann was a “crook” and threatened him with the possibility that he would go to jail and never be able to deal with the Mormon Church again. These threats undoubtedly led to Christensen’s death.

If church leaders had not continued to engage in secret dealings with Hofmann, they would not find themselves in the embarrassing situation they are in today. Hugh Pinnock claimed that he was not “legally obligated” to repay the bank loan, but he felt morally responsible and paid off the loan with his own money. Apostle Dallin Oaks found himself meeting with Hofmann after the murders:

. . . just before 3 p.m., Mark Hofmann . . . came to my office and said he thought the police would question him. What should he say when they questioned him? And I said, “You should simply tell them the truth. You don’t have any reason to believe that this bombing has anything to do with you, do you? And simply tell them the truth.” And then, when he seemed to be questioning whether we should tell them about the McLellin collection, I said, “Look. That’s been handled on a confidential basis, but there’s a murder investigation under way. You should tell the police everything you know and answer every question—and I intend to do the same.” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 27, 1985)

Apostle Oaks’ statement to Hofmann that the McLellin transaction had “been handled on a confidential basis” seems to show that he was involved in trying to keep the material out of the hands of the “enemy.”

Long before Dallin Oaks became a General Authority, the Mormon leaders were suppressing documents. For instance, in a book written in 1945, Fawn Brodie revealed:

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., the present historian of the Utah Church, asserted to me in 1943 that a revelation foreshadowing polygamy had been written in 1831, but that it had never been published. In conformity with the church policy, however, he would not permit the manuscript, which he acknowledged to be in possession of the church library, to be examined. (No Man Knows My History, page 184, footnote)
Although it was often spoken of by church leaders, this revelation was never revealed to the world until a photocopy leaked out from the Church Historical Department. We were the first to publish it in 1974 (see Salt Lake City Messenger, May 1974). The reason it was suppressed was that Joseph Smith recommended that the Mormon elders marry Indians to make their posterity “become white, delightsome and just, . . .” Prior to 1965 the Mormon leaders maintained that Joseph Smith gave only one story of his First Vision. That year, however, it was discovered that he had written an account that had been suppressed which did not include God the Father in the vision. We published this account to the world, and although the church kept silent about the matter for some time, our publication of this “Strange Account” was finally vindicated by a photograph of the document in Brigham Young University Studies (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 145-46). Other examples of important documents which were suppressed by Mormon authorities could be cited, but this should be sufficient to convince the reader that suppression has been a very important principle in the Mormon Church for many years.

Although Dallin Oaks appears to be very indignant that the news media would accuse the Mormon Church of buying up documents to suppress them, he does admit that “the Church closes or restricts access to certain documentary materials” when the donor “has directed that access be restricted or prohibited for a certain period” or when “materials are written or statements are made with the understanding that the communication will not be available to the public for a certain period of time” and then goes on to state: “The laws and ethics of privacy forbid custodians from revealing information that may invade the privacy of living individuals.” Although this might seem quite reasonable, Apostle Oaks carries the matter much further by setting forth a principle which would allow the Mormon Church to suppress any material that would be embarrassing to the church: “In addition, our belief in life after death causes us to extend this principle to respect the privacy of persons who have left mortality but live beyond the veil. Descendants who expect future reunions with deceased ancestors have a continuing interest in their ancestors’ privacy and good name” (“Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents,” page 7). This must have been the rationale that church leaders used when they hid the 1825 letter of Joseph Smith from their own people. They undoubtedly reasoned that since it would hurt Joseph Smith’s “good name” and disturb the Mormon people to have a letter come to light which revealed his involvement in the occult, it would be best to keep it locked away in a vault. This same type of reasoning could be used to suppress the Bible. Would Noah want his descendants to know that he got drunk on wine, or would Lot want his incest revealed? The same might be said of David’s adultery or the account of Peter denying the Lord.

Instead of upbraiding the news media for accusing the Mormon Church of trying to suppress documents, Apostle Oaks should admit the obvious truth: the suppression of material plays a very important role in the church. During the past few years church leaders have become extremely concerned about embarrassing information leaking out. This has greatly hindered the research of some of the church’s top scholars. Professor Ronald W. Walker, who has been working on a book about President Heber J. Grant, wrote the following: “Because current LDS archival policy limits the access and use of materials, particularly those of the presidents of the church, I have been unable to verify many of my footnote citations” (Journal of Mormon History, vol.13, 1986-87, page 38, footnote 1). It is interesting to note that although President Grant has been dead for 42 years, one of the most respected scholars in the church is denied access to his papers.

REVELATION MISSING

Apostle Dallin Oaks has lambasted the news media for the way they handled the news concerning Hofmann’s discoveries and crimes. He attacked by name the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, the London Times, the Salt Lake Tribune and Time magazine. He lashed out against the media for “Mormon-bashing,” the use of “speculation and innuendo,” “character assassination,” and “religious prejudice.” He accused the Los Angeles Times of “stone-walling,” “perpetrating a coverup” and “concealing the truth from its readers.” He specifically singled out John Dart who interviewed Mark Hofmann on the Oliver Cowdery history and did not later reveal that Hofmann was the source because he had given him a promise of confidentiality. In answer to Dallin Oaks’ charge against Dart and the Los Angeles Times, Dawn Tracy reported the following:

Times religion writer John Dart said he asked Hofmann repeatedly though his lawyer to be released from his promise, an assertion confirmed by Hofmann’s attorney Bradley Rich.

“Dart was caught in the middle,” said Mr. Rich.

“He tried. He really tried.” . . .
Mr. Dart said he believed Hofmann’s story because experts had authenticated Hofmann’s documents and church leaders themselves were buying them. And in at least one instance, he said, church officials first denied and then admitted to having a Hofmann document: a now-known forged letter that had Smith digging for money. (Salt Lake Tribune, August 17, 1987)

While Oaks tries to vilify John Dart and the Los Angeles Times for unfair reporting, it should be remembered that Dart was the very first newspaper reporter to write concerning the “Tanners’ suggestion of forgery” (Times, August 25, 1984). It is also interesting to note that the Times for August 8, 1987, revealed that one of the reasons that Mark Hofmann was interviewed concerning the Cowdery History was that “at the time Hofmann was regarded as reliable by top Mormon officials.”

It seems that Apostle Oaks is venting his wrath on the news media in an attempt to draw away attention from the mistakes that he and other Mormon leaders made with regard to Mr. Hofmann. He apparently believes that church leaders should not be criticized for their mistakes. In his speech at the “1985 CES Doctrine and Covenants Symposium,” delivered just two months before the bombings, Oaks warned:

Criticism is particularly objectionable when it is directed toward Church authorities, general or local. . . . Evil-speaking of the Lord’s anointed is in a class by itself. It is one thing to depreciate a person who exercises corporate power or even government power. It is quite another thing to criticize or depreciate a person for the performance of an office to which he or she has been called of God. It does not matter that the criticism is true. . . . David recognized that we are never justified in any gesture or act against the Lord’s anointed. . . . The Holy Ghost will not guide or confirm criticism of the Lord’s anointed, or of Church leaders, local or general. (pages 24-25)

On August 6, 1987, Apostle Oaks asserted:

We now know that Mark Hofmann was adept at planting lies to discredit the Church and that many organizations and persons have been his willing or unwitting accomplices in that effort. . . . Everyone who believed and repeated his lies and used his forged documents was at best an unwitting servant of his efforts to discredit the Church. (“Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents,” pages 15 and 24)

This is certainly a strange statement to be coming from a church official. The church itself printed the text of both the 1825 Joseph Smith letter and the Salamander letter in its own newspaper, the Deseret News (see the Church Section under the dates of April 28 and May 12, 1985). The publication of both of these letters was authorized by the First Presidency of the Mormon Church. Using Dallin Oaks’ logic, we would have to conclude that since the church itself printed “his forged documents,” it was “at best an unwitting servant of his efforts to discredit” Mormonism. That a church which is supposed to be led by direct revelation from God Himself would be an “unwitting servant” to Mark Hofmann’s forgery scheme presents a serious problem to anyone who believes in its divine authenticity.

In his speech, Dallin Oaks spoke of “the caution expressed by Church leaders during a succession of documents discoveries, . . .” Although it is true that by August 16, 1985, Oaks was telling Mormon instructors “to be cautious” about some “newly discovered documents,” he turned right around and tried to ease their fears with regard to the contents of the Salamander letter. He claimed that the words “white salamander” could be reconciled with Joseph Smith’s statement about the appearance of the Angel Moroni:

Another source of differences in the accounts of different witnesses is the different meanings that different persons attach to words. We have a vivid illustration of this in the recent media excitement about the world “salamander” in a letter Martin Harris is supposed to have sent to W.W. Phelps over 150 years ago. All of the scores of media stories on that subject apparently assume that the author of that letter used the word “salamander” in the modern sense of a “tailed amphibian.”

One wonders why so many writers neglected to reveal to their readers that there is another meaning of “salamander,” which may even have been the primary meaning in this context in the 1820s. . . . That meaning is “a mythical being thought to be able to live in fire.” . . .

A being that is able to live in fire is a good approximation of the description Joseph Smith gave of the Angel Moroni: . . . the use of the words white salamander and old spirit seem understandable.

In view of all this, and as a matter of intellectual evaluation, why all the excitement in the media, and why the apparent hand-wringing among those who profess friendship or membership in the Church? (“1985 CES Doctrine and Covenants Symposium,” pages 22-23)

Dallin Oaks’ conjecture concerning the real meaning of the word “salamander” certainly shows the lengths Mormon apologists will go to try and explain away anything that challenges Mormonism. Oaks would have us believe that the news media suppressed the true meaning of the word. Actually, the news media claimed that the context of the letter showed that the “salamander” mentioned there referred to one of the “elemental spirits” of magic. The confession of Mark Hofmann makes it clear that Oaks was way off base and that reporters were right all along. Speaking of the word “salamander,” Hofmann said:

At the time I chose it only because it was commonly used in folk magic. I didn’t realize until later all the implications other people would associate with it as far as being able to dwell in fire. (Hofmann’s Confession, page 441)

While it may be hard for some to understand why Apostle Oaks is so upset with the news media, those who have seriously studied Mormonism know that he is fighting desperately to save the concept that the church is run by revelation. The Apostle Bruce R. McConkie made these claims concerning revelation in the church:

Our Lord’s true Church is established and founded upon revelation. Its identity as the true Church continues as long as revelation is received to direct its affairs. . . . without revelation there would be no legal administrators to perform the ordinances of salvation with binding effect on earth and in heaven. . . . Since The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the Lord’s true Church; and since the Lord’s Church must be guided by continuous revelation if it is to maintain divine approval; . . . we could safely conclude . . . that the Church today is guided by revelation. . . . the Spirit is giving direct and daily revelation to the presiding Brethren in the administration of the affairs of the Church. . . . The presence of revelation in the Church is positive proof that it is the kingdom of God on earth. . . . For those who reject these revelations there awaits the damnation of hell. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, pages 646, 647 and 650)

Apostle McConkie also stated: “Members of the First Presidency, Council of the Twelve, and the Patriarch to the Church—because they are appointed and sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators to the Church—are known as the living oracles” (Ibid., page 547) Mark Hofmann has put the claim of revelation in the church to the acid test and found that the so-called “living oracles” are just as fallible as other men. Apostle Oaks and the other Mormon leaders find themselves in a very embarrassing position. At a time when revelation was really needed, they seemed to be completely oblivious to what was going on. Not only did they fail to forsee the threat to the church through revelation, but they ignored the many warnings which appeared in the Salt Lake City Messenger—a publication which they feel is printed by “apostates” or “anti-Mormons.” Robert Lindsey wrote the following:

In a newsletter that he publishes with his wife, Sandra, Mr. Tanner began raising questions about their authenticity, in some cases comparing the texts with known Mormon writings.

But if senior Mormon officials were aware of his warnings, they apparently paid little attention. Several of the church’s highest officials have acknowledged negotiating to acquire documents from Mr. Hofmann until the day of the first two bombings. (New York Times, February 16, 1986)

Apostle Dallin Oaks tried to explain the complete failure of the church’s revelation system in the following manner:

B. Some have asked, how was Mark Hofmann able to deceive Church leaders?

As everyone now knows, Hofmann succeeded in deceiving many: experienced Church historians, sophisticated collectors, businessmen-investors, a lie detector test and analysis by national experts, and professional document examiners. . . . But why, some still ask, were his deceits not detected by the several Church leaders with whom he met?

In order to perform their personal ministries, Church leaders cannot be suspicious and questioning of each of the hundreds of people they meet each year. Ministers of the gospel function best in an atmosphere of trust and love. In that kind of atmosphere, they fail to detect a few deceivers they meet, but that is the price they pay to increase their effectiveness in counseling, comforting, and blessing the hundreds of honest and sincere people they see. (“Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents,” pages 10-11)

Apostle Oaks has not really answered the question. Mr. Hofmann was not meeting with church leaders for “counseling, comforting, and blessing.” He was meeting with them for the express purpose of deceiving them so that they would give him large amounts of money in exchange for his fraudulent documents. Furthermore, he had many visits with high Mormon officials. These meetings went on for years, yet church leaders could not discern the wicked plan that Hofmann had in his heart. While the Mormon leaders claim to have the same powers as the ancient Apostles in the Bible, their performance with regard to Mark Hofmann certainly does not match up to that of the Apostle Peter when he caught Ananias and Sapphira redhanded in their attempt to deceive the church with regard to a financial transaction:

But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? (Acts 5:3)
The Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie claimed that church leaders did have the gift of discernment:

... the gift of the discerning of spirits is poured out upon presiding officials in God’s kingdom; they have it given to them to discern all gifts and all spirits, lest any come among the saints and practice deception. ... There is no perfect operation of the power of discernment without revelation. Thereby even “the thoughts and intents of the heart” are made known. ... Where the saints are concerned ... the Lord expects them to discern, not only between the righteous and the wicked, but between false and true philosophies, educational theories, sciences, political concepts, and social schemes. (Mormon Doctrine, page 197)

The Book of Mormon has stories of how the servants of God used the gift of discernment in ancient America. For instance, in the book of Alma we read how Amulek “silenced Zeezrom, for he beheld that Amulek had caught him in his lying and deceiving, ...” (Alma 12:1). After Zeezrom began to tremble, Amulek informed him concerning the gift of discernment:

Now Zeezrom, seeing that thou has been taken in thy lying and craftiness, for thou has not lied unto men only but thou hast lied unto God; for behold, he knows all thy thoughts, and thou seest that thy thoughts are made known unto us by his Spirit.

And thou seest that we know that thy plan was a very subtle plan, as to the subtility of the devil. ... Now when Alma had spoken these words, Zeezrom began to tremble more exceedingly, for he was convinced more and more of the power of God; and he was also convinced that Alma and Amulek had a knowledge of him, for he was convinced that they knew the thoughts and intents of his heart; for power was given unto them that they might know of these things according to the spirit of prophecy. (Alma 12:3, 4 and 7)

In Heleman 9:25-41 we read how a prophet named Nephi revealed by the power of God that Seantum was the one who murdered his brother Seezoram. He told the people that they would “find blood upon the skirts of his cloak.” When Seantum was examined it was found that the words which Nephi said “were true” and “he did confess.” Some of the people then felt that “Nephi was a prophet” and others said “he is a god, for except he was a god he could not know of all things. For behold, he has told us the thoughts of our hearts, ... and even he has brought unto our knowledge the true murderer of our chiefjudge.”

It is interesting to note that the Prophet Joseph Smith claimed that God Himself warned him of a plan by his enemies to discredit him through forgery. When Smith was in the process of “translating” the Book of Mormon, he allowed Martin Harris to take the first 116 pages of the manuscript and these pages were lost. The pages were never recovered, but according to Joseph Smith he was warned in a revelation that the pages had been altered by his enemies:

And, behold, Satan hath put it into their hearts to alter the words which you have caused to be written, or which you have translated, ... I say unto you, that because they have altered the words, they read contrary from that which you translated and caused to be written; ... on this wise, the devil has sought to lay a cunning plan, that he may destroy this work; ... I say unto you, that I will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil design in this thing. ... yea, I will show unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the devil. (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 10, verses 10-12,14 and 43)

It would seem that if the same powers were functioning in the church today, the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” would have received a revelation warning him concerning Mark Hofmann’s “cunning plan” to defraud and disgrace the church. Spencer W. Kimball, who was President of the Mormon Church at the time Hofmann first began deceiving church leaders, was supposed to be a “seer” and have the power to “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8:13). The Book of Mormon also says:

... a seer is greater than a prophet ... a seer is a revelator and a prophet also; and a gift which is greater can no man have ... a seer can know of things which are past, and also of things which are to come, and by them shall all things be revealed, or, rather, shall secret things be made manifest, and hidden things shall come to light, ... (Mosiah 8:15-17)

When Mark Hofmann brought the Anthon transcript to the church leaders, President Kimball was unable to translate the characters supposed to have been copied from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Instead of using the “seer stone,” he examined the characters which appear on the transcript with a magnifying glass. Not only did he fail to provide a translation, but he was unable to detect that the Church was being set up to be defrauded of a large amount of money and many historical items out of its archives. Moreover, he entirely failed to see the devastating and embarrassing effect this transaction and others which followed would have on the Mormon Church. If ever revelation from the Lord was needed, it was on that day in 1980 when Mark Hofmann stood in the presence of President Kimball.
As President Kimball got older, he became less able to function and President Gordon B. Hinckley took over many of his responsibilities and became to all appearances the acting president of the church. Hinckley, who stood with President Kimball in the 1980 photograph, was deceived on a number of occasions by Mr. Hofmann. He, together with Apostle Boyd K. Packer (also shown in the picture), approved many of the deals the Church made with Hofmann.

It appears that if the Mormon Church was ever led by revelation, it has been lacking since Mark Hofmann came into the Church offices with the Anthon transcript. The inability of the Mormon leaders to detect the religious fraud perpetrated upon them raises the question as to their testimony with regard to the Book of Mormon. After all, if they could not determine that Hofmann’s documents—which were only 150 years old—were forgeries, how can we trust their judgment with regard to a record which is supposed to be ten times as old? They have seen and inspected Mark Hofmann’s documents, but they have never seen the gold plates the Book of Mormon was translated from. When it comes right down to it, the Book of Mormon reminds us a great deal of Hofmann’s documents. It shows signs of plagiarism and has absolutely no provenance. No one ever saw it before it showed up in Joseph Smith’s hands, and it was never quoted in any ancient record.

The reader will remember that Apostle McConkie maintained that “the Spirit is giving direct and daily revelation to the presiding Brethren in the administration of the affairs of the Church.” One would think that if such revelation was in operation, Mark Hofmann would have been exposed years before the bombings. With regard to the inability of the Mormon leaders to detect that the Hofmann documents were fraudulent, a person might try to argue that these documents were not really important spiritual writings, and therefore the Lord did not see fit to intervene when the General Authorities examined them. The truth of the matter, however, is that they contain extremely important material directly relating to spiritual affairs. The Salamander letter, for example, changes the story of the Angel Moroni appearing to Joseph Smith to that of a cantankerous and tricky “old spirit” who transforms himself from a white salamander and strikes Joseph Smith. Moreover, some of the purported Joseph Smith writings which Hofmann sold to the Church contain revelations from the Lord Himself. For instance, the Joseph Smith III Blessing document gives this message from the Lord: “Verily, thus saith the Lord: if he abides in me, his days shall be lengthened upon the earth, but, if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant, unto myself.” The 1838 letter of Joseph Smith to his brother, Hyrum, is in its entirety a revelation purporting to come from the Lord. It begins with the words, “Verily thus Saith the Lord,” and ends with the word “Amen.” The fact that the Mormon leaders were unable to recognize the spurious nature of these revelations casts doubt upon their ability to discern the truthfulness of the other revelations given by Joseph Smith. It has always been claimed that it is virtually impossible for a person to write a revelation that would compare with Joseph Smith’s. It now appears, however, that there is someone who can write revelations comparable to Joseph Smith’s and that it is even possible to get them past the scrutiny of the highest leadership of the Mormon Church.

The more we learn about the scope of Mark Hofmann’s subtle plan to deceive the Mormon leaders, the more obvious it becomes that the church is not led by revelation. He, in fact, had church officials so hoodwinked that they allowed him special access to documents that are ordinarily hard to get access to. As early as September 28, 1982, the Seventh East Press reported that since the discovery of the Anthon transcript Hofmann has “enjoyed privileged access to otherwise restricted Church archive material, including the First Presidency’s vault. One reason for this privileged access, Hofmann thinks, is the fact that ‘I am not a historian. I’m not going to write an expose of Mormonism.’” In his confession Hofmann reveals how Earl Olsen granted him the privilege of looking at a document he seems to have used in writing the Joseph Smith III Blessing. Hofmann claims that Olsen “was saying about how I had done so much for the Church, referring to the Anthon Transcript, that ordinarily he wouldn’t do it but he did, . . . (Hofmann’s Confession, page 141). Mr. Hofmann also testified that he even “saw some materials from the First Presidency’s vault . . .” (Ibid., page 453). Hofmann seems to have used his special privileges with regard to church documents to create new forgeries to palm off on unsuspecting church leaders. It would be hard to conceive of a more pernicious scheme. That the Mormon leaders were unable to detect his iniquity even though they met with him from 1980 to 1985 seems to completely destroy their claim to special revelation. Mr. Hofmann believed that his “discoveries” would tend to liberalize the Mormon Church as scholars and church leaders came to accept them, and there is little doubt that this has turned out to be the case. Now that the documents have been exposed as forgeries, historians have suffered some loss of credibility with the average member of the church. This would probably tend to greatly strengthen the orthodox position in the church if it were not for another factor—i.e., the loss of credibility that the Mormon leaders have suffered. It is possible, in fact, that the exposure of Hofmann’s documents as forgeries could do more harm to the Church in the long run than if the documents were proven authentic.

Although Apostle Dallin Oaks would have us believe that “Criticism is particularly objectionable when it is directed toward Church authorities,” there seems to be no way to get around the fact that they must bear a great deal of the responsibility in the Hofmann affair. If they had been open and forthright about historical documents, Mr. Hofmann would not have approached them with his blackmail-like documents with the idea of obtaining large amounts of money. That Mark Hofmann knew they were suppressing important church documents and were anxious to keep any embarrassing from falling into the hands of church critics set the stage for the tragic events which followed. While Mormon scholars have been blamed for not being more careful, it is the General Authorities of the church who are primarily responsible. For the most part Mormon scholars want an open history and would not have an interest in buying up documents to hide them. We feel that the scholars were honestly trying to learn the truth about the documents. They made no special claims of infallibility. The church leaders, on the other band, who claimed to have special powers of revelation, played into Hofmann’s hands time after time. It appears, in fact, that if it had not been for the suppressive policy of the church, its leaders could have brought Mr. Hofmann’s career to an end long before the bombings.

Fourteen months before the murders we had noted that Hofmann’s career to an end long before the bombings. Authorities of the church who are primarily responsible. For the most part Mormon scholars want an open history and would not have an interest in buying up documents to hide them. We feel that the scholars were honestly trying to learn the truth about the documents. They made no special claims of infallibility. The church leaders, on the other band, who claimed to have special powers of revelation, played into Hofmann’s hands time after time. It appears, in fact, that if it had not been for the suppressive policy of the church, its leaders could have brought Mr. Hofmann’s career to an end long before the bombings.

In his confession, Mark Hofmann testified that he had found a notary who did not require identification and that he himself had forged the affidavit:

Q Was it signed in front of him?
A Yes, I signed it right there.
Q You signed it?
A I signed Alan Bullock’s name.
(Hofmann’s Confession, page 170)

Investigators learned that the name Allen Lee Bullock actually came from a genealogical record of the Bullock family, but Mr. Bullock had not signed the document. In fact, he never had the Blessing Document and had never even met Mark Hofmann. We suspect that Hofmann must have told church officials that he might be able to obtain the embarrassing records concerning Brigham Young for the church from Allen Lee Bullock if they did not bother Mr. Bullock. The reason that church officials asked RLDS Church Historian Richard Howard not to contact Bullock must have been that they wanted to keep these records suppressed from the public. If church leaders had not continued to suppress the name Allen Lee Bullock, we would have been able to contact him a year before the bombings and discover that the affidavit attributed to him was a forgery. This, of course, would have been the type of hard evidence we were looking for which could have led to Hofmann’s arrest and conviction for forgery. If this had occurred, there would have been no McLellin deception, Hugh Pinnock would never have helped Hofmann obtain the loan for $185,000 and Steven Christensen and Kathleen Sheets would probably be alive today. This whole series of tragic events seems to destroy the claim that the Mormon Church is led by revelation. It appears, in fact, that church leaders are more concerned about protecting the image of the church than they are about being forthright with their people.
THE MURDERS

As we indicated earlier, the Salt Lake County Attorney’s Office terminated the discussions with Mark Hofmann when Mr. Hofmann refused to talk if Detective Jim Bell was going to be present. While this is disappointing, the confession which has been released contains a summary of what Hofmann told prosecutors before the plea bargain was finalized. We quote the following from that supplement to the transcripts:

Mark Hofmann . . . said he was extremely knowledgeable in the manufacture of black gunpowder.

. . .

A few months before the October bombings, Hofmann asked Shannon Flynn, a friend, to obtain some blasting caps for him. Hofmann wanted to make a bomb out of nitrate fertilizer and diesel oil. . . . Hofmann threw them away sometime before October, 1985 . . .

Hofmann didn’t remember for sure, but thought that he might have purchased some books on bombs at a gun show that he and Flynn had attended. The idea for the nails packed around the Christensen bomb came from one of the books. Its purpose was to increase the possibility of death . . .

Mark Hofmann then related the following information about the bombings of October 15 and 16, 1985: He knew he was going to make two bombs to kill two people, but at first he wasn’t sure who the victims would be. . . . First he thought that one of the bombs would kill either Thomas Wilding or Brent Ashworth and the second bomb would kill himself. Then he thought that possibly the bombs should be for Steve Christensen and Thomas Wilding, and finally he thought about killing Thomas Wilding and Brent Ashworth with the two bombs. Hofmann stated that it wasn’t until the morning of the 15th of October when he made the bombs that he settled on the actual targets.

On October 5th he made two trips to the Radio Shack at the Cottonwood Mall. On the first trip, he purchased a mercury switch and a D size battery pack. . . . With each visit to Radio Shack, he used the name Mike Hansen. Hofmann thought that he had used the alias “Mike Hansen” as early as 1978. . . . He used the alias in 1979 at the University of Utah Special Collections Library. He also used it at the LDS Church Archives, the Utah State University Archives Special Collections, and the New York Public Library. . . . In Utah he used it at Debouzek, Utah Engraving, Salt Lake Stamp, and at BYU . . .

The end pipe caps, nails and gunpowder were purchased at Allied . . .

After purchasing the bomb components, Hofmann returned home and placed the materials on a blanket in his downstairs den. This was the same room in which he performed his forgery work. . . .

On October 10, 1985, Hofmann went to an area . . . near Grantsville to test fire the bomb components . . . He wasn’t able to perform the test because there was too much snow and mud . . . October 11, he returned to test once more. Into a 1/2 inch pipe . . . he placed gunpowder and a rocket igniter. He connected the wire of the rocket igniter to a 50 foot extension cord, walked back to a small gully, and connected the extension cord to a battery pack. The bomb exploded. He then knew if he were to make a bomb of twice that size he would be able to kill someone with it . . . on October 11, 1985, he felt that it was still going to be Thomas Wilding. Hofmann said he wanted to kill him . . .

On . . . October 14, Hofmann . . . visited with his wife for a little while and then she went to bed. He went into his downstairs room and constructed the bombs. . . . It didn’t take long, probably 2 hours or less to construct the two bombs. . . . He made small holes in the boxes with an ice pick. He threaded the wires from the pipe bombs through the holes and taped them separately onto the outside of the box. Then, if the packages were tipped, the mercury in the switch would complete the circuit and the bombs would explode . . .

He finished the assembling of the bomb packages by writing the names Steve Christensen and Gary Sheets on the packages. He didn’t know Sheets’ address so he looked it up in the phone directory. He underlined Sheets’ address in the directory with the same magic marker that he used to write the names on the boxes . . .

Hofmann stated that it was while constructing the bombs that he finally decided for whom the bombs were intended. He said he wasn’t rational at the time, but decided that Steve Christensen would have to be killed so that the McLellin transaction would not take place . . . The second bomb, with the name Gary Sheets on it, was simply a diversion so that everyone would believe the bombings were the result of CFS business problems.

Hofmann said the thing that attracted him to bombs as a means of killing was that he didn’t have to be there at the time of the killings. He didn’t think he could pull the trigger on someone if he faced them, but he could do it if he didn’t have to be around. . . .

Sometime after 2:45 a.m., Hofmann placed the two bombs and two bags into his van and left for the Sheets’ residence . . . He placed the bomb about five feet from the garage door thinking that a car leaving the area would hit it . . .
Hofmann returned to his house around 3:30 a.m. While he was still downstairs his daughter awoke. His wife, who was upstairs, asked him to take care of the little girl.

Sometime between 6:00 and 6:30 a.m. that morning he went to the Judge Building to deliver the second bomb. He got into the elevator with Hal Passey and Hal’s father. He walked directly to Steve Christensen’s office and placed the bomb package inside the door jam.

Hofmann said the third bomb, the one on October 16, 1985 that exploded in his car, was a suicide attempt. He said he was distraught over the killings the day before. He thought that he deserved death, and it would be the best thing for his family. He also admitted that he had placed a number of inconsequential papers in the car so that people would think that the McLellin Collection, which did not exist, was blown up in the explosion and fire.

On the 16th of October, Hofmann went to Logan to purchase the bomb parts for the third bomb. Hofmann used the name Bill Edwards at Radio Shack in Logan. Hofmann then went up into Logan Canyon and prepared the bomb. He then drove down to Salt Lake. The bomb was in a paper sack on the passenger seat. He put it on the driver’s seat, touched the two wires together, and the bomb exploded.

(Hofmann’s Confession, pages SS-1-12)

Those who are interested in this subject will probably want to read the entire account in our photographic printing of the confession. In the transcript itself, Hofmann does make some comments concerning the murders. On pages 279-280, we find the following:

Q . . . if the American Antiquarian Society had been able to and did vote to purchase your Oath on October 15, 1985 for about a million dollars, what would that have done to the financial hole that you dug yourself into by that time?

A It would have relieved me from it. Hence, I guess you want me to say the bombings would not have taken place.

Q I don’t want you to say that unless it is true.

A I’ll say it since its true.

On page 411 of the transcripts Mark Hofmann said that he would later talk of his “rationalization for the homicides.” Further on in the transcript Mr. Hofmann admitted he made the bombs. His statements seem to agree with the summary of earlier interviews with him:

A Yes, well again this gets into rationalization for the bombs. All along, of course, until the evening that I made them, I didn’t really think that I would end up using them. At least to take a life.

MR. BIGGS: Why is that?

A My rationalization was that I would prepare myself or have that at my disposal but that things would work out. Now, remember, I think we went in to this before, that my thinking was at that time that my life would be taken. In other words, that it would be a suicide attempt. Although, like I say, it was half a joke. Well, joke is not a good word, but it was more thinking that I have the parts, more of a way out, than actually saying to myself when I purchased the parts, this is what I’m going to use them for, these are the people I’m going to take out. None of that was in my mind at that time. As far as the idea of Mrs. Sheets, it hadn’t even entered my mind yet. Who was going to be taken out with me was up in the air, if anyone was to be. (Hofmann’s Confession, page 424)

According to an article by Dawn Tracy, Mark Hofmann may have been thinking of murder at least five months prior to the killings:

And a longtime boyhood friend has told The Tribune that Hofmann discussed ways of killing people with him five months before the bombing deaths . . .

The friend said the two talked about circumstances that would induce someone to kill. Hofmann and his friend then discussed different ways of killing; using a shotgun because Hofmann believed it would be impossible to trace, or planting bombs, according to the friend. (Salt Lake Tribune, March 21, 1987)

It now appears that anyone who posed a threat to Mr. Hofmann’s Mormon document empire may have been in danger of being put to death. Since we had been publishing material which was very critical of Hofmann’s “discoveries” for nineteen months prior to the bombings and publicly calling for people to tell us anything they might know about his dealings, we feel very fortunate to be alive. We had two face to face confrontations with Mr. Hofmann regarding his documents. The first was on August 22, 1984, when he came to our home and talked with Sandra. He seemed very distressed and hurt that we, of all people, would question his discoveries. He had expected that opposition might come from those in the church, but he was shocked that Utah Lighthouse Ministry had taken a position which was critical of his documents. Mr. Hofmann appeared to be almost to the point of tears as he pled his case as to why we should trust him.
In the year that followed we continued to publish material that was critical of Hofmann’s discoveries, and finally on August 24, 1985, we confronted him at the Sunstone Symposium. At that time we questioned him closely with regard to the origin of the Salamander letter. Unfortunately, his answers did not seem to square with the facts we already knew and it must have become obvious to him that we did not believe what he was saying. At one point, he had a very sad and worried expression on his face. He seemed deeply troubled. It was almost as if he were trying to say, “Please believe what I am telling you.” Although Mr. Hofmann did not outwardly show any hostility, this was a very tense and unpleasant experience for all of us. We knew, of course, that whenever someone attempts to uncover fraud there is some danger of retaliation, but we never thought of Mark Hofmann as being a violent man. After the murders we felt very thankful that Mr. Hofmann was not triggered by the exposes we published concerning his document deals. We were very fortunate that Mr. Hofmann arrived at our house armed only with arguments as to why we should trust his documents rather than a pipe bomb surrounded with nails. While we have always thought there was a possibility of being assassinated by someone opposed to our work, we never even considered that a well-mannered man like Mark Hofmann, who professed to be friendly to our work, would turn out to be a cold-blooded killer who would stop at nothing to shut the mouths of his opponents.

RESEARCH VINDICATED

There has been quite a bit of criticism with regard to Mark Hofmann’s confession, and many people wonder if he has told us the truth. One defect, as we have already mentioned, is that it does not tell us enough about the murders. While we wish that Mr. Hofmann had revealed more, we can understand his reluctance. Talking about forgery is entirely different than talking about murder. Very few people would want to have their confession to such gruesome crimes published to the world. In a normal case a murderer is not required to make a public confession of the details of the crime. At one time we were doing research with regard to a man who had committed murder and had entered into a plea bargain agreement. We discovered that there was no public record available detailing the crime. Mr. Hofmann, as we have shown in the March 1987 issue of the Messenger, did go into court and admitted he had committed the murders. Fortunately, the news media were present to record his confession of guilt. In addition, we have a few statements by Hofmann himself in the transcripts and the prosecutors’ summary of what went on at earlier meetings. While we would really like to have hundreds of pages of testimony on the bombings, we do feel fortunate to have what we do.

There is another defect in the transcripts that does disturb us. We had told prosecutors that in order to really convince the public that Mark Hofmann was acting alone in the forgeries, they needed to have him write out a sample of all the different styles of writing found in the forgeries. His known handwriting does not appear to be very good. If he could not match the quality found in the forgeries, we would know that he was not the master forger and that there was a co-conspirator or co-conspirators, which, of course, could even raise questions concerning the murders. It has been claimed that Mark Hofmann did write some samples for investigators and that these samples did satisfy them that he was, in fact, the only one involved in the forgeries which have been charged. Unfortunately, however, these samples were not published with the transcripts, and, strange as it may seem, it was claimed that Hofmann’s attorney had possession of them. We feel that prosecutors need to publish handwritten samples so that people can make their own decision. Although we have no reason to distrust Hofmann’s attorney, it would be better if new samples were taken in the presence of witnesses so that we would know beyond a shadow of a doubt that they had come from Hofmann’s own hand. Furthermore, they should be submitted to noted handwriting experts to verify that all the forgeries were written by Hofmann himself. Until this is done, we cannot be absolutely certain that there were no co-conspirators.

Other than this problem and the lack of material on the murders, we are very impressed with the transcripts. In our wildest imagination we could never have dreamed that Mark Hofmann would make such a detailed confession. For instance, he certainly did not have to tell his true feelings concerning Mormonism, yet he has freely admitted his complete unbelief in the system. From our own investigation into Hofmann’s activities we know that many of the facts he relates are true. In almost every respect he has vindicated the work which we have done on his forgeries during the last three and a half years. Even though we knew that we had good solid evidence, we felt that it was rather daring to publish the book, Tracking the White Salamander, before the case came to trial. If Mr. Hofmann had stone-walled and refused to confess his guilt, we would have had a difficult time convincing some people that the theories published in that book were correct. As it is, however, Mr. Hofmann has confirmed our research. He not only admits that our theory concerning the origin of the Salamander letter is correct, but also that we gave correct sources for the Joseph Smith III Blessing and the Lucy Smith letter. Furthermore, although he refused to discuss the 1873 Martin Harris letter because it was not on the list of items he was charged with forging, the statements he made concerning Walter Conrad, the man who was supposed to receive Harris’ letter, definitely show that the letter is a forgery—something we have tried to prove since 1984.

We do not claim that Tracking the White Salamander will turn out to be the best book on Mark Hofmann. There are, in fact, a number of authors who are far better writers than we could ever hope to be who are working on the subject. We seriously doubt, however, that any major study of Hofmann will be available this year. One of the books probably will not appear in print for at least two or three years. In a review of our book, published in the Salt Lake Tribune, February 15, 1987, Harold Schindler wrote: “As for Tracking the White Salamander, what Jerald Tanner lacks in writing skills, he makes up for with his close and personal knowledge of many of the principals in this intriguing game of history-mystery. Tracking the White Salamander has 185 pages of fascinating material concerning the crimes which rocked the State of Utah. It is a must for all those who desire to have a good understanding of Mark Hofmann’s confession. It not only has important information obtained from Mark Hofmann’s associates but it also contains lengthy extracts from the preliminary hearing. This testimony alone is worth the price of the book.

Our work with regard to Mormon history has been very difficult since we discovered problems in the Salamander letter. We really want to thank those who have prayed for us during this critical time in our ministry. Since the Hofmann affair has opened up many doors to the Mormon people, we continue to need a great deal of prayer. We especially need prayer that we will be faithful to our ministry and that God will bring many to Himself.

DEViLS ALL OVER?

In the March 1987 issue of the Messenger, we warned that some critics of the Mormon Church have become so obsessed with finding “Luciferian” influence in the temple ceremony that they have lost sight of reality. Since we published that article, things have gone from bad to worse. In a speech given in Salt Lake City on June 29, 1987, Ed Decker discussed the spires on Mormon temples. He charged that “these spires represent something that is so sinister that it makes your flesh crawl when you think about it. . . . they represent an up-side-down nail pointing defiantly toward heaven, as if to impale the Lord Jesus Christ anew when he comes in the clouds. . . . Satan’s spires now rise up from almost every town in the country on LDS chapels . . .” Mr. Decker claimed that at the Capstone Conference new revelations would be forthcoming which “will blow your socks off.” At that conference, William J. Schnoebelen took up where Decker left off. He claimed that “the trapezoidal shape” of the spires on the Salt Lake temple “draw demons like fly paper.” He went on to say: “Now, we are going to attempt to prove that the Salt Lake Temple is, in fact, a perfectly designed habitation of devils, just like is mentioned in the book of Revelations.” In 1985 Mr. Schnoebelen published a booklet entitled, Joseph Smith and the Temple of Doom. Much of this same information has recently been printed under the title, Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. Unfortunately this work is marred by an excessive zeal to link Mormonism to witchcraft. Mr. Schnoebelen seems to have been deeply involved in the occult and claims that he has portions of ceremonies used in witchcraft which bear some remarkable parallels to the Mormon temple ceremony. His most startling examples, however, are only preserved by photocopies of typewritten documents which could not possibly be very old. Our preliminary study of the material leads us to conclude that it is far more likely that portions of the Mormon temple ritual were plagiarized and incorporated into witchcraft ceremonies rather than the other way around. We are planning to publish some evidence concerning this matter and would appreciate any insights that our readers may have.

A cassette tape Jerald recently recorded deals with the danger of going too far in trying to link Mormonism to Satanism. It also deals with questionable methods used by some critics of the church which are tending to harden the hearts of the Mormon people against Christians who are working among them. It is basically a call for a more loving approach to the Mormons. This tape is entitled, Problems in Winning Mormons, and is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry.

We are also pleased to announce that Jerald Tanner’s Testimony, which was previously available only on cassette tapes, has been printed and is now available.

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH 84110
In the Salt Lake City Messenger for August 1971, we announced the discovery of documents relating to Joseph Smith’s 1826 trial. This remarkable find was made by Wesley P. Walters in the basement of a jail in Norwich, New York. These documents prove that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, New York. The importance of these documents cannot be overstated, for they establish the historicity of the account of the trial which was first published in Fraser’s Magazine in 1873. This trial shows that the Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith not only engaged in money-digging but that he was also involved in the magical practice of divining with a seer stone. The entire text of the transcript is published in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 32. We will only quote the first two paragraphs of the transcript here:

Warrant issued upon written complaint upon oath of Peter G. Bridgeman, who informed that one Joseph Smith of Bainbridge was a disorderly person and an imposter.

Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826. Prisoner examined: says that he came from the town of Palmyra, and had been at the house of Josiah Stowel in Bainbridge most of the time since; had small part of time been employed by said Stowel on his farm, and going to school. That he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that be professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and had looked for Mr. Stowel several times, and had informed him where he could find these treasures, and Mr. Stowel had been engaged in digging for them. That at Palmyra he pretended to tell by looking at this stone where coined money was buried in Pennsylvania, and while at Palmyra had frequently ascertained in that way where lost property was of various kinds: that he had occasionally been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, but of late had pretty much given it up on account of its injuring his health, especially his eyes, making them sore; that he did not solicit business of this kind, and had always rather declined having anything to do with this business.

Mormon writers could see the devastating implications of Wesley Walters’ discovery. To accept the validity of the trial documents would mean that they would be forced to admit that Joseph Smith was engaging in magical practices at the very time he was being tutored by the Angel Moroni to receive the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. In his book, The Myth Makers, the noted Mormon apologist Hugh Nibley had written almost 20 pages in an attempt to discredit the “Bainbridge court record.” On page 142 of Dr. Nibley’s book we find this statement: “... if this court record is authentic it is the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith.”

After we published the news of Wesley Walters’ discovery, Mormon scholars were stunned by the serious implications of the matter. Although Hugh Nibley remained completely silent about the new find, a promising young scholar by the name of D. Michael Quinn publicly responded to our accusations concerning the importance of the discovery. He thought our conclusions about the discovery were “not supported by the evidence.” He said that he accepted the authenticity of the documents found by Walters but denied that they proved the validity of the printed transcript (see Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism: A Response to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by a Latter-day Saint Historian, 1977, page 18). In our book, Answering Dr. Clandestine: A Response to the Anonymous LDS Historian, pages 11-14, we demonstrated that all the evidence led to the conclusion that the printed transcript of the trial was genuine. A decade has passed since Quinn wrote his rebuttal to us, and we are now happy to report that he seems to have modified his position on the 1826 trial. In a new book published by Signature Books, Dr. Quinn wrote the following:

For many years Mormon writers denied that such a court case occurred... despite contrary evidence... the court record simply adds details to the statement of Smith’s mother that in 1825 Stowell “came for Joseph on account of having heard that he possessed certain keys, by which he could discern things invisible to the natural eye”. ... Other evidence affirms the basic content of the alleged testimony, and, aside from anti-Mormon editorial comments in these published accounts, there is little reason why Mormons should find it necessary to deny the substance of Smith’s and his witnesses’ testimony just because the 1826 court record itself cannot be verified in manuscript form. (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, 1987, pages 44-46) [2nd Ed., pages 56-57]

Although the title of Dr. Quinn’s rebuttal to us and the title of his new book share the words “Mormonism” and “View,” there is a world of difference in the contents. His new book, in fact, validates much of our research with regard to magic. While we have known for a long time that D. Michael Quinn was one of the best scholars in the Mormon Church, we have gained a far greater respect for both his scholarship and his courage during the 1980s. While many of the Mormon scholars have become extremely quiet since Ezra Taft Benson, who is currently the Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the church, denounced objective Mormon history, Dr. Quinn made a very bold public response:

Central to the apparent demands of Elders Benson and Packer is the view that the official acts and pronouncements of the prophets are always the express will of God. This is the Mormon equivalent of the Roman Catholic doctrine of papal infallibility. ... the Mormon history of benignly angelic Church leaders apparently advocated by Elders Benson and Packer would border on idolatry.

Ezra Taft Benson and Boyd K. Packer want Church history to be as elementary as possible and as defensive as possible. This is Accommodation History for consumption by the weakest of the conceivably weak Saints, ... A so-called “Faith-promoting” Church history which conceals controversies and difficulties of the Mormon past actually undermines the faith of Latter-day Saints who eventually learn about the problems from other sources. ... In warning Mormon historians against objective history and against telling too much truth about the Mormon past, Boyd K. Packer says, “Do not spread disease germs!” ... The criticism we have received in our efforts would be similar to leaders of eighteenth century towns trying to combat smallpox contagion by locking up Dr. Edward Jenner who tried to inoculate the people, and killing the cows he wanted to use for his vaccine. (On Being a Mormon Historian, 1982, pages 14, 15, 18-21 and 23)

D. Michael Quinn, who seems to have become lion-hearted in the defense of honest history, now serves as Professor of American History at the church’s Brigham Young University. Many have wondered why the church leaders have not moved against him. A number of Mormon scholars have been removed from their positions for things that would be considered trivial in comparison with Quinn’s direct and forceful response to the General Authorities. The answer may be that church officials fear the confrontation that would ensue if they tried to remove such a highly respected scholar from his position. Then, too, it has been suggested that if Quinn were fired, Brigham Young University might stand a chance of losing its accreditation. What ever the case may be, Dr. Quinn has stood firmly by his convictions, and his new book, Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, certainly presents an honest attempt to get to the bottom of this controversy. In the Introduction to this book, page xx [2nd Ed. page xxxviii], Quinn says that he believes in “Gods, angels, spirits, and devils, and that they have communicated with humankind.” He also affirms that he believes in “Jesus as my Savior” and “Joseph Smith, Jr., as a prophet.” While Professor Quinn’s continued belief in Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon in the light of his disclosures concerning magic may be difficult for many of us to understand, it presents an even greater dilemma for the Mormon leaders. How do they deal with someone who brings out devastating information concerning magic in the early church and yet professes a belief in the Prophet Joseph Smith? As far as we know, they have made no attempt to discipline him, although Gordon B. Hinckley, of the First Presidency, seemed to be warning against his book in a conference address:

From the Hofmann episode, Hinckley said another phenomenon has arisen, that of a supposedly “new history” of the LDS Church as distinguished from the “old history.”

He said this rewriting of history represents nothing more than efforts to ferret out elements of folk magic and the occult during the time of church founder Joseph Smith to explain what he did and why.

Hinckley said he has no doubt that folk magic was practiced in the days of Joseph Smith, but that it presents no evidence that the church originated from such superstitions.

The present effort of trying to find some other explanation for the organization of the church, for the origin of the Book of Mormon, and for the priesthood with its keys and powers will be similar to other anti-Mormon fads which have come and blossomed and faded,” he said. (Ogden Standard-Examiner, October 5, 1987)

Although Dr. Quinn says he does not believe that his “analysis disparages Joseph Smith’s integrity or prophetic claims,” he does admit the following:

In what follows most Mormons will not find a story with which they are familiar. Instead, they will discover that Joseph Smith evidently participated extensively in magical pursuits and that he shared with others of his contemporaries a magic world view of the world. For myself, I have found that the “official version” of early Mormon history is sometimes incomplete in its presentation and evaluation of evidence, and therefore inaccurate in certain respects. (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, Introduction, pages xx-xxi) [2nd Ed. Introduction, pages xxxviii-xxxix]

In 1982 we published our book Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, which contains photographs of some parchments and a dagger which once belonged to Joseph Smith’s brother, Hyrum. On pages 12-15 of that book we definitely linked these items to witchcraft. On pages 2-5 we also reproduced a photograph of a magic talisman which was owned by Joseph Smith himself and printed Dr. Reed Durham’s explanation of its meaning and purpose. It was our opinion that these items provided additional evidence that the Smith family were involved in magic. D. Michael Quinn has reached the same conclusion and has added much additional information regarding the Smith magical paraphernalia:

Beyond the documents indicating that during the 1820s Joseph Smith and his family used divining rods and seer stones as part of the folk magic of treasure seeking, Smith family members themselves provided evidence of their involvement in more esoteric manifestations of Christian occultism. These direct evidences are of two kinds: statements suggesting the family’s participation in these activities, and magic artifacts in the early possession of family members according to Smith descendants, relatives, or their Mormon associates. . . . several of these relics have been preserved through completely separate chains of ownership (i.e., provenance). The magic artifacts attributed to the Smith family and certain statements by family members and early associates either imply or affirm that Joseph Smith and his family believed in and used ritual magic, astrology, talismans, and magic parchments. . . .

Historical understanding cannot grow by ignoring or dismissing evidence that seems unusual or inconsistent with traditional perceptions, . . .

In response to the affidavits of some Palmyra residents that the Smiths in the 1820s neglected their farm and other necessary work in order to dig for treasure, Lucy Mack Smith seemed to confirm that her family practiced ritual magic. In the first draft of her dictated 1845 history she stated, “let not my reader suppose that because I shall pursue another topic for a season that we stopt our labor and went at trying to win the faculty of Abrac[,] drawing Magic circles or sooth saying [sic] to the neglect of all kinds of business [W]e never during our lives suffered one important interest to swallow up every other obligation but whilst we worked with our hands we endeavored to remember the service of & the welfare of our souls” . . . Joseph Smith’s mother did not deny her family’s participation in occult activities but simply affirmed that these did not prevent family members from accomplishing other, equally important work. . . .
By the early 1820s, “Faculty of Abrac” had become a well-known phrase linking magic and divinity. Medieval and early modern magic manuscripts in England used “Abrac” and “Abraca” as one of the names of God in conjurations. As early as 1831, their neighbors stated that both Smith and his father drew circles for treasure hunting.

Confirming these stories, the Hyrum Smith family has preserved as an heirloom the kind of dagger necessary for ritual magic. The first public announcement of its existence was an inventory of Hyrum Smith’s “relics” in an authorized biography which described the artifact as “Dagger. . . . Masonic symbols on blade” (Corbett 1963, 453). Photographs of the dagger have been in print since 1982, and slides of the Smith dagger were screened at a public convention in Salt Lake City in 1985 (Tanner and Tanner 1982a, 3; Tanner and Tanner 1983, 11, 15; Fillerup; figs. 43-44). . . . the inscriptions on the Smith family dagger have nothing to do with Freemasonry and everything to do with ceremonial magic. . . . One side of the Smith family dagger is inscribed with the Hebrew word “Adonay,” next to which are the astrological symbol of Mars and the magic sigil, or seal, for the Intelligence of Mars. The other side of the dagger is inscribed with the magic seal of Mars.

Possession alone may not be proof of use, but in this case Hyrum Smith, by 1844, possessed an instrument designed for drawing the kind of magic circles that Palmyra neighbors claimed the Smiths were drawing on the ground in the 1820s as part of their treasure-digging activities. In addition, Lucy Smith’s manuscript history virtually confirmed the allegation that her husband and son drew magic circles in the 1820s. . . . Hyrum was the obvious heir of his father’s sacred relics at the death of Joseph Sr. . . . Mars (inscribed on the magic dagger) was the “planet governing” 1771, the year of Joseph Smith Sr.’s birth.

That astrology was important to members of the Smith family is also indicated by both friendly and unfriendly sources. Without giving further details, Brigham Young stated in 1861 that “an effort was made in the days of Joseph to establish astrology” (Young Office Journal, 30 Dec. 1861). . . . the Hyrum Smith family also possessed magic parchments inscribed with the astrological symbols of the planets and the Zodiac . . . and the Emma Smith Bidamon family preserved a magic artifact consecrated to Jupiter, the ruling planet of Joseph Smith Jr.’s birth. . . . Two of the Smith family’s magic parchments . . . depend directly on Ebenezer Sibly’s Complete Illustration of the Occult Sciences, . . . the inscriptions on Joseph Smith’s Jupiter talisman indicated its use as an implement in ceremonies of spirit conjuration, and the influential manuscript “Key of Solomon” defined a Jupiter talisman’s use strictly in terms of ceremonial magic: “This defendeth and protecteth those who invoke and cause the Spirits to come” . . . That ceremonial purpose of the Jupiter talisman in Joseph Smith’s possession in 1844 was consistent with the ceremonial purposes of the magic parchments in the possession of his brother Hyrum in 1844 . . . (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, pages 53-58, 69) [2nd Ed. pages 66-73, 85]

On pages 78-79 [2nd Ed., pages 98, 103, 104], Professor Quinn gives this information:

While the Smith family’s belief in astrology can be demonstrated only circumstantially and inferentially, the Smiths left direct evidence of their practice of ritual magic. In addition to the magic dagger, among Hyrum Smith’s possessions at his death were three parchments—lamsen, in occult terms—inscribed with signs and names of ceremonial magic. . . . Like the dagger, photographs of these magic parchments have been in print since 1982 (de Hoyos 1982, 4-22; Tanner and Tanner 1982a, 1-3; Tanner and Tanner 1983, 6-9; Salt Lake Tribune, 24 Aug. 1985, B-1). . . . The dagger may have belonged originally to Joseph Smith, Sr., and the parchments may be artifacts from the time of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon.

Dr. Quinn feels that the parchments had a definite relationship to money-digging:

That this “Holiness to the Lord” magic parchment was designed to invoke “good spirits” in connection with treasure seeking is suggested by yet another symbol. Directly to the right of the Raphael figure and above the Tetragrammaton figure are three crosses . . . Although this could be a reference to the crucifixion at Golgotha, Scot defined two separate uses of three crosses, both of which pertain to treasure seeking. First, he specified that “there must be made upon a hazell wand three crosses” as part of “the art and order to be used in digging for monie, revealed by dreames,” and later in his discussion he provided an illustration of a shield-symbol with three crosses at the top to summon a spirit “to tell thee of hidden treasures that be in anie place, he will tell it thee: or if thou wilt command him to bring to thee gold or silver, he will bring it thee” . . . the use of the previously discussed angel symbols from Reginald Scot’s 1665 edition of his Discourse indicates that all three Smith family parchments were created to aid treasure seeking. Immediately before Scot’s chapter that discussed Junbaladace, Nal-gah, and Pah-li-Pah, the last paragraph of the preceding chapter stated, “When Treasure hath been hid, or any secret thing hath been committed by the party; there is a magical cause of something attracting the starry spirit back again, to the manifestation of that thing. Upon all which, the following Chapters do insist more largely and particularly” . . . Therefore, the three Smith parchments adopted the names and symbols of Junbladace directly (and Nal-gah and Pah-li-Pah through Sibly’s later version) from a chapter of Scot’s 1665 Discourse that provided information about good angels necessary for successful treasure-seeking conjurations. . . . these two lamens of the Joseph Smith family were designed to be used by an unmarried, pure young man or woman in summoning and communicating with a divine spirit as part of a treasure quest. . . . the central purpose of the “Holiness to the Lord” parchment was to enable such a pure youth to summon and communicate with a divine spirit as part of a treasure quest, which both Mormon and non-Mormon sources indicated was a preoccupation of the Joseph Smith family only up to 1827. (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, pages 107-108, 110-111) [2nd Ed. pages 112-113, 115]

D. Michael Quinn has done a great deal of important research with regard to the provenance of the Smith magic paraphernalia and has shown how these items relate to the magical practices of the time. In addition he has important information on and even pictures of “seer stones” which were supposed to have belonged to Joseph Smith and Book of Mormon witnesses. The reader will remember that the testimony of Joseph Smith in the 1826 trial shows that he used a seer stone in his magical practices of seeking for gold and lost items. At the same trial, Jonathan Thompson testified that Joseph Smith could “divine things by means of said stone.” He claimed that Smith used “his hat” in the process. This, of course, directly links the translation of the Book of Mormon to the magical process Joseph Smith used to find treasures. David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, wrote the following:

I will now give you a description of the manner in which the Book of Mormon was translated. Joseph Smith would put the seer stone into a hat, and put his face in the hat, drawing it closely around his face to exclude the light; and in the darkness the spiritual light would shine. . . . One character at a time would appear, and under it was the interpretation in English. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, page 12)

The noted Mormon historian B. H. Roberts confirmed that Joseph Smith did indeed use a “seer stone” to translate the Book of Mormon:

The seer stone referred to here was a chocolate-colored, somewhat egg-shaped stone which the Prophet found while digging a well . . . It possessed the qualities of Urim and Thummim, since by means of it—as described above—as well as by means of the interpreters found with the Nephite record, Joseph was able to translate the characters engraved on the plates. (Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, page 129)

On page 39 [page 43 in 2nd Ed.] of his book, Dr. Quinn gives this interesting information:

At a meeting of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles on 11 September 1859, “Preside[n]t Young also said that the seer stone which Joseph Smith first obtained He got in an Iron kettle 25 feet under ground. He saw it while looking in another seers stone which a person had. He went right to the spot & dug & found it” (Woodruff, 5:382-83)

On page 199 [page 246 in 2nd Ed.], Quinn discloses the following:

The brown and white stones are the only ones Smith was known to have used in his religious ministry, but Brigham Young told the apostles on 30 September 1855 that Smith had five seer stones. Without describing any of them, Young indicated that Smith obtained three stones before beginning his residence at Nauvoo in 1839, and found two more before his death in 1844 (Bullock 1855).

On page 146 [page 174 in 2nd Ed.], Quinn observes:

Each of these early scribes and witnesses apparently saw no inconsistency in God’s employing the same instrument and technique to translated the Book of Mormon that Smith had used in hunting for buried treasure because they all shared a world view which regarded success with such instruments of folk magic as a divine gift. Non-believers who rejected such a world view and who witnessed the translation at the Whitmer home, scoffed at this religious use of the seer stone . . .

Animal sacrifices were a part of the magic ritual which accompanied money-digging. On page 144 [page 172 in 2nd Ed.] of his book, Quinn gives this information: “A cousin of Smith’s wife Emma reported that Smith ‘translated the book of Mormon by means of the same peep stone, and under the same inspiration that directed his enchantments and dog sacrifices; it was all by the same spirit!’ (H. Lewis 1879).” In The Greater Key of Solomon, page 122, we read that “In many operations it is necessary to make some sort of sacrifice unto the Demons, and in various ways. . . . Such sacrifices consist of the blood and sometimes of the flesh.” The evidence seems to show that Joseph Smith did make sacrifices to the demons. In an affidavit published in 1834, William Stafford, one of the neighbors of the Smith family, reported the following:
Joseph Smith, Sen., came to me one night, and told me that Joseph Smith Jr. had been looking in his glass, and had seen, not many rods from his house, two or three kegs of gold and silver. . . . Joseph, Sen., first made a circle, twelve or fourteen feet in diameter. This circle, said he, contains the treasure. He then stuck in the ground a row of witch hazel sticks, around the said circle, for the purpose of keeping off the evil spirits. Within this circle he made another, of about eight or ten feet in diameter. He walked around three times on the periphery of this last circle, muttering to himself something which I could not understand. He next stuck a steel rod in the centre of the circles, and then enjoined profound silence upon us, lest we should arouse the evil spirit who had the charge of these treasures. After we had dug a trench about five feet in depth around the rod, the old man . . . went to the house to inquire of Joseph the cause of our disappointment. He soon returned and said, that Joseph had remained all this time in the house, looking in his stone and watching the motions of the evil spirit—that he saw the spirit come up to the ring and as soon as it beheld the cone which we had formed around the rod, it caused the money to sink. . . . another time, they devised a scheme, by which they might satiate their hunger, with the mutton of one of my sheep. They had seen in my flock of sheep, a large, fat, black weather. Old Joseph and one of the boys came to me one day, and said that Joseph Jr. had discovered some very remarkable and valuable treasures, which could be procured only in one way. That way, was as follows:—That a black sheep should be taken on to the ground where the treasures were concealed—that after cutting its throat, it should be led around in a circle while bleeding. This being done, the wrath of the evil spirit would be appeased: the treasures could then be obtained, and my share of them was to be four fold. To gratify my curiosity, I let them have a large fat sheep. They afterwards informed me, that the sheep was killed pursuant to commandment; but as there was some mistake in the process, it did not have the desired effect. This, I believe, is the only time they ever made money-digging a profitable business. (Mormonism Unvailed, 1834, pages 238-239)

The reader will notice that it was a “black” sheep that was supposed to have been sacrificed. This is interesting because The Greater Key of Solomon, page 122, says that “Sometimes white animals are sacrificed to the good Spirits and black to the evil.” In any case, the Mormon apologist Richard L. Anderson says that, “If there was such an event of a borrowed sheep, it had nothing to do with dishonesty” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1970, p. 295). On page 294 of the same article, Professor Anderson quotes the following from M. Wilford Poulson’s notes of a conversation with Wallace Miner: “I once asked Stafford if Smith did steal a sheep from him. He said no, not exactly. He said, he did miss a black sheep, but soon Joseph came and admitted he took it for sacrifice but he was willing to work for it. He made wooden sap buckets to fully pay for it.” C. R. Stafford testified concerning the same incident: “Jo Smith, the prophet, told my uncle, William Stafford, he wanted a fat, black sheep. He said he wanted to cut its throat and make it walk in a circle three times around and it would prevent a pot of money from leaving” (Naked Truths About Mormonism, January 1888, page 3).

In the Book of Mormon Joseph Smith condemned animal sacrifices after the death of Christ (3 Nephi 9:19), but according to Wandle Mace, a devout Mormon, he later called for the sacrifice of a lamb in the Kirtland temple: “Joseph told them to go to Kirtland, and cleanse and purify a certain room in the Temple, that they must kill a lamb and offer a sacrifice unto the Lord which should prepare them to ordain Willard Richards a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles” (“Journal of Wandle Mace,” page 32, microfilmed copy at Brigham Young University). While in this instance Joseph Smith wanted the sacrifice made to the Lord, there are a number of accounts which indicate Joseph Smith was offering sacrifices to the demons in his earlier years (see Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 32-34).

D. Michael Quinn has a very good photograph of the “magic dagger” which has come down through the Smith family in his book (see Fig. 43). He speculates that Joseph Smith and his father may have used this dagger when they “drew magic circles in the 1820s.” We feel that this is very likely and would like to suggest that it may have also been used to cut the throats of the animals which were sacrificed to the demons.

Professor Quinn feels that Joseph Smith may have been involved in “spirit conjurations” when he received the visitation concerning the gold plates which he used to translate the Book of Mormon:

Smith began praying late Sunday night on 21 September 1823. According to astrological guides, Sunday night was the only night of the week ruled by Jupiter . . . Jupiter, Smith’s ruling planet, was the most prominent astrological symbol on the Smith family’s golden lamen for summoning a good spirit. . . .

Oliver Cowdery wrote that Smith began praying earnestly that Sunday night about “eleven or twelve” in order “to commune with some kind of messenger” (1835, 1:79). Scot’s frequently cited 1665 instructions for conjuration (the edition upon which the Smith family’s “Jehovah, Jehovah, Jehovah” parchment was based) specified that spirit conjurations should begin “at 11 a clock at night,” and in describing a particular conjunction “at 11 a clock at night; not joyning to himself any companion, because this particular action will admit of none . . . providing beforehand the two Seals of the Earth, drawn exactly upon parchment . . . but if he desires it, they will engage to bring him the most precious [sic] of their Jewels and Riches in twenty four hours; discovering unto him the way of finding hidden treasures and the richest mines” . . . The Smith’s “Holiness to the Lord” parchment has those two seals . . .

Smith’s prayer “to commune with some kind of messenger” on 21 September 1823 occurred once the moon had reached its maximum fullness the previous day and just before the autumnal equinox. The 1665 edition of Scot’s works . . . specified, “And in the composition of any Circle for Magical feats, the fittest time is the brightest Moon-light” . . . the hour and day in which Smith prayed “to commune with some kind of messenger” was pinpointed in magic books as being ideal for the invocation of spirits. Also, the angel of that hour, Raphael, figured prominently at the center of the Smith family’s most significant lamen . . . which was constructed to aid in a treasure quest . . . Young Joseph walked alone to that hill on 22 September 1823, when the moon was in its second day in Aries, which astrology specified was a day “good to find treasures hid” . . .

Significantly, Oliver Cowdery’s account, the first published history of early Mormonism, sketched a folk magic context for the events of 22 September 1823 on the hill: “he had heard of the power of enchantment, and a thousand like stories, which held the hidden treasures of the earth” . . . Cowdery’s report that Smith was prevented from obtaining the gold treasure by a thrice-repeated “shock [that] was produced upon his system” echoed treasure folklore of the 1820s that treasure-seekers could be “instant[an]eously struck, without attaining their object, as with an electric shock” . . .

All official and unofficial . . . sources agree that Smith was not able to obtain the gold plates on 22 September 1823. Instead, he returned to the hill on exactly the same day each year until 1827. None of these accounts explains why the visits had to occur each year on exactly the same day. Magic provides a possible explanation: “Should nothing result [from the attempt at necromancy], the same experiment must be renewed in the following year, and if necessary a third time, when it is certain that the desired apparition will be obtained, and the longer it has been delayed the more realistic and striking it will be’ . . . (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, pages 120-122, 125, 133-134) [2nd Ed. pages 143-145, 147-148, 158]

Dr. Quinn points out that a number of teachings in the early Mormon Church bear remarkable similarities to the occult, and even shows that “proxy baptisms on behalf of the dead” had been “in practice among the Christian occult communities of Pennsylvania since 1738” (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, page 181) [2nd Ed. pages 223-224].

In the Messenger for January 1986, we took exception to some of D. Michael Quinn’s statements about magic which he made in a lecture. On page 35 we noted that his claim that Jesus was using a magic formula at the time of the raising of Jairus’ daughter (Mark 5:41) is not supported by any facts. In addition we felt that his claim that Joseph Smith, Sr., gave his sons magic names was not very convincing. We demonstrated, in fact, that he gave his sons names that were “typical of those found in the vicinity of Palmyra.” In his new book, Dr. Quinn seems to have retained his idea concerning Jesus, but he does not say anything concerning the Smith children having magic names. He does, however, engage in some speculation concerning Book of Mormon names. On page 155 [197-198 in 2nd Ed.] of his book, he notes that the name Alma “also had reference to spirits and to ceremonial magic . . . A seventeenth-century English magic manuscript used ‘Alma’ as one of the names to conjure a treasure guardian spirit . . . and in other English manuscripts of magic . . . ‘Almazim’ and ‘Alma’ were names of a ‘giver of treasure’ . . .” While this is an interesting suggestion, in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 95, we have also noted that this was a woman’s name and that one of Joseph Smith’s neighbors was named “Miss Alma Parker.” (In the Book of Mormon, of course, it is the name of a man.) Quinn’s attempt to relate the name Nephi to magic is not very impressive. He suggests that “the most publicized magic parallel to Nephi was that ‘Nepes’ or ‘Nepesh’ meant the disembodied spirit of men, according to the Cabala . . .” (page 156) [page 198 in 2nd Ed.]. Those who are familiar with Hebrew know that “Nepesh” is the word which is translated as “soul” in Genesis 2:7: “. . . and man became a living soul.” It has a number of different meanings (see Strong’s Exhaustive Concordance of the Bible, Hebrew word #5315). Quinn feels that his “necromantic parallel to the name Nephi may help to explain what has otherwise appeared as a historical puzzle.” This matter is discussed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 136, where we show that when Joseph Smith began his History, he wrote that the Angel who revealed the Book of Mormon to him said “his name was Nephi.” After Joseph Smith’s death this was changed to read, “his name was Moroni.” Quinn tries to explain this change by saying:

Thus the evidence indicates that after 1830, Mary M. Whitmer, Lucy Mack Smith, and Joseph Smith himself intentionally referred to Moroni as Nephi.
called out by Magicians and Necromancers,” these early Mormons may have used the cognate “Nephi” as a generic reference to the messenger Moroni. Documents of 1838 indicate that Joseph Smith was using Nephi and Moroni interchangeably. . . . The appearance of Nephi in the manuscript history about the coming forth of the Book of Mormon seems instead to be Joseph Smith’s conscious substitution of another name for Moroni.

It is very difficult for us to accept this speculation. It is much easier to simply believe that Joseph Smith told contradictory stories. Moreover, as we pointed out in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 72, we found the name “Nephi” in the Apocrypha, which is important because the Apocrypha was included in Joseph Smith’s own Bible. Professor Quinn is correct in saying that Nephi was “a geographic name” in the “Apocrypha.” In the Book of Mormon it is the name of several men, a city, a land and a people. It seems much easier to believe that Joseph Smith simply borrowed the word from the Apocrypha than to try to accept Quinn’s idea and the complicated theory about “a generic” name of the “messenger Moroni.” With regard to the Book of Mormon name “Laman,” Quinn comments:

Although several of Joseph Smith’s scribes during the translation of the Book of Mormon spelled Laman’s name as it has been published from 1830 to the present, one unidentified scribe rendered it “lamen” in writing that portion of the manuscript . . . This was the spelling of the magically inscribed parchment, or lamen, as given in magic works . . . The Smith family had not only one such magical lamen, but three . . . (page 158) [page 200 in 2nd Ed.]

Although there are a few interesting parallels between magical names and those found in the Book of Mormon, the case does not appear conclusive, and Quinn himself says: “But just as there is more than one possible interpretation of Moroni’s name (chap. 5), there are non-magic parallels for the other Book of Mormon names.”

While we feel that Dr. Quinn has tended to minimize the importance of the influence of anti-Masonry on the Book of Mormon, and that he has also engaged in some needless speculation with regard to occultic names and numerology, taken as a whole, his book is a very important contribution to the study of Mormonism and magic. We tend to agree with Richard L. Bushman’s assessment:

This is an ingenious and erudite book which carries us further into the world of magic than any previous work on Mormonism. From now on, anyone dealing with magic in relationship to Mormonism will have to start with Quinn’s study.

LUCIFER-GOD DOCTRINE

Since the founding of the Mormon Church there has been a sharp separation between Mormonism and orthodox Christianity. In 1842 the Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith made this serious division between Mormonism and other churches very plain when he claimed that Jesus Christ Himself told him that he “must join none of them [i. e., the other churches], for they were all wrong; and . . . that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; . . .” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 1:19). A decade after Joseph Smith’s death, Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt answered some questions about other churches:

Q. Who founded the Roman Catholic Church?

A. The Devil, through the medium of Apostates, who subverted the whole order of God . . .

Q. But did not the first Protestant Reformers receive their ordination and authority from the Catholics?

A. Yes: and in this manner they received all the authority that their mother church was in possession of; and the mother having derived her authority from the Devil, could only impart that which his Satanic majesty was pleased to bestow upon her. (The Seer, page 205)

In 1958 Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote the following under the heading “Church of the Devil”:

1. All churches or organizations . . . which are designed to take men on a course that leads away from God and his laws and thus from salvation in the kingdom of God; and 2. The Roman Catholic Church specifically—singly out, set apart, described, and designated as being “most abominable above all other churches” (1 Ne. 13:5). . . . There is no salvation outside this one true Church, . . . Any church or organization of any kind whatever which satisfies the innate religious longings of man and keeps him from coming to the saving truths of Christ and his gospel is therefore not of God. Such agencies have been and are founded or fostered by the devil who is the enemy to all righteousness. (Mormon Doctrine, page 129)

Apostle McConkie went on to call the Catholic Church a “satanic organization” and demonstrated that the Book of Mormon said that “the devil” was “the foundation of it.” He cited 1 Nephi 13:1-10 to prove his point. McConkie’s writings greatly offended the Catholics and in later editions the comments which specifically mentioned the Catholic Church were removed. He spoke only of “the various branches of the great and abominable church” (1979 printing, page 138). Although the Mormon Church is now more subtle about its attacks on other churches, the secret temple ceremony still gives the impression that their ministers are working for the devil and that at least some orthodox Christian teachings come from him.

Many Christians, on the other hand, who recognize that Mormonism teaches “another gospel” than that which orthodox Christianity preaches, feel that it is one of the organizations that is (to use Apostle McConkie’s words) “founded or fostered by the devil.” This belief has been widely held ever since Mormonism began making its unique claims. During the last several years, however, there has been a movement to make the Mormons appear more dangerous and sinister than any other organization in the world. It is claimed, in fact, that the Mormon Church leaders secretly worship Lucifer and that they are bringing their people under his power and priesthood in the temple ceremony. It is this latest teaching about Mormonism which we will refer to as the Lucifer-God doctrine.

One of the chief advocates of the Lucifer-God doctrine is a man by the name of William Schnoebelen who maintains that he has been deeply involved in the occult for a long time. Among other things, he claims to have become a Witch in 1968, a Spiritualist Minister in 1972, a High Priest and Magus in 1973, a Wizard in 1974, a Master Mason in 1976, a Warlock in the Church of Satan in 1977 and a Gnostic Catholic Bishop in 1978. He also claims to have been in Voodoo and to have received a number of very high degrees in Masonry. In 1980 he received a Master’s Degree in Theology and joined the Mormon Church. Finally, on June 22, 1984, he became a Christian.

Mr. Schnoebelen claims that after he went into witchcraft, he changed his name to “Christopher Pendragon Syn.” According to a Temple Sealing Certificate, his wife was known as “Alexandria Y Apprope Pendragon.” He has furnished us with photocopies of certificates from the School of Wicca, the Mental Science Institute and the Church of Satan. All of these certificates contain the name “Syn.” He says that in 1978 his name was changed back to Schnoebelen. Mr. Schnoebelen has also provided photocopies of documents dealing with his name changes. He claims to have received a Master’s Degree from the Saint Francis Seminary in Milwaukee, and the seminary itself has verified that a man by the name of William Schnoebelen did receive a Master of Theology Degree. We have also confirmed that Mr. Schnoebelen was a member of the Mental Science Institute and have no reason to question his claims concerning the Church of Satan and the School of Wicca.

In any case, William Schnoebelen makes some very startling claims concerning Mormonism and witchcraft. For instance, he insists that the “highest ranking Witch in the USA” told him that Lucifer founded the Mormon Church and that it was prepared so that “witches and occultists” could hide out in it if trouble developed. As if this were not sensational enough, he has also stated that he met with the Mormon Apostle James E. Faust in 1981 and that Faust admitted that the Mormon temple ceremony was a witchcraft ritual and that Lucifer was the god of the temple. This last claim is very difficult for us to believe. Even if Apostle Faust were a Satan worshipper, as Schnoebelen maintains, would he reveal it to someone who had only been in the church for a year? There is really no way to prove or disprove Mr. Schnoebelen’s statements. According to Schnoebelen, the “highest ranking Witch in the USA,” who told him that the Mormon Church was founded by the Devil to protect witches is now dead, and it is unreasonable to believe that Apostle Faust would verify Schnoebelen’s statement even if it were true. We feel that it is just too risky for Mormon critics to accept these two highly significant claims without some additional evidence. An examination of William Schnoebelen’s writings shows that he is given to finding all kinds of trivial parallels between witchcraft and Mormonism. He, in fact, goes to great lengths to link the temple ceremony to Lucifer. Because of this bias, we have a difficult time putting our faith in his report of the conversation with Apostle Faust. It is very possible that Mr. Schnoebelen’s preconceived ideas about the relationship between witchcraft and the temple ceremony could have caused him to misunderstood Faust’s comments.

While Mr. Schnoebelen does not have any document or hard evidence for the two conversations, he has put forth two photocopies which could provide some important evidence linking the Mormon temple ceremony to satanic ritual if it can be established that they are authentic. The first is supposed to be from the “Grimorum Verum.” It has a prayer to the “Lord Lucifer,” and a few paragraphs later contains this blessing:

May you have health in the navel, marrow in the bones, strength in the [word blacked out by Schnoebelen “in the interest of decency”] and in the sinews; and power in the priesthood be upon you and upon your posterity through all generations of time and throughout all eternity.

This is very close to a portion of the temple ceremony which we have produced in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 472:
in research into the LDS endowment.” He went back to seek out some of his “old pupils” to obtain copies of the rites. He “found one isolated and rather strange fellow in Chicago” who gave his “a copy of a copy in his possession which he copied from me in 1977” of the material from the Grimorum Verum. The other photocopy from the 2nd Book of Wisdom he obtained from “a former colleague high priest in Arkansas” (Letter from William Schnoebelen to Jerald Tanner, dated April 13, 1987).

From this it is obvious that the actual copies in Mr. Schnoebelen’s possession cannot be dated prior to 1985. (He was converted to Christianity on “June 22, 1984,” burned his papers at that time and then “about a year” later sought to obtain “copies of the rites.”) Since Mr. Schnoebelen has not provided the names or addresses for either the “rather strange fellow in Chicago” or the “high priest in Arkansas,” there is no way independent of Schnoebelen’s statement that we can actually date the material back beyond 1985.

One thing that is disturbing about Schnoebelen’s statement is that he says he “burnt all my occult and witchcraft materials.” If this is the case, why did he retain the three certificates from the Mental Science Institute, the School of Wicca and the Church of Satan? Photographs of these documents are found on pages 71, 74 and 75 of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, published in 1987 by Triple J Publishers, PO Box 3367, Idaho Falls, ID 83403. We would think that the certificate from the Church of Satan would be deemed especially evil since it tells of Schnoebelen becoming a “Warlock” and having “knowledge of Satanic Theology, and undefiled wisdom of the Black Arts.” It also has the statement that it is done “By all the powers of Hell,” and has the signature of Anton Szandor La Vey, the “High Priest & Magus of the Black Order.” In addition, it has an upsidedown pentagram containing the goat’s head. Speaking concerning the “inverted pentagram,” William Schnoebelen says: “It is just too evil a sign—it draws demons!” (Ibid., page 49). One would think that Mr. Schnoebelen would want to get rid of anything that draws demons. However this may be, we are left with this situation: the originals of the documents which are most important to show parallels to the temple ceremony were burned, whereas the certificates supporting William Schnoebelen’s involvement in the occult were preserved.

One serious problem with Schnoebelen’s material is that there is some evidence of evolution in his text since 1985. Mr. Schnoebelen published the purported extract from the Grimorum Verum in 1985 in a publication... entitled, Joseph Smith And The Temple Of Doom. A significant number of changes were made when it was republished in 1986 under the title, Documentation “Joseph Smith And The Temple of Doom.” Finally, it appeared in 1987 in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. It is interesting to note that two slightly different versions are found in this same book on pages 35-36 and 41. The one on pages 35-36 is very close to the 1986 printing. The version which appears on page 41 is printed in parallel columns with the temple ceremony. Except for the “obscenity” which Mr. Schnoebelen deleted, it has become absolutely identical to the Mormon ritual.

Below the reader will find a comparison of the way Mr. Schnoebelen’s extract was first published in 1985 with the way it appears today. We have placed the words which have been changed in italics and bold print:

*M[ay you have] health in the navel and marrow in your bones, *l*ust in your [- - -] and in your *s*inew!* May the power of the priesthood be upon you and upon all your posterity throughout all generations of time and all eternity. (Joseph Smith and the Temple of Doom, 1985, page 11)

Health in the navel, marrow in the bones, *s*trength in the [ . . . ] and in the sinews, *p*ower in the Priesthood be upon me and upon my posterity throughout all generations of time and throughout all eternity. (Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, 1987, page 41)

While the rules regarding quotations would probably allow the first three words (“May you have”) to be dropped and the word “health” to start with a capital letter, we have counted the deletion of these words as a change because the inclusion of the word “you” would clearly reveal that something was wrong with the text. It is obvious that the wording has been changed from the second person singular throughout the quotation to the first person singular. The word “you” certainly would not fit with “me” and “my.” It appears that in the original version the participants in the ceremony do not say these words. They are given to them as a blessing from someone else who is designated as “M.” However this may be, the fact that the text seems to grow closer to the Mormon temple ceremony with time is of some concern. This evolution of the text raises an important question: if this many changes have been made during the brief period in which we have been able to observe it, how many changes may have occurred in the previous decade? Unless Mr. Schnoebelen can provide an earlier text that can be verified, scholars will probably be skeptical of its value.

One test that William Schnoebelen’s documents can be submitted to is whether they are more closely related to the ancient or modern temple ceremony. The Mormon temple ceremony originated in the 1840s at Nauvoo, Illinois. Many important changes have been made in it since that time. For example, it had some bloody oaths which were modified so they would be more palatable to educated people (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pages 474-475). If Joseph Smith and Brigham Young borrowed from witchcraft ceremonies in the 1840s, then the text would have evolved further away from that of witchcraft as time passed. This can be clearly demonstrated with Masonic parallels to the temple ceremony. While the Mormon text is still like the Masonic ritual in many places, it has been modified in others so that it is scarcely recognizable. We must assume also, that changes have occurred in witchcraft rituals as time has passed. The two rituals, therefore, would have become more dissimilar as the years passed. Consequently, we should be very suspicious of any text purported to be from witchcraft which resembles the modern version of the temple ceremony more than the older version. If it is more like the modern ritual, then it is very likely that it has been plagiarized from Mormonism rather than the other way around.

We have carefully compared the two most startling portions of William Schnoebelen’s documents with different accounts of the temple ceremony published between 1853 and the present time and found that they closely resemble the modern version of the ceremony. Although we should probably state that the printed versions of the ceremony could have some inaccuracies in them, it still seems highly significant that no evidence whatsoever has been found to show that the Schnoebelen texts agree with the older renditions of the temple ritual. We have printed our study of the comparisons of these texts in a new book entitled, The Lucifer-God Doctrine. Those who are interested in the evidence can consult that publication. That no support appears in the earlier versions of the endowment ceremony should be of grave concern to those who want to use these texts to prove the Mormon ceremony came from witchcraft. The evidence seems to demonstrate that the texts are recent productions that are dependant on either a recent printed copy (such as the one in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?) or someone going into the temple to get the text. When we add the fact that these texts resemble the modern ceremony to the questions concerning their provenance and the changes that have been made since 1985, we feel that it would be unsafe to put one’s faith in them.
Some very important information, which could help us understand the William Schnoebelen material, has recently come to light. We tried to locate the Mental Science Institute in March, 1987, by writing to the box number on Mr. Schnoebelen’s certificate. The letter was returned from Minneapolis with the statement: “Attempted —Not Known.” This, of course, caused us some concern. In doing further research with regard to this organization we were referred to Jack Roper, an authority on occultic organizations. Although Mr. Roper did not know where the organization is located today, he assured us that it had existed. He had, in fact, met B.C. “Eli” Taylor, whose name appears on Schnoebelen’s certificate of ordination to be a “High Priest After The Order of Melchizedek” in the Mental Science Institute. Mr. Schnoebelen claims that he was the witch who told him the Mormon temple ceremonies had important “occult power . . . that could be achieved nowhere else.” In any case, Jack Roper indicated that he thought this group had doctrines that were similar to Mormonism. Fortunately, Mr. Roper was familiar with a printed article on the Mental Science Institute. In this article, Gordon Melton mentioned a parallel to “Mormon theology” and gave this revealing information:

Mental Science Institute. Eli Taylor, who is the grand master of what is termed druidic witchcraft, is a descendant of Thomas Hartley who was burned at the stake for practicing witchcraft in England in the early 1550’s. . . . The Mental Science Institute was organized in the late 1960’s as a focus for Taylor’s brand of herbal magick.

He traces his particular kind of witchcraft to the druids, and it is thus termed druidic. . . . The Mental Science Institute is the most male oriented of all the Wicca groups and has a theology closely related to Western ritual magick and Christianity. The universe is seen in a series of levels—celestial, terrestrial and telestial. The telestial is divided into sublevels at the top of which is God the Father, followed by the Lord of Lights, arc-angels and angels. Man, animals and plants are on the terrestrial level. At the lowest level, the telestial level, are the mineral, chemical and electrical elements and creative thought. Just as there is a Father, there is a Mother of all men.

In a concept very close to Mormon theology, the Mental Science Institute teaches that the Father must at one time have been a child. The children of God will, in like measure, become gods. Reincarnation is part of that process. . . .

The Mental Science Institute is headquartered in Minneapolis and has covens throughout the Midwest. A Word to the Wise is a monthly newsletter. (The Encyclopedia of American Religions, 1978, vol. 2, page 285)

This article provides information which seems to show that the Mental Science Institute has borrowed some of its ideas from Mormonism. Besides the parallel concerning the Father having “been a child,” we have the words “celestial, terrestrial and telestial.” Those who are familiar with Mormonism know that Joseph Smith taught that there were three kingdoms in heaven, the celestial, terrestrial and telestial (see Doctrine and Covenants, Section 76). The idea of three heavens is not unique to Mormonism. For many years we were aware that the mystic Emanuel Swedenborg taught this doctrine before Joseph Smith was born, but we did not know whether Smith could have seen his writings. D. Michael Quinn, however, has furnished information which shows that it is possible that Joseph Smith did have access to Swedenborg’s teachings:

. . . the only pre-1830 advocate of three heavens was apparently Swedish mystic Emanuel Swedenborg. . . . Swedenborg’s publications in England since 1784, and in the United States since 1812, affirmed, “There are three heavens,” described them as “intirely [sic] distinct from each other,” called the first heaven “the celestial kingdom,” and stated that the inhabitants of the three heavens corresponded to the sun, moon, and stars . . . These views were summarized in a front-page article of 1808 at Canandaigua, New York, and in a publication that had been in Joseph Smith’s hometown library since 1817 . . . (Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, 1987, page 174) [2nd Ed., page 217]

While Joseph Smith’s view on three heavens could have been derived from Swedenborg’s writings, the idea that one of the kingdoms was named the “terrestrial” kingdom seems to be unique to Mormonism. (The word terrestrial, of course, actually means earthly.) The fact that the Mental Science Institute used the word terrestrial as a name of one of the levels of the universe leads to the view that this organization was borrowing from Mormonism. The thing that really cinches the matter, however, is the use of the word telestial for the lowest level. It is a well-known fact that this is not a real word. It was, in fact, invented by Joseph Smith in the early 1830s. It is also interesting to note that in Mormon theology the celestial kingdom itself is divided into three levels and that God the Father dwells in the highest level. The Mental Science Institute appears to have also borrowed this concept. Gordon Melton says that this group believes that the “celestial is divided into sublevels at the top of which is God the Father, . . .”
Now that we know that the Mental Science Institute was borrowing from Mormonism, it makes it even more difficult to believe that William Schnoebelen’s typewritten sheets can add any important knowledge concerning the relationship of witchcraft to Mormonism. Even if he could establish that what he has come from witchcraft ceremonies, how would we know that portions of the Mormon temple ceremony were not interpolated into these documents before they came into his hands? It seems obvious that “Eli” was well acquainted with the temple ceremony. Mr. Schnoebelen says that his “witchcraft mentor . . . told me that the highest form of witchcraft was practiced in the Mormon temples” (Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 11). Schnoebelen also says that their “witch ‘Master’ told us that the Mormon temple was an especially powerful place to go. . . . there was an occult power to be had in the temple that could be achieved nowhere else . . . .” This would almost lead one to believe that Eli had been in the temple himself, but even if this is not the case, he could have read the expose printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? or derived the information from others who had been through the ritual. It is very possible that this “witch,” who thought so highly of the ritual, might borrow portions of it to include in his own ceremonies.

However this may be, it appears that there are so many uncertainties about the typewritten pages which have been put forth to demonstrate the link between Mormonism and witchcraft that they are of little value. They cannot, in fact, be dated with any certainty. On the other hand, the strong parallels between the Mormon temple ceremony and Masonry which we have presented in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 486-489, are documented from books published between 1827 and 1860. A reverse borrowing—i.e., the Masons taking from the Mormons—is impossible since most of the material is from a book written almost two decades before the Mormons even created their ceremonies.

We fear that those who are so diligently seeking for demonic explanations for things that can be explained in other ways may be doing a real disservice to the cause of evangelizing the Mormons. Their strong and often unfounded accusations are making Mormons very bitter against those who are trying to labor among them. In addition, it is causing fear and distrust among some of those who want to witness to the Mormons. They are obviously becoming fearful that they might be dealing with hard-core Satanists. Some people are now afraid to come to Utah because of the wide publicity given to this matter. This is a real shame because what we really need is more dedicated Christians living in Utah. Some of those who have been exposed to this type of teaching are fearful of witnessing to Mormons lest they encounter exceptionally evil and powerful spirits. Although we do believe in demons, we do not feel that the majority of Mormons are actually possessed by them. We are sorry we have to say this, but it seems there are some people who will accept any wild story or theory if it puts the Mormons in a bad light. They reason that since they already know that Mormonism is false, it is all right to use anything that has an adverse effect on the system. The question of whether an accusation is true or false appears to be only a secondary consideration. It almost seems, in fact, that there is a deliberate attempt to make Mormons angry. While we must admit that at the present time this method seems to be producing some results, we feel that the long term effects will be disastrous. Even if several thousand people do leave the Mormon Church through this method, hundreds of thousands will be hardened and it will be very difficult to win them to Christ in the years to come. It is our feeling that if all this time and money had been devoted to a more reasonable approach, we would have very good results and would not have the backlash and bitterness that we have to contend with. We know that the gospel message itself is offensive to those who do not wish to receive it, but why should we add unnecessary stumbling blocks?

In almost thirty years of researching Mormonism we have not found any evidence that the Mormon Church leaders have ever held to a Lucifer-God doctrine. While it may be argued that their belief in a plurality of gods and that men may become gods is satanic because it leads people away from the true God, there is not any evidence to support the accusation that church officials have ever publicly or privately advocated the worship of Lucifer. All the evidence, in fact, points to the contrary. In all of our research regarding Mormonism, which goes back to handwritten documents created in the 1830s, we have failed to uncover any evidence for the Lucifer-God doctrine. On the other hand, we have found numerous references to the Adam-God doctrine (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 173-178D). Some of the material we have had access to is highly sensitive and reveals things that the Mormon Church did not want the world to know. While we have found material showing that Joseph Smith and other early Mormon leaders were influenced by magical practices and that there was a great deal of corruption in the early Mormon Church, we have not found a scintilla of evidence supporting the Lucifer-
God doctrine. If we had found any such evidence, we certainly would have been the very first to publish it! We plead with all those who are currently making these charges to prayerfully consider this matter and at least take the time to read our new booklet, The Lucifer-God Doctrine.

A MAGIC COVER-UP

The Bible strongly condemns the practice of magic throughout its pages. In Deuteronomy 18:10-13 we read:

> There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,
> Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard or a necromancer.
> For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee.

In the New Testament “witchcraft” is listed among the evil “works of the flesh,” and the Apostle Paul says that those who “do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God” (Galatians 5:19-21). Acts 19:19 informs us concerning some people who “used curious arts” before they were converted. At the time they confessed the Lord, however, they “brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.”

Throughout the 20th century Mormon leaders have made similar statements about magic in their writings. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie, for instance, made these emphatic declarations:

> Necromancy is that form of divination which attempts to fortell the future by consultation with the dead. Sometimes the term is enlarged to include magic in general. . . . the Lord calls it an abomination and expressly commands Israel to avoid it. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 526)

> Use of power gained from the assistance or control of evil spirits is called sorcery. Frequently this power is used in divination, necromancy, and witchcraft. . . . Sorcery has been a sinful evil in all ages. . . . at the Second Coming of the Lord sorcerers will be destroyed. . . . they shall be cast into that hell which is prepared for them . . . and finally. . . . they shall be debased with a telestial inheritance in eternity. (Ibid., page 747)

Most Mormons have not been aware of Joseph Smith’s involvement in the occult because there has been a cover-up. As Wesley P. Walters points out, Joseph Smith himself started that cover-up in the 1830s:

> . . . once he had determined to give up money digging after his close brush with the law in 1826, this occult religious interest made it easy for him to think in terms of producing a religious book from the gold plates he claimed to have discovered through the same stone he had used for his treasure hunting. . . . When Joseph later recounts this early period of his life, he minimizes his money digging as a minor affair of manual labor for an old gentleman named Josiah Stowell, whom he finally “prevailed” with to abandon such useless activity, and the many testimonies to his money digging came to be regarded as slander manufactured to persecute the young prophet of the Lord. That period when he was a sorcerer and glass looker using occult religious practices in a superstitious confidence enterprise is transformed by Joseph into the period of preparation for him to become the instrument of the Lord for bringing forth the fullness of the gospel by the publication of the Book of Mormon. . . . Sadly, his new role of prophet and seer ultimately led him further and further from the Bible's Good News about a Savior who was rich but empowered Himself to the extreme in dying forsaken on a cross for our sins, so that we might become truly rich beyond all dreams of earthly avarice through His free gift of eternal life. (Joseph Smith's Bainbridge, N. Y., Court Trials, Part 2, pages 128, 130 and 131)

With the mounting evidence of Joseph Smith’s involvement in magic, members of the Mormon Church are faced with a very weighty decision—i. e., can they accept as a prophet a man who was involved in occult practices at the very time he was supposed to have been receiving revelations from God? From the standpoint of the Bible, the question can only be answered No.

For those who cannot afford D. Michael Quinn’s book on the relationship of Mormonism and magic, we recommend our work, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry.

FALSIFYING HISTORY

We are very happy to report to our readers that all of Joseph Smith’s diaries are now available. A number of years ago we set out to publish Smith’s diaries.
With the help of H. Michael Marquardt, who made the transcriptions from microfilms and photocopies, we were successful in printing the diaries written between 1832 and 1839. Unfortunately, the fact that the Mormon Church would not allow us access to the original diaries and the poor quality of the microfilms which were then available prevented us from publishing the important Nauvoo diaries written between 1842 and 1844. Some people felt that the Mormon Church would never allow these diaries to be published, and although we felt we had a right to publish them, we feared that we might have a costly legal battle with the church. Fortunately, the confrontation never took place, and now Signature Books has printed all of the diaries in one volume. As far as we know, the Mormon Church has not filed a suit against this company. Church leaders apparently realized that even though they have possession of the original diaries, they do not own the manuscript rights. Scott H. Faulring, whom we consider to be one of the best Mormon scholars, made the transcriptions from microfilm copies of the originals which were better than the ones available to H. Michael Marquardt. The Church Historical Department could have made Mr. Faulring’s work much easier by allowing him access to the original documents; instead, however, Faulring sadly admitted that “I was not allowed access to the originals of any of the documents, all of which are currently housed in the archives of the Historical Department, . . .” (Introduction, page xv)

Scott Faulring’s monumental work is published under the title, An American Prophet’s Record: The Diaries and Journals of Joseph Smith. Unfortunately, the edition was “strictly limited to five hundred copies.” Signature Book has almost sold out this printing and we were only able to obtain 50 copies. At the present time they are available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry for $50.00 a copy (please add $2.00 for postage and handling on this particular book). While this price may seem high, the value of the first printing of all of Joseph Smith’s diaries will no doubt increase as it becomes a collector’s item. Signature Book previously published a limited edition of the Wilford Woodruff Journals for $400 and we understand that they are now worth twice that amount.

The Joseph Smith diaries are extremely important because of the light they throw on the printed History of the Church. The reader will remember that many years ago, before we had ever seen a microfilm of the diaries, we charged that although the title page for the History of the Church claimed that it was the “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet BY HIMSELF,” evidence derived from many sources showed that a large portion of it was written after his death (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142D). Dean C. Jessee, who was a member of the staff at the LDS Church Historian’s Office, later admitted that only about 40% of the History was actually written during Joseph Smith’s lifetime, and that 60% was actually authored by church officials after his death! We noted that although Joseph Smith’s diaries were probably used, there was no way to know whether they were accurately cited and that many things had come from diaries, newspapers and other publications written by other people. We produced evidence showing that these entries were altered to the first person to make it appear that they were actually written by Joseph Smith. Later we learned that portions of it were not even based on other people’s written records, but instead on whatever the Mormon leaders felt Joseph Smith should have said. The precarious nature of trying to write Joseph Smith’s history after his death and palm it off as though he were the author is demonstrated by an amusing incident. Under the date of December 26, 1842, the following is recorded in Joseph Smith’s diary: “[At] Home. Sister Emma sick, had another chill” (An American Prophet’s Record, page 258). In a speech delivered at BYU on August 6, 1987, the Mormon scholar Dean Jessee, who is an expert on Joseph Smith’s history, said that the “compiler of the [Joseph Smith] history misread the word chill for the word child, and thereby created an event that did not occur.” In the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 209, the statement concerning Emma’s illness was expanded from seven words to twenty-two, and the chill was transformed into “a son”:

On my return home, I found my wife Emma sick. She was delivered of a son, which did not survive its birth.

The Mormon officials who worked on Joseph Smith History after his death were obviously aware that there was no child living at that time who could have been born on December 26, 1842. They, therefore, made Joseph Smith say that the child “did not survive its birth.” How they were able to determine that this nonexistent child was “a son” rather than a daughter is somewhat of a mystery. While this humorous incident is not really too important as far as history goes, it certainly shows the folly of forging a first-person type of history after someone’s death. In his new book, Trials of Discipleship: The Story of William Clayton, a Mormon, the Mormon scholar James B. Allen acknowledges that Joseph Smith was credited for things he did not do:
Comparing the entries in Clayton’s journal with the History of the Church provides an interesting insight into the way the History was compiled. It is obvious that Clayton was the source for this part. But in the History of the Church Clayton is not mentioned at all—on either date—and Joseph Smith is portrayed as the one selling the property and receiving the money. Clayton, of course, was always acting as Joseph’s agent, and it appears as if whoever compiled this portion of the History of the Church was simply trying to give the prophet credit for doing as much as possible. This is also an example of the way Clayton was frequently subordinated—his activities overshadowed or ignored. But the fact that he was one of those who worked on compiling the History of the Church may be evidence that he willingly took the subordination without complaint. (Trials of Discipleship, page 106)

James B. Allen also made these revealing comments about Joseph Smith’s History:

The history was only partially complete when Joseph died, and it was finally finished in 1858. . . . One problem with Joseph Smith’s published History of the Church, however, is that it does not reflect Joseph himself as much as it reflects the image of Joseph as he was seen by scribes and journalists. The History is written in the first person, as if Joseph were doing the writing, though usually the first person account of an event is really a paraphrase or adaptation of someone else’s account. At times the only essential difference is that “Joseph,” “he,” or “President Smith” is changed to “I.” . . . William Clayton’s journal provided many such entries, which suggests that much of the “first person” Joseph Smith portrayed in the History is, in reality, only the Joseph Smith that William Clayton or someone else saw and heard. Even with that qualification, however, the work is invaluable, but there is a continuing concern whether the history as reported is always the way Joseph saw it or would have written it himself . . .

The Kinderhook episode was only a sidelight, and nothing came of it, but William Clayton made other, much more important, contributions to what became Joseph Smith’s official history. Several entries in Clayton’s Nauvoo Journal were the direct sources for entries in the history. . . . In addition, Clayton was one of several scribes who kept the “Book of the Law of the Lord.” . . . it also contains some manuscript sources used in compiling the History, and about sixty-one pages of this material were written by Clayton, mostly in the third person, and then later transposed to the first person for the sake of the published history. (Ibid., pages 115, 116 and 118)

Mormon apologists have often referred to Joseph Smith’s prophecies concerning the Latter-day Saints coming to the Rocky Mountains and the fact that Steven A. Douglas would aspire to the presidency of the United States but fail if he opposed Mormonism as evidence of Smith’s divine calling. The evidence, however, shows that both these famous prophecies found in the History of the Church are forgeries added after Joseph Smith’s death. The evidence against the Rocky Mountain prophecy is clearly detailed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pages 133-135, and 142B-142C and that concerning the fraudulent nature of the Steven A. Douglas prophecy is found in The Tanners on Trial, pages 18, 19, 134 and 135. For a long time James B. Allen has hoped to find some contemporary evidence for the Douglas prophecy. So far, however, he has found no support for it, and even though he has not completely given up, he admits the possibility that “Clayton, who was still working with the church historians and clerks when the History was being completed, was asked about the prophecy and, drawing on a vivid memory of the occasion, provided the expanded account” (Trials of Discipleship, page 120). A “memory of the occasion,” more than a decade after the purported prophecy is far inferior to a contemporary document. In all likelihood, the prophecy is about as accurate as the information concerning Joseph Smith’s “son, which did not survive its birth.”

The Mormon leaders are now condemning Mark Hofmann as a wicked deceiver for forging documents about Mormonism. They refuse, however, to face the facts concerning their own foundational documents. It appears to us that although Hofmann was lining his own pockets with the money from his forgeries, he was merely following in the footsteps of the early Mormon officials. He was taking actual historical sources and modifying them to the first person and supplying additional material from his own imagination. He felt, in fact, that he was helping restore what he believed to be the true history of the Mormon Church. Is this not exactly what church leaders did to Joseph Smith’s writings after his death? If Mark Hofmann had been alive in Brigham Young’s time, he would have had all the creative qualifications necessary to write Joseph Smith’s History. In fact, instead of being a prisoner, he might have been Church Historian!

• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •
THINK ABOUT IT!

World Vision magazine for October-November 1987, reported this stunning information about our apathy concerning the suffering which is going on in the world:

Early in August of this year, the nation’s news teams rushed to cover the crash of Northwest Airlines Flight 255. As the death toll rose to more than 150, every major newspaper and broadcast station pushed the story to the front and kept it there for days. It dominated the talk at bus stops and barber shops, at dinner tables and business meetings. Collectively, the nation noted it and shuddered.

Meanwhile, in a 24-hour period around the globe, enough children to fill 100 747 planes, died of malnutrition and related illnesses. But this tragedy, so much greater than the first, went almost unnoticed.

So you see why it troubles me that such a crucial movement as child survival is such a well kept secret. The United Nations and the World Health Organization and others have battled for years to hold down the appalling numbers of unnecessary deaths. Yet their work and the continuing crisis make few headlines. Apparently we lack a life-size picture of the problem. We fail to grasp the sheer number of children we are losing.

In the January 1985 issue of the Messenger we told of our interest in the area of world relief. At that time Utah Lighthouse Ministry decided to provide monthly support for five children under the World Vision Childcare Partner plan. This support includes food, medical relief, shelter and a demonstration of true Christian love. In the April 1986 issue of the Messenger we reported: “Because God has been so gracious in supplying all our needs, we have decided to take another step in faith. In the future we will be supporting 25 children.” God continued to bless our ministry and in March 1987 we “decided to take an even larger step of faith and expand the ministry TO SUPPORT 100 CHILDREN!” While we had some money designated for this work, it was basically a move made in faith that the Lord will continue to provide as the months passed by.

Although we cannot report at this time that this ministry has been expanded again, we are very grateful that the Lord has continued to supply the money for the 100 children. At one point our funds were just about exhausted, and this had us very concerned because we have certain obligations we must meet to continue our work among the Mormons. Fortunately, however, the Lord supplied the need in a marvelous way. We do hope that our friends will continue to pray earnestly about this matter and about the effectiveness of our work. We are continually getting good reports from Mormons who have come to know the Lord in a personal way, and we just thank God for this.

Those who are interested in helping out with this important ministry can send their tax deductible contributions to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY, Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.

OUR ANCESTRY QUESTIONED

Beginning in 1980, Robert and Rosemary Brown, a Mormon couple who live in Arizona, began questioning the claims of Mormon critics concerning their credentials and ancestry. They started out by showing that D. J. Nelson had a phony Doctor’s degree. They then attacked Walter Martin and Wayne Cowdery. They alleged that Wayne Cowdery was not a descendant of Oliver Cowdery, as he maintained, and that Walter Martin did not descend from Brigham Young. Moreover, they pounced upon Martin’s educational credentials and even questioned that he is an ordained minister. While the Browns certainly have a right to delve into these questions, they have made other serious charges that seem to go beyond the bounds of propriety.

Since we have made no special claims concerning educational credentials, Robert and Rosemary Brown have never questioned us regarding these matters. They have, however, through their attorney, tried to put us on the spot by asking for “genealogical verification” of our claims to be related to Brigham Young, the second president of the Mormon Church, and N. Eldon Tanner, who served in the First Presidency of the church. On August 27, 1982, we were mailed a letter from a lawyer representing the Religious Research Association—Robert Brown is listed as president of this organization. The letter read as follows:

I represent the Religious Research Association. They have asked me to write to you concerning numerous representations of your relationship to the Tanner Family and the Brigham Young Family. I was referred by my clients to a recent article in “Christianity Today” which evidently indicated that Mr. Jerold Tanner was related to LDS Church official N. Eldon Tanner and that Mrs. Sandra Tanner was a great-grand[d]aughter of Brigham Young. My clients have requested me to obtain genealogical verification of these relationships if possible. I would appreciate your response in providing the necessary information.
Although we have never been attacked in print about this matter, we recently received a letter from an individual who said a Mormon missionary maintained that our claims concerning our ancestry were not true. We feel, therefore, that the matter should be answered publicly. The question regarding the relationship of Jerald Tanner to N. Eldon Tanner, who was until recently a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, is answered in two different books. The first is entitled, Descendants of John Tanner, compiled by Maurice Tanner. It was published by the John Tanner Family Association in 1942. The second is John Tanner and His Family, by George S. Tanner. This book was also published by the John Tanner Family Association in 1974. Since N. Eldon Tanner himself gave a significant amount of money toward the publication of this last book (see Preface, page viii), it is inconceivable that it would contain information about Jerald Tanner if he was not part of the John Tanner family. The following, however, is found in the Introduction to John Tanner and His Family.

Other family members who are presently General Authorities are Hugh B. Brown, apostle and one-time counselor to President David O. McKay, and Nathan Eldon Tanner, apostle and counselor to four presidents. Presiding bishop of the church, Victor L. Brown is a descendant of John Tanner through Nathan. . . .

There are, of course, many family members who have done some writing. . . . But there is one couple who are unique because their writing is of an anti-Mormon nature. Jerald and Sandra Tanner are the only active anti-Mormons in the Tanner family the author is aware of. Their writings are quite extensive—the index files of the History Department of the church shows seventeen different publications. John Tanner would probably disapprove of this, as he would disapprove of any activity directed against the church he loved so well. . . . One of the chief traits of most Tanners is the desire to be where things are happening—where the action is. . . . Iona Jackson, daughter of Joseph Smith Tanner, says Brigham Young once commented that when he had a tough job to be done, he tried to find a Tanner. There is plenty of evidence that the Tanners got the job done. (John Tanner and His Family, pages 4, 12-13)

John Tanner, who is Jerald Tanner’s great-great-grandfather, joined the Mormon Church two years after it was organized. The following entry appears in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, under the date of September 26, 1833: “Brother Tanner sent his two sons to Kirtland to learn the will of the Lord, whether he should remove to Zion or Kirtland” (vol. 1, page 410). He was “counseled” to come to Kirtland. After he arrived, he gave Joseph Smith a great deal of assistance in temporal matters. Under the date of December 5, 1835, Joseph Smith recorded that “Elder Tanner brought me half of a fatted hog for the benefit of my family” (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 327). John Tanner was very wealthy at the time he met Joseph Smith and it has been suggested that Joseph Smith took advantage of his generosity. M. R. Werner, for instance, related the following:

Manna from heaven arrived in the form of John Tanner, a convert from New York. He had been healed of a lame leg by a Mormon elder, and he therefore felt called upon to sell his extensive property in New York State and live in Kirtland. He arrived there just as the mortgage on the Temple ground was about to be foreclosed. It is said that a few days before his arrival the Prophet Joseph and his brethren had assembled in prayer-meeting and asked God to send them a brother with means to lift the mortgage. Perhaps this was so, but perhaps some one had whispered to Joseph Smith that John Tanner had just sold two large farms and 2,200 acres of valuable timber land. Nevertheless, the day after his arrival in Kirtland, Tanner was invited by the Prophet to meet with the High Council. The result of the meeting was that he lent Joseph Smith $2,000, and took his note, lent the Temple Committee $13,000 and took their note, and besides these loans made liberal donations to the Temple Fund. A short time later he signed a note for $30,000 worth of merchandise. And they made him an elder; they should have made him a saint. He has achieved, however, a species of canonization, for he is held up as an example of manly righteousness and noble obedience in Scraps of Biography, a book published by the Mormon Church for its young.

With the help of God and John Tanner the Temple was finally completed, . . . (Brigham Young, New York, 1925, pages 91-92)

On pages 74, 75 and 78 of his book, John Tanner and His Family, George S. Tanner comments:

The Werner account may be more dramatic than accurate, but that his [John Tanner’s] gifts were considerable is not in doubt, and that it completely broke him financially is beyond question. . . .

It is extremely difficult at this late date to know how much Mormonism cost John Tanner in Kirtland, Ohio, but it was a sizable amount. Nathan tells us that he came to Kirtland with $10,000 in hard money which probably meant silver or gold. In addition he was carrying $13,000 in merchandise which he signed over to the Temple Committee. It is doubtful that any of the loans were ever repaid. . . .
The author is frequently asked what motivated John Tanner to remain loyal to Joseph Smith and the church after having “staked his all on his faith, the Prophet and the Church, and lost.” Those who have not been fired with religious fervor are puzzled to the point of disbelief.

In 1844, John Tanner was called on a political mission to “electioneer for Joseph [Smith] to be the next President” of the United States (see History of the Church, vol. 6, pages 325 and 336). According to the Latter-day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia, vol. 4, page 801, before John Tanner started on this “political mission,” he went to see the Prophet Joseph Smith, whom he met in the street. He held the Prophet’s note for $2,000, loaned in 1835, to redeem the Kirtland Temple farm, and in the course of the conversation he handed the Prophet his note. The Prophet not understanding what he meant by it, asked what he would have him do with it, and Father Tanner replied: “Brother Joseph, you are welcome to it.” The Prophet then laid his right hand heavily upon Father Tanner’s shoulder and said: “God bless you, Father Tanner, your children shall never beg bread.” . . . He went upon his mission, and was in the East when the Prophet and Patriarch were assassinated; . . .

In the book, Descendants of John Tanner, the ancestry of Jerald Tanner can be traced. Myron Tanner is listed as a son of John Tanner on page 25. On page 47 Caleb Thomas Tanner is listed as Myron’s son. Caleb is listed on page 129 as the father of George Tanner (not to be confused with George S. Tanner, who wrote the book we have previously cited), and on page 329, a list of George Tanner’s children are given. The second child listed is “Jerald Dee Tanner, born June 1st, 1938 at Provo, Utah.”

N. Eldon Tanner’s descent is listed as follows: John Tanner had a son named Nathan (p. 36). Nathan was the father of John William Tanner (p. 38), who was the father of Nathan William Tanner (p. 93), and on page 255 we find that N. Eldon Tanner was the son of Nathan William Tanner. In addition to the data found in the two books published by the John Tanner Family Association, Michael Marquardt has obtained an “ARCHIVE RECORD” from the L.D.S. Genealogical Library which lists the genealogy from Myron (John Tanner’s son) to George (Jerald Tanner’s father). The information we have given in the two books and the Archive Record verifies the statement in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? concerning the relationship between Jerald Tanner and N. Eldon Tanner.

In the letter from the lawyer of the organization of which Robert Brown is president, it is stated that an article in Christianity Today said “that Mrs. Sandra Tanner was a great-grand[d]aughter of Brigham Young.” Actually, the article in Christianity Today, June 16, 1982, page 31, claims that “Sandra is the great-great-granddaughter of Brigham Young.” In any case, the fact that Sandra is a descendant of Brigham Young is very easy to prove. In fact, Robert and Rosemary Brown’s attack on Walter Martin’s ancestry provides the important keys. On page 282 of their book, They Lie in Wait to Deceive, vol. 3, “Brigham Young Jr.” is listed as Brigham Young’s son by his legal wife, Mary Ann Angell. On page 291 of the same book we read that one of the sources for “Brigham Young and his Descendants” is the “Family records of Viola Young Laxton.” These records “are found on microfilm at the LDS Genealogical Archives in Salt Lake City, Utah, and are available at any of the branch genealogical libraries.” It just so happens that Viola Young Laxton is Sandra Tanner’s aunt and we have a photocopy of a genealogical record showing the ancestry from Brigham Young, Jr., down to Sandra’s mother. As we have already noted, the Browns mention Brigham Young, Jr., (Sandra’s great-grandfather) as being President Brigham Young’s son. Viola Young Laxton’s document shows that Apostle Brigham Young, Jr., married Abigail Stevens and had a son (Sandra’s grandfather) named Walter Stevens Young. Walter Stevens Young married Sylvia Amelia Pearce who gave birth to Georgia Young (Sandra’s mother) in 1915. Georgia Young married Ivan Raymond McGee in 1936. Their daughter, Sandra McGee, married Jerald Tanner in 1959. Sandra remembers visiting her great-grandmother, Abigail Stevens Young, when she was a child and has preserved a clipping from a Salt Lake City newspaper, dated December 7, 1954, which contains this interesting historical information:

Mrs. Abbie Stevens Young . . . widow of Brigham Young Jr. and one of Utah’s first trained nurses, died at her home Monday . . .

The last surviving daughter-in-law of President Brigham Young . . . Mrs. Young married Brigham Young Jr. in the old Salt Lake Endowment House on Oct. 1, 1887. President of the Council of the Twelve, he died in 1903, widowing Mrs. Young, then 33, with seven children.

Since many articles and books have already been written on Brigham Young, the second president of the Mormon Church, we will not take the space to say anything more about him here.

While we disagree with the Browns concerning Joseph Smith and the truthfulness of Mormonism, we do agree that those who write against the Mormon Church should be willing to submit to an examination of their own claims, ancestry and credentials. While we do not believe that it makes people any more qualified to write on Mormonism if they are descended from prominent Mormons, it would certainly be a blow to our integrity if it could be demonstrated that we lied about our ancestry. In this short article we have clearly demonstrated that our claims can be verified. As the Browns are prone to say after presenting their evidence: CASE CLOSED, November 2, 1987.

* * * BOOKS * * *

Confessions of a White Salamander, by Jerald Tanner. A sequel to Tracking the White Salamander: Contains lengthy extracts from Hofmann’s confession. Price: $3.95

Hofmann’s Confession. A photographic reprint of the transcripts of Mark Hofmann’s confession concerning the forgery of Mormon documents. Three volumes. Price: $25.00

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

The Lucifer-God Doctrine, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Price: $1.00

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

Capt. Wm. Morgan’s Exposition of Freemasonry: (Photo-reprint of 1827 ed.) One of the works used in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to compile the parallels between Mormonism and Masonry. Price: $3.00

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Mormon Neo-Orthodoxy: A Crisis Theology, by O. Kendall White, Jr. Price: $11.95

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT 84110
POLYGAMY AND TRUTH

FROM ITS INCEPTION TO A UNITED STATES SENATE INVESTIGATION

In his book, Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, 1951, page 324, Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe contended that “The record of Joseph’s life is one of honesty, He taught honesty in all affairs; he insisted that his people be honest; . . .” In the single volume edition of Evidences and Reconciliations, page 282, Apostle Widtsoe boasted: “The Church ever operates in full light. There is no secrecy about its doctrine, aim or work.” On page 226 of the same book, Widtsoe said that “From the beginning of its history the Church has opposed unsupported beliefs. It has fought half-truth and untruth.” In this article we want to take a close look at Joseph Smith’s doctrine of plural marriage in the light of Apostle Widtsoe’s statements concerning truth.

A TANGLED WEB

The Prophet Joseph Smith was obviously reflecting on the question of whether polygamy was right or wrong when he wrote the Book of Mormon. He ended up taking a very strong stand against it. In Jacob 2:23-24 we read:

But the word of God burdens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord: This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures, for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord.

The first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, printed in 1835, also denounced the practice: “Inasmuch as this church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife, and one woman, but one husband, except in the case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again” (Doctrine and Covenants, section 101, verse 4). This denial of polygamy, was printed in every edition of the Doctrine and Covenants until the year 1876. At that time the Mormon leaders inserted section 132, which permits a plurality of wives. Obviously, it would have been too contradictory to have one section condemning polygamy and another approving of it in the same book! Therefore, the section condemning polygamy was completely removed from the Doctrine and Covenants.

The section which was added to the Doctrine and Covenants in 1876 was a revelation given by Joseph Smith on July 12, 1843. It is still published in the Doctrine and Covenants even though the church has gone back to practicing monogamy. The following is taken from Joseph Smith’s revelation (the reader will notice that it begins by contradicting the statement in the Book of Mormon which said that “David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, . . .”):

\[
\text{Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Joseph, that inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand to know and understand wherein I, the Lord justified my servants Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as also Moses,}
\]

 Extra Copies of This Issue Will Be Sent Free ***
David and Solomon, my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines—

Therefore, prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you; for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same.

For behold, I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory.

And again, very I say unto you, if a man marry a wife by my word, which is my law, and by the new and everlasting covenant, . . . they shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation . . .

Then they shall be gods, because they have no end; . . .

God commanded Abraham, and Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham to wife. . . .

Was Abraham, therefore, under condemnation? Verily I say unto you, Nay; for I, the Lord, commanded it. . . .

Abraham received concubines, and they bore him children; and it was accounted unto him for righteousness, . . .

David also received many wives and concubines, and also Solomon and Moses my servants. . . . and in nothing did they sin save in those things which they received not of me.

David’s wives and concubines were given unto him of me, . . .

And let mine handmaid, Emma Smith, receive all those that have been given unto my servant Joseph, and who are virtuous and pure before me; and those who are not pure, and have said they were pure, shall be destroyed, saith the Lord God . . .

Let no one, therefore, set on my servant Joseph; for I will justify him; . . .

And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood—if any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he cannot commit adultery with that that belongeth unto him and to no one else.

And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he cannot commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him; therefore is he justified. (Doctrine and Covenants, section 132, verses 1-4, 19, 20, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 52, 60-62)

Just when and how the practice of plural marriage started in the Mormon Church has caused much controversy. There is evidence, however, to show that it was secretly practiced when the church was in Kirtland, Ohio, in the 1830’s. In the Introduction to volume 5 of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, Mormon historian B. H. Roberts reveals that the “date in the heading of the Revelation [July 12, 1843] . . . notes the time at which the revelation was committed to writing, not the time at which the principles set forth in the revelation were first made known to the Prophet.” The Mormon writer John J. Stewart commented: “. . . Joseph as a servant of God was authorized to enter plural marriage, and it is not at all unlikely that he did so in the early or mid-1830’s. Perhaps Nancy Johnson or Fanny Alger was his first ‘plural’ wife at Hiram or Kirtland, Ohio” (Brigham Young and His Wives, page 31). Oliver Cowdery, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, claimed that there was a relationship between Joseph Smith and Fanny Alger but he felt it was an adulterous relationship. In a letter dated January 21, 1838, Cowdery wrote:

When he [Joseph Smith] was there we had some conversation in which in every instance I did not fail to affirm that what I had said was strictly true. A dirty, nasty, filthy affair of his and Fanny Alger’s was talked over in which I strictly declared that I had never deviated from the truth in the matter, and as I supposed was admitted by himself. (Letter written by Oliver Cowdery and recorded by his brother Warren Cowdery; see photograph in The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 27)

As we have shown, Mormon apologists put the best possible light on this embarrassing situation. Andrew Jenson, who was the Assistant Church Historian, made a list of 27 women who were sealed to Joseph Smith. In this list he talked of “Fanny Alger, one of the first plural wives sealed to the Prophet” (Historical Record, May 1887, vol. 6, page 233).

In any case, Mormon leaders admit that by July 12, 1843, when the revelation was supposed to have been given, Joseph Smith had already acquired plural wives. The revelation itself makes it clear that he was already involved with a number of women besides his wife, Emma: “And let mine handmaid, Emma Smith, receive all those that have been given unto my servant Joseph, . . .” (verse 52)

The revelation itself (verse 61) makes it clear that the first wife must “give her consent.” Joseph Smith, however, did not follow the rules of his own revelation, for he took plural wives without seeking consent. Emily Dow Partridge, for instance, testified that she and her sister were married to Joseph without Emma’s consent:

. . . the Prophet Joseph and his wife Emma offered us a home in their family. . . . We had been there about a year when the principle of plural marriage was made known to us, and I was married to Joseph Smith on the 4th of March 1843, Elder Heber C. Kimball performing the ceremony. My sister Eliza was also married to Joseph a few days later. This was done without the knowledge of Emma Smith. Two months afterward she consented to give her husband two wives, providing he would give her the privilege of choosing them. She accordingly chose my sister Eliza and myself, and to save family trouble Brother Joseph thought it best to have another ceremony performed. Accordingly on the 11th of May, 1843, we were sealed to Joseph Smith a second time, in Emma’s presence, . . . From that very hour, however, Emma was our bitter enemy. We remained in the family several months after this, but things went from bad to worse until we were obligated to leave the house and find another home. (Historical Record, vol. 6, page 240)

As we have already indicated, Assistant Church Historian Andrew Jenson listed 27 women who were sealed to Joseph Smith. The Mormon author John J. Stewart, however, states that Smith “married many other women, perhaps three or four dozen or more . . .” (Brigham Young and His Wives, page 31). In No Man Knows My History, Fawn M. Brodie included a list of 48 women who may have been married to Joseph Smith. Stanley S. Ivins, who was considered to be “one of the great authorities on Mormon polygamy,” said that the number of Joseph Smith’s wives “can only be guessed at, but it might have gone as high as sixty or more” (Western Humanities Review, vol. 10, pages 232-233).

In the Preface to the Second Edition of her book No Man Knows My History, Fawn Brodie revealed:

. . . over two hundred women, apparently at their own request, were sealed as wives to Joseph Smith after his death in special temple ceremonies. Moreover, a great many distinguished women in history, including several Catholic saints, were also sealed to Joseph Smith in Utah. I saw these astonishing lists in the Latter-day Saint Genealogical Archives in Salt Lake City in 1944.

Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe admitted that “Women no longer living, whether in Joseph’s day or later, have also been sealed to the Prophet for eternity” (Evidences and Reconciliations, single volume edition, pages 342-343). If the Mormon doctrine concerning plural marriage were true, Joseph Smith would have hundreds of wives in the resurrection!

Some of the Mormon men seemed to have an insatiable desire for plural wives. Wilford Woodruff, the fourth president of the church, was sealed to about 400 dead women. According to the journal of the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, a man could have up to 999 wives sealed to him for eternity:

THURSDAY, APRIL 5th, 1894. . . . I met with the Quorum and Presidency in the temple. . . . President Woodruff then spoke “. . . In searching out my genealogy I found about four hundred of my female kindred who were never married. I asked Pres. Young what I should do with them. He said for me to have them sealed to me unless there were more that [than?] 999 of them. The doctrine startled me, but I had it done, . . .” (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” April 5, 1894, vol. 18, pages 66-67; original located at the Brigham Young University Library)

OTHER MEN’S WIVES

The fact that Joseph Smith asked for other men’s wives was made very plain in a sermon given in the Tabernacle by Jedediah M. Grant, second counselor to Brigham Young. In this sermon, delivered February 19, 1854, Grant revealed:

When the family organization was revealed from heaven—the patriarchal order of God, and Joseph began, on the right and on the left, to add to his family, what a quaking there was in Israel. Says one brother to another, “Joseph says all covenants are done away, and none are binding but the new covenants: now suppose Joseph should come and say he wanted your wife, what would you say to that?” “I would tell him to go to hell.” This was the spirit of many in the early days of this Church. . . .

What would a man of God say, who felt aright, when Joseph asked him for his money? He would say, “Yes, and I wish I had more to help to build up the kingdom of God.” Or if he came and said, “I want your wife?” “O yes,” he would say, “here she is, there are plenty more.” . . . Did the Prophet Joseph want every man’s wife he asked for? . . . If such a man of God should come to me and say, “I want your gold and silver, or your wives,” I should say, “Here they are, I wish I had more to give you, take all I have got.” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, pages 13-14)

Ann Eliza Young, who had been married to Brigham Young, charged that Joseph Smith was guilty of adultery:

Joseph not only paid his addresses to the young and unmarried women, but he sought “spiritual alliance” with many married ladies . . . He taught them that all former marriages were null and void, and that they were at perfect liberty to make another choice of a husband. The marriage covenants were not binding, because they were ratified only by Gentile laws. . . . consequently all the women were free. . . .

One woman said to me not very long since, while giving me some of her experiences in polygamy: “The greatest trial I ever endured in my life was living with my husband and deceiving him, by receiving Joseph’s attentions whenever he chose to come to me.”
This woman, and others, whose experience has been very similar, are among the very best women in the church; they are as pure-minded and virtuous women as any in the world. They were seduced under the guise of religion, . . .

Some of these women have since said they did not know who was the father of their children; this is not to be wondered at, for after Joseph's declaration annulling all Gentile marriages, the greatest promiscuity was practiced; and, indeed, all sense of morality seemed to have been lost by a portion at least of the church. (Wife No. 19, 1876, pages 70-71)

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe admitted that Joseph Smith was sealed to married women, but he claimed that they were not to be his wives until after death:

7. Another kind of celestial marriages seems to have been practiced in the early days of plural marriage. It has not been practised since Nauvoo days, for it is under Church prohibition. Zealous women, married or unmarried, . . . considered their condition in the hereafter. Some of them asked that they might be sealed to the Prophet for eternity. They were not to be his wives on earth, in mortality, but only after death in the eternities. . . . Such marriages led to misunderstandings by those not of the Church. . . . Therefore any ceremony uniting a married woman, for example to Joseph Smith for eternity seemed adulterous to such people. Yet, in any day, in our day, there may be women who prefer to spend eternity with another than their husband on earth. (Evidences and Reconciliations, 1960, page 343)

John A. Widtsoe's statement that Joseph Smith did not live with the married women to whom he was sealed is certainly false. Patty Bartlett Sessions, the wife of John A. Widtsoe, stated:

I was sealed to Joseph Smith by Willard Richards Mar 9, 1842, in Newel K. Whitney's chamber, Nauvoo, for time and all eternity, . . . Sylvia my daughter was present when I was sealed to Joseph Smith. I was after Mr. Sessions' death sealed to John Parry for time on the 27th, March, 1852, GSL City. (Journal of Patty Sessions, as quoted in Intimate Disciple, Portrait of Willard Richards, 1957, page 611)

Mary Elizabeth Rollins Lightner, the wife of Adam Lightner, stated:

Joseph said I was his before I came here and he said all the Devils in Hell should never get me from him, I was sealed to him in the Masonic Hall, . . . by Brigham Young in February 1842 and then again in the Nauvoo Temple by Heber C. Kimball. . . . (Affidavit of Mary Elizabeth Rollins Lightner, as cited in No Man Knows My History, page 444)

In a speech given at Brigham Young University (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 215-216), Mrs. Lightner said that Joseph claimed an "angel" came with a "drawn sword" and told him that if he did not enter into polygamy "he would slay him." She frankly admitted that she "had been dreaming for a number of years that I was his [Joseph's] wife." Since both Joseph and herself were already married, she "felt it was a sin." Joseph, however, convinced her that the "Almighty" had revealed the principle and while her "husband was far away," she was sealed to him.

In a study on Joseph Smith's wives, which we published in Joseph Smith and Polygamy, pages 41-47, Stanley Ivins wrote the following:

22. — MARY ELIZABETH ROLLINS LIGHTNER. Daughter of John Rollins and wife of Adam Lightner . . . Married Lightner on August 11, 1835. Married Joseph Smith in February, 1843. . . . On January 17, 1846 she was sealed to Joseph Smith for eternity and to Brigham Young for time. However she remained with her legal husband and came to Utah with him in 1863.

It would appear, then, that Mary E. Lightner had two different husbands for "time" and a third for "eternity," Mormon writer John J. Stewart confirms this in his book Brigham Young and His Wives, page 89:

17. Mary Elizabeth Rollins. Born April 9, 1818 at Luna, New York; died December 17, 1913. The wife of a non-Mormon, Adam Lightner. Sealed to the Prophet Joseph in February, 1842, at the age of 23, and again January 17, 1846, at which time she was sealed to Brigham for time.

In our publications, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and Joseph Smith and Polygamy, we present so much evidence that it is hard to escape the conclusion that Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were living in adultery. In an unpublished sermon by President Brigham Young, which has been preserved in the Historical Department of the Mormon Church, he revealed that it was possible for a man who held a "higher power" in the priesthood to take someone else's wife without a divorce:

I will give you a few words of Doctrine, . . . Br Watt will write it, but it is not my intention to have it published; therefore pay good attention, and store it up in your memories. . . . Can a woman be freed from a man to whom she is sealed? Yes, but a bill of divorcement does not free her. . . . How can a woman be made free from a man to whom she has been sealed for time and all eternity? There are two ways. . . . The second way in which a wife can be separated from her husband, while he continues to be faithful to his God and his priesthood, I have not revealed, except to a few Joseph Smith went to great lengths to conceal his practice of plural marriage. H. Michael Marquardt discovered that he even had a pretended marriage performed to cover up his own marriage to Sarah Ann Whitney. On July 27, 1842, the Mormon Prophet gave a revelation to Newel K. Whitney, that he was to seal his daughter, Sarah Ann, “to Joseph Smith, to be his wife.” In his booklet, The Strange Marriages of Sarah Ann Whitney to Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, Joseph C. Kingsbury and Heber C. Kimball, Mr. Marquardt reveals how he uncovered the fact that Joseph Smith actually performed a “pretended” marriage ceremony between Sarah Ann Whitney and Joseph C. Kingsbury so that his own relationship with her would not be noticed. Mr. Marquardt cited the following from “The History of Joseph C. Kingsbury,” a document that is now in the Western Americana section of the University of Utah Library:

> ... on 29th of April 1843 I according to President Joseph Smith Council & others agreed to Stand by Sarah Ann Whitney as supposed to be her husband & had a pretended marriage for the purpose of Bringing about the purposes of God ...

Marquardt also found that Joseph Smith signed a document in which he stated: “I hereby certify, that I have upon this the 29th day of April 1843, joined together in marriage Joseph C. Kingsbury and Sarah Ann Whitney, in the City of Nauvoo, Illinois.” It seems difficult to believe that a man professing to be a prophet of God would perform a “pretended” marriage to cover up his own iniquity. In his pamphlet, Mr. Marquardt goes on to show that after Joseph Smith’s death, Sarah Ann Whitney continued to live with Joseph C. Kingsbury in this “pretended” marriage—he referred to her as “Sarah my Supposed wife.” While still living with Kingsbury, she married the Apostle Heber C. Kimball. She was married to Kimball for time and sealed to Joseph Smith for eternity in the Nauvoo temple on January 12, 1846. She became pregnant with Apostle Kimball’s child but continued to live with Kingsbury until after the child was born. For more information on these strange marriages see Michael Marquardt’s pamphlet, The Strange Marriages of Sarah Ann Whitney. Marquardt’s research has brought into focus the total disregard Joseph Smith had for marriage vows. Not only did he break the sacred vows he took with his first wife, Emma, but he also encouraged Sarah Ann Whitney to take false vows pledging herself to Joseph C. Kingsbury to cover up the fact that she would be having a sexual relationship with Joseph Smith. The marriage ceremony which was supposed to be used at that time contained the following:

> You both mutually agree to be each other’s companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives. (Doctrine and Covenants, 1835 edition, section 101, verse 2)

According to the diary of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton, Smith would even go so far as to initiate a fake excommunication from the church to make it appear that he did not believe in polygamy:

> Thursday 19. . . . Prest. J. . . . began to tell me that E. was turned quite friendly & kind. . . . He said it was her advice that I should keep M [Clayton’s plural wife Margaret] at home and it was also his council. Says he just keep her at home and brook it and if they raise trouble about it and bring you before me I will give you an awful scourging & probably cut you off from the church and then I will baptise you & set you ahead as good as ever. (William Clayton’s Diary, October 19, 1843, Andrew Ehat’s typed extracts)

In the Mormon paper, Times and Seasons, Joseph Smith actually announced the excommunication of a man who had been preaching polygamy:

> THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1844.

> NOTICE.

> As we have lately been credibly informed, that an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter-day Saints, by the name of Hiram Brown, has been preaching... polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, in the county of Lapeer, state of Michigan.

This is to notify him and the Church in general, that he has been cut off from the church, for his iniquity, and he is further notified to appear at the Special Conference, on the 6th of April next, to make answer to these charges.

JOSEPH SMITH,
HYRUM SMITH,
Presidents of said Church.

(Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 423)

An index to the Times and Seasons reveals nothing further regarding Hiram Brown, and he is not mentioned at all in the large index of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church compiled by E. Keith Howick. If Hiram Brown was a real person, this may be an example of the type of fake excommunication mentioned in Clayton’s diary. In any case, it seems to be a strange way to handle an excommunication. It appears to be nothing but propaganda by the Smith brothers to cover their own iniquity.

ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL

After 1852, when the Mormon Church was openly practicing polygamy, the leaders of the church were declaring that it was absolutely essential for exaltation. Joseph F. Smith, who served as the sixth president of the church, made this emphatic declaration concerning the importance of polygamy:

Some people have supposed that the doctrine of plural marriage was a sort of superfluity, or non-essential to the salvation of mankind. In other words, some of the Saints have said, and believe that a man with one wife, sealed to him by the authority of the Priesthood for time and eternity, will receive an exaltation as great and glorious, if he is faithful, as he possibly could with more than one. I want here to enter my protest against this idea, for I know it is false . . . Therefore, whoever has imagined that he could obtain the fullness of the blessings pertaining to this celestial law, by complying with only a portion of its conditions, has deceived himself. He cannot do it. When that principle was revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, . . . he did not falter, although it was not until an angel of God, with a drawn sword, stood before him and commanded that he should enter into the practice of that principle, or he should be utterly destroyed, or rejected . . .

If then, this principle was of such great importance that the Prophet himself was threatened with destruction, . . . it is useless to tell me that there is no blessing attached to obedience to the law, or that a man with only one wife can obtain as great a reward, glory or kingdom as he can with more than one, . . .

I understand the law of celestial marriage to mean that every man in this Church, who has the ability to obey and practice it in righteousness and will not, shall be damned, I say I understand it to mean this and nothing less, and I testify in the name of Jesus that it does mean that. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 20, pages 28-31)

In 1891 the First Presidency and Apostles of the Mormon Church made the following statement in a petition to the President of the United States: “We formerly taught to our people that polygamy or celestial marriage as commanded by God through Joseph Smith was right; that it was a necessity to man’s highest exaltation in the life to come” (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 18).

Brigham Young made this uncompromising statement on August 19, 1866:

The only men who become Gods, even the Sons of God, are those who enter into polygamy. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 11, page 269)

John Taylor, the third president of the church, claimed that he believed in keeping all the laws of the United States “except one”—i.e., “The law in relation to polygamy” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 20, page 317). Thomas G. Alexander, of Brigham Young University, admitted that “long after the 1879 Reynolds decision, Church members brought to bar for sentencing told federal judges that the law of God was higher than the law of the land and deserved prior obedience. The Manifesto officially ending polygamy as Church practice was not issued until 1890, and excommunication for practicing plural marriage did not come until 1904” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1966, page 128). The Mormons continued to openly preach polygamy until the year 1890. During this period the leaders taught that it was going to be a permanent part of the church and that it would never be stopped. Heber C. Kimball, First Counselor to Brigham Young, emphasized that the “principle of plurality of wives never will be done away, . . .” (Deseret News, November 7, 1855). Kimball also warned:

Some quietly listen to those who speak . . . against the plurality of wives, and against almost every principle that God has revealed. Such persons have half-a-dozen devils with them all the time. You might as well deny “Mormonism,” and turn away from it, as to oppose the plurality of wives. Let the Presidency of this Church, and the Twelve Apostles, and all the authorities unite and say with one voice that they will oppose the doctrine, and the whole of them will be damned. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 203)
In another discourse, Kimball made this emphatic declaration: “It would be as easy for the United States to build a tower to remove the sun, as to remove polygamy, or the Church and kingdom of God” (Millennial Star, vol. 28, page 190).

Apostle Orson Pratt strongly affirmed that it was absolutely essential that polygamy not be given up by the church:

God has told us Latter-day Saints that we shall be condemned if we do not enter into that principle; and yet I have heard now and then . . . a brother or sister say, “I am a Latter-day Saint, but I do not believe in polygamy.” Oh, what an absurd expression! What an absurd idea! A person might as well say, “I am a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, but I do not believe in him.” One is just as consistent as the other . . . If the doctrine of polygamy, as revealed to the Latter-day Saints, is not true, I would not give a fig for all your other revelations that came through Joseph Smith the Prophet; I would renounce the whole of them, because it is utterly impossible. . . . to believe a part of them to be divine—from God—and a part of them to be from the devil; . . . The Lord has said that those who reject this principle reject their salvation, they shall be damned, saith the Lord; . . .

Now I want to prophecy a little. . . . I want to prophecy that all men who oppose the revelation which God has given in relation to polygamy will find themselves in darkness; the Spirit of God will withdraw from them the very moment of their opposition to that principle, until they will finally go down to hell and be damned, if they do not repent. . . . if you do not become as dark as midnight there is no truth in Mormonism. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 17, pages 224-225)

In the Deseret News for October 10, 1866, President Brigham Young responded to a question which was frequently asked:

“Do you think that we shall ever be admitted as a State into the Union without denying the principle of polygamy?” If we are not admitted until then, we shall never be admitted.

The Mormons did everything they could to escape the federal deputies. Kimball Young gives this information:

In addition to false names, disguises, and ruses, a whole system of information gathering, signaling, and spotting informers was developed. For example, the church authorities would pass the word down to the smaller communities of movements of federal deputies out of Salt Lake City in the direction of any particular town. (Isn’t One Wife Enough? page 396)

Wilford Woodruff, who became the fourth president of the church, had an armed guard to protect him. In a letter written in 1887, Woodruff wrote:

I have a large stout man who goes with me every [where?] night and day [he] carries 2 pistols & a double barrel shot gun and says he will shoot the marshals if they come to take me (Dont tell anybody this) so I am _____ well garded . . . (Letter from Wilford Woodruff to Miss Nellie Atkin, dated Sept. 3,1887, microfilm copy of the original)

By 1890 the church leaders were using bribery to prevent the government from arresting them. Under the dates of October 17 and 18, 1890, Apostle Abraham H. Cannon recorded the following in his journal:

Uncle David came in about noon and told me . . . a deputy marshal . . . told him that there were papers out for my arrest, . . . I got Chas H Wilcken to investigate . . . Bro. Wilcken came and informed me that he had bought Doyle off, and had got his promise that I should not be molested, nor should any other person without sufficient notice being given for them to escape, and to get witnesses out of the way. He gave Bro. Wilcken the names of some 51 persons whose arrest he intended to try to effect . . . A messenger was therefore despatched to give these people warning. Thus with a little money a channel of communication is kept open between the government offices and the suffering and persecuted Church members.

The government increased the pressure against polygamy, but the Mormons were determined to continue the practice. Shortly before the revelation known as the Manifesto (which declared an end to the practice of polygamy) was given, Lorenzo Snow, who later became president of the church, was claiming that no such revelation would ever come. When Snow was on trial for practicing polygamy, Mr. Bierbower, the prosecuting attorney, predicted that if he was convicted, “a new revelation would soon follow, changing the divine law of celestial marriage.” To this Lorenzo Snow responded:

Whatever fame Mr. Bierbower may have secured as a lawyer, he certainly will fail as a prophet. The severest prosecutions have never been followed by revelations changing a divine law, obedience to which brought imprisonment or martyrdom.

Though I go to prison, God will not change his law of celestial marriage. But the man, the people, the nation, that oppose and fight against this doctrine and the Church of God, will be overthrown. (Historical Record, 1886, vol. 5, page 144)
Although Lorenzo Snow said that the “severest prosecutions have never been followed by revelations changing a divine law,” Wilford Woodruff, the fourth president of the church, issued the Manifesto in 1890. He claimed the Manifesto was given to stop the persecution the church would have to go through if the Mormons continued to practice polygamy. He stated:

The Lord showed me by vision and revelation exactly what would happen if we did not stop this practice . . . all ordinances would be stopped . . . many men would be made prisoners . . . I went before the Lord, and I wrote what the Lord told me to write . . . (Evidences and Reconciliations, 3 volume edition, pages 105-106)

Before Wilford Woodruff became president of the Mormon Church, he maintained that the church could not give up polygamy (see Journal of Discourses, vol. 13, page 166). On January 26, 1880, Woodruff even claimed to have a revelation which threatened the United States with destruction if it continued to oppose the “Patriarchal Law”—i.e., plural marriage:

Thus saith the Lord unto my servant Wilford Woodruff . . . it is not my will that mine Elders should fight the Battles of Zion for I will fight your Battles. . . . The Nation is ripened in iniquity and the Cup of the wrath of mine indignation is full, and I will not stay my hand in Judgment upon this Nation . . .

And I say again wo unto that Nation or House or people, who seek to hinder my People from obeying the Patriarchal Law of Abraham which leadeth to a Celestial Glory . . . for whosoever doeth these things shall be damned Saith the Lord of Hosts and shall be broken up & washed away from under Heaven by the Judgments which I have sent forth and shall not return unto me void. (Wilford Woodruff’s Journal, edited by Scott G. Kenney, vol. 7, pages 615-617)

AN INVESTIGATION

According to the Mormon historian D. Michael Quinn, Mormon Church leaders considered the possibility of signing a document like the Manifesto on December 20, 1888, and rejected the idea:

After this overwhelming repudiation, Woodruff told the apostles, “Had we yielded to that document every man of us would have been under condemnation before God. The Lord never will give a revelation to abandon plural marriage.” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, page 35)

Because of the fact that Wilford Woodruff had previously taught that polygamy could not be discontinued and had even claimed to have revelations to that effect, the other leaders of the church were confused by his Manifesto. Apostle Cannon’s journal shows that there was division among the highest leaders of the church at the time the Manifesto was issued (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 234).

While the Manifesto was approved by the membership of the church, the Mormon writer Russell R. Rich admits that “not even among the general authorities of the Church was there unanimous support for abolishing the practice” (Brigham Young University Week, Those Who Would Be Leaders, page 71).

In October, 1891, President Woodruff testified that the Manifesto not only prohibited any more plural marriages, but that it also forbid the unlawful cohabitation of those who were already in polygamy. While Wilford Woodruff and other Mormon leaders were publicly stating that members of the church should observe the law concerning unlawful cohabitation, they were secretly teaching that it was all right to break it. The leaders of the Mormon Church, in fact, had promised the government they would obey the law of the land, but many of them broke their promises. Few people, however, realized to what extent until they were called to testify in the “Proceedings Before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate in the Matter of the Protests Against the Right of Hon. Reed Smoot, a Senator From the State of Utah, to Hold His Seat.” Joseph F. Smith, who was the sixth President of the church, testified as follows in the Reed Smoot Case:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you obey the law in having five wives at this time, and having them bear to you eleven children since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that in that case I have obeyed the law of the land.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. SMITH. I do not claim so, and I have said before that I prefer to stand my chances against the law. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 197)

Mr. TAYLER. You say there is a State law forbidding unlawful cohabitation?

Mr. SMITH. That is my understanding.

Mr. TAYLER. And ever since that law was passed you have been violating it?

Mr. SMITH. I think likely I have been practicing the same thing even before the law was passed. (Ibid., p. 130)

The CHAIRMAN. . . . you are violating the law?

Mr. SMITH. The law of my State?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?
Mr. SMITH. It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land? Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?
Mr. SMITH. I have admitted that, Mr. Senator, a great many times here. (Ibid., pages 334-335)

When Senator Hoar was questioning President Joseph F. Smith concerning polygamy, Smith finally stated: “I presume I am the greatest culprit” (page 312).

Charles E. Merrill, the son of the Apostle Marriner W. Merrill, testified that he took a plural wife after the Manifesto and that his father performed the ceremony:

Mr. TAYLER. . . . When was it you married your second wife; that is, the second wife you now have? Mr. MERRILL. In the fall of 1888.

. . .

Mr. TAYLER. And the next marriage took place in 1891? Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. Who married you in 1891? Mr. MERRILL. My father.
Mr. TAYLER. When were you married? Mr. MERRILL. I could not give you the exact date, but it was in March.
Mr. TAYLER. 1891? Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAYLER. Was your father then an apostle? Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pages 408-409)

Walter M. Wolfe, who was at one time professor of geology at Brigham Young College, claimed that the Apostle John-Henry Smith made this statement to him:

“Brother Wolfe, don’t you know that the manifesto is only a trick to beat the devil at his own game?”
(Reed Smoot Case, vol. 4, page 13)

Anthony W. Ivins, who later became a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, was appointed by the church leaders to perform plural marriages in Mexico after the Manifesto. His son, Stanley S. Ivins, told us that his father received instructions after the Manifesto to perform marriages for time and all eternity outside of the Mormon temples. He received a ceremony for these marriages (which Stanley S. Ivins had in his possession). He was sent to Mexico and was told that when the First Presidency wanted a plural marriage performed they would send a letter with the couple who were to be married. Whenever he received these letters from the First Presidency, he knew that it was all right to perform the ceremony. After his father’s death, Stanley S. Ivins copied the names of those who had been married in polygamy into another book and then gave the original book to the Mormon leaders. Wallace Turner writes:

More than fifty polygamist marriages were easily identifiable, beginning in June, 1897, when three men from Utah were married at Juarez, . . . They had crossed over into Mexico just for the marriage ceremony, then went back into the United States. However, Ivins refused to perform marriages for the regular population of the Mormon colonies because the men lacked the letters from Salt Lake City which he considered to be his authority for the ceremony. However, by 1898 polygamous marriages were being performed routinely in Mexico by other Mormon leaders. (The Mormon Establishment, 1966, page 187)

Stanley Ivins claimed that his father continued to perform plural marriages for the church until the year 1904. In the Reed Smoot Case, vol. 4, page 11, Walter M. Wolfe testified that Ovena Jorgensen told him how she had obtained approval from George Q. Cannon, of the First Presidency, to enter into polygamy. Stanley S. Ivins confirmed the fact that his father, Anthony W. Ivins, performed the marriage ceremony. Stanley Ivins related to us that Walter Wolfe’s testimony concerning this marriage hurt the church’s image so much that the First Presidency of the church sent Anthony Ivins a letter requesting him to go back to Washington, D. C. and give false testimony before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate. The First Presidency of the Mormon Church actually wanted him to lie under oath and state he did not perform the ceremony. Stanley Ivins said that even if Walter Wolfe’s testimony did damage the image of the church, his father refused to go back to Washington, D. C. and lie about the marriage.

Frank J. Cannon, a very prominent Mormon who served as United States Senator for Utah, related that just after the death of his brother, Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, in July 1896, his father, George Q. Cannon, told him that it was fortunate for the church that Abraham had died because he had taken Lillian Hamlin as a plural wife. This fact had become known, and he “would have had to face a prosecution in Court.” President Cannon denied that he had anything to do with the marriage (a claim that is inconsistent with facts which have recently come to light) and went on to say:

President Smith obtained the acquiescence of President Woodruff, on the plea that it wasn’t an ordinary case of polygamy but merely a fulfillment of the biblical instruction that a man should take his dead brother’s wife. Lillian was betrothed to David, and had been sealed to him in eternity after his death. I understand that President Woodruff told Abraham he would leave the matter with them if he wished to take the responsibility—and President Smith performed the ceremony. (Under the Prophet in Utah, pages 176-177)

According to the diary of Abraham H. Cannon, his father, George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency, lamented the fact that his sons could not raise up seed to David through polygamy: “My son David died without seed, and his brothers cannot do a work for him, in rearing children to bear his name because of the manifesto” (Journal of Abraham H. Cannon, April 5, 1894, vol. 19, page 70). From an entry in Apostle Cannon’s diary for October 24, 1894, it would appear that the Mormon leaders had decided that a plural marriage could be performed in Mexico to raise up seed to David. Although the diary has been damaged at this point and a few words are missing, the remaining portion shows that the Mormon leaders did not take the Manifesto seriously:

After meeting I went to the President’s Office and ______ Father [George Q. Cannon] about taking a wife for David. I told him David had taken Annie[.] cousin, through the vail in life, and suggested she might be a good pe______ sealed to him for eternity. The suggestion pleased Father very much, and ______ Angus was there, He spoke to him about it in the presence of the Presidency. ______ not object providing Annie is willing. The Presidents Woodruff and Smith both said[ ] they were willing for such a ceremony to occur, if done in Mexico, and Pres. Woodruff[ ] promised the Lord’s blessing to follow such an act.” (Journal of Abraham H. Cannon, October 24, 1894, vol. 18, page 170; original at Brigham Young University)

The Mormon scholar D. Michael Quinn, professor of American History at Brigham Young University, has found another important reference which he feels proves beyond all doubt that “President Woodruff personally authorized Apostle Abraham H. Cannon to marry a new plural wife…” This reference is also in Apostle Cannon’s own journal:

“Father [George Q. Cannon] also spoke to me about taking some good girl and raising up seed by her for my brother David. . . . Such a ceremony as this could be performed in Mexico, so Pres. Woodruff has said.” (Abraham H. Cannon Journal, October 19, 1894, as cited in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, page 62)

It is startling, to say the least, that President Wilford Woodruff approved of and promised “the Lord’s blessing” on the plural marriage which was being planned. This was four years after he published a “solemn” denial of the practice in the Manifesto: “We are not teaching polygamy or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants, Official Declaration).

It was some two years after the plural marriage was approved by the First Presidency that Abraham Cannon actually took Lillian Hamlin as his plural wife. The evidence indicates that Joseph F. Smith, who became the 6th president of the church, married the couple himself. President Smith denied that he performed the ceremony, but he acknowledged: “I accompanied Abraham H. Cannon and his wife on that trip, and had one of my wives with me on that trip” (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 111). When President Smith was asked when he first learned that Lillian Hamlin was Apostle Cannon’s wife, he responded: “The first that I suspected anything of the kind was on that trip, because I never knew the lady before” (Ibid.). Like the other Mormon leaders, Joseph F. Smith was supposed to be doing all in his power to prevent the practice of polygamy, yet his testimony gives the impression that he was oblivious to what was going on when he went on the trip with Lillian Hamlin and Apostle Cannon:

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you have any talk on that journey or after you left Salt Lake—after you first heard or learned that Lillian Hamlin was the wife of Abraham Cannon—as to when they were married?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you have any talk with either of them?

Mr. SMITH. Not in the least.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not in the least?

Mr. SMITH. Not in the least, sir; and no one ever mentioned to me that they were or were not married. I simply judged they were married because they were living together as husband and wife.

. . . .

Mr. TAYLOR. Did you say anything by way of criticism to Abraham Cannon?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 128)

Unfortunately, Abraham Cannon’s 1896 journal is not available. D. Michael Quinn informs us that “Apostle Cannon’s 1896 diary is the only volume missing of his many diaries…” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, pages 83-84). John Henry Hamlin, however, testified that his sister, Lillian Hamlin, was married to Apostle Cannon. When he was asked who performed the ceremony, he replied: “Well, our understanding was that President Joseph F. Smith married her.” Wilhelmina C. Ellis, who had been one of Apostle Cannon’s wives, testified that Abraham Cannon was not married to Lillian Hamlin until he went on the trip with President Smith:

Mr. TAYLER. What conversation did you have with him then about his going away and about his getting married again? What did he say first about going?

Mrs. ELLIS. He told me be was going to marry her for time, and that she would be David’s wife for eternity.

Mr. TAYLER. What did he say about Miss Hamlin?

Mrs. ELLIS. . . . he said she was going with him and President Smith. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 2, page 143)

Because her husband was not married to Lillian Hamlin when he left on the trip with Joseph F. Smith and came back as her husband, Mrs. Ellis inferred that President Smith had performed the marriage ceremony. She admitted, in fact, that she had frequently stated that Smith did marry them. Since Abraham H. Cannon had previously written that “Presidents Woodruff and Smith both said they were willing for such a ceremony to occur,” it would be stretching our credulity to believe President Smith’s denial that he knew anything about the marriage. It is difficult, in fact, to deny Frank Cannon’s charge that his father [George Q. Cannon] told him that President Smith performed the ceremony. While those who knew about this marriage usually felt that Joseph F. Smith married the couple “on the high sea” just off the coast of California, Mormon scholar D. Michael Quinn seems confident that the ceremony was performed in the Salt Lake Temple. His research in temple records reveals the following:

When Lillian Hamlin was endowed in the Salt Lake Temple on 17 June 1896, she was sealed by proxy to the deceased David H. Cannon. Abraham H. Cannon was the proxy, and Joseph F. Smith performed the sealing. The next day, the Smiths and Cannons left Salt Lake City for California. Therefore, Joseph F. Smith actually performed his only post-Manifesto polygamous marriage as a proxy ceremony in the Salt Lake Temple for Abraham H. Cannon but could legally claim that he [was] simply officiating in a sealing on behalf of the deceased brother. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, page 84)

Professor Quinn bases this argument on the fact that the records of earlier sealings for the dead indicate that “one ceremony united the living woman for eternity to the deceased husband and for time to the proxy husband.” While Quinn’s argument is persuasive, the fact that Joseph F. Smith traveled with the couple after the temple ritual may still leave open the possibility that it was a separate ceremony in California or on the “high sea”—i.e., beyond the boundary of the United States. In any case, Quinn’s discovery of temple records linking President Smith to a sealing ceremony in which both Apostle Cannon and Lillian Hamlin participated just the day before he traveled with the couple seems to sew up the case against Joseph F. Smith.

Apostle Abraham H. Cannon’s journals not only reveal that the Mormon leaders approved of polygamy after the Manifesto, but they also show they were considering the idea of a secret system of concubinage wherein men and women could live together without actually being married:

Father [George Q. Cannon] now spoke of the unfortunate condition of the people at present in regard to marriage. . . . I believe in concubinage, or some plan whereby men and women can live together under sacred ordinances and vows until they can be married. . . . such a condition would have to be kept secret, until the laws of our government change to permit the holy order of wedlock which God has revealed. . . . — — President Snow. “I have no doubt that concubinage will yet be practiced in this church, . . .” — — Pres. Woodruff. “If men enter into some practice of this character to raise a righteous posterity, they will be justified in it . . .” (Journal of Abraham H. Cannon, April 5, 1894, vol. 18, page 70)

As we have shown earlier, Joseph Smith’s revelation on polygamy also said that concubinage was justifiable in God’s sight: “Abraham received concubines and they bore him children; and it was accounted unto him for righteousness, . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants, 132:37).

After making a long and careful study of the Mormon Church’s attitude toward polygamy, the Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted a report in which it claimed that the Manifesto was a deception:

A sufficient number of specific instances of the taking of plural wives since the manifest of 1890, so called, have been shown by the testimony as having taken place among officials of the Mormon Church to demonstrate the fact that the leaders in this church, the first presidency and the twelve apostles, connive at the practice of taking plural wives, and have done so ever since the manifesto was issued which purported to put an end to the practice. . . . as late as 1896 one Lillian Hamlin became the plural wife of Abraham H. Cannon, who was then an apostle . . . The prominence of Abraham H. Cannon in the church, the publicity given to the fact of his taking Lillian Hamlin as a plural wife, render it practically impossible that this should have been done without the knowledge, the consent, and the connivance of the headship of that church.

George Teasdale, another apostle of the Mormon Church, contracted a plural marriage with Marion Scholes since the manifesto of 1890. . . . Charles E. Merrill, a bishop of the Mormon Church, took a plural wife in 1891, . . . The ceremony . . . was performed by his father, who was then and until the time of his death an apostle in the Mormon Church. It is also shown that John W. Taylor, another apostle of the Mormon Church, has been married to two plural wives since the issuing of the so-called manifesto.

Matthias F. Cowley, another of the twelve apostles, has also taken one or more plural wives since the manifesto. . . . Apostles Taylor and Cowley, instead of appearing before the committee and denying the allegation, evade service of process issued by the committee for their appearance and refuse to appear after being requested to do so, . . . about the year 1896 James Francis Johnson was married to a plural wife, . . . the ceremony in this instance being performed by an apostle of the Mormon Church. To these cases must be added that of Marriner W. Merrill, another apostle; . . .

It is a fact of no little significance in itself, bearing on the question whether polygamous marriages have been recently contracted in Utah by the connivance of the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church, that the authorities of said church have endeavored to suppress, and have succeeded in suppressing, a great deal of testimony by which the fact of plural marriages contracted by those who were high in the councils of the church might have been established beyond the shadow of a doubt. Before the investigation had begun it was well known in Salt Lake City that it was expected to show on the part of the protestants that Apostles George Teasdale, John W. Taylor, and M. F. Cowley, and also Prof. J. M. Tanner, Samuel Newton and others who were all high officials of the Mormon Church had recently taken plural wives, and that in 1896 Lillian Hamlin was sealed to Apostle Abraham H. Cannon as a plural wife . . . All, or nearly all, of these persons except Abraham H. Cannon, who was deceased, were then within reach of service of process from the committee. But shortly before the investigation began all these witnesses went out of the country.

Subpoenas were issued for each one of the witnesses named, but in the case of Samuel Newton only could the process of the committee be served. Mr. Newton refused to obey the order of the committee, alleging no reason or excuse for not appearing. It is shown that John W. Taylor was sent out of the country by Joseph F. Smith on a real or pretended mission for the church. . . . It would be nothing short of self-stultification for one to believe that all these important witnesses chanced to leave the United States at about the same time and without reference to the investigation. All the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction point to the conclusion that every one of the witnesses named left the country at the instance of the rulers of the Mormon Church and to avoid testifying before the committee.

It was claimed by the protestants that the records kept in the Mormon temple at Salt Lake City . . . would disclose the fact that plural marriages have been contracted in Utah since the manifesto with the sanction of the officials of the church. A witness who was required to bring the records in the temple at Salt Lake City refused to do so after consulting with President Smith. . . . it was shown by the testimony, and in such a way that the fact could not possibly be controverted, that a majority of those who give the law to the Mormon Church are now, and have been for years, living in open, notorious, and shameless polygamous cohabitation. The list of those who are thus guilty of violating the laws of the State and the rules of public decency is headed by Joseph F. Smith, the first president, “prophet, seer, and revelator” of the Mormon Church, . . .

The list also includes George Teasdale, an apostle; John Henry Smith, an apostle; Heber J. Grant, an apostle; M. F. Cowley, an apostle; Charles W. Penrose, an apostle; and Francis M. Lyman, who is not only an apostle, but the probable successor of Joseph F. Smith as president of the church. Thus it appears that the first president and eight of the twelve apostles, a considerable majority of the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church, are noted polygamists. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 4, pages 476-480)

While the Committee on Privileges and Elections was hampered by the Mormon Church’s attempt to impede the investigation and to suppress evidence, it did find enough documentation to put the church in a very embarrassing position. When we published the 1982 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we felt that we had enough new evidence to completely disprove the claim that polygamy in the Mormon Church ended with the Manifesto (see pages 231-244F). We were, of course, somewhat limited in our research because we did not have access to a great deal of important material in the Mormon Archives. Fortunately, however, one of the church’s most qualified historians, D. Michael Quinn, began researching this matter. While he certainly did not have access to all of the secret records of the church, he was entrusted with some extremely important church documents and was able to ferret out enough material to write what many people consider to be the definitive work on the subject. His article is entitled, “LDS Church Authority and New Plural Marriages, 1890-1904.” It is found in the Spring 1985 issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. Although he claims he still has faith in Mormonism, he believes in honest history and pulls no punches in his presentation. Dr. Quinn gives the following information in his article:

Ninety percent of new polygamous marriages contracted from September 1890 through December 1904 directly involved Church authority . . . On 11 September 1901, the Deseret Evening News branded as “groundless” and “utterly false” the statement of a Protestant minister that “one of the Apostles had recently taken an additional wife,” when in fact four apostles had married plural wives so far that year . . .

The year 1903 was the climax of post-Manifesto polygamy with Church authority. . . . apostles were performing new polygamous marriages in the United States and Mexico, where both the stake patriarch and president were also officiating for residents of the Juarez Stake. The stake president had, furthermore, been authorized by the First Presidency to perform plural marriages for U.S. residents with the necessary letters from Salt Lake City. In addition, for the first time since the establishment of the Canadian settlement of Mormons, the Church president authorized local Church authority to perform plural marriages there for Canadian Mormons. Although those presently unavailable manuscripts would bring further corroboration and precision, sufficient information exists to verify the participation of Church authorities in new plural marriages from September 1890 through the end of 1904. . . . When Byron H. Allred asked for permission to marry the young woman who accompanied him to the President’s office on 4 October 1890, President Woodruff patiently explained the reasons he had issued the Manifesto and then told Allred to move as soon as possible with his intended plural wife to Mexico where Alexander F. Macdonald would perform the ceremony. Anson B. Call was bold enough to come to Woodruff’s own home . . . President Woodruff told him to sell all his property in the United States and move to Mexico with his intended wife. . . . Apostle Young, . . . performed at least five plural marriages there [in Mexico] when he returned in May-June 1894. Among these plural marriages was one for Franklin S. Bramwell, then a stake high counselor, who later wrote, “When I took my second wife I had a letter signed by President Woodruff himself and went to Mexico with a personal letter from Pres. George Q. Cannon.” . . . In June 1897, the First Presidency authorized Juarez Stake President Anthony W. Ivins to perform polygamous ceremonies in Mexico, and in the fall President Woodruff authorized Anthon H. Lund to perform two plural marriages aboard ship, one on the Pacific Ocean and one on the Great Lakes. . . .

Circumstantial evidence indicates that Wilford Woodruff married Madame Mountford as a plural wife in 1897. . . .

In the last year of his life, Wilford Woodruff thus maintained a public stance that was at variance with his private activities regarding polygamy. When Protestant ministers charged the Church with allowing new plural marriages, President Woodruff wrote the editor of the Protestant newspaper that “no one has entered into plural marriage by my permission since the Manifesto was issued.” . . .

The First Presidency’s office not only authorized these post-Manifesto plural marriages in Mexico as performed by the presiding authority there, but also was aware of and recorded the plural marriages that visiting apostles performed in Mexico. . . . during the presidency of Lorenzo Snow in 1901, four apostles (including Brigham Young, Jr.) married plural wives . . . John W. Taylor claimed that he married two plural wives in August 1901 with the permission of the Church president; but the clearest evidence that Lorenzo Snow gave permission individually to the apostles to marry plural wives in 1901 comes from Heber J. Grant, who later wrote: “Before I went to Japan [in July 1901] my President intimated that I had better take the action needed to increase my family,” and Grant’s notebook indicates that President Snow gave this permission on 26 May 1901: “Temple Fast mtg—17 years since Gusta and I married—She willing to have me do my duty. & Pt Snow. . . .”

After George Q. Cannon’s death in April 1901, Joseph F. Smith, as sole counselor, was one who sent prominent Mormons to Matthias F. Cowley for polygamous ceremonies; and upon Lorenzo Snow’s death in October 1901, his successor Joseph F. Smith promoted and protected new polygamous marriages more actively than the two previous Church presidents. . . .
By the fall of 1903, Joseph F. Smith had decided to expand new polygamous marriages even further. . . .

Joseph F. Smith continued the familiar pattern of denying publicly what was happening privately throughout these years. More significantly he was keeping his own counselors and half of the apostles in the dark about what he and the other half were doing to promote new polygamous marriages. . . . Joseph F. Smith divided the Church against itself and apostle against brother apostle over the question of new polygamous marriages. He did it with the best of intent—to preserve "the principle" as well as to protect the institution of the Church by filing official minutes of quorum meetings with repudiations of what he was actually allowing individual Church officers to do with his authorization and blessing as Church president. This allowed plausible denial to the Church's enemies, but the policy created double definitions of authority, sanction, permission, knowledge, validity, loyalty, and truth—a wind that would begin to reap the whirlwind in 1904. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, pages 56, 58-60, 62, 65, 72, 73, 90, 93, 95 and 96)

According to Professor Quinn, Heber J. Grant, who served as the seventh president of the church from 1918 until 1948, did not actually go through with the plural marriage which President Snow suggested that he enter into on May 26, 1901 (Ibid., page 73). Nevertheless, Grant did have problems with the law after the Manifesto. In 1899—nine years after Woodruff’s Manifesto—he was convicted of unlawful cohabitation (see the Daily Tribune, September 9, 1899). In 1903 Heber J. Grant had to flee the country to avoid being arrested. According to the testimony of Charles Mostyn Owen, Grant had been boasting about his relationship "with two women as his wives." Mr. Owen "went before the county attorney and swore to an information for him, and a warrant was issued on that information." Before Grant could be arrested, "He left suddenly on the night of the 10th of November last year—1903." Owen said that Grant had gone to England and was still there while the Smoot investigation was going on (see Reed Smoot Case, vol. 2, pages 401-402).

The reader will remember the D. Michael Quinn says that Joseph F. Smith was more actively involved in promoting polygamy after the Manifesto than the other presidents of the church. Professor Quinn has put forth a devastating case against President Smith. This is very interesting because Joseph F. Smith emphatically denied in his testimony given in the Reed Smoot Case that polygamy was ever approved by church leaders after the Manifesto:

Mr. SMITH. . . . It has been the continuous and conscientious practice and rule of the church ever since the manifesto to observe that manifesto with regard to plural marriages; and from that time till to-day there has never been, to my knowledge, a plural marriage performed in accordance with the understanding, instruction, connivance, counsel, or permission of the presiding authorities of the church, or of the church, in any shape or form; and I know whereof I speak, gentlemen, in relation to that matter. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 129)

When President Smith was asked if he knew of any plural marriage being performed by church authority in any part of the world since 1890, he responded: “No, sir; I do not” (Ibid., page 177).

If the Committee on Privileges and Elections had possessed the documentation which Dr. Quinn has compiled, Joseph F. Smith would probably have been prosecuted for perjury. On page 98 of his article, Quinn pointed out that President Smith was “risking a perjury indictment by concealing any evidence detrimental to the Church as an institution or to any individual (including himself) who acted in his capacity as a Church official in promoting post-Manifesto polygamy. As President Smith told another prospective witness in the Smoot case, ‘We should consider the interests of the Church rather than our own.’”

Although the senators believed that President Smith was not telling the truth, they also knew that it would be very difficult to prosecute him since he had control over most of the witnesses. Professor Quinn has found evidence that Joseph F. Smith did, in fact, obstruct the investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections just as the report had charged:

. . . Joseph F. Smith throughout 1904 maintained that despite his best efforts, the subpoenaed apostles were either too ill or too recalcitrant to testify in the Smoot investigation.

It is far more probable, however, that the Church president did not want the Senate to question anyone who had married and fathered children by post-Manifesto plural wives. . . . President Smith told Apostle [Abraham Owen] Woodruff midway through April conference, “You would not be a good witness,” [and] advised him to “stay in retirement” to avoid a subpoena in Utah, and to prepare immediately to preside over the LDS mission in Germany. . . . Five days after he presented the second Manifesto, Joseph F. Smith instructed California Mission President Joseph E. Robinson to move his two post-Manifesto plural wives and their children from Salt Lake City to Mexico to avoid a subpoena.
A plural wife of John W. Taylor later provided the background to the letters her husband and Apostle Cowley sent to Joseph F. Smith about refusing to testify before the Senate Committee. “He received two contradictory letters in the mail, for him to sign and return. One said he would go to Washington, the other said he would not go to Washington. Nellie cried: ‘John, you don’t intend to place yourself in a trap by signing both those letters, do you?’ He pointed at the signature of President Joseph F. Smith and said, ‘I will do what my Prophet orders me to do.’” President Smith used the letter for each man he felt the circumstances of April 1904 required. . . . President Smith sent George Teasdale to Mexico to avoid testifying. The apostle chafed at this forced exile, and President Smith relented enough to have George F. Gibbs notify Teasdale in August 1904 that he and Apostle Cowley could leave Mexico and speak at three stake conferences in Arizona, provided that the local stake authorities did not publish any reference to their visit in the Deseret News or local papers and that they provide no information on their itinerary. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, pages 100-101)

Joseph F. Smith, the sixth president of the church, not only had the power to avoid being indicted for perjury, but was also able to escape prosecution in Utah for many years. It was 16 years after the Manifesto was issued when President Smith was finally convicted of unlawful cohabitation. The church’s Deseret Evening News, for November 23, 1906, reported: “. . . President Smith appeared forthwith and entered a plea of guilty and was fined three hundred dollars. The fine was promptly paid and the defendant discharged.”

TRAIL OF DISHONESTY

While Mormon apologists would have us believe otherwise, untruth and secrecy were used by the church leaders to cover up polygamy. D. Michael Quinn has discovered that in just “thirteen and a half years” after the Manifesto, when the leaders of the church were deeply involved in secretly promoting the practice of polygamy, “the First Presidency individually or as a unit published twenty-four denials that any new plural marriages were being performed” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, page 9).

A careful examination of Mormon history reveals that this pattern of dishonesty stemmed from Joseph Smith himself. Smith always publicly denied the practice, and as we have already shown, he was even willing to perform a fake excommunication to hide the practice. On May 26, 1844, the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 411, reported that Joseph Smith responded as follows to the accusation that he “kept six or seven young females as wives”:

What a thing it is for a man to be accused of committing adultery, and having seven wives, when I can only find one.

I am the same man, and as innocent as I was fourteen years ago; and I can prove them all perjurers.

In his article in Dialogue, page 21, D. Michael Quinn noted that Joseph Smith had “more than thirty plural wives” at the time he made this denial. We have previously cited a notice printed in the Times and Seasons in which both Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, who was a member of the First Presidency of the church, signed a statement saying Hiram Brown had been cut off from the church for “preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines.” The following month, Hyrum Smith wrote the following for the Times and Seasons (March 15, 1844, vol. 5, page 474):

. . . brother Richard Hewitt . . . states to me that some of your elders say, that a man having a certain priesthood, may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here: I say unto you that that man teaches false doctrines, for there is no such doctrine taught; neither is there any such thing practised here. And any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine, is culpable, and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership . . .

The article on marriage, which was published in the early editions of the Doctrine and Covenants was frequently used by the early Mormon Church to counteract the report that polygamy was being practiced. On September 1, 1842, this statement appeared in the Times and Seasons (vol. 3, page 909):

Inasmuch as the public mind has been unjustly abused . . . we make an extract on the subject of marriage, showing the rule of the church on this important matter. The extract is from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and is the only rule allowed in the church.

“Inasmuch as this church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy; we declare that we believe, that one man should have one wife, and one woman, but one husband, . . .”

In vol. 4, page 143, of the Times and Seasons, we find the following: “We are charged with advocating a plurality of wives, and common property. Now this is as false as the many other ridiculous charges which are brought against us. No sect have [sic] a greater reverence for the laws of matrimony, or the rights of private property, and we do what others do not, practice what we preach.” In the Latter-Day Saints’ Millennial Star, vol. 3, page 74, the following denial appeared:

But, for the information of those who may be assailed by those foolish tales about two wives, we would say that no such principle ever existed among the Latter-Day Saints, and never will; . . . the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants; and also all our periodicals are very strict on that subject, indeed far more so than the bible.

After Joseph Smith’s death the denials of polygamy continued to come forth in Mormon publications. When someone stated that Joseph Smith taught polygamy, the Latter-Day Saints’ Millennial Star (vol. 12, pages 29-30) called it a lie:

12th Lie — Joseph Smith taught a system of polygamy.

12th Refutation. — The Revelations given through Joseph Smith, state the following: . . . “We believe that one man should have one wife.” Doctrine and Covenants, page 331.

As late as 1850 John Taylor, who became the third president of the church, denied that the Mormons believed in the practice of plural marriage:

We are accused here of polygamy, . . . and actions the most indecent, obscene, and disgusting, such that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could have contrived. These things are too outrageous to admit of belief; . . . I shall content myself by reading our views of chastity and marriage, from a work published by us containing some of the articles of our Faith. Doctrine and Covenants, page 330 . . . “Inasmuch as this Church of Jesus Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy, we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in the case of death, . . .” (A tract published by John Taylor in 1850, page 8; found in Orson Pratt’s Works, 1851 edition)

On page 23 of his article in Dialogue, Dr. Quinn revealed that at the time he made this denial of polygamy “in 1850, John Taylor had married twelve polygamous wives who had already borne him eight children.”

At the beginning of this article we quoted Apostle John A. Widtsoe as saying that Joseph Smith “taught honesty in all affairs, he insisted that his people be honest . . .” Our research concerning polygamy shows that these statements concerning Joseph Smith are wishful thinking. He not only deceived his own wife about polygamy, but was willing to go to almost any length to keep some of his own followers in the dark concerning what he really believed.

Those who were close to him seem to have picked up his deceptive ways and taught them to those who followed. Consequently, the record of at least the first seven presidents of the church is marred by the transgression of the law and duplicity.

On April 6, 1904, President Joseph F. Smith issued what is known as the “Second Manifesto.” This document claimed that since the Manifesto given in 1890, no plural marriages “have been solemnized with the sanction, consent or knowledge of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1985, page 10). Although President Smith’s statement is certainly untruthful, the Smoot investigation put a great deal of pressure on the church leaders and it was not long before the practice of polygamy died out within the church. Unfortunately, however, the insincerity of the Mormon leaders after the Manifesto left such a credibility gap that many Mormons continued to hold to polygamy even after the church withdrew its support of the practice. Like Joseph Smith, they secretly entered into polygamy, and even though the Mormon Church excommunicated a large number of them, the movement did not die out. Consequently, almost a century after Wilford Woodruff issued the Manifesto, there are thousands of people who are still practicing polygamy in Utah. On December 27, 1965, the New York Times reported that as “many as 30,000 men, women and children live in families in which polygamy is practiced.” In 1966 the Mormon writer Leonard J. Arrington claimed that this was a “far-fetched estimate.” The following year, however, Ben Merson reported:

“Today in Utah,” declares William M. Rogers, former special assistant to the State Attorney General, “there are more polygamous families than in the days of Brigham Young. At least 30,000 men, women and children in this state are now living in plural households—and the number is rapidly increasing! Thousands now live in the adjoining states of Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona—plus sizable populations in Oregon, California, Canada and Mexico. (Ladies’ Home Journal, June 1967, page 78)

Because they claim to go back to the fundamental doctrines of Mormonism, those who believe in practicing polygamy today are usually known as Mormon “Fundamentalists.” The Mormon leaders now find themselves in a very strange situation. On the one hand, they have to uphold polygamy as a righteous principle, but on the other, they have to discourage the members of the church from actually entering into its practice. If they completely repudiated the doctrine of polygamy, they would be admitting that Joseph Smith was a deceiver, and that the church was founded on fraud. If, however, they openly preached and defended the doctrine, many people would probably enter into the practice and bring disgrace upon the church. Their position is about the same as a person saying, “My church believes in water baptism, but we are not allowed to practice it.” Because of this peculiar dilemma, church officials prefer that there is not much discussion of plural marriage. As long as the Mormon leaders continue to publish Joseph Smith’s revelation on polygamy (Doctrines and Covenants, Section 132), there will, no doubt, be many people who will enter into the practice. They cannot completely repudiate this revelation, however, without destroying their doctrine concerning temple marriage because the two doctrines were revealed in the same revelation. (Temple marriage, of course, is the marriage of a man and woman for time and all eternity in a secret ritual performed only in a Mormon temple.) Although the Mormon Church no longer allows a man to be sealed to more than one living woman, in Mormon doctrine all women who marry for eternity in the temple have to face the possibility that they could end up living in polygamy in heaven without their consent. If the wife should die before her husband, he is allowed to be sealed to another woman for eternity. The woman, however, is not allowed to be sealed to two husbands for eternity. Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the tenth president of the church, explained how the rules of the temple discriminate against women: “When a man and a woman are married in the temple for time and all eternity, and then the man dies and the woman marries another man, she can be married to him for time only” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 78). President Smith himself remarried after the death of his first wife, and in the same book, page 67, he remarked: “. . . my wives will be mine in eternity.”

Mormon writer John J. Stewart made it very clear that although the church does not allow a man to have more than one living wife at the present time, the doctrine of plural marriage is still an “integral part of LDS scripture”: . . . the Church’s strictness in excommunicating those advocating and practicing plural marriage today has apparently been misconstrued by not a few loyal Church members as an acknowledgement that the evil falsehoods . . . and other misconceptions about plural marriage, are true, and that the Church’s near silence on the doctrine today is further evidence that it regrets and is embarrassed by the whole matter of plural marriage. Such an inference is, of course, unjustified and unrealistic. The Church has never, and certainly will never, renounce this doctrine. The revelation on plural marriage is still an integral part of LDS scripture, and always will be. (Brigham Young and His Wives, pages 13-14)

MOMENT OF TRUTH

Notwithstanding Apostle Widstoe’s bold assertions concerning the honesty of Joseph Smith and the Mormon Church itself, the evidence with regard to polygamy reveals exactly the opposite. A majority of the church presidents (7 out of 13) who were supposed to have been “prophets, seers, and revelators to the Church,” were involved in a doctrine which led them into breaking the law, adultery, deception, perjury, bribery and a massive cover-up which has continued on until the present time. Since Jesus Himself told us to beware of “false prophets,” and instructed us that we will “know them by their fruits” (Matthew 7:15-16), it seems imperative that we face the truth about Mormonism. There is no way around the problem; the deceptive practices used by Joseph Smith and the other early leaders of the Mormon Church must be recognized for what they are—the “evil fruit” which Jesus attributed to “false prophets.” While we do not agree with much of the material written by President Joseph Fielding Smith, he did make one statement that really gets to the heart of the matter:

Mormonism, as it is called, must stand or fall on the story of Joseph Smith. He was either a prophet of God, divinely called, properly appointed and commissioned, or he was one of the biggest frauds this world has ever seen. There is no middle ground.

If Joseph Smith was a deceiver, who wilfully attempted to mislead the people, then he should be exposed; his claims should be refuted, and his doctrines shown to be false, . . . (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 1, pages 188-189)

We sincerely hope that Mormons who read this will see the futility of trusting in leaders who have used so much deceit and cover-up in establishing their work. We pray that they will awaken to the true message of Christ, realizing that in Him, and Him alone, can we have salvation.

IN THE MAIL

As a former Mormon at first it was a heartbreak for me to learn of all the deception. I cried for days and still refused to believe it until I . . . read for myself the very books you had quoted from. But later when I found the real Biblical Jesus my joy far outweighed my heartbreak.

We are both so impressed with your honesty in dealing with all Mormon issues . . . I wish those Mormon people who criticize you and tell you you’re printing lies (they have their heads in the sand) would stop and realize how careful you have been to document everything! . . . A tremendous burden has been released from my shoulders when I found the real Jesus. (Letter from Idaho)

After 30 years of being extremely active in the “Mormon” Church, I no longer believe in the origins of the church as the church teaches it! I have been doing some reading and am grateful for the information that people like you have given so much energy to dispense. THANK YOU. (Letter from California)
I wanted to take this opportunity to write to you and thank you for all the research you have done. Your books have been very informative and well documented. I had been a member of the LDS Church for over 12 years and recently left the Church. My wife had been born and raised in the Church and she has some relatives who are General Authorities. . . . I had served a mission, was married in the Temple, served as a Temple Worker, and was in a Bishopric. I found that coming out of Mormonism would not be easy. But the Lord took us in His hands and we are so grateful that we have come to really know God and the true Gospel, as it is contained in the Bible. (Letter from Colorado)

It was [Mormonism] Shadow or Reality given to me by a good Christian to read, that led me my wife and my family of 5 children out of the Mormon faith. We are whole people now, and are still very grateful for your untiring work! (Letter from California)

First I would like to thank you for your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? I purchased it in January. I have since left the Church and I am now trying to get my husband to read it. (Letter from New York)

Thank you for your diligent work & ministry to the Mormons. Can you realize how many lives you touch & help begin the process of seeing the errors of Mormonism? I know your work is tedious, & you strive for accuracy & honesty. Your books have helped me tremendously in coming to the Lord, and I want to express my appreciation to you. . . . Nothing in my 25 years as an active temple Mormon can compare in the joy I have now & the great light of knowledge & learning that helps me grow in Christ. (Letter from New Jersey)

A few years ago I came across a copy of your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? It was instrumental in my leaving the Mormon church. I was a student at BYU at the time. (Letter from New Jersey)

I can’t begin to thank you enough for the vast amounts of information you have produced to help me see the truth. I almost fell into the “web” of Mormonism . . . Jesus Christ is now the #1 love of my life. . . . I really can’t express my love and devotion towards you and your work. (Letter from Texas)

After 26 yrs in Mormonism, I have finally been fully converted to Christianity. I was a high priest, and at one point a counselor in the bishopric. Your books and mailings played a role in helping me to see the falsity of Mormonism. (Letter from California)

Thank you for your honesty, & helping us to find Christ. Please keep sending the Messenger. (Letter from Utah)

ANOTHER GOSPEL?

A number of years ago there was a popular saying that went something like this: “I know you think you understood what you thought I said, but what you heard was not what I meant.” We remember smiling in recognition of the problems we have communicating with one another. For decades Protestants and Catholics have faced a serious problem when talking to their LDS friends about Christianity and the Bible. This was especially brought to our attention recently as we read a speech by Theodore M. Burton, a Mormon General Authority. He recounted a conversation he had with a young stewardess while traveling on a plane to New England:

She told me that she had recently been converted from her former manner of living and was now “saved.” . . . she was now a “born-again Christian.” . . . She said, “. . . I am now on the path of eternal life.” . . . she said, “I have felt a marvelous spiritual change come over me which has purged all evil from my soul.” . . . “. . . I’ve had a sanctification experience, not through any work that I or any other person has done for me, but a work of grace whereby Jesus has pardoned my sins and promised me eternal life. I don’t need any formal church organization to accomplish this. . . .” She added that she had truly been reborn spiritually. From her words, I knew she did not understand what is meant by being “born again” nor what is termed the second birth. (The Ensign, September 1985, page 66)

Later in his speech, Elder Burton observed: “When people of the world speak of being saved, they refer to being saved from death to rise in the resurrection” (page 68). Burton’s comment demonstrates that he did not understand what the young woman was saying. When Christians speak of being born again or saved they are referring to eternal life, not just resurrection. Mormons divide saved by grace and eternal life into separate conditions, Christians do not. Bible verses such as 1 John 5:12-13 and John 3:16-17 portray faith in Christ as the necessary act to receive eternal life. When Christians talk about being saved or born again they understand that to include everlasting life in God’s presence. Mormonism, however, teaches one can be resurrected to a part of heaven—they divide it into three parts—but still not have eternal life! Latter-day Saints believe the only ones enjoying eternal life will be those who have been both baptized into the LDS Church (born again) and married in one of its temples. Spencer W. Kimball, twelfth president and prophet of the LDS Church, taught:
Only through celestial marriage can one find the strait way, the narrow path. Eternal life cannot be had in any other way. The Lord was very specific and very definite in the matter of marriage. (Deseret News, November 12, 1977, Church Section)

In his speech, Theodore M. Burton maintains salvation by grace is that “which Jesus Christ gives to every person who has lived on the earth, and is independent of the works we do. But to be exalted to eternal life and to be able to live the kind of life that God the Eternal Father lives requires not only the gift of grace that Jesus gives to all mankind through his atonement, but that gift coupled with our own obedience and conformity to all the requirements of righteous living prescribed by the gospel of Jesus Christ. Exaltation, or the eternal life Jesus spoke about, comes from a partnership with Jesus Christ, which begins in the ordinance of baptism, by which we are reborn, and is developed through a lifetime of righteous living” (The Ensign, September 1985, pages 68-69). Elder Burton also says this on page 68 of the same article: “Thus, through the atonement of Jesus Christ, together with the proper ordinances performed in the proper manner by proper authority and coupled with obedience to the laws and commandments of God, we can be saved from spiritual death and can be exalted to live in the presence of God the Eternal Father.”

Thus we see how differently Mr. Burton and the stewardess were approaching the words “eternal life.” Traditionally, Christians have insisted that God revealed all things necessary for eternal life in the Bible, citing such verses as John 20:30-31: “And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book: But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.” Mormonism, on the other hand, goes far beyond the Bible to the revelations of Joseph Smith for its final word on doctrine.

The language barrier goes very deep and stems from the fact that Mormons have such a totally different concept of God and humans that it colors all their theological statements. In an official LDS handbook titled, Achieving a Celestial Marriage, Mormonism declares its belief in a God who was once a human on another earth, along with his wife, and that they are now resurrected beings who have achieved Godhood:

The gospel of Jesus Christ teaches that man is an eternal being, made in the image and likeness of God. It also holds that man is a literal child of God and has the potential, if faithful to divine laws and ordinances, of becoming like his heavenly parent. . . . God is an exalted man who once lived on an earth and underwent experiences of mortality. . . . The progression of our Father in heaven to godhood, or exaltation, was strictly in accordance with eternal principles, . . . His marriage partner is our mother in heaven. We are their spirit children, born to them in the bonds of celestial marriage . . .

“God himself was once as we are now, and is an exalted man, . . .” (Smith, Teachings, p. 345) . . .

Remember that God, our heavenly Father, was perhaps once a child, and mortal like we ourselves, and rose step by step in the scale of progress, in the school of advancement; has moved forward and overcome, until He has arrived at the point where He now is (Orson Hyde, JD, 1:123). (Achieving a Celestial Marriage, 1976, page 129)

Another LDS manual holds out the hope to faithful LDS that they, too, can one day be Gods over their own earths:

Exaltation is eternal life, the kind of life that God lives. . . . We can become Gods like our Heavenly Father. This is exaltation. . . . Those who live the commandments of the Lord and receive eternal life (exaltation) in the celestial kingdom . . . will become gods. . . . They will have their righteous family members with them and will be able to have spirit children also. These spirit children will have the same relationship to them as we do to our Heavenly Father. They will be an eternal family. (Gospel Principles, published by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1986, pages 289-290)

Mormonism maintains God and man are the same species and part of an eternal procession of men becoming gods. Included in this concept is an innumerable host of parent-gods, grandparent-gods, etc., extending back into the past. Christianity, on the other hand, sees God as unique, holy, eternally existing as God from all ages past as well as future. Christians have cited such passages as the following to support this belief:

. . . I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me.
I, even I, am the Lord and besides me there is no saviour. (Isaiah 43:10-11)

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? (Numbers, 23:19)

Writing in Galatians 1:8, the Apostle Paul declared: “But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.” The reader will remember that in our lead article we quoted President Joseph F. Smith as claiming that “an angel of God, with a drawn sword, stood before him [Joseph Smith] and commanded that he should enter into the practice of that principle [i.e., polygamy], or he should be utterly destroyed, or rejected.” Joseph Smith also told this same story to Mrs. Lightner when he tried to persuade her to enter into the practice. While it is possible that Joseph Smith made up this story just to talk young women into going into plural marriage, Paul’s warning in Galatians would lead us to conclude that if such “an angel” did, in fact, appear with “a drawn sword” in hand it would have to be from the wrong source. Paul also warns that “Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light” (2 Corinthians 11:14).
While the present Mormon leaders have given up the idea that exaltation comes from plural marriage, as we have already shown, they still maintain that “Eternal life cannot be had any other way” than through celestial marriage in a Mormon temple. In other words, they still cling to the same revelation which Joseph Smith gave to establish polygamy (Doctrines and Covenants, Section 132). This is clearly some “other gospel” than what we find in the Bible. Jesus Himself proclaimed that “whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life” (John 3:15). Moreover, the Apostle John declared: “These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God” (1 John 5:13).

 BOOKS **

Mail Orders Add 10% Handling
$1.00 Minimum Shipping Charge

Confessions of a White Salamander, by Jerald Tanner. A sequel to Tracking the White Salamander. Contains lengthy extracts from Hofmann’s confession. Price: $3.95

Hofmann’s Confession. A photographic reprint of the transcripts of Mark Hofmann’s confession concerning the forgery of Mormon documents. Three volumes. Price: $25.00

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

The Lucifer-God Doctrine, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Price: $1.00

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

Mormon Polygamy—A History, by Richard S. Van Wagoner. Price: $19.95

Capt. Wm. Morgan’s Exposition of Freemasonry, (Photo-reprint of 1827 ed.) One of the works used in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to compile the parallels between Mormonism and Masonry. Price: $3.00

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Mormon Neo-Orthodoxy: A Crisis Theology, by O. Kendall White, Jr. Price: $11.95

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY

PO Box 1884
Salt Lake City, UT 84110
In the late 1960s William Schnoebeelen, a young man who had always wanted to be a priest in the Roman Catholic Church, decided to enter into the occult. On September 22, 1968 he became a “1st Degree (Gardnerian Tradition) Witch.” He later became very deeply involved in witchcraft, Satanism and voodoo. According to one of his friends, his whole life seemed to revolve around sorcery. In 1973 he changed his name to Christopher Pendragon Syn. According to his own statement, the name “Syn” really stands for sin. At the same time his wife took the name Alexandria y Apprope Pendragon. In the late 1970s Christopher Pendragon Syn legally changed his name back to William Schnoebeelen. Unfortunately, however, this did not end his involvement in the occult.

SYN IN THE CAMP

In July of 1980 William Schnoebeelen and his wife were visited by two Mormon missionaries. While Mr. Schnoebeelen said he told the missionaries that he was raised a Catholic, his wife frankly stated that she was a witch. Within two weeks they were baptized into the Mormon Church. At some point, Mr. Schnoebeelen began exaggerating the truth concerning his involvement in Catholicism, and he eventually had the Mormons convinced that he had served as a “parish priest” in the Roman Catholic Church—a claim which was completely false. The Mormons undoubtedly considered him to be a prize catch who would help bring many others into Mormonism. Little did they realize the embarrassment he would later bring upon the church. One woman seems to have perceived that Schnoebeelen and his wife were involved to some extent in the occult, but she hoped that things would change as they became more familiar with the teachings of the Mormon Church. On January 20, 1984, Mr. Schnoebeelen received a certificate from the School of Wicca for completing a course in “Witchcraft.” He used the alias “Christopher P. Syn” when taking this... course (see Mormonism's Temple of Doom, page 74, for a photograph of this certificate). According to Mr. Schnoebelen's own statement, one of the reasons for doing this was that he did not want the Mormons to find out about his involvement in witchcraft.

Those of us who are involved in ministry to the Mormons are always happy to learn when prominent Mormons dedicate their lives to Jesus Christ and separate themselves from the LDS Church. Mormons, likewise, are anxious to learn of those who leave important positions in other churches to become members of their church. Joseph Smith himself claimed that when he asked Jesus which church he should join, he was told that he “must join none of them, for they were all wrong; and . . . that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; . . .” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:19). Since the Mormons believe that they are the only ones who hold the priesthood and have authority to baptize, they are always looking for stories about ministers from other churches who “see the light” and come into the “only true church.”

Stephen W. Gibson, a Mormon writer who was searching for stories about church leaders who had left other groups to become Mormons, learned about William Schnoebelen’s claim that he was an ex-Catholic priest who was converted to Mormonism. Mr. Gibson decided to have Mr. Schnoebelen write a chapter for his book, From Clergy to Convert, which was published by Bookcraft in 1983. The dust jacket on this book claims that Mr. Gibson found fourteen “ministers, priests, nuns, and monks” who were once “confused and dissatisfied” but who now “are confident and fulfilled.” William Schnoebelen’s story is found on pages 67 to 73 of Gibson’s book. In this article Mr. Schnoebelen wrote:

> It’s pretty remarkable when a former Catholic priest marries a former nun, but it’s even more remarkable when they end up joining The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints together. . . .

> My ordination to the [Catholic] priesthood, although ritually impressive, left me feeling somehow empty. After the bishop laid his hands on my head, I felt little difference in myself . . .

> In my active ministry I felt inadequate to help my parishioners with their problems. . . . I had to ask for a leave of absence. . . .

> Alexandria had left her order for the same reasons for which I had left the priesthood. . . . We had both soured so much on the Catholic Church that we could not bear a church wedding . . .

> My wife and I had reached the end of our rope. We prayed on our knees every night for guidance, for some sign of which church to join — much as Joseph Smith had done. . . . two days later, just as we were about to go shopping, the doorbell rang. My wife opened the door to two young men . . . Her face lit up like fireworks: “You’re Mormons, right?” . . . We explained our long spiritual sojourn and told them of their providential timing. We went through the discussions like bullets through tissue paper, and were both baptized within two weeks. . . .

> . . . Not long after, my wife looked on warmly as Bishop George Warner laid his hands on my head and ordained me to the Aaronic Priesthood. At last I found what I had been seeking—the power of the ordination was so evident that I could hardly stand up from the chair. . . . Determined to make it to the Salt Lake Temple to be sealed for time and eternity, we succeeded with help from the members. I will not attempt to describe how wonderful this was—suffice it to say that I had never realized how empty our life was until it had been filled. . . .

> We know that the latter-day gospel is true. That sure knowledge is something only the Holy Spirit can give. No matter how long it takes, it is indeed worth the wait— we testify to that. (From Clergy to Convert, pages 67-73)

William Schnoebelen’s “sure knowledge” of the truth of Mormonism did not last very long. He states that on June 22, 1984, he became converted to orthodox Christianity. After his conversion, Mr. Schnoebelen began to consider Mormonism as a great evil which had to be dealt with. While Schnoebelen had kept his ties with witchcraft throughout the period he was a Mormon, at the time of his conversion he seems to have taken a step in the right direction when he burned his occult books and rituals.

We probably would never have known anything about William Schnoebelen if it had not been for Ed Decker of Saints Alive. A number of years ago Mr. Decker felt he had found hard evidence that the God of the Mormon temple is in reality Lucifer in the testimony of a 25-year-old man by the name of Kellie. In a tape recording made with Ed Decker, Mr. Kellie claimed that the Mormon leaders were so impressed with him that they took him through an extremely secret and important temple ceremony that even N. Eldon Tanner, a member of the First Presidency, had never been allowed to participate in. He was, in fact, ordained to be a God. While in the Holy of Holies Kellie observed a rack containing 14 or 15 human skulls. He claimed that in the ritual the blood of “diamond back rattlers” was used and that participants in the ceremony “slit their own wrists.” He also claimed that all those who were ordained to be Gods had the satanic number “666” written on their foreheads in Roman numerals.” While Kellie was at first accepted as an expert on the inside workings of Mormonism, Ed Decker eventually concluded that he “was either a deceiver or not working with a full deck” (The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? by Ed Decker and Bill Schnoebelen, 1987, page 11).

After the fall of Mr. Kellie, Ed Decker was looking for evidence to help shore up his belief concerning the temple ceremony and was apparently very happy to learn about William Schnoebelen. Schnoebelen, with his background in witchcraft and Satanism, seemed to be the missing link that Mr. Decker was hoping to find. Mr. Schnoebelen was invited to speak at the Capstone Conference and Decker published a long article by him which was entitled, “Joseph Smith and the Temple of Doom,” in Saints Alive Journal, Winter 1986. At some point Pastor Jim Spencer became interested in Mr. Schnoebelen’s work and the two collaborated to produce a pamphlet entitled, Mormonism’s Temple of Doom.

With the publication of William Schnoebelen’s material attacking the Mormon Church, he found himself facing a very peculiar situation. On the one hand, he had a work in print which praised Mormonism and was being used to convert people into the church. On the other hand, he had written material which condemned the church and was being used to bring people out of Mormonism. Moreover, in the book From Clergy to Convert he portrayed himself as a very sincere and sensitive parish priest in the Roman Catholic Church, but in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 63, he represented himself as a man deeply involved in witchcraft during the same period of time.

Our Investigation

Although we were completely unaware of the article in which William Schnoebelen claimed he had been a Roman Catholic priest, we were concerned about certain aspects of his story when we first saw a video of his 1986 Capstone Conference lecture. In the March 1987 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we warned that some critics of the Mormon Church had become far too obsessed with finding Luciferian influence in the temple ceremony. While we did not specifically mention Mr. Schnoebelen in this issue, it was obviously a warning against the type of thing he was doing. In the September 1987 issue of the Messenger we expressed our deep concern over the claims by William Schnoebelen and Ed Decker concerning the spires on Mormon temples. Ed Decker maintained that they were really “Satan’s spires” and represented “an up-side-down nail pointing defiantly toward heaven, as if to impale the Lord Jesus Christ anew” when he comes in the clouds.” William Schnoebelen claimed that because of the trapezoidal shape of the spires they “draw demons like fly paper.” In the same issue of the Messenger we noted that “Mr. Schnoebelen seems to have been deeply involved in the occult and claims that he has portions of ceremonies used in witchcraft which bear some remarkable parallels to the Mormon temple ceremony. His most startling examples, however, are only preserved by photocopies of typewritten documents which could not possibly be very old. Our preliminary study of the material leads us to conclude that it is far more likely that portions of the Mormon temple ritual were plagiarized and incorporated into witchcraft ceremonies rather than the other way around.”

In the November 1987 issue of the Messenger, we presented evidence against the authenticity of Mr. Schnoebelen’s most important claims. In January 1988, Wesley P. Walters informed us that he had received a call from a woman who had seen the article William Schnoebelen had written while he was a Mormon. She noted that his wife was named Alexandria in From Clergy to Convert, whereas it appeared as Sharon in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. We were not disturbed over this matter because we knew that Alexandria was actually Sharon’s witchcraft name. Wesley Walters, however, noted that when the two books were compared there appeared to be discrepancies in Schnoebelen’s chronology of events. After purchasing a copy of the book, we examined the article and concluded that it was impossible for him to have become a Roman Catholic priest in the period between his graduation from Loras College and the date he gave for his marriage.

On February 19, 1988, we met with William Schnoebelen for a tape-recorded interview which lasted about three and a half hours. During this interview, Mr. Schnoebelen admitted to us that he had never been a Roman Catholic priest and that a certain amount of deception had been used when he wrote the article. Unfortunately, however, we did not feel Mr. Schnoebelen sufficiently answered the problems. Just before we met with Schnoebelen, he had written a letter in which he claimed that he was not actually “lying” in the article published in From Clergy to Convert. In our tape-recorded interview with Mr. Schnoebelen he made this statement about the LDS article: “. . . there are misdirections in there that were necessary, but I’m not sure there was an outright lie in it.”

After our interview with William Schnoebelen, he was invited on Walter Martin’s satellite radio program which is broadcast in many parts of the United States. In this program Martin made these comments about Mr. Schnoebelen: “Your credentials I don’t think can be fairly challenged. We checked you out ourselves to be honest and we find that what you are talking about is essentially consistent with Satanism and Mormonism.” Mr. Martin also stated: “I’m not choosing up sides in the controversy of whether or not everything can be proved about you or where you came from or whether or not you’re a charlatan and a fraud, which has been suggested by some in the Christian community, with whom I don’t agree, I might add, in this area.”

Later in the program, Walter Martin brought up the issue of Mr. Schnoebelen’s article in From Clergy to Convert. Unfortunately, there seemed to be a careful attempt to avoid naming who Schnoebelen’s critics were, what the actual problem was or even giving the name of the book which was under discussion. In any case, while Mr. Schnoebelen seemed to be willing to admit that there was some wrong doing, he refused to really face the problem:

MARTIN. Well, you have critics, who for the moment shall remain nameless . . . who say, “You’re a charlatan, you’re a fraud. You have made mistakes. You have published something when you were a Mormon . . . and this particular document contained inaccuracies and, in fact, lies.” Now, how do you respond to that?

SCHNOEBELEN. Well, I respond to that by frankly saying that I was a sinner then . . . at the time I was deeply involved in Mormonism and also still doodling around with the fringe areas of occultism and I had right then not a very good moral sense and what I had in mind when . . . my story appeared in the anthology was that I thought if I could communicate something truthful—at that time I thought it was truthful—about the Mormon Church vis-a-vis my religious background it would help lead people to Mormonism. . . . I wasn’t thinking in terms of deceiving people as much as presenting the truth about my background in the most simple way possible so that those who were seeking truth in Mormonism would be able to find it.

MARTIN. So you didn’t begin with the thesis, “Let us do evil that good may come?”

SCHNOEBELEN. No.

MARTIN. Or the end justifies the mean?

SCHNOEBELEN. No.

Some of William Schnoebelen’s supporters feel that it is wrong to even bring up the issue concerning the deceit used in From Convert to Clergy because this was done before he professed to be a Christian. While we feel that it is wrong to dwell on people’s sins after they have come to Christ for forgiveness, there is another issue here—i.e., Mr. Schnoebelen seems to be trying to sweep the whole matter under the rug and deny the serious implications of what he has done. He has said that he “wasn’t thinking in terms of deceiving people as much as presenting the truth about my background . . . .” Since William Schnoebelen would not come right out and admit that he was lying about the matter, it raises grave questions concerning his ability to distinguish truth from falsehood and will cause many people to also take a very hard look at what he has written after he came out of Mormonism in 1984.

In order to really understand the depth of the deception William Schnoebelen used in his article in From Clergy to Convert, a person must know something about his background. A court record concerning the “Matter of the Change of Name of WILLIAM RICHARD SCHNOEBELEN,” filed in the District Court in Dubuque County, Iowa, dated October 8, 1973, gives his date of birth as “August 24, 1949.” He was, as the article indicates, raised as a Roman Catholic and attended Loras College—a Catholic school in Dubuque, Iowa. The president of Loras College has sent us a letter which claims Mr. Schnoebelen graduated from that school on “May 16, 1971 . . . with a major in music and a minor in education” (Letter dated February 9, 1988). In a letter dated February 2, 1988, Robert L. Ferring, Vicar General of the Archdiocese of Dubuque, said that after Schnoebelen graduated he “did indeed teach for two years in a Catholic High School in this Archdiocese.”

The “Chronology of William Schnoebelen,” published on page 63, of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, indicates that during this period he was going deeper and deeper into witchcraft. According to Mr. Schnoebelen’s chronology, on “07/29/73” he was sealed in a “Druidic [witchcraft] marriage ceremony” to the woman he later married legally on “05/31/74.” By 1975 William Schnoebelen had descended even deeper into the world of the occult, and on “04/30/75” he entered the “1st Degree” of the “Church of Satan.”

Many people who tell false stories base part of their tales on something that is at least partially true. This seems to be the case in William Schnoebelen’s story. He did, in fact, become involved in some small splinter groups which had broken off from the Roman Catholic Church. On page 70 of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, a document is produced which shows that on “September 6, 1975” Mr. Schnoebelen was serving in the position of “a Sub-Deacon” in “The Old Roman Catholic Church—English Rite.” On “12/14/75” Mr. Schnoebelen was “Ordained to Catholic Diaconate, American National Catholic Church (Old Catholic Rite)” (Ibid., page 63). One month later “01/15/76” Mr. Schnoebelen claims that he was “Ordained to Catholic Priesthood, American National Catholic Church” (Ibid.). While a person who does not read Latin might feel that this is supported by the certificate which appears on page 68, that certificate is actually relating to his becoming a deacon. In the taped interview, we asked Mr. Schnoebelen why the certificate stating that he was made a priest was not included:

Jerald Tanner: . . . the priest certificate is missing and —

William Schnoebelen: Yes, it is. That’s ‘cause I cannot find it. It may have been among the things that I burned because I was just shoving stuff [i.e., his witchcraft material] by the handfuls into [the fire]. . . .

Mr. Schnoebelen claims, however, that he can “produce at least two people that were actually present at my ordination” and that he has pictures of the ceremony. Even though Schnoebelen cannot produce a certificate showing he was ordained a priest, we feel that it is possible that this event did occur. We feel, however, that such an ordination would amount to almost nothing because of the unstable situation that existed in the organization in which Schnoebelen claims he was made a priest. According to William Schnoebelen’s own chronology, only a month expired between the time he was made a deacon and the ceremony consecrating him a priest. Furthermore, according to the tape-recorded interview, Mr. Schnoebelen acknowledged that he changed churches within that month! He said that he joined a church headed by Edward M. Stehlik just before he was made a priest:

. . . if you want to turn to page 68 [Mormonism’s Temple of Doom], . . . you will notice that Ed Stehlik’s signature is way down at the bottom here. He was only a priest at this point when I was a deacon. He had not yet received the episcopacy [the office of a bishop]. . . . This was a different corporation. I was ordained a sub-deacon and a deacon under the Old Roman Catholic Church—English Rite which was headed up by Francis Facione, which is the name there of the bishop.

Mr. Schnoebelen went on to state that Edward M. Stehlik was only a priest at the time he became a deacon, but that “when he was made a bishop, he started his own corporation as the American National Catholic Church. You’ve got to realize there are literally dozens of Old Catholic denominations running around. Some of them are just paper churches and some of them are viable congregations. . . . It’s kind of a strange situation because there is no control of it.”

We went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin to investigate the group Schnoebelen was involved with (Stehlik’s group) but could not find any evidence that it still existed. Some of the officials at the Orthodox Catholic Church in America were very helpful to us. They also had their roots in the Old Catholic Church, but had changed the name of their church because of the stigma brought about by other groups that also claimed to be “Old Catholic” churches. They indicated that people had been ordained priests in some of these groups just because they would agree to follow a new leader. They seemed to feel that Stehlik’s church was an extremely weird and unstable group and did not want to be identified with it in any way. They were, in fact, unable to furnish us with the name of anyone who still lived in the area who had been in this group with William Schnoebelen or Edward Stehlik. They felt they had scattered to the four winds.

In his definitive work on the various religions in America, Dr. J. Gordon Melton gave this information concerning the unstable situation in many of the Old Catholic churches:

The story of the Old Catholic churches in America is the story of multiple consecrations, some of them of questionable validity . . . The numerous bishops consecrated since World War II have complicated the picture by seeking, receiving and giving multiple ordinations and seemingly being just as free with excommunications. It is not unusual to find a bishop who had been consecrated in one lineage, being excommunicated and/or renouncing the bishop who consecrated him, and setting up his own church with a second (better?) consecration and/or seeking multiple consecrations from a number of bishops.

Straightening out the lines of succession of Old Catholic bishops in the U.S. can be like trying to put together a jigsaw puzzle. Many of the new bishops refuse to show their consecration documents. In some cases they claim a consecration that never occurred, and at other times they wish to suggest a consecration by a more prominent church than the church in which they were consecrated. (The Encyclopedia of American Religions, by J. Gordon Melton, 1978, vol. 1, pp. 32-33)

The Institute for the Study of American Religion, which is directed by Dr. J. Gordon Melton, has provided us with some very important photocopies of newspaper articles and other material which throws a great deal of light on the instability of the Old Catholic group William Schnoebelen was involved in. We will be using these photocopies in the material that follows.

A Roman Catholic priest is required to have four years of seminary training after college. Mr. Schnoebelen, however, had none of this type of training at the time he was ordained under bishop Stehlik. As we have already shown, his earlier college training was in music and education, and although he probably had some classes in religion at Loras College, this would hardly qualify him to be a priest—at least the type of priest we usually associate with Catholicism.
Some of William Schnoebelen’s defenders argue that he had important spiritual qualifications which made him competent to hold that position. The record, however, shows that he was deeply immersed in witchcraft and Satanism at the very time he was supposed to have been made a priest. How could he possibly have any spiritual qualifications to be a priest? Everything about his record, in fact, shows that he was completely unqualified to preside in such a religious position at that time.

The whole situation in some of the Old Catholic churches at that time reminds us very much of what has happened in some of the groups that have broken off from Mormonism. Men can be ordained to high positions in these groups, but it amounts to almost nothing. The main requirement seems to be a willingness to obey those in charge and work hard for the group. As we have already noted, a number of the Old Catholic churches, like some of the break off groups in Mormonism, had a very poor record when it came to choosing priests or even bishops for that matter. When we asked Mr. Schnoebelen about the slovenly methods of ordination in these groups, he maintained that his ordination was legitimate but conceded that there was a major problem in this area:

In fact, there are many cases of what is called simony, which is when someone simply goes to an Old Catholic bishop and says, “Here is fifty bucks and I’ll make you a priest” . . . they’ll just buy the ordination. . . .

As we have shown, the name of Edward M. Stehlik appears on both of the certificates reproduced in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, and Schnoebelen also maintained in the taped interview that he was made a priest by “Stehlik and Bishop Julius Massey.” In a letter dated February 9, 1988, he claimed that he served “briefly” under “Bishop Julius Massey; then was up in Milwaukee primarily at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Friary from about ’77-79 under Father David Javore.” Mr. Schnoebelen also acknowledged that a man named Glen Goergen was part of the same group. While William Schnoebelen’s supporters would like us to believe that he was involved with a legitimate Catholic group, the evidence seems to show that Stehlik, Javore and Goergen were very unreliable. The Capital Times, published in Madison, Wisconsin, reported the following on February 5, 1980:

NECEDAH - Members of Necedah’s Van Hoof shrine call them “Archbishop Stehlick, Father Javore and Brother Glen.” But these three latest leaders of the shrine cult have followed a twisted trail of deceit, hypocrisy and outright fraud to this tiny Central Wisconsin village.

When self-proclaimed mystic Mary Ann Van Hoof announced last May that “The archbishop is coming,” she intentionally raised the hopes of her followers . . .

Most expected a visit from Milwaukee Archbishop Rembert Weakland and the announcement that, after years of calling Van Hoof shrine a hoax, the Roman Catholic Church was finally recognizing the claims of Van Hoof, the Necedah farm woman who claims to have frequent visits from the Virgin Mary.

But the man who arrived . . . was Edward Michael Stehlik, a man who has followed a twisted path to religion. . . . in a story in the Capital Times on May 30, Stehlik calls himself the “Archbishop and Metropolitan of North America, American National Catholic Church.” . . . But the story also pointed out that, despite the fancy title, he is not a Roman Catholic priest.

In fact, according to a report aired last month by Milwaukee television station WISN . . . Stehlik’s claims of a Catholic background—that he spent two years studying at St. Nazianz Seminary . . . and four years in a Discalced Carmelite monastery—are pure fiction.

A Channel 12 special news team. . . . spent more than six months investigating Stehlik and the Van Hoof shrine. They found overwhelming evidence that the man who now claims to be an archbishop boasts a long history of deceit, hypocrisy and misrepresentation, including the following:

• Court records show that during the time . . . Stehlik claims to have been in a monastery (1962-68), he was married for the first time. His first wife assured investigators that the couple had been living in the Milwaukee area between 1966 and 1968.

• . . . Stehlik claimed to hold a chemistry degree from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. The university last lists him as a student with sophomore standing . . .

• In a hand-written resume Stehlik gave officials of a Milwaukee Presbyterian church, he states, “My leaning toward homosexuality began during the last years of my married life. I experienced several . . . affairs during that time . . . there are still some men who attract my attention.” Yet the official line of his new church blatantly discriminates against homosexuals and takes a harsh stand against their admission to the priesthood: . . .

• Stehlik claims to have been ordained by Milwaukee Bishop Walter Brown of the Old Catholic Church, a splinter group . . . Yet Brown claims he excommunicated Stehlik for “un-Christ-like behavior” at a Mass.

• Stehlik also claims ordination in another Catholic splinter group— the Old Catholic Church of Illinois. But he was excommunicated by that group for, among other things, his two marriages and “devil worship.”

But Stehlik is not the only self-proclaimed clergyman playing church in Necedah.

Father David Javore, . . . whom Stehlik appointed pastor of the shrine’s St Joseph the Worker Hall . . . claims he left one seminary because “that order didn’t work with kids like I wanted to.” However, that seminary’s records claim Javore was actually dismissed.

Javore also claims to have been a Pallotine brother. The Pallotines, however, claim that he had taken only temporary vows. Although Javore resigned the order, his superiors wrote back saying his vows would not have been renewed anyway. The reason for their decision was “donations missing and unaccounted for.”

Later, in 1978, while operating a home for retarded adults in Milwaukee, Javore was accused by an associate of receiving more than $6,000 in Social Security payments intended for a retarded adult male, of spending those funds, and being unable to account for them.

Three witnesses first told Channel 12, and later confirmed for the Capital Times, that Javore had mistreated the retarded adult in question, beating him on a number of occasions...

Javore also claims ordination in the Church of Gospel Ministry—and organization which will ordain anyone for a contribution of $15. For another $25, it will “consecrate” you a bishop.

Like Stehlik, Javore was ordained a priest in the Old Catholic church, and—like Stehlik, too—he was later excommunicated.

Perhaps the most controversial of all the Van Hoof shrine’s clergy, however, is Glen Goergen, 36, known . . . as Brother Glen . . .

Goergen’s past, too, contains a long record of deceit, misrepresentation and hypocrisy. . . . most of Goergen’s religious hoaxes have been for mercenary ends.

He claims to have been a religious brother since 1967, but investigators uncovered the following, decidedly unreligious behavior:

• During the period Glen claims to have been a brother, he was married and divorced twice. He . . . served time in jail for nonsupport.
• Court records show that in 1970 Goergen lost a paternity suit and was later arrested for disorderly conduct . . .

And the list goes on: cashing bad checks; losing a civil judgment for beating up and permanently scarring a 16-year-old boy; operating phony dance contests; and setting up a telephone sales campaign and then announcing that he had, without ceremony, made everyone in the phone room a religious brother.

Brother Glen even admitted, . . . that he had taken nude photographs of three Milwaukee area teenage girls “maybe two years ago.” He defended that action by saying, “I was involved in a lot of drugs at that time.” (Capital Times, February 5, 1980)

When we questioned William Schnoebelen concerning “Bishop” Stehlik’s involvement in witchcraft, he replied: “Well, he, in fact, he did seek ordination to the witchcraft priesthood. Yes . . . he was ordained, initiated actually would be a more correct term, a witch . . .” The Milwaukee Journal, December 1, 1979, claimed that the television series revealed that “Stehlik was excommunicated from the Old Catholic Church . . . after he reportedly went to a service dressed in what was described as witchlike garb and babbled unintelligibly. The excommunication also cited his two marriages and devil worship, the programs say.” A priest in the Orthodox Catholic Church in Milwaukee informed us the Stehlik may have been murdered. In our interview with Mr. Schnoebelen, he remarked: “I understand the man has been murdered.”

William Schnoebelen maintained that “Pastor” David Javore, the man he served “under” at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Friary, was “a Franciscan priest.” This claim, of course, now appears to be dubious. In any case, in the interview we had with Schnoebelen, he said that Javore came to them as “a friar, if you will, in search of a bishop, . . .” In his excommunication papers from the Roman Catholic Church of the Ultragenthe Tradition, dated November 27, 1978, Javore was “forbidden to use the title ‘Father’ or to delude the public into thinking he is a Catholic Priest in the active ministry.” He was charged “with impersonating a Franciscan Friar . . . seeking ordination to the Priesthood under false pretenses” and with “associating with those persons involved in devil worship of the occult rites.” In a letter dated December 7, 1978, Bishop Robert William Lane wrote:

David Lawrence Javore has associated himself with one Edward M. Stehlik who claims to be a bishop . . . and also one Christopher Syn, who recently changed his name. . . . Javore has saw fit to associate himself with one Edward M. Stehlik who claims to be a Bishop. Enclosed you will find . . . his formal excommunication from the Church by his lawful superiors, which has never been lifted. . . . the Vicariate of Saint Mary Magdalen - Roman Catholic Church of the Ultragenthe [sic] Tradition is no longer responsible for the actions of anyone residing at Perpetual Help Friary . . . At no time has Edward M. Stehlik, Michael Point, or Christopher Syn been under our Jurisdiction.
David Javore’s excommunication papers noted his claim to be “an ordained minister in the Church of the Gospel Ministry.” The Journal, December 1, 1979, noted that even a television reporter was able to be ordained by the Church of Gospel Ministry for a fee: “Reporter McLauchlan noted that he, too, was ordained by the church after sending in $15. He was also informed that for another $25 he could become a bishop.”

When we questioned William Schnoebelen about the scandal which took place in 1979, he said he resigned from the “friary” in Milwaukee when he realized what was taking place:

Jerald Tanner: Did some kind of a scandal there develop concerning finances and homosexuality?

William Schnoebelen: That’s why I resigned. . . . I resigned just before any of this was made public—as soon as I learned of it.

In the resume referred to by Capital Times, which is signed by Edward Stehlik, he stated that he would not let his “homosexuality become a dominant factor in my life” for fear it might “bring scandal to the Church.” He did admit that he did find himself “being attracted to Bro ____, but nothing has happened as of yet.” When we questioned William Schnoebelen concerning the validity of Bishop Stehlik’s ordinations, he did admit that in one case “because of a homosexual thing, he may have ordained somebody he was very fond of, if you get my meaning.”

In the taped interview, Mr. Schnoebelen admitted that there were some real problems in the group:

People appeal to a bishop for authority, okay, and because of the screwy way some things went we at times had congregations in Eddystone, Pennsylvania. Another time we had a congregation in Atlanta, Georgia. . . . and they would kind of come and go, okay, that would appeal to Ed Stehlik to have his episcopal mantle, if you will, over them. And then something would happen. They’d either get him mad, or they’d do something weird . . . like the guy in Eddystone, Pennsylvania ended up proclaiming himself pope, and so we naturally had to, kind of, get rid of him. So it got a little strange.

In the introduction to Mormonism’s Temple of Doom it is stated that William Schnoebelen had been a “Catholic priest.” In the preface, page 7, however, it is stated that he was “ordained a priest in the Old Catholic Church—English Rite.” Although most people probably believe that this is referring to the Roman Catholic Church, it is good that there was some attempt to clarify the matter. A person who goes to the back of the booklet, page 63, will even find the actual name of the church: “American National Catholic Church.” Nevertheless, William Schnoebelen’s statement (page 7) gives the impression that his ordination was partially because of his education in Roman Catholic schools that he was ordained a “priest”: “I was educated in Catholic schools and received a masters degree in Theological Studies from St. Francis Catholic Seminary in Milwaukee. I was, in fact, ordained a priest in the Old Catholic Church—English Rite.” While it is true that he completed two years training at St. Francis Seminary (a Roman Catholic school), this was almost five years after he was supposed to have been ordained a priest in the American National Catholic Church.

One claim that seems to be missing in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, which appeared in the Saints Alive Journal, Winter 1986, is that Mr. Schnoebelen claimed to have been a Catholic Bishop in the late 1970s. The article noted that “Bill Schnoebelen has a powerful background,” and went on to say that he was a “Gnostic Catholic Bishop” in “1978.” In Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 64, the word “Catholic” is omitted and the year is given as 1977: “07/23/77 7th Degree Gnostic Bishop (Grand Master of the Temple Oto).” In the tape-recorded interview, Mr. Schnoebelen admitted that he had ordained some priests in the American National Catholic Church. Since only bishops can ordain priests, we wondered how he could legitimately do this. Schnoebelen tried to clarify this by stating: “After ‘78 I was a bishop.” He explained that “the fellow who ordained me a bishop was [of the] Vallatte succession—the Gnostic Bishop that you see in the chronology.” The more Schnoebelen tried to clarify the matter, the more outlandish the whole thing began to sound. He stated: “Vallatte, when he traveled through Europe ordained several rather bizarre people . . . who were into the occult, and some of them, in turn, ordained people who, for instance, ordained Aleister Crowley, who was, believe it or not, ordained an Old Catholic bishop . . . and this whole lineage then made it to America by way of Haiti, and . . . the official title of the church is the Ecclesia Gnostica Spiritualis, but I just keep the Latin out of it; I just said Gnostic Bishop.”

The fact that William Schnoebelen mentioned Aleister Crowley as having been “ordained an Old Catholic bishop” through the Vallatte succession seems to provide a very important key to this whole puzzle. A tract published by CARIS entitled, An Open Letter to the Witchcraft and Magical Community (revised 1986), charged that Crowley claimed to be “the Devil’s chief emissary on earth.” In his book, Biographical Dictionary of American Cult and Sect Leaders, 1986, pages 59-61, Dr. J. Gordon Melton gave this information: “Aleister Crowley the most renowned magical practitioner and theoretician of the twentieth century, . . . rebelled against his strict upbringing and earned the label ‘The Beast 666’
(from Revelation 13-18) given by his mother. . . . Crowley met Theodore Ruess, head of a German magical order, the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.). Crowley was accepted into the highest levels of the O.T.O. and organized a British branch called the Mysteria Mystica Maxima. The O.T.O. taught a form of sex magic . . . . The O.T.O. had previously created ten degrees, including ones for the practice of autoerotic (VIII°) and heterosexual (IX°) sex magic. Crowley’s new rituals added an experimental degree for homosexual . . . . magic (XI°) which he initiated in 1913. . . . he resided first in Tunis and then France, before returning to England for the last fifteen years of his life. By this time he had become a heroin addict, a condition he unsuccessfully fought for many years. . . .

A number of things led us to suspect that William Schnoebelen was ordained a bishop through Crowley’s organization, O.T.O. To begin with, Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 64, mentions Schnoebelen receiving the title, “Grand Master of the Temple Oto” when he became a “7th Degree Gnostic Bishop.” On the tape-recording, Schnoebelen pointed out to James Spencer that he should have used capital letters—i.e., OTO in the booklet. We have also seen a document which lists a member of Crowley’s OTO as a “Priestess of [the] Gnostic Catholic Church.” The reader will remember that in Ed Decker’s publication Mr. Schnoebelen himself was referred to as a “Gnostic Catholic Bishop.” In Schnoebelen’s statement which we quoted above, he claimed that the official title of the church was Ecclesia Gnostica Spiritualis. This is extremely interesting because in a booklet entitled, Documentation “Joseph Smith and the Temple of Doom,” Mr. Schnoebelen has reproduced a photograph of a text he claims he used in satanic worship (see Document D). The top line reads: “Liturgia De Ecclesia Gnostica Spiritualis . . . .” Mr. Schnoebelen claims that this text has parallels to the Mormon temple ceremony. In any case, the ritual speaks of the “ineffable King of Hell . . . . I proclaim that Lucifer rules the earth; . . . . and give myself wholly, body and soul, to the iniquities and evil which alone are pleasing to him. . . . I acknowledge him to be the One, True God; . . . .” Although only two of seven pages of this ritual are shown in the pamphlet, the first page says that the “Priestess of the Order should be upon the altar nude,” and it seems logical to assume that this has something to do with the “sex magic” which Crowley established.

It is interesting to note, also, that Mr. Schnoebelen states that “this whole lineage then made it to America by way of Haiti.” This may very well explain the “Voodoo” rites he participated in (see Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 64). That William Schnoebelen could receive an ordination in such a bizarre group and feel that it prepared him to serve in an Old Catholic church as a bishop is certainly strange. When we asked Mr. Schnoebelen whether his ordination was really related to witchcraft, he responded: “Well, you could call it witchcraft. It would be more appropriately be called ceremonial magic.”

In the tape-recorded interview we had with Mr. Schnoebelen, he acknowledged that he had ordained some women to be priests—a practice that was not permitted in the Old Catholic church:

Towards the last few years I did ordain some women to the Catholic priesthood when I was a bishop, which was, of course, not supposed to have been done, but I did it anyway. And she [a woman whom we had mentioned] . . . may very well have been one of the ladies that I did lay hands on and ordain a Catholic priest, but her primary function would have been as a witch high priestess.

Mr. Schnoebelen admitted that the requirements for the ordination of these women to be priests did not relate to academic requirements: “The criteria were there, but they were not academic criteria as much as they were do they understand the occult disciplines, can they do the rituals, etc., etc.” It would appear, then, that the requirement to become a priest in Schnoebelen’s church would relate to a person’s knowledge of witchcraft rather than to spirituality or educational requirements. Mr. Schnoebelen even admitted that one woman whom he may have ordained was not even regular in her attendance at church: “She’d show up from time to time . . . she was more into witchcraft. She’d just mainly show up just to be nice to me.” Blaine Hunsaker asked Mr. Schnoebelen an interesting question with regard to the women whom he ordained to be priests in the Old Catholic church:

Blaine Hunsaker: One question, these same women, were they involved in those sexual rites in witchcraft that you described?

William Schnoebelen: Yes, Yes. In order to be a third degree witch you have to go through that. Yes, so obviously they would have been.

The evidence we have given shows that William Schnoebelen was associated with a strange group of people in the American National Catholic Church. This was certainly a very twisted form of Catholicism. Those whom he served under had falsified the truth concerning their credentials. The leaders of this cult were plagued with charges of crime, simony, homosexuality and witchcraft. Mr. Schnoebelen added to this confusion by bringing in his background of witchcraft and Satanism. The women whom he himself ordained “priests” had, in fact, participated in weird sexual rites. Under these circumstances, it seems safe to conclude that his claims to have been a Catholic priest and bishop amount to nothing at all.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CLAIMS

Now that we have given some background concerning William Schnoebelen, the reader will be able to better understand the truth concerning the claims he presented in From Clergy to Convert. Mr. Schnoebelen’s attempt to maintain that there are not outright lies in the article is refuted twice in his very first sentence: “It’s pretty remarkable when a former Catholic priest marries a former nun but it’s even more remarkable when they end up joining the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints together.” Since William Schnoebelen’s chronology presented in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 63, shows that he was married on “05/31/74,” it is evident that he was not “a former Catholic priest” at that time. Furthermore, the woman he married was not “a former nun.” In the tape-recorded interview, William Schnoebelen tries to get around the problem by saying that he was really referring to his ordination into the American National Catholic Church:

...I never said I was a Roman Catholic priest anywhere in this thing. I said I was a Catholic priest, and I know that it was deceptive but what can I say? I was a sinner... There was not really anything per se deceitful said. It was just the way it was said.

Later in the taped interview, the following exchange occurred:

James Spencer: Is the point here that he says he’s a Catholic priest. Is your point that he is trying to somehow imply that he was a Roman Catholic priest...

Sandra Tanner: Yes. I think it is very obvious that the whole article is intended to convey the message that he was Roman Catholic.

...Schnoebelen:... There are misdirections in there that were necessary, but yeah, I’m not sure there is an outright lie in it. I mean, if you—

Spencer: What’s the misdirection?

Schnoebelen: Well, the misdirection—

Spencer: There isn’t any misdirection here...

Schnoebelen: Just mainly... and this is what I think you’re fishing for, because of the fact that the Old Catholic Church allows a married clergy and the Roman Catholic Church does not, there was a studious lack of dates being given. ... because to both the average Mormon and, of course, to the average Catholic the thought is... that if you’re a Catholic priest you cannot be married, and, of course I was married at the time I received my ordination.

S. Tanner: But doesn’t the story, in fact, portray you as a Catholic priest before you got married and your wife a nun before you got married?

Schnoebelen: Well, that is the way it ended up. How do I want to put this, I mean, you know—

Spencer: Yes or No?

Schnoebelen: Yeah, yeah, it does... but—

S. Tanner: And that’s not true.

Schnoebelen: Well, not by direct statement.

...S. Tanner: The implication of this whole thing is that you are a priest with a parish before you even meet your wife, before you got married.

Schnoebelen: I know that. That’s because, as I said, no Mormon or most Catholics to whom, of course, this little propaganda piece would be directed would understand or be able to receive the idea of a married Catholic priest.

...Jerald Tanner:... You were not attempting to present yourself as a Roman Catholic priest in this article?

Schnoebelen: No, no.

The evidence clearly shows that William Schnoebelen was not telling the truth in this article when he maintained that he was “a former Catholic priest” and his wife “a former nun,” at the time they got married. The attempt to dodge the issue by claiming that this was really referring to the period they were in the American National Catholic Church does not help at all because they were not even members of this church at the time they got married!

Mr. Schnoebelen’s affirmation in the meeting we held with him on February 19, 1988, that he was not attempting to present himself in the article as a Roman Catholic priest does not fit with the contents of the publication. Anyone who carefully reads the story of William Schnoebelen’s supposed ordination can see that it can only fit the framework of the Roman Catholic Church and that it had to occur before May 31, 1974, when he was legally married. On page 67 of the article in From Clergy to Convert, Mr. Schnoebelen claims that both he and his wife were raised “in strict Catholic families.” In the tape-recorded interview, he acknowledged that this was indeed the Roman Catholic Church. At the bottom of the same page, he claimed that before he “entered kindergarten” he wanted to be a “priest.” On page 68, he wrote: “After high school, my wife was attracted to the Franciscan contemplative life, so she entered the Order of the Poor Clares.” This, of course, is completely false. She may have entered into some type of order in the American National Catholic Church, but this would have been a decade later—after she was married to Schnoebelen. She was certainly never a nun in the sense that most of us understand the word.

On page 68 of the article, Mr. Schnoebelen claims that “my wife and I were caught in the avalanche” of “theological change” which followed “the Second Vatican Council.” This is clearly a reference to the Roman Catholic Church since the American National Catholic Church did not accept rulings which came from the “Vatican Council.” On the same page, William Schnoebelen contends that “College brought me serious doubts about my vocation to the priesthood.” This could only be Loras College, which is definitely a Roman Catholic School. Since we now know that Mr. Schnoebelen did not even graduate from Loras College until May 16, 1971, he would still be four years away from meeting the educational requirements to become a priest. Thus, his ordination could not take place until at least May 1975! This, of course, would have been prevented by the fact that he had married the year before (May 31, 1974). Mr. Schnoebelen, however, attempted to fit his ordination and his experience as a priest functioning in a parish into this time frame:

My ordination to the priesthood, although ritually impressive, left me feeling somehow empty. After the bishop laid his hands on my head, I felt little difference in myself. It seemed I had been ordained to a priesthood which no longer knew precisely what it was, to lead the people in directions that were no longer clear.

In my active ministry I felt inadequate to help my parishioners with their problems. The older people were wonderful, holding as they did to their simple faith and spirituality. But with the younger generation I felt as though I were walking on a paper-thick carpet of despair. More and more edicts came from the bishops, each more bewildering than the last. We could now eat meat on Friday. We no longer had to fast during Lent and Advent. Things previously regarded as grave sins were brushed away, and the supposedly unchangeable grandeur of the Latin Mass was so utterly trivialized as to render it comical (page 68-69).

This whole section was clearly written to describe conditions in the Roman Catholic Church and could have nothing to do with Schnoebelen’s claim that he later functioned as a priest in the American National Catholic Church. A hypothetical case might serve to illustrate the deception Mr. Schnoebelen has used here: suppose a bishop in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for some reason wanted people to think that he was really a bishop in the Mormon Church. One would have a difficult time condemning him if he merely wrote that he was a “Latter-day Saint” bishop because members of both churches are “Latter-day Saints.” (A minor point might be that the RLDS Church usually capitalizes the word day and does not include a hyphen.) If, however, he were to tell of the great struggles he had with members of his ward when the president of the church gave a revelation allowing blacks to hold the priesthood, we would know that he was deliberately trying to deceive because the president of the RLDS Church gave such a revelation in 1865, whereas the Utah Mormon Church did not receive a revelation to that effect until 1978!

At any rate, we have already shown that the Vicar General of the Archdiocese of Dubuque stated that William Schnoebelen “did indeed teach for two years in a [Roman] Catholic High School in this Archdiocese.” Mr. Schnoebelen, however, would have the reader believe that this occurred after he had served as a parish priest:

The people suffered from too much change too fast. They felt lost, and so did I. “The church is evolving,” I would say when they came to me for help. “We are letting the fresh air of ecumenism blow through the church—we must trust the bishops to know what they’re doing.”

Finally, I had to ask for a leave of absence. My superiors were sympathetic and gave me a job teaching music in a Catholic high school. Even here the “new” church mocked me. The simple solemnity of the Gregorian chant which once accompanied the liturgy was being replaced by rehashed folk music and banal modern tunes on electric guitars and drums (page 69).

William Schnoebelen goes on to say that because he could no longer endure teaching at the Roman Catholic high school, he went to work at a drug rehabilitation center. It was there that he met his future wife who had already “left her order”:

I was forced to direct music that would have been unthinkable in Catholic sanctuaries only a few years earlier.

To keep my sanity, to feel as though I were doing good somewhere, I volunteered to work weekends at a drug rehabilitation center in Dubuque. Here I met my future bride and eternal companion.

Alexandria had left her order for the same reasons for which I had left the priesthood. The bishops were pressuring the contemplative orders to get out in the world and do something more “relevant” than gardening, praying, and making rosaries. Alexandria had left in disgust, and found herself working beside someone who had similar conflicts with the church. . . . we were married in a civil ceremony on May 31, 1974. (pages 69-70)

After telling all of this story in a Roman Catholic setting, William Schnoebelen then related how he came to learn about the Mormons. At this point Schnoebelen then referred for the first time to a “Catholic Splinter group” he became involved with. His statement concerning this matter makes crystal clear that he had previously been referring to the “mainstream Catholic Church”—i.e., the Roman Catholic Church:

We waited six years! In the meantime, we looked into other churches . . . we even got involved in a Catholic splinter group which made me their priest. I stayed with them for three years, but their fanaticism finally drove us away.

I decided to give the mainstream Catholic Church one more chance, and enrolled in a master’s program at St. Francis Seminary, . . . (page 71)

At the top of the same page, Mr. Schnoebelen claimed that when he called “the number of the Milwaukee Ward [LDS] bishop . . . I identified myself as an ex-Catholic priest interested in joining the Church, . . .” We asked Mr. Schnoebelen about this matter in the tape-recorded interview:

Sandra Tanner: . . . you called to this bishop’s number . . . and say you’re an ex-Catholic priest.

Schnoebelen: Um hum.

S. Tanner: What ex-Catholic priest are you at that point?

Schnoebelen: I was an ex-Catholic who was a priest of the Wicca.

Jerald Tanner: Oh, . . . a Wiccan priest—

Schnoebelen: See, I was already a Wiccan high priest at this time.

. . .

J. Tanner: So, it appears you can substitute Wiccan for Catholic priest?

Schnoebelen: . . . we believed it was the same thing.

J. Tanner: And a —

James Spencer: Who did?

Schnoebelen: Witches generally.

J. Tanner: Yeah, witches generally, but people generally don’t believe that way.

Schnoebelen: No, no . . .

Language would become almost meaningless if we all used this type of reasoning to defend our actions. While we are certainly not apologists for the Roman Catholic Church, we feel that Mr. Schnoebelen gave a very distorted view of his own relationship to that church. He seems to have concentrated on the evils of the Catholics while at the same time making himself appear as the sincere seeker after God. He claimed that a priest taught him that the “miracles of the Bible were actually normal, natural happenings” (page 68). On the same page, he went on to say that he had a professor at the Catholic college he attended “who advocated masturbation, sexual freedom, and Marxist philosophy as the keys to Christian behavior.” This, of course, may or may not be true, but it is Schnoebelen’s attempt to paint himself as a true believer against such a background that is disturbing.

While Mr. Schnoebelen does state that after he left the Catholic priesthood, he and his wife “looked into other churches—it was quite an interesting smorgasbord! Evangelical Christians, Zen, yoga, spiritualism, the Episcopal Church” (page 71), he never tells of joining any other group, and completely suppressed the fact that he was deeply involved in witchcraft while he was at Loras College. Moreover, he completely omitted the information which shows that at the very time he was supposed to be a Roman Catholic priest, he was actually functioning as a “Spiritualist Minister, ADL.” Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, page 63 indicates that he assumed this role on “12/02/72.” In From Clergy to Convert, he maintained that problems in the Catholic Church and the music he was “forced to direct” made it hard to “keep my sanity” (page 69). The truth of the matter, however, seems to be that he was entangled in Luciferian activity. In The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? page 29, William Schnoebelen now admits he was “demonized” at the very time the Roman Catholics allowed him “to teach high school.”

On page 69 of From Clergy to Convert, Mr. Schnoebelen claims that he went into the drug rehabilitation center so he could “feel as though I were doing good somewhere, . . .” In the tape-recorded interview, however, he acknowledged that he did this so that he could make converts to witchcraft! On page 70, Mr. Schnoebelen wrote the following concerning the courtship he had with his wife:

We were kindred souls, but the idea of interacting with a woman terrified and excited me at the same time. In spite of it all, we were made for each other.

After a gentle, nine-month courtship, we were married in a civil ceremony on May 31, 1974. We had both soured so much on the Catholic Church that we could not bear a church wedding.

The truth of the matter is that when William first met Sharon at the drug rehabilitation center she was not “a former nun” who “left her order.” In the tape-recorded interview, Mr. Schnoebelen admitted that she was, in fact, a “married” woman whose “marriage was not doing well.” Her name at that time was “Sharon Mullen” (her maiden name was “Dura”). In any case, the “Chronology of William Schnoebelen,” presented on page 63 of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, shows that the period Schnoebelen refers to as “a gentle, nine-month courtship” was actually a time when they were living together after a witchcraft “marriage ceremony or ‘handfasting.’” This occurred on “07/29/73,” and they were finally “Legally married” on “05/31/74.” When Mr. Schnoebelen was asked about this, he replied: “We’ve had so many marriages [witchcraft marriages?], I have trouble keeping them all straight. . . . It would have been a courtship in the sense that we weren’t legally married . . . .” He later commented:

I was trying to get her to marry me legally . . . if that isn’t courtship, I don’t know what is. My parents were on my case: “You’re living in sin with a woman who’s not married to you,” and I was trying to get her to marry me, . . .

William Schnoebelen’s article, which appears in From Clergy to Convert, is filled with misrepresentation. It is interesting to note how closely Mr. Schnoebelen’s fabricated story followed the pattern set by the man who was supposed to have ordained him a priest in the American National Catholic Church. In the handwritten resume, which we have mentioned before, Edward Stehlik wrote: “Right after high school[] I went into a Carmelite Monestary . . . where I stayed for the next 6 years of my [i]ife.” We have already shown that at the very time “Stehlik claims to have been in a [Roman Catholic] monastery (1962-68), he was married for the first time, . . . (Capital Times, February 5, 1980) Mr. Schnoebelen’s story is remarkably similar to that given by his “bishop.”

THE FAUST STORY

As we have already shown, in the article written for the Mormons, William Schnoebelen began by saying: “It’s pretty remarkable when a former Catholic priest marries a former nun, but it’s even more remarkable when they end up joining The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints together.” After attacking the Catholics, Mr. Schnoebelen moved out of the Mormon camp and joined critics in condemning Mormonism. Again, he presented himself as a man with unique qualifications. In a video of his 1986 lecture at Capstone Conference, he remarked:

. . . because of this somewhat unique background—I don’t think there’s too many people that have gone from being a witch and a Satanist to being a Mormon to being a born-again believer—that I feel that there is something I might be able to add to the . . . dialogue concerning the state of the Mormon temple rituals.

In light of the facts which we now know about his claims concerning Catholicism and in view of the way he handled himself in the tape-recorded interview when he was confronted, we cannot help but wonder if he is still prone to making exaggerated claims. As we have already shown, in the book From Clergy to Convert, Mr. Schnoebelen gives us the false story of his “ordination to the priesthood” in the Roman Catholic Church. He tells how “impressive” the ritual was and how “the bishop laid his hands on my head.” He noted, however, that the ritual “left me feeling somehow empty.” One cannot help but wonder if another story he told after he left the Mormon Church concerning an interview with Apostle James E. Faust is also a fabrication. This story came to light in 1986 when Trinity Evangelical Divinity School was considering a suggestion that William Schnoebelen would be a good speaker to address the Tanner Annual Lectureship on Cults. According to Ruth Tucker, she talked to Mr. Schnoebelen over the telephone and he told her that a Mormon Apostle admitted to him that the Mormon leaders knowingly worship Lucifer in the temple ceremony. She became concerned about the matter, and Jerry Urban, who is on the committee which considers speakers, called Schnoebelen to question him further. Mr. Urban was given permission by William Schnoebelen to tape the interview so that the entire committee would be able to hear what he was claiming. In that interview, Mr. Schnoebelen claimed that the Mormon Apostle James E. Faust admitted in a private interview in 1981 that the Mormon temple ceremony was a witchcraft ritual and that Lucifer was, in fact, the God of the temple. In the tape-recorded interview, Jerry Urban mentioned hearing from Ruth Tucker the report concerning the “conversation with an apostle.” Mr. Schnoebelen responded as follows:

Schnoebelen: . . . we did have a personal interview with one of the twelve apostles . . . because we happened to know the right people . . .

Urban: . . . Who did you talk to out there? . . .

Schnoebelen: Elder Faust.

. . .

Schnoebelen: This is something . . . I’m still debating about whether or not to have really circulated because of the kind of thing he could probably, you know, want to sue us for.

Urban: . . . that’s part of my concern here. In other words, some—

Schnoebelen: I . . . don’t discuss this in any of my public [talks?]—

. . .

Urban: . . . so, then, you talked . . . to this Apostle Faust and—Schnoebelen: We had an audience or interview . . . and my wife had addressed at that time some troubling questions she had about all these resemblances that she was seeing between the temple ceremony and some of the stuff we had gone through [in witchcraft and Satanism] . . . and I’m giving you an almost exact quote . . . He said that he bore us his solemn testimony that this whole temple ceremony was precisely what she was describing as a witchcraft ceremony . . . and he said that, you know, that the God of the temple is Lucifer.

Urban: Oh, is—is that right?
Schnoebelen: Yes.
Urban: . . . He used that term?
Schnoebelen: Yes . . . in almost all occult and cult groups . . . you will find there is this teaching that there is the milk and the meat . . . and he told us that there are certain people that are calle—like, he referred to my wife as an elect lady . . . he assumed that because of all the experiences she has had that she was specially chosen by Father, who, of course, to him is Lucifer . . . to receive this inner teaching . . . which was that Lucifer was the true God of the Mormon Church and God of the temple . . .

Schnoebelen: . . . this is very common to all these kind of Luciferian cult groups. They believe that, you know, God is Lucifer—Lucifer is good . . . And that he is, in fact, you know, the God of this world . . .

Urban: See, I’m surprised that he used the term Lucifer, you know.

Schnoebelen: You see, you’ve got to realize that their whole thing is turned on end . . . and so for him it wouldn’t be all that blasphemous to say that Lucifer . . . is the true God. . . . That’s what these people sincerely believe.

When we heard the tape Mr. Schnoebelen had allowed Jerry Urban to make for the committee, we found it extremely disturbing and could not believe that Apostle Faust would have made the statements attributed to him, especially since he had just met William Schnoebelen and his wife and they had only been in the church for a year. We found this account by Schnoebelen to be as incredible as the statements which Mr. Kellie made to Ed Decker a number of years ago. Even if Apostle Faust worships Lucifer as the true God, it seems very difficult to believe that he would be so free in admitting it to two strangers who visited his office.

We were also suspicious of the fact that Mr. Schnoebelen was telling the story in private but not mentioning it in his printed works. When we talked to the Apostle LeGrand Richards in 1960, he became very upset and said “I’m warning you, don’t start anything against this church!” We published this statement without fear of a lawsuit. (Apostle Richards did threaten to sue us because we printed extracts from his great grandfather’s journal, but the suit was never filed.) If Apostle Richards had told us in the interview we had with him that he worshipped Lucifer and that he was the God of the Mormon temple ceremony, we would have immediately published it to the world. In fact, we would have felt that it was our duty before God to bring such an admission to light.

In any case, we had grave doubts about William Schnoebelen’s charges against Apostle Faust and felt that if he really believed Faust had said the things he was disseminating secretly, he should put them into print. Mr. Schnoebelen told Jerry Urban that he was “debating” whether to go public about the matter but was concerned that Apostle Faust might “sue.” If Schnoebelen had only been speaking about theories he had with regard to the Mormons worshipping Lucifer, we probably would not have published anything from the tape. As it was, however, Mr. Schnoebelen was definitely asserting that Apostle Faust himself said that “the God of the temple is Lucifer.” We felt that if Mr. Schnoebelen was telling the truth, he could not be sued if he published Faust’s statements. He might, however, face some risk if Faust had some witnesses who would testify otherwise or if Faust had secretly recorded the meeting and the tape did not support Schnoebelen’s charges. Since Schnoebelen appeared to be hiding behind the excuse of a lawsuit, we published his statement about Faust in the first edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine. We knew that there was no way Mr. Schnoebelen could be sued if we published the information. (In the booklet, we referred to the teaching that the Mormon leaders knowingly worshipped Lucifer as the Lucifer-God doctrine.)

In view of the fact that William Schnoebelen’s statements were tape-recorded, we expected that he would either own up to them or just ignore our publication. Instead, however, William Schnoebelen and Ed Decker responded to us in a way that we would never have expected. In their booklet The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? page 14, they accused us of being “unethical” in publishing statements from the tape, and to our surprise, on pages 3-4 they completely and emphatically denied that the Lucifer-God doctrine had been taught:

The very title of the booklet, “The Lucifer-God Doctrine,” is misleading, as is the above positional statement. Neither Ed [Decker] nor Bill [Schnoebelen] nor any other person associated with this ministry has ever taught that Mormon Church leaders knowingly believe in the “Lucifer-God” doctrine. One can, indeed, speculate about the highest men in Mormonism and how much they know, and how much they are deceived by Satan. . . . It may well be that Mormonism’s leaders are the most trapped of all, caught in an infernal web which they cannot understand. This we cannot know for certain. Because of this uncertainty, we again state at the outset that is not now, nor has it ever been the position of Saints Alive corporately, or Ed Decker and Bill Schnoebelen privately that the LDS leaders at any time operate within a “Lucifer-God” doctrine. Mr. Tanner has set up a straw man to tear down. His inference is that we claim and teach this doctrine and that is simply not true.

In a letter to “Ed & Bill,” dated January 29, 1988, Jerry Urban responded in a kind but vigorous manner to this denial. He had made his own transcription of some of the statements on the tape and had arrived at exactly the same conclusion we had—i.e., that William Schnoebelen had said that Apostle Faust claimed the “God of the temple is Lucifer.” He felt, therefore, that the denial was “not consistent with the discussion and taping.” Although William Schnoebelen and Decker had previously emphasized that no one “associated with this ministry has ever taught that Mormon Church leaders knowingly believe in the ‘Lucifer-God’ doctrine. . . . it is not now nor has it ever been the position of Saints Alive corporately, or Ed Decker and Bill Schnoebelen privately that the LDS leaders at any time operate within a ‘Lucifer-God’ doctrine,” Mr. Schnoebelen admitted in a letter to Jerry Urban that what he said in the tape-recorded interview “could fairly be construed to mean that my position ‘privately’ was that the LDS leaders operated within a LGD [Lucifer-God doctrine].” He went on to reveal something that he felt was on the tape but was not—i.e., that his wife had had a dream about Mormons “worshipping Lucifer in the temple” and that Apostle Faust had acknowledged that this “was true.” In the same letter Mr. Schnoebelen tried to justify his statements about the Lucifer-God doctrine by claiming that he was only “testifying” about the matter; he was not “teaching” it to an audience:

Re: #1; we think that to teach something is to intentionally promulgate it before a public forum, i.e. a classroom, conference or audience. It is also to present material in a fashion which assumes the data to be empirically demonstrable. You can teach the binomial theorem. But a witness on a stand testifying about his or her experiences cannot be said to be teaching—by any stretch of the imagination. This is all I was doing—testifying.

Neither Ed nor I ever taught the LGD. We never presented it as an established fact. We never published it; and in fact the question would never have been known to the LDS people had not Jerald put it into print!

#2 — the problem word here may be “privately.” Perhaps this was an unfair characterization. I certainly admit that what I said (and please remember we do not have the tape) could fairly be construed to mean that my position “privately” was that LDS leaders operate within a LGD. However, this is not the only interpretation. . . . It is not clear to us from these quotes whether the second set of quotes is me quoting Faust or me making observations. However, we would agree that Lucifer IS the god of the LDS church! Hopefully, you do too.

There is, however, a large difference between saying that Lucifer is the god of the LDS church and saying that the LDS leaders KNOW that he is the god of their religion. That is the distinction we keep trying to make, and no one seems to want to let us make it. Even in the case of the Faust interview, all that established is that Faust said that he believed that what Sharon had told him about having a dream (of temple patrons worshipping Lucifer in the temple) was true; and led us to believe that indeed such worship went on in the temple. That’s all. I’m sorry if the tape gave any other impression, but you must remember that I was talking “ad lib” five years after the fact.

Now at most, that only covers one Apostle who may have been expressing a “private opinion.” It is even possible, as Jerald has suggested, that Sharon and I misinterpreted what he said, although she and I have discussed it at great length and honestly don’t believe this to be the case.

In any event, we are only talking about one apostle. That’s all it addresses. I do not publicly or privately believe that all the LDS leaders knowingly worship Satan, and I have never said that . . .

William Schnoebelen’s attempt to claim that he was “only talking about one apostle” in the phone call with Jerry Urban does not match statements that are preserved on the tape. While he only refers to the confession of “one apostle” that “the God of the temple is Lucifer,” a careful examination of his statements makes it clear that he claimed the leaders (plural) of the Mormon Church believed in the Lucifer-God doctrine. He told, for instance, of the “inner teaching” that “Lucifer was the true God of the Mormon Church and God of the temple . . .” He said that “They believe that, you know, God is Lucifer . . .” Schnoebelen also maintained that “these people sincerely believe” that “Lucifer . . . is the true God.”

William Schnoebelen’s attempts to extricate himself from the contradictory statements he has made reminds us of the story of the man who borrowed a jug. After he returned it, the owner found that it was broken and accused him of being the one who broke it. The man responded that he had not taken it in the first place; that it was already broken when he borrowed it; and, furthermore, that there was nothing wrong with it when he returned it. Mr. Schnoebelen’s excuses with regard to the false statements which appear in the response written by Ed Decker and himself brings to mind his attempt to explain away his false statement that he was an “ex-Catholic priest” by saying that he really was an ex-Catholic and a “Wiccan priest.” In their response to us, page 23, Schnoebelen and Decker say that “the serpent teaches doctrine in Genesis,” and they refer to the “teachings Lucifer gives Eve.” This was certainly not “before a public forum, i.e. a classroom, conference or audience.” Mr. Schnoebelen is splitting hairs over the meaning of a word to defend his statements in the response.

We have always been very critical of the way Joseph Smith and other early Mormon leaders publicly denied polygamy when the evidence shows they were, in fact, practicing it. In the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 411, Joseph Smith is quoted as saying: “What a thing it is for a man to be accused of committing adultery, and having seven wives, when I can only find one. I am the same man, and as innocent as I was fourteen years ago; and I can prove them all perjurers.” On February 1, 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother, Hyrum, went so far as to publish a public announcement that Hiram Brown had been “cut off from the church” for “preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, . . . (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 423). On March 15, 1844, Hyrum Smith, who was a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church and a polygamist at that time, strongly denied that the church leaders were “privately or publicly” teaching plural marriage:

Whereas brother Richard Hewitt . . . states to me that some of your elders say, that a man having a certain priesthood, may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here: I say unto you that that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here. And any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine, is culpable, and will stand a chance to . . . lose his license and membership also: . . .” (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 474)

After the Mormons finally admitted that they were indeed practicing polygamy, their leaders tried to explain away the previous denials in a way that reminds one of William Schnoebelen’s explanations of his statements made regarding the Lucifer-God doctrine. They claimed, for instance, that Joseph Smith and other early Mormon officials were only denying the wicked practice of polygamy, not the righteous system of plural marriage which the Lord had introduced. Mr. Schnoebelen’s denials of holding to the Lucifer-God doctrine, would certainly fall into the same category as the denials the Mormon apologists issued. In fact, the Mormons could say that Joseph Smith was not really “teaching” polygamy, he was merely “testifying” to the women concerning the principle and that they chose to enter into the practice.

It is interesting to note that Ed Decker himself severely condemned the Mormons for using this very type of double talk. In The God Makers, we find a chapter entitled, “Lying Prophets And Apostles.” In this chapter we find the following:

The Brethren lied to deny it was practiced, then lied to establish it as the most sacred doctrine of the Church, then lied again to abandon it. . . . The consistent record of lies and deception leaves us with no choice but to conclude that leaders in the Mormon Church, then and now, have a contempt for truth and honesty when it comes to defending their “Prophet” and their religion. . . . right up to the time of his death. . . . Joseph Smith made repeated public and private denials that he was a polygamist. . . . Joseph Smith was the perjurer. Only false prophets lie. . . . Mormon leaders . . . compounded their sin by public denials that were just plain lies. . . . Joseph Smith had at least four and probably seven times the seven wives he was accused of having! If he lied about this issue, what else would he lie about? How could anyone accept anything he said? Joseph F. Smith . . . tried to call these lies “seeming denials.” His statement betrays the mentality that persists among Mormons even today which allows them to deny the obvious with an apparently good conscience: . . . The brazen hypocrisy and deceit of Mormon Presidents and Apostles can be seen . . . Joseph Smith’s unconscionable contempt for truth is staggering . . . polygamy was being practiced secretly and being lied about publicly. . . . The persistent duplicity of early Mormon Prophets and Apostles involved in the polygamy caper is almost beyond belief. (The God Makers, 1984, pages 146, 149, 152-154, 157-158)

Ed Decker, of course, was correct in stating that the early Mormon leaders did not tell the truth about plural marriage. It seems remarkable to us, however, that Decker and Schnoebelen have done exactly the same thing with regard to the Lucifer-God doctrine. When Wesley P. Walters pressed Mr. Decker on his beliefs concerning the Lucifer-God doctrine, he finally admitted that Mr. Schnoebelen had sent him a manuscript which contained an account of the “Faust visit”:

. . . I do not believe that Bill has stated, even in private, “that Faust admitted that such (LDS Leadership knowingly designing their religion to serve satan) was the case.” He did say, in private, that One and Only One general authority gave recognition that He and only He understood this.

It was several years ago that I came across the Faust visit in a manuscript Bill sent me from Iowa. It was at that time that I contacted Bill and told him that conversation was undocumentable and therefore unusable and should be stricken from any manuscript. Bill did strike it from the book but, unfortunately mentioned it to Jerry Urban a year later. For that he now considers himself fool of the year .

Bill recalls to the best of his recollection . . . telling Jerry that Faust acknowledged that what Sharon (Bill’s wife) said to him (Faust) about her having dreams in which she saw LDS temple patrons crying out in worship to Lucifer was true, according to “his solemn testimony”. . . . acknowledging Faust’s understanding (HIS ONLY) that Lucifer was the god of the LDS temple ritual.

Now please, Wes . . . you are supposed to be an intelligent man and researcher. What that says and what you said we have taught are two different things. (Letter from Ed Decker to Wesley P. Walters, dated Feb. 9, 1988)

The reader will note that Ed Decker acknowledged that he had read the account of the Faust interview in William Schnoebelen’s manuscript “several years ago.” It is troubling that a man who knew all this could have written the following in the response to us: “. . . it is not now, nor has it ever been the position of . . . Bill Schnoebelen privately that the LDS leaders at any time operate within a ‘Lucifer-God’ doctrine.” The evidence clearly shows that William Schnoebelen held to the idea that the Mormon leaders knowingly worshipped Lucifer and even wrote a manuscript for publication (“Having A Form of Godliness”) which contained that information. Although Ed Decker may have told Mr. Schnoebelen that the Faust interview should be “stricken” from the manuscript, he was apparently convinced that Apostle Faust did tell Schnoebelen that “the God of the temple is Lucifer.” One of the authors of this newsletter (Sandra Tanner) remembers a meeting with Ed Decker at the Christian Embassy Bookstore in Salt Lake City months before Mr. Schnoebelen spoke at Capstone Conference in 1986. At that time Mr. Decker said that he now knew that the Mormon leaders knowingly worshiped Lucifer in the temple. When Sandra protested that this was going too far and warned him that he was skating on very thin ice, Ed Decker responded that a highly reliable informant had given him this information. It now appears that it was William Schnoebelen who had revealed this information to Mr. Decker. In a letter dated January 9, 1988, Ed Decker denied that he “EVER GAVE A TEACHING THAT THE LDS LEADERS BELIEVE AND CONSPIRE THAT LUCIFER IS THEIR GOD AND KNOWINGLY LEAD THEIR PEOPLE INTO HIS BONDAGE, . . .” In the same letter, however, Mr. Decker said: “I may have talked at leadership level about our studies in this area and Sandra may have warned me to be careful. . . .”

Whether it was “a teaching” or only a “testimony,” Sandra definitely remembers Ed Decker making the claim that the Mormon leaders knowingly worshiped Lucifer in the temple and cannot understand how he could say that he never even “privately” held to “the position” that “the LDS leaders at any time operate within a ‘Lucifer-God’ doctrine.” While Jerald was not at this meeting, he distinctly recalls discussing Mr. Decker’s assertion concerning the Mormon leaders knowingly worshipping Lucifer with Sandra immediately after she left Christian Embassy Bookstore. It is even possible that Sandra’s stiff opposition to Ed Decker’s statement about the matter might have had some influence in his decision to tell William Schnoebelen that the interview with Apostle Faust “should be stricken” from his manuscript.

In the tape-recorded interview we had with William Schnoebelen, he admitted that he had circulated his manuscript to a number of people besides Ed Decker—an admission which seems to further undermine his earlier statement that he did not even “privately” promote the Lucifer-God doctrine. When Schnoebelen was asked whether the Faust interview was in the copy of the manuscript which he gave to James Spencer and his wife, he admitted that “it probably is.” James Spencer said that he is planning to print Mr. Schnoebelen’s manuscript but that “there’s no way I would publish that with that statement in there.”

In the presence of Mr. Schnoebelen, Pastor Spencer said that he also remembered him telling the Faust story. He recalled that Schnoebelen told him that he and his wife Sharon, “went into his [Apostle Faust’s] office and she went into the dream that she’d had, and I remembered you saying that she had seen a naked lady in the temple kind of on an altar, and I remember you saying to me that Apostle Faust said to you, ‘I see that you are an elect lady.’”

In a letter to Jerald Tanner, dated February 4, 1988, Ed Decker said that he could not be at the interview with William Schnoebelen, however, he had “asked Blaine Hunsaker to sit in for me.” Mr. Hunsaker was very honest about the whole matter and made some admissions which really hurt the position that both Decker and Schnoebelen had taken in their response to us. Mr. Hunsaker said that William Schnoebelen had told him and his wife “the whole story” of the interview with Apostle Faust “about a year and a half ago.” Mr. Hunsaker, who is with Saints Alive in Brigham City, Utah, went on to say that he publicly disseminated the story of the Faust interview: “. . . I used it. I used it in tape messages advertized in the newspapers. I didn’t use Bill Schnoebelen’s name in connection with it; I said . . . some of our people have been in conference with Apostle Faust and Apostle Faust had admitted and repeated —” At this point Mr. Hunsaker was interrupted, but he later went on to say that he had wanted William Schnoebelen to make the Faust interview public: “In fact, personally, I was hoping that he would take the boldness and bring it out into the public . . . but he chose not to.”

It was certainly refreshing to hear the straightforward response of Mr. Hunsaker—Ed Decker’s own representative at the meeting. His account completely undermined the denials Decker and Schnoebelen had written in response to us. The reader will remember that on pages 3-4 of the response, they stated:

Neither Ed nor Bill nor any other person associated with this ministry has ever taught that Mormon Church leaders knowingly believe in the “Lucifer-God” doctrine. . . . it is not now, nor has it ever been the position of Saints Alive corporately, or Ed Decker and Bill Schnoebelen privately that the LDS leaders at any time operate within a “Lucifer-God” doctrine.

On the tape recording which Jerry Urban made, William Schnoebelen was very definite about what Apostle Faust had told him: “. . . he said that, you know, that the God of the temple is Lucifer.” Jerry Urban responded: “Oh, is—is that right?” Mr. Schnoebelen replied: “Yes.” Urban then asked Schnoebelen if Faust “used that term?” Schnoebelen’s response was, “Yes.” In the interview we had with William Schnoebelen on February 19, 1988, he did not seem to be as certain about the matter:

Schnoebelen: . . . Faust said, after hearing this account [Sharon’s account of the dream that the Mormon’s were worshipping Lucifer], he said, I bear you my solemn testimony that these things are true. . . . We, of course, thought he meant that [i.e., the dream], and I admit that there are other options open. He never said quote, unquote, Lucifer is the God —

Spencer: He may have been saying to you I bear you my testimony that the Mormon Church is true?

(A at this point everyone began talking at once and nothing can be transcribed.)

Schnoebelen: No, he never said that in so many words to the best of my recollection or Sharon’s.

Jerald Tanner: . . . He never said that Lucifer is the God of the temple?

Schnoebelen: No, no.
promoting the Luciferian theory. That there are “many” esoteric matters concerning the temple and witchcraft which only those close to Schnoebelen can learn is made plain on pages 14-15 of the rebuttal:

In counsel with their pastor and in prayer before God, they [William Schnoebelen and his wife] have chosen not to mention many things about the temple and its association with witchcraft—things far more troubling than what has been published—because they would be too sensational and too disturbing for the average Mormon to hear about.

While we have no reason to doubt that William Schnoebelen and his wife met with Apostle Faust, we cannot accept his story concerning the conversation which ensued. It seems as mythical as his earlier claim that a Roman Catholic bishop “laid his hands” on his head and ordained him to the priesthood.

ELI A MORMON?

In an article published in Saints Alive Journal, Winter 1986, William Schnoebelen wrote:

As a former Mason/Occultist, I joined the LDS Church . . . My teacher, the highest ranking Witch in the USA . . . told us that the LDS church was a place prepared for witches and occultists to hide should the country’s mood change to a conservative one. He told us that Mormonism had been founded by Lucifer to provide a hospitable cover where witches could hide themselves . . . Our witch “Master” told us that the Mormon temple was an especially powerful place to go. . . . Indeed, he told us that there was an occult power to be had in the temple that could be achieved nowhere else . . .

In the Decker-Schnoebelen response to us, page 14, the witch Master’s craft name is given as “Eli” (his real name was Barney C. Taylor), and the organization he headed was known as the Mental Science Institute. Mr. Schnoebelen’s claim that “Eli” was “the highest ranking Witch in the USA,” seems to be a real exaggeration. In the first edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine, page 5, we pointed out that when “Mr. Schnoebelen speaks of his ‘Witch Master’ as being ‘the highest ranking Witch in the USA,’ this could give the impression to some people that he had power over all other witches in the United States. This, of course, could not possibly be correct because witchcraft is divided up into a number of groups. It is comparable, in fact, to the situation we find in Mormonism. Those who have made a serious study know that there are quite a number of churches that base their teachings on Joseph Smith. Although the President of the Reorganized LDS Church has a certain amount of power in his own church, he has no control over the Utah Mormons. The ‘Witch’ whom Mr. Schnoebelen refers to may have had a great deal of influence in his own group, but there seems to be no reason to believe he had power over the other groups.”

In the Decker-Schnoebelen response, page 14, it is conceded that we were “right in saying that there are many witchcraft groups. Bill has even gone to lengths in his subsequent talks to correct any confusion this statement may have caused. . . . witches, like cultists, have the belief that their form of Wicca is the ‘only, true form of witchcraft.’ . . . The Druidic Craft (Mental Science Institute) taught that all other witches were false. . . . To the devout Mormon, there are no other ‘restored churches,’ even though there are actually more than a hundred. Similarly, to him, all other witchcraft traditions were fake, so Eli was in fact the head of all witches; just as Benson is the prophet of all Mormons.”

In his lecture delivered at Capstone Conference in 1986, William Schnoebelen acknowledged that “witchcraft is sort of like many religions, its fragmented. There’s literally hundreds of ways of practicing it.” He boasted, however, that “this Eli . . . had responsibility over literally thousands of occultists and witches from the Druidic Rite, as it’s called, of witchcraft.” Although Mr. Schnoebelen would have us believe that “Eli” was over “literally thousands” of people, the evidence does not seem to support that claim. Dr. J. Gordon Melton, the noted authority on churches, cults and the occult, claims that the Mental Science Institute was actually a small group. He feels, in fact, that it probably did not have more than one or two hundred members.

In any case, William Schnoebelen claimed that he had a xerox copy of a typed sheet containing a ritual used in the Mental Science Institute where a man and woman were sealed together “for time and all eternity.” This contained wording which is strikingly similar to the Mormon temple ceremony in which couples are also sealed “for time and all eternity” (see our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 473). We felt that the parallels between the two ceremonies were just too close to be coincidence. In his 1986 lecture at Capstone Conference, Mr. Schnoebelen claimed that the Mental Science Institute rituals “date back to at least the Scottish immigration to Southeastern America in the 1700s, and they are virtually identical to the rights that are used today in the Mormon temple.”

In the first edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine, we made a careful study of the Mormon temple ceremony and found that the material Mr. Schnoebelen claimed was out of witchcraft resembled the modern version of the temple ceremony (which we had published in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? in 1972) far more than it did versions published during the 19th century. Since a number of changes had been made in the temple ceremony since it was given in the 1840s, this indicated to us that the material which Schnoebelen claimed was from witchcraft and dated back to “the 1700s” was in reality taken from the Mormon temple ceremony in recent years. In his 1986 lecture at Capstone Conference, William Schnoebelen had this sharp rebuke for those who would be so misinformed as to suggest that the witchcraft material was taken from the Mormon temple ceremony, rather than the other way around: “... I have this to say to them: PHOOEY!”

Even though William Schnoebelen seemed so emphatic in his position that there could not have been a reverse borrowing of the material, the evidence we had uncovered indicated that this was the case. Fortunately, we were referred to Jack Roper, an expert on the occult. Mr. Roper was aware of the Mental Science Institute and had met “Eli” at one time. He thought this organization had doctrines similar to Mormonism and referred us to Jack Roper, an expert on the occult. Roper was aware of the Mental Science Institute and had met “Eli” at one time. He thought this organization had doctrines similar to Mormonism and referred us to an article by J. Gordon Melton which contained the following:

Mental Science Institute. Eli Taylor, who is the grand master of what is termed druidic witchcraft, is a descendant of Thomas Hartley... The Mental Science Institute was organized in the late 1960’s as a focus for Taylor’s brand of herbal magick... The universe is seen in a series of levels—celestial, terrestrial and telesial. The celestial is divided into sublevels at the top of which is God the Father, followed by the Lord of Lights, angels and angels. Man, animals and plants are on the terrestrial level. At the lowest level, the telestial level, are the mineral, chemical and electrical elements and creative thought. Just as there is a Father, there is a Mother of all men.

In a concept very close to Mormon theology, the Mental Science Institute teaches that the Father must at one time have been a child.

This article provides information which seems to show that the Mental Science Institute has borrowed some of its ideas from Mormonism. Besides the parallel concerning the Father having “been a child,” we have the words “celestial, terrestrial and telestial.” Those who are familiar with Mormonism know that Joseph Smith taught that there were three kingdoms in heaven, the celestial, terrestrial and telestial (see Doctrine and Covenants, Section 76). While Joseph Smith’s view on three heavens could have been derived from Swedenborg’s writings, the idea that one of the kingdoms was named the “terrestrial” kingdom seems to be unique to Mormonism. (The word Terrestrial, of course, actually means earthly.) The fact that the Mental Science Institute used the word terrestrial (Eli seems to have dropped the final r from the word) as the name of one of the levels of the universe leads to the view that this organization was borrowing from Mormonism. The thing that really cinches the matter, however, is the use of the word “telestial” for the lowest level. It is a well-known fact that this is not a real word. It was, in fact, invented by Joseph Smith in the early 1830s.

Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen took issue with our research concerning the Mental Science Institute and wrote the following on page 21 of their rebuttal:

> It was good of Mr. Tanner to note that occult researchers Jack Roper and Gordon Melton collaborate both the existence of Eli and his Mental Science Institute, and its strong resemblance to Mormonism. However, with typical misdirection, he then writes: “[Melton’s] article provides information which seems to show that the Mental Science Institute has borrowed some of its ideas from Mormonism.”

> Actually, the article does no such thing. Interestingly enough, Bill was perfectly aware of the Melton book and provided a photocopy of the article to his co-author, Jim Spencer; who came to precisely the opposite conclusion as the Tanners—taking it as a confirmation of Bill’s story. . . .

> All this proves is that LDS and Wiccan theology are close. But Mr. Tanner concludes that it proves he is right and we are wrong. He feels that the use of the word “telestial” by Eli proves that he borrowed from Mormonism rather than vice-versa. . . . It may be that telestial is not a real word, but if anything, that substantiates the claim toward his getting it from witchcraft. . . . Which is more likely, that Smith pulled the word out of thin air or that he got it from one of the many occult associations in Smith’s family?

While Decker and Schnoebelen charged that we were using our “typical misdirection” in stating that the Mental Science Institute borrowed from Mormons, the evidence that this is the case has become irrefutable. On January 13, 1988, Dr. J. Gordon Melton, the author of the article which tipped us off to the Mormon connection, sent us a prepared statement which confirms that the evidence does show that Eli borrowed from the Mormons:

> “During the 1970s while I was researching the NeoPagan community, I had ample opportunity to investigate the teachings of the Mental Science Institute led by Barney Taylor (Eli). All of the evidence suggests... that Taylor created MSI himself using as content some books on Rosicrucianism, herbolagy, Mormonism, and the occult. Taylor had no discernible traditional roots in any witchcraft prior to the contemporary Gardnerian revival which dates from the 1940s. I can say that beyond any reasonable doubt that any similarity between MSI and Mormonism on matters of teaching is due to Taylor's having taken Mormon ideas and incorporating them in MSI. Taylor does not represent any nineteenth-century witchcraft tradition which could serve as a common source for both his teachings and those of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. During my extensive study of witchcraft in America, I could find no evidence of any witchcraft apart from various mundane magical spells (such as making love potions) being practiced in America. There is no evident evidence of anyone advocating or practicing a consistent witchcraft worldview from which a sophisticated religious teaching such as Mormonism could be derived. Anyone advocating the development of Mormonism out of witchcraft has the burden of proof upon them to establish that any such witchcraft existed."

J. Gordon Melton

At one time an ex-member of the Mental Science Institute gave Dr. Melton a “large file” of material he had acquired while he had belonged to that organization. Among the items was The Second Book of Wisdom—a document of 126 pages by Barney C. Taylor (Eli). This work contains “a series of informative materials, study questions, and practices for the beginner in occult science . . . leading to the Diplome of a Fellow of Mental Science.” We were especially interested in this document because in a letter dated April 13, 1987, William Schnoebelen claimed that the pages he had containing the sealing ritual (the material which is similar to the Mormon temple ceremony) were taken “out of the 2nd Book of Wisdom, a ritual work book of the Druidic Craft of the Wise—aka Druidic Wicca or Mental Science Institute. . . . my copy was destroyed by fire in 1984, but I was able to procure these pages from a former colleague high priest in Arkansas. They were typed by him and sent to me.”

Fortunately, The Institute For the Study of American Religion, which is directed by Dr. Melton, provided us with a xerox copy of The Second Book of Wisdom. This copy, which contains 34 lessons, does not have any material concerning couples being sealed “for time and all eternity”—i.e., the ritual which Mr. Schnoebelen claims came out of “the 2nd Book of Wisdom.” When we questioned William Schnoebelen about The Second Book of Wisdom, he claimed that “it was only available, you see, to the High Priesthood.” Mr. Schnoebelen’s claim seems inconsistent with the cover page which says that it is “for the beginner in occult science.” When we showed Schnoebelen the copy we had received, he looked it over and said: “Well, this is a lot more comprehensive, okay, than what I saw. In fact, this looks like its been kind of worked over and polished up. . . . I recognize things in here.” When he was asked if this was the book referred to as The Second Book of Wisdom, he replied: “I would have no reason to doubt it, No, no.” The question was raised concerning why the material that resembled the Mormon temple ceremony was not in the copy which Dr. Melton obtained. Mr. Schnoebelen responded that “it was” in the copy he had, and he didn’t know “why it isn’t now.

William Schnoebelen went on to state that The Second Book of Wisdom was only “available to a High Priest or a High Priestess.” He had previously written that he destroyed his occult material in 1984 when he became a Christian. This would explain why he had to go back to a “high priest in Arkansas” to obtain copies of some of the pages from that document. He later related, however, that “Sharon’s occult things were at her parents” and therefore “were preserved from destruction” (The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? page 18). Since the High Priestess was also supposed to have a copy of The Second Book of Wisdom, we asked Mr. Schnoebelen why her copy had not survived. He replied: “Well, you see, you’ve got to understand something and I hope Jim can verify this for my book; we had a fire in 1974, and all her occult materials were destroyed because . . . the fire bomb was thrown into our attic.” It would appear, then, that there were two fires—Sharon’s copy was destroyed in the fire set by an arsonist in 1974 and ten years later William burned his own copy.

While J. Gordon Melton’s copy of The Second Book of Wisdom does not give any support for the material Mr. Schnoebelen claims was in the document (i.e., the pages concerning the sealing of men and women “for time and all eternity”), it does provide extremely important evidence to show that Mormon words and concepts were used by Eli as structural material for his own peculiar version of “Druidic” witchcraft. For instance, in his translation of the Book of Abraham, Joseph Smith seems to have created a new word by slightly modifying the Hebrew word for star—kokob: “And I saw the stars. . . . and that one of them was nearest unto the throne of God; . . . and the name of the great one is Kolob, because it is near unto me, for I am the Lord thy God: . . . ” (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham 3:2-3). On page 10 of The Second Book of Wisdom, Eli borrowed the word that Joseph Smith had created:
Then one giant yellow sun; a world of very high vibrations, came into the Universe. This was the world of KOLOB, the first.

When we questioned Mr. Schnoebelen about the word “Kolob” found in Eli’s document, he admitted that “he [Eli] used the word Kolob quite frequently . . .”

In the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 2:25, we read: “Adam fell that men might be and men are, that they might have joy.” In The Second Book of Wisdom, page 66, Eli borrowed the last seven words of this verse, and although he put quotation marks around them, he did not give the source: “Then what should we get out of living? ‘Men are that they might have joy.’”

J. Gordon Melton has also sent us a copy of the Mental Science Institute’s Priesthood Manual. On page 19 of this work, Eli again cited from the Book of Mormon: “People should have fun. Our scriptures say that ‘MEN ARE THAT THEY MIGHT HAVE JOY,’ so have fun.” That Eli would refer to the quotation as being from the “scriptures” is very interesting.

Other things in The Second Book of Wisdom betray that it had roots in Mormonism. Although Eli seemed to avoid naming Mormon publications, on page 77, he expressed the importance of paying tithing and used “the Mormon church” as an example. He claimed that because of its system of tithing the church flourished. Today it is about the seventh in numbers in the United States, but the second in wealth.

Through the Institute for the Study of American Religion, J. Gordon Melton has also provided us with another book written by Eli, The First Book of Wisdom. This book uses the word “Kolob” over a dozen times in the opening section. On page 6, for instance, Eli spoke of the time “when the children of Kolob became Gods in their own solar systems, . . .” This, of course, has a familiar Mormon ring to it. On page 22 we read that “All worlds, celestial, terrestrial, and telestial, are inhabited by beings with physical bodies suited for their worlds.”

Pages 21 and 24 of The First Book of Wisdom contain material that was obviously derived from Mormonism:

. . . the Father must have been a child before He became an adult. . . . The Father therefore must have been a man before he became God . . . God is a perfected man. . . . If God was once a child, he must have had a Father, who also must have had a Father, and so on back into infinity. . . . If Man has a spiritual Father, then he must have had a spiritual Mother. Even though God is a perfected man, he could not become a “Father” without a female spirit to act as Mother and accomplish the miracle of creation. . . . You are a spiritual Being—a child of this celestial family—a child of God—a God in the making. . . . You WILL be like your Father in Heaven. A Creator in your own right. . . . Eternal progress is the law of the universe . . . When the Children of God become adult Gods, they will be required to create their own worlds as schools for their own children.

The reader should compare these statements made by Eli with quotations from the teachings of Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders:

First, God himself . . . is a man like unto one of yourselves. . . . God himself, the Father of us all dwelt on an earth. . . . You have got to learn how to be Gods yourselves; . . . (Joseph Smith, Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pp. 613-614)

. . . God the Eternal Father was once a mortal man who passed through a school of earth life . . . He became God . . . (Milton R. Hunter, The Gospel Through The Ages, page 104)

. . . our Father in Heaven was begotten on a previous heavenly world by His Father; and again, He was begotten by a still more ancient Father, and so on, . . . (Orson Pratt, The Seer, page 132)

The stupendous truth of the existence of a Heavenly Mother, as well as a Heavenly Father, became established facts in Mormon theology. (Milton R. Hunter, The Gospel Through the Ages, page 98)

. . . God, our heavenly Father, was perhaps once a child, and mortal like we ourselves, and rose step by step in the scale of progress . . . (Orson Hyde, Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 123)

God the Father is a glorified and perfected man. . . . (Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, 1966, page 319)

A careful search of Mormon literature on the teachings concerning God might reveal many more parallels to Eli’s teachings in the First Book of Wisdom. Even more important evidence, however, comes from a statement which appears on page 26 of Eli’s Priesthood Manual:

Gemini Message—“As men are, God once was, until he thought; as God is, men may become, when they think.”

Any real student of Mormonism will recognize that Eli has borrowed from a poem written by Lorenzo Snow.
When we had the tape-recorded interview with William Schnoebelen we pointed out that the evidence clearly showed that Eli borrowed from Mormonism. We noted, in fact, that Eli had lifted material from all the standard works of Mormonism—i.e., the material Mormons accept as scripture. We showed that he used the word “telestial” from the Doctrine and Covenants; that he took the word “Kolob” from the Pearl of Great Price; and that he quoted directly from 2 Nephi 2:25 in the Book of Mormon. That Eli used two very unique words which Joseph Smith himself had coined seems to be very strong evidence in itself that he was using Joseph Smith’s writings in creating his system of witchcraft. Since Mr. Schnoebelen had claimed that Eli said “the Mormon temple was an especially powerful place to go . . . that there was an occult power to be had in the temple that could be achieved nowhere else,” we felt that Eli must have been a Mormon at one time.

After presenting some of the evidence which led us to conclude that Eli had borrowed from Mormonism to William Schnoebelen, we asked him if Eli had any Mormon books. He replied: “Not that I ever saw.” To our great surprise, however, he made an astounding admission when we asked, “Did Eli . . . ever join the Mormon Church to your knowledge?” Mr. Schnoebelen responded: “. . . he claimed that at one point he had been a Mormon bishop.” Mr. Schnoebelen went on to state: “He indicated that . . . when he had been on the west coast he had found it expeditious to do that at one point.”

If Eli was telling the truth when he told Schnoebelen that he had been a Mormon bishop, he undoubtedly would have gone through the temple a number of times. (We do not, of course, even know for sure that Eli’s real name was “Barney C. Taylor.”) In any case, the evidence clearly reveals that Eli was a student of Mormon theology and his exposure to Joseph Smith’s writings is reflected in the teachings of the Mental Science Institute. While Schnoebelen is unable to show that the material which contains parallels to the Mormon temple ceremony was taken from The Second Book of Wisdom, as he previously claimed, we cannot completely discount the idea that Eli would have had such a ceremony in his Mental Science Institute.

In the interview he had with us, Mr. Schnoebelen acknowledged that J. Gordon Melton has “probably done more spade work and knows more people in various witchcraft groups than probably anyone else.” When we asked Dr. Melton if he had encountered any other witchcraft group besides the Mental Science Institute which claimed to have a marriage ceremony wherein couples were sealed together “for time and all eternity,” he replied that he had copies of a number of marriage ceremonies for different groups involved in witchcraft. These ceremonies did not contain such a ritual nor did he have knowledge of any group having such a ceremony. He, in fact, said that the marriage ceremonies were usually for only a short period of time. This might account for the statement made by Mr. Schnoebelen which we have already cited: “We’ve had so many marriages, I have trouble keeping them all straight.”

Although William Schnoebelen admitted that J. Gordon Melton was a good scholar of the occult, he argued that “his knowledge is academic, it’s not experiential.” He went on to say: “I don’t really think that just because, for instance the Druidic rite is the only rite that has these resemblances, necessarily makes it suspect. We were taught that the Druidic rite was the only true form of witchcraft and that all these others were more or less . . . take offs. And other scholars in witchcraft . . . have very much established that the whole of witchcraft was basically stitched together out of whole cloth in the beginning part of this century. Eli, on the other hand, asserted, for what ever it’s worth, . . . that his was the true and that all these others were more or less pretenders.”

In addition to the document which was supposed to have been taken from The Second Book of Wisdom, William Schnoebelen claimed he had a “copy of a copy” of a typewritten satanic ritual which is supposed to also resemble a portion of the Mormon temple ceremony (see Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, pages 35-36). He claimed that he originally had his own copy in 1977, but since he burned it in 1984, he had to obtain a copy from a “rather strange fellow in Chicago.” This man had been one of his “old pupils” who was of “lower rank” in the organization. One would think that Mr. Schnoebelen might know the name of the satanic group he was affiliated with, but when he was asked about the matter, he responded: “Well, I don’t know the name of the group. I know that it claimed to be affiliated in California. . . . I saw stationery that had the heading on it ‘Thee Brotherhood’ . . . which is I know in subsequent research in actually Melton’s book, it is a known . . . hard core satanic group.” Although Mr. Schnoebelen seemed to be either unable or unwilling to provide any definite source for the document, he maintained that he participated in this ritual (“I actually did it”). As we have indicated earlier, we feel that this document, or at least part of it, may have come from the organization which Aleister Crowley was associated with, the Ordo Tempori Orientis (OTO). We have also noted that the Ecclesia Gnostic Orientalis appears to be part of Crowley’s organization and that the document which has parallels to the Mormon temple ceremony contains the words: “Liturgia De Ecclesia Gnostica Spiritualis . . .” Since Crowley was chosen “to rewrite the order’s rituals” in 1912 or 1913, this would mean that the Schnoebelen document cannot really be trusted to represent something that dates back to the time of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young. We, in fact, feel that even if most of the document can be traced back to Crowley, the small portion which is like the Mormon temple ceremony was probably an interpolation made within the last few years.

In any case, as we pointed out in the Salt Lake City Messenger, November 1987, the text of the purported satanic material resembling the temple ritual has had some deliberate changes made in it between the time it was first made public by Schnoebelen in 1985 and when it appeared in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom in 1987 (see pages 35, 36 and 41). Over a third of the words have either been added, deleted or changed without any indication. While all of us are prone to make mistakes when citing material and it is sometimes easy to accidentally omit a number of words, the changes in this document were obviously intentional. The text, in fact, seems to grow closer to the Mormon temple ceremony with time! This evolution of the text raises an important question: if this many changes have been made during the brief period in which we have been able to observe it, how many changes may have occurred in the previous decade? Unless Mr. Schnoebelen can provide an earlier text that can be verified, scholars will be skeptical of its value.

In the Decker-Schnoebelen response, pages 18-19, they try to explain away the changes in the text:

The 1985 booklet is actually slightly older, being a reworking of a chapter out of the as yet unpublished manuscript by Bill. It was actually written sometime in the fall of 1984. At that time, Bill had not yet acquired the GRIMORUM VERUM text, and despaired of doing so. Therefore, he relied on his memory for the rendering of the incantation in the chapter, which later became the booklet.

In being transformed into a booklet, this oversight was not noted. He had no idea at the time that his work would be subjected to such wide-spread publicity or such intense scrutiny. . . .

The 1986 “documentation” version is, of course, the definitive version—being a photocopy of the page itself. It is very closely matched with the text in the 1987 book by Bill and Jim Spencer. The quotation is from the chart on p. 41 of the book, and is admittedly different. The reader will note that the quote is not attributed and is basically a generic version of the magickal incantation, which (like most magic charms) can be given in either first or second person.

According to this explanation, William Schnoebelen actually “relied on his memory” when he wrote out the text for a manuscript written in the “fall of 1984.” Sometime later, as Mr. Schnoebelen has informed us in a letter, he felt that it was so important that he have the original text that he searched out the “rather strange fellow in Chicago” who gave him a copy of the material. However, when he published Joseph Smith’s Temple of Doom in 1985, he seems to have entirely forgotten that he had actually obtained the typewritten text of the ritual. Instead, of using the document itself, he copied out the text which he had previously “relied on his memory” to restore. When the text finally appeared on page 41 of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom in 1987 it had strangely become almost identical to that found in the Mormon temple ceremony. Decker and Schnoebelen maintain that this version “is basically a generic version of the magickal incantation.” This explanation for the changes in the text put forth in the Decker-Schnoebelen response is very hard to believe. It seems far more likely, in fact, that the text was deliberately altered for the express purpose of making it more like the Mormon temple ceremony.

It appears, then, that the two most significant documents which William Schnoebelen has held up as evidence that the ritual in the Mormon temple ceremony was derived directly from witchcraft and Satanism are tainted by serious problems with regard to the origin and transmission of their texts. All that we have with regard to the satanic document is a typewritten sheet which could have been prepared by anyone. We have no date as to when it was first penned nor any assurance that it was not altered after it was written. Moreover, the text has suffered serious alterations since it first surfaced in 1985.

The document which is purported to be from the Mental Science Institute could not be found in The Second Book of Wisdom. Even if it could be traced back to “Eli,” it would be of no real value in proving a relationship to ancient Druidic witchcraft. Since Eli himself was deeply immersed in Mormon theology and since there seems to be no proof in earlier witchcraft groups of the unique concepts he taught, it would be very hard to believe that the portions of his teachings which so closely resemble Mormonism were derived from some more ancient source.
All of the work about Mormonism and witchcraft which Ed Decker has published for William Schnoebelen and that found in the 1987 printing of Mormonism’s Temple of Doom is seriously flawed by the fact that Schnoebelen has suppressed important information which is vital for a correct understanding of the relationship between Mormonism and witchcraft. Mr. Schnoebelen was aware of the fact that Eli used unique Mormon words such as “Kolob” and “Telestial,” yet he withheld this information from the public. If he had mentioned this, it would have undeniably thrown up a red flag which would have led scholars to question his entire presentation concerning Mormonism and witchcraft. Moreover, Mr. Schnoebelen suppressed the fact that Eli himself had told him that “he had been a Mormon bishop.” Even worse than this, however, is the deliberate attempt to misdirect us from the truth which is found in the Decker-Schnoebelen response, page 19:

He [Tanner] is asking us to believe that it just happened that one group of witches in the hills of Arkansas (where Mormons are as scarce as hen’s teeth) and another group of satanists based in Illinois both happened to borrow elements from the LDS temple endowment independently of each other. Isn’t this the same kind of suppositional research that they charge us with committing?

We feel that it is very likely that the portions of the two documents linking the Mormon temple ceremony to witchcraft and Satanism were actually the products of the same person. Since Mr. Schnoebelen cannot seem to give us any real information to prove his statement concerning the “group of satanists based in Illinois,” this leaves us with the “group of witches in the hills of Arkansas.” This, of course, is referring to Eli’s Mental Science Institute. The Second Book of Wisdom states that Eli lived in North Little Rock, Arkansas. The reader will remember that the Decker-Schnoebelen response maintains that “Mormons are as scarce as hen’s teeth” in the “hills of Arkansas.” The obvious purpose of this statement is to convince people that Eli could not have been a Mormon. Now that we know that Eli told Mr. Schnoebelen that he had, in fact, been a bishop in the Mormon Church, it becomes very obvious that this was an attempt to mislead the reader.

A SERIOUS SITUATION

It has been with great sorrow that we have lifted the pen to deal with these issues. We are, in fact, deeply grieved by the whole situation. Nevertheless, we sincerely believe that the type of excesses which we have pointed out in The Lucifer-God Doctrine can have a devastating effect on thousands of people. We have sought God’s help about the matter and have concluded that strong action is necessary to prevent the spread of erroneous information which could undermine people’s trust in material published on Mormonism and Christianity. While we realize that this action will hurt some people, we have concluded that the problem has to be dealt with.

Since the material was not only circulated in Christian churches, but throughout the world by means of the printing press, video and audio tapes, radio, etc., it became a public issue. It was not a private matter like the transgression mentioned in Matthew 18:15-17. We felt that the situation was analogous to that which Paul spoke of in Galatians 2:11-14:

> But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed. For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision. And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

Apostle Paul felt that Peter had committed a public offense against the “Gentiles” when he separated himself from them. Paul, of course, was a Jew, but God called him to be an Apostle to the Gentiles. He was, therefore, very concerned that the Gentiles receive good treatment and not be made to feel that they were unclean. Because of Paul’s deep love for the Gentiles, he felt that he had to do something publicly to counter Peter’s action. He did not call Peter aside privately, but instead he confronted him “before them all.”

We have found ourselves in a similar position. We have a love for the Mormon people and desire to bring them to the truth. For this reason, therefore, we believe that it would be an injustice to keep silent any longer. As we have noted, Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen responded to our work in a 30-page pamphlet entitled The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? While we believe that their charges are without foundation in fact, we feel that it would take too much space to respond in this newsletter. We are, however, preparing a new edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine, in which we will... deal specifically with the major charges made against us. Those who want to read the other side of this issue can write to Ed Decker or William Schnoebelen at Saints Alive in Jesus, PO Box 1076, Issaquah, WA 98027 for their response to us. An offering to cover the cost of the material and postage should be included.

There is just one more item that appears in the Decker-Schnoebelen pamphlet (p. 1) that should be addressed here: this is the charge that the The Lucifer-God Doctrine is “in its entirety” a “direct attack on Ed Decker, Bill Schnoebelen and Saints Alive.” While it is true that the pamphlet is critical of some of the extreme views held by Decker and Schnoebelen, we do not consider it as an attack on the people in either Saints Alive or Ex-Mormons for Jesus. On the contrary, we feel that there are many fine Christians in these organizations who are also concerned that things have gone too far. In fact, some of the people who have been very closely associated with Ed Decker over the years have voiced their support for what we have done.

While we have no idea what the final outcome of this whole matter will be, we do know that Paul has promised that “all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose.” (Romans 8:28) The scriptures also make it clear that nothing is impossible with God and that sincere prayer is the most important step in obtaining solutions to the problems that confront us: “If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land” (2 Chronicles 7:14).

We would ask, therefore, that everyone who is interested in the various ministries to Mormons to pray fervently for all those engaged in the work that they will have discernment and the love that is necessary to point people to the Lord and that we may see tens of thousands of Mormons come to know the truth.

Other ministries are also showing a concern about presenting a balanced picture of Mormonism’s relationship to witchcraft. Wesley P. Walters, who is noted for discovering the original document which proves Joseph Smith was arrested for being a “glass looker” in 1826 and for his excellent work on the First Vision, has become concerned that some have fallen into the trap of trying to derive their understanding of demonic workings from their study of the current practices of witchcraft rather than from biblical teachings on the subject. He feels that if this anti-biblical teaching were widely accepted, it could plunge Christianity back into the superstition which was prevalent in the dark ages. He, in fact, refers to these new ideas as “pseudo-Christian witchcraft.” Wesley Walters has prepared an article in which he shows the serious nature of this error. It will appear in the newsletter published by Personal Freedom Outreach. This publication frequently contains important information on Mormonism as well as on other religious groups. Although there is no charge for the issue containing Wesley P. Walters article, those who are interested in obtaining it should send a donation (to help cover postage and handling) to Personal Freedom Outreach, PO Box 26062, St. Louis, Missouri 63136.

In the September 1987 issue of the Messenger, we mentioned that we had prepared a cassette tape which deals with questionable methods used by some critics of the Mormon Church which we feel are tending to needlessly harden the hearts of the Mormons against Christians who are trying to work among them. It is basically a call for a more loving approach to the Latter-day Saints. This tape is entitled, PROBLEMS IN WINNING MORMONS, and is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry for $3.00 (mail orders please add minimum postage and handling charge of $2.00)

As we indicated earlier, we are preparing a new enlarged edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine which will deal with the major charges made against us in the Decker-Schnoebelen response. We do hope that many of our readers will take the time to read it and become informed on this critical issue.

Lest the reader get the wrong impression concerning our criticism of some recent research on the Mormon temple ceremony, we should state that we have not changed our minds in any way concerning the temple ritual. We do feel that it contains a good deal of occultic material borrowed from Masonry. Furthermore, the temple ceremony tries to link Christians and ministers of other churches to the devil’s work, and the penal oaths which are taken in the temples are contrary to Christianity. In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we devote 44 pages to the temple ceremony and its relationship to Masonry.

The predicament which we have mentioned in this issue of the Messenger and the reports we have heard during the past year concerning the fall of two prominent television evangelists because of the exposure of their sins brings to mind an article we printed in the January 1975 issue of the Messenger. Although it was written thirteen years ago, its message is so important and relevant to things that are going on today that we have decided to reprint it here.
AN ETERNAL COVER-UP

Although the Watergate scandal has really hurt our country, there is a real lesson that we all can learn from it—that is, that it does not pay to try and cover up our sins. The Bible warns: “... be sure your sin will find you out” (Numbers 32:23). It is true that we can often hide our sins from men, but Jesus tells us that we cannot hide them from God: “... there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known” (Matthew, 10:26).

Our former President must have firmly believed that his tapes would never come to light, but through some very strange circumstances they did become public and caused his downfall. This is certainly a tragic example, and we cannot help but feel sorry for him and for his family. Nevertheless, it teaches us that even the President of the United States does not have the power to cover up his sins.

It is certainly ironical that Richard Nixon should be trapped by his own tapes. The Bible, however, tells us that we all stand in jeopardy of being convicted by our own words at the judgment:

But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.
For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. (Matthew 12:36-37)

Although we do not feel that God has a secret tape recorder which he uses to bug us with, we do believe He has knowledge of everything through his Holy Spirit. The Bible says that God not only knows our every word and action but also the “thoughts and intents” of our heart:

For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do (Hebrews 4:12-13).

In 1 Corinthians 4:5 we read that the Lord “will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts...” Romans 2:16 tells us that “God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.”

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus it is clear that after death our memory will be restored and that if we have continued in sin and selfishness it will condemn us (see Luke 16:25). The Bible tells us that we are all sinners and in need of God’s forgiveness. To refuse to face this fact is to live a life which is founded on cover-up, and this will eventually prove disastrous to our souls. In the story of the Pharisee and the publican Jesus shows that we can appear to be very religious, but if we have not acknowledged that we are sinners in need of God’s grace we are still under condemnation.

Now, while the Bible teaches that it is impossible for us to cover up our own sins, it does state that God Himself can cover them up if we will turn to Him and ask for forgiveness:

But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.
If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.
If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. (1 John 1:7-9)

In Psalms 32:1 we read: “Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.” This is a cover-up that really works. In Psalms 103:12 we find this statement: “As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.” Isaiah 43:25 gives this assurance: “I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.” Those who have received the Lord into their hearts know the great joy and peace that comes from accepting God’s forgiveness. The Bible says:

There fore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.
  OTHER BOOKS ** **

Mail Orders Add 10% Handling
$1.00 Minimum Shipping Charge

Confessions of a White Salamander, by Jerald Tanner. A sequel to Tracking the White Salamander. Contains lengthy extracts from Hofmann’s confession. Price: $3.95

Hofmann’s Confession. A photographic reprint of the transcripts of Mark Hofmann’s confession concerning the forgery of Mormon documents. Three volumes. Price: $25.00

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

The Lucifer-God Doctrine, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. Second edition enlarged and revised. Regular price: $2.00
Pre-publication Special: $1.50

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

Capt. Wm. Morgan’s Exposition of Freemasonry. (Photo-reprint of 1827 ed.) One of the works used in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to compile the parallels between Mormonism and Masonry. Price: $3.00

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Mormon Neo-Orthodoxy: A Crisis Theology, by O. Kendall White, Jr. Price: $11.95

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH 84110
In 1945 Fawn M. Brodie first published her book No Man Knows My History. In Appendix A of that work she included what she claimed was a “Record of the trial of Joseph Smith for disorderly conduct, Bainbridge, New York, March 20, 1826” (1971 edition, page 491). This document, which Mrs. Brodie reprinted from a book originally published in 1883, seemed to link Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon Church, to the occult. It, in fact, portrayed the Mormon prophet as a man who deceived the public by looking in a stone placed in his hat to find buried treasures. The leaders of the church were incensed by the publication of this document and denounced it as a forgery. The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe bluntly stated:

... Joseph Smith is made to confess to all his errors, including treasure hunting, peepstone practices, etc., etc. In fact, it is such a complete self-confession as to throw immediate doubt upon the genuineness of the document. Joseph Smith was not a fool. ... There is no existing proof that such a trial was ever held. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, 1951, page 78)

The Mormon Church’s Deseret News called it a “spurious” record:

But the alleged find is no discovery at all, for the purported record has been included in other books ... after all her puffing and promise the author produces no court record at all, though persistently calling it such. ... This alleged record is obviously spurious ... It is patently a fabrication of unknown authorship and never in the court records at all. (Deseret News, Church Section, May 11, 1946, as cited in A New Witness For Christ in America, enlarged edition, pages 430-431)

Fawn Brodie was excommunicated because of her book on Joseph Smith, and through the years Mormon writers have continued to attack her and the court record which she reproduced in her book. As we will later show, one supporter of Joseph Smith even went so far as to forge a document in an attempt to discredit the claim that Joseph Smith was tried in 1826.

In 1971 Wesley P. Walters made a remarkable discovery which verifies the claim that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested and brought before a Justice of the Peace for that practice. Since that time, Pastor Walters has contributed a great deal to our knowledge of Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law. Walters has shared with us many of the insights and material which he has gleaned from his study of the laws of the State of New York. His research, in fact, has made this article possible. Pastor Walters will undoubtedly prepare the definitive work on many of the things which we briefly touch on in this issue of the Messenger. Just recently H. Michael Marquardt found some original documents which throw important new light on this matter. He has been kind enough to allow us to be the first to publish on this subject. In addition, some Mormon scholars have also added some important observations that have helped us to get a more complete picture of what occurred in 1826.

At this point we are printing the court record in its entirety from its earliest known source, Fraser’s Magazine, February, 1873, vol. vii, pages 229-230. Since it will be helpful in understanding the material which will follow, we recommend that even those who have read it before take the time to go over it again.

· · · · · · · · · ·

State of New York v. Joseph Smith.

Warrant issued upon written complaint upon oath of Peter G. Bridgeman, who informed that one Joseph Smith of Bainbridge was a disorderly person and an impostor.

Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826. Prisoner examined: says that he came from the town of Palmyra, and had been at the house of Josiah Stowel in Bainbridge most of time since; had small part of time been employed in looking for mines, but the major part had been employed by said Stowel on his farm, and going to school. That he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and had looked for Mr. Stowel several times, and had informed him where he could find these treasures, and Mr. Stowel had been engaged in digging for them. That at Palmyra he pretended to tell by looking at this stone where coined money was buried in Pennsylvannia, and while at Palmyra he had frequently ascertained in that way where lost property was of various kinds; that he had occasionally been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, but of late had pretty much given it up on account of its injuring his health, especially his eyes, making them sore; that he did not solicit business of this kind, and had always rather declined having anything to do with this business.

Josiah Stowel sworn: says that prisoner had been at his house something like five months; had been employed by him to work on farm part of time; that he pretended to have skill of telling where hidden treasures in the earth were by means of looking through a certain stone; that prisoner had looked for him sometimes; once to tell him about money buried in Bend Mountain in Pennsylvania, once for gold on Monument Hill; and once for a salt spring; and that he positively knew that the prisoner could tell, and did ‘possess the art of seeing those valuable treasures through the medium of said stone; that he found the [word illegible] at Bend and Monument Hill as prisoner represented it; that prisoner had looked through said stone for Deacon Attleton for a mine, did not exactly find it, but got a p— [word unfinished] of ore which resembled gold, he thinks; that prisoner had told by means of this stone where a Mr. Bacon had buried money; that he and prisoner had been in search of it; that prisoner had said it was in a certain root of a stump five feet from surface of the earth, and with it would be found a tail feather; that said Stowel and prisoner thereupon commenced digging, found a tail feather, but money was gone; that he supposed the money prisoner digging for gold, and had the most implicit faith in prisoner’s skill.

Arad Stowel sworn: says that he went to see whether prisoner could convince him that he possessed the skill he professed to have, upon which prisoner laid a book upon a white cloth, and proposed looking through another stone which was white and transparent, hold the stone to the candle, turn his head to book, and read. The deception appeared so palpable that witness went off disgusted.

McMaster sworn: says he went with Arad Stowel, and likewise came away disgusted. Prisoner pretended to him that he could discover objects at a distance by holding this white stone to the sun or candle; that prisoner rather declined looking into a hat at his dark coloured stone, as he said that it hurt his eyes.

Jonathan Thompson says that prisoner was requested to look for chest of money; did look, and pretended to know there it was; and that prisoner, Thompson, and Yeomans went in search of it; that Smith arrived at spot first; was at night; that Smith looked in hat while there, and when very dark, told how the chest was situated. After digging several feet, struck upon something sounding like a board or plank. Prisoner would not look again, pretending that he was alarmed on account of the circumstances relating to the trunk being buried, [which] came all fresh to his mind. That the last time he looked he discovered distinctly the two Indians who buried the trunk, that a quarrel ensued between them, and that one of said Indians was killed by the other, and thrown into the hole beside the trunk, to guard it, as he supposed. Thompson says that he believes in the prisoner’s professed skill; that the board which he struck his spade upon was probably the chest, but on account of an enchantment the trunk kept settling away from under them when digging, that notwithstanding they continued constantly removing the dirt, yet the trunk kept about the same distance from them. Says prisoner said that it appeared to him that salt might be found at Bainbridge, and that he is certain that prisoner can divine things by means of said stone. That as evidence of the fact prisoner looked into his hat to tell him about some money witness lost sixteen years ago, and that he described the man that witness supposed had taken it, and the disposition of the money:

And therefore the Court find the Defendant guilty.

· · · · · · · · · ·

The Mormon writer Francis W. Kirkham just could not allow himself to believe that the 1826 court record was authentic. He, in fact, felt that if the transcript were authentic it would disprove Mormonism:

A careful study of all facts regarding this alleged confession of Joseph Smith in a court of law that he had used a seer stone to find hidden treasure for purposes of fraud, must come to the conclusion that no such record was ever made, and therefore, is not in existence. . . . had he [Joseph Smith] made this confession in a court of law as early as 1826, or four years before the Book of Mormon was printed, and this confession was in a court record, it would have been impossible for him to have organized the restored Church. (A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 1, pages 385-387)

If a court record could be identified, and if it contained a confession by Joseph Smith which revealed him to be a poor, ignorant, deluded, and superstitious person—unable himself to write a book of any consequence, and whose church could not endure because it attracted only similar persons of low mentality—if such a court record confession could be identified and proved, then it follows that his believers must deny his claimed divine guidance which led them to follow him. . . How could he be a prophet of God, the leader of the Restored Church to these tens of thousands, if he had been the superstitious fraud which “the pages from a book” declared he confessed to be? (Ibid., pp. 486-487)

The noted Mormon apologist Hugh Nibley published a book in which this statement appeared: “. . . if this court record is authentic it is the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith” (The Myth Makers, 1961, page 142). On the same page we read that such a court record would be “the most devastating blow to Smith ever delivered.” Because he could see the serious implications of the matter, Dr. Nibley tried in every way possible to destroy the idea that the court record was an authentic document.

As we indicated earlier, in 1971 Wesley P. Walters made an astounding discovery which destroyed many of the arguments Mormon writers had used to discredit the 1826 court record. While searching through some old records stored in the basement of the county jail in Norwich, New York, Wesley Walters and Fred Poffarl discovered two documents from Bainbridge which confirmed the authenticity of the printed court record. The most important was Justice Albert Neely’s bill to the county for his fees in several legal matters he was involved with in 1826. The fifth item from the top mentioned the case of “Joseph Smith The Glass looker.”
Below is a photograph of this portion of the document.

The fact that Justice Neely said Joseph Smith was a “Glass looker” fits very well with the published version of the legal proceedings. Hugh Nibley and other Mormon apologists became strangely silent after these documents were discovered.

ANOTHER FORGER

While most Mormon scholars accepted the evidence which Wesley Walters discovered, an overzealous supporter of Joseph Smith decided to resort to forgery in an attempt to discredit the documents. In 1986 Ronald Vern Jackson, a Mormon researcher who wrote the book The Seer, Joseph Smith, appeared on the Mormon Church’s television station, KSL-TV with the startling claim that Justice Neely’s bill had been altered. He claimed that the name “Josiah Stowell” originally appeared on the document, but that these words had been changed to “Joseph Smith.” Although Mr. Jackson did not directly state it, the implications were clear—Walters had found a genuine bill referring to Josiah Stowell and that he had deliberately altered it to discredit the prophet Joseph Smith! Jackson professes to believe that Mark Hofmann was not alone in creating forgeries. In an introduction to his publication of the Mark Hofmann Interviews, Jackson wrote that he had “very incriminating evidence that others were involved!” He also declared that “It was a conspiracy to rewrite L.D.S church history and Mark Hofmann was but a pawn that was sacrificed to save the King. There are those who would love to disgrace the L.D.S. church by proving it’s history to be a sham. And Mark Hofmann was the tool through which they were going to do it.” He also stated that “Mark Hofmann was just the tip of the iceberg, . . .” In an advertisement for his publications, we find the following:
“So incriminating is his [Jackson’s] evidence, information and documentation in this case, not only of Hofmann, and his Associates, but of the ‘Wider’ Co-conspiratorial Ring, that several attempts have been made on his life!” We understand that Mr. Jackson has hinted that the King of Mormon document forgery is a minister who lives in the Midwest. Since Wesley P. Walters pastors a church in Illinois and is deeply involved in research on Mormon history, it seems reasonable to believe that Jackson is hinting that he is the “King.” In any case, Wesley P. Walters made these observations about Ronald Jackson’s charges:

Recently, Ron Jackson, a pro-Mormon historian from Bountiful, Utah, appeared on KSL-TV in Salt Lake City and claimed that the 1826 justice of the peace bill had been altered. He claimed that when this writer was lecturing in Salt Lake City in 1976, a friend had inadvertently picked up some of this writer’s notes and kept them. Accompanying the notes, he claimed, was a reproduction of the trial bill as it originally read. Jackson said that instead of reading the people “vs. Joseph Smith the glass looker,” it originally read, “vs. Josiah Stowell the glass looker.”

The reproduction bearing the name Josiah Stowell and purportedly obtained from this writer’s notes shows signs of forgery. Someone has obliterated parts of “Joseph” and in a sloppy hand tried to change this to read “Josiah.” He has left the “S” of “Smith” but obliterated the remainder and placed the name “Stowell” into that space. The final “ell” in Stowell appears to have been taken from the name Darnell, which appears further down in the same manuscript, and inserted as the final letters of Stowell. Moreover, the letter “a” in Josiah and the “o” in Stowell do not match the way these letters are formed in the rest of the document, and the crossing of the “t” is quite different. (Personal Freedom Outreach Newsletter, April-June 1986, p. 2)

Below is a comparison of a portion of the Neely bill as it was originally photocopied by Wesley P. Walters (to the left) and the way it was altered to read in the Jackson copy (to the right). The reader will notice that the Jackson copy appears to be a very crude forgery.

It appears that Ronald Jackson would like us to believe the following: that the Neely bill originally read “Josiah Stowell.” Wesley Walters made a photocopy of it and then altered it to read “Joseph Smith.” After we had printed thousands of copies reading Joseph Smith, Walters came to Salt Lake City to speak. For some strange reason he brought the photocopy of the bill reading “Josiah Stowell” with him and left it where Mr. Jackson’s friend could easily get hold of it. The bill subsequently fell into Jackson’s hands and he realized that it read “Josiah Stowell” instead of “Joseph Smith.” This certainly is a very strange story.

According to Pastor Walters, Ronald Jackson’s friend claimed that he did attend the lecture and picked up some of the literature that was setting on a table for distribution to the public, but he did not support the claim that the photocopy he gave to Mr. Jackson read “Josiah Stowell.” Actually, what really happened was that this man picked up some of our printed material which we had placed on a table for those attending Walter’s lecture held at Eisenhower Junior High on April 5, 1976. Ronald Jackson’s claim raises some important questions: 1. Why would Wesley P. Walters alter the original document and yet preserve a photocopy that would discredit his most important find? 2. Why would he bring this photocopy to Salt Lake City almost five years after the discovery and leave it on a table so that it would fall into the hands of an adversary? 3. What explanation can be given for Jackson waiting almost a decade before publishing this matter to the world?

Not too long after Ronald Jackson presented his claims on the Mormon television station, we discovered irrefutable proof that his copy of Justice Neely’s bill was a forgery created from our own printed copy which was distributed at the lecture. We were, in fact, able to find two identifying marks on the page which appear on a great deal of material we printed in the 1970s. At that time we often printed from metal plates which were prepared by a rather unique process which we will not attempt to describe here. Due to scratches in the glass that the original copies were pressed against, two unusual marks appeared on the negatives and were consequently transferred to the metal plates. These annoying marks, of course, appeared on the pages which we printed from the plates. Since we knew they were not part of the original copy, we usually tried to erase them on the original metal plates before printing. In many cases this was difficult to do because the marks were too close to the printed text. Often we would erase only part of the marks and occasionally we would leave the marks rather than run the risk of destroying the text which was close to them. In our threecolume work, The Case Against Mormonism, the reader will find hundreds of examples showing where the marks or portions of them are found on the printed pages. They usually appear about 3 1/2 inches from the left side of the page and about 3 inches from the bottom. (The location could vary somewhat in documents we printed because of the reduction and other factors, but they usually appeared in this location.) Below the reader will find an enlarged portion of page 121 of The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, which plainly shows the intrusive marks.

As fate would have it, these very marks appeared on copies of Justice Neely’s bill which we printed for free distribution to the public. They are also found on the photograph which appears on page 13 of our pamphlet Joseph Smith’s 1826 Trial. Unfortunately for Ronald Jackson’s claim, these identical marks are found in the very copy he put forth to discredit Wesley Walters’ work! These marks do not appear on a certified copy of Neely’s bill provided by Edwin M. Crumb from “the Office of the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, Chenango County, Norwich, New York.” This clearly shows that the forger used a copy which had already been printed on our printing press. We believe that the forger probably used white correction fluid to blot out the upper and lower portions of the letter p in the word Joseph so that it could be changed into an a.

If Ronald Jackson really believes that his idea is correct, he should have a forensic document examiner look at the original bill to see if it has been altered. The type of alteration which his theory proposes is very difficult to make without leaving some evidence. The examiners who worked on the Mark Hofmann case seem to have found alterations Hofmann made in ancient documents easier to detect than those in which he penned the entire document. We, therefore, challenge Mr. Jackson to call in one of the experts who solved the Hofmann case to make an examination of Justice Neely’s bill. If he will do so, we will be willing to pay half the costs involved. In addition, the photocopy of the bill which he has set forth to prove that Josiah Stowell rather than Joseph Smith was arrested should be examined by that expert.
We are convinced that such an examination would show that Jackson’s copy is the bogus document. Besides the evidence which we have presented above, Jackson’s copy of the Neely bill does not show the edge of the top of the bill. This is identical to the printed copies we made in the 1970s. The certified copy clearly shows all four edges. Furthermore, there are certain spots which appear in Jackson’s copy which are in exactly the same places on the printed copies we made.

FORGERY DEMONSTRATED

Below is a photographic demonstration that the Jackson document is a forgery.

1 — The two fingers point to the marks made by our plate making equipment.
2 — The same marks as they appear in our printed reproduction of the last case on the Neely bill.
3 — These identical marks as they appear in the Jackson document.
4 — A photograph from a certified copy of the Neely bill provided by Chenango County. Notice that there are no marks on this copy!

These spots were undoubtedly made by dust or something else that was on the glass or lens of our camera. They do not appear in the certified copy. The evidence which we have found with regard to Jackson’s copy is the exact type of evidence which forensic experts used to show that Mark Hofmann’s “Oath of a Freeman” was not authentic.

In addition to the forensic evidence that could be mounted against the Jackson document, there is a great deal of historical evidence that demonstrates that it was made by an incompetent forger. The fact that it was Joseph Smith, not Josiah Stowell, who was brought before the Justice of the Peace was verified by Oliver Cowdery, one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon, in 1835. Although Cowdery mistakenly said that Smith was acquitted, he revealed the following:

Soon after this visit to Cumorah, a gentleman from the south part of the State, (Chenango County,) employed our brother . . . This gentleman, whose name is Stowel, resided in the town of Bainbridge, . . . our brother [Joseph Smith] was required to spend a few months with some others in excavating the earth, in pursuit of this treasure. . . .

On the private character of our brother I need add nothing further, at present, previous to his obtaining the records of the Nephites, only that while in that country, some very officious person complained of him as a disorderly person, and brought him before the authorities of the county; but there being no cause of action he was honorably acquitted. (Messenger and Advocate, vol. 2, pp. 200-201)

To claim that Josiah Stowell instead of Joseph Smith was charged with being a “glass looker” flies in the face of everything we know about these two men. Although Stowell was very superstitious, there is nothing to show that he himself was a glass looker. Even the Mormon historian B. H. Roberts conceded that Stowell sought out Joseph Smith because he believed that Smith had a gift to divine where treasure was hidden:

Near Bainbridge was an extensive cave, . . . a local legend had it that it was an old mine formerly worked by Spaniards; and that they had concealed within it much of the treasure they had discovered, . . .

Mr. Stoal believed this legend and had employed men to explore the cave for treasure. Having heard of Joseph Smith’s gift of seership, he came to the Smith residence to employ him in this undertaking. Joseph hired out to Mr. Stoal and went with him . . . where for something like a month they vainly sought to find the “hidden treasure.” (A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 1, page 82)

Joseph Smith’s own mother wrote that “a man, by the name of Josiah Stoal, came from Chenango county, New York, with the view of getting Joseph to assist him in digging for a silver mine. He came for Joseph on account of having heard that he possessed certain keys, by which he could discern things invisible to the natural eye" (Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith The Prophet . . . , by Lucy Smith, 1853, pages 91-92).

As early as 1831, A. W. Benton wrote concerning Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law in Bainbridge:

For several years preceding the appearance of his book [the Book of Mormon], he was about the country in the character of a glass-looker: pretending, by means of a certain stone, or glass, which he put in a hat, to be able to discover lost goods, hidden treasures, mines of gold and silver. . . . In this town, a wealthy farmer, named Josiah Stowell, together with others, spent large sums of money in digging for hidden money, which this Smith pretended he could see, and told them where to dig; but they never found their treasure. At length the public, becoming wearied with the base imposition which he was palming upon the credulity of the ignorant, for the purpose of sponging his living from their earnings, had him arrested as a disorderly person, tried and condemned before a court of Justice. (Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, April 9, 1831, page 120)

Mr. Benton’s statement that it was Joseph Smith who was tried was later verified by Dr. W. D. Purple who attended the legal proceedings (see our work Joseph Smith & Money Digging, pages 23-29). The Jackson document is not only out of harmony with all of these sources, but it also goes against the court record itself which shows that Josiah Stowell was a witness who gave testimony favorable to Joseph Smith. Moreover, it contradicts the bill of Constable Philip De Zeng which Wesley Walters discovered. De Zeng wrote in his bill that he wanted $1.25 for “Serving Warrant on Joseph Smith . . .” He also wrote concerning his “Attendance with Prisoner two days & 1 nigh[t] . . .”

While no real historian could ever be fooled by the forgery which Ronald Jackson is promoting, those who desire to discredit all Mormon critics with any bizarre theory put forth might be taken in by this type of foolishness. Robert Brown, who seems to have a personal mission to destroy the credibility of those who oppose Mormonism, seems to have believed Jackson’s claim. Speaking on KFYI Radio in Phoenix, Arizona, on January 13, 1986, Mr. Brown stated:

I think that you will find in the next few days that the original document that was discovered in a basement of a court house . . . has been altered, and the original document said that Josiah Stowell, who was Joseph Smith’s employer, was the one that was arrested for peepstone gazing and that it was not Joseph Smith.

Fortunately, there are a large number of Mormon scholars who are not so biased in their views. Dean Jesse, who is considered one of the Mormon Church’s top scholars on the writings of Joseph Smith, openly condemned the Jackson document as a forgery. Speaking at the Brigham Young University Symposium on “Church History and Recent Forgeries,” held August 6, 1987, he commented: “In one instance an advocate actually perpetrated a crude forgery of his own, changing Joseph Smith’s name to Josiah Stowell on a document that charged Joseph with glass looking in 1826.”

NEW DISCOVERIES

At the time he did his research in the basement of the jail in Norwich, New York, Wesley P. Walters found the documents in a “disorganized state” and some of them “were so water-stained the entire page was illegible.” Besides the bills which mentioned Joseph Smith, Pastor Walters also discovered other bills and documents which helped to substantiate his major finds. For instance, he found Justice Zechariah Tarble’s bill for 1826. This bill provides some important historical evidence concerning Justice Neely’s bill because Tarble mentioned that he served with Justice Neely and Justice Humphrey in a Court of Special Sessions to try three men who are named in the Neely bill.

Wesley Walters found that there were “four justices of the peace” in Bainbridge, but he was unable to find bills for the other two. He noted, however, that “If the 1826 bills of Justices Bigelow and Humphrey should turn up, there would likewise be cases on those which were tried jointly with Neely as is evident from the constables’ notifying them. . . . when the County Historian has completed the organization of all the bills they may yet show up” (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trials, page 150). Wesley Walters encouraged H. Michael Marquardt to do further research with regard to Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law. In May 1988, Mr. Marquardt went back to Norwich, New York, and found the missing bills in the Office of History which is located in the Chenango County Historical Society. These 1826 bills provide strong support for the authenticity of the Neely bill. Justice Humphrey, for instance, wrote that he helped try the three men we mentioned above. The bills of Neely, Humphrey and Tarble, therefore, all confirm that they met in a Court of Special Sessions to try these men.

Michael Marquardt also found the 1826 bill for Justice Levi Bigelow. This bill likewise provides important evidence which helps to substantiate Albert Neely’s bill. Neely listed his fees for the trials of Josiah Evans, Robert Darnell and Ira Church. Justice Bigelow also mentioned being in a Court of Special Sessions to try these very men. Moreover, although Neely seems to have accidentally omitted the date for Josiah Evans trial, both documents agree that Robert Darnell was tried on October 3, 1826, and that Ira Church’s trial occurred on November 9, 1826.

Besides locating the bills of Justices Bigelow and Humphrey, Mr. Marquardt also found Justice Zechariah Tarble’s Docket Book for civil cases from June 17, 1822 to March 7, 1826. It appears to have two lines and a signature by Albert Neely that can be compared with the handwriting in the 1826 bill which mentions Joseph Smith’s case. The reader may remember that Zechariah Tarble was the Justice of the Peace who married Joseph Smith (see History of the Church, vol. 1, page 17).
TRANSCRIPT VERIFIED

Research by Wesley P. Walters and Michael Marquardt’s new discoveries combine to establish beyond any doubt that the transcript of Joseph Smith’s legal difficulties, which was first published in 1873, is authentic.

The original pages of this transcript were still in existence in January, 1886, when the Utah Christian Advocate published the following:

The document we print below is interesting to those, who desire historical light on the origin of Mormonism. We received the Manuscript from Bishop Tuttle; and the following, from the good bishop’s pen, explains how he came into possession of the Manuscript:— “The Ms. was given me by Miss Emily Pearsall who, some years since, was a woman keeper in our mission and lived in my family, and died here. Her father or uncle was a Justice of the Peace in Bainbridge Chenango Co., New York, in Jo. Smith’s time, and before him was tried. Miss Pearsall tore the leaves out of the record found in her father’s house and brought them to me.”

While Bishop Tuttle could not remember whether it was Emily Pearsall’s father or uncle who was Justice of the Peace in Bainbridge, Stanley S. Ivins solved this problem many years ago when he found that Albert Neely was Miss Pearsall’s uncle (see History And Genealogy of the Pearsall Family in England & America, pp. 1143, 1144 and 1151).

The transcript was published three times by different individuals after it arrived in Salt Lake City. As we have already shown, it appeared first in Fraser’s Magazine in 1873. It was printed by Bishop Tuttle in the 1883 New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia and finally appeared in the Utah Christian Advocate in 1886. Michael Marquardt’s study of the text of the three different printings leads him to the conclusion that they were all printed from the original pages rather than one borrowing from another. In this regard it is interesting to note that the testimony of Horace Stowell, which was very brief, appears to have been accidentally omitted when the document was first published in 1873. The 1883 version could not have been copied from the 1873 printed version because it includes Horace Stowell’s testimony. The 1886 version also has Horace Stowell’s testimony, but there seems to be evidence that it was also taken directly from the original pages furnished by Justice Neely’s niece, Emily Pearsall. If the 1886 printing were borrowing from the 1883 printing, it would not have the court costs at the end of the document because they were not included in the 1883 publication by Bishop Tuttle. The differences, therefore, seem to provide strong circumstantial evidence that three different individuals saw the original pages and copied from them. At any rate, while the existence of the original pages of the transcript was known from 1873 to 1886, there seems to be no evidence that any Mormon apologist tried to question their authenticity at that time.

The fact that Wesley P. Walters’ discovery of the 1826 bill of Justice Neely confirms the accuracy of the transcript can hardly be disputed by anyone who takes a close look at the evidence. We have already shown that the statement on the Neely bill that Joseph Smith was a “Glass looker” fits very well with the contents of the transcript which has been published. Moreover, Neely’s bill provides some very specific evidence. It states that the trial took place on “March 20, 1826,” and this is precisely the date found in the published account of the trial: “Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826” (Fraser’s Magazine, Feb. 1873, page 229). In Albert Neely’s bill the fee for this case is listed as “2.68,” and this is the exact figure found in the printed record: “Costs: . . . $2.68.” In light of this evidence, it seems impossible to continue to deny the authenticity of the court record.

In Joseph Smith's Bainbridge, N.Y. Court Trials, reprinted by Utah Lighthouse Ministry, pages 137-138, Wesley Walters shows that the court costs listed by Neely at the end of the printed transcript agree very well with costs found on other bills submitted by justices during that time period. We have recently compared the costs found in Neely’s docket book with The Justice’s Manual; or, a Summary of the Powers and Duties of Justices of the Peace in the State of New-York, by Thomas G. Waterman, 1825, page 199. Mr. Waterman wrote: “The fees of a Justice for his services in apprehending, binding, committing, &c. for crimes and misdemeanors, are—for every oath, 12 1/2 cents; warrant, 19; recognizance, 25; mittimus, 19; which are audited and allowed by the board of supervisors as county charges.” These charges are in complete agreement with the items found in the pages from Neely’s docket book. In the version we have reprinted from Fraser’s Magazine, we read that “Seven witnesses” were sworn for a total of “87 1/2¢.” If 87 1/2¢ is divided by 7, we get exactly 12 1/2¢. This, of course, agrees with the statement in the Justice’s Manual that the Justice is to receive “for every oath, 12 1/2 cents.” The same manual gives the amount for a warrant as “19[c].” The Neely document agrees: “Warrant, 19¢.” The recognizance is listed in the manual at “25[c],” and the transcript agrees that Recognisances are billed at “25¢.” The justices are instructed to charge “19[c]” for a mittimus, and Fraser’s Magazine likewise lists: “Mittimus, 19c.” From this it is very clear that the published transcript is not something that can be easily dismissed. In our publication, Joseph Smith’s 1826 Trial, printed in 1971, we quoted the following from a letter which Wesley P. Walters wrote to us after studying the transcript’s relationship to other documents: “To my mind there is enough agreement here to make the possibility of the document being a forgery out of the realm of possibility. . . . from every angle the whole matter has the ring of genuiness about it” (pages 4-5).

AN EXAMINATION?

Michael Marquardt’s discovery of the bills of Justices Humphrey and Bigelow has thrown some new light on Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law in 1826 and provides additional evidence that the transcript is in reality a report of proceedings before a Justice of the Peace.

During the past few years a question has begun to surface concerning the exact nature of what took place when Joseph Smith appeared before Justice Albert Neely on March 20,
In 1826. From material printed between 1813 and 1829, we conclude that there were two things that could have taken place on that day:

One, Joseph Smith could have appeared before Justice Neely for what was known as “an examination” (see A New Conductor Generalis: Being a Summary of the Law Relative to the Duty and Office of Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Coroners, Constables, Jurymen, Overseers of the Poor, &c, &c, Albany, New York, 1819, pp. 141-143). This seems to be like the “preliminary hearing” we have today where the accused is bound over for trial at a later date. A good example of this might be the Mark Hofmann case. After investigating the evidence, Judge Paul M. Grant ruled that there was “probable cause to believe that all the crimes have been committed and there is probable cause to believe that the defendant committed each of the crimes as alleged.” Although Mr. Hofmann could have been sent to jail until the trial, it was decided that he could go free on bail. Before the trial began, Hofmann decided to plead guilty and was sent to prison. It was from recordings of this “preliminary hearing” that we derived much of the evidence presented in our book Tracking the White Salamander.

Two, Joseph Smith could have been tried before a Court of Special Sessions (see Revised Statutes of the State of New York, 1829, Part 4, pp. 711-714). This would have occurred after the “examination.” In a Court of Special Sessions the justice who conducts the original examination is supposed to request “any two justices of the peace of the same county, and to require them to associate with him to try the persons so charged” (Ibid., page 711). This, of course, means that the case would be tried by three justices. If the case was not heard in the Court of Special Sessions, then it would come up in the next Court of General Sessions. Since Wesley P. Walters found that this court only met in February, June and October, it is obvious that the date of March 20, 1826, would not fit for a trial in the Court of General Sessions.

Wesley P. Walters originally believed that Joseph Smith was tried by three justices in a Court of Special Sessions. He did acknowledge, however, that there was a problem with this theory:

In the Sidney (N.Y.) Tri-Town News, August 25, 1971, page 6, the writer regarded the “Mittimus 19¢” as the post-trial order to commit Smith to jail, with Smith allowed to escape on the way to jail. . . . However, the 19¢ charge attached to the mittimus marks it as the pre-trial “commitment for want of bail” . . . and not the post-trial “warrant of commitment, on conviction, twenty-five cents”. . . .

This understanding also opens the unlikely reconstruction that Neely records only the pre-trial examination where the defendant’s and witnesses’ statements are taken . . . (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trial, page 140, footnote 36)

In 1985 the Mormon writer Paul Hedengren argued that Joseph Smith’s appearance before Justice Neely was indeed an “examination”: “…it is clear that the fees assigned by Neely for the case of Joseph Smith are for examination, which would occur prior to any trial before the Court of Special Sessions” (In Defense of Faith, by Paul Hedengren, Provo, Utah, 1985, page 207).

The question concerning the exact nature of the Neely docket record was finally answered when Michael Marquardt discovered the bills of Justices Bigelow and Humphrey. We already knew from Wesley Walters research in 1971 that Justice Tarble’s bill did not contain any mention of his helping Neely try the Joseph Smith case in a Court of Special Sessions. Since there were only four justices, this case would have to appear on the bills of both Bigelow and Humphrey. If the idea of a Court of Special Sessions had any merit. Because it appears on neither document, it is now obvious that the court record is for “an examination” before Justice Albert Neely.

DESTROYS OBJECTIONS

Our new understanding of the 1826 court record seems to completely set aside a number of objections Mormon apologists have raised in the past. For instance, the Mormon writer Francis W. Kirkham had this criticism of the Neely record: “This alleged record is obviously spurious because it has Joseph testify first, giving the defense before the prosecution has made its case.” Although Mr. Kirkham may have had a point if the Neely record is viewed as a regular trial, his objection seems to melt away when we look at the printed transcript as “an examination.” The Revised Statutes of the State of New York, published in 1829, seems to indicate that in an examination the “complainant and the witnesses produced in support of the prosecution” are questioned first. After this, “the prisoner” is examined and then “his witnesses” (Part 4, page 708). The 1825 Justice’s Manual, by Thomas G. Waterman, however, differs with regard to the order in which those examined should appear. It plainly states that in an examination the accused is questioned before the witnesses:

After the examination of the accused, all witnesses present are to be examined on oath touching the complaint . . . (page 191)

At the present time we do not know whether the order given in the Revised Statutes was used prior to 1829. Albert Neely, of course, could not have seen this book since it was printed three years after he tried Joseph Smith. It is very possible, however, that he had the Justice’s Manual, which was printed the year before Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law. The Preface to the Justice’s Manual indicated that it was “designed mainly for the use of Justices of the Peace, . . .” In any case, it would appear that Justice Neely used the same order which was printed in that book.

In 1985 the Mormon writer Paul Hedengren acknowledged that under the theory that Neely was conducting an examination, the printed transcript passes muster “…in the 1873 account, the first testimony is reported to come from Joseph Smith. This has been a point of criticism from some who have denied the authenticity of the account, for it does not seem appropriate that in a normal trial, the defendant should be the first to testify or to testify at all. This objection, however, is circumvented if the 1873 account is taken to be testimony of the examination before Judge Neely rather than before the Court of Special Sessions. For the examination before the justice, it is quite appropriate for the defendant to explain his side of the issue first” (In Defense of Faith, page 210).

On page 233 of the same book, Paul Henegren added a very interesting observation concerning the swearing of witnesses:

... what is clear and even explicit is that the legal proceedings upon which the account is based are the examination of Joseph Smith, not a trial before the Court of Special Sessions. The legal bill of the justice is explicitly “to my fees in examination of the above cause.” The amount is precisely what is totaled in the 1873 account and the account itself records that Joseph Smith was examined whereas other witnesses were sworn, which is precisely what we know occurs only in the examination.

Before Michael Marquardt went to New York and found the bills of Justices Humphrey and Bigelow, Wesley P. Walters had convincingly demonstrated to us that we were dealing with “an examination.” In A New Conductor Generalis, 1819, page 142, we learn that in an “examination” the accused is not put under oath but that the witnesses are: “The examination of the prisoner should not be upon oath. ... others, whom the justice may call before him to testify. ... must be upon oath.” When we scrutinized the 1826 trial record in light of the “examination” theory, we were very impressed with what we found. Instead of saying that Joseph Smith was “sworn,” the transcript printed in 1873 reads:

Prisoner examined: says . . .

Although Justice Neely’s docket record neglects to mention whether Jonathan Thompson was “examined” or “sworn,” in every other case his record makes it clear that the witnesses were “sworn”:

Josiah Stowel sworn: says . . .

Horace Stowel sworn. Says . . . (See both the 1883 and the 1886 printings.)

Arad Stowel sworn: says . . .

McMaster sworn: says . . .

The Mormon apologist Francis W. Kirkham, who was one of the first to seriously deal with Joseph Smith’s 1826 encounter with the law, contended:

This alleged record of the court does not conform to the requirements of the law . . . It gives a long confession by the defendant, Joseph Smith, which the law does not require. It gives the testimony of five witnesses, whereas, the testimony of any witness is not recorded in a justice of the peace court. . . . The record does not conform with the procedure of a trial. A reasonable conclusion is that the alleged record was written by a person totally unfamiliar with court procedure. (A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 1, pp. 384-385)

As we have already shown, in an “examination” the statement of the accused was taken, and contrary to Kirkham’s claim that the testimony was “not recorded,” there is evidence that relevant material given by both the defendant and the witnesses was to be written down. A New Conductor Generalis, 1819, page 141, quotes the following from a New York law:

“Every justice of the peace, before whom any person shall be brought for any treason or felony, or for suspicion thereof, before he commit such person to gaol [i.e., jail], shall take the examination of such prisoner, and the information of those who bring him, relative to the fact, and the same, or so much thereof as shall be material to prove the offence, shall be put in writing by the said justice within two days after the said examination, . . .”

While it might be argued that this only applied to the commission of “treason or felony,” it should be noted that the definition of the word felony seems to have changed since Joseph Smith’s time. In the 1828 edition of Noah Webster’s An American Dictionary of the English Language, the word felony even included those guilty of “petty larceny.” Furthermore, we know that in at least one case, what was written concerning a felony “would seem to extend to all criminal cases” (A New Conductor Generalis, page 141). The Revised Statutes of the State of New-York, seem to indicate that in 1829 the rules concerning written evidence at an “examination” applied to “any criminal offence” (see Part 4, pp. 706-708). It would appear, then, that Justice Neely was trying to follow regular legal procedure when he recorded the information. We believe, however, that it is possible that what appears in Neely’s docket book would be his own copy (possibly abbreviated) taken from individual sheets which would have been “signed by the witnesses respectively” (Revised Statutes, page 709). These sheets probably would have been turned over to the Court of Special Sessions when it met, whereas the copy appearing in his docket book—prepared for his own use at the trial—would have remained in his possession after the proceedings. This, of course, would have been consistent with the story that the record remained in the Neely family until Albert Neely’s niece, Emily Pearsall, brought it to Utah.

The reader will note from the material quoted above that every word did not need to be written down—only that which was “material to prove the offence.” This tends to nullify another objection to the printed transcript—i.e., the last portion of the Neely record indicates that there were seven witnesses sworn, whereas the document itself only gives the testimony of five. It seems obvious from the law quoted above that if a witness did not give any significant testimony in relation to the case, it was not necessary for the Justice of the Peace to record it. In this regard, it is interesting to note that W. D. Purple, a man who was actually present during the legal proceedings, claimed that Joseph Smith, Senior, also gave testimony. (The Chenango Union, May 2, 1877) It is very possible that Joseph Smith’s father did testify at the examination. The statement that seven witnesses were sworn makes plenty of room for him. On the other hand, the fact that it was not necessary to record irrelevant testimony could certainly explain the absence of his statements in the record. The new information which has been found concerning examinations seems to completely destroy Francis Kirkham’s arguments regarding discrepancies with regard to who testified at the hearing (see A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 2, pp. 357-358).

JOSEPH SMITH GUILTY?

As we have shown, the Mormon Church’s Deseret News, argued that the court record was “a fabrication of unknown authorship.” In the same article we find the following:

Then the recital is that the court “finds the defendant guilty.” . . . Then, more wonderful still, the record does not tell what the judgment or sentence of the court was. The really vital things which a true record must contain are not there, though there is a lot of surplus verbiage set out in an impossible order which the court was not required to keep. (Deseret News, Church Section, May 11, 1946, as cited in A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 2, page 431)

While one might think a sentence would be recorded toward the end of a record of proceedings from a Court of Special Sessions, the fact that this was an examination seems to negate this criticism. This matter would have to be settled by the three justices who would later meet to make the final decision concerning the case. Justice Neely had concluded from his examination of Joseph Smith that he was guilty as charged, and the evidence seems to show that he ordered Smith held for trial before the Court of Special Sessions. The Mormon writer Paul Hedengren argues that the use of the words “the Court find the Defendant guilty” in the Neely transcript casts some doubt on the accuracy of the printed text:

If it is an examination, the guilty judgment given at the end of the testimony poses a problem, . . . the judgment of guilty . . . is inappropriate only at the conclusion of a trial before the Court of Special Sessions. . . .

The preponderance of evidence is that the account is at best an account of an examination; yet the judgment of guilt is inappropriate to such proceedings. This is evidence that listing of guilt in the 1873 account does not come [from] the actual legal proceedings but is a later inclusion. (In Defense of Faith, pp. 216-217)

Actually, the appearance of the word “guilty” is not a mark against the authenticity of the printed text. In fact, it seems to fit the terminology used in Joseph Smith’s time. In Acts of a General Nature, Ordered to be Re-printed, at the First Session of the Eighteenth General Assembly of the State of Ohio . . . , Columbus, Ohio, 1820, we read the following concerning an “examining court” declaring a prisoner “guilty”:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That if the judges upon examination find the prisoner guilty of a bailable offence, they shall recognize him or her . . . and in case the prisoner fails to give security, he or she shall be remanded to jail, and in all cases where the prisoner is found guilty, it shall be the duty of the judges to recognize the witnesses on the part of the state, to appear at the next court of common pleas, . . .

It is interesting to note that Joseph Smith’s own diary refers to an examination in Nauvoo, Illinois, as a “trial” in which the defendant was found “guilty”:

Monday Dec[ember] 18[th] . . . Constable Follet returned with Elliot. Trial in the Assembly room for examination . . . [Elliot was] found guilty of Kidnapping and bound over for trial to the Circuit Court in the sum of $3,000. (An American Prophet’s Record: The Diaries and Journals of Joseph Smith, edited by Scott H. Faulring, 1987, pp. 432-433)

Some Mormon scholars have recently argued that Joseph Smith was examined before Justice Neely but was exonerated. In a paper entitled, “It’s Time to Halt the Nonsense About Joseph Smith’s So-called ‘1826 Trial,’” page 4, Gerry L. Ensley wrote: “The conclusion is, therefore, inescapable that Smith was found ‘innocent’ at the March 20, preliminary examination.” We cannot agree with this statement. Besides the Neely transcript which shows that Joseph Smith was found “guilty,” the earliest known printed statement by A. W. Benton (1831) indicates that Joseph Smith was “arrested as a disorderly person, tried and condemned before a court of Justice” (Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, April 9, 1831, page 120). On March 8, 1842, Joel K. Noble, who had acquitted Joseph Smith of some charges brought against him in 1830 (see History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 91-96), wrote a letter in which he spoke of Joseph Smith’s “first trial”—i.e., the case before Justice Neely. According to Noble, Smith “was condemned” at that time (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trials, by Wesley P. Walters, Part 2, pages 132-133).

Wesley Walters gives this information:

Both before and during the examination Joseph remained under guard, with Constable De Zeng in “attendance with Prisoner two days & 1 night,” referring to the day of the examination and the day and night preceding. Since the evidence appeared sufficient to show that Smith was guilty as charged, he was ordered held for trial. (Ibid., p. 139)

Walters has also noted that in the summary of Justice Neely’s costs at the end of the printed transcript, he listed a “Mittimus.” This provides very strong evidence that Joseph Smith was condemned at the examination and was facing trial before the Court of Special Sessions. Webster’s 1828 dictionary gives this definition of the word Mittimus: “In law, a precept or command in writing, under the hand or hand and seal of a justice of the peace or other proper officer, directed to the keeper of a prison, requiring him to imprison an offender; a warrant of commitment to prison. 2. A writ for removing records from one court to another.” Constable De Zeng’s bill proves that the mittimus related to the imprisonment of Joseph Smith rather than the “writ for removing records from one court to another.” It plainly states: “10 miles travel with mittimus to take him.” Furthermore, Justice Neely listed a charge for “Recognisances of witnesses.” This also shows that Neely had found Joseph Smith “guilty” and was turning him over to the “next court having cognizance of the offense.” In the Revised Statutes of the State of New-York, 1829, page 709, we read:

If it shall appear that an offence has been committed, and that there is probable cause to believe the prisoner to be guilty thereof, the magistrate shall bind by recognizance the prosecutor, and all the material witnesses against such prisoner, to appear and testify at the next court having cognizance of the offence, and in which the prisoner may be indicted.

Mormon writer Paul Hedengren seemed to be willing to admit that the machinery had been set in motion for “a trial before the Court of Special Sessions”: “Notice that in anticipation of such a trial, two justices were notified and 12 witnesses subpoenaed, as evidenced by the bill of Constable De Zeng” (In Defense of Faith, page 216). All of the evidence, therefore, indicates that Joseph Smith was in real trouble with the law. In A New Conductor Generalis, 1819, page 109, we read:

A justice of the peace may convict disorderly persons, … to the bridewell or house of correction, at hard labor, for a time not exceeding sixty days, or until the next general sessions. . . .

When a person has been thus committed by a justice, to remain till the next general sessions, if the justices at the sessions adjudge him to be a disorderly person, they may, if they think convenient, order him to be detained, at hard labor, for any future time not exceeding six months, and during his confinement to be corrected by whipping, according to the nature of the offence, as they shall think fit.

Joseph Smith seems to have had three choices: 1. He could face three justices and stand the chance of being “detained, at hard labor” for up to “six months” if convicted. 2. He could have admitted his guilt and struck an agreement with the county. Many times officials who wanted to cut expenses would be willing to let prisoners go if they would agree to leave the county where the crime took place. 3. He could have attempted an escape. This was the method Joseph Smith used thirteen years later in Missouri when he was indicted:

This evening our guard got intoxicated. We thought it a favorable opportunity to make our escape; knowing that the only object of our enemies was our destruction; . . . Accordingly, we took advantage of the situation of our guard and departed, and that night we traveled a considerable distance. (History of the Church, vol. 3, page 321)

The evidence would seem to indicate that Joseph Smith chose either the 2nd or 3rd option, or possibly a combination of the two. We have already shown that Justice Noble claimed that Smith “was condemned” at his “first trial.” Wesley P. Walters wrote:

Mr. Noble succinctly states that the “whisper came to Jo., ‘Off, Off!’” and so Joseph “took Leg Bail,” an early slang expression meaning “to escape from custody.” . . . What is obviously happening is that the justices are privately suggesting to this first offender to ‘get out of town and don’t come back,’ and in exchange they will not impose sentence. . . . Judge Nobel’s statement agrees precisely with an early account of this 1826 trial published just five years after the trial had taken place. It was written by a young medical doctor who lived in South Bainbridge at the time, Dr. Abram Willard Benton, who like Mr. Noble mentions that Joseph had been involved in glass looking, and that he had been “tried and condemned.” Dr. Benton adds that because Joseph was a minor at the time, being 20 years old, “and thinking he might reform his conduct, he was designedly allowed to escape.” Therefore, the court, though it found him guilty of being in violation of the law, had intentionally not imposed sentence as a way of showing mercy on this youthful offender. Young Joseph, aware that returning to the Bainbridge area might find him suddenly sentenced to jail, was careful to return, as Noble puts it, “in Dark corners” and “in the Dark.” (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trials, Part 2, page 123)

On page 140 of Part 1 of the same pamphlet, Walters commented: “Another possibility, of course, is that Joseph jumped bail and when the Court of Special Sessions met they may have decided not to pursue the matter further, hoping the youth had learned his lesson.”

A DISORDERLY PERSON

An examination of the law concerning “disorderly persons” leads to the conclusion that Joseph Smith would have had a very difficult time avoiding conviction if he had remained for his trial at the Court of Special Sessions. According to A New Conductor Generalis, published in 1819, page 108, the following would be “deemed disorderly persons”:

All Jugglers;

All who pretend to have skill in physiognomy, palmistry, or like crafty science, or pretend to tell fortunes, or to discover where lost goods may be found; . . . 1 R. L. 1813. p. 114.

Webster’s 1828 dictionary gives this definition for the word juggle: 1. To play tricks by slight of hand; to amuse and make sport by tricks, which make a false show of extraordinary powers. 2. To practice artifice or imposture. Joseph Smith’s practice of “glass looking” — i.e., using a seer stone to divine things not seen by the natural eye would certainly be viewed as making a “false show of extraordinary powers.” The printed transcript says that Smith was charged with being “a disorderly person and an impostor.” Joseph Smith’s practice of “glass looking” would also fall into the category of a “crafty science” mentioned in the law. Moreover, in the examination before Justice Neely, Smith admitted that he had “been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years.” As the reader can see, the law deemed anyone who used a “crafty science . . . to discover where lost goods may be found” as a “disorderly person.” In his docket record, Justice Neely was careful to record the statements concerning Joseph Smith’s “glass looking” and his claim to find “lost goods.” For example, he recorded the following from Jonathan Thompson, a witness who seemed favorably disposed towards Joseph Smith: “Thompson says that he believes in the prisoner’s professed skill; . . . he is certain that prisoner can divine things by means of said stone. That as evidence of the fact prisoner looked into his hat to tell him about some money witness lost sixteen years ago, and that he described the man that witness supposed had taken it, and the disposition of the money:” The fact that the transcript seems to focus in on the very things that would convict Joseph Smith as a “disorderly person” under the laws of early New York bears witness to its authenticity.

As we have shown, Apostle John A. Widtsoe argued that in the transcript, “Joseph Smith is made to confess to all his errors, including treasure hunting, peepstone practices, etc., etc. In fact, it is such a complete self-confession as to throw immediate doubt upon the genuiness of the document.” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, 1951, page 78) Actually, Joseph Smith was not under oath, and he did not have to confess to anything. Furthermore, in the publication Revised Statutes of the State of New-York, 1829, page 708, we find that “the prisoner shall be informed by the magistrate, that he is at liberty to refuse to answer any question that may be put to him.” While Joseph Smith’s statements may have seemed rather silly to Apostle Widtsoe, the truth of the matter is that Smith found himself on the horns of a dilemma. Since he knew that there were a number of witnesses who would testify concerning his involvement in the “crafty science” of “glass looking,” he could hardly deny the charge. Moreover, Joseph Smith’s own employer, Josiah Stowell was a devout believer in his ability at divination and testified that he “had the most implicit faith in prisoners’ skill.” Jonathan Thompson testified in a similar vein. Ironically, it seems that Smith’s best friends were his worst enemies as far as his attempt to escape the penalty of the law. The more they defended his ability as a diviner, the less chance he had of being acquitted. If Joseph Smith were to deny that he had ability to see the treasures and lost goods in his stone, he would disillusion his closest followers in the money-digging business. Under these circumstances, the best he could do was to try to minimize his involvement. He, therefore, claimed that “of late” he had “pretty much” given up the practice of divination and “that he did not solicit business of this kind, and had always rather declined having anything to do with this business.”

Wesley P. Walters made this interesting comment concerning the matter:

Joseph Smith put himself in the position of meriting such punishment by the line of defense he took at his 1826 trial. According to the docket record, Joseph’s defense at his trial was that he really could discover where lost goods could be found and was therefore not an imposter trying to sponge off the public as a vagrant might do. Such a defense, however, was a virtual admission that he was in violation of the law against “pretending . . . to discover where lost goods may be found.” The court, therefore, after hearing a few witnesses who corroborated that fact, summarily pronounced Joseph “guilty.” (Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trials, Part 2, page 124)

In Part 1, page 148, of the same pamphlet, Wesley Walters observed:

There is therefore neither a legal nor a factual basis for rejecting the Neely trial record as an authentic record of Smith’s 1826 trial. The main Mormon objection really seems to rest upon an emotional reaction to the admissions Smith makes in the court record, which seem tantamount to making him a religious fraud. However, at the time of the trial it was the only way he could establish that he was not a fraud. The point of the trial was that while he claimed to be a “glass-looker,” he actually only pretended to have such powers and was therefore an “Impostor.” Smith’s only defense against this charge was to claim that he did have such ability, but had never sought customers for it, had used it very little, and really intended to give it up, . . .

VERY CONVINCING

Since we began to have doubts about the authenticity of Mark Hofmann’s documents in February 1984, we have published a great deal of material concerning forgeries. The more we examined his documents, the more problems we found. Our work with regard to the Hofmann documents turned out to be a very disillusioning experience. Fortunately, the question of Joseph Smith’s encounter with the law in 1826 has turned out to be just the opposite. The more we have examined the question, the more convinced we have become that both the Neely docket record and the bills found by Wesley P. Walters are authentic.

The new information concerning the Neely docket record being “an examination” and that it conforms to what we should expect to find in such a document greatly strengthens the case for its authenticity. While the Mormon writer Paul Hedengren still feels that it may be a “fabrication,” he is forced to concede that “it is quite clear that the account is not a fabrication composed by someone having no understanding of legal practices or of the legal difficulties encountered by Joseph Smith in 1826. Whoever wrote the 1873 account did so with some detailed knowledge of what actually occurred” (In Defense of Faith, page 232). As far as we can tell, Hedengren seems to accept the bills of Neely and De Zeng which Walters discovered as authentic documents. We feel that since these bills dovetail with the Neely docket record with regard to the nature of the trial (glass looking), the date and the costs, it would be very difficult to believe that the Neely record could be anything other than a transcript of the original document created by Justice Neely in 1826.

While people like Ronald Jackson, who are not well grounded in Mormon history, would try to discredit Walters’ discoveries, there are many things about the Neely and De Zeng bills that show they are authentic. Besides all the evidence that we have presented, it should be noted that Wesley Walters initially seemed to have no idea that the transcript of the legal proceedings took the form of “an examination.” Walters, in fact, strongly believed that the case was decided by three justices in a Court of Special Sessions. He seems to have held this belief for about seventeen years. From this it is obvious that if Walters were creating a forgery, it is likely that he would have tried to bolster his theory in the bill itself. Instead, the Neely bill seems to support the idea that it was “an examination,” not a special sessions trial, that occurred on March 20, 1826. While Justice Neely listed nine cases on his bill, only two include the word “examination” i.e., the case of Joseph Smith and that of Newel Evans. With regard to the case of “Joseph Smith The Glass looker,” Neely wrote: “To my fees in examination of the above cause.” The names of Joseph Smith and Newel Evans are not found on any of the 1826 bills of Justices Humphrey, Tarble or Bigelow. This, of course, is exactly what we would expect to find if these were examinations rather than trials before a Court of Special Sessions.

While Mormon apologists have labored very hard since 1945 to try to undermine the authenticity of the 1826 court case, their efforts have been in vain. Dale Morgan, Stanley Ivins, Wesley Walters and Michael Marquardt have heaped up a mountain of evidence which seems to be irrefutable.

THE IMPLICATIONS

If this were just a case that involved a young man getting into trouble with the law, Mormon critics would be foolish to spend their time rehashing the story. Most people would allow Joseph Smith the right to make a few youthful mistakes without maintaining that it would seriously affect his role as a prophet. The issue, however, is much more serious than just the transgression of an early New York law which many today would regard as antiquated. What is involved here is the question of whether Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God or merely a man entangled in occultic practices. The implications of this matter are very serious indeed. Once we accept the validity of the documents concerning Joseph Smith’s trouble with the law, we are forced to admit that he was engaging in magical practices at the very time he claimed he was being tutored by the Angel Moroni to receive the golden plates of the Book of Mormon.

More important than this, however, is the fact that the Neely transcript undermines the whole story of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. A careful examination of Joseph Smith’s story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and even the text of the book itself reveals that it is just an extension of the money-digging practices so clearly portrayed in the transcript. For example, the court record shows that Joseph Smith had used a stone placed in his hat to find treasures “for three years” prior to 1826. Now, according to eye witnesses to the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith used this exact method to translate the golden plates. David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, stated: “I will now give you a description of the manner in which the Book of Mormon was translated, Joseph would put the seer stone into a hat, and put his face in the hat, drawing it closely around his face to exclude the light; and in the darkness the spiritual light would shine. A piece of something resembling parchment would appear, and on that appeared the writing. . . . Thus the Book of Mormon was translated by the gift and power of God, and not by any power of man” (An Address All Believers In Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, page 12).

Although Mormon historian B. H. Roberts claimed that Joseph Smith used the Urim and Thummim, he frankly admitted that he sometimes used a “Seer Stone” to translate the plates:

The Seer Stone referred to here was a chocolate-colored, somewhat egg-shaped stone which the Prophet found while digging a well in company with his brother Hyrum, . . . It possessed the qualities of Urim and Thummim, since by means of it—as described above—as well by means of the Interpreters found with the Nephite record, Joseph was able to translate the characters engraved on the plates. (Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 1, page 129)

Joseph Smith’s father-in-law, Isaac Hale, noticed a definite relationship between the method Joseph Smith used to translate the Book of Mormon and the way he searched for buried treasures. In an affidavit, published in 1834, Hale wrote:

I first became acquainted with Joseph Smith, Jr. in November, 1825. He was at that time in the employ of a set of men who were called “money diggers,” and his occupation was that of seeing, or pretending to see by means of a stone placed in his hat, and his hat closed over his face. In this way he pretended to discover minerals and hidden treasure. . . . young Smith . . . asked my consent to his marrying my daughter Emma. This I refused, and gave him my reasons for so doing; some of which were, that he was a stranger, and followed a business that I could not approve; . . . while I was absent from home [he] carried off my daughter, . . . they were married . . . In a short time they returned, . . .

Smith stated to me that he had given up what he called “glass looking,” and that he expected to work hard for a living. . . . He also made arrangements with my son, . . . to go up to Palmyra, . . . after this, I was informed they had brought a wonderful book of plates down with them. . . . The manner in which he pretended to read and interpret, was the same as when he looked for the “money diggers,” with the stone in his hat, and his hat over his face, while the book of plates was at the same time hid in the woods! (New York Baptist Register, June 13, 1834)

The reader will notice that Joseph Smith claimed he was able to read the Book of Mormon plates without looking at them in exactly the way that Arad Stowell testified that he claimed he could divine the contents of a modern book: “. . . prisoner [Joseph Smith] laid a book upon a white cloth, and proposed looking through another stone . . . turn his head to book, and read.”

There are also other important parallels. For example, Smith claimed that he could find buried gold for the money-diggers and in the case of the Book of Mormon he found gold plates which were buried in the earth. The idea of the Angel Moroni guarding the gold plates before Joseph Smith obtained them seems to have stemmed from a story he told Jonathan Thompson: “Prisoner would not look again, . . . pretending that he was alarmed on account of the circumstances relating to the trunk . . . the last time he looked he discovered distinctly the two Indians who buried the trunk, that a quarrel ensued between them, and that one of said Indians was killed by the other, and thrown into the hole beside the trunk, to guard it, as he supposed.” (Testimony of Jonathan Thompson) It is hard to resist the idea that the spirit guardian of the treasure was transformed into the Angel Moroni. The idea of treasures slipping into the earth, as testified to by Josiah Stowell and Jonathan Thompson, appears to have been incorporated into the Book of Mormon itself (see our book, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, pages 37-39).

That Joseph Smith was ensnared in occultic practices at the very time God was supposed to be preparing him to receive the golden plates of the Book of Mormon seems to place his work in an eerie light, and the fact that he embodied some of these magic elements into his new religion entirely undermines the foundation of Mormonism. We agree with the assessment of the Mormon apologist Francis W. Kirkham. As we have shown, Mr. Kirkham allowed no middle ground. He frankly conceded that if the court record could be proven true, Joseph Smith’s followers “must deny his claimed divine guidance which led them to follow him. . . . How could he be a prophet of God, the leader of the Restored Church to these tens of thousands, if he had been the superstitious fraud he must deny his claimed divine guidance which led them to follow him.” The observation which appears in Hugh Nibley’s book, The Myth Makers, is also very close to the truth: “. . . if this court record is authentic it is the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith.” While Dr. Nibley set out to prove that “the whole structure of anti-Mormon scholarship rests on trumped up evidence,” (Ibid., Forward) the tide has turned against him. Not only has the authenticity of the 1826 court record been established since Nibley wrote his book, but a number of discoveries have come to light which are equally, if not more damaging to Joseph Smith’s claims — for example, the “strange account” of Smith’s First Vision which was suppressed by the Mormon leaders for 130 years.

---

A TRESPASSING PATH

One of the writers of this newsletter recently had an experience with a group hiking on a mountain near Salt Lake City which served as a reminder of how much we need God’s light to help us along the path of life. As it sometimes happens, we started up the trail too late in the day and most of those in the group were caught up on the mountain after the sun went down. Fortunately, however, some flashlights were made available, and we all made it down without any problem. As we descended, however, we could see places where the trail was partially washed out. Because of the flashlights, these sections presented no serious problem, but we could see that it would be very hazardous to try to pass over them in the dark.

This experience brought to mind a story that Catherine Marshall told concerning her husband, Peter Marshall, who served as Chaplain of the United States Senate:

Walking back from a nearby village to Bamburgh one dark, starless night, Peter struck out across the moors, thinking he would take a short cut. He knew that there was a deep deserted limestone quarry close by the Glororum Road, but he thought he could avoid that danger spot. The night was inky black, eerie. There was only the sound of the wind through the heather-stained moorland, the noisy clamor of wild mouf fowl as his footsteps disturbed them, the occasional far-off bleating of a sheep.

Suddenly he heard someone call, “Peter! . . .” There was great urgency in the voice.

He stopped. “Yes, who is it? What do you want?”

For a second he listened, but there was no response, only the sound of the wind. The moor seemed completely deserted.

Thinking he must have been mistaken, he walked on a few paces. Then he heard it again, even more urgently: “Peter! . . .”

He stopped dead still, trying to peer into that impenetrable darkness, but suddenly stumbled and fell to his knees. Putting out his hand to catch himself, he found nothing there. As he cautiously investigated, feeling around in a semicircle, he found himself to be on the very brink of an abandoned stone quarry. Just one step more would have sent him plummeting into space to certain death.

This incident made an unforgettable impression on Peter. There was never any doubt in his mind about the source of that Voice. He felt that God must have some great purpose for his life, to have intervened so specifically. (Ibid., Forward, page 24)

Although we may never have an experience like Peter Marshall, the Lord does give his people light to help them avoid the many pitfalls they encounter in their trip through life. In Colossians 1:13 (New King James Version), we read that God “has delivered us from the power of darkness and translated us into the kingdom of the Son of his love.” In Psalm 119:105, we find this comforting statement: “Your word is a lamp to my feet And a light to my path.” In John 8:12, Jesus declared: “I am the light of the world. He who follows Me shall not walk in darkness, but have the light of life.” In John 12:46, Jesus stated: “I have come as a light into the world, that whoever believes in Me should not abide in darkness.”

To live our lives without the light of Jesus leading us through the darkness is to invite disaster. The night is very dark, and the trail of life is strewn with stones and other objects which we will continually stumble over. In addition, the path is washed out in many places, and we never know when we will encounter a drop off which will ruin us spiritually. Moreover, Jesus has made it plain that those who refuse his offer of grace in this life will eventually be “cast out into outer darkness” (Matthew 8:12).

Those of us who have turned our hearts over to Christ, know that he does provide the light we need for guidance in our lives. While we still have problems, we have a great sense of peace, comfort and direction in hard times. We would encourage all those who have not made that decision to yield themselves to the Lord before it is too late. Jesus himself gives this invitation in Matthew 11:28-30:

“Come to Me, all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

“Take my yoke upon you and learn from Me, for I am gentle and lowly in heart, and you will find rest for your souls.

“For My yoke is easy and My burden is light.”

CHARGES AGAINST US

During the past year we have been charged with being “unChristian,” misquoting material and being unethical in our writings. We have completed our response to these charges and have published it in the new edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine. Although we originally stated that the new edition was going to be available at $2.00 a copy, it ended up being four times larger than the first edition. For this reason we have had to raise the price to $4.00. We are, however, having a special offer on this book. If it is ordered before September 15, 1988, the price will be only $3.00 a copy (on mail orders please add shipping charge of $1.00). All those who have been affected by these charges against us should take the time to read our side of the story before drawing any conclusions.

GETTING RICH?

Utah Lighthouse Ministry is a non-profit organization which is supported by both Christians who are anxious to help the Mormons find the truth and members of the Mormon Church who feel that the church is suppressing important information which needs to be in the hands of the public. Mormon apologists have often argued that we (Jerald and Sandra Tanner) are getting rich through the publication of material which is critical of the church. This charge was effectively destroyed in 1983 when a Mormon scholar made an unsuccessful attempt to sue us for copyright violations. During the course of the suit, we were ordered to produce our “1982 and ‘83 tax returns.” To the embarrassment of the critics who had charged that we were getting rich, our tax return for 1982 showed an “Adjusted Gross Income” of only $9,935.83 and the return for 1983 listed our income at $22,285.15 (see photographs in the book The Tanners On Trial, pages 139-140). We made this comment in the March 1985 issue of the Messenger: “Since we both worked full-time [in 1983] for Utah Lighthouse Ministry, this would amount to just over $11,000 each.” At the present time we estimate that the salary we make amounts to less than $6 an hour. Considering the amount of hours we have to work and the stress that comes from this type of ministry, we do not feel that we are taking advantage of the public.

At the present time we find ourselves running a little short (we have not had a pay check for six weeks). We are not desperate, however, because a man has given us some land. Although we could sell it, at the present time the market is so poor that we would have to let it go at a greatly reduced price. Our temporary shortage of funds probably stems from the fact that we have not raised the prices of most of our books over the past several years and that we have been putting out larger issues of the Salt Lake City Messenger and sending them to a greater number of people. We have been mailing out about 14,000 copies to those on our mailing list and giving out thousands more at a later time. Many people feel that this is a very valuable service, but less than 4% of those who receive the newsletter make donations. Fortunately, however, many others buy materials, and this helps us to meet our obligations. Some people have felt that if they do not send support, they should not remain on the mailing list. We do not feel this way at all. In fact, we desire that everyone who is blessed by the Messenger should remain on the list. It does not make any difference whether they can give contributions or buy our material. The most important thing is that the information is disseminated to those who need it.

In March 1987, we extended our ministry to SUPPORT 100 CHILDREN through the World Vision Childcare Partner plan. Although we were able to remain current on this obligation for about a year, we are now three months behind. We are concerned about this but hope to continue this work in the future. We have also been able to provide about 18 hours a week to Rescue Mission work. The work with the Mormons continues to prosper. Many of them are turning to the Lord.

We do hope that our friends will continue to pray earnestly for this ministry for this is the real key to success. We know that God “is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that works in us, . . .” (Ephesians 3:20)

Those who are interested in helping out financially with this important ministry can send their tax deductible contributions to UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY, P.O. Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110.

NEW HOFMANN BOOK

Linda Sillitoe and Allen D. Roberts have recently completed their long-awaited book on Mark Hofmann, [Salamander: The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders] the man who murdered two people and forged Mormon documents. Although we feel that it is unfortunate that the authors have preserved some improper language used by investigators in the case, that is the worst criticism that we can make of the book. Many people felt that since Sillitoe and Roberts were Mormons, they could not write an objective book about the subject. We are happy to report that these fears have been proven groundless. The authors have, in fact, been very objective in their treatment of this sensitive subject. Not only have they dealt with the mysterious presence of Church Security in the case just after the bombings, but they have also brought to light the fact that the investigators felt church leaders were not telling the truth with regard to certain aspects of the case. For example, on page 129, they report the following concerning an interview investigators had with Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the First Presidency: “Afterwards, Mike George left Hinckley’s office unexpectedly angry. When he interviewed a bandit he expected lies, not when he interviewed a respected citizen and church leader. He soon realized, however, that his anger was simple—his fellow investigators, born and raised Mormons, were furious.”

In addition to the excellent research of Sillitoe and Roberts, the document expert George J. Throckmorton has a section showing what his examination “of twenty-one Hofmann documents” revealed. Although Salamander: The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders will normally sell for $17.95, if it is ordered before September 15, 1988, the price will be only $16.95 (mail orders please add 10% for postage and handling).

EXTRA SPECIAL OFFER!

Besides the book by Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts, two other major books, a mini-series on television and a movie will draw national attention to the Mormon document scandal. At this time we are offering a very special price on the three-volume set entitled, Hofmann’s Confessions, A Photographic Printing of the Transcripts of Salt Lake County Prosecutors’ Interviews With Convicted Forger and Murderer Mark Hofmann. This will probably be a collectors’ item in the years to come. The regular price is $25, but if it is ordered before September 15, 1988, the reader will receive it for only $14.95 (mail orders please add 10% for postage and handling).

OTHER BOOKS

Mail Orders Add 10% Handling
$1.00 Minimum Shipping Charge

Are the Mormon Scriptures Reliable? A revision of Harry L. Ropp’s The Mormon Papers, by Wesley P. Walters. Price: $6.95

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

Where Does It Say That? by Bob Witte. Over 100 photos of oft-quoted pages from early LDS sources. Price: $5.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Indian Origins & The Book of Mormon, by Dan Vogel. Shows that the Book of Mormon fits well into “the pre-1830 environment of Joseph Smith.” Price: $8.95

Mormon Polygamy—A History, by Richard S. Van Wagoner. Price: $19.95
Ferguson’s Two Faces

Mormon Scholar’s “Spoof” Lives on After His Death

The word “spoof” was apparently coined by a British comedian by the name of Roberts around the middle of the 19th century. It is defined as a “hoax, joke, or deception.” The following is the story of a man who felt he had been “spoofed” by the Mormon Church and, by his own admission, decided to “spoof a little hack.” Unfortunately, his “spoof” continued to live on after his death and will probably bring embarrassment to his family and associates for many years to come.

A True Believer

Thomas Stuart Ferguson was born in “Pocatello, Idaho, on 21 May 1915” (The Messiah in Ancient America, 1987, p. 248). He “received degrees in political science and law from the University of California and practiced law in Orinda, California” (Ibid.). Mr. Ferguson also worked with the F.B.I., but his first love seemed to be trying to prove the Book of Mormon through the study of Mesoamerican archaeology. In 1983, J. Willard Marriott wrote a letter in which he commented concerning Ferguson’s dedication to establishing an archaeological base for the Book of Mormon: “We spent several months together in Mexico looking at the ruins and studying the Book of Mormon archaeology. I have never known anyone who was more devoted to that kind of research than was Tom. I remember when he was with the F.B.I., he would arise at 4:30 or 5:00 AM and read the Book of Mormon and information he could find pertaining to it” (Ibid., p. 250). His wife, Ester, recalled that “during their courtship that she was sometimes piqued by his passion for the Book of Mormon and once complained to her mother, ‘I think I’m going out with the Book of Mormon.’ . . . Throughout their married life she staunchly supported her husband’s efforts” (Ibid., p. 250).

On page 251-252 of The Messiah in Ancient America, we read:

In 1975 Thomas Stuart Ferguson wrote a very significant paper relating to Book of Mormon archaeology and geography. Although he was very careful in the wording he used, he later acknowledged that the “real implication of the paper” is that the Book of Mormon is “fictional.” Because we felt that the manuscript is so important we published it under the title, Ferguson’s Manuscript Unveiled. The price is $3.00 a copy (mail orders add $1.00 minimum postage charge).
Mr. Ferguson devoted a great deal of his life trying to prove the Book of Mormon by archaeology and was considered by the Mormon people as a great defender of the faith. He wrote at least three books on the subject. His book, One Fold and One Shepherd, was recommended to one of the authors of this work (Jerald) as containing the ultimate case for the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. On the jacket of that book, we find this information about Ferguson:

Thomas Stuart Ferguson, 47, President of the New World Archaeological Foundation, is a distinguished student of the earliest high civilizations of the New World. He, with Dr. A. V. Kidder, dean of Central American archaeologists, first planned the New World Archaeological Foundation in 1952. . . . He raised $225,000 for the field work, incorporated the Foundation (being an attorney), assisted in the initial explorations in Central America and Mexico and has actively directed the affairs of the Foundation since its inception.

Thomas Ferguson worked hard to get the Mormon Church interested in helping with the organization he envisioned. In a letter to Mormon President David O. McKay, dated December 14, 1951, Ferguson wrote: “If the anticipated evidences confirming the Book of Mormon are found, world-wide notice will be given to the restored gospel through the Book of Mormon. The artifacts will speak eloquently from the dust” (The Messiah in Ancient America, p. 257). Although church leaders claimed that they were interested in archaeological studies with regard to the Book of Mormon, they declined to provide any financial help. On January 12, 1952, Ferguson wrote again and promised the First Presidency that he would “take an active part in the Foundation to the end that the Church receives the full benefit of any discovered evidences relating to the Book of Mormon. I anticipate that many important artifacts will be discovered confirming the Book of Mormon” (Ibid., p. 259). Joseph Anderson, secretary to the First Presidency, responded that “The Brethren feel that it may be that no discovery will be made which shall establish the historical value of the Book of Mormon. They incline to feel that the faith now required to accept the book is a very considerable factor in the faith of the Restored Gospel, belief in which is the result of faith therein.” On April 9, 1953, Ferguson wrote a letter in which he again urged the Brethren to financially support the organization:

The source of our income and support for the work can be kept strictly confidential if it is desired. . . . the Church cannot afford to let all of the priceless artifacts of Book of Mormon people fall into other hands. We can make wonderful use of them in missionary work and in letting all the world know of the Book of Mormon. (Ibid., p. 263)

On pages 263-266 of the same book we find the following:

. . . Ferguson’s persistence and persuasiveness paid off . . . Ferguson appealed to his good friend J. Willard Marriott for assistance. The following day Ferguson had an appointment with President McKay which Marriott had arranged. . . . President David O. McKay listened to Tom Ferguson’s proposal and asked the specific amount he was requesting. Ferguson replied, “Only about the amount that it would take to build a chapel.”

President McKay gave him a penetrating glance. “We build $50,000 chapels and $250,000 chapels. Which did you have in mind? Tom Ferguson promptly replied, “A $250,000 chapel.” That was the amount granted, sufficient to underwrite five years’ work in a generous way (1955-1959). . . . It was during this period that Ferguson spent approximately half of his working time away from law, devoting this time to administering the affairs of the NWAF, giving speeches, studying and writing about the archaeology and history of ancient America and their relationship to the Book of Mormon.

It was agreed that the New World Archaeology Foundation would not “discuss direct connections with the Book of Mormon, but rather to allow the work to stand exclusively on its scholarly merits” (Ibid., p. 276). The church provided financial support for this organization for many years. It was eventually “attached to and administered through BYU.”

In a paper entitled, “Thomas Stuart Ferguson, 1915-83,” Fred W. Nelson wrote the following:

Thomas Ferguson has either directly or indirectly influenced thousands of people’s thinking on archaeology. . . . He has had a great influence on professional archaeology through the Department of Archaeology at Brigham Young University, the Gates Collection, and the New World Archaeological Foundation. . . . Ferguson’s legacy in the founding of the Archaeology Department at Brigham Young University, the obtaining of the Gates Collection, and as founder of the New World Archaeology Foundation stands as shining example to us all. (As cited in The Messiah in Ancient America, pp. 282-283)

From all that we can learn, Thomas Stuart Ferguson was a dedicated believer in the authenticity of the Book of Mormon at the time he founded the New World Archaeology Foundation. He really believed that archaeology would prove the Book of Mormon. In a letter dated April 23, 1952, Mr. Ferguson said “the archeological data now available is entirely inadequate” for testing the Book of Mormon. He predicted, however, that the “next ten years of excavations in Mexico and Guatemala should enable us to make the archeological tests.” For a number of years he was very excited about the progress of the work and seemed certain that the Book of Mormon would be vindicated soon. In his book, One Fold And One Shepherd, page 263, he stated: “The important thing now is to continue the digging at an accelerated pace in order to find more inscriptions dating to Book-of-Mormon times. Eventually we should find decipherable inscriptions . . . referring to some unique person, place or event in the Book of Mormon.” In 1962 Mr. Ferguson said that “Powerful evidences sustaining the book are accumulating.”

EVIDENCE NOT FOUND

Although many important archaeological discoveries were made, the evidence he had desired to find to support the Book of Mormon did not turn up. In response to a letter Hal Hougey wrote in 1972 which reminded him that he had predicted in 1961 that Book of Mormon cities would be found within 10 years, Mr. Ferguson sadly wrote:

Ten years have passed . . . I sincerely anticipated that Book-of-Mormon cities would be positively identified within 10 years—and time has proved me wrong in my anticipation. (Letter dated June 5, 1972)

At first it had all seemed so simple; since the Book of Mormon told when the Nephites were in Mesoamerica, all one had to do was find archaeological sites that dated to the period and the Book of Mormon would be established by the evidence. The fact that archaeological research failed to provide the confirmation which Mr. Ferguson expected to find must have weighed very heavily on his mind. The most serious blow to Ferguson’s faith, however, came just after Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Papyri were rediscovered in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. This collection, which had been lost for many years, contained the very papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham. The Book of Abraham is published in the Pearl of Great Price, one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church.

After Mr. Ferguson obtained photographs of the papyrus fragments, he consulted Professors Lutz and Lesko of the University of California. Both these Egyptologists agreed that the papyrus Joseph Smith claimed was the Book of Abraham was in reality the Book of Breathings, an Egyptian funerary text made for a man by the name of Hor (Horus). Ferguson learned that this papyrus had nothing at all to do with the patriarch Abraham or his religion. It was in its entirety a pagan text filled with the names of Egyptian gods and goddesses.

Thomas Stuart Ferguson was shaken to the core by this discovery. When the church’s noted apologist, Dr. Hugh Nibley, began defending the Book of Abraham, Ferguson wrote a letter to another member of the church in which he stated:

Nibley’s articles on the Book of Abraham aren’t worth a tinker—first, because he is not impartial, being the commissioned and paid defender of the faith. Second, because he could not, he dared not, he did not, face the true issue: “Could Joseph Smith translate Egyptian?” . . . By study of the GRAMMAR [Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar], the recovered papyrus, and the illustrations, it is perfectly obvious that we now have the original [sic] manuscript material used by Jos. Smith in working up the Book of Abraham. Prof. Klaus Baer of Univ. of Chicago, Prof. Lutz of U.C. (Berkeley), Prof. Lesko (U.C. Berkeley) and Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson, all agree that the original manuscript Egyptian text translates into the Breathing Permit of Hor (Egyptian God). . . . The work of the two UC professors was done at my request and is unpublished. All 4 agree with each other, and without having conferred or collaborated. (My UC men did not, and still do not, know that there is any relationship of the manuscript material to the Mormon Church, Joseph Smith, Book of Abraham—or whatever. . . .

Joseph Smith announced, in print (History of the Church, vol. II, page 236), that “one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt . . .” Since 4 scholars, who have established that they can read Egyptian, say that the manuscripts deal with neither Abraham nor Joseph—and since the 4 reputable men tell us exactly what the manuscripts do say—I must conclude that Joseph Smith had not the remotest skill in things Egyptian-hieroglyphics. To my surprise, one of the highest officials in the Mormon Church agreed with that conclusion when I made that very statement to him an Dec. 4, 1970—privately in one-to-one [c]onversation. . . .

The attempts, including Nibley’s, to explain away and dodge the trap into which Joseph Smith fell when he had the audacity to translate the Chandler texts, and keep the original Egyptian texts around, are absurd, in my view. . . .

My views are not for publication or spreading abroad. I am like you—maintaining membership because of the many fine things the Church offers. But facts speak for themselves. I offered the data available to my Stake Pres. recently and he walked away without it—saying he didn’t want to read it. They can hardly excommunicate [sic] us when they won’t look at the evidence.

Of course the dodge as to the Book of Abraham must be: WE DON’T HAVE THE ORIGINAL
That Ferguson would have discussed the matter with Apostle Brown seems very likely since earlier in the letter Ferguson noted that he had received “enlarged photos” of the Joseph Smith Papyri “directly from Hugh B. Brown.” While there is always the possibility that Mr. Ferguson misunderstood Apostle Brown, we seriously doubt that this could have been the case. At any rate, when Ferguson visited with us he seemed to be absolutely convinced that Brown did not believe the Book of Abraham. He was very stirred up over this matter, and we felt that the conversation he had with Apostle Brown probably disturbed him to the point that he decided to make contact with us.

From what we know from other sources, Hugh B. Brown had a very difficult time accepting the anti-Black doctrine—i.e., the teaching that Blacks could not hold the Mormon priesthood. Since this doctrine was chiefly derived from Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham, it is very possible that Brown acquired serious doubts about the book even before the papyri were rediscovered. Many people believe that when Brown was serving in the First Presidency he tried very hard to convince President David O. McKay to have a revelation which would allow Blacks to receive the priesthood. When Joseph Fielding Smith became president of the church in 1970, Hugh B. Brown no longer found himself in the First Presidency. It was not until 1978 that President Spencer W. Kimball claimed to receive a revelation which removed the curse off the blacks. At any rate, we have evidence to show that Thomas Stuart Ferguson continued to tell the story concerning his conversation with Hugh B. Brown up until the time of his death. Ferguson found himself faced with a dilemma, for the Mormon Church had just given him a large grant ($100,000 or more) to carry on the archaeological research of the New World Archaeological Foundation. He felt, however, that this foundation was doing legitimate archaeological work, and therefore he intended to continue the research. He realized that the organization he had founded to establish the authenticity of the Book of Mormon was now actually disproving the Book of Mormon by its failure to turn up anything concerning a Christian culture existing in Mesoamerica prior to the time of Columbus. One matter which we discussed with Mr. Ferguson was the possibility that he might write something about his loss of faith in the Book of Mormon. He was deeply grieved by the fact that he had wasted twenty-five years of his life trying to prove the Book of Mormon. We indicated to him, however, that this time would not be wasted if he would go public with what he had found. He could, in fact, prevent many others from wasting twenty-five years of their lives trying

VISITS THE TANNERS

The first indication we had that Mr. Ferguson was losing his faith in Mormonism was just after Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Papyri were rediscovered. In 1968 he wrote us a letter saying that we were “doing a great thing—getting out some truth on the Book of Abraham.” This was a significant statement since we were presenting evidence that the Book of Abraham was not a correct translation of the papyrus. Later we heard a rumor that he had received “enlarged photos” of the Joseph Smith Papyri “directly from Hugh B. Brown.” While there is always the possibility that Mr. Ferguson misunderstood Apostle Brown, we seriously doubt that this could have been the case. At any rate, when Ferguson visited with us he seemed to be absolutely convinced that Brown did not believe the Book of Abraham. He was very stirred up over this matter, and we felt that the conversation he had with Apostle Brown probably disturbed him to the point that he decided to make contact with us.

From what we know from other sources, Hugh B. Brown had a very difficult time accepting the anti-Black doctrine—i.e., the teaching that Blacks could not hold the Mormon priesthood. Since this doctrine was chiefly derived from Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham, it is very possible that Brown acquired serious doubts about the book even before the papyri were rediscovered. Many people believe that when Brown was serving in the First Presidency he tried very hard to convince President David O. McKay to have a revelation which would allow Blacks to receive the priesthood. When Joseph Fielding Smith became president of the church in 1970, Hugh B. Brown no longer found himself in the First Presidency. It was not until 1978 that President Spencer W. Kimball claimed to receive a revelation which removed the curse off the blacks. At any rate, we have evidence to show that Thomas Stuart Ferguson continued to tell the story concerning his conversation with Hugh B. Brown up until the time of his death. Ferguson found himself faced with a dilemma, for the Mormon Church had just given him a large grant ($100,000 or more) to carry on the archaeological research of the New World Archaeological Foundation. He felt, however, that this foundation was doing legitimate archaeological work, and therefore he intended to continue the research. He realized that the organization he had founded to establish the authenticity of the Book of Mormon was now actually disproving the Book of Mormon by its failure to turn up anything concerning a Christian culture existing in Mesoamerica prior to the time of Columbus. One matter which we discussed with Mr. Ferguson was the possibility that he might write something about his loss of faith in the Book of Mormon. He was deeply grieved by the fact that he had wasted twenty-five years of his life trying to prove the Book of Mormon. We indicated to him, however, that this time would not be wasted if he would go public with what he had found. He could, in fact, prevent many others from wasting twenty-five years of their lives trying.

I must conclude that Joseph Smith had not the remotest skill in things Egyptian-hieroglyphics. To my surprise one of the highest officials in the Mormon Church agreed with that conclusion . . . privately in one-to-one [c]onversation.
to prove the Book of Mormon. He informed us that he had been thinking of writing a book about the matter and that it would be a real “bombshell.”

A few months after Thomas Stuart Ferguson revealed to us that he had come to the conclusion that the book of Mormon was a spurious production, he wrote us a letter in which he said: “I think I will be in SLC in June — and if so, I’ll call on you again. I enjoyed my visit with you... I certainly admire you for the battle you are waging — virtually single handed” (Letter dated March 13, 1971). On a number of occasions when people wrote to him, Mr. Ferguson recommended that they read our publications on Mormonism.

Unfortunately, Thomas Stewart Ferguson seems to have had a very difficult time communicating his loss of faith to those he was close to. He told us, for instance, that he did not dare tell one of his sons the truth about the Book of Mormon because the shock would cause him too much emotional trauma. He felt that he may have to put the matter off until the situation changed. While he no longer believed in the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, he continued to attend the Mormon Church.

Joseph Smith claimed that Jesus Himself told him that he should “join none” of the churches which were in existence in his day, for “all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt;...” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:19). This false concept has led many Mormons to believe that if the Mormon Church is not true, there is nowhere else to turn. Consequently, when they lose faith in Mormonism they are likely to completely lose Faith in the idea of a personal God. Unfortunately, this is what happened to Thomas Stuart Ferguson. In a letter to James Still, dated December 3, 1979, Mr. Ferguson Frankly stated: “I lost faith in Joseph Smith as one having a pipeline to deity—and have decided that there has never been a pipeline to deity—with any man.” Since he had many friends and members of his family in Mormonism and apparently felt comfortable there, he decided to remain in the church. In the same letter Ferguson stated that he still attended Mormon meetings, “sing in the choir and enjoy my friendships in the Church. In my opinion it is the best fraternity that has come to my attention...” With regard to the origin of the Book of Mormon, Mr. Ferguson wrote: “...I give Joseph Smith credit as an innovator and as a smart fellow. I think that Joseph Smith may have had Ixtlilxochitl and View of the Hebrews from which to work.”

Even before our meeting with Mr. Ferguson in 1970, some Mormon scholars were beginning to face the truth with regard to Book of Mormon archaeology. Dee F. Green, who had worked with Ferguson’s New World Archaeological Foundation, was one of the first to openly criticize “Book of Mormon archaeology.” His criticism is very significant because he was at one time deeply involved in archaeological work at the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University. In 1958-61 he served as editor of the University Archaeological Society Newsletter. In his article, published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Dee Green made it plain that archaeological evidence did not prove the Book of Mormon:

Having spent a considerable portion of the past ten years functioning as a scientist dealing with New World archaeology, I find that nothing in so-called Book of Mormon archaeology materially affects my religious commitment one way or the other, and I do not see that the archaeological myths so common in our proselytizing program enhance the process of true conversion. . .

The first myth we need to eliminate is that Book of Mormon archaeology exists. Titles on books full of archaeological half-truths, dilettanti on the peripheries of American archaeology calling themselves Book of Mormon archaeologists regardless of their education, and a Department of Archaeology at BYU devoted to the production of Book of Mormon archaeologists do not insure that Book of Mormon archaeology really exists. If one is to study Book of Mormon archaeology, then one must have a corpus of data with which to deal. We do not. The Book of Mormon is really there so one can have Book of Mormon studies, and archaeology is really there so one can study archaeology, but the two are not wed. At least they are not wed in reality since no Book of Mormon location is known with reference to modern topography. Biblical archaeology can be studied because we do know where Jerusalem and Jericho were and are, but we do not know where Zarahemla and Bountiful (nor any other location for that matter) were or are. It would seem then that a concentration on geography should be the first order of business, but we have already seen that twenty years of such an approach has left us empty-handed. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1969, pp. 76-78)

In 1975 Thomas Stuart Ferguson finally mustered up his courage and prepared a 29-page paper in response to papers written by Mormon apologists John Sorenson and Garth Norman. It was entitled, Written Symposium on Book-of-Mormon Geography: Response of Thomas S. Ferguson to the Norman & Sorenson Papers. In this response, p. 4, Mr. Ferguson wrote:
With all of these great efforts, it cannot be established factually that anyone, from Joseph Smith to the present day, has put his finger on a single point of terrain that was a Book-of-Mormon geographical place. And the hemisphere has been pretty well checked out by competent people. Thousands of sites have been excavated.

Ferguson pointed out in his paper that the text of the Book of Mormon makes it very clear that certain items should be found in archaeological excavations and that these items are not present in the sites proposed. He noted, for instance, that “Thousands of archeological holes in the area proposed have given us not a fragment of evidence of the presence of the plants mentioned in the Book of Mormon . . .” (p. 7). On page 29 he concluded by saying: “I’m afraid that up to this point, I must agree with Dee Green, who has told us that to date there is no Book-of-Mormon geography. I, for one, would be happy if Dee were wrong.”

In a letter to Mr. & Mrs. H. W. Lawrence, dated February 20, 1976, Thomas Stuart Ferguson made very plain the reason why there is “no Book-of-Mormon geography”:

Herewith is a copy of my recent (1975) paper on Book of Mormon matters. . . . It was one of several presented in a written symposium on Book of Mormon geography [sic]. (My thesis is that Book of Mormon geography involves a lot more than playing with topography and terrain.) The real implication of the paper is that you can’t set Book of Mormon geography down anywhere—because it is fictional and will never meet the requirements of the dirt-archeology, I should say—what is in the ground will never conform to what is in the book.

We felt that Thomas Stuart Ferguson’s manuscript on Book of Mormon archaeology was so important that we published it under the title, Ferguson’s Manuscript Unveiled. It is available from Utah Lighthouse Ministry.

RESULTS OF SPOOFING

Although he had written a paper criticizing Book of Mormon archaeology, Thomas Stuart Ferguson felt that it was generally best for those who doubted the faith to keep their “mouth shut.” In a letter written February 9, 1976, he gave this advice:

. . . Mormonism is probably the best conceived myth-fraternity to which one can belong. . . . Joseph Smith tried so hard he put himself out on a limb with the Book of Abraham, and also with the Book of Mormon. He can be refuted—but why bother . . . It would be like wiping out placebos in medicine, and that would make no sense when they do lots of good. . . .

Why not say the right things and keep your membership in the great fraternity, enjoying the good things you like and discarding the ones you can’t swallow (and keeping your mouth shut)? Hypocritical? Maybe . . . thousands of members have done, and are doing, what I suggest you consider doing. Silence is golden—etc. . . . So why try to be heroic and fight the myths—the Mormon one or any other that does more good than ill?

Perhaps you and I have been spoofed by Joseph Smith. Now that we have the inside dope—why not spoof a little back and stay aboard? Please consider this letter confidential—for obvious reasons. I want to stay aboard the good ship, Mormonism—for various reasons that I think valid. First, several of my dearly loved family members want desperately to believe and do believe it and they each need it. It does them far more good than harm. Belonging, my eyes wide open is actually fun, less expensive than formerly, and no strain at all. . . . I never get up and bear testimony . . . You might give my suggestions a trial run—and if you find you have to burn all the bridges between yourselves and the Church, then go ahead and ask for excommunication. (The day will probably come—but it is far off—when the leadership of the Church will change the excommunication rules and delete as grounds non-belief in the 2 books mentioned and in Joseph Smith as a prophet etc., but if you wait for that day, you probably will have died. It is a long way off—tithing would drop too much for one thing. . . .

I recently wrote a paper concerning the big weak spots in the Book of Mormon, from the archeological point of view and for $5 will make a photocopy of it for you if you wish to read it.

Kindly do not quote this letter and please do not cite me.

If Mr. Ferguson could have seen the results of the “spoof” he played on his family, he might have had second thoughts about the wisdom of such a course. As it turned out, after his death his son, Larry S. Ferguson, was convinced that his father wanted his book One Fold and One Shepherd revised and republished to the world. He talked Bruce W. Warren, of Brigham Young University, into working on the revision, and in 1987 it was published under the title, The Messiah in Ancient America. In the Preface, p. xiii, Dr. Warren wrote the following:

The Ferguson family wanted the new book to be a tribute to Thomas Stuart Ferguson and his abiding testimony of the Book of Mormon and the divinity of the Messiah, Jesus the Christ.
On page xv, Dr. Warren commented: “Finally, the driving force behind the book was Larry Ferguson, with the initial financing for the project coming from his brother, Thomas A. Ferguson.” In the Forward, p. xii, Professor Paul R. Cheesman stated: “With the recent additions by Dr. Bruce W. Warren, this book should reinstate Thomas Stuart Ferguson as a source of enrichment in the fields of study concerning Mesoamerica and the Book of Mormon.”

Larry Ferguson maintains that his father discussed the revision of his book before his death. Although we do not really know what Thomas Stuart Ferguson told his son before his death, it seems impossible to believe that he would have wanted it reprinted. While it is only a matter of speculation, it is possible that his son might have asked him why it was not reprinted and that he might have responded by saying it needed to be revised. If Thomas Stuart Ferguson had never leveled with his son concerning his true beliefs about the Book of Mormon, Larry Ferguson would naturally understand his father’s statement to mean that it needed some changes made to reflect archaeological studies that were made since it went out of print. The real meaning of such a statement, of course, would be that it needed to be revised to show that the Book of Mormon “is fictional . . . what is in the ground will never conform to what is in the book” (Letter dated February 2, 1976).

In any case, the new book is seriously flawed because there is no mention of the fact that Ferguson was a complete unbeliever in the Book of Mormon during the last 12 or 13 years of his life. Bruce Warren was undoubtedly aware of Ferguson’s 29-page paper criticizing the Sorenson and Normam papers, but he did not even refer to this important research in the revised publication. If Ferguson were alive today, he would undoubtedly be shocked to find his name attached to a book which contains a map showing “Possible Book of Mormon Locations.” The reader will remember that Ferguson wrote that “there is no Book-of-Mormon geography.”

Thomas Stuart Ferguson’s One Fold and One Shepherd, contained a long list of “cultural elements common to both Bible lands and Mesoamerica” (pp. 57-72). Mormon archaeologist Dee Green felt that Ferguson’s “list of 298 traits . . . are at times so generalized that the list could just as well prove that Book of Mormon people wound up in Southeast Asia” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1969, p. 74). Ferguson, of course, later came to conclude that the items that were mentioned in the Book of Mormon which were not found by archaeologists far outweighed the cultural parallels. Bruce Warren and Larry Ferguson seem to have been completely oblivious to Ferguson’s change of mind and have included his long list of cultural parallels in The Messiah in Ancient America, pages 214-228.

The fact that Thomas Stuart Ferguson was not forthright with members of his family with regard to the Book of Mormon has placed them in a very embarrassing position. They have published a book which will lead people to the conclusion that he was a true believer. The truth, of course, is that Ferguson believed that archaeology disproved the Book of Mormon. The appearance of the revised book with Ferguson’s name on it, has caused scholars to probe into the last years of his life. A great deal of documentary evidence has been discovered to show that from 1970 until his death in 1983 Mr. Ferguson was secretly undercutting the Book of Mormon. In fact, just two months before his death he was working on a project which he felt would show that the Book of Mormon was in reality a 19th century production. The evidence concerning this matter will appear in a forthcoming publication.

One of the authors of this newsletter (Jerald) tried to discuss these problems with Larry Ferguson on KTALK Radio on April 17, 1988. Mr. Ferguson would not admit that his father had lost faith in the Book of Mormon, and when he was presented with evidence, he responded: “If you want to kick my dead father, go ahead.” He maintained that in “February of ‘83” his father “kind of pulled me aside . . . [and] bore his testimony of the Book of Mormon to me.” He also referred to a statement which he said his father had prepared in “the latter part of 1982.” It also appears in The Messiah in Ancient America, page 283:

We have studied the Book of Mormon for 50 years. We can tell you that it follows only the New Testament as a written witness to the mission, divinity, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. And it seems to us that there is no message that is needed by man and mankind more than the message of Christ. Millions of people have come to accept Jesus as the Messiah because of reading the Book of Mormon in a quest for truth. The book is the cornerstone of the Mormon Church.

The greatest witness to the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon is the book itself. But many are the external evidences that support it.

The introduction to this statement reads: “In 1982, the year before he died, he included a photo and testimony in several copies of the Books of Mormon that he distributed to non-Mormons” (Ibid.). While we do not know for certain when this statement was first distributed, on August 2, 1983, Thomas Stuart Ferguson’s widow sent a copy of it to Jerry Benson. In a letter which accompanied it, she wrote: “Tom was loyal and faithful to the Church to his death.\)” The wording of the statement which Mr. Benson received is identical to that reproduced in the book. Below the statement, however, we find the names “Tom and Ester Ferguson.” These names are not handwritten but appear to have been typed on the same typewriter used for the statement itself. From this we can conclude that the statement could have been prepared by either Mr. or Mrs. Ferguson or they could have worked on it together. While it has the picture of the Fergusons which was mentioned above, it is undated.

During the radio program mentioned above, Larry Ferguson was asked about the matter. He replied: “Well, he [Thomas Stuart Ferguson] wrote it in his own hand. You can ask my mother if you want to.” H. Michael Marquardt did just that in a letter to Mrs. Ester Ferguson. She did not respond, but asked her son, Thomas A. Ferguson, to handle the matter. On May 19, 1988, he sent Mr. Marquardt a letter in which he stated: “The type of information you seek is of a very personal nature, and in our judgment it would be inappropriate for us to share it with you. We do not know you nor do we know anything about you. Therefore, we respectfully decline.”

We would prefer to believe that Mrs. Ferguson, who may not have known the truth about her husband’s loss of faith, was the one who prepared this testimony. If, however, there is any evidence that it came from her husband and that it was prepared in 1982, it would only show that he was willing to go to far greater lengths than we had supposed in playing his double game. The reader will remember that in the letter dated February 9, 1976, Mr. Ferguson commented: “I never get up and bear testimony . . .”

On the radio program of April 17, 1968, Larry Ferguson declared: “…if you ever knew my father, that’s one thing he was not a hypocrite.” Mr. Ferguson now finds himself on the horns of a dilemma. If he concedes that the testimony he has published did not really come from his father, he will undermine the book he has spent years in preparing. If, on the other hand, he establishes that his father really wrote it, he will certainly have to give up the claim that his father was not “a hypocrite.” The reason for this is that on January 4, 1983, just after Thomas Stuart Ferguson was supposed to have written the statement, he acknowledged that he was, in fact, engaged in a project which he felt would prove that the Book of Mormon was not an ancient document. To accept the information which Larry Ferguson has put forth would force one to conclude that his father was a real chameleon, continually changing colors as he talked with Mormons and non-Mormons.

Whatever the case may be, we cannot help but sympathize with men like Thomas Stuart Ferguson and B. H. Roberts (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 96D-96G) who labored for many years to prove the Book of Mormon true and then found out that their faith was based on erroneous assumptions. It would have been very difficult for these men to have made a public statement repudiating the Book of Mormon. They would have been considered traitors to the church who allowed themselves to come under the power of the Devil. Nevertheless, when we consider the consequences of remaining silent, we cannot help but feel that both these men made a drastic mistake when they failed to stand up for the truth.

EVIDENCE COMPARED

Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt once boasted: “This generation have more than one thousand times the amount of evidence to demonstrate and forever establish the divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon than they have in favor of the Bible!” (Orson Pratt’s Works, “Evidences of the Book of Mormon and Bible Compared,” p. 64).

We feel that this statement is far from the truth. The only support for the existence of the gold plates is the testimony of eleven witnesses, and as we have already shown in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 50-63, there are a number of reasons to doubt their statements. A comparison of the archaeological evidence for the Book of Mormon with the evidence for the Bible clearly shows the weakness of the Mormon position. This, of course, is not to imply that there are no problems connected with biblical archaeology, or that archaeological evidence alone can prove the Bible to be divinely inspired. Frank H. H. Roberts, Jr., of the Smithsonian Institute, commented in a letter written to Marvin Cowan on Jan. 24, 1963: “Archaeological discoveries in the Near East have verified some statements in the Bible referring to certain tribes, places, etc. On the other hand there is no way in which they could verify the narrative parts of the Bible such as the actions, words, deeds, etc. of particular individuals.” In the same letter he continued: “There is no evidence whatever of any migration from Israel to America, and likewise no evidence that pre-Columbian Indians had any knowledge of Christianity or the Bible.”

The noted Mormon apologist Dr. Hugh Nibley frankly admitted that no ancient inscription mentioning the Nephites has ever been found, and that “nothing short of an inscription which could be read and roughly dated would bridge the gap between what might be called a pre-actualistic archaeology and contact with the realities of Nephite civilization” (Since Cumorah, p. 243).
While the Nephites are never mentioned in any ancient inscription, the existence of the Israelites is verified by many inscriptions dating back hundreds of years before the time of Christ. The “earliest archaeological reference to the people of Israel” is a stele of the Egyptian ruler Merneptah, dated about 1220 B.C., which is now in the Egyptian Museum in Cairo. Information concerning this stele is given in The Biblical World (pp. 380-381). The following is a translation of a portion of the stele:

Israel is laid waste, his seed is not;
Hurm (i.e. Syria) is become a widow for Egypt.

The noted Egyptologist John A. Wilson acknowledged that “an Egyptian scribe was conscious of a people known as Israel somewhere in Palestine or Transjordan” (The Culture of Ancient Egypt, 1965, p. 255).

Many ancient inscriptions mentioning the Israelites have been found, and some inscriptions even give the names of kings mentioned in the Bible. The New Testament mentions a number of rulers that are known to have lived around the time of Christ. For instance, the Bible tells us that Jesus was crucified under Pontius Pilate. That Pilate was an actual historical person was proved beyond all doubt in 1961 when “an inscription with the name Pontius Pilate was found in the theater excavations” at Caesarea (The Biblical Archaeologist, September 1964, p. 71).

The fact that the Jews were in Palestine at the time the Bible indicates is proven by hundreds of ancient Hebrew inscriptions that have been found on rocks, pieces of pottery and coins. Portions of every book of the Old Testament, except for the book of Esther, have also been found in the collection of manuscripts known as the Dead Sea Scrolls. In addition many inscriptions from other countries verify that the Jews were present in Palestine.

When we turn to the Book of Mormon, however, we are unable to find any evidence at all that the Nephites ever existed. We must agree with the Mormon archaeologist Dee F. Green whom we have already quoted as saying:

The first myth we need to eliminate is that Book of Mormon archaeology exists. . . . Biblical archaeology can be studied because we do know where Jerusalem and Jericho were and are, but we do not know where Zarahemla and Bountiful (nor any other location for the matter) were or are.

A SINKING SHIP

In 1973, Michael Coe, one of the best known authorities on archaeology of the New World, wrote an article for Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. In this article he addressed the issue in a very forthright manner:

Mormon archaeologists over the years have almost unanimously accepted the Book of Mormon as an accurate, historical account of the New World peoples. . . . Let me now state uncategorically that as far as I know there is not one professionally trained archaeologist, who is not a Mormon, who sees any scientific justification for believing the foregoing to be true, and I would like to state that there are quite a few Mormon archaeologists who join this group. . . .

The bare facts of the matter are that nothing, absolutely nothing, has even shown up in any New World excavation which would suggest to a dispassionate observer that the Book of Mormon, as claimed by Joseph Smith, is a historical document relating to the history of early migrants to our hemisphere. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1973, pp. 41, 42 & 46)

Since many Mormons have spread the rumor that the Smithsonian Institution uses the Book of Mormon in its archaeological research, the Institution has found it necessary to publish a statement denying this claim. In the four-page document we read as follows:

1. The Smithsonian Institution has never used the Book of Mormon in any way as a scientific guide. Smithsonian archaeologists see no direct connection between the archeology of the New World and the subject matter of the book. (Statement Regarding the Book of Mormon, Spring 1986, p. 1)

In the 1972 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 102-103, we told about Mr. Ferguson reaching the conclusion that the Book of Mormon was a spurious work. We noted that Mormon leaders gave ‘large appropriations’ to support Thomas Stuart Ferguson’s New World Archaeological Foundation. This organization also failed to find evidence to prove the Book of Mormon, and the man who organized it, hoping that it would prove Mormonism, ended up losing his faith in the Church.” When Moody Press reprinted this statement in our condensed work, The Changing World of Mormonism, Robert and Rosemary Brown tried to cause trouble by writing a note to our publisher stating that this was “NOT SO!” Since some of our readers had received letters from Mr. Ferguson telling of his loss of faith and had given us copies, we were able to easily convince Moody Press that our statement was correct. The Browns simply did not know the full story.

At the present time there is a Mormon scholar by the name of Stan Larson who is “writing a biography of Thomas Stuart Ferguson.” He is very interested in knowing the truth about this embarrassing period in Most of our readers are aware of the fact that for a number of months we have been involved in a disagreement concerning the question of whether the Mormon temple ceremony came from witchcraft and Satanism. The conflict centered around William Schnoebelen, a man who participated in both witchcraft and satanic rites. Mr. Schnoebelen asserted that the Mormon temple ceremony had been taken from these rites. Those who supported Schnoebelen maintained that his works were a reliable guide in helping to determine the truth about the relationship between Mormonism and witchcraft/Satanism. While our research shows that William Schnoebelen actually participated in these evil ceremonies, we concluded that his major documents and evidence did not hold up under critical examination. We felt, in fact, that he had given such a distorted picture of the relationship between witchcraft and Mormonism that we had to take a public stand against his work.

After doing some careful research with regard to the matter, we published our findings in the booklet, The Lucifer-God Doctrine. Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen responded to this publication in a paper entitled The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? On page 4 of their rebuttal, Decker and Schnoebelen state that we are not qualified to deal with the temple ceremony, witchcraft or Masonry because we are “armchair scholars” who are “relatively ignorant of such things.” In response we prepared a new and enlarged edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine. In this publication we presented evidence against the claims William Schnoebelen set forth in the booklet, Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. We demonstrated that modern witchcraft, Satanism and Mormonism have borrowed from Masonry, and therefore parallels which Mr. Schnoebelein pointed out between Mormonism and witchcraft/Satanism only demonstrated that these three groups had borrowed from Masonry.

Although the great majority of people who have contacted us on the issue have shown support for our position, a small but vocal minority felt that we made a great mistake in bringing these matters to the attention of the public. Until just recently there seemed no way to settle this matter. Fortunately, as it turned out, Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen appealed to the Christian Research Institute for help. In a letter to us, dated December 7, 1987, Ed Decker wrote: “I have spoken to Dr. Walter Martin regarding the matter and he has agreed to let Christian Research Institute arbitrate this matter. Fortunately, as it turned out, Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen appealed to the Christian Research Institute for help. In a letter to us, dated December 7, 1987, Ed Decker wrote: “I have spoken to Dr. Walter Martin regarding the matter and he has agreed to let Christian Research Institute arbitrate this matter for Saints Alive. CRI and Dr. Martin have an internationally accepted ministry receives from them will be fully and immediately acted upon, to their satisfaction. I can also assume that whatever correction you might need will be just as quickly given. How you act upon any such correction is your own business. I am not asking for your permission in this matter.” In another letter, Mr. Decker explained that he was not really speaking of arbitration: “The one error I made was to make reference to arbitration which is not what we were talking about. This was more in the form of bringing a brother with you when you couldn’t resolve a difference. (Letter to Wesley P. Walters, dated February 9, 1988)

Since we were not consulted as to how or by whom the issue would be resolved, we could hardly be accused of controlling the outcome of the investigation. This was made very clear in a letter Ed Decker wrote to us on Jan. 28, 1988: “. . . we have the Christian right to bring in a third party, such

---

CRI STATEMENT ENDS WITCHCRAFT DISPUTE

We pray that many will step out in faith and turn their lives over to Jesus that He may reign as King of their hearts. We made the decision to come out of Mormonism and follow the Lord about thirty years ago and have never regretted it for a moment. The peace and joy we have received and the direction we have for our lives surpasses anything that this life has to offer.

---

For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father’s, and of the holy angels.

---

For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father’s, and of the holy angels.
as DR. Martin and CRI . . . Earlier in the letter, I reiterated our decision and need for an reputable organization such as CRI to act as intermediate in this serious matter dealing with our ethics and reputation. . . . We still stand firmly by this decision. . . .” Although we did not believe that Mr. Decker had a right to force us to submit to his own plan regarding a settlement of the dispute, we felt that he did have every right to put his own ministry under CRI’s authority. In any case, we were treated very well by people at CRI. Marian Bodine, for instance, was very kind and helpful to us. When we completed the 1988 enlarged and revised edition of the The Lucifer-God Doctrine, we provided the Christian Research Institute with a copy. This booklet undoubtedly had a great deal to do with the decision which was finally reached.

At the time of the 1988 Capstone Conference we heard that the Christian Research Institute had decided to no longer sell the booklet Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. We felt that this was a step in the right direction. This was soon followed by the release of a three-page statement by Walter Martin printed on the letterhead of the Christian Research Institute. The statement lamented the fact that there had been “needless misunderstandings, corresponding frustrations, and ‘less than charitable’ comments by persons involved in this issue towards those of a different opinion. This is a sad state of affair for the Church at any time, but especially with the Mormon Church watching us. The Scripture clearly demands that we steadfastly avoid sowing such discord among our brethren (Prov. 6:19).”

While the statement was written in a very tactful manner and noted that CRI did “not wish to either explicitly or implicitly impugn the character, motives, sincerity, or integrity of any one individual or the collective ministries that are primarily involved in this disagreement” it did not dodge the real issue. The statement made it very clear that William Schnoebelen’s work on the relationship between witchcraft and the Mormon temple ceremony must be rejected:

The following is an open letter regarding the Saints Alive in Jesus and Utah Lighthouse Ministry’s ongoing dialogue concerning issues stemming from the publication of the booklet, Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. Herein is our position pertaining to some of the views advanced in the booklet.

First, it should be noted that the Christian Research Institute highly values the efforts and contributions that both of the above ministries have made in sharing the Gospel with those trapped in Mormonism . . . We firmly believe that the above organizations are dedicated to sharing the Gospel with those who are lost, particularly Mormons. Thus, we shall not make pronouncements upon anyone’s motives, but only upon the validity of the major claim in question. In short, our only concern is with the overall accuracy of the claims put forth in the formerly mentioned booklet.

Second, we believe that this whole issue has been clouded by a lack of clarity and precision in writings and lectures on this topic. . . . we agree with Mr. Schnoebelen (and Utah Lighthouse Ministry for that matter), that there are similarities and parallels among Mormonism and some forms of modern Witchcraft and Satanism.

However, as Utah Lighthouse Ministry and others have correctly pointed out, what similarities there are stem not from Mormonism borrowing directly from Witchcraft or Satanism, but the commonality that all three have in being heavily influenced by Free Masonry through people who were quite conversant with it, such as Aleister Crowley, Jerald Gardner, Joseph Smith etc.

We understand how and why Mr. Schnoebelen arrived at his conclusion, especially if one grants the key premises to his arguments. We however cannot endorse his premises, nor the overall conclusion as represented in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom. Unfortunately he appears to believe some of the theories put forth by many of those involved with Witchcraft and other types of occultism relating to their alleged longevity. But, these myths have been thoroughly refuted and denied by competent scholars and even many occultists themselves . . .

In conclusion, we pray that all those who have been directly involved in this disagreement will endeavor to keep the bond of Christian unity by the Spirit of God (Eph. 4:3). Finally, let us keep in mind that irrespective of any truth or falsity of the claims espoused in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom, the preponderate weight of Scripture itself is sufficient in and of itself to deem Mormonism a non-Christian cult.

Those who wish to obtain the complete three-page statement can write to Christian Research Institute, PO Box 500, San Juan Capistrano, CA 92693. A donation should be included to cover the cost of handling and mailing.

The CRI statement makes very clear the reason CRI decided to discontinue selling Mr. Schnoebelen’s book. It is summed up in one sentence: “We . . . cannot endorse his premises, nor the overall conclusion as represented in Mormonism’s Temple of Doom.” Fortunately, both Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen have agreed to go along with any decision made by CRI. In The Lucifer-God Doctrine: Shadow or Reality? page 3, they wrote:

Ed spoke to Dr. Walter Martin, Director of Christian Research Institute . . . We fully submitted ourselves and this ministry to them in the matter. We agree to submit to their findings and take whatever action they deem necessary. . . . It is our firm commitment to see this thing dealt with according to Christian principles. We pray that Mr. Tanner will be of the same mind.

We really count the statement by CRI and the agreement by Ed Decker and William Schnoebelen to abide by it as an answer to prayer, and we want to thank all those who joined with us in seeking the Lord about this matter. Although we have really felt the Lord’s help, this whole incident has not been easy on us. We would still appreciate prayer with regard to this matter that there will be complete unity and that tens of thousands of Mormons will come to know the Lord in the near future. We feel, however, that those who have taken an opposite position need a special amount of prayer. They have some very difficult decisions to make, and we should all pray that they will not become discouraged and will deeply seek the Lord at this critical time.

Since this controversy appears to be over, we are now devoting our time to finishing a new book on Mormonism which we have been working on for some time.

In the new edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine, which is four times as large as the first edition, we detail the errors which have greatly distorted the views of a number of Mormon critics. In addition, we answer the various charges that have been leveled against us during the recent disagreement.

Although it is not specifically mentioned in the CRI statement, both Decker’s and Schnoebele’s work on Freemasonry is seriously marred by the inclusion of erroneous material on the subject. Wesley P. Walters has demonstrated that the most important quotation from Albert Pike “depended upon” by both Decker and Schnoebele “to establish the Luciferian nature of Masonry” is a 19th century forgery. (We have printed an article by Pastor Walters concerning this subject in the new edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine entitled, “A Curious Case of Fraud.” This article presents evidence that the notorious Pike lecture containing the statement that “Lucifer is God,” really came from an anti-Masonic hoax “that grew out of the mind of one Gabriel Antoine Jogand-Pages who had a vendetta both against the Masons and the Roman Catholic Church.” This is truly an amazing story regarding “a gigantic hoax” which fooled the public for many years.)

Because we feel that the new edition of The Lucifer-God Doctrine is so important to those working with Mormons, we have decided to extend our special price until October 30, 1988. The regular price of this book will be $4.00, but for those who order before the deadline, the price will be only $3.00 a copy (on mail orders please add minimum shipping and handling charge of $1.00).

LAST CHANCE AT OLD PRICES!

Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

Our most comprehensive and revealing work on Mormonism.

Because of a lack of capital we have been forced to raise the price on our major work on the LDS Church. The price has gone up to $13.95 ($16.95 for hardback). If, however, it is ordered before October 30, 1988, the reader will still receive it for the old price:

SOFT COVER: $11.95

HARD COVER: $14.95

(Mail orders please add 10% mailing charge)

This is your last chance to obtain so much important material on Mormonism at such a reasonable cost.

OTHER BOOKS

New Testament Documents—Are They Reliable? by F. F. Bruce.
A well-researched book by a Greek scholar showing the reliability of the translation of the New Testament. Price: $3.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Know Why You Believe—A Clear Affirmation of the Reasonableness of the Christian Faith, by Paul E. Little. Price: $4.95

Know What You Believe—A Practical Discussion of the Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, by Paul E. Little. Price: $4.95
CHURCH FIGHTS BACK!

MORMON LEADERS VERY UPSET BY CHARGES OF COVER-UP

Three major books have now been written regarding Mark Hofmann’s cunning plan to deceive Mormon leaders and document experts with forged documents and the murders he subsequently committed to cover up the crimes. The first book to appear, written by Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts was entitled, Salamander—The Story of the Mormon Forgery Murders. The second book, The Mormon Murders—A True Story of Greed, Forgery, Deceit and Death, was written by Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith. The last book, A Gathering of Saints—A True Story of Money, Murder and Deceit, was penned by Robert Lindsey.

These books have generated interest in the work of Utah Lighthouse Ministry and have brought enquiries from different parts of the United States. The treatment given our work in the three books has, in fact, caused some controversy. For instance, in a review of the book by Sillitoe and Roberts, Roger D. Launius suggested that one of its “deficiencies” was that it “glossed over” our work on the Salamander letter:

Salamander . . . still leaves many unanswered questions . . . Why was the Mormon historical community so unwilling to accept the facts of the case and only reluctantly acknowledged that Hofmann was a murderer and that his documents were fakes? I suspect it has something to do with an unwillingness to admit that Hofmann had tricked them. . . . Why, also, were those who raised questions about the documents, particularly anti-Mormon Jerold [sic] Tanner when he pointedly challenged the authenticity of the “Salamander Letter” before the bombings, shouted down so vehemently by historians? Why also was Jerold Tanner’s contribution to determining the “Salamander Letter” forgery completely glossed over in this study? (The John Whitmer Historical Association Journal, vol. 8, 1988, p. 82)

While it is probably true that noted Mormon historians like Leonard Arrington, Dean Jessee or Marvin Hill would have received more attention if they had done the same work on the Hofmann documents, Sillitoe and Roberts do mention that we “expressed doubts about the letter’s authenticity” in the Salt Lake City Messenger long before the bombings. They also state that “Hofmann found Tanner’s challenge to the letter a serious one,” confronted “Sandra Tanner” and told her, “You, of all people, should not be attacking this letter.” (Salamander, pp. 287-288).

In spite of the fact that Roger D. Launius feels that Salamander does not devote enough material to certain subjects, he believes that, “All in all, it is an exceptionally capable, intriguing, entertaining, and significant study of one of the most bizarre episodes in Mormon history.” (Ibid., p. 79) We would certainly have to agree that Salamander is an excellent book. Although it is written by Mormon scholars, it is objective in its treatment of the church.
While Sillitoe and Roberts were criticized for not giving enough attention to our work, Naifeh and Smith have been castigated for paying too much attention to it. David J. Whittaker, Curator, Archives of the Mormon Experience at the Brigham Young University Library, wrote the following in “an abridged version of a longer review essay that will appear in BYU Studies”:

The second volume, The Mormon Murders, was released in August 1988. Of the three volume[s] here under consideration, it is clearly the most disappointing. In reading it I was reminded of Peter Bart’s Thy Kingdom Come (1981), a novel which . . . presented a picture of the Mormon Church concerned only with money and power, with nothing else really mattering. Truth was a convenient commodity treasured more by the publisher of an anti-Mormon newsletter than the Church leaders. . . .

Naifeh and Smith manage to work into their narrative most of the traditional anti-Mormon themes . . . But their knowledge of LDS history is woefully inadequate. In fact, it is just awful . . . they see conspiracies everywhere, and like Peter Bart they are sure the Church is behind all of them. Jerald Tanner, like Hiram Cobb of Bart’s novel, is their real hero—he seeks and sees the truth, while the Church just wants to suppress it . . .

If Mormon Murders has any merit, it is the focus it gives to the case by seeing the whole affair through the eyes of Jim Bell and Ken Farnsworth, the investigators for the Salt Lake Police Department. Much of the detail regarding the case no doubt came from these two individuals, as well as from Gerry D’Elia, and that perspective is of value, even though it tends toward cynicism. Thus the volume does have insight into the inner workings of the police investigation . . . There are insights in this volume, but the overt anti-Mormon bias of the authors, combined with their arrogance and ignorance, must be seen as seriously distorting their perspective and judgment.

Although we are certainly pleased that Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith gave a great deal of attention to our work, we have chosen not to handle their book. It does seem to be rather harsh on some people and contains many unnecessary expletives. Also, we would like to see more evidence before jumping to some of the conclusions they arrived at. Nevertheless, we agree with David J. Whittaker, that The Mormon Murders gives some insights which are not found in the other books.

The report concerning our work which is found in this book seems to be generally accurate. There is one matter, however, that should be corrected. On page 144 of The Mormon Murders, the following appears regarding the Salamander letter: “In early March, Jerald and Sandra Tanner blew the story open in their monthly newsletter, the Salt Lake City Messenger. They called the Harris letter, of which they had seen excerpts, ‘one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon’.” This statement would lead the reader to believe that we were endorsing the Salamander letter in our first publication concerning the matter. The facts are as follows: Our public criticism of the Hofmann documents began in March 1984—seventeen months before the bombings—when we demonstrated that there were significant parallels between E. D. Howe’s book, Mormonism Unvailed, and the Salamander letter. We noted that these parallels were strong enough to cause us to question the authenticity of the letter (Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1984, pp. 1, 4). About three years after we wrote that statement, Mark Hofmann confessed that he did, in fact, use the Howe book, Mormonism Unvailed, as the basis for the Salamander letter.

The quotation found in The Mormon Murders is out of context because it omits the first five words of a sentence and conveys a different meaning than we had intended. We did not call the Salamander letter “one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon.” What we did say was as follows:

At the outset we should state that we have some reservations concerning the authenticity of the letter, and at the present time we are not prepared to say that it was actually penned by Martin Harris. The serious implications of this whole matter, however, cry out for discussion. If the letter is authentic, it is one of the greatest evidences against the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. If, on the other hand, it is a forgery, it needs to be exposed as such so that millions of people will not be mislead [sic]. We will give the reasons for our skepticism as we proceed with this article. . . . Although the average person would have a difficult time forging these things [i.e., the handwriting, postal mark and amount of postage paid] there are probably a number of people who could do the job.

Because they apparently did not understand the true message of the March 1984 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger (i.e., that the Salamander letter was a very questionable document), Naifeh and Smith made another error. They assumed that “Jerald Tanner” later changed his position and decided the letter “was probably a fake.” Actually, Jerald did not have a change of position. He was telling people that the Salamander letter was probably a forgery as early as February 1984 and became increasingly adamant in that opinion as time passed. On August 22, 1984, we published The Money-Digging Letters: A Preliminary Report. This pamphlet presented even stronger evidence of plagiarism in the Salamander letter and other evidence against its authenticity. It also made it clear that Utah Lighthouse Ministry was investigating all of Hofmann’s major finds and called upon him to reveal the source of these discoveries. It was, in fact, this publication that caused a confrontation between Sandra and Hofmann at the time of the Sunstone Symposium in August 1984.

The third book concerning the Hofmann affair was authored by Robert Lindsey who was a veteran reporter for the New York Times and also wrote the best-sellers, The Falcon and the Snowman and The Flight of the Falcon. We first became acquainted with Robert Lindsey when he was writing a story concerning Mark Hofmann for the Times. He had been talking to investigators concerning the bombings, and although they could not give him too much information at that time, they suggested that he would find the correct theory of the case printed in the pages of the Salt Lake City Messenger. Consequently, Mr. Lindsay gave us some good publicity in an article he published:

Court documents indicate that some prosecutors... believe Mr. Hofmann's goal was not only to obtain money from the church through the sale of the documents but also to establish enough credibility that he could shape the world's perception of Mormonism.

This view is shared by a man who was the first to suggest that Mr. Hofmann was forging his documents. He is Jerald Tanner, a former Mormon who heads the Utah Lighthouse Ministry, which for decades has been challenging the truth of much of Mormon doctrine.... In an interview, Mr. Tanner said he decided... that the Hofmann documents might be forgeries, even though some of them... supported his own iconoclastic views of Mormonism.

In a newsletter that he publishes with his wife, Sandra, Mr. Tanner began raising questions about their authenticity, in some cases comparing the texts with known Mormon writings.

But if senior Mormon officials were aware of his warnings, they apparently paid little attention. Several of the church's highest officials have acknowledged negotiating to acquire documents from Mr. Hofmann until the day of the first two bombings. (New York Times, February 16, 1986)

Robert Lindsey became very interested in our work and devoted a good deal of space to it in A Gathering of Saints. In this book, which will be the basis for a major motion picture, Mr. Lindsey not only tells of our research on the Hofmann documents but goes on to make a statement which has caused some consternation among Mormon scholars:

Perhaps only Utah in the last half of the twentieth century could have produced someone like Michael Marquardt or Jerald Tanner. ... Tanner was a machinist turned publisher whose historical research, probably more than that of anyone else except Fawn Brodie, had given birth to what was being called "the new Mormon history." (A Gathering of Saints, page 128)

Nothing could be much more offensive to Mormon historians, who are trying to overcome the displeasure of the church hierarchy, than to suggest that we had any role in the so-called New Mormon History (i.e., truthful and open Mormon history). Davis Bitton, who served as Assistant Church Historian under Leonard J. Arrington, felt that the fact that a Mormon scholar had linked us with the New Mormon History was an important factor in Arrington losing his position as Church Historian and the "decline" of the Historical Division:

It did not help that the decade of our existence was a time when Jerald and Sandra Tanner were publishing a variety of works... Those ex-Mormons had begun their publishing activity before the Historian's Division was ever created, and they would continue it long after. But the two activities were going on simultaneously... We did not sympathize with the Tanners. But in a very vague and general way one can imagine how "the troubles of our Church history" could be seen in terms of both fronts. I was dismayed when an honor's thesis produced by a University of Utah student lumped the work of the historians of the History Division... together with the publications of the Tanners. For him, it was all "the New Mormon History." Guilt by association is a devastating thing, as we discovered. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1983, p. 17)

Although David J. Whittaker gave Robert Lindsey very good marks, he felt that he had to respond to what he felt was Lindsey's ignorance concerning "the new Mormon history":

The third volume, A Gathering of Saints, appeared in September 1988. In many ways it is the best of the three volumes. As a story, it reads better than [than?] the other two, and on balance, it presents a more complete account of all the aspects of the case than do the others. Lacking the vituperative approach of The Mormon Murders, it moves deftly through the story with insight and compassion, and it is well organized. ... In general, the volume is much more even-handed in dealing with the role of the LDS Church in the Hofmann story. ...

Of course there are problems: Lindsey has not done his homework on the Danites (p. 204); and no serious Mormon historian would agree with his comments that Jerald Tanner (following Fawn Brodie) gave birth to the "New Mormon history" (p. 128). But these flaws can probably be credited to his status as an outsider to Mormon country and culture.

Although we do not agree with Whittaker's statement that Lindsey "has not done his homework on the Danites," and will leave the reader to decide on the merits of his statement on New Mormon History, we have to agree with most all of his comments concerning A Gathering of Saints. Almost everyone seems to agree that it is an excellent book. In this revealing study of Mark Hofmann's murders and his attempt to blackmail the Mormon Church, Mr. Lindsey deals with such subjects as: the conflicts between Mormon scholars and the church hierarchy with regard to how church history should be handled, the so-called Mormon underground, attempts to cover up evidence in the investigation, conflicts between investigators and church security, and the attempt to suppress embarrassing documents. This book includes revealing extracts from the diaries of Steven Christensen, Kathy Sheets, Ted Cannon and others, plus important new information from a recent interview Hofmann had with one of the investigators.

It is evident that the Mormon hierarchy is very concerned about the Hofmann books, plans for a CBS miniseries and a 20th Century Fox movie concerning the scandal. In the Calendar Section of the Los Angeles Times, Peter H. Brown wrote the following:
The Apostles of the Mormon Church... are casting wary eyes toward Hollywood, hoping for the best but fearing the worst from a trio of productions built around the notorious so-called Mormon Murders.

Most sources within the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints interviewed by Calendar acknowledged that their hierarchy is bristling over the very existence of the projects. According to two books on the case, the church hierarchy allegedly tried to dampen the subsequent investigation into church involvement, even to suppress evidence.

Next up is “The Mormon Murders,” an $8-million, fourhour miniseries. It is set to start filming in Utah the second week in January. It will be based partially upon the Steven Naifeh-Gregory White Smith book.

The Fox film, “A Gathering of Saints,” is based on the Robert Lindsey book. The film may begin shooting in late spring or early summer.

Quite naturally, Mormon authorities have taken a guarded attitude to the film projects. “We are aware of them and are watching very carefully,” said Richard P. Lindsay, director of communications for the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints. “But it sounds like a return to the ‘Mormon bashing’ themes of the 1800s when the church was pilloried for sedition and anarchy.”

Other sources within the Mormon media establishment said the church already has begun a battle against what it believes is the most serious attack against the church since the polygamy controversy at the turn of the century.

The church has embarked on a massive study of the books and news articles in an attempt to assemble a master list of errors, misquotes and exaggerations. “Our response to all the allegations made against the church will be made public in about 60 days,” Lindsay said.

The proposed miniseries has generated special fear and loathing—fear of the global consequences of a billion-viewer audience and loathing for the book that spawned it. Lindsay characterized it as “written with such a venom and such a bias that it is an insult to fair-minded Americans.”

(\textit{Los Angeles Times}, Calendar Section, September 18, 1988)

We have been told by Mormons that the reason the Mormon Church leaders do not respond to our books is because they do not believe it is Christian to debate with their critics. We have always believed, however, that the real reason is that they know our case is very strong and that it would do more harm to the church to discuss the issues than to hold their tongue. That the deathlike silent treatment they have given us has been motivated more by an inability to demonstrate error rather than Christian principles is evident by the fact that they have publicly attacked the Naifeh-Smith book. The Mormon Church’s newspaper, \textit{Deseret News}, October 16, 1988, denounced the book in no uncertain terms:

\textit{Mormon Murders} contains “scurrilous descriptions, accusations and willful misrepresentations of the actions and motives of leaders of the LDS Church,” says an LDS Church spokesman.

The malignant meanness of the book is compounded because of its frequent misstatements, attributed to unidentified sources.

Officials of the LDS Church seldom respond publicly to criticism or its leaders. But [Richard P.] Lindsay calls the attack by \textit{Mormon Murders} a return to the Mormon-bashing days.

While we certainly do not consider ourselves apologists for \textit{The Mormon Murders}, we feel that the Mormon Church hierarchy must accept some of the blame for the tone of the book. The fact that church leaders alienated a number of the investigators who worked on the Hofmann case with their secrecy and lack of cooperation must have made a very negative impression on the authors who interviewed them.

In one of the critical articles which appeared in the \textit{Deseret News}, October 16, 1988, Naifeh and Smith are accused of lying with regard to the church’s cooperation with regard to the investigation:

Book: “The church tried to dampen the investigation into Hofmann and to suppress evidence.”

Lindsay: “The church cooperated fully with federal, state and local law enforcement officials, responding to every inquiry and request. All 48 documents acquired from Hofmann were made available to law enforcement officials.”

Unfortunately for the church, the evidence clearly shows that some church leaders were very uncooperative with investigators and seemed to be far more interested in protecting the image of the church. Although they may differ on some details, all three of the books (written by five different authors) agree that this was the case. Since the authors of these three books worked independently of one another and interviewed the same investigators, one is forced to the conclusion that this was the opinion of those who investigated the case. Naifeh and Smith wrote:

Ward’s first action was to help arrange to have a key piece of evidence shipped out of state. By the time the police department knew enough to ask the Church for the so-called Salamander Letter, it was already gone—off to the FBI’s laboratories in Washington, D. C., for a long and very confidential analysis. When the county attorney’s office requested other Hofmann documents, the Church refused to hand them over. Why would they push one sensitive document into the FBI’s hands almost immediately after the bombing and fight to keep other documents out of police hands for weeks? Church spokesmen said they didn’t trust local law enforcement.

But they could trust the heavily Mormon FBI, which worked hand-in-glove with Brent Ward. (\textit{The Mormon Murders}, pp. 295-296)

The real purpose of the meeting [about the documents] was made clear. The Church wanted to know what Throckmorton and Flynn intended to do to their prized possessions. As they pointed out repeatedly, this was an unprecedented situation. They were being asked to open the Church vault to outsiders, to people beyond their... bureaucratic control, to a non-Mormon, no less. Not that they trusted Throckmorton any better. . . .

The Church’s dilemma was clear. As later described by a Mormon in the county attorney’s office, “It was damaging enough to think that the documents were genuine and that the first leader of the Church might have been nothing more than a con man who duped the faithful.
But it would be even more damaging if the documents turned out to be forgeries, and the current leaders of the Church had been duped by a con man.”

Caught between a rock and a hard place, the Church reached for its favorite defense: secrecy. They agreed to let Throckmorton and Flynn look at the documents, but they were determined that absolutely no one else should see them.

That meant that under no circumstances could the two examiners make photocopies, or copy down the contents of the documents.

It meant the documents could not leave the Church premises. Throckmorton and Flynn would be given a conference room in the historical library. The locks would be changed, and they would be given the only two keys.

It meant that they would have to enter and leave the room together. Neither one would be allowed to stay in the room alone.

It meant that the documents would be brought to them every morning in a locked briefcase and returned every night to The Vault, where the briefcase would be handcuffed to a pipe so that it could not be opened again until the next day.

The Church lawyer who was doing most of the talking repeated again and again: “We don’t want these divulged.
We don’t want the writing disseminated.” . . . “I have to protect Hinckley,” he kept saying. “I have to protect the Church.” (Ibid., pp. 340-341)

While the statement about U. S. Attorney Brent Ward turning the Salamander letter over to the FBI to keep it out of the hands of local investigators seems to be incorrect (the Deseret News, October 22, 1985, reported that Salt Lake City Police Chief E. L. (Bud) Willoughby joined with Ward in asking “the FBI to conduct the tests” and a Salt Lake City detective has confirmed to us that local authorities wanted the FBI to test the letter), it is clear from the other books that the church did not want to make the other documents available to document examiners. In Robert Lindsey’s book we find the following:

When [Salt Lake County Attorney] Ted Cannon pressed the church to let his investigators look at the originals of those that were still in Salt Lake City, a lawyer for the church said that would be impossible, because some of the documents were extremely confidential and the church did not want to risk having them made public.

Cannon said that if the church declined to provide the documents voluntarily, he would subpoena them—and indeed, he subsequently did so. But, to head off a court fight over the subpoena, Cannon surrendered to a demand by the church’s lawyers to keep the substance of the documents a secret.

“The content and meaning and interpretations to be placed upon what is iterated within the documents,” Cannon wrote to Wilford Kirton, the church’s lawyer, “is either immaterial or of secondary concern as far as this investigation is concerned. . . . every reasonable measure will be employed to secure not only the documents themselves, but the contents thereof, from scrutiny or discussion by anyone outside the authorized investigative team. In no case will any member of the investigative team be permitted to discuss, describe or characterize the contents of the said documents, or any of them, to media or indeed any interested party whatsoever, . . .”

Cannon agreed to let church officials maintain a sign-in/sign-out log identifying everyone who examined the documents and agreed with the church’s demands that members of his staff would have to turn over to the church all notes, photocopies, photographs and negatives made during examination of the documents. Cannon ended his letter with an expression of thanks for the church’s cooperation, a clause that brought snickers from many of those in the War Room [i.e., the room where investigators met to discuss strategy in the Hofmann investigation] . . .
George Throckmorton wanted a sample of Harris’s writing that had never been handled by Hofmann . . .

After being issued a subpoena, the church had released to Throckmorton and Flynn what it said were all of the documents it had acquired from Hofmann since 1980, including some that it had previously kept secret.

When the First Presidency’s Vault yielded the letter presented to Gordon Hinckley by Hofmann in which Thomas Bullock accused Brigham Young of having tried to destroy the Blessing of Joseph Smith III, it caught those in the War Room by surprise.

“What else are they hiding?” Michael George demanded. “None of the church historians I’ve talked to—Don Schmidt, Leonard Arrington, Dean Jessee—even knew this existed. They’ve never heard of it. What else do they have? Who knows what’s in the First Presidency’s Vault?” (A Gathering of Saints, pp. 268, 269, 273, 274)

That the LDS Church would fight to keep its secret historical documents from coming to light is not news to readers of the Salt Lake City Messenger. In the issue for November 1983 we reported that after a Mormon scholar filed a suit against us to prevent us from printing extracts from the diaries of Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton, we subpoenaed the President of the Mormon Church and/or his representative to appear with the original Clayton diaries to give testimony on our behalf. On July 22, 1983, attorneys for the Corporation of the President of the Church filed a motion which asked that our subpoena “be quashed.”
On September 6 a hearing was held before Judge A. Sherman
Christensen. The Church’s attorney, Wilford W. Kirton, vigorously opposed the subpoena. He argued:

Now, this is a matter of some serious moment as far as we are concerned . . . suddenly we find ourselves being subpoenaed and come in to court and make public certain writings, which up to the present time remain unpublished.
. . . I represent an organization that is very concerned about parties attempting to frame issues through which its own private materials may be discoverable. It has no desire to submit to the scrutiny of the parties.
Although we won the suit in a higher court, the Mormon Judge who originally ruled against us also denied our request to examine the original documents. In the case where the County Attorney’s Office was seeking documents from the church, it seems rather obvious that they would have eventually obtained the documents. While it is doubtful that church leaders would have actually dared to risk the bad publicity of fighting the County Attorney’s Office in court over the documents, if they contested the subpoena, it would have caused a delay in the investigation. Since the County Attorney’s Office felt that Mark Hofmann was a vicious murderer who might kill again or escape, it apparently felt pressured into striking a special deal with the church. This whole matter seems deplorable. If we had had a number of Hofmann documents which investigators wished to see, we doubt very much they would make a secrecy agreement with us and come to a special room on our premises to examine the documents.

Mormon writers Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts also confirmed the fact that the church was uncooperative with regard to the documents:

George Throckmorton worked feverishly to discover whether forgery was a glue that could hold the case together. First, he needed the documents that Hofmann had sold to the LDS church and to other collectors. He would begin with photographs, then move to the originals, he told Dean Jessee. Jessee shook his head. The investigation was unpopular among historians. “Leonard won’t let you have them,” he guessed.

Throckmorton telephoned Leonard Arrington [formerly Church Historian] . . . He knew Arrington had been widely quoted in the press stating that at least five of the Mormon documents Hofmann had discovered were definitely authentic. . . . Throckmorton introduced himself and told Arrington he needed photographs of the Hofmann documents. Arrington said he could offer no help, except to suggest that Throckmorton pursue some other line of inquiry. “You’re on the wrong track,” he advised, as he ended the conversation.

Throckmorton next tried to get the photographs from employees in the church’s archives at the Church Office Building. For a time, prosecutors and investigators had taken their questions directly to the archives staff, but a memo had instructed employees that any contact with investigators or the press should be cleared through church attorneys. Legally, the prosecutors could not fault the procedure, but, practically, the added red tape slowed the investigation.

A number of meetings took place in December between church and CAO [County Attorney’s Office] representatives to discuss the examination of certain documents in the church’s possession. Church attorney Wilford Kirton was leery of allowing investigators access to the papers. “We cannot divulge the content of these documents,” he insisted during one meeting. “It’s my responsibility to protect these documents and President Hinckley.” . . . Finally, Ted Cannon, who had spoken with church attorneys frequently, called Kirton and told him in no uncertain terms that, one way or another, the investigators had to examine church documents. . . .

“Slap them with a subpoena,” D’Elia suggested repeatedly when the bombings team met. . . .

Finally, all parties agreed to meet . . . on December 5, including Apostle Oaks. . . . Stott explained that they needed the originals of the documents Dean Jessee said came from Hofmann. . . .

After some discussion, Oaks agreed. “We need to cooperate,” he said. “We need to be entirely open in this matter, because the church has nothing to hide. We need a subpoena for these documents. Then History will show that the church cooperated.” . . . Oaks and Kirton presented a paper for Throckmorton to sign, stating that his notes, test results, and photographs would be returned to the church. Afterwards, however, Throckmorton told Stott he would not agree to sign anything like that and the subject was dropped. Oaks, his legal experience showing, valued documentation. He requested a letter from the CAO stating that the church had cooperated fully with the investigators. (Salamander, pp. 119-120)

Since Linda Sillitoe, who coauthored Salamander with Allen Roberts, covered the Hofmann story for the church’s Deseret News before she resigned to write the book, it is obvious that the fact that the church fought to keep the documents out of the hands of the investigators is not the invention of vicious anti-Mormon writers.

On pages 301-303 of the book, The Mormon Murders, we find these accusations:

The day after the third bombing, The Word came down from the offices of the First Presidency.

It was quick, but not quick enough . . . before the edict filtered down . . . Detective John Foster. . . . visited Martell Bird [the head of LDS Church Security] . . . He was following up on Hofmann’s statement . . . that he was being tailed by Church Security . . .

Bird denied the story adamantly. . . . When Foster brought him a list of all the owners of trucks resembling Hofmann’s description, Bird pulled out the Church employee records and cross-checked them with Foster’s list. . . . The lead turned out to be a dry hole, but Foster was impressed with Bird’s cooperativeness.

Like the way he offered the information about President Hinckley’s meeting with Mark Hofmann . . . less than two weeks before the bombings. . . . He considered the meeting “insignificant.”

Foster didn’t. . . . He found it strange that a man who supposedly had no involvement with the Church would be visiting its President at seven in the morning . . .

“I was curious about it myself,” Bird admitted when Foster pressed him. “So I went and asked President Hinckley about it. President Hinckley told me it was a guy named Mark Hofmann. ‘He came to tell me about some people who had transcripts of the conference agenda,’ he said.” . . . they are supposed to remain secret until officially released.

Bird continued: “Hofmann was here to tell President Hinckley that somebody had copies of the transcripts and was about to let them out.” Bird said he had checked the Church Administration Building log and that Mark Hofmann had indeed paid a visit to President Hinckley at the unusually early hour of seven.
When Foster told him about it, Ken Farnsworth was astonished that nobody had bothered to inform the police about the meeting—a meeting that might be crucial to understanding the pressures on Hofmann prior to the bombings.

The next day, The Word came down. Foster found that out when he officially requested copies of the Church Administration Building log. “I’d like to get a copy of that sign-in sheet,” he said, “to show that Mark was there on that day.”

Martell Bird called back a few minutes later. “It wasn’t that day. I was mistaken about the day.” He said it was the latter part of September. He offered to provide a photocopy of the sign-in sheet for the right day.

But when Foster went to pick up the photocopy, every entry except the one relating to Hofmann had been whited out. The day-timer had been copied, then expurgated, then copied again, giving the police no way to determine if relevant entries had been whited out along with irrelevant ones.

When he asked for a photocopy of the sheet for October 4, the date originally mentioned, Bird refused. His attitude had completely changed. Instead of eager and cooperative, he had become cool, suspicious, and recalcitrant. Foster recognized the signs. “Somebody’s told him to shut up, or told him that he shouldn’t have ever said anything about it in the first place.”

Although we do not remember reading about this incident in the other books, an investigator has confirmed to us that there was a question with regard to a meeting between President Gordon B. Hinckley and Mark Hofmann which took place sometime between seven and eight o’clock in the morning. He also revealed that the church was requested to provide a photocopy of another page from the Church Administration Building log. The photocopy which was provided contained Mark Hofmann’s name, but the names of other people who were in the building on that day had been deleted! That the Mormon Church would find it necessary to hide such information from the police is certainly strange. We would expect that type of reaction from the CIA or the FBI, but to have a church which proclaims that it operates “in full light” with “no secrecy about its doctrine, aim, or purpose” behave in such a manner makes one rather curious as to what is really going on. It seems even more unusual that there was no attempt to force the Church leaders to produce the original log. While there may not have been anything else of importance in the log, the fact that material was deleted would make one wonder if Hofmann met with Hinckley more than once in one day or if other important figures in the case were in Hinckley’s office that day. The entire log book should have been subpoenaed and thoroughly examined for all meetings between Hinckley and Hofmann as well as others who were in any way associated with Hofmann’s document deals. We seriously doubt that other people in Salt Lake City would have received the preferential treatment which the LDS leaders received in the Hofmann investigation.

While we have no reason to believe that the Mormon leaders had any prior knowledge concerning the bombings, they found themselves in a very unusual predicament. They were at that very time deeply involved in a very secret operation with Mark Hofmann. Hofmann had convinced them that there was a collection of documents known as the “McLellin collection” which was supposed to contain documents about Joseph Smith and early Mormonism that would prove very embarrassing to the church if their contents were revealed to the public. In reality, of course, there was no such collection. Nevertheless, the Mormon leaders were taken in by Hofmann’s story and felt that he was helping them keep this collection out of the hands of the enemies of the church. Hofmann was to sell this collection to a Mormon mission president by the name of David E. Sorenson for $185,000. Sorenson was to hold the collection for some time and then secretly donate it to the church. While Mormon officials knew that they were engaging in a clandestine operation with the express purpose of covering up Mormon history, there seems to have been nothing illegal about the matter.

Unfortunately for the church, however, the McLellin collection turned out to be the key investigators needed to solve the murders. Because Hofmann had no real collection to turn over at the appointed day, he felt it was necessary to plant the bomb that killed Steven Christensen, the man who was to validate the collection. This, of course, would give him an excuse to delay the meeting so that he would not have to produce the collection on that day.

It seems, therefore, that the Mormon leaders and the investigators were on a collision course from the day of the bombings. Church officials felt that in order to prevent embarrassment to the church they had to remain as quiet as possible about the McLellin collection and the role Hofmann, Christensen and Sorenson were playing in its suppression. The investigators, on the other hand, needed this very information to solve the murder case. Although the Mormon leaders’ main concern seems to have been to protect the church, they ended up obstructing the investigation, wasting the valuable time of investigators and, consequently, delaying the arrest of the murderer.

At the time the police began their investigation, the Mormon prophet Spencer W. Kimball was very old and near death and Gordon B. Hinckley seems to have been the acting president of the church. According to Naifeh and Smith, when investigators interviewed Hinckley, they did not feel that he told the truth:

On December 9, Farnsworth interviewed Gordon B. Hinckley. . . .

Duffy Diamond, the sergeant of Homicide . . . picked Ken Farnsworth for the job. He was, to all appearances, a good Mormon . . . The county attorney’s office sent Mike George . . . Hinckley had invited the Church’s lawyer, Wilford Kirton, to join them. . . .

Not surprisingly, the interview produced no revelations. Hinckley’s memory had not improved one jot since the press conference in October. If anything, the controversy had driven details right out of his head. So many truly important things to worry about . . .
Hinckley went on to review his contacts with Hofmann, from the Anthon Transcript to the Kinderhook plates. And, oh, yes, there was something called the McLellin Collection, but he had told Hofmann to take care of Al Rust before he would talk about it. That was the last he could remember hearing about it.

And what about Steve Christensen?

After the press conference at which Hinckley had said he hardly knew Christensen, the police and prosecutors had been flooded with calls from Steve’s friends—good, upstanding members of the Church, even a bishop—who said that wasn’t true. They were confused and angry. Someone like Hofmann might have exaggerated his relationship with Hinckley, but not Christensen.

Hinckley sighed, clearly signaling his exasperation with answering the same questions again and again. He had met with Steve Christensen one time only, on April 12, 1985, when Mr. Christensen donated the Martin Harris letter to the Church. In other words, for the third time, “I don’t know him.”

When they came out of the building, one of the investigators said under his breath, “Why that lying [expletive deleted].” Without blinking, Farnsworth and the FBI man nodded their heads in agreement. George was startled. He was the non-Mormon.

The account of this interview given by the Mormon writers Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts does not mention “the FBI man” as being present. Detective Farnsworth, likewise, says that no one from the FBI was present during that particular interview. Nevertheless, Sillitoe and Roberts confirm that the investigators did not believe that Hinckley was leveling with them and were very upset about the matter:

“Can you describe to us your contacts with Steven Christensen?”

“The only time Christensen was in my office was on April 12, 1985, when he donated the Martin Harris letter.”

Despite the note of finality in Hinckley’s voice, the investigators continued to press for more information about Christensen. . . . They tried another tack. “When did you hear that the McLellin collection was controversial?”

“I’m not aware that it was controversial. I don’t remember hearing that.

“Do you have journals or a daytimer that might refresh your memory on some of these points that are so important to the investigation?”

“No, I don’t have anything that would help you. . . . The journal question was only one dead end in the interview. Afterwards, Mike George left Hinckley’s office unexpectedly angry. When he interviewed a bandit he expected lies, not when he interviewed a respected citizen and church leader. He soon realized, however, that his anger was simple—his fellow investigators, born and raised Mormons, were furious. . . .

Later that month George interviewed several of Christensen’s business associates . . . As he questioned, he heard Hinckley’s name mentioned frequently. One man said that Christensen had been pulled from a meeting by a call from Hinckley. A week later, another call to an associate’s office had come from Hinckley’s secretary before Christensen arrived. When Christensen came in, he returned the call, then left immediately. That incident had occurred within a week of the bombings. (Salamander, pp. 128-130)

On pages 90-91 of the same book, Sillitoe and Roberts commented concerning the church’s press conference:

Most disturbed by the press conference were some of Steven Christensen’s close friends and family members. Hinckley’s and Oaks’s statements indicated that both had far more contact with Hofmann—an accused murderer—than with Christensen, his alleged victim. Those near to Christensen that autumn knew that he had rearranged his last months and weeks around the McLellin deal when calls and meetings with church leaders had been frequent. Good Mormons all, Christensen’s mourners tried to believe that the church leaders’ statements held literally to the truth. . . . the overall impression, they felt, misled the public about Christensen’s activity and intent in the months before he died. If there was some reason for this disassociation, why didn’t an explanation—even a private one—come with it?

Investigators also gave Robert Lindsey the impression that Hinckley and other church leaders did not cooperate with their probe of the Hofmann affair:

Although the church informed the press it was cooperating with the investigation, many of the investigators and prosecutors working on the case told a different story when they returned to their offices each night.

When detectives arrived for an interview, church leaders often opened the meeting by inquiring if they were members of the church or, as they were leaving, handed them a hymnal or other publication. Senior church officials refused to meet with the homicide investigators several times unless an FBI agent who was a returned Mormon missionary was present, . . . Saying it was inappropriate for leaders of a religion to disclose such information to civil authorities, several General Authorities declined to provide their diaries to the detectives who wanted to establish when and how frequently Hofmann visited the Church Administration Building.

Early in the investigation, friends of Mark Hofmann and Steven Christensen repeatedly told the detectives that they had been present when Hofmann and Christensen received telephone calls from Gordon Hinckley. Toll records showed Hofmann placed several calls to Hinckley’s office from his car telephone during the week before the bombings, including two calls on the Monday immediately before the explosions. But Hinckley spoke of Hofmann as if he barely recognized his name. Repeatedly when he was asked about the document dealer, Hinckley answered: “I can’t remember.” He said he couldn’t remember what Hofmann had told him about the McLellin Collection, but said he was certain Hofmann had never mentioned that it contained any material that would be embarrassing to the church. . . .
Hinckley and Hugh Pinnock denied Steve Christensen’s claim made to several of his friends shortly before his death that he had been asked to acquire documents for the church. Hinckley said he had met Christensen only once and had only the vaguest recollection of him. . . . He was visibly uncomfortable with the process he was being forced to undergo. He was not accustomed to having to answer questions, nor was he accustomed to being involved in a murder investigation. Clearly, he did not like the prospect of a subpoena to testify in court. (A Gathering of Saints, pp. 266-267)

To most members of the prosecution team, it was plain that Mark Hofmann had blackmailed the church. It was equally clear that leaders of the church were terrified that Gordon B. Hinckley would be required to testify against him and would be forced to testify, under oath, about his dealings with Hofmann.

From the first weeks of the investigation, lawyers for the church sought to head off this possibility. . . .

Gordon Hinckley was not summoned as a witness [at the preliminary hearing] after all.

Judge Grant, a devout Mormon, later attributed his absence to the trial attorneys’ concern for Hinckley’s health. But church spokesmen said Hinckley was not ill, and in fact the reasons were more complex than that. Ron Yengich, Hofmann’s lawyer, was no more eager to have the leader of the church that dominated the community raise the specter of his having been blackmailed by his client than the church wanted a man close to its Prophet to appear to have been blackmailed. (Ibid., pp. 311, 318)

Hugh Pinnock, a member of the Mormon Church hierarchy, was deeply involved in the McLellin transaction. He helped Mark Hofmann obtain a very large loan so that the imaginary McLellin collection could be purchased and kept out of the hands of church critics. Mark Hofmann defaulted on the loan, and Hugh Pinnock maintained that he had to pay it off out of his own pocket. Steven Christensen recorded the following in his journal:

Upon reaching Elder Pinnock’s office we were welcomed most graciously. It was remarkable to both Mark and myself that Elder Pinnock was willing to assist to his fullest extent possible with only a brief explanation. It was as though he sensed completely the potential damage which this material would cause in the hands of the enemies of the Church. Within minutes he was able to arrange for Mark to receive $185,000 in the form of a cashier’s check. The check followed a signature promissory note executed by Mark in the favor of First Interstate Bank. (Steven Christensen's Journal, as cited by Robert Lindsey in A Gathering of Saints, p. 175)

Steven Christensen also wrote the following concerning Pinnock’s intense desire to see the collection obtained and salted away:

Elder Pinnock left with Mark four phone numbers with which to reach him. The extent of his helpful precautions included his having ready $185,000 in cash should the owner try to break the deal since a cashier’s check may not be deemed “legal tender” on a Sunday without the ability to convert it to cash. He also offered to make available a prop-jet; and/or an armored car for the transportation of the documents; however, Mark dissuaded him. (Ibid., p. 176)

Mr. Christensen also explained in his diary that the documents would be donated to the church and “that the Church’s representatives could say that they were never purchased.” Since it would probably never dawn on anyone to ask if they had been donated, the church could keep its possession of the McLellin collection secret, and although Christensen noted that such a plan was not exactly forthright, “it perhaps saves the Church for the time being from having to offer an explanation on why they won’t release the material and/or be under the necessity of mounting a public relations move to counter the contents of the collection” (Ibid., p. 174).

As the investigation into the bombings got under way, a number of people who knew about the McLellin collection became concerned that the truth might come out. Shannon Flynn, for instance, broke his appointment with Detective Don Bell so that he could rush down to the Church Administration Building to find out how much he should tell police. Sillitoe and Roberts claim that later Detective Bell received a call from someone in LDS church security:

“I understand you’re looking for Shannon Flynn. He’s over here.”

“He had an appointment here at 10:30,” Bell said, wondering why church security was involved. . . . “We can do this the easy way or the hard way. If it’s more important for Shannon Flynn to go to the church than to keep an appointment with police, we’ll do it the hard way.” . . .

Now Don Bell walked down to his office to see Shannon Flynn, who apologized for missing the morning appointment. “I had to go to the church first.”

“Why?”

“To find out what to tell you.”

“What if they told you to tell me nothing.”

“Then I wouldn’t be here talking to you.”

“So obviously they didn’t tell you that.”

“No, they said to come over and tell you the truth. I just didn’t know if they wanted me to tell you all the truth.” (Salamander, pp. 57, 61-62)

On page 201 of his book, A Gathering of Saints, Robert Lindsey informs us that the day before Flynn met with Apostle Oaks, police had already learned about the loan for the McLellin collection:

On the afternoon of October 16, 1985, a senior executive of the First Interstate Bank in Salt Lake City received a telephone call from a General Authority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

“Mark Hofmann just got blown up,” the church leader said. “Don’t say anything to anybody about the $185,000 loan to Hofmann.”

Only moments before, a security man at the bank had hung up his telephone after speaking to the Salt Lake City police chief.

“It’s too late,” the bank executive said. “We just called Bud Willoughby and told him we had a $185,000 note outstanding with Hofmann for the McLellin Collection.”
Sillitoe and Roberts report that when detectives arrived to talk with bank officials there was an attempt to suppress Hugh Pinnock's name:

Inside, they were introduced to several banking officials and their attorneys, who were engaged in a hot debate about whether or not they should give detectives the information that prompted their call. . . . Harvey Tanner, head loan officer, acted as spokesman.

Tanner told the detectives, who by then were as baffled as interested, that on June 28, 1985, he had received a telephone call from an important man in the LDS church. He said he was sending over Steven Christensen and his friend Mark Hofmann to get a loan for $185,000, which, Tanner said, the church was authorizing.

Only the detectives' pens edged the silence. “Is that all it takes?” Bell asked. . . .

“Well,” Tanner said, “this had been done in the past and we knew everything was okay.”

Silence fell and heads turned toward a small man wearing bifocals in the back of the room. . . . The man said nothing, and the heads turned toward Tanner again.

Tanner described how Hofmann had filled out the loan application while Christensen observed.

A little odd, Bell thought. “Were you concerned about that?”

“No, because I'd had a call from this man at the LDS church.”

“What's his name?”

“I can't tell you right now.”. . .

Bell. . . looked at Tanner. “This is all you require for a $185,000 loan?”

Heads turned toward the man in back again, and this time he spoke. “No, it is not proper and that's not all it takes to get $185,000.”. . .

Bell looked Tanner squarely in the eye and pressed, “I need to know who the person is at the LDS church. This is a murder case and we need the facts.”

Another debate raged among bank officers and attorneys as to whether that information could be supplied. Finally, the man in back spoke again. “Stop it. Tell him the man’s name.”

In the silence, Harvey Tanner said, “Hugh Pinnock.”. . .

Tanner said when he had called Pinnock he had been reassured that Hofmann was good for the money, the church was behind it, not to worry. “You see,” Tanner added, “we had done business with Pinnock before, obtaining money for the church without the church being involved.” (Salamander, pp. 41-43)

Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith charge that “the day after the bombings” Hugh Pinnock came to Steve Christensen’s house and told his widow, Terri, that he had come to ‘collect’ Steve’s confidential papers on the McLellin Collection. After all, the transaction was a ‘private matter,’ and therefore all materials relating to it should be kept under ‘Church control’” (The Mormon Murders, p. 246). In the Deseret News, October 16, 1988, Christensen’s widow maintained that “This is not true. Pinnock came to offer condolences. . . . Pinnock didn’t come to get the paper. He didn’t know about it. They made that up.” Nevertheless, she acknowledged that she did, in fact, give “him a journal entry of Steve’s regarding the McLellin Collection.” A detective we talked to was rather surprised that Christensen’s widow denied that Hugh Pinnock came to learn about the journal entry. The detective felt that while Pinnock undoubtedly did offer “condolences,” he also wanted to learn what Christensen had written about the McLellin collection. The detective claimed that Terri informed Pinnock that the important entry from her husband’s journal (June 28, 1985) was already out of her control because she had given photocopies to acquaintances. Pinnock left with a photocopy of the entry and Terri turned the journal over to the police.

In any case, Naifeh and Smith go on to make some serious charges against Pinnock:

Don Bell, a sixteen-year veteran of the Salt Lake City Police Department, was already in a bad mood. When it was decided that Pinnock had to be interviewed, one of the Mormon officers in the department had suggested that it be done with kid gloves. “These people are different,” he said. “We have to treat them differently.”. . . Then he called Pinnock’s secretary.

“I’m sorry. Elder Pinnock’s in the Temple.”

“How long will he be there?”

“I don’t know. Who is calling?”

“This is who is calling. I need to talk to him.” The suggestion that Pinnock be given deferential treatment had riled him.

“Is there anything we can do for you?”

“No, there isn’t. I need to talk to him.”

Five minutes later, Bell’s phone rang. But it wasn’t Pinnock, it was Martell Bird, the head of Church Security. “Why don’t you give me the message for Elder Pinnock,” he suggested. . . . “Because I don’t want to give you the message. It has nothing to do with you. I want to talk to him. I can fit it around his schedule, if necessary.” Clearly, this guy needed a shove. “Maybe the easiest thing to do is to get an investigative subpoena and have it served.”

He could hear Bird jump on the other end of the line. “Hold on! We don’t need to do that.”

Twenty minutes later, Pinnock called. “I have the whole afternoon free.”. . .

Bell already knew from an interview at the First Interstate Bank that Pinnock had arranged a loan for Mark Hofmann. Now Pinnock claimed he didn’t know Hofmann. Bell choked back his astonishment and tried again. “Do you know anything about the McLellin Collection and this man who was trying to sell it?”

“Well, wait a minute,” said Pinnock, apparently catching the look on Bell’s face. “I think I do.”. . .

“The McLellin Collection?” Pinnock fumbled with the pronunciation and mused another moment. “I think I remember something about that. There was a guy who came here. Now, I know nothing about him myself, but I remember that some guy came in and said something about a collection. And I remember having to get up and walk down the hall and go into Elder Oaks’s office. And I asked Elder Oaks, ‘Are we interested in a ‘McLellin Collection’ or some kind of collection?’ And he said, ‘No. We’re not buying anything. If the guy wants to donate something, that’s fine.’ And I back and told the guy, ‘If you want to donate something that’s fine.’

Bell could hardly contain himself. Lies, especially when they came in great clumps like this, could be very entertaining. “You know,” he said, “we have some information that Mr. Hofmann met with President Hinckley.”

Pinnock leaned back in his chair, . . . “You have to understand something . . . People come into this building all the time . . . And they say, ‘We’ve been down there visiting the First Presidency . . . Or, ‘We’ve been visiting President Hinckley.’ . . . Nine times out of ten, they’ve just seen somebody low down on the totempole like me.” . . .

“I’m afraid that’s about it,” Pinnock concluded. “I wish I could give you more help. But I’m sure President Hinckley has never met this man. . . .”

Bell pursued the subject of Steve Christensen. Pinnock said that Steve had been involved in arranging a donation of “some documents” to the Church just before his death. The donor was a private collector in Canada, and Steve was supposed to authenticate the documents.

“What kind of documents?” Bell pressed.

“Oh, some letters from Joseph Smith, something like that . . . The documents were supposed to have been donated the day Steve was killed.”

Bell knew backtracking when he heard it. Pinnock had apparently figured out that Bell was likely to uncover something about the transaction. Then he backtracked on Mark Hofmann.

“You know, that Mark Hofmann you mentioned? I think I now remember that on the 15th, his wife called my secretary and left a message saying he wanted to see me that afternoon to talk about some document collection. But we never had the appointment. There was no need to. After all, the Church wasn’t interested in any collections.”

He was weaving an increasingly tangled web.

On his way to his car, Bell didn’t doubt for a moment that he had been lied to. He only wanted to know why. Back at the department, he told a group of fellow officers about his conversation with Pinnock and other Church officials. “We’ve got some real problems,” he said. “They’re obviously stonewalling us. They’re lying to us. I don’t know what it is, but they’re hiding something.” (The Mormon Murders, pp. 247-250)

When we talked with Detective Don Bell on the telephone on January 5, 1989, he said he had not read The Mormon Murders, but he confirmed that Hugh Pinnock had given him a bunch of “baloney” during the interview.

The account of this interview given by Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts in Salamander also indicates that Pinnock was not really leveling with the authorities. Sillitoe and Roberts, in fact, claim that Pinnock would not reveal the name of the mission president who was supposed to buy the McLellin collection:

[Don] Bell arrived at the old granite administration building . . . He asked Pinnock what he knew about Hofmann, but Pinnock wanted to talk about the tragedy of the bombings and how he had known both victims.

“I knew Mark Hofmann through Steve,” he said, eventually coming around to the subject. “At one point I helped him arrange a personal loan he wanted to purchase the McLellin or McCellin—something like that—collection.”

Bell looked hard at him. This scarcely sounded like the church leader described during the bank interview as deeply involved in the McLellin transaction. He said nothing.

“I knew so little about the McLellin or McCellin thing that I had to get up and go see Elder Oaks.” Pinnock smiled cordially. “You’ve heard of Elder Oaks, haven’t you? . . .”

“I asked Elder Oaks if we were interested in this McLellin or whatever. He said, well, he’d heard something about it, but we were not interested, especially not interested in buying it. If someone wished to donate it, that would be fine.

“I called a friend at the bank,” Pinnock continued, “and told him he’d be seeing Steve Christensen and another individual coming over. If everything was in proper order, I said, it would be nice to give this individual a loan. . . .”

Bell put on his sternest face. “You mean to tell me the church was not involved in this transaction.”

“The church was not involved in this transaction,” Pinnock said. Bell noted the answer, then drew an arrow from it to the word “lie.” . . .

Bell wrote furiously, trying to keep up with the words if not the contradictions of Pinnock not knowing Hofmann well or arranging the deal but then offering to restructure the loan completely.

“I . . . suggested that instead of donating the collection we find a buyer.”

“You did?”

“Oh, yes,” Pinnock expanded. “You know, people love to donate things to the church . . . I suggested that he sell it to a party who was friendly to the LDS church.”

“What do you mean?”

“Oh, a lot of times, people friendly to the church make donations. I helped him find a buyer in Canada who would buy the collection and donate it at a later date . . . .”

Pinnock would not tell the name of the buyer but said the attorney’s name was David West, Sr. . . .

Late Thursday afternoon law enforcers . . . met. Both officers and their chiefs attended . . . After Don Bell summarized his interviews, he added his opinion: “The church is stonewalling us.” (Salamander, pp. 58-60, 64, 65)

Naifeh and Smith give this information concerning other interviews investigators had with Hugh Pinnock:

By the time [Jim] Bell and Farnsworth talked to Hugh Pinnock on December 2, the relationship between the Church and the police had turned from chilly to ice cold. Pinnock seemed to understand that: he shook throughout the meeting. In his fourteen years of police work, Farnsworth had never seen anybody more nervous. In a relatively short fifteen-minute exchange—the primary purpose of which was only to reassure him that they were not “out to get him” Pinnock drank what seemed like an entire pitcher of water. Bell wondered how he would handle the real interview the following Friday.
In fact, he was a basket case. With Dallin Oaks and the Church lawyer, Oscar McConkie, looking on in dismay, Pinnock led Farnsworth and questioners from the county attorney’s office and the FBI on a wild three-hour ride through the last five months of his life.

His chronology was a mess: ... Farnsworth ... hardly had a chance to ask a question. He rarely knew what Pinnock was saying. It wasn’t until afterward, when he deciphered his notes, that he began to see the gaping holes and inconsistencies.

It wasn’t that Pinnock hadn’t kept a record. In fact, he had kept a meticulous record, a journal of every phone call, every meeting, with the names of everyone in attendance. ...

So why was the presentation so incoherent? Because Pinnock didn’t have the journal with him.

Farnsworth couldn’t believe it. Instead of reading from his journal, Pinnock had copied onto separate sheets of paper all the ‘relevant’ entries. He even positioned them on the paper so they corresponded to the entries in the journal. The result was an incoherent patchwork of secondhand notes. Whenever somebody expressed confusion, Pinnock would simply say, “This is how it’s written in my journal, but I don’t have the journal here.”

Why didn’t he have the journal?

“I don’t want to show you all those personal things...” he said, shaking just as he had at their last meeting. “I could read from that if I wanted to,” he added defensively. “I could do that.”

But he never did. He just returned to the cryptic entries and read verbatim, without expression. And if anyone asked him to elaborate, he simply said, “I can’t remember.” ...

In retelling the events immediately following the bombings, Pinnock did seem genuinely touched. ... Farnsworth came out of the interview believing Pinnock’s pain was genuine, but little else. “Just not telling all,” he wrote in his notes. (The Mormon Murders, pp. 303-305)

Sillitoe and Roberts make these comments concerning the two interviews:

By December, the investigators needed detailed information from the church leaders who had been involved in the McLellin transaction. ... they planned their strategy carefully.

First, Jim Bell and Ken Farnsworth dropped by Hugh Pinnock’s office to tell him an interview was imminent. Bell announced that he ... was not and never had been Mormon. Farnsworth said that he had been raised a Mormon ... though he was no longer involved in church activity. As they expected, Pinnock turned in his chair and spoke directly with Farnsworth. ... Farnsworth began by explaining that they considered Pinnock an important witness. ... Hard as it might be for Pinnock to believe, Farnsworth added, they were convinced that Hofmann had killed Christensen and Kathy Sheets. “It’s absolutely imperative that we know everything that was happening between you and Steve and between Steve and Mark. We need to know about Hinckley and Oaks and the bank and the telephone calls— all of it. Also, you’d best be prepared to explain in court.”

As Farnsworth talked, Pinnock gradually drained a pitcher of ice water, brushed lint from his trousers, shifted about in his chair, and paced around the desk. Bell could not remember ever seeing a more nervous potential witness.

On the way out of the building, Bell told Farnsworth he would not be coming back. “You get the church guys,” he said. “I’ll deal with the chief’s office.”

Farnsworth agreed. “It’s a good thing we met with Pinnock on his own turf—his desk, his office. Think how nervous he’d have been anywhere else.” Not that any alternative had been discussed.

On December 6, Farnsworth, Mike George, and an FBI agent met with Pinnock in his office, along with church attorney Oscar McConkie. Pinnock read relevant references from his daytimer and personal journal ...

Following the interview, the investigators asked for copies of the relevant entries ... most of the interview fit with the evidence. (Salamander, pp. 124-126)

The account of the last interview by Sillitoe and Roberts gives the impression that Hugh Pinnock had his “daytimer and personal journal” at the meeting. This, of course, contradicts the account given in The Mormon Murders. On January 5, 1989, we discussed this matter with Kenneth Farnsworth—one of the investigators who interviewed Mr. Pinnock. Mr. Farnsworth, who was serving as a detective at the time of the interviews, said that he was very upset with Hugh Pinnock because at the previous meeting he had made it very clear that Pinnock must bring his journal or daytimer to that meeting. Instead, Pinnock showed up with only his own notes of what he felt were relevant entries from the original journal. (Investigators, of course, would have no way of knowing whether these notes were verbatim copies of entries in the journal or if relevant information had been omitted.) When he was asked why he did not bring the original journal, Mr. Pinnock indicated that he had forgotten it! Moreover, neither Pinnock nor Hinckley ever showed investigators their journals or allowed them to obtain photocopies.

On page 236 of his book, Robert Lindsey said that there were “a series of occurrences that convinced many of the investigators that they were being stonewalled by leaders of the church.” The church leaders were so uncooperative with investigators in the initial stages of the investigation that it even led to the suspicion that they might know something about the murders:

On the fifth floor of the Metropolitan Hall of Justice. ... detective Jim Bell spoke at a meeting that had been called to review what detectives knew—and did not know—about the bombings.

He said he suspected the church was concealing information about Hofmann and the murders.

“They’re hiding something; the church is doing everything it can to make this as difficult as possible. I’ve never seen anything like this in a homicide investigation.” (A Gathering of Saints, p. 236)

Robert Lindsey goes on to say that “Ted Cannon [the Salt Lake County Attorney] expected the investigation to lead, one way or another, into the highest echelons of the church, and he was troubled by what that meant. ... Like Bell, D’Elia... was suspicious of the church and angry at its power in Utah, and he rarely stopped complaining to his colleagues about what he interpreted as efforts by the church to obstruct the investigation and about excessive deference to church leaders. Like Bell, he had been warned about a doctrine in Utah called Lying for the Lord. It held that when a Mormon believed he was doing the work of the Lord, it was not a sin to lie” (Ibid., pp. 238-239).

On page 240 of his book, Robert Lindsey cited the following concerning the investigation from Ted Cannon’s journal: “The real problem is that every single person in it has something to hide . . . the church either misspending church $$ on junk, or at the least embarrassed by the financial part of the papers . . .”

Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith were very suspicious of the role of LDS Church Security in the investigation. On page 44 of The Mormon Murders we find these questions: “Why did Church Security men materialize at the scene of the Hofmann bombing almost instantly? What about the report by the state legislator that Church Security had kept Hofmann under surveillance? That didn’t make them bombers, but it didn’t make them look good either. Did they see it happening and not try to stop it? At least one federal investigator from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms thought it looked more than just suspicious.”

It is possible, of course, that Church Security was tailing Mark Hofmann before the bombings. The leaders of the church must have been very concerned about what Mark Hofmann was doing with the McLellin collection. Rumors had it that he was trying to sell part of the collection before turning it over to the mission president. The reader will remember that Hugh Pinnock was apparently so concerned about the collection falling into the hands of the adversary that he was willing to provide an armored car to transport it. Right after the bomb exploded in Hofmann’s car, someone in Church Security told Alvin Rust “we know all about the McLellin papers” (Salamander, p. 38). Nevertheless, although one can speculate about the matter, it is a different matter to provide hard evidence to show that this was actually the case. That “Church Security men materialized at the scene of the Hofmann bombing almost instantly” does not really prove anything. After all, the Hofmann bombing occurred across the street from the Deseret Gym, which is owned by the Mormon Church itself. It seems reasonable to believe that Church Security would be on the alert after what had happened the day before. Moreover, both the Church Office Building and Temple Square are very close to where the explosion occurred.

One thing that might lead one to believe that Church Security was tailing Hofmann is a statement which appears in Salamander, p. 61:

Don Bell was not the only detective to trip over church security. Jim Bell had his concerns, as well. A church security officer had met him on the sidewalk by the Judge Building Tuesday morning after the bombing, when Bell had gone out for equipment. “We have thick files on Steven Christensen and Mark Hofmann if you’d like to see them,” the officer had said. Bell was not familiar with either name, since at that point the victim had not been officially identified. He asked the agent to take the files to the SLCPD. Later, when he knew who both Christensen and Hofmann were, Bell asked for the files but learned that they had never arrived. When he had checked back with church security, the entire incident was denied.

From reading this, we reasoned that a Church Security officer would have to have known something about the murder if he offered a file on Mark Hofmann at this early time in the investigation when he was not even a suspect. We wondered if it were possible that someone in Church Security followed him to the Judge Building and saw him deliver the package containing the bomb. This theory was shattered, however, when we talked to Jim Bell on January 6, 1989. Detective Bell stated that although the incident actually occurred, Mark Hofmann’s name was not mentioned. Bell, in fact, did not hear Mark Hofmann’s name until Detective Farnsworth told him of a report concerning Hofmann wearing a coat which matched the description of the coat worn by the bomber. The Church Security officer had only claimed that the Mormon Church had a file on Steven Christensen. Bell also felt that since it had been three hours since the bombing and it was a well-known fact that the bomb went off in Christensen’s office, it is likely that Church Security would have figured out the identity of the victim.

While Detective Bell’s explanation seems to remove any evidence that Church Security knew Hofmann was the bomber, it still raises some important questions: Why, for instance, would Church Security have a thick file on Steven Christensen? Would this file have had something to do with Steven Christensen’s liberal views on Mormon history? Or could it have contained important information on the McLellin transaction which would have helped detectives to solve the bombing’s case more rapidly? It is interesting that someone in the church seemed to feel that the Christensen file had to be suppressed, and it is certainly strange that such an important file would never be subpoenaed by investigators.

In any case, while the Mormon leaders want us to believe that the “church cooperated fully” with investigators, the evidence indicates just the opposite. The article in the Los Angeles Times, September 18, 1988, quoted Richard P. Lindsay as saying that the response to “all the allegations made against the church” would be made public “in about 60 days.” According to the Times, it is supposed to be a “master list of errors, misquotes and exaggerations” appearing in “books and news articles.” As we go to press with this issue of the Messenger, no response from the church has appeared. We do not know whether church officials have decided to drop the project and attempt to ride out the storm or if they are still working on this monumental response.
We are pleased to announce the completion of our new book, Major Problems of Mormonism. Although our most comprehensive work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? has proved to be very effective in bringing many Mormons to the truth, it contains more material than some people wish to read. In addition, we have printed important information in the Messenger and other publications which has not been included in our larger work. For these reasons, we have spent a great deal of time going through our various publications to determine what is the most important material on Mormonism and have finally distilled our thirty years of research down into a 256-page book. The price of only $6.95 ($5.95 if ordered before March 31, 1988—mail orders please add 10%) makes it well within the price range of most people. (Those who wish to give or loan out extra copies to their friends will undoubtedly be interested in the quantity prices: 5 copies for $25.00—10 copies for $41.70.) Although this book is not meant to replace Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we believe it will eventually become our most popular book.

The following is a condensed and revised printing of Chapter 20 of Major Problems of Mormonism. This chapter is entitled, “The Hereafter,” and deals with the Mormon doctrine of “eternal progression.”

Joseph Smith seems to have been a firm believer in the orthodox teachings of Christianity concerning heaven and hell when he first began his work. Before many years had passed, however, he had developed some very unique doctrines concerning the hereafter.

In 1832 Joseph Smith gave a revelation ( Doctrine and Covenants, Section 76) which stated that heaven was divided up into three different kingdoms—i.e., the celestial, terrestrial and telestial kingdoms. Later he had another revelation which divided the “celestial” kingdom itself into compartments: “In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; And in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage]” ( Doctrine and Covenants 131:1:2). It is clear from this that the only ones who enter into the highest division in the “celestial” kingdom are those who are married for time and eternity in a Mormon temple.

The Mormon doctrine of pre-existence plays an important role in the function of those who obtain the “highest” glory in the “celestial kingdom.” According to Mormon teachings, God and his wife or wives were the parents of all the spirits who later come to be born on earth. In other words, we were all supposed to have been part of one immense family of spirit children in heaven. Those who are accounted worthy to become Gods and Goddesses after the resurrection are likewise to give birth to spirit children throughout all eternity, and these spirits will eventually take bodies on other worlds.

Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt set forth some important details and problems concerning the birth of spirit children to celestial beings:

In the Heaven where our spirits were born, there are many Gods, each one of whom has his own wife or wives . . . Each God, through his wife or wives, raises up a numerous family of sons and daughters; . . . each father and mother will be in a condition to multiply forever and ever. As soon as each God has begotten many millions of male and female spirits, and his Heavenly inheritance becomes too small, to comfortably accommodate his great family, he, in connection with his sons, organizes a new world . . . where he sends both the male and female spirits to inhabit tabernacles of flesh and bones. . . . The inhabitants of each world are required to reverence, adore, and worship their own personal father who dwells in the Heaven which they formerly inhabited. ( The Seer, March 1853, p. 37)

Apostle Pratt estimated that “seventy thousand million [i.e., 70 billion] sons and daughters were born in Heaven, and kept their first estate . . .” Pratt went on to explain that it is “probable that the period required for the formation of the infant spirit, is of the same length as that required in the world for the organization of the infant tabernacle.” ( Ibid., pp. 38-39)

The description given by Mormon leaders of the function of a woman who advances to Godhood reminds us of the role played by a queen bee. The queen bee, of course, produces swarms of offspring—as many as 2,500 a day! Her main purpose appears to be to produce more bees. Mormon scholar Eugene England seems to be repelled by the concept concerning spirit children taught by Apostle Pratt and other “influential Mormons and teachers of religion.” He maintains that if “humans can already produce test-tube babies and clones, God has certainly found more efficient ways to produce spirit children than by turning celestial partners into mere birth machines. To anticipate such a limited, unequal role for women in eternity insults and devalues them” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1987, p. 148). While many Mormon women would agree with England, the teaching seems too embedded in Mormon theology to be torn out without endangering the entire doctrine of “eternal progression.” Apostle Bruce R. McConkie made it very plain that spirit children are literally born to the Eternal Father and Mother: “Our spirit bodies had their beginning in pre-existence when we were born as the spirit children of God our Father. Through that birth process spirit element was organized into intelligent entities” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, p. 750).

Although Mormon theology teaches that a woman can obtain “Godhood,” it is actually a subservient role to her husband. She is still required to “yield the most perfect obedience” to her “great Head”—her husband ( The Seer, p. 159). While her husband will be worshipped by their spirit children and manifest himself to them after they go to an earth to experience mortality, she will apparently have no contact with them there. According to Apostle Orson Pratt, “the children, so far as we are informed, have never been commanded to pray to her or worship her” ( Ibid., p. 159).
Many Mormon women have serious reservations about the concept of having billions of spirit children every time their husbands decide to people another world. They believe that this teaching smacks of confusion and mass production. Mormon leaders, of course, will argue that women will be perfectly happy when they arrive in the heaven described in their theology. Childbirth will not be painful in heaven, and all the other details and problems will be worked out. Even so, since Mormon theology limits Gods and Goddesses to physical bodies, it seems that it would be very difficult for either the “Heavenly Father” or the “Heavenly Mother” to give much individual attention to billions of children.

AN EVER-EXPANDING HELL. In the Bible we read that hell was originally “prepared for the devil and his angels,” but people who refuse to repent and receive the Lord into their lives shall also “go away into everlasting punishment . . .” (Matthew 25:41-46). At the time that Joseph Smith wrote the Book of Mormon, he was firmly committed to the orthodox position concerning hell, and his first major work is filled with this teaching. Later, however, he was influenced by the teachings of the Universalists, who proclaimed that “all men will finally be saved.” In the Book of Mormon he had taught that the wicked would go to an “awful hell” and “endure a never ending torment” (see Book of Mormon, Alma 42:16; Mosiah 3:38-39; 3 Nephi 27:11, 17; Alma 54:7). In spite of the strong teachings concerning hell in the Book of Mormon, by 1832 Joseph Smith had completely repudiated the orthodox position. He claimed, in fact, that the wicked would be saved in the telestial kingdom.

While Joseph Smith tried to destroy the Biblical teaching concerning hell, his doctrine of “eternal progression” seems to create a hell which is infinitely larger than the mind is able to comprehend. The Mormon hell, in fact, turns out to be a place or places of punishment which will continue to claim captives at an increasingly greater rate throughout all eternity.

To begin with, Mormonism teaches that the devil and his angels were born to the Heavenly Father and the Heavenly Mother in the pre-existence as spirit children. In other words, they were originally part of the family of spirits who were to come to earth to receive bodies. Instead, however, they rebelled, were cast out, and became the “sons of perdition.” While Mormons believe that “very few” of the spirits who come to earth will end up in hell, they affirm that all those who followed the devil in the pre-existence are to go to an everlasting hell. Bruce R. McConkie made this statement concerning them: “Their lot is to wallow in wickedness to all eternity. They are spiritually dead eternally” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, p. 756).

According to a revelation given by Joseph Smith, a “third” of the spirits born to God and his wife became sons of perdition and were thrust down to hell:

... the devil was before Adam, for he rebelled against me, saying, Give me thine honor, which is my power; and also a third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency; And they were thrust down, and thus came the devil and his angels; And, behold, there is a place prepared for them from the beginning, which place is hell. (Doctrine and Covenants 29:36-38)

Apostle Orson Pratt estimated that there were about 35 billion spirit children of God who were sent to this eternal hell (The Seer, p. 38). Mormon writer Eugene England speaks of “the 80 billion or so people demographers compute will have lived on earth by 2000 A.D.” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1987, p. 148). The figure given by Mr. England is similar to that given by Apostle Orson Pratt—i.e., 70 billion. If 80 billion people will eventually live on earth, then it follows that the “sons of perdition” number 40 billion. The number could be even higher, however, because the figure of “80 billion” on earth does not include the millennium.

While Mormon apologists criticize others for believing in the idea of eternal punishment of the wicked, their church’s own doctrine has already consigned 40,000,000,000 or more of God’s own spirit children to eternal damnation. This, however, is just the tip of the iceberg. If the doctrine of “eternal progression” is true, this same thing has already happened on innumerable worlds. In a discourse given February 18, 1855, Apostle Orson Pratt expressed the view that there are already countless Gods and worlds: “If we should take a million of worlds like this and number their particles, we should find that there are more Gods than there are particles of matter in those worlds” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 345).

The Mormon couple who looks forward to Godhood should be aware of the serious implications of their theology. If the doctrine of “eternal progression” is true, they will be faced with a great deal of heartache. To begin with, in the hereafter they will vividly recall their pre-existent state in which a third of their own family fought against their Heavenly Father and became sons of perdition. On the positive side, they will have a spirit child who will become the “redeemer” of their earth, but this will be offset to some extent by the fact that one of their other sons will turn out to be a “tempter.” President Brigham Young made this comment about the matter:

Sin is upon every earth that ever was created, . . . Consequently every earth has its redeemer, and every earth has its tempter; and every earth, and the people thereof . . . pass through all the ordeals that we are passing through. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, pp. 71-72)

The worst thing of all, however, is that according to Mormon theology the couple who aspire to Godhood will probably have to send billions of their own spirit children to an eternal hell. In the revelation to Joseph Smith which we referred to earlier, Jesus is purported to have said that “a third part” of the spirit children were lost “because of their agency” ( Doctrine and Covenants 29:36). Since part of the eternal plan is to give the spirit children free agency, this opens the door so that the spirits can choose to become sons of perdition. Now, if the current Mormon God suffered a loss of at least 40,000,000,000 children, it seems highly unlikely that those who receive Godhood under him will have a better rate of success. In any case, after the couple goes through this great loss, it will be time to start another world. This same process of having spirit children to populate worlds is supposed to continue throughout all eternity.

To those who have even an elementary understanding of mathematics, it is obvious that the Mormon doctrine of “eternal progression” would create an immeasurable number of sons of perdition. Although Apostle Orson Pratt did not discuss the multiplication of the sons of perdition, he did give some idea of how rapidly the number of worlds and Gods would increase under the Mormon plan:
The fourth generations would people over a trillion, and the fifth over a quadrillion of worlds; while the one-hundredth generation would people more worlds than could be expressed by raising one million to the ninety-ninth power. (The Seer, page 39)

The person who accepts the Mormon doctrine of “eternal progression” is forced by mathematics to conclude that eventually quadrillions of worlds will be created by the Gods every second and that this will go on forever and ever. While this idea might really appeal to a man who is interested in obtaining “authority and dominion as the Grand Patriarch of the endless generations of his posterity,” there is a very gloomy downside to the story since every second that passes quadrillions of spirits will become “sons of perdition” and be lost forever, and this number will rapidly increase throughout all eternity!

Although Joseph Smith claimed he was trying to straighten out the Christian world with respect to the hereafter, it seems that he has only produced more confusion. He has separated the one superlative heaven which Jesus taught into a number of different compartments which will cause a segregated condition in the afterlife. While Smith’s doctrine concerning the “sealing” of families together for “time and all eternity” appears to promise that Mormons will have their children in the resurrection, his doctrine of “eternal progression” seems to take them far away. If the children are faithful, they will be off creating their own worlds throughout eternity. Moreover, Joseph Smith’s attempt to evade the Biblical teaching concerning hell led him into such a state of confusion that he ended up creating a hell which looms as an ever expanding black hole sucking in “a third part” of the spirit children of worlds innumerable to eternal destruction.

OTHER BOOKS

Wild Bill Hickman and the Mormon Frontier, by Hope A. Hilton. Price: $9.95

Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism, by Dan Vogel. Price: $9.95

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Mormon Neo-Orthodoxy: A Crisis Theology, by O. Kendall White, Jr. Price: $11.95

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY

PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
Joseph Smith was certainly not the first to claim revelations or to bring forth a new book purporting to be scripture. For instance, the story of the coming forth of the Koran, the sacred scripture of Islam, bears some interesting parallels to Joseph Smith’s account of the origin of the Book of Mormon. N. J. Dawood, who translated the Koran into English, gave this information concerning its origin:

For Muslims it is the infallible word of God, a transcript of a tablet preserved in heaven, revealed to the Prophet Mohammed by the Angel Gabriel. . . . According to Muslim tradition, one night in Ramadhan about the year 610 [A.D.], as he was asleep or in a trance, the Angel Gabriel came to him and said: “Recite!” He replied: “What shall I recite?” The order was repeated three times . . .

he Koranic revelations followed each other at brief intervals and were at first committed to memory by professional remembrancers. During Mohammed’s life-time verses were written on palm-leaves, stones, and any material that came to hand. Their collection was completed during the caliphate of Omar . . . (The Koran, 1968, Introduction, pp. 9-10)

Mohammed claimed that he was God’s true prophet and that he was restoring true religion to the earth. Twelve centuries later, the Mormon prophet Joseph Smith made a similar claim. He related that he was visited by an angel who revealed that he was chosen to translate the Book of Mormon, a work containing the “fulness of the everlasting Gospel.” Smith, of course, also claimed to be God’s true prophet and said that he was restoring the truth which had been lost through apostasy.

In the published account of his life, Joseph Smith related that he became very disturbed when he was a youth because of the “strife among the different denominations,” and this “cry and tumult” led him to ask God “which of all the sects were right—and which I should join.” He was told that he must “join none of them, for they were all wrong . . . that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt . . . .” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:8-19)

N. J. Dawood says that Mohammed was also concerned with the fact that the Jews and Christians had “divided themselves into schismatic sects.” In the scriptures given by Mohammed, we read: “Yet the Sects are divided concerning Jesus . . . Truly, the unbelievers are in the grossest error” (The Koran, translated by N. J. Dawood, Surah 19, p. 34). In Surah 30, page 190, this warning appears: “Do not split up your religion into sects, each exulting in its own beliefs.” In Surah 3, page 398, we read: “The only true faith in Allah’s sight is Islam. Those to whom the Scriptures [i.e., Jews and Christians] were given disagreed among themselves through jealousy only after knowledge had been given them.”

It is interesting to note that the Koran has roots that extend back into both the Jewish and Christian faiths. The Koran, in fact, claims that the Torah—the five books of Moses—was given by Allah: “To Moses We gave the Scriptures, a perfect code for the righteous . . .” (The Koran, Surah 6, p. 428). In Surah 4, page 373, we read: “We have revealed Our will to you as We revealed it to Noah and to the prophets who came after him; as We revealed it to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, and David, to whom We gave the Psalms.” The Koran also has quite a bit to say about Jesus and the Gospel. For instance, on pages 381-382, Surah 5, the following appears: “There is guidance, and there is light, in the Torah which We have revealed. By it the prophets who surrendered themselves to Allah judged the Jews, . . . they gave judgement according to Allah’s scriptures . . .

After those prophets We sent forth Jesus, the son of Mary, confirming the Torah already revealed, and gave him
On pages 388-389 (Surah 5) of The Koran, we find the following:

Allah will say: “Jesus, son of Mary, remember the favour I have bestowed on you and on your mother: how I strengthened you with the Holy Spirit . . . how I instructed you in the Scriptures and in wisdom, in the Torah and in the Gospel . . . by my leave, you healed the blind man and the leper, and by My leave restored the dead to life . . .”

The Koran even teaches that Jesus was born of a virgin:

And you shall recount in the Book the story of Mary . . .

We sent to her Our spirit in the semblance of a full-grown man. . . .

“I am the messenger of your Lord,” he replied, “and have come to give you a holy son.”

“How shall I bear a child,” she answered, “when I am a virgin, untouched by man?”

“Such is the will of your Lord,” he replied. That is no difficult thing for Him. “He shall be a sign to mankind,” says the Lord, “and a blessing from Ourselv. That is Our decree.” (The Koran, Surah 19, p. 33)

The Koran, however, teaches that Jesus was not crucified:

They [the Jews] declared: “We have put to death the Messiah Jesus the son of Mary, the apostle of Allah.” They did not kill him, nor did they crucify him, but they thought they did. . . . Allah lifted him up to His presence; He is mighty and wise. There is none among the People of the Book [i.e., Jews and Christians who possess the Bible] but will believe in him before his death; and on the Day of Resurrection he will be a witness against them. (Ibid., Surah 4, pp. 372-373)

Although the Koran speaks very highly of Jesus, it is diametrically opposed to the New Testament teaching regarding his deity: “People of the Book, do not transgress the bounds of your religion. Speak nothing but the truth about Allah. The Messiah, Jesus the son of Mary, was no more than Allah’s apostle and His Word which He cast to Mary: a spirit from Him. . . . Allah is but one God. Allah forbid that He should have a son!” (Ibid., pp. 373-374). In Surah 18, page 90, the idea that Jesus was the Son of God is described as “a monstrous blasphemy.”

Some have suggested that Joseph Smith directly borrowed from Islam. Frances E. Willard, for instance, charged: “Modern Mohammedanism has its Mecca at Salt Lake . . . Clearly the Koran was Joseph Smith’s model, so closely followed as to exclude even the poor pretension of originality in his foul ‘revelations’” (The Women of Mormonism, 1882, Introduction, p. xvi). It is obvious to those who have done research with regard to these two religions that this statement goes far beyond the truth. While the story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon seems to have some interesting parallels to Mohammed’s story, as far as we can determine, the text of the book itself seems to bear no relationship to the Koran. The Book of Mormon, published in 1830, was Joseph Smith’s first major work. By the year 1838, however, there is some evidence that Joseph Smith was sympathetic to Mohammed and seemed to identify with him. In Senate Document 189, page 23, we find this statement in the testimony of George M. Hinkle: “I have heard Joseph Smith, jr. say that he believed Mahomet was a good man; that the Koran was not a true thing, but the world belied Mahomet, as they had belied him, and that Mahomet was a true prophet.” Smith felt that the Mormons had been unfairly persecuted because of their religion. Thomas B. Marsh, who had served as President of the Council of Twelve Apostles in the Mormon Church, gave an affidavit in which he stated:

I have heard the Prophet say . . . if he was not let alone, he would be a second Mohammed to this generation . . . that like Mohammed, whose motto in treating for peace was, “the Alcoran [i.e., the Koran] or the Sword.” So should it be eventually with us, “Joseph Smith or the Sword.” (History of the Church, vol. 3, p. 167)

In 1842, John C. Bennett alleged that Joseph Smith’s system of polygamy “closely resembles [that of] his master and model, Mahomet . . .” (History of the Saints, p. 218). While Bennett’s own character makes his statements somewhat questionable, it is interesting to note that both Mohammed and Joseph Smith gave revelations regarding plural marriage. In the Koran we read:

Wives of the Prophet . . . those of you who obey Allah and His apostle and do good works shall be doubly rewarded . . .

You [Mohammed] said to the man [Zeid] whom Allah and yourself have favoured: “Keep your wife and have fear of Allah.” You sought to hide in your heart what Allah was to reveal [i.e., his intention to marry Zeid’s wife]. You were afraid of man, although it would have been more right to fear Allah. And when Zeid divorced his wife, We gave her to you in marriage, so that it should become legitimate for true believers to wed the wives of their adopted sons if they divorced them, Allah’s will must be done.

No blame should be attached to the Prophet for doing what is sanctioned for him by Allah . . .

Prophet, We have made lawful to you the wives to whom you have granted dowries and the slave-girls whom Allah has given you as booty . . . and the other women who gave themselves to you and whom you wished to take in marriage . . .

You may put off any of your wives you please and take to your bed any of them you please. Nor is it unlawful for you to receive any of those whom you have temporarily set aside. (The Koran, Surah 33, pp. 287-288)

Although the Mormon Church no longer allows its members to practice polygamy on earth, Joseph Smith’s revelation on polygamy is still published in the Doctrine and Covenants, one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church. In this revelation we read:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Joseph, that inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand to know and understand wherein I, the Lord justified . . . my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines—
Therefore, prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions . . .

And let mine handmaid, Emma Smith, receive all those that have been given unto my servant Joseph, and who are virtuous and pure before me; and those who are not pure, and have said they were pure, shall be destroyed, saith the Lord God. . . . if any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he cannot commit adultery . . . if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he cannot commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him; therefore is he justified. (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 132, verses 1, 3, 52, 61-62)

Joseph Lee Robinson, a faithful Mormon, reported in his journal concerning a sermon which Joseph Smith gave in Nauvoo. Richard S. Van Wagoner gives this interesting information concerning this matter:

Joseph Lee Robinson . . . later remembered the prophet’s discussing possible difficulties missionaries could encounter in “Turkey or India or to a people where it was lawful to have several wives where they practiced Polygamy.” Smith envisioned a Muslim asking, “I have five wives . . . can I bring my five wives there and enjoy them as well as I can here, said the Prophet yes, the laws in Zion are such that you can bring your wives and enjoy them as well as there.” (Mormon Polygamy—A History, p. 48)

Both Mohammed and Joseph Smith had problems with people claiming that their revelations were man-made, and both men combated their critics by challenging them to produce anything that would compare with their revelations. In the Koran we find the following:

This Koran could not have been composed by any but Allah. It confirms what was revealed before it and fully explains the Scriptures. It is beyond doubt from the Lord of Creation.

If they say: “It is your own invention,” say: “Compose one chapter like it.” (The Koran, Surah 10, page 67)

If they say: “He has invented it himself,” say to them: “Invent ten chapters like it. Call on whom you will of your idols, if what you say be true. But if they fail you, know that it is revealed with Allah’s knowledge, and that there is no god but Him. Will you then accept Islam?” (Surah 11, page 132)

In a revelation given November, 1831, Joseph Smith’s God gave a similar invitation to scoffers:

And now I, the Lord, give unto you a testimony of the truth of these commandments . . . seek ye out of the Book of Commandments, even the least that is among them, and appoint him that is the most wise among you; Or, if there be any among you that shall make one like unto it, then ye are justified in saying that ye do not know that they are true; But if ye cannot make one like unto it, ye are under condemnation if ye do not bear record that they are true. (Doctrine and Covenants 67:4, 6-8)

Mohammed seemed to feel that although the Jews received the scriptures from Allah, they had corrupted them. In the Introduction to his translation of the Koran, page 10, N. J. Dawood informs us that Mohammed . . . firmly believed that he was the messenger of God, sent forth to confirm previous scriptures. God had revealed His will to the Jews and the Christians through chosen apostles, but they disobeyed God’s commandments . . . The Koran accuses the Jews of corrupting the Scriptures and the Christians of worshipping Christ as the son of God . . . having thus gone astray, they must be brought back to the right path, to the true religion preached by Abraham.

In the Koran itself, we read: “Say: ‘Who, then, revealed the Scriptures which Moses brought down, a light and a guide for mankind? The Scriptures which you have transcribed on scraps of paper, declaring some of them and suppressing much, although you have now been taught what neither you nor your fathers knew before?’” (The Koran, Surah 6, p. 422). The Koran claims to bring to light things that were previously suppressed:

People of the Book! Our apostle has come to reveal to you much of what you have hidden of the Scriptures, and to forgive you much. A light has come to you from Allah and a glorious Book . . . Our apostle has come to reveal to you Our will after an interval during which there were no apostles . . . to you We have revealed the Book with the truth. It confirms the Scriptures which came before it and stands as a guardian over them. (Surah 5, pp. 378-379, 382)

Like Mohammed, Joseph Smith taught that the ancient scriptures were given by God but that they were corrupted by men and that things were suppressed. In the Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 13:26, 27, 29, this information appears:

Wherefore, these things go forth from the Jews in purity unto the Gentiles . . . And after they go forth . . . thou seest the foundation of a great and abominable church [the Roman Catholic Church], which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away. . . . that they may pervert the right ways of the Lord, and they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men . . . because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book [the Bible] . . . an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them.

While Joseph Smith claimed that the Bible was “the word of God” only so far “as it is translated correctly,” he put no such qualification on the Book of Mormon: “. . . we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God” (Pearl of Great Price, The Articles of Faith, Article No. 8). Smith, in fact, “told the brethren that the Book of Mormon was the most correct of any book on earth . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 4, p. 461). Joseph Smith, of course, went far beyond the Book of Mormon and produced two other books of scripture—the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. Like the Koran, therefore, Joseph Smith’s revelations take precedence over the Bible. Any portion of the Bible which disagrees with the teachings of Joseph Smith is rejected as defective.

In the Koran, Mohammed added many things concerning biblical characters which are not found in the Bible itself. Allah instructed him as follows: “You shall also recount in the Book [the Koran] the story of Abraham: He was a prophet and a saintly man” (The Koran, Surah 19, p. 34). Mohammed, therefore, gave some material concerning Abraham which was not recorded in the Bible. For instance, he related that Abraham’s people tried to kill him because he condemned their idolatry and wicked ways:

And tell of Abraham. He said to his people: “Serve Allah and fear Him. That would be best for you, if you but knew it. You worship idols besides Allah and invent falsehoods, . . . Abraham’s people replied: “Kill him! Burn him!”

But from the fire Allah delivered him. (The Koran, Surah 29, pp. 193-194)

Joseph Smith also revealed information concerning Abraham which is not found in the Bible. In fact, he claimed that he translated an entire book written by the patriarch himself and published it under the title, “The Book of Abraham.” Like Mohammed, Joseph Smith claimed that Abraham’s people tried to kill him and that he was delivered by God in a miraculous way:

My fathers having turned from their righteousness . . . unto the worshiping of the gods of the heathen, utterly refused to hearken to my voice . . . but endeavored to take away my life . . . the priests laid violence upon me, that they might slay me . . . And as they lifted up their hands upon me . . . I lifted up my voice unto the Lord my God, and the Lord hearkened and heard . . . and the angel of his presence stood by me, and immediately unloosed my bands;

And his voice was unto me: Abraham, Abraham, behold, my name is Jehovah, and I . . . have come down to thee, and to take thee away from thy father’s house . . . (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham, 1:5, 7, 12, 15-16)

In the book, The Rocky Mountain Saints, written in 1873, T. B. H. Stenhouse commented: “The student of Mormonism will be struck with the similarity of experience and claims of Joseph Smith and Mohammed” (page 2). Two graduates of the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University, Arnold Green and Lawrence Goldrup, have written an article on the danger of going too far in making parallels between Mohammed and Joseph Smith. They state, however, that while “comparisons between the Koran and the Book of Mormon are especially strained, a comparison of the Doctrine and Covenants with the Koran has some validity” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1971, p. 54). On page 57, Green and Goldrup point out a serious doctrinal difference between Mormons and Moslems. They note that Mohammed had an “uncompromising” belief in only one God, whereas Mormons believe “men can attain godhood (D&C 132:20, 37).” We agree that this doctrinal dissimilarity with regard to the Godhead is a serious difference. The Koran, in fact, seems to emphatically condemn the Mormon position: “Never has Allah begotten a son, nor is there any other god besides Him.

Were this otherwise, each god would govern his own creation, each holding himself above the other. Exalted be Allah above their falsehoods!” (The Koran, Surah 23, p. 220). Spencer W. Kimball, the twelfth president of the Mormon Church, certainly did not seem to accept Mohammed’s position with regard to the plurality of Gods. In a broadcast to those serving in the priesthood, President Kimball commented: “Brethren, 225,000 of you are here tonight. I suppose 225,000 of you may become gods. There seems to be plenty of space out there in the universe” (The Ensign, Nov. 1975, p. 80).

While a large number of parallels can be marshaled to support the thesis that Joseph Smith borrowed ideas from Mohammed, there are many dissimilarities and the case is far from conclusive. The parallels seem to relate to concepts rather than any direct lifting of statements from the Koran. (In the book, Major Problems of Mormonism, pages 149-155, we demonstrate that the King James Version of the Bible, which was not published until A.D. 1611, probably had more influence on Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon than any other book. We note that we found “over a hundred quotations from the New Testament in the first two books of Nephi alone, and these books were supposed to have been written between 600 and 545 B.C.!” The evidence of plagiarism is absolutely overwhelming.)

Although the parallels to Islam may not trouble many members of the LDS Church, they do tend to show that Mormonism is not as unique as some defenders would argue. Mormons often ask how it is possible that an unlearned boy like Joseph Smith could create a religion that would bring in millions of converts and have such an influence upon the world. They feel that the growth of the church demonstrates that God’s hand is in the work. A similar question, however, might be directed back to the Mormons. How can they account for the growth of Islam? After all, for every Mormon there are about a hundred and twenty followers of Mohammed—the 1989 Information Please Almanac, page 400, listed the number of Moslems at about $860,388,300$. If the Koran was not given by revelation from Allah, how could Islam have grown at the rate it did?

In the book, The Messenger, The Life of Mohammed, by R. V. B. Bodley, page 57, we read that there has been a controversy as to whether Mohammed could read at the time he was visited by the Angel Gabriel:

Some say that he was illiterate, others say that he was not.” In any case, Mohammed seems to have spent his youth traveling with trading caravans and has been referred to as a “lowly Arab camel driver.” Despite his lack of education, he was able to produce the Koran—a book which hundreds of millions of people revere as the word of God as well as an important “work of Classical Arabic prose.”

The Koran itself calls Mohammed “the Unlettered Prophet” (Surah 7, p. 253). In the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 27:19, Joseph Smith is referred to as “him that is not learned.” That Joseph Smith, who came from a humble background, was able to produce works of “scripture” which have influenced millions of people does not prove that he was inspired by God.
He had far more opportunities than Mohammed to acquire knowledge. Mohammed, for instance, lived before the invention of the printing press and therefore had no opportunity to read a printed newspaper, pamphlet or book. Joseph Smith, on the other hand, had access to his family’s newspaper, The Wayne Sentinel, as well as many other printed works. Mormon writer Milton V. Backman acknowledged that a library was organized in Manchester in 1817 and that it “contained histories, biographies, geographies, religious treatises, and other popular works of that age” (Joseph Smith’s First Vision, p. 32).

BATTLING SATAN

A controversy concerning the book, The Satanic Verses by Salman Rushdie has been brewing since last fall. After its publication in September, 1988, it was banned in a number of countries. Although Rushdie’s book is a work of fiction, Moslems feel that it ridicules the prophet Mohammed. A number of people were killed and others wounded in protests concerning the book, and the Ayatollah Khomeini publicly called for the assassination of Mr. Rushdie:

Iran’s Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini on Sunday rejected the apology of British writer Salman Rushdie and exhorted Moslems around the world to ‘send him to hell’ for the novel . . . A bounty of $5.2 million has been put on Rushdie’s head by Islamic religious leaders since Khomeini issued the death sentence. (Salt Lake Tribune, February 20, 1989)

In an article written by Thomas Lippman, we find this information concerning the controversy The Satanic Verses has generated:

Two chapters of Rushdie’s novel retell, in fictionalized form, the story of Mohammed and of the creation of Islam and the creation of the Koran. In his account, the prophet’s name is “neither Mahomet nor Moehammered” but “the Devil’s synonym, Mahound,” a name used in the past as a vulgar slur . . .

Moslems believe Mohammed was illiterate. When the words of the Koran were dictated to him by God, he did not write them down but relayed them to a scribe who recorded them. In “The Satanic Verses,” the scribe is “some sort of bum from Persia by the outlandish name of Salman,” which is Rushdie’s name, and this Salman takes liberties with the wording of the holy book.

“Little things at first,” says the rascal Salman, recounting his work as the prophet’s scribe. “If Mahound recited a verse in which God was described as allhearing, all-knowing, I would write, all-knowing, all-wise. Here’s the point: Mahound did not notice the alterations. So there I was, actually writing the Book, or rewriting, anyway, polluting the word of God with my own profane language. But, my good heavens, if my poor words could not be distinguished from the Revelation by God’s own Messenger, then what did that mean? What did that say about the quality of the divine poetry?” (Salt Lake Tribune, February 19, 1989)

While we do not accept the Koran as a revelation from God, we are skeptical of attacking a religion with the use of fictional conversations that cannot be documented with evidence. Salman Rushdie, of course, did not claim that he was giving the true story of how Mohammed received the Koran, but the use of fictional conjectures in a book on such a serious subject does not seem like a very good method. On the other hand, the Ayatollah Khomeini’s order that Rushdie be assassinated is deplorable. Khomeini, of course, does not represent mainstream Moslem thought, and we agree with a statement made by Frances FitzGerald:

“To see the Ayatollah as the representative of Islam,” she said, “is to see the Grand Inquisitor as the representative of Christianity.” (U.S. News & World Report, March 6, 1989, p. 30)

If Salman Rushdie had been writing on Mormonism, he would not have had to resort to fiction when writing about “satanic verses.” The first mention of Satan’s attempt to pollute Mormon scriptures appears in the Preface of the first edition of the Book of Mormon. In this Preface, Joseph Smith tells how Satan inspired his enemies to alter 116 pages of the Book of Mormon [the Book of Lehi] so that they could not be used in the printed version:

As many false reports have been circulated respecting the following work, and also many unlawful measures taken by evil designing persons to destroy me, and also the work, I would inform you that I translated by the gift and power of God, and caused to be written, one hundred and sixteen pages, the which I took from the Book of Lehi . . . which said account, some person or persons have stolen and kept from me, notwithstanding my utmost exertions to recover it again—and being commanded of the Lord that I should not translate the same over again, for Satan had put it into their hearts to tempt the Lord their God, by altering the words, that they did read contrary from that which I translated and caused to be written; and if I should bring forth the same words again, or, in other words, if I should translate the same over, they would publish that which they had stolen, and Satan would stir up the hearts of this generation, that they might not receive this work: but behold, the Lord said unto me, I will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil design in this thing: therefore thou shalt translate from the plates of Nephi, until ye come to that which ye have translated . . . I will shew unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the Devil. (Book of Mormon, 1830 edition, Preface)

Although the Preface containing this information concerning Satan’s wicked plans to alter the Nephite scripture has been deleted from modern editions of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith gave a revelation concerning this matter which is still published in the Doctrine and Covenants as Section 10. In verse 14, the Lord tells Joseph Smith that he “will not suffer that Satan shall accomplish his evil design in this thing.” The loss of the Book of Lehi is actually presented as a victory for the Lord because the Book of Nephi, which was translated to take its place, is supposed to be even more spiritual. Mormon critics, however, point out that if Satan actually did cause Joseph Smith’s enemies to alter the words, they would have had to produce the original pages to prove that Joseph Smith could not produce an accurate duplicate of the original. It would be almost impossible to alter the manuscript without detection. The Mormons could have taken the case to court and easily won a significant victory. Critics feel that Joseph Smith probably did not keep a copy of the 116 pages which were lost and would not have been able to reproduce an exact copy of what he had previously written. Therefore, he was forced to claim that the Lord told him that his enemies had altered the pages. In any case, the missing pages were never found.

While Joseph Smith was translating the Book of Mormon, he became concerned that he himself could be deceived and produce satanic verses. Linda King Newell and Valeen Tippett's Avery give this information:

> Once, as he translated, the narrative mentioned the walls of Jerusalem. Joseph stopped. "Emma," he asked, "did Jerusalem have walls surrounding it?" Emma told him it did. "O, I thought I was deceived," was his reply. (Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith, 1984, p. 26)

Joseph Smith claimed that he was given an instrument known as the Urim and Thummim to translate the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. This instrument consisted of "two stones in silver bows" (History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 12).

> Although he used the Urim and Thummim to translated the first 116 pages which were stolen, statements by witnesses to the translation indicate that after the theft occurred, he used a "seer stone." The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts wrote:

> The Seer Stone referred to here was a chocolate-colored, somewhat egg-shaped stone which the Prophet found while digging a well in company with his brother Hyrum. . . . It possessed the qualities of Urim and Thummim, since by means of it—as well as by means of the Interpreters found with the Nephite record, Joseph was able to translate the characters engraved on the plates. (Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 129)

> Seer stones were often used by magicians and money-diggers for divination. Evidence shows that in 1826 Joseph Smith was arrested and brought before a Justice of the Peace in Bainbridge, New York, for using his seer stone, which he placed in his hat to exclude the light, to divine the location of buried treasures (see Major Problems of Mormonism, pp. 122-127).

> David Whitmer, one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon, was not ashamed of the fact that Joseph Smith used a seer stone to translate the Book of Mormon. Whitmer, in fact, frankly admitted that Smith followed the occultic practice of placing the stone in his hat to translate the Book of Mormon:

> I will now give you a description of the manner in which the Book of Mormon was translated. Joseph would put the seer stone into a hat, and put his face into the hat, drawing it closely around his face to exclude the light; and in the darkness the spiritual light would shine. A piece of something resembling parchment would appear, and on that appeared the writing. . . . Thus the Book of Mormon was translated by the gift and power of God, and not by any power of man. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, p. 12)

At first, David Whitmer felt that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and that his use of the seer stone insured that he was giving true revelations. Just before the Book of Mormon was published, however, Whitmer was greatly shocked to learn that satanic revelations could also come to Joseph Smith through the same stone:

> When the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, more money was needed to finish the printing of it. We were waiting on Martin Harris who was doing his best to sell a part of his farm, in order to raise the necessary funds. After a time Hyrum Smith and others began to get impatient. . . . Brother Hyrum was vexed with Brother Martin, and thought they should get the money by some means outside of him, and not let him have anything to do with the publication of the Book, or receiving any of the profits thereof if any profits should accrue. . . . Brother Hyrum said it had been suggested to him that some of the brethren might go to Toronto, Canada, and sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon for considerable money: and he persuaded Joseph to inquire of the Lord about it. Joseph concluded to do so. He had not yet given up the stone. Joseph looked into the hat in which he placed the stone, and received a revelation that some of the brethren should go to Toronto, Canada, and that they would sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon. Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery went to Toronto on this mission, but they failed entirely to sell the copyright, returning without any money. Joseph was at my father’s house when they returned. I was there also, and am an eye witness to these facts. . . . Well, we were all in great trouble, and we asked Joseph how it was that he had received a revelation from the Lord for some brethren to go to Toronto and sell the copy-right, and the brethren had utterly failed in their undertaking. Joseph did not know how it was, so he enquired of the Lord about it, and behold the following revelation came through the stone: “Some revelations are of God: some revelations are of man: and some revelations are of the devil.” So we see that the revelation to go to Toronto and sell the copyright was not of God, but was of the devil or the heart of man. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, 1887, pp. 30-31)

Mormon historian B. H. Roberts made these comments about Whitmer’s accusation:

> . . . May this Toronto incident and the Prophet’s explanation be accepted and faith still be maintained in him as an inspired man, a Prophet of God? I answer unhesitatingly in the affirmative. The revelation respecting the Toronto journey was not of God, surely; else it would not have failed; but the Prophet, overwrought in his deep anxiety for the progress of the work, saw reflected in the “Seer Stone” his own thought, or that suggested to him by his brother Hyrum, rather than the thought of God . . . in this instance of the Toronto journey, Joseph was evidently not directed by the inspiration of the Lord. (A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 165)

Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the tenth president of the church, was apparently referring to this episode in a press conference in Salt Lake City: “President Smith said he believed, as did LDS Church founder Joseph Smith, that there are three kinds of revelations [sic]: ‘revelations from God, from man and from the devil.’” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 25, 1970)
David Whitmer said that there were “other false revelations that came through Brother Joseph as mouthpiece. . . . Many of Brother Joseph’s revelations were never printed. The revelation to go to Canada was written down on paper, but was never printed” (An Address To All Believers In Christ, p. 31).

The knowledge that Joseph Smith could receive satanic or man-made revelations through the same stone he used to translate the Book of Mormon must have come as a heavy blow to the special witnesses to that book. Oliver Cowdery, one of the Three Witnesses, obviously lost faith in Joseph Smith’s ability to detect satanic or man-made verses in the revelations because he wrote a letter to Smith in which he claimed “he had discovered an error” in one of his revelations (Doctrine and Covenants 20:37). According to Smith, Cowdery said the “quotation . . . was erroneous, and added: ‘I command you in the name of God to erase those words, that no priestcraft be amongst us!’” (History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 105). Although Joseph Smith strongly rebuked Oliver Cowdery, it soon became obvious that the issue concerning satanic verses was not really settled. About three months later, Joseph Smith was surprised to learn that one of the Eight Witnesses to the Book of Mormon [there are two sets of witnesses: the Three Witnesses and the Eight Witnesses] was giving satanic revelations and that other witnesses were being led astray:

To our great grief, however, we soon found that Satan had been lying in wait to deceive . . . Brother Hiram Page had in his possession a certain stone, by which he had obtained certain “revelations” concerning the upbuilding of Zion, the order of the Church, etc., all of which were entirely at variance with the order of God’s house . . . many, especially the Whitmer family and Oliver Cowdery, were believing much in the things set forth by this stone . . . (History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 109-110)

Although Joseph Smith does not name all of those involved in following these satanic revelations, it could have involved most of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon. He specifically names Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery and says that “the Whitmer family” were influenced by the revelations from this stone. Five of the Book of Mormon witnesses were from the Whitmer family. In an attempt to settle the matter, Joseph Smith claimed he received a revelation from the Lord that Hiram Page’s revelations came from Satan and that he (Joseph) was the only one who could receive revelations for the church:

Behold, I say unto thee, Oliver . . . no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting Joseph Smith, Jun., . . . for he receiveth them even as Moses. . . . thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I shall give him . . . thou shalt not command him who is at thy head . . . thou shalt take thy brother, Hiram Page, between him and thee alone, and tell him that those things which he hath written from that stone are not of me and that Satan deceiveth him . . . (Doctrine and Covenants 28:1-3, 6, 11)

CHANGING REVELATIONS

Like the fictionalized story of Mohammed which Salman Rushdie has written, Mormonism has a serious problem with changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations. According to Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer, Joseph Smith and some of the other brethren became “spiritually blinded” and made important changes in the revelations. Whitmer claimed that Joseph Smith’s scribe and confidant, Sidney Rigdon, was a thorough Bible scholar, a man of fine education, and a powerful orator. He soon worked himself deep into Brother Joseph’s affections, and had more influence over him than any other man living. . . . Brother Joseph rejoiced, believing that the Lord had sent him this great and mighty man. . . Poor Brother Joseph! He was mistaken about this. . . . Sydney Rigdon was the cause of almost all the errors which were introduced while he was in the church. . . . Rigdon would expound the Old Testament scriptures of the Bible and Book of Mormon (in his way) to Joseph . . . and would persuade Brother Joseph to inquire of the Lord about this doctrine and that doctrine, and of course a revelation would always come just as they desired it. . . . Remember also that “some revelations are of God, some revelations are of man; and some revelations are of the devil.” False spirits, which come as an Angel of Light, are abroad in the earth to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect. Those whom Satan can deceive and lead into error he deceives. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, p. 35)

According to David Whitmer, Sidney Rigdon, like the wicked scribe mentioned in Rushdie’s novel, managed to get his satanic or man-made ideas into Joseph Smith’s revelations. Whitmer felt that Rigdon went even further than this: he was able to convince Smith to change some of the revelations he had already dictated:

I was told that Sidney Rigdon was the cause of those changes being made: by smooth talk he convinced Brother Joseph and that committee that it was all right. . . . I will not accuse those who did it of being fully aware of the grievous error they were making when they added those items—that is, made those changes; I would rather believe that they were spiritually blinded when they did it: and that Satan deceived them, whispering to them that it was all right and acceptable unto God. (Ibid, p. 61)

In a thesis written at Brigham Young University, the Mormon apologist Melvin J. Petersen acknowledged that “Many words were added to the revelations” in the Doctrine and Covenants (“A Study of the Nature of and Significance of the Changes in the Revelations as Found in a Comparison of the Book of Commandments and Subsequent Editions of the Doctrine and Covenants,” Master’s thesis, BYU, 1955, typed copy, p. 147). On pages 162-63 of the same thesis, Mr. Petersen wrote:

. . . Joseph Smith’s language, as found in the revelations credited to him, needed correcting. There were many grammatical errors in the revelations he first published. . . . Joseph Smith in revising the first published commandments, . . . enlarged upon them . . . Certain omissions were made when unnecessary material was deleted from the revelations; also incidents that were past and of no significance except to a few.

While there have been some Mormon writers who have been willing to admit that Joseph Smith’s revelations have been changed, many have not been that honest. Apostle John A. Widtsoe, for instance, maintained that the revelations “have remained unchanged. There has been no tampering with God’s Word” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, p. 119). Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the tenth president of the church, likewise maintained that there “was no need for eliminating, changing, or adjusting” the revelations (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 1, p. 170).

To properly understand the changes that have been made in the revelations we must understand the history of the Doctrine and Covenants. In 1833 the Mormon Church published the revelations that had been given to the church by Joseph Smith in a book entitled, A Book of Commandments, For The Government Of The Church Of Christ. Mormon writer William E. Berrett explains:

In the latter part of 1831, it was decided by a council of Church leaders to compile the revelations concerning the origin of the Church and its organization. The collection was to be called the “Book of Commandments.” . . . Joseph Smith received a revelation which was made the preface for the new volume and is now Section 1 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In this preface we read: “Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful. . . . After accepting the collection as scripture it was voted to print 10,000 copies. (The Restored Church, 1956, p. 138)

The church was unable to finish the printing of the Book of Commandments as they had planned because the printing press was destroyed by a mob. In 1835 the revelations were printed again, and the name of the book was changed to the Doctrine and Covenants. New revelations were added to this book and many of the previous revelations were revised. In modern editions of the Doctrine and Covenants we find the following on the page that follows the title page:

Certain parts were issued at Zion, Jackson County, Missouri, in 1833, under the title, Book of Commandments for the Government of the Church of Christ[,] An enlarged compilation was issued at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1835, under the title, Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter-day Saints[,] Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer said that “Joseph and the brethren” received the Book of Commandments “at first as being printed correctly, but they soon decided to print the Doctrine and Covenants” (An Address to Believers in the Book of Mormon, p. 6). The Doctrine and Covenants was printed in the year 1835. Since the same revelations that were published in the Book of Commandments were put into the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, one would expect them to read exactly the same as when they were first published. This was not the case, however, and David Whitmer objected strenuously to what had been done:

Some of the revelations as they now appear in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants have been changed and added to. Some of the changes being of the greatest importance as the meaning is entirely changed on some very important matters; as if the Lord had changed his mind a few years after he give [sic] the revelations, and after having commanded his servants (as they claim) to print them in the “Book of Commandments.” . . . The revelations were printed in the Book of Commandments correctly! This I know, . . . Joseph and the church received it as being printed correctly. This I know. But in the winter of 1834 they saw that some of the revelations in the Book of Commandments had to be changed, because the heads of the church had gone too far, and had done things in which they had already gone ahead of some of the former revelations. So the book of “Doctrine and Covenants” was printed in 1835, and some of the revelations changed and added to. (Letter written by David Whitmer, published in the Saints’ Herald, February 5, 1887)

In order to show some of the important changes that were made in the revelations, we obtained photographs of the original Book of Commandments (the original book is now supposed to be worth about $50,000). We compared these pages with the revelations as published in the 1966 printing of the Doctrine and Covenants and marked the changes on the photographs. The reader will find photographs of eight pages from the Book of Commandments in our new book, Major Problems of Mormonism.

In his pamphlet, David Whitmer mentions a number of important changes which the early church leaders made in the revelations. While we do not have much room to make a study of the changes here, we will give a few examples. On page 109 of Major Problems of Mormonism, we have a photograph of a page from Chapter 4 of the Book of Commandments. The photograph demonstrates that 154 words have been deleted from verses 5 and 6 of this revelation without any indication. In his BYU thesis, page 140, Mormon apologist Melvin J. Petersen said that “Joseph Smith . . . was dissatisfied with the wording of verses five and six in portraying the concept he had received, and therefore he omitted verses five and six of Chapter four and rewrote in their place verse three of the 1835 edition . . .” Mr. Petersen seemed to feel that Joseph Smith had a perfect right to do this. Although we agree that Smith had a right to revise his own writings, we do not feel that he had a right to revise the revelations which he claimed to be the very words of God. In the very first revelation that was published in the Book of Commandments, verses 2 and 7, we read:

Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my Preface unto the Book of my Commandments, . . .

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them, shall all be fulfilled. What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken, and I excuse not myself, and though the heavens and the earth pass away, my word shall not pass away . . .

If these were really revelations from God, Joseph Smith could not revise them without discrediting the previous declaration.

On page 110 of Major Problems of Mormonism, we have a photograph of Chapter 6 of the Book of Commandments. This revelation is supposed to contain a translation of a parchment written by the Apostle John. Mormons claim Joseph Smith translated this parchment by means of the Urim and Thummim. When this revelation was published in the Book of Commandments in 1833, it contained 143 words, but when it was reprinted in the Doctrine and Covenants in 1835, it had been expanded to 252 words. Thus we see that 109 words have been added!

On page 114 of Major Problems of Mormonism, we have a photograph of Chapter 28 of the Book of Commandments. The reader who examines the photograph will notice that over 400 words have been added to this revelation. Part of the interpolation concerns the visitation of Peter, James, and John to Joseph Smith. The Mormon leaders claim that they restored the Melchizedek priesthood. Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer, however, maintained that the Melchizedek priesthood came into the church by a process of evolution rather than by revelation.

In no place in the word of God does it say that an Elder is after the order of Melchisedec, or after the order of the Melchisedec Priesthood. An Elder is after the order of Christ. This matter of “priesthood,” since the days of Sydney Rigdon, has been the great hobby and stumbling-block of the Latter Day Saints. Priesthood means authority; and authority is the word we should use. I do not think the word priesthood is mentioned in the New Covenant of the Book of Mormon. Authority is the word we used for the first two years in the church until Sydney Rigdon’s days in Ohio. This matter of two orders of priesthood in the Church of Christ, and lineal priesthood of the old law being in the church, all originated in the mind of Sydney Rigdon. He explained these things to Brother Joseph in his way, out of the old Scriptures, and got Brother Joseph to inquire, etc. He would inquire, and as mouthpiece speak out the revelations just as they had it fixed up in their hearts. As I have said before, according to the desires of the heart, the inspiration comes, but it may be the spirit of man that gives it. How easily a man can receive some other spirit, appearing as an Angel of Light, believing at the time that he is giving the revealed will of God; . . . This is the way the High Priests and the ‘priesthood’ as you have it, was introduced into the Church of Christ almost two years after its beginning . . . (An Address To All Believers In Christ, p. 64)

The fact that the statement concerning the visitation of Peter, James, and John had to be interpolated into Section 28 of the Book of Commandments when it was reprinted in the Doctrine and Covenants (Section 27) provides evidence to support David Whitmer’s charge concerning the manner in which the Mormon priesthood was established. LaMar Petersen points out the serious nature of the historical problems regarding the restoration of the priesthood. He shows, for instance, that Joseph Smith’s 1842 printing of his History differs significantly from an account printed eight years earlier. He then goes on to state:

The important details that are missing from the “full history” of 1834 are likewise missing from the Book of Commandments in 1833. The student would expect to find all the particulars of the Restoration in this first treasured set of 65 revelations, the dates of which encompassed the bestowals of the two Priesthoods, but they are conspicuously absent. . . .

The notable revelations on Priesthood in the Doctrine and Covenants before referred to, Sections 2 and 13, are missing, and Chapter 28 gives no hint of the Restoration which, if actual, had been known for four years. More than four hundred words were added to this revelation of August 1829 in Section 27 of the Doctrine and Covenants, the additions made to include the names of heavenly visitors and two separate ordinations. The Book of Commandments gives the duties of Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons and refers to Joseph’s apostolic calling but there is no mention of Melchizedek Priesthood, Seventies, High Priests, nor High Councilors. These words were later inserted into the revelation on Church organization and government of April, 1830, making it appear that they were known at that date, but they do not appear in the original, Chapter 24 of the Book of Commandments three years later. Similar interpolations were made in the revelations now known as Sections 42 and 68.

There seems to be no support for the historicity of the Restoration of the Priesthood in journals, diaries, letters, nor printed matter prior to October, 1834. (Problems In Mormon Text, by LaMar Petersen, 1957, pp. 7-8)

The evidence leads us to conclude that David Whitmer’s suggestion that the “two orders of priesthood” in the Mormon Church “originated in the mind of Sydney Rigdon” fits the historical picture far better than the idea of a Restoration by heavenly messengers. For more information on this subject see our work Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 179-182. In addition, the Mormon scholar Dan Vogel has recently written a book, Religious Seekers And The Advent of Mormonism, which has some important information concerning the changes in the revelations relating to priesthood.

Thousands of words were added, deleted or changed in the revelations after they were published in the Book of Commandments and other early Mormon publications. Even after Joseph Smith’s death, the Mormon leaders continued to make changes in his revelations (see Major Problems of Mormonism, pp. 119-121). In spite of the fact that their own revelations have been seriously altered, church officials have been very free in accusing others of making changes. Apostle Mark E. Petersen, for instance, maintained that “deliberate falsifications and fabrications were perpetrated” in the Bible (As Translated Correctly, 1966, p. 4). On page 27 of the same book, Apostle Petersen wrote: “It seems unthinkable to the honest and devout mind that any man or set of men would deliberately change the text of the Word of God to further their own peculiar purposes.”

We certainly agree that it would be dishonest to change the “Word of God,” and this causes us to wonder how Mormon leaders can justify the changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations, since they consider them to be the “Word of God.” Apostle Bruce R. McConkie contended that most of the sections printed in the Doctrine and Covenants “came to Joseph Smith by direct revelation, the recorded words being those of the Lord Jesus Christ himself” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, p. 206).

Our examination of the revelations revealed that thousands of words were added, deleted or changed. How can the Mormon leaders explain this? On pages 164-65 of his thesis, the Mormon apologist Melvin J. Petersen argued that Joseph Smith had the “power” to “revise, correct, omit, or change any of his writings in order that he might manifest more clearly what God revealed through him . . . A prophet cannot be justly criticized when he rewrites the commandments he received from God, for he is only doing that which is part of his role as a prophet.”

David Whitmer pointed out the absurdity of such an idea when he wrote:

Is it possible that the minds of men can be so blinded as to believe that God would give these revelations—command them to print them in His Book of Commandments—and then afterwards command them to change and add to them some words which change the meaning entirely? As if God had changed his mind entirely after giving his word? Is it possible that a man who pretends to any spirituality would believe that God would work in any such manner? (Saints’ Herald, February 5, 1887)

David Whitmer was convinced that the portions added to Joseph Smith’s early revelations were “satanic verses” which corrupted God’s word. Furthermore, he completely rejected Joseph Smith’s revelation on polygamy because he believed it came from the devil. Although Joseph Smith’s brother, Hyrum, later accepted the principle of plural marriage, in 1843 he declared that this doctrine was from Satan:

In May 1843 . . . Hyrum, William Law and William Marks . . . were suspicious that their worst fears were true—Joseph was teaching plural marriage . . . Hyrum spoke on 14 May . . . taking as his text Jacob 2 in the Book of Mormon—quoting the verses that are a severe denunciation of polygamy. . . . Hyrum said to the Saints, “If an angel from heaven should come and preach such doctrine, [you] would be sure to see his cloven foot and cloud of blackness over his head.” (Andrew F. Ehat, “Joseph Smith’s Introduction of Temple Ordinances and the 1844 Mormon Succession Question,” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, December 1982, p. 56)

Ebenezer Robinson claimed that Joseph Smith’s brother, Don Carlos, stated: “‘Any man who will teach and practice the doctrine of spiritual wifery will go to hell, I don’t care if it is my brother Joseph’” (The Return, vol. 2, p. 287). Joseph Smith’s own wife, Emma, felt that her husband’s revelation on the subject of polygamy was either man-made or from the lower regions. Joseph Smith’s private secretary, William Clayton wrote in his journal that when Joseph and Hyrum Smith came to Emma and read the revelation, she “said she did not believe a word of it and appeared very rebellious” (William Clayton’s Diary, July 12, 1843, typed extracts by Andrew F. Ehat, as cited in Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered, p. 20).

The false revelation concerning the sale of the copyright of the Book of Mormon, the many changes made in the published revelations, and the polygamy revelation all combined to undermine the faith of many important leaders in the early Mormon Church. Even before the revelation on plural marriage was given, a number of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon felt that they could not rely on Joseph Smith. In 1839 John Whitmer, who still maintained that Joseph Smith had showed him some kind of plates, came to question whether Smith’s translation was really correct, Professor Richard L. Anderson, of the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University, gives this information:

When Turley next asked bluntly why Whitmer now doubted the work, the witness indicated his inability to translate the characters on the plates: “I cannot read it, and I do not know whether it is true or not.” (Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses, p. 131)

All of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon became disaffected with Joseph Smith’s leadership before his death. Martin Harris later joined with the Strangites—an organization which was denounced by the Mormon leaders. Harris even went on a mission for the Strangites, and when he arrived in Liverpool with his associates, the Mormon Church publication, Latter-Day Saints’ Millennial Star, vol. 8, pp. 124-128, said that “A lying deceptive spirit attends them . . . they know that they are of their father, the devil . . .” Mormon apologist Richard L. Anderson admitted that Harris “changed his religious position eight times” during the period when he was in Kirtland, Ohio (see Improvement Era, March 1969, p. 63). At one point he joined the Shakers who believed that “Christ has made his second appearance on earth, in a chosen female known by the name of Anna Lee, and acknowledged by us as our Blessed Mother in the work of redemption” (A Sacred and Divine Roll and Book; From the Lord God of Heaven, to the Inhabitants of Earth, p. 358). Martin Harris claimed to have a greater testimony to the Shakers than to the Book of Mormon. In a thesis written at Brigham Young University, Wayne Cutler Gunnell revealed that on December 31, 1844, “Phineas H. Young [Brigham Young’s brother] and other leaders of the Kirtland organization” wrote a letter to Brigham Young in which they stated: “Martin Harris is a firm believer in Shakerism, says his testimony is greater than it was of the Book of Mormon” (“Martin Harris—Witness and Benefactor to the Book of Mormon,” 1955, p. 52).

Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery left the Mormons and became a member of the “Methodist Protestant Church of Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio.” G. J. Keen, gave an affidavit in which he said that at the time Cowdery was received into the Methodist Church, “he arose and addressed the audience present, admitted his error and implored forgiveness, and said he was sorry and ashamed of his connection with Mormonism” (The True Origin of the Book of Mormon, by Charles AShook, 1914, pp. 58-59). Evidently the LDS leaders were aware that Cowdery denounced Mormonism when he joined the Methodist Church since they printed a poem which questioned the position that the “Book of Mormon” had been proven untrue “Because denied, by Oliver?” (Times and Seasons, vol. 2, p. 482).

Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer also came out of the Mormon Church in 1838. Whitmer claimed that God Himself told him to leave the Mormons:

If you believe my testimony to the Book of Mormon; if you believe that God spake to us three witnesses by his own voice, than I tell you that in June, 1838, God spake to me again by his own voice from the heavens, and told me to “separate myself from among the Latter Day Saints, for as they sought to do unto me, so should it be done unto them.” . . .
all of the eight witnesses who were then living (except the three Smiths) came out; Peter and Christian Whitmer were dead. Oliver Cowdery came out also. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, pp. 27-28)

Whitmer later gave a revelation in which the Lord was supposed to have told him the Mormons “polluted my name, and have done continually wickedness in my sight” (The Ensign of Liberty, August 1849, pp. 101-104). Whitmer’s revelations present a peculiar problem for Mormon apologists. If they are from God, then they demonstrate that Mormonism is not true. On the other hand, if they are false, they show that David Whitmer gave either man-made or satanic revelations in the name of the Lord! And if this is the case, how can we trust his statement on the Book of Mormon? Mormons ask us to accept David Whitmer’s testimony to the Book of Mormon, but will they accept his revelation that the Mormon Church “polluted” God’s name? Certainly not. Neither will they accept his statement that “God spake to me again by his own voice from the heavens, and told me to ‘separate myself from among the Latter Day Saints.’” David Whitmer never returned to the Mormon Church. While Mormon apologists often argue that we do not have any evidence that David Whitmer ever denied his testimony to the Book of Mormon, they seem to be oblivious to the fact that they do not have any evidence to show that Whitmer ever denied that God told him to leave the Mormons or that he repudiated the other revelations which he gave.

Although Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris changed his mind about religion many times, when he was eighty-eight years old he returned to the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City. There is evidence to show, however, that he was still not satisfied. (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? p. 58)

After Joseph Smith’s death, Oliver Cowdery was rebaptized into the Mormon Church. David Whitmer, however, maintained that Cowdery died believing Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet and that his revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants must be rejected:

I did not say that Oliver Cowdery and John Whitmer had not endorsed the Doctrine and Covenants in 1836. . . . I stated that they “came out of their errors (discarding the Doctrine and Covenants), repented of them, and died believing as I do to-day,” and I have the proof to verify my statement. If any one chooses to doubt my word, let them come to my home in Richmond and be satisfied. In the winter of 1848, after Oliver Cowdery had been baptized at Council Bluffs, he came back to Richmond to live . . . Now, in 1849 the Lord saw fit to manifest unto John Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery and myself nearly all the errors in doctrine into which we had been led by the heads of the old church. . . . They were led out of their errors, and are upon record to this effect, rejecting the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. (An Address to Believers in The Book of Mormon, 1887, pp. 1-2)

PROBLEMS ALL OVER

The problems found in Mormon revelations, history and doctrine are so numerous that many volumes could be written. In fact, a number of years ago we compiled a three volume set entitled, The Case Against Mormonism. Subsequently, we wrote two more volumes entitled, The Mormon Kingdom. These five volumes were condensed into our largest selling work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Our new book, Major Problems of Mormonism, contains a summary of a great many of these problems as well as new material.

A large number of the problems in Mormonism relate to changes in the text of documents published by church officials. David Whitmer seemed to feel that “satanic verses” had been added to Joseph Smith’s revelations. While others would claim that these are merely man-made additions or deletions, the problem is still very serious. If these revelations were really from God why would he allow them to be falsified?

In the Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith, 2 [Joseph Smith—History], we read Joseph Smith’s story concerning God calling him and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. This story raises serious questions to those who are knowledgeable concerning Mormon history. For instance, in the story of the First Vision, Joseph Smith claimed that “two Personages” appeared to him (verse 17). One of them pointed to the other and said: “This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him!” The personages, therefore, were supposed to have been God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ, and the Mormons have always used this story to prove that “The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man’s . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants 130:22). The problem, however, is that evidence has come forth from the Mormon Church Archives that Joseph Smith wrote a different account of this vision a number of years before the official account was published. This account was suppressed by the church and only a few people knew of its existence until we published it in 1965. Four years later, Dean C. Jessee, who was “a member of the staff at the LDS Church Historian’s Office,” claimed the “1831-32 history transcribed here contains the earliest known account of Joseph Smith’s First Vision” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1969, pp. 277-278). In a later issue of BYU Studies, Summer 1971, p. 462, Jessee made it clear that this was not only the first extant account of the First Vision, but that it was the only account in “the actual handwriting of Joseph Smith.”

This handwritten document differs drastically from the official version in the Pearl of Great Price. In this account, the Mormon prophet only mentions one personage: “. . . saw the Lord . . .” The context makes it very clear that the personage was Jesus Christ and that Joseph Smith did not include God the Father in his first handwritten account of the vision. Mormon historian James B. Allen commented: “In this story, only one personage was mentioned, and this was obviously the Son, for he spoke of having been crucified” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1966, p. 40). A photograph of this handwritten document by Joseph Smith can be found in Major Problems of Mormonism, p. 56.

The only reasonable explanation for the Father not being mentioned is that Joseph Smith did NOT see God the Father, and that he made up this part of the story after he wrote the first manuscript. This, of course, throws a shadow of doubt upon the entire story. A person who would go so far Joseph Smith had corrected forty-two pages before his massacre. It is obvious, therefore, that Smith intended to have his followers understand that the angel’s name was “Nephi.” The version which the church has canonized in modern editions of the Pearl of Great Price was changed so that there would be no contradictions in the prophet’s stories concerning how he obtained the gold plates.

After Joseph Smith’s death, the Mormon leaders took a free hand to change anything they wanted in his History. In spite of the many falsifications made in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, church leaders referred to it as “the most accurate history in all the world, it must be so” (Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, p. 199). Apostle John A. Widtsoe boasted that these volumes prove “that Joseph Smith told the truth. . . . There is in them no attempt to ‘cover up’ any act of his life” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, p. 257). Notwithstanding the many claims put forth concerning the accuracy of the History by church officials, the truth is that the church broke almost all the rules of honesty in their publication of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. It is a well-known fact that when an omission is made in a document it should be indicated by ellipses points. The church, however, has almost completely ignored this rule; in many cases thousands of words have been deleted without any indication, and in other cases thousands of words have been added without any indication! Some of Joseph Smith’s prophecies that did not come to pass were altered. Many exaggerated and contradictory statements were either changed or deleted without indication. Crucial or inaccurate statements were also deleted. In the first printed version of the History, Joseph Smith cursed his enemies, condemned other churches and beliefs, and called the President of the United States a fool. Many of these extreme statements were omitted or changed. Mormon leaders did not dare let their people see the real Joseph Smith. They falsified the History of the Church rather than allow Joseph Smith’s true character to be known.

Many years ago we charged that although the title page for the History of the Church claimed that it was the “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet BY HIMSELF,” evidence derived from many sources showed that a large portion of it was written after his death. Dean C. Jessee, who was a member of the staff at the LDS Church Historian’s Office, later admitted that the manuscript was only completed to page 812 at the time of Joseph Smith’s death. Since there were almost 2,200 pages, this would mean that only about 40% of the History was actually written during Joseph Smith’s lifetime, and that 60% was actually authored by church officials after his death! Jessee, in fact, admitted that the History was not completed until twelve years after Smith’s death: “The Joseph Smith History was finished in August 1856, seventeen years after it was begun” (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, pp. 466-472). Although Joseph Smith’s diaries were used as one source for the History, there was no attempt to accurately follow the text of these diaries. Mormon leaders chose only the portions of the diaries which suited their purposes. Where a portion did not say what they wanted, they altered it or ignored it entirely, sometimes using an entirely... different source. Furthermore, only certain periods of Joseph Smith’s last six years are covered by extant diaries. To fill in the missing years newspapers and journals of other Mormon leaders were used and much of the material came only from memory. This material was written in the first person to make it appear that Joseph Smith was the author!

Mormon apologists have often referred to Joseph Smith’s prophecies concerning the Latter-day Saints coming to the Rocky Mountains and the fact that Steven A. Douglas would aspire to the presidency of the United States but fail if he opposed Mormonism as evidence of Smith’s divine calling. The evidence, however, clearly shows that both these famous prophecies found in the History of the Church are forgeries added after Joseph Smith’s death (see Major Problems of Mormonism, pp. 85-88). As we have previously noted, in the Preface to the first edition of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith claimed that the Lord told him that “Satan” had put into his enemies’ “hearts to tempt the Lord their God, by altering the words, that they did read contrary from that which I translated and caused to be written . . . I will confound those who have altered my words.” In light of this warning, we wonder how later Mormon leaders could in good conscience alter Joseph Smith’s revelations and other writings after his death.

ANOTHER TRAP

Some people feel that Martin Harris’ wife destroyed the lost 116 pages of the Book of Mormon and consequently have questioned Joseph Smith’s statement that his enemies altered these pages to entrapping him. In any case, in 1843 Joseph Smith’s enemies came up with an ingenious plot to discredit him as a translator. Six brass plates were purported to have been found in a mound in Kinderhook, Illinois. Mormons who saw the plates were impressed by their ancient appearance and felt that they would prove Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon. In a letter written from Nauvoo, Illinois, dated May 2, 1843, Charlotte Haven said that when Joshua Moore “showed them to Joseph [Smith], the latter said that the figures or writing on them was similar to that in which the Book of Mormon was written, and if Mr. Moore could leave them, he thought that by the help of revelation he would be able to translate them” (Overland Monthly, December 1890, page 630).

While the Kinderhook plates have often been put forth as evidence for Joseph Smith’s claims concerning the Book of Mormon, there is another side to the story. Evidence now shows that the Kinderhook plates were actually modern forgeries created specifically for the purpose of entrapping Joseph Smith. Joseph Smith accepted these plates as authentic and even claimed that he had translated a portion of them. The evidence comes from the diary of William Clayton, Joseph Smith’s private secretary. The information in Clayton’s journal was deemed so important that it was put in the first person and used as a basis for the story of the Kinderhook plates which is printed in the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 372. The following is attributed to Joseph Smith:

> I insert fac-similes of the six brass plates found near Kinderhook, . . .
> I have translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, through the loins of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth.

After the plates were found, nine “citizens of Kinderhook” certified that R. Wiley took the “six brass plates” from “a large mound, in this vicinity.” Unfortunately for the Mormon position, it was later revealed that the plates were forgeries. On April 25, 1855, W. P. Harris, who was one of the nine witnesses to the discovery of the plates, wrote a letter in which he stated that the plates were not genuine:

> . . . I was present with a number at or near Kinderhook, and helped to dig at the time the plates were found . . . I . . . made an honest affidavit to the same . . . since that time, Bridge Whitten said to me that he cut and prepared the plates and he . . . and R. Wiley engraved them themselves . . . Wilbourn Fugit appeared to be the chief, with R. Wiley and B. Whitten. (The Book of Mormon by James D. Bales, pp. 95-96)

On June 30, 1879, W. Fugate, who was also one of the nine people who signed the certificate, wrote a letter in which he admitted his part in the hoax:

> I received your letter in regard to those plates, and will say in answer that they are a humbug, gotten up by Robert Wiley, Bridge Whitten and myself . . . We read in Pratt’s prophecy that “Truth is yet to spring out of the earth.” We concluded to prove the prophecy by way of a joke. (Letter of W. Fugate, as cited in The Kinderhook Plates, by Welby W. Ricks, reprinted from the Improvement Era, September 1962)

At the time of the Civil War, the Kinderhook plates were lost. M. Wilford Poulson, of Brigham Young University, later found one of the original plates in the Chicago Historical Society Museum. The plate which he found has been identified as no. 5 in the facsimiles printed in the History of the Church. While Professor Poulson’s research led him to believe that the plate was a forgery, Welby W. Ricks, who was President of the BYU Archaeological Society, hailed the discovery as a vindication of Joseph Smith’s work:

> A recent rediscovery of one of the Kinderhook plates which was examined by Joseph Smith, Jun., reaffirms his prophetic calling and reveals the false statements made by one of the finders. . . .
> The plates are now back in their original category of genuine . . . Joseph Smith, Jun., stands as a true prophet and translator of ancient records by divine means and all the world is invited to investigate the truth which has sprung out of the earth not only of the Kinderhook plates, but of the Book of Mormon as well. (The Kinderhook Plates)

In 1965, three years after Mr. Ricks made this triumphant announcement, George M. Lawrence, a Mormon physicist, was given permission to examine and make “some non-destructive physical studies of the surviving plate.” In his “Report of a Physical Study of the Kinderhook Plate Number 5,” George Lawrence wrote: “The dimensions, tolerances, composition and workmanship are consistent with the facilities of an 1843 blacksmith shop and with the fraud stories of the original participants.” Since Mr. Lawrence was only allowed to make non-destructive tests, some Mormon scholars would not accept his work as conclusive. In 1980, however, the Mormon scholar Stanley P. Kimball was able “to secure permission from the Chicago Historical Society for the recommended destructive tests.” Professor Kimball described the results of the tests in the official Mormon Church publication, The Ensign, August 1981, pp. 66-70:

A recent electronic and chemical analysis of a metal plate . . . brought in 1843 to the Prophet Joseph Smith . . . appears to solve a previously unanswered question in Church history, helping to further evidence that the plate is what its producers later said it was—a nineteenth-century attempt to lure Joseph Smith into making a translation of ancient-looking characters that had been etched into the plates . . . As a result of these tests, we concluded that the plate . . . is not of ancient origin. . . . we concluded that the plate was made from a true brass alloy (copper and zinc) typical of the mid-nineteenth century; whereas the “brass” of ancient times was actually bronze, an alloy of copper and tin.

If Joseph Smith had not been murdered in June 1844, it is very possible he might have published a complete “translation” of these bogus plates. Just a month before his death, it was reported that he was “busy in translating them. The new work . . . will be nothing more nor less than a sequel to the Book of Mormon, . . .” (Warsaw Signal, May 22, 1844). The fact that Joseph Smith was actually preparing to print a translation of the plates is verified by a broadside published by the Mormon newspaper, The Nauvoo Neighbor, in June 1843. On this broadside, containing facsimiles of the plates, we find the following: “The contents of the Plates, together with a Fac-Simile of the same, will be published in the Times and Seasons, as soon as the translation is completed.”

In any case, it is obvious that Joseph Smith’s work on these fraudulent plates casts serious doubt upon his credibility as a translator of Mormon scriptures like the Book of Mormon and the Book of Abraham. Smith’s translation of characters on the Kinderhook plates was supposed to have revealed that the plates “contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, through the loins of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth.” Now, in order to derive this much information from the plates it would have been necessary to have “translated” quite a number of the words. A man who could invent such information from bogus plates is just the type of man who would pretend to translate the Book of Abraham from Egyptian papyri which he really knew nothing about or the Book of Mormon from golden plates which he never made available to scholars. Charles A. Shook once observed: “Only a bogus prophet translates bogus plates.” While this may not be the most tactful way of putting it, this is a very serious problem which cannot be brushed aside.

The implications of this whole matter for the story of the Book of Mormon are very serious indeed. Joseph Smith, of course, claimed that he had eleven witnesses who saw the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. Smith, however, was careful not to show them to the public. He did not allow any one who was trained to detect forgery or who had studied ancient languages to examine the original plates. In the case of the Kinderhook plates, however, they were publicly exhibited and many people had a chance to examine them. Both William Clayton and Brigham Young had the privilege of tracing or making an outline of one of the pages in their journals. Furthermore, “the Nauvoo Neighbor press [a Mormon newspaper] had access to them and was thus able to produce facsimiles for the published broadside” (The Ensign, August 1981, p. 72). The first three presidents of the Mormon Church, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and John Taylor, all believed that the Kinderhook plates were authentic. B. H. Roberts stated that “John Taylor, the close personal friend of the Prophet—took the find seriously, and expressed implicit confidence in his editorial that the Prophet could give a translation of the plates. And this attitude the Church, continued to maintain; . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 5, p. 379, footnote). That not one of the first three prophets of the church could tell the difference between ancient plates and plates “cut from a sheet that had been rolled” in the 19th century raises a serious question concerning the validity of the testimony of Joseph Smith’s eleven witnesses concerning the plates of the Book of Mormon.

In their testimony printed in the Book of Mormon, the Eight Witnesses to that book said that the plates had “the appearance of gold.” Mormon historian B. H. Roberts said that the “weight of the plates was doubtless considerable, being of gold, and each plate six by eight inches in width and length, and the whole volume six inches thick” (Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 93). Apostle John A. Widtsoe and Franklin S. Harris, Jr., estimated that “A cube of solid gold of that size, if the gold were pure, would weigh two hundred pounds, which would have been a heavy weight for a man to carry . . .” (Seven Claims of the Book of Mormon, p. 37). This presents a problem because B. H. Roberts says in his history of the church (page 91) that at one time Joseph Smith had to carry the plates “between two and three miles” to his home. During this journey he was watched by his enemies and “three times he was assaulted by as many different persons” along the way. Joseph Smith’s mother said that as “he was jumping over a log, a man sprang up from behind it, and gave him a heavy blow with a gun. Joseph turned around and knocked him down, and then ran at the top of his speed. About half a mile further he was attacked again . . . and before he reached home he was assaulted the third time.” No one was able to catch him, however, and he arrived home with the plates (Joseph Smith’s History By His Mother, a photo reprint of the original 1853 edition, p. 105). In trying to deal with this problem, Widtsoe and Harris suggested that it “is very unlikely . . . that the plates were made of pure gold.” They felt that gold might have been “mixed with a certain amount of copper” and referred to the work of J. M. Sjodahl who said the plates may have “weighted less than one hundred pounds.” Even if the plates weighed only seventy-five pounds, we feel that it is unlikely that Joseph Smith could have carried them for “between two and three miles,” running “at the top of his speed,” jump over a log and fight off three assailants along the way.

It is very possible that the witnesses to the Book of Mormon may have been shown some plates cut from a sheet of rolled metal which had been coated with gold or something that had the “appearance of gold.” Joseph Smith said that each plate was “not quite so thick as common tin” (History of the Church, vol. 4, p. 537). Martin Harris, on the other hand, maintained that “each of the plates was thicker than the thickest tin.” David Whitmer felt that they were about as thick as “common tin used by tinsmiths.” Mormon apologists might argue that if the plates had only been coated in some way to give them the appearance of gold, the person who made the “engravings” on them would have had a problem convincing others that they were genuine. The tool used to make the engravings would cut down into the metal below and expose the fact that the plates were not really made of gold. Apostle Orson Pratt, however, made a rather strange statement about some type of stain being on the plates where the engraving appeared: “They [the witnesses] describe these plates as being about the thickness of common tin . . . Upon each side of the leaves of these plates there were fine engravings, which were stained with a black, hard stain, so as to make the letters more legible and easier to be read” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, pp. 30-31). Such a “black, hard stain” could, of course, prevent the witnesses from noticing that the color of the metal in the engraved portions was different from the rest of the plates.

There is another interesting aspect to the story: Apostle Widtsoe noted that “part of the plates, said to be about two-thirds, was sealed” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, p. 38). The printed Book of Mormon was supposed to have been translated from the unsealed portion—the remaining third. The witnesses were not allowed to look at the other two-thirds of the plates. If the plates were forgeries, it would be very difficult and time consuming to make engravings on the entire stack. By sealing two-thirds of them together, however, it would only be necessary to make engravings on the remaining third. These could be shown to the witnesses and they would probably never suspect that the other two-thirds of the plates did not have engravings on them. (For more information on this matter see The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, p. 39.) In any case, since the Book of Mormon witnesses were neither experts in ancient languages nor qualified archaeologists, it would be very easy to fool them with some “kind of makeshift deception.”

While the forged Kinderhook plates present a real dilemma for those who maintain Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, Smith’s purported translation of the Book of Abraham presents an even greater problem because it was canonized as scripture in the Pearl of Great Price. The Egyptian papyrus from which the Book of Abraham was translated was acquired by Joseph Smith in 1835. Smith boldly asserted that it was actually penned by the patriarch Abraham. Since the science of Egyptology was in its infancy at that time, Smith was able to publish a “translation” without fear of exposure. In 1968, however, the very piece of papyrus which Joseph Smith used to produce his “Book of Abraham” was translated by noted Egyptologists Klaus Baer and Richard A. Parker. They found it contained absolutely nothing concerning Abraham. Instead, it turned out to be a pagan funerary text known as the “Book of Breathings”—an Egyptian funerary text filled with pagan gods and practices. The names of at least fifteen Egyptian gods or goddesses are mentioned in this work, but there is not one word about Abraham. Since the verses found in the Book of Abraham did not come from the papyrus as Joseph Smith claimed, some might argue that they were “satanic verses.” Others, of course, would say that they came from Joseph Smith’s own fertile imagination. (For more information on the Book of Abraham see Major Problems of Mormonism, pp. 216-228)

SATAN STILL AT WORK?

During the 1980’s an impostor by the name of Mark Hofmann arose and succeeded in laying a snare for church leaders which has led many to question the claim that there is a special pipeline between Mormonism and God. Because his scheme seemed so diabolical, some Mormons have concluded that he was inspired by Satan himself. Mr. Hofmann was a forger who went far beyond producing “satanic verses.” He, in fact, wrote entire documents for the express purpose of deceiving the leaders of the church.

Mark Hofmann, who had served as a missionary for the Mormon Church and was married in the temple, became well-known to the General Authorities of the church in 1980 when he claimed that he found the original Anthon Transcript—a sheet of paper which was supposed to contain characters copied by Joseph Smith himself from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. The Mormon Church’s newspaper, Deseret News, for May 3, 1980, reported that this was “the oldest known Mormon document as well as the earliest sample of the Prophet’s handwriting.” The Mormon hierarchy were completely sold on the document, and, according to Church Archivist Donald Schmidt, Mr. Hofmann was eventually given “roughly $20,000” worth of items from the Church Archives in exchange for this single sheet of paper and a Bible in which it was supposed to have been found. Mormon leaders and church scholars were elated with Hofmann’s discovery. Hugh Nibley, the church’s most noted apologist, was certain the transcript was genuine and went so far as to proclaim that it contained Egyptian characters which could be translated. The truth, as it later turned out, was that the paper only contained Hofmann’s own doodlings.

Less than a year after Mark Hofmann made his first discovery, the church disclosed that he had uncovered another very significant document. This was a handwritten sheet showing that Joseph Smith designated his son, Joseph Smith III, to succeed him as “A Seer, and a Revelator, and a Prophet, unto the Church.” The Mormon newspaper, Deseret News, March 19, 1981, announced that “[Earl E.] Olson and other LDS officials said they are convinced the blessing is authentic.” This was a very controversial document because it indicated that Joseph Smith III—not Brigham Young—was Joseph Smith’s true successor. Nevertheless, Mormon leaders believed it was genuine and Mark Hofmann was compensated with material from the Church Archives which had a value “in the neighborhood of $20,000.” After the discovery of the blessing document, Mark Hofmann began turning up an astounding number of important Mormon documents, some of which were very controversial.

In January 1983, Mark Hofmann approached Gordon B. Hinckley with a letter which was purportedly written by Joseph Smith in 1825. The contents of the letter were very embarrassing to the Mormon Church. President Hinckley, therefore, paid Hofmann $15,000 for the letter and hid it in a vault for 28 months. Before the end of 1983, Mr. Hofmann had forged still another letter which humiliated the church and caused many members to question its divine origin. This letter, purported to have been written by Book of Mormon witness Martin Harris, was known as the Salamander letter.

In spite of the warnings which we printed in the Salt Lake City Messenger concerning Mr. Hofmann’s documents, Mormon Church leaders continued to deal with and help Hofmann until the middle of October, 1985. On the 15th of that month, Salt Lake City was rocked with the news that bombs had killed two people. One was a Mormon bishop named Steven F. Christensen. It was later discovered that Mr. Christensen had been working secretly with the Mormon Church and Mark Hofmann to obtain the so-called McLellin collection. Mr. Hofmann had convinced the Mormon leaders that if the McLellin collection fell into the hands of the enemy, it would cause great embarrassment to the church. These documents were to be purchased by an anonymous buyer who would eventually donate them to the church. In this way the documents could be suppressed from the knowledge of the public.

On October 16, a bomb exploded in Mark Hofmann’s car and he was critically injured. At first the police thought Mr. Hofmann was the victim of a cruel bomber. Within a short time, however, they came to believe that Hofmann himself was the bomber and that he was transporting a bomb which accidentally exploded. Mr. Hofmann was eventually charged with murdering Steven Christensen and Kathleen Sheets, the wife of another Mormon bishop. On January 23, 1987, Mark Hofmann pled guilty to the murder charges and also confessed that the Salamander letter was a forgery. He later told of the methods he used to forge many documents and boasted that he had deceived the Mormon leaders.

Mark Hofmann had a very clever plan to fool the Mormon leaders. He forged documents which were both favorable and unfavorable to the church. In addition, he forged a large number which were neutral in their content. The Hofmann documents which were favorable to the Mormon Church were proudly displayed in church publications. The leaders of the Mormon Church had a great deal of faith in “Brother Hofmann” (see Deseret News, Church Section, May 3, 1980).

In the Salt Lake Tribune, April 19, 1986, Mike Carter referred to the “blind trust of LDS officials in bombing suspect Mark W. Hofmann . . .” Mr. Carter went on to say that it “was apparent that church leaders, including President Hinckley, trusted Mr. Hofmann implicitly . . .”

Because they boast of having special guidance from the Lord, the Mormon leaders have lost a great deal of credibility through the Hofmann affair. According to Ezra Taft Benson, the present Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the church, “The Prophet Will Never Lead The Church Astray.” (“Fourteen Fundamentals In Following The Prophets,” as cited in Following The Brethren, page 5.) President Benson also maintained that the leaders of the church have special discernment which is far superior to “earthly knowledge.”

As we think of President Benson’s statements concerning the special powers of a prophet, we cannot help but remember a photograph of his predecessor, Spencer W. Kimball, the twelfth Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Mormon Church, which appeared in the Church Section of the Deseret News on May 3, 1980. President Kimball is flanked by Mark Hofmann, President N. Eldon Tanner, President Marion G. Romney, Apostle Boyd K. Packer and Apostle Gordon B. Hinckley.

Neither President Kimball nor any of the other General Authorities were able to detect anything wrong with either “Brother Hofmann” or the Anthon transcript which he was palmimg off on them. Although President Kimball was supposed to be a “seer” and have the power to “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 8:13), he was unable to translate the purported Book of Mormon characters which appear on the so-called Anthon transcript. Instead of using the “seer stone,” as Joseph Smith would have done, he examined the characters with a magnifying glass. Not only did he fail to detect that the characters were only the doodlings of Mark Hofmann, but he was oblivious to the fact that the church was being set up to be defrauded of a large amount of money and many valuable items out of its archives. Moreover, he entirely failed to see the devastating and embarrassing effect this transaction and others which followed would have on the Mormon Church. If ever revelation from the Lord was needed, it was on that day in 1980 when Mark Hofmann stood in the presence of President Kimball.

Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie maintained that church leaders have the gift of discernment:

...the gift of the discerning of spirits is poured out upon presiding officials in God’s kingdom; they have it given to them to discern all gifts and spirits, lest any come among the saints and practice deception. ... even “the thoughts and intents of the heart” are made known. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 197)

While the Mormon leaders claim to have the same powers as the ancient Apostles in the Bible, their performance with regard to Mark Hofmann certainly does not match up to that of Apostle Peter when he caught Ananias and Sapphira red-handed in their attempt to deceive the church with regard to a financial transaction (Acts 5:3).

It would seem that if the same powers were functioning in the Mormon Church today, the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” would have received a revelation warning him concerning Mark Hofmann’s cunning plan to defraud and disgrace the church. If the Mormon Church was ever led by revelation, it has been lacking since Mr. Hofmann came into the church offices with the “Anthon transcript.”

With regard to the inability of the Mormon leaders to detect that the Hofmann documents were fraudulent, a person might try to argue that these documents were not really important spiritual writings, and therefore the Lord did not see fit to intervene when the General Authorities examined them. The truth of the matter, however, is that they contain extremely important material directly relating to spiritual affairs. The Salamander letter, for example, changes the story of the Angel Moroni appearing to Joseph Smith to that of a cantankerous and tricky "old spirit" who transforms himself from a white salamander and strikes Joseph Smith. Although non-Mormons could plainly see that this story discredited the Book of Mormon, Mormon leaders tried to pretend that there was really no problem. The church’s Deseret News, Church Section, September 9, 1984, printed an article which stated that the Salamander letter “is no repudiation of Joseph Smith, but rather probably is a further witness of the Prophet’s own account of the discovery of the golden plates.” As late as August 16, 1985, the Mormon Apostle Dallin Oaks spoke of the discovery of the golden plates. “The truth of the matter, however, is that they contain extremely important material directly relating to spiritual matters.”

Some of the purported Joseph Smith writings which Hofmann sold to the church were supposed to contain revelations from the Lord Himself! For instance, the Joseph Smith III Blessing document gives this message from the Lord: “Verily, thus saith the Lord: if he abides in me, his days shall be lengthened upon the earth, but, if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant, unto myself.” The 1838 letter of Joseph Smith, another forgery which the Mormon Church acquired, is in its entirety a revelation purporting to come from the Lord. It begins with the words, “Verily thus Saith the Lord,” and ends with the word “Amen.” The fact that the Mormon leaders were unable to recognize the spurious nature of these revelations casts doubts upon their ability to discern the truthfulness of the other revelations given by Joseph Smith. It has always been claimed that it is virtually impossible for a person to write a revelation that would compare with Joseph Smith’s. It now appears, however, that there is someone who can write revelations comparable to Joseph Smith’s and that it is even possible to get them past the scrutiny of the highest leadership of the Mormon Church.

It now seems incontestable that Mark Hofmann deliberately set out to weaken faith in Mormonism through forgery. Even though Mr. Hofmann’s designs against the Mormon Church did not pan out as he had hoped, he did administer a wound to the church which may never be healed. His close involvement with church leaders has clearly revealed that the church’s claim of latter-day revelation is without foundation.

In his confession, Mark Hofmann said that he could “look someone in the eye and lie” and that he didn’t believe that “someone could be inspired” in a religious sense to know what “my feelings or thoughts were” (Hofmann’s Confession, vol. 1, page 99). On page 112 he boasted that he “wasn’t fearful of the Church inspiration detecting the forgery.” It is evident that Mr. Hofmann has put the claim of revelation in the church to the acid test and found that the so-called “living oracles” are just as fallible as other men. Mormon officials find themselves in a very embarrassing position. At a time when revelation was really needed, they seemed to be completely oblivious to what was going on. Church leaders who claimed to have special powers of revelation, played into Mr. Hofmann’s hands after time. Mark Hofmann did such a good job of convincing church officials that he was trying to help the church that he was given privileged access to material in the archives. Hofmann returned the favor by using the very knowledge he obtained from the documents to create new forgeries to palm off on the church. If the Mormon leaders were truly led by revelation, Mark Hofmann’s nefarious plan could have been thwarted in 1980.

CONCLUSION. While people may debate concerning whether the many changes made in Mormon history and doctrine “are of man” or “of the devil,” one thing is certain: there are too many major problems in the church for one to believe that it is “the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants 1:30). The evidence, in fact, clearly shows that the Mormon Church is man-made and is presently led by leaders who do not have the powers which they claim to possess. Those who wish to know more about these important matters should have a copy of our new book, Major Problems of Mormonism.

DEATH THREATS!

On March 11, 1989, the Salt Lake Tribune reported the following: “University of Utah law professor Edwin Firmage has received more than 150 phone calls and several death threats since he said there is no doctrinal basis for the Mormon Church’s restriction against women holding the church’s priesthood.”

While this might give outsiders the impression that modern Utah is as repressive as Iran’s Ayatollah Khomeini, death threats over religious matters are actually very rare in Mormon country. Although there are some extremists, most Mormons are rather peaceful. If we look back into the past history of the church, however, we find that book-burning and death threats were used to keep the people under control. For instance, in 1844 the newspaper, Nauvoo Expositor, published by Mormon dissidents, exposed Joseph Smith’s secret involvement in polygamy. According to the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 445, Joseph Smith’s brother, Hyrum, felt the best way to deal with the matter was to suppress the newspaper: “Councilor Hyrum Smith believed the best way was to smash the press and pit the type.” Joseph Smith agreed with his brother. On page 432, we read: “I [Joseph Smith] immediately ordered the Marshal to destroy it without delay . . .” The “press, type, printed paper, and fixtures” were taken out in the street and destroyed. This action, of course, eventually led to the murder of Joseph Smith.
In early Utah, President Brigham Young ruled with an iron hand, and like Khomenini, Young did his best to stifle religious dissent. In 1853 a man by the name of Gladden Bishop opposed the practice of polygamy and tried to set up a rival sect. On March 27 of that year, Brigham Young stood before the saints in the Tabernacle and publicly threatened the Bishop and his followers:

We have known Gladden Bishop for more than twenty years, and know him to be a poor, dirty curse. . . . Now you Gladdenites, keep your tongues still, lest sudden destruction come upon you. . . . I say, rather than that apostates should flourish here, I will unsheathe my bowie knife, and conquer or die. . . . Now you nasty apostates, clear out, or judgment will be put to the line. . . . If you say it is right, raise your hands. [All hands up.] Let us call upon the Lord to assist us in this, and every good work. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 83)

Brigham Young was successful in stamping out the Gladdenites' opposition. The historian Hubert Howe Bancroft noted that within a few months, “most of them set forth for California, the rest recanted, and after the year 1854 we hear no more of this apostasy” (History of Utah, p. 644). While Gladden Bishop escaped with his life, many others were not that lucky. The “sudden destruction” which Brigham Young threatened, fell on many who opposed the Mormons in Nauvoo and early Utah. The documentation concerning this matter is found in Major Problems of Mormonism, pp. 175-205.

* * * * *

IF HE WERE SATAN

In the Spring 1989 issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought an unusual article by Samuel W. Taylor appears under the title, “If I Were Satan.” On page 116, the following is found:

As Satan, I would also encourage Church officials to ignore all attacks on the Church, such as the dedicated campaign of Jerald and Sandra Tanner of the Utah Lighthouse Ministry. I would simply pooh-pooh their violently unfriendly book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality, issued in Salt Lake, together with the condensed version, The Changing World of Mormonism, published in New York [Chicago]. What do we care that the combined sales have been more than 50,000 copies? What does it matter that missionaries are hit with hard questions from readers of these books and are unprepared to answer?

It is ironic that this statement would appear in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. This journal has never reviewed either of the two books mentioned by Samuel Taylor! Even Lawrence Foster, a critic who feels we are “narrowminded” and “unethical,” observed the following:

Despite the Tanners’ extensive publication record and the hostility that they have aroused over the past two decades, to date virtually no serious public analyses of their work have appeared. When the Tanners’ arguments have been attacked in Mormon publications, as has occurred on many occasions, their names and titles of their writings have almost never been cited. Indeed, until very recently even independent Mormon scholarly journals such as DIALOGUE and Sunstone, which discuss all manner of controversial issues, have largely avoided mentioning the Tanners by name, much less analyzing their work explicitly. (Dialogue, Summer 1984, p. 48)

In a footnote on page 49, Professor Foster wrote:

In a letter to me . . . Lester Bush explained why DIALOGUE ultimately decided not to review the Tanners’ books Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and The Changing World of Mormonism despite their hope to make such a review: “We simply had no desire to be drawn into a sensational debate based on fragmentary data and in no way governed by any notion of intellectual responsibility.”

Nothing has changed since 1984, and it seems doubtful that Dialogue will publish any review of our new book, Major Problems of Mormonism. However this may be, we have already sold over 500 copies. One ministry has ordered 150 copies and has sold almost two-thirds of these already!

* * * * *

NEW TRACT MINISTRY

For a long time we have felt that our ministry was lacking in the area of providing free tracts on Mormonism and Christianity. Recently, however, we were able to purchase a folding machine and have prepared six tracts that should be of interest to our readers. They are entitled, Jesus and Joseph Smith, Power Over the Entire World, The Fall of the Book of Abraham, The Worst Prison of All, Testing the Book of Mormon, and Joseph Smith and the Kinderhook Plates.

Two of these tracts, The Worst Prison of All and Power Over the Entire World, do not mention Mormonism. Below is the text of one of these tracts.

Power Over The Entire World

History is filled with the names of rulers who desired to gain great riches and rule over many people. Alexander the Great, for instance, was able to conquer most of the known world in the 4th century B.C. Napoleon, who has been described as “one of the greatest military geniuses of all time,” crushed those who resisted him and created a vast empire. His success, however, went to his head. He began to believe he was invincible and eventually suffered some disastrous defeats. The battle of Waterloo, of course, ended his dream of conquering the world. He died on an island “alone and deserted by his friends and family, on May 5, 1821.” The 20th century certainly has had its share of those who sought world conquest. Adolf Hitler’s desire for power led to World War II and the death of millions of people.
Although they had many military victories, none of these leaders were able to bring the entire world into subjection to themselves for even a moment. Furthermore, the power and riches they did gain did not last very long. Hitler gained the support he needed in Germany in 1934, but by 1945 he found it necessary to commit suicide because his empire was crumbling. Alexander the Great did not have much time to enjoy the power he had gained. He died when he was only thirty-three years old.

In spite of the fact that no one has yet been able to gain complete control over the world, one cannot help but wonder what it would be like if it were possible to have all the power, fame and riches that the world can offer. Almost two thousand years ago, Jesus reflected on the issue of obtaining that much power and made this startling observation:

For what is a man profited if he gains the whole world, and loses his own soul? Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul? (NKJV, Matthew 16:26)

There are at least two very important points in this short verse. First, that our selfish drive to obtain pleasure, fame, money or power can lead to the loss of our eternal soul. Second, that our soul is worth more than all the things of this world. Even though we may have great success and riches in this life, if we fail to set our minds on the things of God, we are spiritually bankrupt. Jesus made this very plain in Luke 12:16-21:

Then he spoke a parable to them, saying: “The ground of a certain rich man yielded plentifully.
And he thought within himself, saying, ‘What shall I do, since I have no room to store my crops?’
So he said, ‘I will do this: I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there I will store all my crops and my goods.’
And I will say to my soul, ‘Soul, you have many goods laid up for many years; take your ease; eat, drink, and be merry.’”

But God said to him, ‘Fool! This night your soul will be required of you; then whose will those things be which you have provided?’

“So is he who lays up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.”

In our attempt to find happiness through riches, fame or pleasures, we end up setting aside the things God declares to be the most important. In Matthew 22:37-40 we read:

Jesus said to him, “‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind.’ This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like it: ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets.”

While Jesus calls upon us to love God and those around us with a sincere love, he cautions us against the love of things that distract us from serving God. As our minds begin to focus more and more on the things of this world, we tend to lose sight of the spiritual things which are truly essential. In the Parable of the Sower, Jesus explained:

Now he who received seed among the thorns is he who hears the word [i.e., the word of God], and the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becomes unfruitful. (Matthew 13:22)

The Apostle John warned:

Do not love the world or the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

For all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life—is not of the Father but is of the world.

And the world is passing away, and the lust of it; but he who does the will of God abides forever. (1 John 2:15-17)

People think that they will be very happy if they can only obtain certain things, but even if they do acquire them, the pleasure is usually very short-lived. They are soon striving for something else to fill the emptiness of their hearts. When the movie star Barbara Streisand was asked how the “reality of success” measured up to her “childhood dreams of glory,” she frankly replied: “It doesn’t come close. It hasn’t come anywhere near it. The dream—you never achieve it and that’s what is depressing. . . . to me it’s a real drag that you can’t hold anywhere near it. The dream—you never achieve it and that’s what is depressing. . . .”

For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life.

The Bible informs us that we cannot really serve God until we have been “born again” (John 3:3). It plainly states that “all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Romans 3:23). In chapter 6, verse 23, of the same book, we are informed: “For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.” What we need, then, is to have Jesus set us free from the chains of sin. Our own “good works” will avail us nothing, we need to pray to The Lord with a sincere heart and turn our life completely over to him. It is only through his “grace” (Ephesians 2:8-10) that we can escape the penalty of eternal separation from God and have a place in his kingdom.

All the things we can acquire in this life amount to nothing when compared with the wonderful salvation that has been prepared for us. The Apostle Paul observed that we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out” (1 Timothy 6:7). Apostle Peter noted that in the last day “the elements will melt with fervent heat; both the earth and the works that are in it will be burned up.” After emphasizing again that “all these thing will be dissolved” he asked, “what manner of persons ought you to be?” (2 Peter 3:10-11).

When we really think about it, it becomes obvious that while some people may be able to obtain great fame and riches in this life, most of us will have to settle for less. Even if we were able to obtain these things, they would not bring us the lasting happiness we all desire. As we have already shown, Jesus said that the rich man, who was more interested in building bigger barns in which to store his goods than in serving God, was a “fool.” Moreover, Jesus declared that even if someone could gain the whole world that person would be making a tragic mistake which would result in eternal separation from God. Since God places a higher value on one human soul than he does the whole world, one would be very foolish indeed to neglect the eternal salvation which God has provided for the momentary pleasures and riches which this world has to offer.

The following poem brings to mind the importance of having one’s priorities right:

* * * * * * * * *

MISSIONARY WORK

There are opportunities for those who are interested in volunteering for evangelistic work in Salt Lake City this summer. If interested call (801) 486-3800 or write to: Associated Utah Christian Ministries, PO Box 750, Salt Lake City, UT 84101.

---

OTHER BOOKS

A Gathering of Saints: A True Story of Money, Murder and Deceit, by Robert Lindsey. An excellent account of the forgeries and murderers of Mark Hofmann. Price: $18.95

The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri, by Stephen C. LeSueur. Price: $20.00

“Wild Bill” Hickman and the Mormon Frontier, by Hope A. Hilton. Price: $9.95

Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism, by Dan Vogel. Price: $9.95

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

Know What You Believe—A Practical Discussion of the Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, by Paul E. Little. Price: $4.95
In 1828, Joseph Smith’s enemies fired a shot from ambush at his translation of the Book of Mormon. As Smith looked at the gaping hole in the very heart of the document he had struggled so hard to protect, he seemed to sense that the wound could be fatal. His mother, Lucy Smith, revealed the anguish which flooded Joseph Smith’s mind when he grasped the devastating implications of what had happened:

Martin Harris, having written some one hundred and sixteen pages for Joseph, asked permission of my son to carry the manuscript home with him, in order to let his wife read it . . .

Joseph . . . inquired of the Lord to know if he might do as Martin Harris had requested, but was refused. . . . Joseph inquired again, but received a second refusal. Still, Martin Harris persisted as before, and Joseph applied again, but the last answer was not like the two former ones. In this the Lord permitted Martin Harris to take the manuscript home with him . . . Mr. Harris had been absent nearly three weeks, and Joseph had received no intelligence whatever from him . . . we saw him [Harris] walking with a slow and measured tread towards the house . . . Harris pressed his hands upon his temples, and cried out, in a tone of deep anguish, “Oh, I have lost my soul! I have lost my soul!”

Joseph . . . sprang from the table, exclaiming, “Martin, have you lost that manuscript? . . .”

“Yes, it is gone,” replied Martin, “and I know not where.”

“Oh, my God!” said Joseph, clinching his hands, “All is lost! all is lost! What shall I do? I have sinned . . .” He wept and groaned, and walked the floor continually . . . what could I say to comfort him, when he saw all the family in the same situation of mind as himself, for sobs and groans, and the most bitter lamentations filled the house. However, Joseph was more distressed than the rest . . . he continued, pacing back and forth, meantime weeping and grieving, until about sunset . . .

The manuscript has never been found; and there is no doubt that Mrs. Harris took it from the drawer . . . (Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet, 1853, pp. 117, 118, 120-123)

Joseph Smith’s words, “All is lost! all is lost!,” show the gravity of the predicament he found himself in. He realized that since he had not retained a copy of the 116 pages, he could not reproduce exactly the same material as the first part of the Book of Mormon. It would, therefore, be a book without a beginning! A Mormon critic, M. T. Lamb, succinctly pointed out the dilemma facing Joseph Smith:

The general belief was that she [Mrs. Harris] burned it [i.e., the manuscript]. But the prophet Joseph evidently was afraid she had not, but had secretly hid it, for the purpose of entrapping him, should he ever attempt to reproduce the pages. If the work was really of God, the manuscript could be reproduced word for word without a mistake. If, however, Joseph inspired it himself, his memory would hardly be adequate to such a task, without numberless changes or verbal differences—and thus “give himself away,” since he loudly professed to be all the time aided “by the gift and power of God.” (The Golden Bible, page 119)

The theft of the 116 pages brought the translation of the Book of Mormon to a grinding halt. Joseph Smith claimed that “both the plates [i.e., the gold plates on which the Book of Mormon was supposed to have been written] and the Urim and Thummim [a sacred device used to translate the plates] were taken” from him (History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 23). Later, however, the plates were restored and he received a revelation purporting to be from Jesus Christ. The Lord told him not to retranslate the missing pages because his enemies had altered them:

Now, behold, I say unto you, that because you delivered up those writings . . . into the hands of a wicked man, you have lost them. . . . you also lost your gift at the same time; and your mind became darkened. . . .

And, behold, Satan hath put it into their hearts to alter the words which you have caused to be written, or which you have translated . . .

Behold, I say unto you, that you shall not translate again those words which have gone forth out of your hands;

For, behold, they shall not accomplish their evil designs in lying against those words. For, behold, if you should bring forth the same words they will say that you have lied and that you have pretended to translate, but that you have contradicted yourself.

And, behold, they will publish this, and Satan will harden the hearts of the people to stir them up to anger against you, that they will not believe my words. (Doctrine and Covenants 10:1, 2, 10, 30-32)

Joseph Smith was informed that about 600 years before the birth of Christ, the Lord had anticipated this very problem. He had, in fact, inspired the ancient prophet Nephi to make another set of plates which covered exactly the same time period as that first set of plates. Mormon writers refer to these plates as the “small plates of Nephi,” and the plates which contained the material for the 116 lost pages are called the “large plates of Nephi.” One matter that is rather confusing is that in a preface to the first edition of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith referred to the 116 missing pages as being from “the Book of Lehi, which was an account abridged from the plates of Lehi, by the hand of Mormon . . .”. Mormon writers, however, argue that Lehi did not actually write anything on the plates; all the writing was done by his son, Nephi: “Aside from employing his name honorifically, this work apparently was not written in any part by Lehi . . .” (S. Kent Brown, Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1984, p. 21, n. 10).

However this may be, the Lord told Joseph Smith that he could translate the small plates of Nephi and they would take the place of what had come from the large plates of Nephi—i.e., the missing 116 pages. The Book of Mormon would no longer be a book without a beginning. In addition, it was made clear to Smith that the small plates of Nephi dealt more with spiritual matters than the missing pages. Consequently, the loss of the 116 pages was actually set forth by the Mormon Church leaders as a victory for the Lord because the Book of Mormon would be more spiritual than it would have been if the pages had not been stolen!

Mormon critics, on the other hand, do not accept this explanation. They point out that if Satan actually did cause Joseph Smith’s enemies to alter the words, these wicked people would have had to produce the original pages to prove that Joseph Smith could not produce an accurate duplicate of the original. It would be almost impossible to alter the manuscript without detection. The Mormons could have taken the case to court and easily won a significant victory. Critics feel that the simple truth is that Joseph Smith could not reproduce an exact copy of what he had previously written. Therefore, he was forced to come up with the elaborate story about the Lord providing a second set of plates covering exactly the same time period to fill in the missing portion of the Book of Mormon.

GAZING INTO THE BLACK HOLE

A few years ago we published an article entitled “Probing Black Holes in Mormon History.” We noted that astronomers feel that sometimes a star will “collapse into itself and become a black hole and, in a sense, exit the universe.” One physicist said that “You can’t see a black hole. Just its effects.” We quoted one author as saying that “Since not even light can escape a black hole, one can never be seen directly.” We also quoted a statement which explained that “black holes theoretically occur when matter collapses into an exquisitely compact state. Its gravity grows strong enough to trap everything, including light, within the horizon of its gravitational field. The earth, for instance, would become a black hole, if it could somehow be squeezed to the size of a marble. . . . Medium-size black holes result from the collapse of giant stars too massive to stop at the neutron star stage. They just disappear into their dark prisons.”

We noted that although we know “very little about astronomy or the theories concerning black holes in space, we have observed a somewhat similar phenomenon in Mormon history. Important documents which could throw a great deal of light on Mormon history, seem to mysteriously “disappear into their dark prisons.”

At the time we wrote this article, we had no idea that we were going to encounter a massive black hole in the Book of Mormon itself. Significantly, this black hole appears in the very material which replaced the missing 116 pages! It seems obvious from our research that a great deal of material which was originally in the Book of Mormon has disappeared into this bottomless abyss.

We have always believed that there was something strange about this portion of the Book of Mormon, but we were not preparing to scrutinize it in more detail than the rest of the book. Recently, however, we heard of the Mormon Church’s new computer program, The Computerized Scriptures of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. We felt that this program would help us in studying the questions of plagiarism and authorship with regard to the Book of Mormon. We installed the program and began to obtain some remarkable results. It was during this period of intense research in the Book of Mormon that a question began to arise concerning the wars in the Book of Mormon—i.e., why were the accounts of the wars in the later portion of the book given in such great detail, whereas the material replacing the lost 116 pages was so surprisingly sparse with regard to details?

This question aroused our curiosity and we began to look at names, dates, cities, lands, directions, kings, etc. In all of these areas we found an abundance of material in the later books, but scarcely nothing in material coming from the “small plates of Nephi.” This discovery eventually led to the formulation of our theory that there is a black hole in the Book of Mormon:

1 — The first portion of the Book of Mormon originally contained a great deal of information concerning history, wars, kings, names, dates and other matters which no longer appears in that part of the Book of Mormon—i.e. the books that cover the same period. This can be inferred from Nephi’s own description of the contents of the larger plates:

   Upon the other plates [the plates from which the 116 pages were translated] should be engraven an account of the reign of the kings, and the wars and contentions of my people . . . (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 9:4)

   . . . wherefore, the record of my father, and the genealogy of his fathers, and the more part of all our proceedings in the wilderness are engraven upon those plates . . . I, Nephi, did make a record upon the other plates, which gives an account, or which gives a greater account of the wars and contentions and destructions of my people. (1 Nephi, 19:1 and 4)

   For I, Nephi . . . had spoken many things . . . and also my father . . . many of which sayings are written upon mine other plates; for a more history part are written upon mine other plates. (2 Nephi 4:14)

   And if my people desire to know the more particular part of the history of my people they must search mine other plates. (2 Nephi 5:33)

2 — From the references cited above it would seems very likely that the 116 missing pages contained many names of people, cities and lands. It probably had the names of many kings and the years in which they reigned. Since it was concerned with wars, it would undoubtedly mention the names of the prominent leaders who took part in important battles and when they occurred. The location of where these battles took place would likely appear in the record. This would be entirely consistent with the latter portion of the Book of Mormon.

3 — Since the first 116 pages of the Book of Mormon were lost and Joseph Smith did not have another copy, it would be almost impossible for him to reconstruct all the details he had previously written concerning the ancient Nephites and Lamanites. He would undoubtedly make many mistakes with regard to names, cities, lands, kings, military leaders and battles. While the idea of having a second set of plates from which to translate released him from having to come up with the exact wording he had previously used, it did not free him from the possibility of making mistakes with regard to names, dates, locations and other matters.

4 — Because the first part of the Book of Mormon as it was originally written was supposed to contain “a full account of the history” of Nephi’s people (1 Nephi 9:2), what Joseph Smith dictated to replace the missing pages had to be as vague as possible. To avoid contradicting the 116 pages if they should come to light, the new pages must be very indefinite with regard to details. While these pages would have to cover the same period as the original pages and give some appearance of being history, they would actually have to be very obscure when it came to particulars which Joseph Smith could not clearly remember. Many important things, therefore, which had evaporated from Joseph Smith’s memory would also have to vanish into a rayless and indefinable “black hole” in the Book of Mormon.

Joseph Smith apparently thought that some people might become suspicious that he was trying to sidestep the problem which confronted him. In an attempt to offset any criticism that he was evading the real history of the Nephites and Lamanites, Joseph Smith had Jacob, the second author who wrote upon the “small plates” of Nephi, explain that Nephi had told him that he should “write upon these plates a few of the things which I considered to be most precious; that I should not touch, save it were lightly, concerning the history of this people which are called the people of Nephi . . . he said that the history of his people should be engraven upon his other plates . . . if there were preaching which was sacred, or revelation which was great, or prophesying, that I should engraven the heads of them upon these plates, and touch upon them as much as it were possible, for Christ’s sake . . .” (Jacob 1:2-4). In 1 Nephi 9:3, Nephi explains that he received “a commandment of the Lord that I should make these plates, for the special purpose that there should be an account engraven of the ministry of my people.”

The more material that Nephi and the other writers put in the plates concerning “preaching,” “revelation” and “prophesying,” the less would have to be devoted to the history of the Nephites and Lamanites.

5 — Our theory presupposes that it would be rather easy for Joseph Smith to have remembered the major details of the first part of the 116 missing pages. This portion relates to Lehi and his family leaving Jerusalem and coming to the New World. The names of the main characters would probably be indelibly written upon his memory. As he progressed with the story, however, the names and details would become increasingly difficult to remember. There seems to be some evidence of the black hole beginning in the early chapters of the small plates of Nephi, but when Lehi and his children reach the New World (1 Nephi 18:23), the record becomes far more nebulous. The evidence for the black hole seems extremely strong from this chapter onward and continues until the book of Omni, verse 12—the last book contained in the small plates of Nephi. The black hole, therefore, extends to page 141 of the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon and obscures over four hundred years of the history of the Nephites and the Lamanites!
TESTING THE THEORY

Mormons often quote the following words of Moroni when trying to convert others to the Book of Mormon: “And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost” (Moroni 10:4). We would challenge those who believe the Book of Mormon to read the things which follow and also to reread the first portion of the Book of Mormon which was “translated” from the small plates of Nephi. We feel that if they will do this with “a sincere heart” and a prayerful attitude, they will come to the same conclusion that we have reached.

That Joseph Smith seemed to remember a number of the names at the first part of the story becomes obvious as we examine the first book of Nephi. We find the name Nephi in the first verse of chapter one. The name of Nephi’s father, Lehi, appears in verse 5, and his mother’s name, Sariah, is found in 2:5. The names of Nephi’s elder brothers Laman, Lemuel and Sam, are also found in that verse. In 18:7 we read that Nephi had two younger brothers, Jacob and Joseph.

The name of Laban appears in 3:3, and his servant, Zoram, is found in 4:35. A man by the name of Ishmael later joins with Lehi’s family in the wilderness somewhere outside Jerusalem. It appears, then, that only eleven names are given to Nephites or Lamanites within the first book of Nephi. To our knowledge no new names are given to any of these people in the second book of Nephi! This is especially strange in light of the fact that a number of Old Testament characters are referred to by name. For example, Nephi mentions Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Adam, Eve, Zedekiah, Jeremiah, Isaiah, Joseph. Moreover, he even prophetically speaks of Jesus some 600 years before his birth and claims that he knew our knowledge no new names are given to any of these people in the second book of Nephi! This is especially strange in light of the fact that a number of Old Testament characters are referred to by name. For example, Nephi mentions Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Adam, Eve, Zedekiah, Jeremiah, Isaiah, Joseph. Moreover, he even prophetically speaks of Jesus some 600 years before his birth and claims that he knew that “the name of the apostle of the Lamb was John . . . ” (1 Nephi 14:27).

Although Nephi could see far into the future and give the names of people who would live in New Testament times, he seemed to have been oblivious to the names of most of the people he lived with. For example, he did not mention the names of his brothers’ children: “. . . my father . . . called the children of Laman, his sons, and his daughters, and said unto them: Behold, my sons, and my daughters of my first-born . . . after my father had made an end of speaking . . . he caused the sons and daughters of Lemuel to be brought before him . . . he spake unto them, saying: Behold, my sons and my daughters, who are the sons and the daughters of my second son . . . (2 Nephi 4:3, 8, 9). The children of Ishmael also seemed to have no names: “. . . Laman and Lemuel, and the two sons of Ishmael and their families, did rebel against us; yea, against me, Nephi, and Sam, and their father, Ishmael, and his wife, and his three other daughters” (1 Nephi 7:6). It seems that Nephi is almost struggling to keep from giving names: “. . . one of the daughters of Ishmael, yea, and also her mother, and one of the sons of Ishmael, did plead with my brethren, insomuch that they did soften their hearts . . . ” (1 Nephi 7:19).

WOMEN MISSING?

Nephi married one of Ishmael’s daughters, but he did not give her name: “. . . I, Nephi, took one of the daughters of Ishmael to wife; and also, my brethren took of the daughters of Ishmael to wife; and also Zoram took the eldest daughter of Ishmael to wife” (1 Nephi 16:7). While Nephi never mentions his wife’s name, he uses his own name many times in the first two books of the Book of Mormon. In fact, we find the phrase “I, Nephi” eighty-six times! In all fairness, however, it should be noted that there may be more than one factor working here. It appears, in fact, that the entire Book of Mormon almost looks like a black hole when we search for specific references with regard to women. While men seem to play the major roles in the Bible, it does refer to many women. Two of its books, Esther and Ruth, are named after women. We also read of “Judith” at one time (Judges 4:4) and “Huldah the prophetess” (Chronicles 34:22). Those who wrote the books of the Bible certainly felt free to mention women by name and to write concerning their achievements. For instance, we read of “Eve,” the wife of Adam. God Himself refers to Abraham’s wife as “Saria thy wife.” Isaiah married “Rebekah,” and Esau “took to wife Judith.” Joseph married “Asenath,” and Moses’ wife was named “Zipporah.” Saul’s “wife was Ahinoam,” and we also read of “Michal, David’s wife.” In the New Testament we have “Mary,” “Elizabeth,” and Aquila’s “wife Priscilla.” Many of the stories concerning Jesus deal with women, and on a number of occasions Jesus openly commends them. The Apostle Paul used the names of women in his epistles. For instance, in Romans 16:1 he said: “I commend unto you Phebe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at Cenchrea.” In the same chapter he also mentioned Mary, Priscilla, Tryphena, Tryphosa, Persis and Julia.

In our preliminary research we were only able to find the names of three Nephite, Lamanite or Jaredite women in the Book of Mormon—“Sariah” (1 Nephi 2:5), “Abish” (Alma 19:16) and “the harlot Isabel” (Alma 39:3). The computer revealed that the word her appeared only 79 times in the Book of Mormon. Twenty-six of these references are taken directly from Isaiah, Malachi and Matthew in the Bible. Of the fifty-three which remain, fifteen refer to unnamed queens; seven were used regarding an unnamed daughter of Jared; two relate to Abish; two to an unnamed maid servant; one to Mary, the mother of Jesus; one to Sariah; one to Nephi’s wife; one to the “mother” of “one of the daughters of Ishmael;” one to a widow; one to Zion; one to a goat; one to mercy; one to a sow; one to charity and one to a vessel. Her is also used four times to refer to the earth and twice with regard to “the face of the earth.” It is used three times with regard to cities and seven times in relationship to a “hen.”
The word she appears only fifty-six times, and six of these occurrences are from quotations from the Bible. Of the remaining fifty-four, four relate to Jesus’ mother, Mary; five to Sarah; twenty to three unnamed queens; nine to Abish; one to a nameless maid servant; three to the unnamed “daughter of Jared”; one to “wisdom”; two to a “ship”; one to “the face of the earth”; one to “the harlot Isabel” and three to “the mother of abominations . . . the whore of all the earth.”

The fact that the Book of Mormon story says so little about women seems to throw a serious cloud of doubt over Joseph Smith’s claim that it was written by a number of ancient Jewish authors after 600 B.C. The claim is that these men had the ancient books of the Bible—books which contain the names of many women and stories concerning them. If just one of these Nephite authors broke with tradition and tried to suppress almost all information concerning women, we would not be too surprised. As it is, however, the black hole with regard to women seems to extend all the way through the book. The evidence, therefore, seems to show that the Book of Mormon was written by one author.

While Nephi’s reluctance to name his wife could be explained by the theory that the author of the Book of Mormon was not really interested in the things of women, the fact that Nephi does not name any of his own children (see 1 Nephi 18:19), the children of his brothers, nor the children of Ishmael fits well with our idea that he was trying to suppress names so that he would not contradict the missing 116 pages if they should come forth. Nephi does inform us that Ishmael and his own brothers had male children, but he does not give their names. Those who examine later portions of the Book of Mormon will see that Nephi’s silence is inconsistent with the rest of the book. For example, just as we come out of the black hole, we find this reference in Mosiah 1:1: “. . . king Benjamin . . . had three sons; and he called their names Mosiah, and Helorum, and Helaman.”

The books included in the small plates of Nephi are named after their respective authors. It is obvious, then, that if Nephi had passed the plates on to one of his sons, the name of that son would have been revealed. Instead of doing this, however, he gave them to his brother Jacob. The third book in the Book of Mormon, therefore, is called the book of Jacob. The first new name to come into the Book of Mormon after Nephi mentioned the original eleven names appears in Jacob’s record: “. . . after some years had passed away, there came a man among the people of Nephi, whose name was Sherem” (Jacob 7:1). Sherem was a wicked man who taught there “should be no Christ.” Finally, in the last verse of his book Jacob informs the reader that he has a son named Enos to whom he gives the plates. The fourth book, therefore, is known as the book of Enos. Enos mentions his own name in his book and tells us that “an hundred and seventy and nine years had passed away from the time that our father Lehi left Jerusalem” (Enos 1:25). He does not, however, add a single new name to the record. After 179 years we still have only thirteen names! The next book is called the book of Jarom. In this book, Jarom informs us that he is the son of Enos and his son is Omni. He also states that 238 years had passed away. At this point we still have only fifteen Nephite and Lamanite names recorded on the plates. Since eleven of these names were revealed within the first decade of Nephite history, this means that only four new names were added in a period of almost 230 years!

At any rate, the only name that Omni adds to the record is that of his son, Amaron. He also noted that 282 years had passed away. Amaron does not really have anything to say and continues the record in his father’s book. He adds only one new name—that of his brother Chemish—and notes that 320 years had passed away. Chemish does not add any new names to the record. The next writer, Abinadom, identifies himself and says that he is the “son of Chemish.” Abinadom writes two verses but adds no new names to the record.

The final writer to engrave characters on the small plates of Nephi introduces himself as Amaleki, the son of Abinadom. He writes the last nineteen verses in the book of Omni. It seems very obvious from the details that Amaleki gives in this book that Joseph Smith has arrived at or passed by the portion of the manuscript that could be contradicted by anything in the missing 116 pages. In other words, we are on the other side of the black hole. At this point Amaleki boldly introduces many new details. He, in fact, goes so far as to introduce four new names into the story. Anyone who takes the time to examine Amaleki’s verses will be able to see how different they are from the rest of the writing which was supposed to have come from the small plates of Nephi. Even the dedicated Book of Mormon apologist J. N. Washburn seemed surprised by the amount of information contained in the last nineteen verses of the book of Omni. Although Mr. Washburn felt that this portion of the story was “without miscalculation or contradiction,” he could not help but comment on the unusual nature of Amaleki’s verses:

The last nineteen verses of the Book of Omni provide a different kind of study altogether. They constitute a unit quite unlike anything else in the entire Book of Mormon. . . . These last nineteen verses . . . give the account of the affairs of the Nephite people between the approximate dates 175 and 124 B.C. . . . Few paragraphs go together chronologically. . . .

We have now seen that at least seven important items of information some of them essential, are first brought to our attention in the last nineteen verses of the Book of Omni. This, however, does not exhaust the possibilities of this interesting little chapter. Not only are a number of prominent men first named here; not only are we first informed of movements of utmost significance; not only are the three peoples of the Book of Mormon brought together; not only is there vital material concerning records presented here; not only are other valuable matters divulged, but there are also numerous details of vast interest to be found within these three pages. . . .

It must be readily seen that these nineteen verses are unusual. Is it not surprising that so large a number of unrelated fragments are thrown together in this small space? Nowhere else in the entire book is such diverse material found in so crowded a setup. (The Contents, Structure and Authorship of the Book of Mormon, 1954, pp. 23, 28-29)
While Mr. Washburn was startled to find the contents of the concluding verses of the small plates of Nephi so unusual, we feel that these last nineteen verses fit very well with our theory of a black hole in the Book of Mormon. Since Joseph Smith knew that he had safely by-passed the danger of being entrapped by the missing 116 pages, he felt that it would be safe to now give historical details. He, therefore, seems to have given us a double dose of information in these last nineteen verses to set the stage for the books which follow.

MISSING KINGS

Nephi was supposed to be the first king of the Nephites (see 2 Nephi 5:18). It is very possible that Joseph Smith forgot the name he had given to the second king in the lost 116 pages. When Jacob refers to Nephi’s successor, he does not give him any name:

Now Nephi began to be old, and he saw that he must soon die; wherefore, he anointed a man to be a king and a ruler over his people now, according to the reigns of the kings. (Jacob 1:9)

This is certainly a strange way to speak of the new king. It is entirely different from the way the ancient Israelites referred to their kings. Not only did they have a great deal to say about them, but they proudly gave their names and the names of their fathers. For instance, in 1 Chronicles 29:26 we read: “Thus David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel.”

In any case, Jacob went on to say that the people “were desirous to retain in remembrance his [Nephi’s] name” (Jacob 1:11). Therefore, “whoso should reign in his stead were called by the people, second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth, according to the reigns of the kings; and thus they were called by the people, let them be of whatever name they would” (ibid.). In the fifteenth verse of the same chapter, Jacob informed his readers that “the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts . . .” This terse reference to the “second king” is the last reference to any king for hundreds of years. It is only after we come out of the black hole (Omni, verse 12) that we encounter the name of another king: “. . . Mosiah, who was made king . . .” Amaleki also mentions a “king Benjamin.” This seems to be the same king referred to in the book of Mosiah.

The reader will remember that kings were supposed to be called “second Nephi, third Nephi, and so forth . . . let them be of whatever name they would,” yet when we come out of the black hole, they are called “Mosiah” and “Benjamin.” This even puzzled the Mormon writer J. N. Washburn: “Was Mosiah one of these kings? If so, why was he not called Nephi X or Nephi XI or whatever he would happen to be? . . . Where, we must ask again, does Mosiah fit into all this? It appears almost certain that he had been a king in the land of Nephi. Why, then, was he not called Nephi?” (The Contents, Structure and Authorship of the Book of Mormon, pp. 24, 27).

DATINGS EVENTS

Although Amaleki speaks of two kings, he still does not give us many details and there is nothing in his portion of the book of Omni concerning dates. In Omni, verse 23, we find this: “Behold, I, Amaleki, was born in the days of Mosiah; and I have lived to see his death; and Benjamin, his son reigneth in his stead.” This should be contrasted with the precision found in later portions of the Book of Mormon. For instance, in Mosiah 29:46 we read: “And it came to pass that Mosiah [apparently the grandson of the Mosiah mentioned by Amaleki] died also, in the thirty and third year of his reign, being sixty and three years old; making in the whole, five hundred and nine years from the time Lehi left Jerusalem.”

In the period following the black hole and the reign of the three kings, the Nephites decide to have judges instead of kings. In the book of Alma the dating becomes very precise. It starts out with “the first year of the reign of the judges over the people of Nephi” (Alma 1:1), and verse 23 talks of “the second year of the reign of Alma.” This system of dating continues until “an hundred years had passed away” (3 Nephi 2:5). Our examination of the record reveals that at least ninety of these years are mentioned in the Book of Mormon and that specific events are linked to these dates. For example, in Helaman 6:15, we read: “. . . in the sixty and sixth year of the reign of the judges, behold, Cezerom was murdered by an unknown hand as he sat upon the judgment-seat.” After the hundred years had elapsed the Nephites begin dating events from the time of the birth of Christ, and this system continues until “more than four hundred and twenty years” had passed away (Moroni 10:1). The crucifixion of Christ is precisely dated as occurring “in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, on the fourth day of the month . . .” (3 Nephi 8:5).

When we turn back to the small plates of Nephi, we find an entirely different story. The first date actually appears very early in the record and gives the impression that Nephi planned to be very precise in dating historical matters: “For it came to pass in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah . . . there came many prophets, prophesying unto the people that they must repent, or the great city Jerusalem must be destroyed” (1 Nephi 1:4). Although the next date given is very precise it does not relate to the history found in the small plates of Nephi. It simply says that Christ would come “six hundred years from the time that my father left Jerusalem . . .” (1 Nephi 10:4). The next date appears in 1 Nephi 17:4 and says that the Lehi’s group spent “eight years in the wilderness.” First Nephi 19:8 tells us again that Christ would come “six hundred years from the time my father left Jerusalem.” The next date does not appear until 2 Nephi 5:28: “And thirty years had passed away from the time we left Jerusalem.” This reference does not relate to anything of historical importance. The verse just before it states: “And it came to pass that we lived after the manner of happiness.” In the 34th verse of the same chapter, Nephi informs us that “forty years had passed away, and we had already had wars and contentions with our brethren.”
No historical event is mentioned with regard to this date.

In 2 Nephi 25:19, Nephi again tells us that “the Messiah cometh in six hundred years from the time that my father left Jerusalem . . . .” The book of Jacob 1:1 indicates that “fifty and five years had passed away from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem,” but it gives no historical information. In the seventh chapter, verses one and two, Jacob tells of a man who believed there would be “no Christ” coming among the people. Even this matter is not dated: “And now it came to pass after some years had passed away, there came a man among the people . . . .”

A hundred and twenty-four years pass from the time that Jacob said that “fifty and five years had passed away” and finally Enos gives a date. This date only seems to relate to the fact that Enos was becoming old: “And it came to pass that I began to be old, and an hundred and seventy and nine years had passed away from the time that our father Lehi left Jerusalem” (Enos, verse 25). Jarom later noted that “two hundred years had passed away, and the people of Nephi had waxed strong in the land” (Jarom, verse 5). In verse thirteen, Jarom noted that “two hundred and thirty and eight years had passed away—after the manner of wars, and contentions, and dissensions, for the space of much of the time.” Thirty-eight more years pass away and Omni wrote: “. . . two hundred and seventy and six years had passed away, and we had many seasons of peace; and we had many seasons of serious war and bloodshed. Yea, and in fine, two hundred and eighty and two years had passed away” (Omni, verse 3). The final date appearing on the small plates of Nephi was written by Amaron just two verses after Omni’s last date was given:
“. . . three hundred and twenty years had passed away, and the more wicked part of the Nephites were destroyed.” The record is then passed on to Chemish. He gives no dates and passes the small plates on to Abinadom. Abinadom, likewise, gives no dates and turns over the plates to Amaleki. While Amaleki gives some historical information, he also fails to give any dates. He did, however mention that he lived until the reign of king Benjamin. According to information given later, Benjamin reigned until 124 B.C. (Mosiah 6:4).

As far as we can determine, there is no historical date of any importance in the Book of Mormon from the time that Lehi’s group left the Old World until the reference in Mosiah 6:4, which informs us that “Mosiah began to reign
. . . in the thirtieth year of his age . . . about four hundred and seventy-six years from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem.”

There were ample opportunities in the small plates of Nephi for dates to have been given, but it seems obvious that the author did not want to tie events to dates. For instance, one would think that the death of Nephi’s father, Lehi, would have been important enough for a date and perhaps some details. Instead, however, Nephi casually writes: “. . .
my father, Lehi . . . waxed old. And it came to pass that he died, and was buried” (2 Nephi 4:12). The death of Ishmael, Nephi’s father-in-law, is handled in the same manner: “And it came to pass that Ishmael died, and was buried in the place which was called Nahom” (1 Nephi 16:34).

Jacob treated his brother Nephi’s death in the same fleeting manner: “And it came to pass that Nephi died” (Jacob 1:12). This is certainly one of the shorter verses in the Book of Mormon. If the words “And it came to pass that” were not present, it would leave only “Nephi died.” The death of Sariah seems to have been entirely ignored, and there is nothing concerning the death of Nephi’s wife. Although we have not made an intensive search concerning the matter, we have only found two other cases where Nephite or Lamanite people (mentioned by name in the small plates) actually die
—i.e., Sherem and king Benjamin. We can infer that Jacob died because his son says that “he was a just man” (Enos, verse 1), but no details are given concerning the matter. This is certainly different from the rest of the Book of Mormon.

Another very strange thing about the small plates of Nephi is that while the story moves slowly through the years at first, as we approach the end of the plates, it accelerates in an almost slapdash manner. The first fifty-five chapters only move the story ahead “fifty and five years,” but hundreds of years fly by in the last three chapters. Even the Mormon apologist J. N. Washburn noted the “astoundingly long time” that the book of Omni encompasses (The Contents, Structure, and Authorship of the Book of Mormon, p. 23).
Mr. Washburn seems to feel that “225 crowded years” were covered in “eleven paragraphs.” The chronology, however, is very confusing. We feel that a period of about 200 years is covered between verses one and twenty-three. The footnotes which the Mormon Church has included in the Book of Mormon indicate that Jarom ends his book in “361 B.C.” and that the book of Omni covers a period down to “130 B.C.”
This would mean that 231 years elapse in one small book.
Whatever the case may be, it is remarkable that this important portion of Nephite history was glossed over in one chapter.

While Mr. Washburn was astounded that so much time was covered in such a limited number of verses, this situation fits very well with our black hole theory of the Book of Mormon. Joseph Smith must have become tired of trying to fill up the missing portion of the Book of Mormon with extraneous material. He seems to have had exceptional powers of imagination and must have found it very difficult to repress his desire to give specific details concerning the characters in his book. By the time he came to the book of Omni, he had already written sixty-four chapters to replace the missing material. Therefore, as soon as he felt he had safely passed the point where he could be trapped by the 116 pages, he rapidly brought the project to a screeching halt.

A LOST PEOPLE

The earliest portion of the Book of Mormon, the part dealing with the Old World, gives one the impression that the book is going to have a good setting as far as history and geography are concerned. For instance, it mentions the fact that Lehi lived in Jerusalem; that Jerusalem was a walled city; that Zedekiah was the king; that Jeremiah was a prophet at that time; that Lehi’s group traveled by the Red Sea; that they came to “the sea” (the Indian Ocean?) and departed by ship to the New World.

As soon as Lehi’s group land in the New World serious problems in the account become evident. While the account of their sojourn in the Old World does have some details about their location, things are completely different in the New World. To begin with, the account of their landing is very vague. Instead of giving the details which we would expect, Nephi seemed to be evasive: “And it came to pass that after we had sailed for the space of many days we did arrive at the promised land; and we went forth upon the land, and did pitch our tents; and we did call it the promised land” (1 Nephi 18:23). In the first place, it should be noted that no date is given as to when these people arrived. Moreover, there is no description of where they landed—it could be any place from Alaska to the tip of South America. In verse 25, Nephi gives very specific information concerning the animals which they found, but there is absolutely no information concerning the geography of the region. The same verse informs us that the people “journeyed in the wilderness,” but there is nothing to indicate which direction they traveled in.

In the Old World portion of the Book of Mormon we were told that the group “traveled . . . nearly a south-southeast direction” (1 Nephi 16:13), and the next chapter, 17:1, says that they “did travel nearly eastward from that time forth.” As strange as it may seem, after Lehi’s people land in the New World there is not one statement concerning their traveling in any direction until after we come out of the black hole. There is, in fact, no use of the words north, south, east or west to locate any people or geographical place. The first statement to use directions was written by Amaleki and appears in Omni, verse 22. It is, however, referring to another people, the Jaredites, who were destroyed before Lehi’s group landed in the New World: “. . . their bones lay scattered in the land northward.” From that point on, directions are again used freely in the Book of Mormon. For example, in Mosiah 7:16 we read of “the hill which was north of Shilom . . .”. In 9:14 of the same book we read of “the land of Nephi, away on the south of the land of Shilom . . .”. To emphasize how dark the black hole really is we only have to examine the book of Alma. In that book alone there are over 100 places where directions are used!

Nephi not only neglected to tell us where his people landed and which way they traveled into the wilderness, but he continued to be evasive throughout his record. In 2 Nephi 5:6-8, he wrote concerning his separation from his bothers, the Lamanites: “. . . I, Nephi, did take my family . . . and all those who would go with me. . . . and did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days. And after we had journeyed for the space of many days we did pitch our tents. And my people would that we should call the name of the place Nephi; wherefore, we did call it Nephi.” The reader will notice that we are not told where Nephi and his people started from, what direction they went or even how long they traveled. We only know that they traveled for the “space of many days” and arrived in some other place and “did call it Nephi.” Nephi went on to say he taught his “People to build buildings . . . And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon save it were not built of so many precious things . . .” (verses 15-16).

It is very interesting to note that Nephi never referred to the place where he and his people lived as a “city,” and he did not name even one Nephite or Lamanite city! Before he came to the New World, Nephi spoke of the “city” Jerusalem six times and referred to “the city of Nazareth” two times, but after he came to the New World, he was completely silent with regard to the names of New World cities. As a matter of fact, none of the other writers who followed Nephi through the black hole period mentioned the name of any city. Mosiah 7:1 is the first place that we find the name of a city: “. . . king Mosiah . . . was desirous to know concerning the people who went up to dwell in the land of Lehi-Nephi, or in the city of Lehi-Nephi . . .”

The LDS Church’s computer program gives us some interesting information concerning the use of the word city in the Book of Mormon. It shows that in his two books, Nephi uses the word city twelve times. None of these references, however, relate to the New World. They are all Old World cities referred to by Nephi or in quotations from the prophet Isaiah of the Bible. The Book of Jacob does not contain the word city at all. Neither do the books of Enos, Jarom or Omni. Even the Words of Mormon, which is inserted between Omni and Mosiah, does not have the word city in it. When we reach the book of Mosiah we have a different story. The word city appears twenty times and in the book of Alma it is used 195 times! This, of course, provides a great deal of support for our black hole theory. Joseph Smith did not want to name cities during the portion of the record which replaced the missing 116 pages, but after he bypassed that portion he felt free to use the names of many cities. (Perhaps we should mention here that Mormon scholars feel that Joseph Smith did not translate the small plates of Nephi until he had finished the rest of the book—Words of Mormon through Moroni. In other words, the first part of the Book of Mormon as it presently exists was written last. While we feel that there is some good evidence to support this conclusion, it does not really affect our theory about a black hole in the Book of Mormon.)

We decided to use the church’s computer program to see if we could find anything in the small plates of Nephi which would help us establish some type of geographical or historical base for the story after Lehi’s people reached the New World. We asked the computer to find the following words: shore, shores, sea, seashore, hill, hills, valley, valleys, river, rivers, mount, mountain, mountains, lake, border, borders, bordered, bordering, place and places. The search proved futile. The “place Nephi,” turned up, but as we have already shown, it has no relationship to any known location. The word valley turned up in the section in question, but the context made it obvious that it had nothing to do with geography: “. . . why should . . . my soul linger in the valley of sorrow . . .” (2 Nephi 4:26). The word lake is found four times in the section we call the black hole, but the lake spoken of is the “lake of fire and brimstone”—i.e., hell.
We find it very strange that Nephi can behold “the city of Nazareth” and the Virgin Mary within that city in vision, but he will not give the name of a single city or land in the New World. Moreover, he tells us that his father, Lehi, knew that John the Baptist would “baptize in Bethabara, beyond Jordan . . .” (1 Nephi 10:9), yet his small plates give us absolutely no information concerning rivers, lakes, hills and valleys in the New World. All of the evidence indicates that there was a deliberate attempt to suppress any details that might contradict the 116 missing pages.

UNRECORDED WARS

As we have previously noted, Nephi has informed us that the plates from which the 116 pages were translated contained “an account of the reign of the kings, and the wars and contentions of my people” (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 9:4). In another place, Nephi noted that these plates give “a greater account of the wars and contentions and destructions of my people” (1 Nephi, 19:4).

We have stated that these plates would undoubtedly mention the names of the prominent military leaders who took part in important battles and give the dates and locations of the battles. In addition, they probably would give details of the battles and the number of men lost in combat. Our theory of a black hole in the Book of Mormon suggests that Joseph Smith would not be able to accurately reconstruct all the details he had previously written concerning the wars of the ancient Nephites and Lamanites. Consequently, in the pages he wrote to replace the missing part of the Book of Mormon, he would have to steer clear of military encounters. An examination of the portion translated from the small plates of Nephi reveals that this is the case. Any meaningful details concerning battles are completely avoided.

In 2 Nephi 5:34, Nephi wrote that “forty years had passed away, and we had already had wars and contentions with our brethren.” The reader will notice that absolutely no details are given. In his book, Jacob tells us that Nephi had “wielded the sword of Laban” in the defense of his people (Jacob 1:10). Again, we find no mention of any of the battles he fought in. Jacob also informed the readers that the Lamanites “delighted in wars . . . they sought by the power of their arms to destroy us continually” (7:24). No examples, however, are given by Jacob at this time nor at any other time. The next writer, Amaron, the writer who begins to lead us out of the black hole, revealed that he had seen “a serious war and much bloodshed between the Nephites and the Lamanites. But behold, the Nephites did obtain much advantage over them; yea, insomuch that king Benjamin did drive them out of the land of Zarahemla” (Omni, verse 24). This, of course, does not give us any detailed information about the war or the year or years in which it occurred.

As we get into the book of Mosiah, we begin to get more specific details about battles. Zeniff tells of a battle with the Lamanites in which “we did slay three thousand and forty-three; . . . And behold, to our great sorrow and lamentation, two hundred and seventy-nine of our brethren were slain” (Mosiah 9:18-19). In verse 14 the date is given as “the thirteenth year of my reign,” but since we have no way of knowing when Zeniff began to reign, we can only guess as to when this war was supposed to have occurred.

As the story in the Book of Mormon proceeds, the accounts of the battles become very specific. For example, in the book of Alma we read that in the “eighteenth year of the reign of the judges” the Lamanites were “coming upon” the Nephites. The Nephites, therefore, gathered in the “land of Jershon” (Alma 43:3-4). The “Lamanites came with their thousands . . . into the land of Antionum, which is the land of the Zoramites; and a man by the name of Zerahemnah was their leader” (43:5). The “chief captain over the Nephites . . . was Moroni (43:16). The story concerning this war continues for pages and gives numerous details. For instance, it says that the Nephites concealed themselves. As “the Lamanites had passed the hill Riplah, and came into the valley, and began to cross the river Sidon, the army which was concealed on the south of the hill, which was led by a man whose name was Lehi, and he led his army forth and encircled the Lamanites about on the east in their rear” (43:35). After the fierce battle, the Nephites “encircled” the Lamanites. The Lamanite leader, “Zerahemnah retained his sword, and he was angry with Moroni, and he rushed forward that he might slay Moroni; but as he raised his sword, behold, one of Moroni’s soldiers . . . smote Zerahemnah that he took off his scalp . . . the soldier . . . took up the scalp from off the ground by the hair, and laid it upon the point of his sword, and stretched it forth unto them . . .” (44:12-13).
Zerahemnah, however, was “exceedingly wroth” and continued to urge his people to fight. As it turned out, the Lamanites “were pierced and smitten, yea, and did fall exceedingly fast before the swords of the Nephites …” (44:18). Finally, Zerahemnah surrendered and the war was over.

This story gives a great deal of information. We notice that it gives the date the war was fought; uses the words east, west, north and south; gives the names of five groups of people; mentions eight personal names; gives the names of three lands, a river and a hill. It seems reasonable to believe that this same type of detailed information was given in the 116 pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript which were stolen. Since Joseph Smith did not retain a copy of the stolen portion, he was unable to duplicate it. Therefore, he was forced to leave out any specific military matters in the pages he created to replace those that had been pilfered. It should be noted that the history of Joseph Smith’s life shows that he was fascinated with military matters, and this seems to have been reflected in the Book of Mormon.

In trying to explain why this material is now missing from the first part of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith used the Nephite characters he had created to offer an excuse. We have already shown that he had Nephi say that his other plates contained “a greater account of the wars.” Toward the end of the small plates of Nephi, he had Jarom apologize again for the missing material on the wars: “. . . ye can go to the other plates of Nephi; for behold, upon them the records of our wars are engraven, according to the writings of the kings, or those which they caused to be written” (Jarom, verse 14). The problem, of course, is that we do not have these records, and therefore there is no way that we can check the truth of this statement.

USING FILLER

One thing that strengthens the argument that there is a black hole in the Book of Mormon, is the use of a great deal of filler material in the very portion of the story created to take the place of the 116 pages. It seems rather obvious that Joseph Smith did not have any important historical Nephite-Lamanite material to fill in the gap. Consequently, he was forced to insert a conglomeration of odds and ends to use up space.

The Old World portion of the small plates of Nephi does contain some “history.” It gives the story about Lehi being warned to flee from Jerusalem, a very detailed account of how Nephi ends up slaying an evil man named Laban, the flight into the wilderness and building a temple. It also tells how of his being “lifted up upon the cross and slain for the sins of the world.” Nephi then goes on to predict that “a man,” obviously Columbus, would come to the New World.

Chapters 16-18 do give some information about the problems Lehi’s people had in the wilderness; how Nephi was able to build a ship and how they eventually arrive in the New World. It is, of course, at this point that we have a real blackout on meaningful details. Chapter nineteen begins with what seems to be another apology for the lack of details in the small plates of Nephi. Instead of returning to the story concerning his people, Nephi then speaks of the coming of Christ “in six hundred years from the time my father left Jerusalem,” how he would be crucified, etc. By chapter twenty, Nephi seems to have completely run out of words. He, in fact, inserts two chapters of Isaiah (see 1 Nephi, chapters 20 and 21). While he claims that he is copying them from the “plates of brass,” it is obvious to anyone who takes the time to critically examine the matter that the material really comes from the 48th and 49th chapters of the book of Isaiah in the King James Version of the Bible, first printed in 1611 A.D.

In 2 Nephi, the prophet Nephi continues to suppress anything of importance relating to Nephite history. In Chapter 4, Nephi writes his own psalm using portions of scripture from both the Old and New Testaments. Chapter 5 tells of Nephi having more problems with his brothers, fleeing into the wilderness and building a temple. It also tells how “the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon” the Lamanites. He referred to it as “a sore cursing” (verses 21-23). In chapter 6, he includes his brother Jacob’s words concerning the teachings of Isaiah and Old Testament history. Chapters 7 and 8 of 2 Nephi are copied from Isaiah, chapters 50, 51, 52:1-2. Chapters 9 and 10 of 1 Nephi are nothing but a theological exposition by Jacob and have nothing to do with the history of the Nephites or the Lamanites. In Chapter 11, Nephi tells us that both he and his brother Jacob “have seen” their “Redeemer.” In the same chapter, verse 1, Nephi also informs the reader that he is going to “write more of the words of Isaiah, for my soul delighteth in his words.” Nephi then proceeds to quote thirteen chapters of Isaiah (chapters 2 through 14) from the King James Version! This takes us from chapter 12 to 24 in 2nd Nephi.

That Joseph Smith would have to throw in so many chapters of Isaiah as filler shows that he was having a very difficult time trying to find something suitable to replace the material in the lost 116 pages. It is certainly odd that he would leave out significant portions of the history of the Nephites and yet throw in page after page of material from Isaiah. The fact that we already have this material in our Bible makes the situation even more ridiculous.

Although the two books of Nephi were supposed to have been written by a Jew living about 600 years before Christ, Chapters 31-33 contain “the doctrine of Christ.” They contain many references from the New Testament, but nothing concerning the history of Nephi’s people.

The book of Jacob begins with a discussion of the plates. In verses 2-3, Jacob claims that Nephi “commanded” him that he “should not touch, save it were lightly, concerning the history of this people which are called the people of Nephi... the history of his people should be engraved upon his other plates...” In this first chapter, Jacob gives us the evasive statement that it was “a man”—no name given—whom Nephi selected to be the second king of his people. It is especially strange that Jacob would not reveal the name of the new king since in chapter 7, he gives a known Antichrist the dignity of a name: “whose name was Sherem.”

Like Nephi, Jacob does not give any information which has any real historical value. In Chapter 5 he included an allegory concerning the tame and wild olive trees which was supposed to have been written by an ancient prophet named Zenos before Lehi’s people came to the New World. It was obviously taken from Apostle Paul’s writings found in Romans 11:17-24 and from statements made by Jesus. In the Book of Mormon, however, it has been expanded to take up six pages! It is probably the most repetitious and uninteresting part of the Book of Mormon. It gives the impression that the author is deliberately trying to use up as much space as possible. It is very hard to resist the idea that it is merely filler material.

The book of Enos tells how he was converted to the Lord, but adds nothing of historical importance other than “an hundred and seventy and nine years had passed away...” (verse 25).

While the book of Enos had 27 verses, Jarom completed his record in just 15 verses. He, of course, added nothing important but the information that “two hundred and thirty and eight years had passed away...”

In the the book of Omni we seem to sense a desire to rapidly bring the curtain down on the story told in the small plates of Nephi. While this book has only thirty verses, there are five different authors who write on the plates. This gives an average of just six verses per author. The first author, Omni, was “commanded by my father, Jarom, that I should write somewhat upon these plates, to preserve our genealogy.” He adds nothing of any importance, however, but the name of his son and that 282 years had passed away. He seems to have no spiritual message to write on the plates, and confesses that he is “a wicked man, and have not kept the statutes and the commandments of the Lord as I ought to have done.”

The second writer, Amaron, adds the last date given on these plates. He noted that 320 years had passed, but gave no historical information. Chemish, the third writer, obviously has nothing to say. His writing on the record amounts to only one verse and is almost comical in nature because he seems to have worked so hard to say almost nothing: “Now I, Chemish, write what few things I write, in the same book with my brother; for behold, I saw the last which he wrote, that he wrote it with his own hand; and he wrote it in the day that he delivered them unto me. And after this manner we keep the records, for it is according to the commandments of our fathers. And I make an end.” Abinadom, the fourth writer, completes only 2 verses. Other than the fact that he “saw much war” and took “the lives of many of the Lamanites in the defence of my brethren,” he had virtually nothing to say: “...I know of no revelation save that which has been written, neither prophecy; wherefore, that which is sufficient is written. And I make an end.”

As we have already noted, Amaleki, the fifth and last writer, was apparently on the other side of the black hole. Although he did not give any dates and was still rather vague about some details, it seems that his role was to set the stage for the next act—i.e., Mormon’s abridgment of the large plates of Nephi. He tells of a king Mosiah who was warned by the Lord to “flee out of the land of Nephi” to the “land of Zarahemla.” Mosiah just seems to appear out of nowhere. Nothing is given about his background nor what happened in the “land of Nephi” that caused the Lord to instruct him to flee. We have already shown that the Mormon writer J. N. Washburn was puzzled that Mosiah did not fit the pattern of naming kings that Jacob mentioned. While Mosiah’s sudden appearance and flight into the wilderness may seem strange to some people, it fits very well with the theory that there is a black hole in the Book of Mormon.

Joseph Smith had undoubtedly given a great deal of information in the 116 missing pages concerning the location of cities, lands, hills, etc. in the country where the Nephites had originally settled. Smith apparently felt that this information could trip him up. He probably remembered some of the details of his previous story, but he must have felt that it would be better to wipe the slate clean and place the Nephites in entirely new surroundings. He, therefore, has Mosiah lead his people “through the wilderness” until they come into the “land of Zarahemla” where they encounter “a people who were called the people of Zarahemla.” Strange as it may seem, this people had also been in the New World for almost the same length of time as the Nephites but had not come in contact with them before. They had come out from Jerusalem at the time that Zedekiah, king of Judah, was carried away captive into Babylon” (Omni, verses 12-15).

As the case with Nephi’s flight into the wilderness, Amaleki does not tell us how many people he took with him, how far they traveled into the wilderness or what direction they traveled. In any case, the center of action has been moved from the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla. Although some Nephites return to the land of Nephi, the important part of the story moves to this new land of Zarahemla and numerous cities and lands suddenly spring into existence and become part of the military action which goes on. Mormon scholar Fletcher B. Hammond observed: “And thus the Nephites left the land of Nephi to the Lamanites; and the Nephites never again took permanent residence in that land” (“Geography of the Book of Mormon—Where is the Hill Cumorah?” page 9).

Even with Amaleki’s help in getting the Nephites to a new land, the small and large plates of Nephi do not come together in a very smooth manner. The first book abridged by Mormon is the Book of Mosiah. In the book of Omni, Amaleki said that he “was born in the days of Mosiah; and I have lived to see his death; and Benjamin, his son, reigneth in his stead” (verse 23). Mormon’s abridgement of the book of Mosiah mentions two kings, “Benjamin” and “Mosiah,” and the reader might assume that the Mosiah spoken of there was the same man Amaleki was talking about. This must not be the case, however, because Mosiah 1:2 says that “Mosiah” was one of the “sons” of Benjamin. Apparently, the Mosiah spoken of in the book of Mosiah was a grandson of the Mosiah that Amaleki referred to. One verse that may indicate this, Mosiah 2:32, has Benjamin speaking of “my father Mosiah.” All the information we have concerning the first Mosiah’s reign, then, is found in the brief writings of Amaleki within the book of Omni.

The first part of the Book of Mormon from 1 Nephi to Omni, verse 11, is relatively easy to follow. Although we learn virtually nothing about Nephite history, it is easy to keep the story straight. Beginning with the writings of Amaleki, however, everything changes. From Omni, verses 12-30, to the latter part of Mosiah, the record is filled with confusion. There are so many diverse stories of people never mentioned before and other themes thrown in that the reader’s head is left spinning. While the Mormon writer J. N. Washburn firmly believed in the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, he commented that the book of Mosiah contains “the most complicated and difficult part of the whole Book of Mormon.” Washburn went on to state that there “is pyramiding of stories upon stories” and noted that the abridger of the book of Mosiah, Mormon, had “an unobstructed view of the entire series of developments. Indeed, his view is so clear that he appears at times to think that his readers will understand as well as he did, will have something of his omniscience. Lacking it we frequently find ourselves confused” (The Contents, Structure and Authorship of the Book of Mormon, pages 35, 37-38).

A careful examination of the Book of Mormon reveals that it is a very unusual book. The small plates of Nephi account for 142 pages in the 1981 revised edition. On these pages any specifics concerning warfare are avoided like the plague. According to Nephi, the plates from which these pages were derived were reserved so that “the more sacred things may be kept for the knowledge of my people” (1 Nephi 19:5). As soon as we get past these pages, however, we run into many detailed accounts of bloody wars. We are, in fact, given vivid details concerning the entire destruction of two great nations—the Nephites and the Jaredites. While God especially watches over the small plates of Nephi so that we only get what was considered “to be the most precious” information, when we get to the large plates of Nephi, the abridger (Mormon) considers warfare to be one of the most important things. In The Words of Mormon, verse 5, Mormon comments: “Therefore, I chose these things, to finish my record upon them, which remainder of my record I shall take from the plates of Nephi; and I cannot write the hundredth part of the things of my people.” Now, if Mormon cannot give us even “the hundredth part” of the history of his people, it is strange that his God did not inspire him to filter out the war material as he seems to have done in the case of the small plates of Nephi. The only reasonable solution to this problem appears to be the black hole theory of the Book of Mormon. Although Joseph Smith liked to write concerning religion, he was also extremely interested in warfare. He had already written a great deal about it in the 116 pages which were lost, but when he wrote the material to replace these pages, he was forced to suppress military matters for fear that the 116 lost pages might come to light and expose his deception. When, however, he was not shackled by this restraint, he wrote freely on the subject. There can be little doubt that if Smith had not been hindered by the fear of the lost pages coming forth, the Book of Mormon would have been more devoted to warfare and consequently less concerned with spiritual matters.

If our theory of a black hole in the Book of Mormon was only supported by a few facts, we would not advocate it so strongly. As it is, however, every test we can think to apply to it yields the same result. We feel, therefore, that it is an irrefutable argument against the historicity of the Book of Mormon.

THE FUTURE OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

In 1984, when we first publicly announced that we had some very serious reservations concerning the authenticity of Mark Hofmann’s famous Salamander letter, some Mormon scholars felt that we were making a grave mistake. We had found evidence that material which appeared in that letter could have been taken from E. D. Howe’s book, Mormonism Unveiled, which was not published until a few years after the Salamander letter was supposed to have been written (see Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1984). Hofmann, of course, later confessed that he did plagiarize from Howe’s book in forging the letter.

We feel that the evidence we now have against the authenticity of the Book of Mormon is at least a thousand times as strong as the textual evidence we had against the Hofmann document. Much evidence of plagiarism in the Book of Mormon was obtained prior to the time that we began working with a computer, but since that time new and important evidence has come to light. It seems, in fact, that the case is now absolutely devastating. We hope to publish our new findings in the near future.

On October 7, 1979, the Provo Herald reported that “Wordprint comparisons [made by two Brigham Young University scholars] between the Book of Mormon and the known 19th century writings of Joseph Smith and Mr. Spalding show conclusively that neither of these persons, authored the book . . . their research indicates that the book was authored by at least 24 different writers, and possibly more, whose styles bear no resemblance to that of Joseph Smith . . . or other 19th century writers whom they examined . . .” In response to the research which these men had done, we commented: “. . . we are very much in favor of computer studies with regard to the Book of Mormon. We would especially like to see a study showing the parallels between the King James Version [of the Bible] and the Book of Mormon. If a computer could actually be programmed to sort out writing styles, it would, no doubt, show more than 24 different authors in the Book of Mormon. We would probably find Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Job, David, Solomon, Ezekiel, Daniel, Jonah, Micah, Malachi, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, James, Peter, Jude, etc.” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? p. 96-H).

Our recent computer research with regard to plagiarism in the Book of Mormon seems to completely invalidate the arguments set forth by the BYU researchers. The evidence of plagiarism, in fact, is so extensive that it would be impossible to make an accurate study of so-called “noncontextual words.” Such a study might be of value with regard to authors who did not plagiarize large amounts of material, but in the case of the Book of Mormon there is so much material that has been borrowed from other authors that it makes the discovery of “wordprints” almost meaningless. Until all the extraneous material has been removed, no “linguistic fingerprint” is of any real value. While it may be possible to eliminate a great deal of the material plagiarized from the Old and New Testaments of the Bible, the very presence of this material alerts us to the fact that there is likely to be extensive plagiarism from other writings which have not yet been identified.

We have used an entirely different approach than those who have worked with “noncontextual words.” We feel that our method is much more reasonable in view of the evidence of heavy plagiarism in the text of the Book of Mormon. This is to search for certain combinations of words which seem to be strewn throughout the Book of Mormon. The following are just a few of the word combinations which we found: dwindle in unbelief; expedient that; it must needs be; save it were; sufficeth me and would that ye should. So far we have found between three and four hundred different combinations which seem to be scattered in different parts of the Book of Mormon. The recurrence of specific word combinations seems to indicate that these patterns are part of the author’s own peculiar style rather than words borrowed from somebody else. It is true, of course, that they may have initially appeared in some other writing, but the fact that they are repeated a number of times leads us to suspect that they have become part of the author’s style.

When we find a number of different Book of Mormon writers—e.g., Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Moroni and Mormon—all using many of the same unusual word combinations, we begin to suspect that all these books were really written by one person. Our research, in fact, leads us to believe that notwithstanding the fact that the Book of Mormon is filled with portions which have been plagiarized from the Bible, one style of writing can still be identified throughout the entire book. Furthermore, the preponderance of the evidence points towards Joseph Smith as the author.

While the BYU researchers would have us believe that Joseph Smith had nothing to do with creating the text of the Book of Mormon, our computer study yielded strong evidence that Smith was indeed the author. One document which led us to this conclusion was the short account Joseph Smith wrote of his early life in 1832 (see An American Prophet’s Record: The Diaries and Journals of Joseph Smith, 1987, edited by Scott H. Faulring, pp. 3-8). This document furnished many peculiar word combinations that matched so well with the Book of Mormon that we could not help but conclude they both were the product of the same mind.

We also compared the preface Joseph Smith wrote for the first edition of the Book of Mormon. As we have already shown, this preface, which is no longer printed in the Book of Mormon, tells the reader concerning the theft of the 116 pages. The style of this document also closely resembles the Book of Mormon. In addition, we compared Section 10 of the Doctrine and Covenants with the Book of Mormon. This section is also written concerning the lost 116 pages and is very important because it is rather long and was written at the very time Joseph Smith was working on the Book of Mormon. Although it was supposed to be a revelation from “Jesus Christ, the Son of God,” the style was found to be remarkably like that found in the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith’s preface to the first edition of the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith’s early account of his life. That Joseph Smith, the ancient Nephite prophets and Jesus Christ all sound the same leads us to just one possible conclusion: Joseph Smith was the author of all three documents. We hope to present the evidence concerning this matter in a forthcoming publication.

For a number of years Mormon scholars have boasted that they have detected “chiasmus” in the Book of Mormon. Noel B. Reynolds explains that “chiasmus is a peculiar and long-forgotten literary form present in the very earliest Hebrew writing as well as in other ancient Near Eastern works. In the Hebrew tradition it developed into a rhetorical device in which two sets of parallel elements are presented. The first set is presented 1, 2, 3, etc., but order of presentation is inverted in the second set, 3, 2, 1” (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1980, p. 138).

Mormon scholars go to great lengths in their attempts to identify chiasms in the Book of Mormon and reason that what they have found provides proof that the book must be “a product of the ancient world.” Even if it could be established that there are real chiasms in the Book of Mormon, it would not prove anything more than that Joseph Smith borrowed from the style of chiastic passages found in the Bible. We believe, however, that wishful thinking plays a very important role in this fervent search for chiasmus in Joseph Smith’s work. We doubt very much that there is any deliberate attempt at chiastic structure in the Book of Mormon and feel that what has been identified as chiasmus is merely evidence of Joseph Smith’s repetitive style of writing. Our examination of the Book of Mormon shows that Joseph Smith frequently repeated phrases, thoughts and even stories throughout his work. The noted Mormon historian B. H. Roberts made these revealing comments concerning this matter many years ago: “Having seen how strong parallelisms obtains between Jaredite and Nephite peoples . . . it remains in somewhat the same manner to show that a like sameness of repetition or parallelism obtains among the Nephites at different periods . . . I shall hold that what is here presented [concerning various accounts of Anti-Christs among the Nephites] illustrates sufficiently the matter taken in hand by referring to them, namely that they are all of one breed and brand; so nearly alike that one mind is the author of them, and that a young and undeveloped, but piously inclined mind. The evidence I sorrowfully submit, points to Joseph Smith as their creator. It is difficult to believe that they are the product of history . . . ” (Studies of the Book of Mormon, 1985, pp. 264, 271).

Since Joseph Smith was so repetitive in his style, using the same thoughts and phrases over and over again, Mormon scholars who search long enough are certain to find these recurring elements in an order which they consider to be chiasmic in nature. It is interesting to note, however, that some of the more liberal Mormon scholars claim they have found “chiasms” in Joseph Smith’s own personal writings. This, of course, would tend to strengthen our position that Joseph Smith himself was probably the author of the Book of Mormon. In any case, we hope to deal with this in another publication.

In the light of computer research and the advances that are being made in this field, the future for the Book of Mormon looks very dim indeed. There is already talk of storing the text of an untold number of books on disks so that they can be used in computers. Once this is done, researchers will be able to use “Word Cruncher” or some similar program to compare the text of religious books available in Joseph Smith’s time with the Book of Mormon. Judging from the amount of material plagiarized from the Old and New Testaments, it seems very likely that the Book of Mormon contains material lifted from other sources. We are very optimistic, therefore, that researchers will eventually be able to find many other sources (books, pamphlets or newspapers) which Smith used in writing the Book of Mormon. While we feel that the evidence that has already come to light is absolutely devastating, it will still be very interesting to learn what other material Joseph Smith used.

HIGHLY SIGNIFICANT

The serious implications of what we have found with regard to plagiarism and the black hole in the Book of Mormon cannot be overstated. There are a growing number of members of the Mormon Church who are coming to the conclusion that Joseph Smith gave an erroneous translation of the papyrus he used as the basis for his “Book of Abraham” and that the Book of Mormon is not really history. Many of these people, however, wish to remain in the fellowship of the Mormon Church. It comes as no surprise, then, that some of them have a very difficult time viewing Joseph Smith in the same class as a calculating forger like Mark Hofmann. This is certainly understandable. Who would want to belong to a church whose founder deliberately produced false documents for the purpose of deception? They, therefore, prefer to believe that Joseph Smith was sincerely deceived. They think that he really believed that an angel appeared to him and some of them feel that the Book of Mormon could have been produced through the process of “automatic writing” or “channelling.” It is claimed that some who have engaged in “spirit writing” have produced some remarkable books which seem to be far beyond their natural ability. While many people believe that those who engage in “automatic writing” are actually controlled by a spirit, others would assert that their writings “are totally or partially the result of psychological processes.” In any case, it is asserted that if Joseph Smith was involved in automatic writing, he really could have believed that he was translating an ancient record.

One thing that is very difficult to explain if one resorts to the theory that Joseph Smith was dictating the Book of Mormon by automatic writing is that he also claimed to have ancient golden plates from which he translated. Now, certainly Joseph Smith would know whether or not he actually had these plates. If he did not have them, then it follows that he was not telling the truth. It is possible, of course, that he could have fabricated some sort of plates to fool the Book of Mormon witnesses, but this would also be deception. The suggestion that Joseph Smith was engaged in automatic writing fails to explain his many statements regarding the plates.

Our theory concerning a black hole in the Book of Mormon provides important new information concerning the question of whether Joseph Smith sincerely believed that his major work came from God. While it is very possible that some people who are engaged in automatic writing believe that it comes from some god, spirit or force, Joseph Smith’s actions with regard to the small plates of Nephite demonstrate that he knew very well that the work was spurious. If Smith was using automatic writing and really believed that the pages which he was dictating to replace the lost 116 pages were of divine origin, he probably would have let the words flow and not worried so much about the contents. As it is, however, we see evidence of the deliberate suppression of any type of material which might come into conflict with what he had previously written. Joseph Smith obviously felt embarrassed by the fact that he could not give any detailed historical material and had his characters keep reiterating that the “more history part” appears on the other plates. The whole idea of a second set of plates to replace the lost 116 pages seems to be a devious and calculated attempt to practice deception. The very complexity of the plan and the amount of time spent thinking it up argues against the idea that Joseph Smith was merely misguided.

Scott Dunn indicates that those who practice automatic writing are not engaging in “deliberate deception.” They are “very sincere individuals who are unfamiliar with the latent abilities of the human mind. When they discover that they can rapidly produce writing of a quality superior to their natural powers, they very understandably suppose that such works must come from an outside source” (Sunstone, June 1985, p. 21). In the case of Joseph Smith’s “translation” of the small plates of Nephi, it does not seem that he is producing “writing of a quality superior” to his “natural powers.” On the contrary, except for the first few chapters, it appears that he is setting forth something far inferior to his natural talents. Mormon historian B. H. Roberts conceded that Smith possessed “a vividly strong, creative imagination,” but in Joseph Smith’s work on the small plates we find little evidence of such an imagination. In fact, we find just the opposite; Smith seems unable to create new names, cities, lands, battles or anything very imaginative or exciting. When we pass the black hole, of course, we find all these things in abundance. Therefore, we must conclude that Joseph Smith was deliberately suppressing his talent when he worked on the small plates. The first portion of the Book of Mormon does not seem to fit very well with the theory of automatic writing. Instead of material flowing forth, it seems that the stream has been dammed up.

With regard to Joseph Smith’s integrity, it could be true that he felt that he was producing a work which would help settle doctrinal disputes and set the world straight on religion. Nevertheless, he must have had some idea that he was practicing deception. In light of the new evidence that has come forth, Smith is beginning to look more and more like Mark Hofmann. The reader will remember that Mr. Hofmann had his own theory about Mormon history and created documents to establish that point of view. Joseph Smith also seems to have had his own assumptions about religion and created books of scripture to substantiate those ideas. Much of his early theology was very good, and his desire to help the Indians was commendable. Nevertheless, as in the case of Mark Hofmann, Smith’s works are not authentic and contain false concepts—e.g., that the Indians were cursed by God with a dark skin. For this reason they must be totally rejected.

We intend to pursue the matters of Book of Mormon authorship and plagiarism as well as evidence of other black holes we have detected in that book in future publications. Although we certainly do not want to give the reader the idea that we are desperate for money or about to fold up, we are experiencing some problems at this particular time because of the lack of funds. Those who are interested in helping us through this period of intensive research on the Book of Mormon can send their tax-deductible contributions to Utah Lighthouse Ministry, P.O. Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110. We feel that this is some of the most important research we have ever been involved in and believe that it will provide important answers for Mormons who are seeking for the truth.

PULL THE RIP-CORD!

The following is taken from our tract, The Worst Prison of All:

Unfortunately, some people have been led to believe that just an intellectual consent that Jesus is the Christ is sufficient for salvation. The Scriptures, however, teach that the devils believe there is a God, but that they have no salvation (see James 2:19). The word “believe,” as it is used in the Bible, has a much deeper meaning. In the Introduction to The Amplified New Testament, we find this information:

What does the word “believe” mean? It is extremely important, for multitudes are pinning their hope of heaven upon it . . . most people believe in Christ—that he lived; that He was a perfect man who sincerely believed Himself to be the Son of God, and that He died on the cross hoping to save sinners. But this is by no means the meaning of the Greek word . . . The Greek word is “pisteuo,” and means, “To adhere to, cleave to; to trust, to have faith in; to rely on”—which summed up in, “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved,” means an absolute personal reliance upon the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour.

Intellectual belief is not enough; we must completely rely and trust in Christ. D. Shelby Corlett has said that “We do not believe in Him unless we act on it, unless we give the whole life to Him.” A sailor relies and trusts in his compass because it shows him in which direction he must sail to arrive at his destination. If he ignores his compass and goes in a different direction we would know that he does not really believe in it. A man may claim he believes in honesty, but if he continually steals people’s money and possessions, we know that he does not have a sincere belief. We would, in fact, consider him a hypocrite. The same is true of a person who claims to believe in Christ but lives contrary to His teachings. Those who are in trouble with the law may say they believe in their lawyers, but if they continually disregard the wise counsel given to them, it avails them nothing.

To say we believe in Christ and to refuse to walk in His ways is more foolish than to claim to believe in a parachute and yet jump out of a plane and neglect to pull the rip-cord. Another comparison might be to a man who professes to believe in the value of a life line, but refuses to cling to one when it is offered to him in the middle of a turbulent sea. In effect, the Bible teaches that we are all lost in a raging sea of sin hundreds of miles from shore. God has offered us a life line in Jesus Christ. If we refuse to hold fast to it and try to swim to shore an our own strength, we will perish because we can never swim that far.

If, however, we pray to the Lord with a sincere heart and turn our life completely over to him, we not only escape the penalty of eternal separation from God, but we are promised a place in heaven. While some people seem to believe that heaven will be a boring place, the Scriptures give every reason to believe that it will be a place where everyone will be continually rejoicing. Sorrow, pain and fear will be absent in heaven, and we will live in a state of perfect joy which is beyond our ability to comprehend at the present time. First Corinthians 2:9 contains the following:

But as it is written: “Eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man the things which God has prepared for those who love him.”

C. S. Lewis wrote the following in his book, The Problem of Pain: “Be sure that the ins and outs of your individuality are no mystery to Him; and one day they will no longer be a mystery to you. The mould in which a key is made would be a strange thing, if you had never seen a key: and the key itself a strange thing if you had never seen a lock. Your soul has a curious shape because it is a hollow made to fit a particular swelling in the infinite contours of the divine substance, or a key to unlock one of the doors in the house with many mansions.” Lewis goes on to say: “Your place in heaven will seem to be made for you and you alone, because you were made for it—made for it stitch by stitch as a glove is made for a hand.”

It will be so pleasant in heaven that we just cannot imagine it now. The happiest times we have ever had in this life are only a preview of what is to come for those who love the Lord. Only God knows what will bring us the greatest joy, and we can be certain that he will provide that for us throughout eternity.
SPECIAL OFFER

If ordered before September 30, 1989

ONLY $9.00

(Mail orders add 10% for postage and handling)

We are happy to report that all of Joseph Smith’s diaries are again available at Utah Lighthouse Ministry at an astoundingly low price. Many of our readers will remember that these diaries were offered earlier in a very limited hardback edition for $50.00 a copy. We were unable to fill all of our orders, and a newspaper recently reported that the price for those who were lucky enough to find a copy had gone up to as high as $175.00.

Signature Books has now brought our a beautiful paperback edition of this monumental work, An American Prophet’s Record: The Diaries and Journals of Joseph Smith, edited by Scott H. Faulring. This work includes the 1832 account of Joseph Smith’s life which we mentioned in our lead article. These diaries, which were suppressed for well over a hundred years, provide devastating evidence against the First Vision story as well as proof that Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, printed by the Mormon Church, has been falsified.

Other bookstores are selling the diaries for $10.00 a copy, but those who order them from Utah Lighthouse Ministry before September 30, 1989, will receive them at the special price of $9.00 a copy (plus shipping)!

---

OTHER BOOKS

Mail Orders Add 10% Handling
$1.00 Minimum Shipping Charge

A Gathering of Saints: A True Story of Money, Murder and Deceit, by Robert Lindsey. An excellent account of the forgeries and murderers of Mark Hofmann. Price: $18.95

The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri, by Stephen C. LeSueur. Price: $20.00

“Wild Bill” Hickman and the Mormon Frontier, by Hope A. Hilton. Price: $9.95

Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism, by Dan Vogel. Price: $9.95

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

EXCOMMUNICATION

Mormon Leader Expelled After Charging Church With Racism

On September 2, 1989, the Salt Lake Tribune made this startling announcement:

The only American Indian general authority in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was excommunicated Friday after claiming church leaders are perpetrating a “silent, subtle scriptural and spiritual slaughter” of his race.

George P. Lee, a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy since 1975, was stripped of his membership by the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles for “apostasy” and “other conduct unbecoming a member of the church.” He is the first Mormon general authority excommunicated in 46 years.

His excommunication is significant because Dr. Lee, a Navajo, was considered a church “success story,” himself a product of the LDS program that places impoverished and disadvantaged Indian children with Mormon families.

He claimed church leaders have “turned their backs” on Native Americans and, in pride and arrogance, are discriminating against the very people Mormon scriptures say they must rely on for salvation.

“There is a racist attitude I could just no longer stand,” Dr. Lee, 46, said in an interview. “It is aimed at the poor, at the Indians . . .

“They have washed their hands of their responsibilities to the Lamanites,” he said. “My conscience would not allow me to go on.” . . .

Dr. Lee was called to the church leadership by President Spencer W. Kimball, who felt he had a “special assignment” from God to help Native Americans. He said Friday he believes the current church administration has betrayed the dead prophet’s trust.

Church leaders have set themselves up as interpreters of the gospel, rather than its followers, he said. It has resulted in pride, Dr. Lee claims.

“I have heard a few of you declare that you are greater than ancient apostles such as Moses, Abraham, Noah, Isaiah, Isaac, Jacob . . . This reflects the attitude of all of you,” Dr. Lee said in the letter. “I have heard one or more of you declare that you can change anything Jesus had said or taught. This also reflects the attitude of all of you.” . . .

On September 10, 1989, the Salt Lake Tribune reported the following concerning how the church authorities reacted to his letter to them:

After reading in person a 23-page letter detailing his concerns, Lee said he was astounded at the speed with which he was ousted. Within minutes, two officials came to his office and told him to turn over all church property, including a credit card and a signed pass with which faithful Mormons gain entry to their temples. “I was stripped of everything,” said Lee, 46, a father of seven who is without pension or immediate job prospect. “It was just absolutely cold.”

In a letter that he read to the church hierarchy (photographically reprinted in our booklet, Excommunication of a Mormon Church Leader), Dr. Lee charged church leaders with materialism, pride and having “an attitude of superior race, white supremacy, racist attitude, pride, arrogance, and[d] love of power, and no sense [of] obligation to the poor, needy and afflicted. . . . You are loving the Indians and other Lamanites at a distance . . . you are telling the Lamanites that you are No. 1 and they are second class. . . . 6. Love of Money. The rich seem to get richer and the poor get poorer . . . In fact you told me not to talk about [the] poor nor pray for them . . . A lot of our Priesthood leaders depend on being paid to attend important priesthood meetings . . . Of course most of these Brethren would go anywhere in the name of ‘The Lord’s Work’ as long as they are being paid and as long as all of their expenses are being paid. Brethren this would include your board memberships and meetings, royalty from written books, and all donations and gifts from friends, speaking engagements and etc.”

Dr. Lee’s charge of racism is certainly not new. From its earliest days, Mormonism has had some very unusual teachings with regard to race, skin color and blood. When George P. Lee was called to be a member of the First Quorum of Seventy in 1975, the Mormon leaders had a doctrine which denied blacks the priesthood and marriage in the church’s temples. Indians, on the other hand, were permitted to hold the priesthood, and this made it possible for President Spencer W. Kimball to elevate Lee to the position of a General Authority in the Mormon Church.

In 1978 the Mormon Church leaders announced that their prophet, Spencer W. Kimball, had received a revelation which opened up the priesthood to blacks. The doctrine which the Mormon leaders formerly taught concerning blacks was clearly set forth in a letter written by the First Presidency in 1947: “From the days of the Prophet Joseph even until now, it has been the doctrine of the Church, never questioned by any of the Church leaders, that the Negroes are not entitled to the full blessings of the Gospel” (Letter from the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, July 17, 1947, as cited in Mormonism and the Negro, by John J. Stewart, 1960, pages 46-47).

Bruce R. McConkie, who later served as an Apostle in the church, made this statement in 1958:

Negroes in this life are denied the priesthood; under no circumstances can they hold this delegation of authority from the Almighty. . . . The gospel message of salvation is not carried affirmatively to them . . .

The negroes are not equal with other races where the receipt of certain spiritual blessings are concerned, particularly the priesthood and the temple blessings that flow therefrom, but this inequality is not of man’s origin. It is the Lord’s doing . . . (Mormon Doctrine, 1958, page 477)

After the anti-black doctrine was altered, Apostle McConkie’s book was revised to reflect the change of doctrine (see 1979 Mormon Doctrine printing, page 529).

Although the church has never had a doctrine forbidding Indians from holding the priesthood, Mormon theology has always taught that a dark skin is a sign of God’s displeasure. This teaching comes directly from Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon. In 2 Nephi 5:21, we read that the Lamanites, who were supposed to be the ancestors of the American Indians, were cursed with a black skin: “And he had caused the cursing to come upon them, yea, even a sore cursing, because of their iniquity . . . wherefore, as they were white, and exceeding fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them.” In Alma 3:6 we read: “And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression . . .”

Joseph Smith claimed that the Lamanites eventually destroyed the white skinned people (Nephites) and that the American Indians are the descendants of the ancient Lamanites.

Although Mormon theology taught that anyone born with a dark skin was inferior, the Negro was considered to be at the bottom of the scale and therefore could not hold the priesthood. To really understand the anti-black doctrine, however, a person must know something about the Mormon doctrine of pre-existence. One of the basic teachings of the church is that the spirit of man existed before the world was created. From this doctrine of the pre-existence of the soul emerged the idea of some spirits being more noble than others. The Mormon leaders teach that the “more noble” or choice spirits are born as Mormons.

At the time George P. Lee was called to be a General Authority in the Mormon Church, Mark E. Petersen was serving as one of the Twelve Apostles. Apostle Petersen, who died in 1984, held some very strong views concerning Indians and other dark-skinned races. In a speech given at the church’s Brigham Young University, Apostle Petersen gave the following information concerning the doctrine of pre-existence and how it affected the various races:

We cannot escape the conclusion that because of performance in our pre-existence some of us are born as Chinese, some as Japanese, some as Negroes, some as Americans, some as Latter-day Saints. These are rewards and punishments . . . Is it not reasonable to believe that less worthy spirits would come through less favored lineages? Does this not account in very large part for the various grades of color and degrees of intelligence we find in the earth? . . .

Now let’s talk segregation again for a few moments. Was segregation a wrong principle? When the Lord chose the nations to which the spirits were to come, determining that some would be Japanese and some would be Chinese and some Negroes and some Americans, He engaged in an act of segregation . . . In placing a curse on Laman and Lemuel [i.e., the ancestors of the Indians in Mormon theology], He engaged in segregation . . . When He forbade inter-marriages . . . He established segregation . . . Who placed the Chinese in China? The Lord did. It was an act of segregation . . . in the cases of the Lamanites [Indians] and the Negroes we have the definite word of the Lord Himself that He placed a dark skin upon them as a curse—as a punishment and as a sign to all others. He forbade intermarriage with them under threat of extension of the curse. (2 Nephi 5:21) . . .

Let us consider the great mercy of God for a moment. A Chinese, born in China with a dark skin, and with all the handicaps of that race seems to have little opportunity. But think of the mercy of God to Chinese people who are willing to accept the gospel. In spite of whatever they might have done in the pre-existence to justify being born over there as Chinsamen, if they now, in this life, accept the gospel and live it the rest of their lives they can have the Priesthood, go to the temple and receive endowments and sealings, and that means they can have exaltation. Isn’t the mercy of God marvelous? Think of the Negro, cured as to the Priesthood . . . This negro, who, in the pre-existence lived the type of life which justified the Lord in sending him to the earth in the lineage of Cain with a black skin . . . In spite of all he did in the pre-existent life, the Lord is willing, if the Negro accepts the gospel . . . he can and will enter the celestial kingdom. He will go there as a servant, but he will get celestial glory. (Race Problems—As They Affect The Church, address by Apostle Mark E. Petersen at the Convention of Teachers of Religion on the College Level, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, August 27, 1954)

Ezra Taft Benson, who is now serving as the thirteenth president of the church [1989] and apparently approved the excommunication of George P. Lee, openly opposed the civil rights movement in the 1960’s. The church’s newspaper, Deseret News, December 14, 1963, reported:

Former agriculture secretary Ezra Taft Benson charged Friday night that the civil rights movement in the South had been “fomented almost entirely by the Communists.”

Elder Benson, a member of the Council of the Twelve of the Church . . . said in a speech at a public meeting here that the whole civil rights movement was “phony.”
As we have shown, Mark E. Petersen felt that there should be no intermarriage between “Caucasians” and Indians because there would be an “extension of the curse.” The Book of Mormon itself contains this statement: “And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, . . . which was a curse . . . whosoever did mingle his seed with that of the Lamanites did bring the same curse upon his seed” (Alma 3:6, 9). It is interesting to note, however, that Joseph Smith had predicted in the Book of Mormon that after the Indians received Mormonism they would eventually become “a white and delightsome people.” He apparently became so concerned about the Indians becoming “white” that he encouraged intermarriage to speed up the process. Although the church suppressed the fact for well over a century, Joseph Smith even claimed to have a revelation from God encouraging Mormons to marry Indians so that they would eventually become “white.” The important part of the revelation reads as follows:

Verily, I say unto you . . . it is my will, that in time, ye should take wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightful and just, and for even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles.

In 1976 we were able to examine a microfilm of the original revelation, which is in the Church Historical Department, and sometime later obtained a copy of it (appears in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 230-B). Finally, in 1979 Church Historian Leonard Arrington and his assistant Davis Bitton published the important portion of the revelation in The Mormon Experience, page 195.

While President Young never released the 1831 revelation, there is evidence that he was familiar with its teaching that the Indians should be made white through intermarriage. In a book published in 1852, William Hall gave the “substance” of a speech delivered by Young:

“...We are now going to the Lamanites, to whom we intend to be messengers of instruction. . . . We will show them that in consequence of their transgressions a curse has been inflicted upon them—in the darkness of their skins. We will have intermarriages with them, they marrying our young women, and we taking their young squaws to wife. By these means it is the will of the Lord that the curse of their color shall be removed and they restored to their pristine beauty.” (The Abominations of Mormonism Exposed, pp. 58-59)

Although Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation commanding Mormons to marry Indians to make them “white” was suppressed, recent leaders have continued to teach the Book of Mormon doctrine that the Indians become white when they tam to Mormonism. President Spencer W. Kimball, the church prophet who appointed George P. Lee, strongly endorsed that teaching. In the October 1960 LDS General Conference, Kimball observed:

I saw a striking contrast in the progress of the Indian people today . . . they are fast becoming . . . white and delightful, as they were promised. . . . The children in the home placement program in Utah are often lighter than their brothers and sisters in the hogan. . . . These young members of the Church are changing to whiteness and to delightsomeness. One white elder jokingly said that he and his companion were donating blood regularly to the hospital in the hope that the process might be accelerated. (Improvement Era, December 1960, pp. 922-923)

The reader will notice that Spencer W. Kimball used the Book of Mormon phrase, “a white and delightful people.” This is actually a quotation from 2 Nephi 30:6. Nephi prophesied that in the last days the gospel would be declared to the Indians, and “many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightsome people.” Mormon critic Gordon H. Fraser, who worked among the Indians for many years, did not accept the claim that the Indians were becoming white. He maintained that the “skin color” of the Indians “has not been altered in the least because of their adherence to the Mormon doctrines” (What Does the Book of Mormon Teach? p. 46). The Mormon leaders were obviously embarrassed about this Book of Mormon doctrine, and three years after President Kimball gave the revelation removing the curse from the blacks, the very verse President Kimball used to support the idea that the Indians were becoming white was altered. As we have shown, the verse originally stated that the Indians “shall be a white and delightsome people.” In 1981 this embarrassing statement was changed to read that the Indians “shall be a pure and delightful people.”

Although this one passage has been altered, the doctrine that God cursed the Lamanites with a black skin is still found in a number of other verses (see 1 Nephi 12:23, 2 Nephi 5:21 and Jacob 3:8). In addition, in 3 Nephi 2:15 we read this concerning some of the Lamanites: “And their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites.”

In the 1979 printing of his book, Mormon Doctrine, pages 428-429, Apostle Bruce R. McConkie proclaimed that in the resurrection righteous Lamanites would have their “skin of blackness” changed to “white”:

...a twofold curse came upon the Lamanites . . . “they became a dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people, full of idleness and all manner of abominations” (1 Ne. 12:23). So that they “might not be enticing” unto the Nephites, “the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them” (2 Ne. 5:20-25; Alma 3:14-16). . . . when groups of Lamanites . . . turned to the Lord, the curse was removed from them. . . . a group of Lamantine converts . . . became white like the Nephites (3 Ne. 2:15-16). . . . in our day . . . the “scales of darkness” shall fall from their eyes; “and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightful people” (2 Ne. 30:6). Finally, before the judgment bar of God . . . Lamanites and Nephites alike, will be free from the curse of spiritual death and the skin of darkness (Jac. 3:5-9).

In recent years there has been very little discussion concerning the curse of a black skin. The church no longer seems to be proud of its teaching that “a black skin is a mark of the curse of heaven placed upon some portions of mankind” (Juvenile Instructor, vol. 3, p. 157).

One of the most serious problems George P. Lee seems to have had with church authorities related to the question of who possesses the true blood of Israel. From the time of Joseph Smith until the present there has been a great deal said on this subject. In the History of the Church, vol. 3, page 380, we find these puzzling comments by Joseph Smith concerning a heavenly blood transfusion that the Gentiles must have: “. . . as the Holy Ghost falls upon one of the literal seed of Abraham, it is calm and serene; and his whole soul and body are only exercised by the pure spirit of intelligence; while the effect of the Holy Ghost upon a Gentile, is to purge out the old blood, and make him actually of the seed of Abraham. That man that has none of the blood of Abraham (naturally) must have a new creation by the Holy Ghost. In such a case, there may be more of a powerful effect upon the body, and visible to the eye, than upon an Israelite, while the Israelite at first might be far before the Gentile in pure intelligence.”

Brigham Young, the second prophet of the church, declared:

Take a family of ten children, for instance, and you may find nine of them purely of the Gentile stock, and one son or one daughter in that family who is purely of the blood of Ephraim. It was in the veins of the father or mother, and was reproduced in the son or daughter, while all the rest of the family are Gentiles. You may think that is singular, but it is true. . . . Joseph Smith was a pure Ephraimite . . .

Again, if a pure Gentile firmly believes the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and yields obedience to it, in such a case I will give you the words of the Prophet Joseph— “When the Lord pours out the Holy Ghost upon that individual he will have spasms, and you would think that he was going into fits.”
Joseph said that the Gentile blood was actually cleansed out of their veins, and the blood of Jacob made to circulate in them; and the revolution and change in the system were so great that it caused the beholder to think they were going into fits. . . . we are of the House of Israel, of the royal seed, of the royal blood. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, pp. 268-269)

The Book of Mormon makes it very clear that Indians are literal descendants of the house of Israel and that they will perform a mighty work in the last times. The Gentiles, on the other hand, are threatened with destruction at the hands of the Indians if they do not repent: “And my people who are a remnant of Jacob [i.e., the Lamanites] shall be among the Gentiles, yea, in the midst of them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who, if he go through both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver” (3 Nephi 21:12). Instead of playing the major role, the Gentiles who repent will “assist my people, the remnant of Jacob, and also as many of the house of Israel as shall come, that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem” (3 Nephi 21:23).

George P. Lee believed the Book of Mormon prediction that his people will play the major role in the last days and felt that the Mormon Church leaders were deliberately trying to circumvent what God had ordained. In the letter which he presented to the hierarchy the day he was excommunicated, he wrote the following:

1. You have set yourself up as a literal seed of Israel when the Lord Jesus designated you as Gentiles or ‘adopted Israel[,]’. You have set yourself up as [the] true seed of Ephraim thereby displacing the true seed of Israel[,].

You have shoved true Israel out of his own home or house and have given great importance and status to your own role as Ephraim . . . Gentiles or “adopted Israel” have set themselves up as true Ephraimites with little or no obligation or sense of responsibility to the Lamanites and other true seed of Israel. This kind of teaching runs counter to the instructions of the Lord Jesus and collides with the will of God. I cannot be a party to this type of policy or doctrine. It is not God’s but man-inspired[,] . . . It is getting to the point where every Gentile that is baptized is told and taught that he is literal seed of Ephraim unless he is a Jew, Indian or Black. This type of teaching encourages an attitude of superior race . . . I cannot be a party to false teaching, teachings which are man-inspired . . . You have come very close to denying that the Book of Mormon is about Lamanites. You have cut out Indian or Lamanite programs and are attempting to cut them out of the Book of Mormon.” (pp. 13-16)

While George P. Lee is probably correct with regard to the teachings of the Book of Mormon concerning Lamanites and Gentiles, from a Biblical perspective both his view and that held by the Mormon leaders seems to be out of step with the teachings of Jesus. In Mark 9:33-37, we read that some of the Lord’s disciples had been arguing over “who should be the greatest.” Jesus, therefore, “called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.” In the book of Matthew 18:1-4, we find that Jesus answered the question of who was the greatest in the kingdom of heaven by calling “a little child unto him.” He “set him in the midst of them” and then said: “Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.”

Apostle Paul made it clear that “There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus” (Galatians 3:28). To waste time debating over who has the “royal blood” seems to be an exercise in futility. It is unlikely that either the Mormon leaders or the Lamanites have the blood of Israel.

While it is undoubtedly true that George P. Lee and his people have suffered a great deal because of the racist views held by some of the present church leaders, Dr. Lee must face the fact that a great deal of the prejudice against Indians originated from the Book of Mormon itself. It is that book which tells of God putting a “curse” on the Lamanites and causing “a skin of blackness to come upon them” so that they would be segregated from those with a “white” skin.

Removing More Seventies

The Mormon leaders claim that they have Seventies because Jesus “appointed seventy” to preach the gospel (see A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, 1979, pp. 144-145). At the 159th general conference of the LDS Church, held April 1-2, 1989, Thomas S. Monson declared that because of the “continued rapid growth of the Church,” it had become necessary “to take additional steps to provide for the expansion and regulation of the Church. We announce, therefore, the organization of the Second Quorum of the Seventy . . .” (The Ensign, May 1989, p. 17). Instead of appointing 140 members (2 times 70), only “a total of 78 Seventies” were initially called to “Both Quorums of the Seventy” (Ibid., p. 1).

One would certainly think that the church would have replaced George P. Lee and filled the two quorums at the October 1989 general conference. Instead, however, 16 other members of the two quorums were either “excused from active service” i.e., put on emeritus status—or completely released. The Salt Lake Tribune, October 1, 1989, reported: “Eight members of the First Quorum of the Seventy were granted emeritus status because of age or health . . . . Eight members of the Second Quorum of the Seventy were released after completing five years . . . .” No new members were called to either quorum. While the Second Quorum of the Seventy was supposed to be set up “to provide for the expansion and regulation of the Church,” the church now seems to have only sixty-one functioning Seventies! Why the church would cut down the number of Seventies at this time is certainly a mystery.

Another curious thing about this matter is the fact that Paul H. Dunn, who once served as one of the seven members of the “Presidency of the First Quorum of Seventy” was “excused from active service” because of age or health. Some people seem to feel that this was not the real reason. They, in fact, believe it was for the “health” of the church. As far as age is concerned, there appear to be sixteen Seventies older than Mr. Dunn who were not put on emeritus status, and while he may have some problems with his health, many of the other General Authorities are not in good health. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie died of cancer, but was never put on emeritus status, and President Spencer W. Kimball had cancer, heart trouble and other problems but remained president of the church. The current president, Ezra Taft Benson, is 90 years old and very feeble, yet he remains in office.

It is suspected that the church leaders felt that Dunn would eventually become a liability to the church because of some investigative reporting which had been done by Lynn Packer. Mr. Packer, a nephew of Apostle Boyd Packer, at one time worked for the church’s television station, KSL. He was working with that station when the Hofmann story broke but was later fired. Packer felt that his aggressive reporting on the Hofmann affair and his earlier work on the Afco scandal played a role in his dismissal. The church simply did not want all the truth to come to light.

Although he was never indicted for any crime, Paul H. Dunn’s reputation suffered because of the Afco affair. The Wall Street
In addition, he came to believe that some of Dunn’s statements in Afco’s involvement were far deeper than was previously reported. This subject after he was dismissed from KSL and found that Dunn’s involvement in Afco was far deeper than was previously reported. In addition, he came to believe that some of Dunn’s statements concerning his earlier life were not true. We contacted Mr. Packer on October 2, 1989, and he informed us that he could make no statement for the Messenger concerning these matters. Packer also refused to discuss a report that he had been threatened with retaliation if he published the story.

Notwithstanding Mr. Packer’s refusal to confirm these matters, we have very good reason to believe that he has been investigating Mr. Dunn. We do not know whether the charges can be proven, but we are very concerned that there may have been an attempt to suppress the truth concerning the Afco scandal. In any case, the church’s release of Paul Dunn from active service at this critical time does look suspicious. If the charges should prove true, it would raise another question: is it fair to merely retire Dunn with full honors while publicly humiliating George P. Lee with excommunication?

MORMON AND ANTI-MORMON FORgeries

Over thirty years have passed since the editors of this newsletter (Jerald and Sandra Tanner) began studying the doctrine and history of the Mormon Church. Not long after starting our research, we began to realize that those who would make a serious examination of Mormonism must pass through a dangerous mine field of false statements, incorrect theories and even falsified or forged documents. Researchers, therefore, have to be extremely careful that they do not put their weight down upon some idea or document that might explode under their feet. While it was shocking enough to learn that Mormon works were filled with a great deal of false information, changes and even outright forgery, we were thoroughly disgusted when we later found that a number of Mormon critics had also resorted to the idea that “the end justifies the means.”

Because they firmly believed that Mormonism was built on sand and therefore dangerous to the people who accepted it, they seemed to feel that they had the right to twist the facts to make their arguments stronger. In some cases documents were actually altered to suit their purposes, and in at least a few cases the forgery of entire documents was perpetrated.

A Bad Experience!

Unfortunately, we know from first-hand experience the devastating effect one of these “land mines” can have on those who really want to present the truth. Early in our ministry, we encountered a copy of a pamphlet entitled, Defence in a Rehearsal of My Grounds for Separating Myself From the Latter Day Saints, purported to have been written by Oliver Cowdery, one of the three special witnesses to the Book of Mormon. In this publication, “Cowdery” related that the Mormon prophet Joseph Smith had given false revelations and had led the church into error. Mr. Cowdery even claimed that “the Redeemer Himself, clothed in glory, stood before” him and said:

“After reproving the Latter Day Saints for their corruption and blindness in permitting their President, Joseph Smith, Jr., to lead them forth into errors, where I led him not, nor commanded him, and saying unto them, ‘Thus saith the Lord,’ when I said it not unto him, thou shalt withdraw thyself from among them.”

We felt that this publication was very significant and should be in the hands of those investigating the truthfulness of Mormonism. As far as we knew at that time, no historian questioned the authenticity of this work. In fact, B. H. Roberts, who was probably the most famous Mormon historian, accepted the Defence as Oliver Cowdery’s work. He claimed that it was published by “Oliver Cowdery” at “Norton, Ohio” in “1839” (see Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 1, page 163, footnote 11). Since Roberts had access to the documents in the Mormon Church Archives, we felt that he never would have accepted this document if there was any reason to doubt its validity. In addition, Yale University claimed in 1960 that it had a photographic copy “of the original of Oliver Cowdery’s Defence . . .” (Letter dated November 15, 1960).

On the basis of this information, we published the Defence in the early 1960’s. Later, however, Wesley P. Walters tracked down the very copy from which Yale University’s photocopies were obtained. Unfortunately, a careful examination of this copy revealed that it was not the original 1839 publication but a printing put out by R. B. Neal in 1906. According to a letter written by Pastor Walters on April 25, 1967, the photocopies which had been sent to Yale University did not have “the identifying words Title Page of Cowdery’s tract.” Because of this omission, the librarian at Yale was unable to recognize that it was only the Neal printing of the tract. Since B. H. Roberts had mentioned the 1906 printing as well as that done in 1839 we did not think that this invalidated the Defence. Some time after Walters’ discovery, Professor Richard L. Anderson, a Mormon... scholar, mentioned to us that he had some reservations about the authenticity of the document. We felt that it would be easy to refute Anderson’s arguments and began an intensive study of the Cowdery Defence. To our dismay, however, we discovered that there was no evidence to support the claim that it was written in 1839. We could not find any mention of the Defence in any publication or diary written during Cowdery’s lifetime. In fact, the first statement we found concerning the tract was published more than fifty years after Cowdery’s death when R. B. Neal printed it in 1906.

Even Oliver Cowdery’s close friend David Whitmer (also a witness to the Book of Mormon who became alienated from the Mormon Church) never mentioned the Defence in his An Address to All Believers in Christ, published in 1887. Since Whitmer held views almost identical to those expressed in the Mormon Church) never mentioned the Defence, it seems hard to believe that he would not even mention it.

The 1839 printing of Cowdery’s Defence was supposed to have been done at “Pressley’s Job Office,” in Norton, Ohio, but the evidence against the so-called Overstreet “Confession” is a genuine document.” (A Critical Look, p. 6)

Our work on the Cowdery Defence and the Overstreet “Confession” was not convincing to all historians. Two of the most prominent, Fawn Brodie and Juanita Brooks, both of whom are now deceased, felt we had not proved our case. Although Mrs. Brodie said that she had “read several of your pieces now with great interest, and much admire your scholarship,” she made this comment concerning the Defence: “I regret very much to say that I cannot agree with you about the Cowdery Defence. After the most careful reading, I still believe it to be genuine. . . . I cannot see a forger fabricating this kind of thing . . .” (Letter dated May 10, 1967). Mrs. Brodie had no comment to make concerning the authenticity of the Overstreet “Confession.”

Juanita Brooks disagreed with our work on both documents. Concerning the Defence, she commented:

You have convinced me that the item is genuine and that it was really written by Oliver Cowdery. You did for me what I had intended to do with the Messenger and Advocate letter myself, and the result is clearly that Cowdery was really the author. . . . The language is his, the incidents are his, the message is his. To me, all this pathetic ‘straining at a gnat while you swallow a camel’ is entirely without point. . . . This is CLEARLY the work of Cowdery. . . . To assume that because you cannot find it, such a thing did not exist, is being pretty silly, I think. (Letter dated July 13, 1968)

Before she ever saw our work with regard to the Overstreet Confession, Mrs. Brooks wrote:

I have been told that you consider the Oliver Overstreet confession a hoax? Would you mind telling me how you arrived at this conclusion? The men who testified were all living at the time, all highly respected men, none of them bitter anti-Mormons. And Judge Elias S. Smith was certainly to be trusted! (Letter dated June 27, 1968)

In the letter of July 13, cited above, Mrs. Brooks maintained that the Overstreet “Confession” had been “proved true.”

In A Critical Look, we presented a long list of parallels between wording found in material Cowdery wrote for the Messenger and Advocate and the Defence (see pages 22-26). In most cases parallels would help to establish common authorship, but in this case we felt that it proved just the opposite. We noted that “Some of the phrases taken from the Messenger and Advocate appear unnatural in the Defence. The whole thing, we think, looks like the work of an impostor. If we had found parallels in the letters which are in the Huntington Library, we would be more inclined to think that the Defence is genuine. But since almost all of the parallels are found in the letters published in the Messenger and Advocate, which were available to the general public, we are led to believe that the Defence is spurious.”
While Mrs. Brooks felt that the parallels proved common authorship, the noted Mormon critic Wesley P. Walters recognized the real problem. In a letter dated April 13, 1967, he wrote:

While reading through your list of comparisons of phrases I thought at first that you were going to conclude that the parallels proved Cowdery’s authorship, and as I was reading these, the nearly verbatim agreement of the phrases made me feel that they showed copying rather than common authorship. I was very much in agreement with your conclusions therefore when I arrived at the end and found that you too had drawn this same conclusion.

New Discoveries

Although we felt that we had a very good case against both documents in 1967, we have recently completed some research which throws important new light on the Defence and completely destroys the Overstreet “Confession.”

With regard to the Overstreet document, we have already quoted Juanita Brooks statement that the purported witnesses to the “Confession” and the Judge “were all living at the time.” In another letter to Professor Richard Anderson, dated April 26, 1968, Mrs. Brooks stated that “the men who signed it were alive in 1857, all three prominent and active citizens, men to be trusted, and good-old Elias Smith without imagination or malice enough to swear to a fraud.” She also noted in the letter of June 27, 1968, that “The Overstreet name is quite common in our records,” but had apparently not found anyone with the name “Oliver Overstreet”: “He did not come before the 1850 census, but there is no reason why he should not have come later.”

We did not question Mrs. Brooks’ information concerning the fact that the witnesses and Judge Smith were really historical people. (We respected her as one of the best authorities on the early history of early Utah.) We did, however, question the fact that this proved that the document was genuine. Our reasoning was that a clever forger also could have found the names and used them to give credibility to the document. We felt that it was possible that these names might be found in books on the history of Utah. The names of the witnesses which are given in the Overstreet “Confession” are “John M. Bowlwinkle,” “Jesse W. Fox” and “H. McEwan.” The Judge was listed as “E. S. Smith.” As Mrs. Brooks indicated, this would have to be Elias Smith, who was Judge of the Probate Court at that time.

We had always felt that it did not ring true for the witnesses to bring such a devastating anti-Mormon document before a devout Mormon Judge for his signature. (Smith at one time even served as editor of the church’s official organ, Deseret News.) Those who are familiar with early Utah history know that it would have been dangerous enough for these witnesses to have been engaged in a plan to undermine Brigham Young at that critical time, but to bring the document before one of Young’s most trusted followers to obtain his signature would be asking for trouble.

In any case, we felt that it was possible that some type of document prepared by Judge Elias Smith could have been used to help create the forgery. We began to search in books about early Utah for a document signed by Smith and for the names of the three witnesses. Most books mentioned Elias Smith and some also referred to Jesse W. Fox, but the other names appeared to be difficult to find. It seemed very unlikely, therefore, that we would find all four names in one book. A few weeks ago, however, we struck pay dirt. We not only discovered all of the names in one book, but we also found that they originally appeared in one document! This document is reproduced on pages 501-502 of T. B. H. Stenhouse’s book, The Rocky Mountain Saints, which was published in 1873.

In the Overstreet “Confession,” we find that after completing his statement, Mr. Overstreet signed the document. This is followed by the names of the three witnesses (“John M. Bowlwinkle,” “Jesse W. Fox” and “H. McEwan”) certifying to his handwriting, and last of all the signature of “E. S. Smith” appears. In the document reproduced in The Rocky Mountain Saints, we find that “Jesse W. Fox” signed the original document. Following this appear the signatures of two witnesses, “Henry McEwan” and “John M. Bowlwinkle.” At the very bottom of the document we find the name “E. S. Smith.” The reader can hardly imagine our surprise when we found this document.

It was very clear from this that someone had merely borrowed the names from this document to create the Overstreet “Confession.” Moreover, the bottom portion of the document reproduced by Mr. Stenhouse was obviously used to forge the end of the “Confession.” It reads as follows:

Territory of Utah, County of Great Salt Lake.

“I, E. Smith, Judge of the Probate Court for said county, certify that the signer of the above transfer, personally known to me, appeared this second day of April, A. D. 1857, and acknowledged that he, of his own choice, executed the foregoing transfer. E. SMITH.” (The Rocky Mountain Saints, p. 502)

The reader will notice in the quotation which follows from the Overstreet “Confession” that most of the words are identical with what we have quoted above. There have been a few changes to fit the type of document the Judge was signing. Notice, for instance, that in the genuine document Elias Smith was only certifying to the signature of “Jesse W. Fox,” whereas in the forgery he was referring to three witnesses. This, of course, made it necessary to use the plural form of certain words in the purported Overstreet document:

Territory of Utah

County of Great Salt Lake

I, E. S. Smith, Judge of Probate Court, for the County aforesaid certify that the signers of the above certificate, all three are personally known to me, appeared before me this (7) day of April, A. D. 1857, and severally acknowledged their respective signatures as attached by themselves to the same.

E. S. Smith.
The reader will notice that the two documents are dated only five days apart. The Stenhouse reproduction gives a date of April 2, 1857, whereas the “Confession” bears a date of April 7, 1857. A comparison of the content of the two documents reveals how ludicrous the “Confession” really is. While the “Confession” indicates that Brigham Young was very dishonest (using bribery to fool his own people and encouraging plans for “Milking the Gentiles”), the original document reveals a blind faith in Brigham Young. It is, in fact, a document in which Jesse W. Fox consecrated his property to the Mormon Church! It says:

\[
\ldots \text{I, JESSE W. FOX, \ldots for and in consideration of the sum of One Hundred ($100) Dollars, and the good will which I have to the CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, give and convey unto BRIGHAM YOUNG, Trustee in trust for said Church, his successor in office, and assigns, all my claim to the ownership of the following described property, to wit: \ldots together with all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereunto belonging \ldots and will warrant and for ever defend the same unto the said TRUSTEE IN TRUST, his successor in office, and assigns, against the claims of my heirs, assigns, or any person whomsoever.}
\]

Henry McEwan and John M. Bollwinkel signed their names as witnesses and Elias Smith verified that Jesse W. Fox was “the signer of the above transfer.” The list of property which Mr. Fox turned over to the church included a house, lots, cows, clothing, beds and household furniture. The total value was listed at $2,127. In 1857 this was a great deal of money. From the list, it would appear that Fox consecrated all of his property. T. B. H. Stenhouse comments concerning this matter:

\[
\ldots \text{when they \[the early Mormons\] have increased in faith \"the Lord\" will afford them the opportunity of \"consecrating\" to him all that they possess. Their houses and lands, their chairs and tables, their horses and pigs, their hammers and saws, their buggies and wagons, and all and everything that they own or hope to own, to be deeded over to \"the Lord\" Trustee in Trust—Brigham Young; \ldots The preaching in the Tabernacle and in the ward meetings throughout Utah, at the date of Mr. Fox's consecration, was almost wholly devoted to the Order of Enoch, and many believing souls placed all they possessed for ever beyond their own personal control and robbed their children of their rightful inheritances. (The Rocky Mountain Saints, pp. 501-502)}
\]

While the Fox document completely destroys the Overstreet “Confession,” it does not provide any structural material for the first part of the forged document. We feel, however, that there is convincing evidence that pages 79-80 of George Reynolds' The Myth of the “Manuscript Found,” or the Absurdities of the “Spalding Story was an important source for this part of the “Confession.” Reynolds’ book, printed in 1883, contains an article reprinted from the Deseret News which had Reuben Miller’s report of what Oliver Cowdery said when he returned to the church. (Those who believed the Overstreet “Confession,” of course, maintained that these were really the words of Oliver Overstreet, the man who supposedly “personated Oliver Cowdery.”)

The account found in The Myth of the “Manuscript Found,” page 79, contained this information: “At a special conference at Council Bluffs, Iowa, held on the 21st of October, in the year 1848 . . . Brother Orson Hyde presided . . .” In the “Confession,” this same information is included, although the words are slightly rearranged: “. . . at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on the 21st day of October, 1848, in a conference at which Brother Orson Hyde presided.”

The Reynolds account indicates that “Brother Reuben Miller” was at the conference. The “Confession” also says that “Bro. R. Miller” was present. The Reynolds account says that Reuben Miller made “a verbatim report of his remarks . . .” The “Confession” likewise speaks of “a verbatim record of my remarks . . .” The following short sentence appears in the Reynolds account: “This is true.” In the “Confession” we also find the sentence: “This is true.”

At the top of page 79 of The Myth of the “Manuscript Found,” a statement which did not originally appear in the Deseret News is found: “Oliver Cowdery is the first of the three witnesses.” In the “Confession” we find an almost identical expression: “Oliver Cowdery, the first of the three Witnesses . . .”

The fact that the Overstreet “Confession” uses a legal document printed by Stenhouse in 1873 seems to indicate that it could not have been written prior to that time, and that it seems to rely on Reynolds’ book makes it very unlikely that it was written before 1883. We actually do not know when the “Confession” first appeared, but in our pamphlet, A Critical Look, page 2, we said that we had “heard that it began to be circulated shortly after the turn of the century.”

One Author?

After we wrote A Critical Look, we began to feel that there was a strong possibility that both the Defence and the Overstreet “Confession” came from the same source. Since there has been so much material plagiarized from other sources in both documents, it is unlikely that stylistic analysis can throw much light on the subject. Nevertheless, there are three important similarities between the documents that seem to indicate the documents originated in the same mind.

One, both forgeries relate to Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery. The Defence contains views which Cowdery may have held but never put down on paper. The “Confession,” on the other hand, was written to destroy the idea that Cowdery returned to the LDS Church and bore his testimony to the restoration of the priesthood by angels.

Two, the “Confession” reveals the very method that was used to forge the Defence. As we have shown in A Critical Look, a series of articles which Oliver Cowdery wrote for the Messenger and Advocate were used to make the document sound like Cowdery. In the Overstreet “Confession,” Mr. Overstreet claims that to enable him “to know what to say and do, Bro. Miller had me read some articles written by Cowdery . . .”
Three, both documents could leave the reader with the impression that an impersonation had taken place. The Overstreet “Confession” plainly states that Mr. Overstreet “personated Oliver Cowdery.” In the Cowdery Defence, the possibility of Sidney Rigdon impersonating “John the Baptist” seems to be strongly hinted at, although “Cowdery” turned right around and said he was sure that Rigdon “had no part in the transactions of that day. As the Angel was John the Baptist . . .” Notwithstanding the denial, it seems clear that the forger was trying to give the impression that an impersonation had, in fact, taken place. Furthermore, both forgeries discussed the matter of the similarity of the “voice” of a personage who delivered a message. In the Defence, we find the following:

... from his [Joseph Smith’s] hand I received baptism by the direction of the Angel of God, whose voice, as it has since struck me, did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon ... When I afterward first heard Elder Rigdon, whose voice is so strikingly similar, I felt that this “dear” brother was to be ... the herald of this church . . .

In the Overstreet “Confession” we read:

“He insisted that I resembled Cowdery so much in form and features, notwithstanding our differences in tone of voice that I could easily personate him ... Bro. Miller ... also gave me some voice drill . . .”

New Evidence on Forgeries

While we felt that the evidence against the Defence and the Overstreet “Confession” which we printed in 1967 completely disproved both documents, some have continued to hold to the hope that one or both of these writings might be authentic. The Mormon scholar Marvin S. Hill acknowledged that there was a question with regard to the authenticity of the Defence, but still seemed to hold the door open to the possibility that it might be genuine: “Cowdery’s views may be contained in Defence in a Rehearsal of My Grounds for Separating Myself from the Latter Day Saints . . .” (Quest For Refuge—The Mormon Flight from American Pluralism, 1989, p. 200, footnote 68)

In A Critical Look, pp. 27-31, we suggested that the author of Cowdery’s Defence depended upon David Whitmer’s pamphlet—which is unquestionably a genuine document—for a great deal of the material in his forgery. We noted, for instance, that Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer claimed that God Himself spoke to him “from the heavens, and told me to ‘separate myself from among the Latter Day Saints . . .’” (An Address To All Believers In Christ, 1887, page 27) The words “Separating Myself From The Latter Day Saints” are used as part of the title of the Cowdery Defence. We also pointed out that David Whitmer’s claim that God spoke to him and told him to leave the Mormons probably suggested the vision in the Defence where “the Redeemer Himself” told Cowdery that he should “withdraw thyself from among them.” We listed many other important parallels between the forgery and Whitmer’s pamphlet; and, as we stated earlier, we noted that Whitmer never mentioned Cowdery’s work—a pamphlet which was supposed to have been printed 48 years earlier. It seemed almost inconceivable that Whittmer would not even mention it if it really existed.

Richard Anderson has recently presented some new evidence which tends to confirm our theory that Whitmer’s pamphlet was used to create the Defence. On page 28 of A Critical Look, we related that David Whitmer told of a revelation Joseph Smith gave which commanded some of “the brethren” to go to “Toronto, Canada” and sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon. When the revelation turned out to be false, it caused “great trouble” among the brethren. They wanted to know why it was that God had given them a revelation to sell the copyright in Canada and yet they “had utterly failed in their undertaking.” Whitmer claimed that “Hiram page [sic] and Oliver Cowdery went to Toronto . . .” Professor Anderson, however, has demonstrated that Whitmer made a mistake with regard to the city in which they were supposed to sell the copyright. It was really Kingston. This is verified in a letter written by Hiram Page, the Book of Mormon witness who actually went with Cowdery on the journey (see Quest For Refuge, page 20).

In addition, W. Wyl printed a letter from “Mr. Traughber” (probably J. L. Traughber, the man who preserved the McLellin diaries) which corroborated the essential elements of David Whitmer’s statement about the Canadian revelation but also made it very clear that Page and Cowdery went to Kingston (Joseph Smith The Prophet—His Family And His Friends, 1886, page 311). The forger of the Cowdery Defence, not realizing the problem, slavishly followed Whitmer’s pamphlet into the error.

With regard to the authorship of the forgeries, some new evidence has come to light which has affected our view regarding who wrote the two documents relating to Cowdery. We originally felt that “the author of the Defence was probably a believer in the Book of Mormon who had become disillusioned by David Whitmer’s pamphlet and was not sure what to believe” (A Critical Look, page 27). While we are even more convinced that Whitmer’s pamphlet was used, the evidence which we have recently examined now leads us to believe that it was probably a dedicated “anti-Mormon” rather than a mixed-up believer in the Book of Mormon who forged the Defence.

One thing that has caused us to revise our position is a manuscript entitled, “Sidney Rigdon—The Real Founder of Mormonism,” by William H. Whitsitt. Professor Whitsitt donated the original manuscript to the Library of Congress in 1908. Fortunately, Byron Marchant has made a typescript of about 500 pages of this manuscript, and it is available through Metamorphosis Publishing in Salt Lake City. According to Mr. Marchant there are 1,306 pages in the entire manuscript.

In the material that follows we have used Byron Marchant’s typescript and have followed the page numbering of the original manuscript which Mr. Marchant has supplied in his typescript. We have also examined photocopies of many pages of the manuscript in the Dale Broadhurst Collection at the University of Utah Library, Special Collections.

When one of the editors of this newsletter (Sandra) was examining some of the pages which Mr. Marchant had given us, she made a startling discovery. She found that some twenty-one years before the Cowdery Defence was published, William H. Whitsitt had suggested that Sidney Rigdon impersonated John the Baptist. In his manuscript, Whitsitt wrote the following:

In case Oliver had not encountered Mr. Rigdon on any other previous occasion, he had certainly received baptism at his hands on the 15th of May, 1829, and it was entirely natural that when a person of so much consequence should exhibit himself a second time, Cowdery should be in a situation to recognize his features. When in the subsequent progress of the movement he was introduced to Sidney, it is perfectly natural that he should have been confirmed in the conclusion that the person who had baptized him and exhibited the plates was none other than Rigdon. (“Sidney Rigdon—The Real Founder of Mormonism,” p. 392-b)

But the name by which Rigdon was most commonly and openly designated was that of “John the Baptist.” (Ibid., p. 232)

The reader will note how similar this idea is to the Cowdery Defence:

... from his [Joseph Smith’s] hand I received baptism, by the direction of the Angel of God, whose voice, as it has since struck me, did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon ...

Now, if Cowdery’s Defence had been available in 1885, Whitsitt certainly would have cited it to prove his position that Rigdon impersonated the angel. In any case, this parallel between the Whitsitt manuscript and the Defence is remarkable and certainly raises the question as to whether Whitsitt’s idea was incorporated into the Defence.

The Mormon Church has always maintained that Sidney Rigdon did not become converted to the church until the fall of 1830 (see History of the Church, vol. 1, pp. 121-124). William Whitsitt, however, felt that he needed Sidney Rigdon on the scene much earlier because he believed that Rigdon was the “real founder” of Mormonism. Whitsitt’s manuscript reveals that he was a very strong believer in the Spalding theory concerning the origin of the Book of Mormon. This theory holds that early in the 19th century a minister by the name of Solomon Spalding wrote a manuscript entitled, “Manuscript Found.” Sidney Rigdon in some way obtained this document and it eventually was used by Rigdon and Smith to create the Book of Mormon. (Those who are interested in this theory and the attempt to revive it in the 1970’s should read our book, Did Spalding Write the Book of Mormon? This work includes a reprint of Spalding’s “Manuscript Story.”)

William H. Whitsitt felt that Sidney Rigdon was revising the Spalding manuscript long before Joseph Smith was supposed to have received the gold plates. He maintained that Rigdon “made two separate redactions of the Book of Mormon, the first of these being performed at Pittsburgh and Bainbridge from January 1823 to the autumn of 1826, and the second in or near Harmony township, Pennsylvania in the summer of 1829” (“Sidney Rigdon—The Real Founder of Mormonism,” p. 205-a). Whitsitt professed to be able to tell which parts of the Book of Mormon were written by Spalding and which came from Rigdon. On pages 212-213 of his manuscript, he claimed that when Sidney Rigdon first examined “the volume of Mr. Spaulding,” he found that is was “entirely . . . devoted to the external history of the Nephites and Lamanites . . . to render it suitable for the chiefly religious purpose he had in mind it would be indispensable that he should rewrite the whole of it, leaving out the ‘more history part’ . . . .” He started to do this; however, he “was a lazy scamp,” and when he came to the “close of the Book of Omni his industry failed him . . . .” From that point on, he “returned to the text of Spaulding, only inserting here and there larger or shorter religious harangues set down on separate sheets of paper for the purpose of imparting a religious character to the story.”

Professor Whitsitt had a very active imagination. Like the originator of the Overstreet “Confession” and the Cowdery Defence, Whitsitt seems to have been obsessed with the idea of impersonations. He not only had Sidney Rigdon impersonating John the Baptist, but he also had him posing as the angel who showed the gold plates to the witnesses to the Book of Mormon. The first set of Book of Mormon witnesses was composed of David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris. On page 392 of his manuscript, Professor Whitsitt commented:

It is suspected that Mr. Rigdon was somewhere present in the undergrowth of the forest where the little company were assembled, and . . . could easily step forward at a signal from Joseph, and exhibit several of the most faded leaves of the manuscript, which from having been kept a series of years since the death of Spaulding would assume the yellow appearance that is well known in such circumstances. At a distance . . . the writing on these yellow sheets of paper would also appear to their excited imagination in the light of engravings; Sidney was likewise very well equal to the task of uttering the assurances which Smith affirms the angel was kind enough to supply concerning the genuineness of the “plates” and the correctness of the translation.

The reader will notice that Whitsitt not only had Rigdon impersonating the angel, but he also had him showing the Spalding manuscript in lieu of the gold plates. On page 181, Whitsitt observed: “Whatever secrets Oliver might have acquired or suspected on the occasion of the exhibition of the plates, he kept his own counsels . . . the trial which Joseph had feared so highly, succeeded beyond expectation.” Whitsitt carried the matter even further by claiming that Rigdon fooled the second set of eight witnesses in much the same way. Whitsitt’s imagination seems to have been especially active here because “The Testimony of Eight Witnesses,” which appears in the Book of Mormon, says nothing about an angel being present, only that “Joseph Smith, Jun. . . . has shown unto us the plates . . . .” Professor Whitsitt, however, wrote the following on pages 393-395 of his manuscript:
Whitsitt emphatically wrote: restore either priesthood. On pages 553-554 of his manuscript, angels came from heaven to bring the Book of Mormon or to Whitsitt was strongly committed to the position that no Melchisedek priesthoods by angels from heaven. Professor of Mormon and the restoration of both the Aaronic and wanted to destroy the idea that Oliver Cowdery returned the last part of the Overstreet “Confession.” This, of course, is the book that contains Among them was “T. B. H. Stenhouse, Whitsitt recommended a number of books to his readers. Moreover, in an article published in The Concise Dictionary of Religious Knowledge and Gazetteer, 1893, William H. Whitsitt recommended a number of books to his readers. Among them was “T. B. H. Stenhouse, Rocky Mountain Saints, New York, 1873 . . .” This, of course, is the book that contains the last part of the Overstreet “Confession.” The creator of the Overstreet “Confession” apparently wanted to destroy the idea that Oliver Cowdery returned to the Mormon Church and bore his testimony to the Book of Mormon and the restoration of both the Aaronic and Melchisedek priesthoods by angels from heaven. Professor Whitsitt was strongly committed to the position that no angels came from heaven to bring the Book of Mormon or to restore either priesthood. On pages 553-554 of his manuscript, Whitsitt emphatically wrote:

> By this introduction of Peter, James and John, Mr. Smith also placed himself on a more advantageous footing with relation to Rigdon. Under the character of “John the Baptist,” Sindey [sic] had ordained the prophet to the Aaronic priesthood . . . But Peter, James and John [who were supposed to have restored the Melchisedek priesthood] were manifestly above “John the Baptist”! . . .

> The Mormons have vexed their ingenuity not a little to decide at what place and time Peter, James and John appeared to the prophet and bestowed the apostleship upon him . . . but the inquiry is entirely futile, since the occurrence never took place in any form, but was merely pretended by Joseph in order to guard himself against possible embarrassments.

It is our belief that one of the major reasons that the Overstreet “Confession” was written was to destroy a statement concerning the Spalding-Rigdon theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon which was attributed to Oliver Cowdery when he returned to the church in 1848. According to the report in The Myth of the “Manuscript Found,” page 80, Oliver Cowdery proclaimed that the Book of Mormon “is true. Sidney Rigdon did not write it. Mr. Spaulding did not write it.”

This statement would have been objectionable to anyone who believed that Spalding wrote the Book of Mormon, but William Whitsitt, who had written a large manuscript debunking Mormonism and promoting the Spalding theory, would have found it exceptionally abhorrent. Since he already believed that Rigdon had impersonated angels to convince Cowdery of the truthfulness of Mormonism, he probably would have felt that these words attributed to Cowdery were also spurious. Whether he would go so far as to resort to forgery in an attempt to eradicate the statement is of course another question.

While the Overstreet “Confession” tries to completely destroy the credibility of the attack on the Spalding theory attributed to Cowdery, the Defence takes the matter even further by having Cowdery say that the voice of the angel “did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon . . .” The effectiveness of this subtle suggestion in the Defence cannot be overstated. Although we have never placed much stock in the Spalding theory, at the time we accepted the Cowdery Defence as genuine, we felt that this was one of the best evidences for that theory because it came from within Mormonism from a person who really could have known what was going on.

View on Forgery

The first part of William H. Whitsitt’s manuscript would certainly give one the impression that he was very opposed to forgery. He, in fact, severely castigated a minister for being involved in producing a document which he felt was a “clumsy fabrication.” This document, which promoted the Spalding argument, turned out to be very embarrassing to those who endorsed that theory. It purported to be a letter written by Solomon Spalding’s widow, Matilda Davison, and was published in The Boston Recorder in 1839. The letter charged that Solomon Spalding was trying to get his manuscript published at a printing establishment in Pittsburgh where Sidney Rigdon was employed. This, of course, supplied the “missing link” between Spalding and Rigdon and made it clear that Rigdon could have copied Spalding’s manuscript while it was in the printing office. The Mormons referred to the letter as a “bogus affidavit.” Professor Whitsitt seemed to agree and expressed very strong feelings against it:

> In the face of proofs so strong as those that have just been supplied to the effect that Sidney’s handicraft in Pittsburgh was that of a tanner . . . the statement has been so often repeated that he engaged in a printing office at Pittsburgh . . .

> Nothing was ever heard of Rigdon as being employed in the printing office of Patterson and Lambdin at Pittsburgh until the first day of April 1839. The document containing this singular assertion was subscribed by Matilda Davison . . . this was to turn to a very inferior source, Mrs. Spaulding [Davison [sic]] had imparted all the information she could command to Mr. Howe in the year 1834, and it is marvelous to perceive how meager was her store . . . she had heard of the “Manuscript Found” by name, but was not aware of its contents; she could not be positive that it had ever been carried to the office of Patterson and Lambdin, and was just as much in the dark to decide whether it had ever been returned; of Sidney Rigdon she knew nothing in the world.

But when her certificate dated the 1st of April 1839 was given to the public, she had meanwhile acquired a considerable access to her knowledge regarding all these topics and especially touching Mr. Rigdon. She affirms: “Sidney Rigdon, who was figured so largely in the history of the Mormons, was at that time connected with the printing office of Mr. Patterson, as is well known in that region, and as Rigdon himself has frequently stated. Here he had ample opportunity to become acquainted with Mr. Spaulding’s manuscript and to copy it, if he chose. . . .”

It is not probable that Mrs. Spaulding (Davison) should have been the author of assertions of this nature. She was too honestly ignorant of these concerns in 1834 to have expressed herself in the above strain in the year 1839. . . . it is absolutely certain that he was not an apprentice in a printing office as early as she intimates. . . . Almost every important allegation that she supplies in the certificate which is presumed to have been composed by Messrs. Ely and Austin is incorrect and misleading. A comparison of the two separate utterances will suggest two conclusions, one or the other of which must be accepted. The first is that the good lady is an unfaithful witness, and the second is that her innocency was employed by some person who wished to do evil that good might come of it.

But no real good has ever come of it; the certificate of 1839, besides introducing a large amount of error into this history, has steadily brought aid and comfort to the Mormons. . . .

If the certificate . . . be rejected as the clumsy invention of the parties who were using her simplicity to accomplish their own ends—and no other course lies open to the student—the public will be deprived of the only evidence it ever possessed to the effect that Sidney was at any time engaged in a printing office . . . (“Sidney Rigdon—The Real Founder of Mormonism,” pages 153-157)

On page 197 of the same manuscript, William Whitsitt charged that if Mrs. Spalding “had been left to her private devices that clumsy ‘April Fool’ would never have vexed the soul of the student. All the blame of this transaction must be laid at the door of other people who abused her simplicity to accomplish purposes of their own. The parties who seem to be directly responsible for this fraud, are the Rev. John Storrs, Pastor of the Congregational Church in Holliston . . . and Mr. D. R. Austin, Principal of the Monson Academy.”

It is interesting to note that the very statement by Spalding’s widow which Professor Whitsitt condemned so strongly became a very important part of a recent attempt to revive the Spalding theory. It is reproduced twice in the book, Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon? by Wayne L. Cowdrey, Howard A. Davis and Donald R. Scales, 1977, pages 42-47, 201-209. On page 207 we read: “Our examination of the so-called ‘problems’ in Mrs. Davison’s testimony show that they can all be answered easily. . . . the basic facts of her affidavit will stand careful examination.”

In any case, although Professor Whitsitt seemed so adamant against forgery or fraud in the case of Spalding’s widow, when he came to “The Question of Rigdon’s Sincerity” in chapter eleven of his manuscript, he seemed surprisingly tolerant:

The Book of Mormon sincerely if not effectually aims to “make for righteousness.” . . . Mr. Rigdon pursued a purpose which he candidly believed would promote the honor of the Lord . . . His own impulse and plan were to his thinking unquestionably good, and with as little question he supposed that both had come from the Lord. . . . the fact remains that notwithstanding what the world conceives to be his evil behavior he kept a good conscience which had no trouble to excuse the conduct of its owner . . . To his mind the truth and authority of this production were entirely independent of Joseph’s connection with it. He was sensible that he had only employed young Mr. Smith as a kind of tool . . . The great position that “Jesus is the Christ,”. . . would stand firm no matter what kind of fate might befall Joseph Smith. . . .

But the allegation will be still laid against the honesty of Mr. Rigdon that he perpetrated a pious fraud. The history of the religious world abounds with instances of pious fraud. In the Old Testament the number of Apocryphal and of pseudepigraphical books is far too large to recount in this place. The same remark also applies to the New Testament. . . . The man who out of hand asserts the knavery, all and singular, of the authors of these productions argues nothing so much as his own imbecility. . . . every man of sober reflection must suspend his judgment touching the conduct of Rigdon until he has weighed all the conditions that may be involved . . . those who will persist in the conclusion that Mr. Rigdon was nothing else than a roguish knave must be content to forego every kind of hope to find a right understanding of his career and character . . . If they relish their voluntary imbecility they are welcome to the benefits it may bring them, but when Sidney is judged, as he has a fair right to be, by the facts, and by his own productions, it becomes probable that he was an honest fanatic. . . .

The question is not whether the production of Rigdon actually “makes for righteousness”; but did he intend that it should “make for righteousness”? The inquiry must be answered in the affirmative; it was not his purpose to earn money or fame from its circulation; he desired to promote the interests of Christ and of the “ancient order of things.” (“Sidney Rigdon—The Real Founder of Mormonism,” pages 466-471)

The question naturally arises as to whether the person who wrote the above might himself commit “a pious fraud” to save the Mormon people from their delusions? Since he already believed that Rigdon and Smith had used impersonation to lead the people into error, would he consider it wrong to create something that might reclaim them? If it was done to “make for righteousness” with no desire “to earn money or fame from its circulation,” would it really be evil to produce such a work? We do not really know the answer to those questions. The circumstances look very suspicious, but it is certainly possible that someone else might have taken advantage of Professor Whitsitt’s ideas to produce forgeries.
Neal's Role

As we indicated earlier, R. B. Neal was the first to print the Cowdery Defence in 1906. Neal claimed to have received his copy of the original in 1905. In a letter dated June 3, 1905, he wrote: “I have before me ‘Oliver Cowdery’s Defence;’ just got it yesterday.” This letter is printed in Wingfield Watson’s Prophetic Controversy. No. 6, or ‘Facts’ for the Anti-Mormons. . . . Mr. Neal certainly realized the importance of the Defence in his work with the Mormons. In a later publication, Neal commented: “No more important document has been unearthed since I have been engaged in this warfare . . .” (“Sword of Laban” Leaflets, No. 11).

Because Neal had a ministry which published “Anti-Mormon” tracts and was the first to bring the Defence to light, a number of Mormons suspected that he really wrote it. Another theory, of course, would be that someone else wrote it and had it typeset and printed by a publisher who had no interest in Mormonism. Since it would have only been sixty-six years since Oliver Cowdery was supposed to have printed it, it would have been easy to make a copy of the pamphlet appear that old by exposing it to the sun, water and dirt. A copy created in this manner could have been sent to Mr. Neal without much fear of exposure.

Like William Whitsitt, R. B. Neal was dedicated to proving the Spalding-Rigdon theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon and felt that the statement about Sidney Rigdon in the Defence was very significant:

... we are not surprised that Cowdery says: “The voice of the angel did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon.” This statement of Cowdery’s, solves in a large measure the problem as to the “fine Italian hand” behind ignorant Joseph Smith in this Mormon conspiracy (Oliver Cowdery’s Defence and Renunciation, Anti-Mormon Tracts, No. 9, 1906, pages 17-18).

One very interesting thing about the Defence is that it seems to reflect and even directly quote some material written by R. B. Neal six years before the pamphlet fell into Neal’s hands. In a pamphlet published in 1899, Neal had argued that there was an important contradiction with regard to the restoration of the Mormon priesthood. He demonstrated that one of Joseph Smith’s revelations published in the Doctrine and Covenants (Section 7), and the Book of Mormon (3 Nephi 28: 6-40) affirm that the Apostle John and three members of the Council of Twelve among the Nephites were to remain on earth and “never taste of death.”

R. B. Neal noted that because of this claim, “we must revise the stereotyped answer given by the child to the question of who was the oldest man. Methusaleh is nowhere. John and the three nameless Nephites are over 1,800 years old. . . . These apostles have the keys to both ‘Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods’—the ‘right to baptize’ and ‘to impart the Holy Ghost.’” Mr. Neal then commented that the Pearl of Great Price, one of the four standard works of the church, contained an account of the restoration of the priesthood by Cowdery which said that at the time Joseph Smith began his work, “none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the Gospel” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith — History, 1981 edition, p. 59).

Joseph Smith claimed that “John the Baptist” came from heaven to restore the Aaronic priesthood. R. B. Neal, however, pointed out that one of the “four apostles” who remained on earth should have restored the priesthood and, according to the Mormon Church’s own theology, it was wrong to say that “none” on earth had the authority from God:

Joseph! Oliver! what do you mean? Where, oh, where were the four apostles who held these keys, the keys to both priesthoods? They were on earth, if Joseph and Oliver and the Book of Mormon are not monumental liars. Who took them from earth? Or, who took the right to baptize and to impart the Holy Ghost from them? (The Stick of Ephraim vs. The Bible of the Western Continent; or, The Manuscript Found vs. The Book of Mormon, Part 1, 1899, page 28)

The Defence presents exactly the same argument. It has Cowdery recognizing his error with regard to this matter and claims that he said:

(1) But I certainly followed him [Joseph Smith] too far when accepting, and reiterating, that none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the Gospel, as I had then forgotten that John, the beloved disciple, was tarrying on earth and exempt from death.

By comparing the quotation below, the reader will notice that a number of words (set in bold type for easy comparison) used in the Defence are identical to wording printed six years earlier by Neal! Although many of these words are borrowed from the Pearl of Great Price, that they would be followed by words concerning John the beloved still being on earth seems too close to be a coincidence.

We learn that none on earth “had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the gospel.” I am quoting Oliver now. This confirms Joseph. John the beloved was on earth . . . (The Stick of Ephraim, p. 28)

It would be very difficult to believe that the parallels in thoughts and wording could have happened by chance. While it does throw a shadow of suspicion on R. B. Neal, there is another possible explanation. It could very well be that someone who read Neal’s The Stick of Ephraim used it to write the Defence. People are far more likely to fall for a forgery if it supports their own beliefs. The noted forger Mark Hofmann demonstrated this within the last few years. One of his customers indicated that he would like to have a letter written by Joseph Smith from the Carthage Jail. While this would be a very rare item, within a short time Hofmann was able to “find” such a letter.

A forger who had read some of R. B. Neal’s writings would certainly be wise to frame the document as near to Mr. Neal’s theories as possible. This would insure that Neal would give it his full support and a wide distribution. It is interesting to note that Mr. Neal recognized that the document supported his position with regard to “John the Beloved.” When he first published the “Cowdery” tract in Oliver Cowdery’s Defence and Renunciation, pages 15-16, he commented:

We made the same argument years ago that Oliver here makes. It is unanswerable. . . . No wonder Oliver says: “I followed Joseph too far when accepting and reiterating that none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the Gospel, &c.”

It is hard to believe that Neal himself would bring the matter to light if he was the one who forged the document. Such a statement might make people want to compare Neal’s earlier writings and possibly lead to the discovery that the Defence was forged. On the other hand, however, we have to acknowledge that people who forge documents and commit other crimes do not always use the same type of logic that normal people do.

Looking for Tracks

During our research on these forged documents we have kept our eye open for any connection between William H. Whitsitt and R. B. Neal. At the present time we have no evidence to show that Professor Whitsitt ever provided Neal with information. Nevertheless, it seems possible that these two men could have known about each other. In the Dale Broadhurst Collection at the University of Utah Library, we did find a photocopy from a book which has some interesting information on William Whitsitt. Although the photocopy does not reveal the name of the book, it seems to be a book concerning important religious leaders. In any case, on page 170 we find this information:

Whitsitt, William Heth (Nov. 25, 1841-Jan. 20, 1911), Baptist minister, church historian, and theological seminary president . . . he accepted (1872) the chair of ecclesiastical history in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Greenville, S. C. . . . In 1895 he was elected president of the seminary, which in 1877 had been moved to Louisville, Ky. Under his administration the enrollment surpassed that of any other American theological seminary, and his thorough scholarship and courageous devotion to truth commanded the unstinted admiration of his students.

A statement made by Whitsitt in his article upon the Baptists published in Johnson’s Universal Encyclopaedia (1896) precipitated what was known as “the Whitsitt controversy.” . . . the controversy lasted for four years, increasing in bitterness as the weakness of the arguments of the church successionists became more evident. Many who recognized the principle of academic freedom became convinced that its denominational concord could be gained only through Whitsitt’s withdrawal from the institution, and the trustees of the seminary at length accepted his resignation (1899). After a year[s] rest he accepted the chair of philosophy in Richmond College, Richmond, Va. . . .

While Whitsitt was serving as president of the seminary in Louisville, Kentucky, R. B. Neal was publishing “Anti-Mormon” tracts in Grayson, a town in the eastern part of Kentucky. Only about 150 miles separated the two Mormon critics at that time. Professor Whitsitt later served at Richmond College, which was about 375 miles east of Neal’s home. Since R. B. Neal printed a vast number of tracts, it would seem likely that some would reach the seminary at Louisville or Richmond College in Virginia. On the other hand, in 1891, an article on Mormonism by Whitsitt was published in The Concise Dictionary of Religious Knowledge and Gazetteer. This book was reprinted in 1893. In this article, Professor Whitsitt strongly advocated his views on the Spalding theory. At the end of his selection of books on Mormonism (page 622), Whitsitt indicated that he had written a book about Sidney Rigdon. He referred to, “W. H. Whitsitt, Life of Sidney Rigdon, 1891 (in which will be found the proof of the statements made about the Book of Mormon, etc.).” If R. B. Neal ever saw this article, it probably would have aroused his interest in the manuscript Whitsitt had written.

As it turned out, Whitsitt’s manuscript was never published and in his letter to the Library of Congress, he sadly wrote, “I suppose it will never be in my power to issue the work in print, but I should be glad to leave it in some library where it might be consulted in manuscript . . .” (Letter dated August 28, 1908, Byron Marchant’s transcript). In the same letter, Whitsitt indicated that when his article was published in 1891, he received letters from “many persons in differing portions of the country who had perused it.” Because of their common interests in refuting Mormonism and establishing the Spalding theory it is possible that these two men met or corresponded at some time.

An anthropologist once noted that when just a few scattered fragments of bone from an ancient fossil man are found, some scientists tend to be more dogmatic than when there are a large numbers of bones discovered. This is because there is not a great deal of evidence available to refute any conclusions they might arrive at. This same thing is undoubtedly true with regard to historians. It is easy to write sweeping statements about things that happened long ago when we know there is little to contradict what we set forth as “truth.” In the present case, it would be very easy to pronounce William H. Whitsitt the forger of the Overstreet “Confession” and the Cowdery Defence, and it would probably be very difficult for anyone to disprove the accusation. When it comes right down to it, however, we must admit that we do not have enough pieces to complete the puzzle.

While we can now be certain that the Defence and the “Confession” are forgeries, we must be very careful about jumping to conclusions. The evidence, however, seems to indicate that the Cowdery Defence was written sometime between 1899 and June 3, 1905. A number of things seem essential for its production: One, William Whitsitt’s idea that Sidney Rigdon impersonated John the Baptist. His manuscript containing this idea was written in 1885. Although we are not aware of any other source for this theory, we cannot state for certain that Whitsitt did not hold to the idea at an earlier time or that it could not have come from some other source we are not familiar with. Two, David Whitmer’s An Address to
All Believers in Christ, which was not published until 1887. Three, R. B. Neal’s 1899 printing of The Stick of Ephraim (the pamphlet that maintained that the priesthood should have been restored by the Apostle John rather than John the Baptist).

The Oliver Overstreet “Confession” is more difficult to date. We do know that it was necessary for the forger to have The Rocky Mountain Saints, printed in 1873, and The Myth of the “Manuscript Found,” which appeared in 1883. Whitsitt’s idea of a number of impersonations in early Mormonism, set forth in his 1885 manuscript, cannot be overlooked with regard to this document. Since the “Confession” describes the very method used in producing the Defence, i.e., Overstreet’s use of “some articles written by Cowdery” to imitate his style, it seems reasonable to believe that it was forged after the Defence was written. This, of course, would be sometime after June 3, 1905.

We feel that there are three theories with regard to the authorship of the Cowdery Defence and the Overstreet “Confession”:

One, that they were forged by R. B. Neal. Mr. Neal was a firm believer in the Spalding theory and had the ability to write both documents. Furthermore, in his position with an organization which printed “Anti-Mormon” tracts he could have had access to the printed books necessary to produce the forgeries. For instance, in his booklet, The Stick of Ephraim, page 26, he cited a quotation from “Myth of the Manuscript Found, p. 80.” As we have already pointed out, pages 79-80 of this book were used in creating the “Confession.” We have also noted that Neal wrote a pamphlet in 1899 concerning the restoration of the priesthood and that the same argument was incorporated into the Defence. In this publication, however, Mr. Neal did not refer to the idea that John the Baptist was impersonated by Sidney Rigdon. He, of course, could have later learned of that theory from William Whitsitt or someone who read Whitsitt’s manuscript, but so far we have no evidence to that effect. If our theory is correct that the Defence and the “Confession” were forged by the same individual, it would raise the question as to why Neal never printed the Overstreet “Confession.” He printed many tracts after the Defence, but as far as we have been able to determine, he did not publish the “Confession.” It would seem that a man who played such a prominent role in an organization which printed Anti-Mormon tracts would rush the “Confession” into print if he was, in fact, the author of that document. This would lead us to believe that Neal was merely the “tool” used by a very clever forger.

Two, that the documents were forged by William H. Whitsitt. Professor Whitsitt, like R. B. Neal, had the ability to write the documents in question. Moreover, he had a very active imagination. He was obviously fascinated by the idea of impersonations, and his manuscript contains accounts of three different impersonations by Sidney Rigdon. The “Confession” begins with the words: “I personated Oliver Cowdery . . .” The Defence also hints concerning Rigdon impersonating John the Baptist.

According to this theory, Whitsitt would not have to be personally acquainted with R. B. Neal. He would just have to know that Neal had an extensive Anti-Mormon tract ministry. He would, however, need to have access to a copy of Neal’s booklet, The Stick of Ephraim to use in writing the Defence. Whitsitt could have some copies of the “Cowdery” pamphlet printed, have one “aged” and send it to Mr. Neal, of course, would be very vulnerable to a tract which supported his own beliefs about Mormonism.

Like R. B. Neal, Professor Whitsitt held tenaciously to the Spalding theory about the origin of the Book of Mormon. He had, in fact, written a 1,306-page book dedicated to proving that theory. In his letter to the Library of Congress he said that he found that “such a large amount of money was required to produce the work that I was compelled to desist, . . .” It could be argued that the frustration of never having his masterpiece published led him to seek some other way of getting the message out to the world that Mormonism originated and grew through deceit and impersonations.

William Whitsitt, as we have shown, was familiar with the two books which were used to produce the Overstreet “Confession,” and would have wanted the report of the remarks made by Oliver Cowdery when he returned to the church undermined because it contradicted the Spalding theory and his firm belief that the restoration of the Melchizedek priesthood “never took place.”

Three, that the documents were forged by an unknown person who had access to the Whitsitt manuscript, the writings of R. B. Neal and all of the other writings necessary to commit the forgeries. This explanation, of course, would clear both Whitsitt and Neal of any responsibility for the forgeries.

While it may never be known for certain who forged the Oliver Cowdery Defence and the Oliver Overstreet “Confession,” one thing is very obvious: there was a forger on the loose around the turn of the century who was extremely interested in promoting the Spalding theory. Because of this, we must be especially cautious of any documents relating to that matter which were “discovered” during the latter part of the 19th century or the early part of the 20th century.

While some anti-Mormon writers have been guilty of deceit and forgery, a far greater problem exists in documents printed by the church itself. Joseph Smith and other early Mormon leaders created literally hundreds of pages of forged documents. At the present time, we are working on a book that will demonstrate conclusively that the Book of Mormon is not a translation of an ancient record written on gold plates.

No Fool!

Jim Elliot, who later gave his life in an attempt to bring the Christian message to the Auca Indians, wrote the following:

He is no fool who gives what he cannot keep to gain what he cannot lose.
* * OTHER BOOKS * *

(Mail orders add 10% — Minimum postage $1.00)

Ferguson’s Manuscript Unveiled. A photo reprint of a very significant paper by the noted Mormon scholar Thomas Stuart Ferguson. Ferguson founded the new World Archaeology Foundation hoping to prove the Book of Mormon true but eventually concluded it was “fiction.”
Price: $3.00

An American Prophet’s Record: The Diaries and Journals of Joseph Smith, edited by Scott H. Faulring. All the diaries of Joseph Smith printed in a beautiful paper-back edition. A limited hard-back edition of this same book sold for $50.00 per copy.

Line Upon Line: Essays on Mormon Doctrine, edited by Gary James Bergera. A selection of 16 different essays which shows “the evolution of ideas many Mormons today take for granted.” Price: $10.95

History and Faith: Reflections of a Mormon Historian, by Richard D. Poll. Frankly discusses some of the “skeletons in the closet of Mormon history.” Price: $9.95

Quest for Refuge: The Mormon Flight From American Pluralism, by Marvin S. Hill. A surprisingly frank study to come from the pen of a BYU professor. Price: $19.95

The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri, by Stephen C. LeSueur. Price: $20.00

“Wild Bill” Hickman and the Mormon Frontier, by Hope A. Hilton. Price: $9.95

Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism, by Dan Vogel. Price: $9.95

Early Mormonism and the Magic World View, by D. Michael Quinn. Price: $14.95

Mere Christianity, by C. S. Lewis. Good defense and explanation of Christianity. Price: $3.95

---

UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY
PO BOX 1884
SALT LAKE CITY UT  84110
A COVER-UP REVEALED

Joseph Smith’s Attempt to Save the Book of Mormon

In the July 1989 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, we announced the discovery of a large “black hole” in the first part of the Book of Mormon. We demonstrated that when the first 116 pages of Joseph Smith’s manuscript were stolen, he was unable to accurately reproduce the material he had “translated” from the plates of Lehi. Since he feared that his enemies had not destroyed the missing pages and would bring them forth and point out contradictions if he tried to duplicate the material, he was forced to claim that God ordered him to translate the first part of the Book of Mormon from a different set of plates. Mormons refer to these plates as the “small plates of Nephi.” These “gold plates” covered the same period as the plates of Lehi, but since they were written by another author, the story did not have to be identical to that found in the missing pages. Nevertheless, the evidence shows that even this solution did not completely solve the dilemma that confronted Joseph Smith. Smith apparently could not clearly remember many of the personal names, dates, cities, lands, kings, military leaders and other matters he had previously written about. Consequently, what Smith dictated to replace the missing pages of his book had to be as vague as possible. While these pages would have to cover the same period as the original pages from the book of Lehi and give some appearance of being history, they would actually have to be very obscure when it came to particulars which Joseph Smith could not clearly remember. Many important things, therefore, which had evaporated from Joseph Smith’s memory would also have to vanish into a rayless and indefinable “black hole” in the Book of Mormon.

Our theory with regard to this “black hole” now seems to be well established by the evidence. Not only have Mormon apologists remained silent in the face of the facts that have come forth, but new evidence has come to light which tends to confirm the research which was presented in the July 1989 issue of the Messenger.

One important development relates to a theory held by some prominent Mormon scholars for a number of years. These scholars maintain that the first part of the Book of Mormon was actually written last. They claim that after the 116 pages were stolen, Joseph Smith did not try to fill in the missing material at the start of the book. Instead, he picked up where he had left off and continued until he came to the end of the book. Only after he completed the last part of the Book of Mormon (over two-thirds of the book), did he face the problem of restoring the beginning of his work. Therefore, the first six books in the Book of Mormon—I Nephi through Omni—comprising 142 pages, were written last of all. When we originally did our work with regard to the “black hole,” we did not realize how well this theory coincided with our ideas. Fortunately, during the course of our research a Mormon scholar who has lost faith in the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon shared some of his research with us. We checked his work and found that he had irrefutable evidence that the first part of the book was, in fact, written last. Moreover, this evidence also conclusively proves that Joseph Smith himself was the author of the Book of Mormon.

In a new book we have just completed, Covering Up the Black Hole in the Book of Mormon, we have combined this important information with our research on the “black hole.” In addition, we have added our computer work on plagiarism—74 pages of photographic proof that the author of the Book of Mormon lifted a great deal of material from the New Testament.

DELETING JESUS’ NAME

The discovery that the first part of the Book of Mormon was actually written last opened up a plausible explanation as to why Joseph Smith felt he had to delete the words Jesus Christ.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK!

Covering Up the Black Hole in the Book of Mormon, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A penetrating look at the Book of Mormon which conclusively demonstrates that it was written by Joseph Smith himself and did not come from a translation of gold plates written by ancient Jews. Contains 74 pages of photographic proof that Smith plagiarized extensively from the New Testament of the King James Bible.

Regular Price: $5.00

Special Price if ordered before April 30, 1990

ONLY $4.00

(Minimum mailing charge $1.00)
from an early portion of the Book of Mormon (1 Nephi 12:18). We had noted this change years ago in our book, 3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon, but did not understand the weighty implications of the matter.

One of the most serious problems confronting believers in the Book of Mormon is the emphasis upon Jesus in the Old Testament portion of the Book of Mormon. Even the appearance of the name Jesus Christ in the story hundreds of years before his coming presents a problem. At the time Joseph Smith wrote the Book of Mormon he must not have realized that the words Jesus Christ were derived from the Greek words Iesous Christos. When Smith was charged with using a Greek word in the Book of Mormon, he responded that this was an error: “The error I speak of, is the definition of the word Mormon. It has been stated that this word was derived from the Greek word mormo. This is not the case. There was no Greek or Latin upon the plates from which I . . . translated the Book of Mormon” (Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 194). Joseph Smith was aware of the fact that it would be incorrect to have a name derived from the Greek language in the Book of Mormon. He, therefore, argued against the idea put forth by his detractors.

Notwithstanding Joseph Smith’s firm denial, there are names in the Book of Mormon “derived from the Greek.” For example, the name Timothy (3 Nephi 19:4) comes from the Greek language, and the name Jonas (found in the same verse) is the Greek name for Jonah. Moreover, the Greek words Alpha and Omega are found in 3 Nephi 9:18. It is evident also that they have been plagiarized from the New Testament, Revelation 21:6. (The New Testament, of course, was written in Greek.) It is interesting to note that Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie freely admitted that these words are from the Greek language: “ALPHA AND OMEGA . . . These words, the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, are used figuratively to teach the timelessness and eternal nature of our Lord’s existence . . .” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, p. 31).

Even the Mormon Church’s own Bible Dictionary, included with the church’s printing of the King James Version of the Bible, acknowledges that Jesus is the “Greek form of the name Joshua or Jeshua” (page 713) and also states that the “English word Christ is from a Greek word meaning anointed, and is the equivalent of Messiah, which is from a Hebrew and Aramaic term meaning Anointed” (page 609).

If the Book of Mormon had used the words Joshua the Messiah instead of Jesus Christ, it would be far more impressive to scholars. It could be argued, of course, that these words were transliterated into “reformed Egyptian” characters so they could be engraved on the original gold plates, but that the translator chose to use the words Jesus Christ instead because they would be more easily understood by the reader. The problem with the Book of Mormon, however, goes much deeper than just the name of the Messiah. Mormon scholar S. Kent Brown, who seems to be an avid apologist for the Book of Mormon, acknowledges:

Nephi and Jacob use several titles which apparently go beyond what they could have found in the brass plates . . . The following titles and names used by Nephi seem to be more at home in a later era such as that of the New Testament or of early Christianity: Beloved Son . . . Beloved . . . Son of the living God . . . Son of righteousness . . . Son of the most high God . . . Son of God . . . Only Begotten of the Father . . . Jesus Christ . . . Christ . . . true vine . . . light . . . The following names from Jacob fit the same situation: Only Begotten Son . . . Christ . . . Jesus . . . (BYU Studies, Winter 1984, p. 35, n. 40)

A study of the text of the Book of Mormon reveals that although Joseph Smith may not have known that the words Jesus Christ were obtained from the Greek language, for some reason he was concerned about introducing them into the first part of the Book of Mormon between five and six hundred years before the birth of Christ. As we will show, this fear led Smith into producing some contradictory material in the Book of Mormon.

S. Kent Brown argued that Lehi did not know the words Jesus Christ and that they were not revealed until after Lehi’s death:

Did Lehi not know titles such as Son of God and Christ? Regarding both the term Christ and the name Jesus, the answer is a definite no. According to 2 Nephi 10:3, the title Christ was made known to Jacob by an angel only after Lehi’s death. And Nephi makes use of this title only after narrating this experience of Jacob (2 Ne. 11:4). In addition, Nephi mentions the name Jesus for the first time only near the end of his own writings (2 Ne. 26:12) . . . Therefore, we can safely conclude that Lehi did not know these names. (Ibid., pp. 35-36)

Although S. Kent Brown’s statement is essentially correct as it relates to the current edition of the Book of Mormon, when we turn to the original 1830 edition, a serious problem comes to light that completely overthrows Brown’s thesis. The first edition, in fact, makes it clear that the name Jesus Christ was known not only before Lehi’s death, but it was used by Nephi himself before he came to the New World:

And a great and a terrible gulf divideth them; yea, even the word of the justice of the Eternal God, and Jesus Christ, which is the Lamb of God . . . (Book of Mormon, 1830 edition, p. 28)

Since the Book of Mormon later states that the name was first made known to Jacob years after Lehi’s death, in the second edition Joseph Smith had to change the words Jesus Christ to the Messiah. In the 1981 edition we read as follows:

And a great and a terrible gulf divideth them; yea, even the word of the justice of the Eternal God, and the Messiah who is the Lamb of God . . . (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 12:18)

The printer’s manuscript of the Book of Mormon was also altered to reflect this serious change. From this it is obvious that a deliberate change was made to cover up an anachronistic and embarrassing portion of the Book of Mormon.

After examining the appearances of the words Jesus and Christ throughout the Book of Mormon, we saw some strange patterns which could be explained by the theory that the first part of the Book of Mormon was written last. It seems, in fact, that Joseph Smith never intended to introduce the words Jesus Christ into the record of the Nephites until the reign of king Benjamin—just a little over a century before Christ was born. In the book of Mosiah, which would be the first book written after the 116 pages were stolen, king Benjamin gave a moving address to his people in “About 124 B.C.” Just before the address, he told his son Mosiah that he was going to “give this people a name, that thereby they may be distinguished above all the people which the Lord God hath brought out of the land of Jerusalem; and this I do because they have been a diligent people in keeping the commandments of the Lord. And I give unto them a name that never shall be blotted out, except it be through transgression” (Mosiah 1:11-12). In his address, king Benjamin seems to be saying that an angel revealed to him the words “Jesus Christ” and that his people should take upon themselves the name of Christ:
Above is photographic proof that Joseph Smith plagiarized from the book of Revelation. On the left side of the page are verses from the 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon. The verses from the Bible (to the right) are taken from the Mormon church’s own official 1987 edition of the King James Version.

... the things which I shall tell you are made known unto me by an angel from God. . . he said unto me: Awake, and hear the words which I shall tell thee, for behold, I am come to declare unto you the glad tidings of great joy. . . . For behold, the time cometh, and is not far distant, that with power, the Lord Omnipotent . . . shall come down from heaven . . . and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay . . . And he shall be called Jesus Christ the Son of God . . . and his mother shall be called Mary. (Mosiah 3:2, 3, 5, 8)

In Mosiah 5:8 and 11, king Benjamin informed his people, “There is no other name given whereby salvation cometh; therefore, I would that ye should take upon the name of Christ. . . And I would that ye should remember also, that this is the name that I said I should give unto you that never should be blotted out, except it be through transgression.” Mosiah 6:2 goes on to state that after the address, “there was not one soul, except it were little children, but who had entered into the covenant and had taken upon them the name of Christ.”

This address raises a very serious question with regard to the material appearing in the book of 2nd Nephi which was supposed to have been written over 400 years earlier. Why would king Benjamin have to receive a special revelation informing him of the name of Christ if the plates of Nephi already contained this information? According to Mormon, “Amaleki had delivered up these plates [the small plates of Nephi] into the hands of king Benjamin” (Words of Mormon 1:10). Furthermore, king Benjamin also had the large plates of Nephi. Benjamin himself told his sons that the “plates of Nephi” were “true” and instructed them to “remember to search them diligently” (Mosiah 1:6-7). In the small plates alone, the name “Jesus” appears 10 times and the term “Christ” is found 82 times. In 2 Nephi 25:16 and 26, Nephi plainly wrote that “there is none other name given under heaven save it be this Jesus Christ, of which I have spoken, whereby man can be saved. . . we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins.” In 2 Nephi 31:13 we find this: “. . . I know that if ye shall follow the Son . . . witnessing unto the Father that ye are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism . . . then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost . . .”

In light of these references, it seems highly unreasonable to believe that king Benjamin and his people would have been completely in the dark concerning the “name of Christ” before the angel visited Benjamin and revealed this information.

In the books Alma through Mormon the name Jesus is used 147 times and Christ appears 176 times. Ether, which is next to the last book in the Book of Mormon, uses the name Jesus 12 times, and the word Christ appears 1-4 times. The last book, Moroni, has Jesus 11 times and Christ 70 times. By the time Joseph Smith got around to replacing the missing portion of the Book of Mormon, he was thoroughly steeped in the use of the words Jesus Christ. He had, in fact, devoted many pages of his work to the visitation of Christ to the Nephites, and it became very difficult for him to suppress the Messiah’s name as he began replacing the material which was originally in the missing 116 pages.

One thing seems very clear; Joseph Smith knew that he should not include the words Jesus Christ in his “translation” of the small plates of Nephi because it would contradict the pages he had written in the book of Mosiah. (The reader will remember that in Mosiah he had claimed that an angel revealed these words to Benjamin.) Consequently, they should not appear before the reign of king Benjamin.

Once we have this understanding, it becomes obvious that Joseph Smith was trying very hard to suppress the words “Jesus Christ” in the first books of the Book of Mormon. An examination of the 1st book of Nephi shows the caution Joseph Smith was using with regard to this matter. Prior to the verse where he accidentally inserted the words Jesus Christ (1 Nephi 12:18), he attempted to use every other word he could think of to avoid using the name of Jesus. He used the word God 36 times; the words the Lord 99 times; the words God of Israel two times; Messiah nine times; Savior once; Redeemer four times; the words the Lamb or the Lamb of God 15 times; the words Son of God five times and the Son three times. The words Jesus or Christ never appear in any of the first 22 printed pages of the Book of Mormon.

The cover-up was working very well until Joseph Smith arrived at chapter 12, verse 18. At that point, however, he seems to have made a slip of the tongue and dictated the words Jesus Christ. He apparently did not even realize he had made an error and did not catch this serious mistake when he printed the first edition in 1830. Smith probably did not realize that he had made this Freudian slip until he reread the text of the Book of Mormon for the 1837 edition. As we have shown, at that time he removed the words Jesus Christ and the words the Messiah took their place in the editions which followed.

In any case, after Joseph Smith made his revealing blunder in 1 Nephi 12:18, he was able to dictate about 55 pages of text before he made a similar mistake. He filled these pages with all sorts of synonyms in his attempt to Selected verses from the Book of Mormon compared with Bible verses which appear in the King James Version—first printed in 1611 A.D. The case for plagiarism is very convincing. For additional evidence see the 74 pages of photographic evidence in Covering Up the Black Hole in the Book of Mormon.
avoid mentioning the words Jesus Christ. He used the Lord 204 times (actually more if we add on some pages of Isaiah quoted in this portion of the Book of Mormon). The word God is used 170 times; the words the Lamb or Lamb of God appear 59 times; Messiah is used ten times; Redeemer is found ten times and Savior appears twice. In this portion of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith used some new synonyms. In 2 Nephi 9:5, for instance, we read that “it behooveth the great Creator that he suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh . . .” Verse 6 also uses these same words. In the second chapter of the same book (verses 27 and 28), the Messiah is referred to twice as “the great Mediator.” From the book of Isaiah in the Bible, Joseph Smith derived the words the Holy One of Israel. This is used in 1 Nephi 22:21 as a substitute for Jesus Christ: “And now I, Nephi, declare unto you, that this prophet of whom Moses spake was the Holy One of Israel . . .” These same words are used in 26 other places in the section of the text we are discussing. When we add all of these references to deity in this section of the Book of Mormon, we obtain a total of 486. In this same portion, the computer failed to find a single mention of either Jesus or Christ.

Finally, after dictating 55 straight pages without letting the name of the Messiah escape from his mouth, Joseph Smith stumbled again. In 2 Nephi 10:3, the word Christ slipped out. This time, however, Smith was immediately aware of his mistake. Although this slip of the tongue was not as bad as the first mistake (1 Nephi 12:18, where he used both Jesus and Christ), this time Smith seems to have realized that his scribe had heard him use the word Christ and that “the cat was out of the bag.” He apparently did not want to admit that he had made a mistake. It appears, therefore, that he immediately attempted to correct the problem by claiming that Jacob had the word Christ revealed to him by an angel. The reader will notice how quickly Joseph Smith reacted in his attempt to smooth things over.

And now I, Jacob, speak unto you again . . . our children shall be restored, that they may come to that which will give them the true knowledge of their Redeemer. Wherefore, as I said unto you, it must needs be expedient that Christ—for in the last night the angel spake unto me that this should be his name—should come among the Jews . . . (2 Nephi 10:1-3)

It is interesting to note that the order of things is different than when king Benjamin had the name of the Messiah revealed to him. In that account, Benjamin first tells his people that an “angel of God” appeared to him and gave him an important message. He then says that the angel told him the Savior would “be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God . . .” (Mosiah 3:2 and 8). In Jacob’s account, however, he mentions the fact that an angel had given him the name Christ only after he had let the name slip out of his mouth. When all of the facts are considered, it is difficult to resist the idea that the angel’s message was an afterthought.

After Jacob first mentioned Christ in 2 Nephi 10:3, it did not take him long to use it again. Within two and a half pages the word Christ appears five more times. It should be noted, however, that the word Jesus does not appear at all in Jacob’s address. Nephi first uses this word in 2 Nephi 25:19: “. . . the Messiah cometh . . . and according to the words of the prophets, and also the word of the angel of God, his name shall be Jesus Christ the Son of God.” It would appear that since Joseph Smith had already used the word Christ, he felt it would be pointless to continue to suppress the name Jesus. Like Jacob, Nephi claimed “the angel of God” revealed the Savior’s name. In this verse Nephi also makes a peculiar statement concerning the matter; he comments that the name was found in “the words of the prophets.” If this was the case, why were Nephi, Jacob and king Benjamin all ignorant of this important information until angels revealed it? Furthermore, why would an angel have to give a revelation concerning the matter if it was already found in “the words of the prophets.”

Joseph Smith not only had a very serious problem with regard to the name Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon, but as Wesley P. Walters observed, he also “lost track of his time-frame” in some portions of the book. In his Master’s thesis, “The Use of the Old Testament in the Book of Mormon,” page 79, Walters notes that there are “several passages in which Joseph had difficulty from time to time trying to have his Book of Mormon characters write about events as still in the future when from Joseph’s vantage point they were already in the past.” Pastor Walters gives some examples on pages 79-80 of his thesis, and H. Michael Marquardt has dealt with this subject in The Use of the Bible In the Book of Mormon, page 5.

A good example of the problem Joseph Smith had is found in the book of 2 Nephi, chapter 31, dated “Between 559 and 545 B.C.”:

And now, I would ask of you . . . wherein the Lamb of God did fulfill all righteousness in being baptized with water? Know ye not that he was holy? . . . Wherefore after he was baptized with water the Holy Ghost descended upon him . . . it shewed unto the children of men the straitness of the path . . . he having set the example before them. (2 Nephi 31: 6-9)

In one place in Mosiah, dated “About 148 B.C.,” Smith seems to have realized he was in the past tense and tried to correct the situation: “And now if Christ had not come into the world, speaking of things to come as though they had already come, there could have been no redemption” (Mosiah 16:6).

WHAT IS MISSING?

After we completed our research with regard to the black hole in the small plates of Nephi we became aware of the fact that the entire Book of Mormon is also lacking a significant number of important things that should be there if the book were really a history of ancient Jewish people in the New World. In our new book, Covering Up the Black Hole in the Book of Mormon, we explored a number of important things that are either entirely missing or seldom mentioned in the Book of Mormon.

One thing that is strangely lacking in the Book of Mormon is a system of measurements. It appears, in fact, that a black hole extends throughout the entire book. It is hard to understand why Joseph Smith did not bother to give the ancient Nephites, Lamanites and Jaredites some system of measurements. It is possible that he felt that he might have just been too lazy or preoccupied to design or follow any kind of a system. In Alma 11:4, this statement appears concerning measurement:

...they [the Nephites] did not reckon after the manner of the Jews... but they altered their reckoning and their measure, according to the minds and the circumstances of the people, in every generation, until the reign of the judges...

In any case, our reading of the text of the Book of Mormon produced no examples of the measurement of anything. In Alma 11:7 and 11, we read that "A senum of silver was equal to a senine of gold, and either for a measure of barley, and also for a measure of every kind of grain... A shiblon is half of a senum; therefore, a shiblon for half a measure of barley." We are left completely in the dark, however, as to how much grain is contained in a "measure." We searched with the Mormon Church's computer program to see if we could find something our reading of the text did not disclose. The words which we searched for were as follows: measure, measured, measurement, measures, measuring, length, breadth, width, height, heights, stature, size, distance and depth. These words, of course, produced a great many examples of measurement in the Bible, but the Book of Mormon produced nothing of any value. The closest thing we could find to measurement appeared in Alma 50:2. This verse spoke of "works of timbers built up to the height of a man..." The only other thing we found was in Ether 2:17, where a description of the barges used to bring the Jaredites to the New World is given: "...the length thereof was the length of a tree..." Since trees vary a great deal in their length, this does not give us too much to go on; some trees are only 20 or 30 feet high, whereas some of the giant sequoias in California grow to over 300 feet high. The description given of Jared's barges certainly is not as precise as that given concerning the ark in the Bible: "...the length of the ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits" (Genesis 6:15). According to the computer, the Bible uses the words cubit and cubits 258 times, whereas the word cubit is only found once in the Book of Mormon. In 3 Nephi 13:27, we read: "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?" It is interesting to note, however, that even this example was plagiarized from the Bible, Matthew 6:27.

As far as distance is concerned, the New Testament refers to mile and furlongs. The Nephites, on the other hand, seem to have never developed any accurate way to measure distance. Alma 22:32 says that "it was only the distance of a day and a half's journey for a Nephite... from the east to the west sea..." It is true that the Book of Mormon does use the word mile once in 3 Nephi 12:41, but it is obvious that it is plagiarized from Matthew 5:41: "And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain."

The Bible has a great deal to say about the weight of various objects. The ancient Hebrews used a balance or scales to weigh their precious metals and other items.

For instance, in Numbers 7:13 we read: "And his offering was one silver charger, the weight thereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary..." The computer shows that the Bible mentions shekel or shekels 139 times, whereas the Book of Mormon never uses these words. Gerahs are mentioned in the Old Testament, and the words pound and pounds are found in both the Old and New Testaments. These words, however, are not found in the Book of Mormon. The words talent and talents (a talent of silver was equal to 3,000 shekels) appear 66 times in the two testaments of the Bible. The Book of Mormon, however, only has one place where the word talent is found: "...take away their talent... and give unto them who shall have more abundantly" (Ether 12:35). This seems to have been plagiarized from Matthew 25:28-29: "Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance..."

We searched for the following words in both the Bible and the Book of Mormon: weigh, weighed, weigheth, weighing, weight, weightier, weights, scales, balance and balances. The search in the Bible brought forth a great deal of information. The Book of Mormon, however, yielded six references, but none of these had anything to do with the weight or weighing of any object. For instance, Lehim exclaimed: "My heart hath been weighed down with sorrow..." (2 Nephi 1:17), and Nephi wrote: "And then they shall rejoice... and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes..." (2 Nephi 30:6) It is also interesting to note that in Joseph Smith's other writings in the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price—which includes the books of Abraham and Moses—we do not find any of the words mentioned above in any way that relates to weighing or the weight of any object. It seems obvious, then, that Joseph Smith had very little interest in any system of weights and this is reflected in his writings.

In an attempt to ascertain if anything was ever actually measured in the Book of Mormon, we searched for the following words: measure, measured, measurement, measures and measuring. While the Bible produced numerous references regarding measurement, other than the two indefinite references in the 11th chapter of Alma (mentioned above), we could find no evidence that people in the Book of Mormon actually measured anything.

While the Book of Mormon gives an abundance of details concerning military matters and some aspects of religion, it is very deficient in a number of important areas. In many respects it is virtually colorless in its description of events and people. Indeed, the word colorless could be applied almost in a literal sense to the Book of Mormon. We, in fact, did a study concerning eleven colors mentioned in the Bible and found the following: the Bible mentions these colors, or words derived from these colors (e. g., red, reddish; green, greenness, etc.), 382 times, whereas the Book of Mormon yielded only 56 instances where these words were used. Moreover, if we eliminate the words black and white from this total, there are only 18 places where we find any other colors. Red appeared the most frequently. It comprises...
15 of the 18 instances mentioned. When we take a closer look at red, however, we find another amazing fact: of the 15 times it appears only two of these instances relate to anything in the New World. These refer to the fact that the Amlicites “marked themselves with red in their foreheads” (see Alma 3:4, 13). The other 13 places where this word is found relate to the sea which the Israelites passed through on their flight from the Egyptians—i. e., the Red Sea (see Exodus 10:19).

The other two colors which appear in the Book of Mormon are scarlet—actually scarlets—and grey. The word scarlets is found twice in 1 Nephi 13:7-8, and was apparently plagiarized from Revelations 18:12. The remaining color, grey, is found just once (1 Nephi 18:18) and seems to have been lifted from the Bible (see Genesis 42:38).

Of more importance, however, are the colors which are completely missing from the Book of Mormon: BLUE, BROWN, CRIMSON, GREEN, PURPLE and YELLOW. That all these colors would be absent from the book is astounding. It is also interesting to note that five of these colors—blue, brown, crimson, purple and yellow—are also missing in Joseph Smith’s writings in the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price. The word green does appear one time in the Doctrine and Covenants and also once in the Pearl of Great Price, but both occurrences seem to have been taken from the Bible.

Our computer search of the Bible for the words colour, coloured and colors—note the British spelling in the King James Version—revealed that they were used 27 times. The same search in the Book of Mormon yielded only the word colors once (see 3 Nephi 22:11). This word, however, has been directly taken from a verse in the Bible (see Isaiah 54:11). The very limited use of colors throughout the Book of Mormon seems to show that it was written by one author who apparently did not pay much attention to colors. Furthermore, the fact that the Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price completely omit five of the same colors as the Book of Mormon points to the conclusion that they were all the product of the same mind.

The ancient Israelites were a people who were very interested in music. This interest should certainly be reflected in the Book of Mormon. An examination of the book, however, shows that it was written by a person who had very little interest in music. We searched for the words sang, sing, singed, singer, singers, singeth, singing, sings, song and songs and found that they appeared 268 times in the Bible. These same words are only found 36 times in the Book of Mormon, and further research shows that most of these were derived through plagiarism from the Bible. We have identified 19 places where they were directly copied from the Bible, and of the remaining 17, there are eight cases where they only refer to singing in heaven or singing the song of “redeeming love”—i. e., becoming converted to Christ. We also searched for the words hymn and hymns. While we found four cases in the Bible, the Book of Mormon did not yield any examples of these words. We also searched for the words music, musical, musician, musicians. (In this particular search we included headings found in the Psalms because they are found in the Hebrew text.) These words appeared 73 times in the Bible, but, again, the Book of Mormon yielded no examples of these words being used. It is also interesting to note that Joseph Smith did not use any of these words in the Pearl of Great Price or his revelations printed in the Doctrine and Covenants. The word music appears once in the Doctrine and Covenants (Section 136:28), but it is in a revelation given to Brigham Young.

