MORMON CHURCH SUPPRESSES BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS
Deseret Book Store Ordered Not to Sell Wilford Wood's Reprint of the Book of Commandments

The following is an account of how the Mormon Church tried to prevent us from obtaining the photocopies necessary for the printing the Book of Commandments, and also how the Mormon Church is now trying to suppress Wilford Wood's reprint of it.

About the Book of Commandments

In 1833 the Mormon Church published the revelations that had been given to the Church by Joseph Smith in a book entitled the Book of Commandments. However, the Church was unable to print as many of the Book of Commandments as they had planned because the printing press was destroyed by a mob. In 1835 the revelations were again printed, and the name of the book was changed to the Doctrine and Covenants. New revelations were added, and many of the previous revelations were revised.

The Book of Commandments contains 65 of Joseph Smith's revelations and according to a student at Brigham Young University there have been 2,812 words changed, added, or omitted in these same revelations as published in the Doctrine and Covenants today. Because of this fact the Mormon Church Historian feared that someone would reprint the Book of Commandments and reveal the fact that these changes have been made.

David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, made this statement concerning the changes that have been made in the revelations:

Some of the revelations as they now appear in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants have been changed and added to. Some of the changes being of the greatest importance as the meaning is entirely changed on some very important matters; as if God had changed his mind a few years after he gave the revelations, and after having commanded his servants (as they claim) to print them in the "Book of Commandments;"

(Letter written by David Whitmer, published in the Saints' Herald, February 5, 1887)

Poorest Reprint

In an article entitled "Mormon Bibliography," published in the Brigham Young University Studies, Spring-Summer 1964, Chad J. Flake of the Brigham Young University stated:

Undoubtedly the poorest reprints on Mormon subjects are those printed by the Modern Microfilm Company. Although these seem to be as expensive as any mentioned above, the quality of the printing bears no comparison. An interesting comparison can be made

A photograph of Chapter 28 of the Book of Commandments; also a photograph of the same revelation, published as section 27 of the Doctrine and Covenants. Notice that over 400 words which are underlined have been added to the revelation as it appears in the Doctrine and Covenants.
We visited the Brigham Young University on a Saturday prior to the time Chad J. Flake wrote this letter. If the student assistant had received the instructions that Mr. Flake speaks of, he broke the rules because he made photocopies of the first 41 pages of the Book of Commandments for us. He apparently did not realize the importance of what he was copying, for he asked us why we wanted photocopies of that old book.

When the Church Historian’s Office found out that we had obtained these photographs, they immediately sent word to the Brigham Young University to keep us from obtaining any more photocopies of these rare documents. Consequently, when we wrote to the Brigham Young University asking for the remaining pages of the Book of Commandments, Chad J. Flake answered as follows:

We are unable to send you a photocopy of the Book of Commandments. We were supplied this copy by the Church Historian’s office for the use of our patrons but not for photoduplication or other forms of publication. (Letter by Chad J. Flake, dated April 11, 1961, see page 1)

We appealed to William E. Berrett (Vice Administrator of the Brigham Young University), and he wrote directly to the Church Historian’s Office. In a letter dated May 5, 1961, he wrote a letter to us in which he stated that the Church Historian’s Office would “not permit” photocopies to be made of the Book of Commandments (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 70). On June 1, 1961, we wrote directly to Joseph Fielding Smith, the Church Historian, and he answered as follows:

Private records are sacred to the individual. Copies of the Book of Commandments are rare. Perhaps you could obtain a copy from some book collector.

Of course, Mr. Smith knew that we would not be able to obtain an original as it would cost thousands of dollars.

The Church Historian’s Office could have provided us with nice clear photocopies, however, they were unwilling to help in any way and did everything they could to prevent the publication of the Book of Commandments.

Wilford Wood’s Reprint

Wilford Wood (this name should not be confused with the name Wilford Woodruff) has also published the Book of Commandments and the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants (under the title of Joseph Smith Begins His Work, vol. 2) by the photo-offset method, and as Mr. Flake says, it is an excellent reprint. He has also reproduced the first edition of the Book of Mormon, under the title of Joseph Smith Begins His Work, vol. 1.

A few months after our reprint of the Book of Commandments came out, Wilford Wood published his reprint of the Book of Commandments.

The Mormon Church was apparently not as worried about his reprint as they were about ours, for the Deseret Press (the Church press) did the printing, and it was advertised in the Salt Lake papers. We tried to advertise our copy but were refused permission. One of the employees at the newspaper agency told us that the reason the book could not be advertised was that the preface we included in the front of the book was “too controversial.” He indicated the preface was controversial because it told that the revelations had been changed and that the Mormon Church had suppressed the Book of Commandments.

Since Wilford Wood’s reprint did not tell that the revelations had been changed, the Church did not try to suppress his book at that time. Instead they promoted it and allowed him to display his original copy of the Book of Commandments in the window of the Deseret Book Store (that is the Church book store). The leaders of the Mormon Church evidently felt that by using this reverse psychology they could make the Mormon people believe that they were glad that the Book of Commandments had been reprinted. Since Mr. Wood’s reprint did not tell the revelations had been changed, the Church leaders evidently felt that they were safe as long as members of the Church did not compare it with present editions of the Doctrine and Covenants. It appears, however, that members of the Church did compare the two editions and found that many changes had been made. On October 9, 1964, a man reported to us that the Deseret Book Store had refused to sell him copies of Joseph Smith Begins His Work, vols. 1 and 2. On October 10, 1964, Sandra Tanner went to the Deseret Book Store and asked the clerk concerning these books. The clerk, supposing she was a Mormon, said, “President David O. McKay won’t let us sell that anymore.” The clerk went on to say, “We’ve had several people leave the Church because of those books. The priest and ministers of the other churches are using these books to confuse people. Because of the confusion we can’t sell them anymore. President McKay has taken them out of circulation.”

On October 13, 1964, Wesley P. Walters (a minister in Illinois) wrote to the Deseret Book Store, requesting copies of Joseph Smith Begins His Work, vols. 1 and 2. He had been recommending these books to libraries throughout the nation. He had informed the librarians that they could buy these books at the Deseret Book, but when he wrote to them himself they answered, “these two books are no longer available.” (See a photograph of this letter on page 1.) This letter would lead a person to believe that these books are out of print, however, this is not the case.

As we stated before, the Deseret Press (that is the Church press) did the printing on these books, however, Bookcraft distributes them. Since the Mormon Church does not own Bookcraft they will not be able to stop the circulation of these books at other stores besides the Deseret Book Store unless Wilford Wood gives his consent, or unless they buy them all up. The Modern Microfilm Co. will continue to sell them as long as they are available.

First Vision

The Mormon Church claims that in 1820, when Joseph Smith was 14 or 15 years old, that he was visited by God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ. The evidence indicates, however, that this story was made up at some later date. Joseph Smith did not publish the story until 1842, some 22 years after it was supposed to have occurred. The “first published consecutive account of the origin of the Church” (published in 1834-5) contained nothing concerning a vision in 1820. This account was written under the “personal supervision” of Joseph Smith, and stated that it was only an angel that appeared to Joseph Smith in 1823 when he was 17 years old. No mention is made of a vision prior to this. In our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, we show that even Joseph Smith’s own brother did not accept the story that God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ appeared to Joseph Smith in 1820 (see pages 124-125).

Recently Wesley P. Walters has drawn our attention to a sermon by William Smith given June 8, 1884. In this sermon he claims that it was only an angel that appeared when Joseph Smith was 18 years old. He stated:

> It will be remembered that just before the angel appeared to Joseph, there was an unusual revival in the neighborhood. . . . My mother attended those meetings, and being much concerned about the spiritual welfare of the family, she persuaded them to attend the meetings. Finally my mother, one sister, my brothers Samuel and Hyrum became Presbyterians. Joseph and myself did not join; I had not sown all my wild oats. . . . it was at the suggestion of the Rev. M____, that my brother asked of God. He said, “Ask of God.”. . . Accordingly he went and bowed in prayer to God. While he was engaged in prayer, he saw a pillar of fire descending. Saw it reach the top of the trees. He was overcome, became unconscious, did not know how long he remained in this condition, but when he came to himself, the great light was about him, and he was told by the personage whom he saw descend with the light, not to join any of the churches. . . . You should remember Joseph was but about eighteen years old at this time, too young to be a deceiver. (The Saints’ Herald, vol. 31, no. 40, page 643)

Dr. Hugh Nibley, of the Brigham Young University, makes this comment concerning William Smith:

> If William Smith and Oliver Cowdery give confusing accounts of the first vision, we must remember that the Prophet knew from the first that those men were not to be trusted with too much information. . . . Were such men to be trusted with a full account of the first vision before it was officially given to the world? (Improvement Era, November 1961, pages 868-869)

It certainly seems strange that Joseph Smith could not trust his own brother with an account of the First Vision, if such a vision really occurred.

T.V.

Jesus once asked:

> Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will give him a serpent? (Matthew 7:9-10)

It would appear that in America today that many parents are giving their children stones instead of bread. The following appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune for Monday, October 26, 1964:

A still-secret report charges there is a conclusive link between crime and violence in television shows and juvenile delinquency, it was learned Sunday.

The report has been signed by a majority of the Senate Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency headed by Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.). . . . the subcommittee reported it found “on the basis of expert testimony and impressive research evidence, that a relationship has been conclusively established between televised crime and violence and antisocial attitudes and behavior among juvenile viewers.”

In another section of the report, the subcommittee said in its view, “the excessive amount of televised crime, violence and brutality can and does contribute to the development of attitudes and actions in many young people which pave the way for delinquent behavior.” (Salt Lake Tribune, October 26, 1964)

Psalm 82:3

“Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.”

Orphans

Jesus said:

> For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: . . . Then shalt the righteous answer him, saying, Lord when saw we thee an hungred, and gave thee drink? Or when saw we thee a stranger, and ye took me in: Or when saw we thee naked, and clothed thee: . . . And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matthew 25:35-40)

Nearly five years ago we heard of an organization called World Vision. We have found that it is a non-profit organization with orphanages in 19 countries caring for more than 20,000 orphans. Each orphan has a sponsor who contributes $10 a month for his support (food, clothing, home, schooling, etc.). Since Korea alone has an estimated 50,000 orphans one can see the great need for more sponsors.

It certainly has been a blessing to us to help some of these sweet little ones who would never have known a home or decent food without the wonderfull work of World Vision. We feel they are doing a tremendous job. World Vision has recently built a children hospital in Seoul, Korea, with room for 150 sick children. They also help operate a children’s wing of the Presbyterian Hospital in Taegu and other facilities throughout the country. (World Vision is a non-denominational missionary endeavor.)

Each sponsor can exchange letters with his child (the letters are translated into English before they are forwarded to the sponsor). We would like to share with you a few comments from the letters we have received.

An orphan boy, Lee Han Kook, writes:

> I received your birthday gift of $1.00 with all my heart and bought 1 pair of underwear with the money. When I wear these underwear, I feel as if you hug me tightly with both of your arms. I was over-whelmed by your love and shed tears.

In another letter he writes:

> I was so happy to receive your card . . . I will work diligently like an ox and will try to be a mild boy like a rabbit. I suppose you will be glad, if I become such a boy.

Of his family he says:

> My mother and father are not living. I wandered about the streets until I was brought to this home through the police.

He, like so many others, would have had no hope for a happy future without the help of such groups as World Vision.

If anyone is interested in knowing more about World Vision they can write—

10% SALE ‘til May 5th

Almost a year ago we decided to make Modern Microfilm Co. a full-time business. Since that time we have had much to encourage us, but we have also had several setbacks. An operation has set us back almost a thousand dollars, as well as caused the loss of about a month’s time. In spite of these discouragements we have been able to continue. This has been made possible because of our customers. We certainly owe our continued existence as a company to their faithful support. Of the many hundreds of checks sent by our customers, we have never received a bad one. We feel that this is a very good record, one which our customers can be proud of.

At a time when things looked bad financially we had a 10% sale, and because of the faithful support of our customers we were able to continue. At this time we are going to have another sale, and we are optimistic that this sale will bring similar results. If we are able to continue this work, we hope to print several books which will be helpful to students of Mormonism. We have the masters ready to print the History of Joseph Smith by his mother (this is the book Brigham Young tried to destroy), and all we lack now is the money to buy the paper to print it on. We are also interested in printing a book showing all the changes that have been made in the Book of Mormon, and also a book showing the changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations. These are but a few of the many books we will be able to print if our customers continue to support us as they have in the past.

This sale begins when our customers receive this notice and it will continue until May 5.

A special price list is enclosed which shows the price for each book with the 10% discount already deducted.

To avoid confusion the sale does not apply to any order placed prior to the time this paper is received.

Millennial Star

We have just completed printing volumes 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the Millennial Star. Since volume 1 has already been printed, this will mean that the first 5 volumes will now be available. (This is a photomechanical reprint of an early Mormon publication.)

We will take them to the binders as soon as we receive a sufficient number of orders. They will have the same type of binding (black buckram) that was used on the Times and Seasons.

This is a limited printing (only 250 of each volume) and we can make no guarantee that there will be another printing when these are gone.

This printing in these volumes is clear and readable, and they will be of great interest to the student of Mormonism.

After placing order allow a few weeks for delivery.

Times and Seasons

This is a photomechanical reprint of an early Mormon publication. Although our book list has a price of $42.00 for all 6 volumes of the Times and Seasons, we wish to change this price to $37.50, and for those who order before May 5, while the 10% sale is still on, the price will be only $33.75.

Changes in Joseph Smith’s History

Since printing the book, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, we have received new information which may be of interest to our readers.

In change number 464 (Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, page 87) we show that many words have been deleted concerning the story of Joseph Smith’s death. In the History of Joseph Smith, as published in the Millennial Star, the following appeared:

... he fell outward into the hands of his murders, exclaiming, “O Lord my God!” He fell partly on his right shoulder and back, his neck and head reaching the ground a little before his feet, and he rolled instantly on his face.

From this position he was taken by a man who was barefoot and bareheaded, and having no coat, his pants rolled up above his knees, and his shirt sleeves above his elbows. He set Joseph against the south side of the well curb, which was situated a few feet from the jail, when Col. Levi Williams ordered four men to shoot him. They stood about eight feet from the curb, and fired simultaneously. A slight cringe of the body was all the indication of pain visible when the balls struck him, and he fell on his face.

The ruffian who set him against the well curb now gathered a bowie-knife for the purpose of severing his head from his body. He raised the knife, and was in the attitude of striking, when a light, so sudden and powerful, burst from the heavens upon the bloody scene (passing its vivid chain between Joseph and his murderers), that they were struck with terror. This light, in its appearance and potency, baffles all powers of description. The arm of the ruffian that held the knife fell powerless, the muskets of the four who fired fell to the ground, and they all stood like marble statues, not having the power to move a single limb of their bodies.

The retreat of the mob was as hurried and disorderly as it possibly could have been. Col. Williams Hallooed to some who had just commenced their retreat to come back and help to carry off the four men who fired, and who were still paralyzed. They came and carried them away by main strength to the baggage waggons, when they fled towards Warsaw.

Dr. Richards’ escape was miraculous; ... (Millennial Star, vol. 24, page 487)

When this was reprinted in the History of the Church, vol. 6, pages 618-619, three hundred and seven words were deleted:

... he fell outward into the hands of his murderers, exclaiming, “O Lord, my God!”

Dr. Richards’ escape was miraculous; ...

After telling of this change we made this statement:

Apparently the Mormon Historians felt that this story was too unbelievable; therefore it was deleted.

At the time we statement we did not realize that the Mormon Historian B. H. Roberts had repudiated this story in his Comprehensive History of the Church (this is not to be confused with the History of the Church mentioned above which was edited by B. H. Roberts). In the Comprehensive History of the Church B. H. Roberts stated:

One of our readers has sent us some very interesting information which relates to this change. He stated:

Smith claimed that the word “Mormon” was formed from the Egyptian word “mon” (which he said meant “good”) and the English word “more” contracted to “mor” (together meaning “more good”). How can this be when there is no Egyptian word “mon” which means good. Even if there were such an Egyptian word, how could it get combined with an English word here on the American continent sometime before 400 A.D.? The English language did not develop until the middle ages and was totally unknown in the ancient middle east.

In a letter dated April 1, 1965, the same man writes:

I might add a few words about Smith’s definition of the word “Mormon”... the part I had reference to has been omitted from the present Church History, so I understand. While in the graduate department at Johns Hopkins University I made it a point to ask Dr. William F. Albright if there were any Egyptian word “mon” meaning “good”, or anything resembling it with such a meaning. Dr. Albright is one of the world’s leading authorities on the ancient near east and understood and offered courses in Egyptian. He assured me there was no such word. I wrote Dr. Sperry about this problem and he assured me he had “no off-the-cuff answer” for this problem (see letter enclosed). At the time Smith gave his definition Champollion was just working out the system of Egyptian hieroglyphics, so as far as Smith knew no one could contradict him. However, it should have been obvious, even without a knowledge of Egyptian, that an Egyptian word could not be combined with an English word and appear here in America (since it’s used in the Bk of Mormon) before 400 A.D., when there was no English language until centuries later.

Perhaps some of our readers would like to comment on this problem.

Threats From Mormon Apostles

In our last mailing list we sent a photograph of letters written by the Mormon Apostles Mark E. Petersen and LeGrand Richards. In these letters the Apostles threatened to sue us. Since sending this page out we have received two interesting letters from our readers. One man, who has been through law school, made this statement in his letter to us:

I just got a copy of your handbill giving the threats from Apostles Petersen and Richards. If ever I saw a bluff Mark E. Petersen’s letter is one. . . . Now just what could his attorney do by calling on you? And if Petersen is ignorant about what you have published concerning him as he implies, just what would be the point in having his attorney call on you? If you answer him you should ask him some of these questions and also ask him if he is not aware, with all his legal knowledge, that truth is a complete defense to libel.

When they start fearing the truth, their position is beginning to become precarious. Your good work is beginning to tell. Good luck and more power to you.

Another man wrote directly to LeGrand Richards and Mark E. Petersen and sent a carbon copy to us. In this letter he stated:

I am today in receipt of photostats of letters you each wrote to a publisher in Salt Lake City, threatening him with a lawsuit if he published certain documents. . . . These letters you wrote are such amazing and amusing attempts to bluff that I could not refrain from commenting on them. For certainly no one with even the most elementary smattering of common sense could be led to believe that you would be so ignorant as to institute legal action in such a situation even if you were certain of winning your case, getting many thousands of dollars in settlement, and succeeding in suppression of the published documents.

The reason I am so sure of this is that a lawsuit would result in the very publication, in much magnified and publicized extent, of the very things you are trying so desperately to suppress. They would then receive much more publicity and much more scrutiny and study than this publisher could otherwise dare to hope for.

... I must at least give you credit for having better sense than to proceed to carry out this ridiculous threat. However, should I be so fortunate as to be mistaken in that conclusion, and you do bring suit against this fine publisher, I hereby pledge myself to contribute from my own meager funds, $100 toward his defense—and to exert whatever energies I can toward bringing this entire matter to light, in the firm conviction that such an action would tend to lessen the stranglehold the church has on this brainwashed and dominated area.

It is interesting to note that Mark E. Petersen has returned from Europe to attend conference. Although conference is held only 14 blocks from Modern Microfilm Company, Mr. Petersen has not called on us. Apparently Mr. Petersen’s statement that “legal action will be instituted” against us amounts to nothing but a threat.

Hundreds of copies of the sheet containing the Apostle’s threats to sue us were circulated at the conference of the Mormon Church, and other than the fact that one man said he would have us arrested, there was no trouble.

We are very anxious to have the sheet containing the threats of the Mormon Apostles widely circulated, and we will provide copies free to those who wish to help us distribute them.

Continued Suppression

In the first number of the Salt Lake City Messenger we furnished proof that the Mormon Church leaders are trying to suppress the photo-offset reprint of the Book of Commandments and the first edition of the Book of Mormon (these books are sold under the title Joseph Smith Begins His Works).

Although the Deseret Book Store (that is the Church bookstore) was ordered by the Church leaders not to sell these books, we stated that since the Mormon Church does not own Bookcraft that they could not stop the distribution of these books from that company. Recently, however, we were surprised to learn that Bookcraft was asked by the Church to remove these books from its list of books available. We also understand that Bookcraft has complied with the request and removed these books from the list. This does not mean that the Church has completely stopped the sale of these books, however, it is another step in that direction.

Modern Microfilm Company will try to supply these books as long as they are available.

The reason the Mormon Church is trying to suppress these books is that Joseph Smith’s revelations and the Book of Mormon have been changed since they were first printed.

Wilford Wood, the man who had these books reprinted, was very disturbed by the fact that the Church was trying to suppress his books. When we told him that the Church was trying to suppress his book, he wrote us a letter in which he stated:

> I would like to know if you would permit me to use your letter to show it to President McKay or those responsible for stopping the sale of the book at the Deseret Book Company... anyone who is hurt from the original story of the Prophet Joseph Smith and the foundation of the Church upon which it is built will have to pay the consequences for pretending to love the Prophet Joseph Smith and working against him.

We understand that Wilford Wood met with the President of the Church but was unsuccessful in his attempt to get the restrictions removed from the sale of his book.

None of Self and All of Thee

Oh, the bitter shame and sorrow
That a time could ever be
When I let the Saviour’s pity
Plead in vain, and proudly answered,
“All of self and none of Thee.”

Yet He found me; I beheld Him
Bleeding on the accursed tree;
Heard Him pray, “Forgive them, Father,”
And my wistful heart said faintly,
“Some of self and some of Thee.”

Day by day, His tender mercy,
Healing, helping, full and free,
Sweet and strong, and, oh, so patient,
Brought me lower, while I whispered,
“Less of self and more of Thee.”

Higher than the highest heavens,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, Thy Love at last has conquered;
Grant me now my soul’s desire,
“None of self and all of Thee.”

SHADOW OR REALITY?

We have received the following comments concerning Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

Since seeing you folks last I’ve had time to evaluate you book: “Mormonism, Shadow or Reality?” In the five years I’ve been engaged in a special study of the Mormon faith I can say your work is the most thorough I’ve run across. Congratulations!

(Letter from California)

I have enjoyed Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?...
Your book... is one of the best, if not the best, I have ever read and I hope that it will be widely read, especially by students and other writers.

(Letter from Missouri)

I am enjoying your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? to the fullest.
I am enjoying recommending it to all seekers of the truth, L.D.S., and otherwise.

(Letter from Utah)

May I extend a word of congratulation on your book on Mormonism whose revised edition I have recently obtained from the Utah Evangel Press. It will be invaluable to all those studying the Mormon system and I expect to refer to it many times in the years ahead.

Not I

Not I, but Christ
Be honored, loved, exalted;
Not I, but Christ
Be seen, be known, be heard;
Not I, but Christ
In every look and action;
Not I, but Christ
In every thought and word.

The Book Brigham Young Tried to Destroy

In the October, 1845 Conference of the Mormon Church, Lucy Smith announced that she had finished writing her book concerning the history of her son Joseph Smith. In 1853 Orson Pratt (the Mormon Apostle) published this book in England. In 1854 the Mormon newspaper, the Deseret News, recommended Lucy Smith’s book, Joseph Smith the Prophet:

Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, and his Progenitors for Many Generations: by Lucy Smith, mother of the Prophet.

This new and highly interesting work should be possessed by all saints who feel in the least degree interested with the history of the latter day work. Many facts which it contains, and never before published, are of great importance to the world, and the work constitutes a valuable acquisition to the libraries of the saints. (Deseret News, November 16, 1854)

By the year 1865, however, Brigham Young (the second President of the Mormon Church) was trying to suppress the use of this book by the Mormon people:

The President then made some remarks on the book entitled “Joseph Smith and his Progenitors,” requesting those who had copies to let him have them, and receive value for them if they desired it. (Deseret News, June 21, 1865)

In the Millennial Star for October 21, 1965, Lucy Smith’s book was severely condemned by the First Presidency of the Mormon Church:

Happening lately, while on a preaching trip to Cache Valley, to pick up a book which was lying on a table in the house where we were stopping, we were surprised to find that it was the book bearing the title, on the outside, of “Joseph Smith, the Prophet;” . . . . Our surprise at finding a copy of this work may be accounted for, by the fact of our having advertized some time ago that the book was incorrect, and that it should be gathered up and destroyed, so that no copies should be left; and, from this, we had supposed that not a single copy could be found in any of the houses of the Saints.

. . . . It is sufficient to say that it is utterly unreliable as a history, as it contains many falsehoods and mistakes. We do not wish such a book to be lying on our shelves, . . . . we, therefore, expect . . . . every one in the Church, male and female, if they have such a book, to dispose of it so that it will never be read by any person again. If they do not, the responsibility of the evil results that may accrue from keeping it will rest upon them and not upon us.

. . . . Many of the Saints may not know that the book is inaccurate; but those who have been instructed respecting its character, and will still keep it on their tables, and have it in their houses as a valid and authentic history for their children to read, need rebuke. It is transmitting lies to posterity to take such a course, and we know that the curse of God will rest upon every one, after he comes to the knowledge of what is here said, who keeps these books, for his children to learn and believe in lies.

We wish those who have these books to either hand them to their Bishops for them to be conveyed to the President’s or Historian’s Office, or send them themselves, that they may be disposed of; and they will please write their names in the books, with the name of the place where they reside, and if they wish to hand them over without pay in return, state so; and if they wish to get pay for them, state whether they desire it applied on Tithing, or wish the value returned in other books. (Millennial Star, vol. 27, pages 657-658)

After Brigham Young ordered the first edition of Lucy Smith’s book to be destroyed, he decided to change it and put out another edition. Joseph F. Smith stated:

Subsequently, a committee of revision was appointed by President Young consisting of President George A. Smith and Judge Elias Smith, cousins of the Prophet, men personally familiar with the family and thoroughly conversant with Church history. They were instructed carefully to revise and correct the original work throughout, which they did, reporting their labors to President Young to his entire satisfaction. (History of Joseph Smith by his Mother, 1954 edition, Introduction)

Elias Smith, who was a member of the “committee of revision” wrote the following in his journal under the date of May 2, 1866:

Wednesday 2 got through with the session of court today as soon as I could and the remainder of the day or some part of it I spent at the Historian’s office assisting George A. Smith—Church Historian—in the revision of a book written by Lucy Smith mother of the Prophet Joseph and by some mistake misunderstanding or other consideration published in England in [blank space] as the history of “Joseph the Prophet” which was [word illegible] suppressed by the “First Presidency,” in consequence of certain errors that had been in [word illegible] in the work. It has been resolved by President Young to revise and republish it and my servises have been solicited in the revision of the book or manuscript (Journal of Elias Smith, microfilm copy at the Utah State Historical Society)

When Brigham Young told the “committee of revision” to “revise and correct” this book, he did not mean to put in footnotes where there was an error (as any honest historian would do) but rather to make actual changes in the text.

In comparing the first edition of Lucy Smith’s history (that is the edition Brigham Young tried to destroy) with the edition printed in 1954, we have found that 436 words have been added, 1,379 words have been deleted and 220 words have been changed. This is a total of 2,035 words.

added, deleted or changed without any indication. In addition, 736 words have been deleted with the omissions properly indicated.

On page 101 of the first edition Lucy Smith described the Urim and Thummim:

I knew not what he meant, but took the article of which he spoke into my hands, and upon examination, found that it consisted of two smooth three-cornered diamonds set in glass, and the glass were set in silver bows, which were connected with each other in much the same way as old fashioned spectacles. He took them again and left me, . . .

In the 1954 reprint (page 104) her description of the Urim and Thummim has been deleted:

I knew not what he meant, but took the article of which he spoke into my hands and examined it. He took it again and left me, . . .

On page 107 of her book Mrs. Smith stated that she could see the glistening metal of the breast-plate; in the 1954 edition of this book this statement has been removed. She also makes a statement concerning the value of the breast-plate which has been deleted.

On page 225 of the first edition Lucy Smith stated:

Here I shall introduce a brief history of our troubles in Missouri, given by my son Hyrum, before the Municipal Court, at Nauvoo, June 30, 1843, when Joseph was tried for treason against the state of Missouri:

In the 1954 reprint (page 259) this has been changed to read:

Here I shall introduce a brief history of our troubles in Missouri, given by my son Hyrum, when Joseph was before the Municipal Court, at Nauvoo, June 30, 1843, on a writ of Habeas Corpus:

On page 216 of the first edition Lucy Smith told of the arrest of her husband:

He was taken for marrying a couple; and as Esquire Cowdery, and the mob, did not consider that he was a minister of the gospel, they disputed his having the right to perform this ceremony, and so fined him the sum of three thousand dollars, and, in case he should fail to pay this amount forthwith, he was sentenced to go to the penitentiary.

The Mormon Historians evidently felt that Lucy Smith told too much. In the 1954 reprint (page 248) 57 words were deleted, and 4 words added:

He was taken for marrying a couple without being licensed.

Luke Johnson bustled about pretending to be very much engaged in preparing to draw writings for the money, and making other arrangements, . . .

In the 1954 reprint (page 248) this has been changed to read:

Luke Johnson bustled about, pretending to be very much engaged in drawing the bonds and in making arrangements, . . .

The first opportunity that offered itself, he went to Hyrum, and told him to take his father into a room, which he pointed out to him, and, said Johnson, “I will manage to get the window out, which will set him at liberty to jump out, and go where he pleases.” Mr. Smith and Hyrum, who had been together all the time, then retired from the company, who were kept from following them by Luke Johnson, who told the mob, that the prisoner had gone to consult about raising the money. In this way they were stilled, until Mr. Smith, help of Hyrum and John Boynton, escaped from the window.

In the 1954 reprint (page 248) many words have been deleted, and others have been changed:

The first opportunity that offered itself, he went to Hyrum and told him he would take his father into a room, which he pointed out, and, said Johnson, “I will manage so that he can get out, which will set him at liberty to go where he pleases.” In this way he escaped, by the help of Hyrum and John Boynton, from the window.

Many other changes have been made in this book, however, lack of space prevents us from mentioning them in this issue.

It has been a hundred years since Brigham Young ordered the first edition of Lucy Smith’s book destroyed, and since that time it has become quite rare. We are happy to announce, however, that a collector of rare Mormon books has allowed us to use his copy of the first edition, and that we have made a photomechanical reprint which we are now selling for $4.00 each. The quantity prices are: 2 for $7.00 — 5 for $15.00 — 10 for $24.00. This book has a plastic binding, and it also includes a 15-page introduction which we have written showing many of the changes and facts concerning the suppression of this book. This should be very interesting to all students of Mormonism.

CUT THEIR THROATS

David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, stated as follows:

In June, 1838 at Far West, Mo., a secret organization was formed. Doctor Avard being put in as the leader of the band; a certain oath was to be administered to all the brethren to bind them to support the heads of the church in everything they should teach. All who refused to take this oath were considered dissenters from the Church and certain things were done concerning these dissenters, by Dr. Avard’s secret band. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, by David Whitmer, pages 27-28)

Mormon historians admit that the Danite band did exist, but they are unwilling to admit that Joseph Smith was connected with it. William E. Berrett (Vice President of the Brigham Young University) stated:

Such a band as the “Danites” did exist, as historians affirm; . . . The organization had been for the purpose of plundering and murdering the enemies of the Saints. (The Restored Church, 1956 edition, pages 197-198)

Dr. Hugh Nibley, of the Brigham Young University, admits that the Danites did exist, but he claims that Joseph Smith was not responsible for them. David Whitmer, however, claimed that Joseph Smith and Sydney Rigdon were responsible. In an interview, which was published in the Kansas City Daily Journal, David Whitmer stated:

. . . they issued a decree organizing what was termed the “Danites, or Destroying Angels,” who were bound by the most fearful oaths to obey the commandments of the leaders of the church. The Danites consisted only of those selected by Smith and Rigdon. They threatened myself, John Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery and Lyman Johnson with the vengeance of the Danites . . . (Kansas City Daily Journal, June 5, 1881)
It is very interesting to note that Orson Hyde, one of the Twelve Apostles in the Mormon Church, became very upset at Sydney Rigdon after Joseph Smith’s death, and accused him of teaching murder when the Mormons were in Far West. The following statement by Orson Hyde appeared in the Mormon newspaper, the Nauvoo Neighbor:

Elder Rigdon has been associated with Joseph and Hyrum Smith as a councillor to the Church, and he told me in Far West that it was the imperative of the Church to obey the word of Joseph Smith, or the presidency, without question or inquiry, and that if there were any that would not, they should have their throats cut from ear [to] ear. (Nauvoo Neighbor, December 4, 1844)

This was a very damaging admission to make. Since Sydney Rigdon was a councillor to Joseph Smith in the First Presidency, it would be almost impossible to believe that Joseph Smith was not aware of what was going on.

There is a great deal of evidence to show that Joseph Smith approved of the Danite band. We have just finished making a reprint of a book which should throw a great light on this subject; that is, Senate Document 189, 26th Congress 2nd Session. Showing the testimony given before the judge of the fifth judicial circuit of the State of Missouri, on the trial of Joseph Smith, Jr., and others, for high treason, and other crimes against that State. This book has a plastic binding and will sell for $1.50 each. The quantity price are: 3 for $4.00 — 5 for $6.00 — 10 for $9.00.

Juanita Brooks stated:

Some of the Danite leaders had turned state’s evidence; others had scattered. (On the Mormon Frontier, The Diary of Hosea Stout, vol. 1, Introduction)

Sampson Avard was one of the Danite leaders that turned state’s evidence. He stated:

Sampson Avard, a witness produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of the State, deposed and saith: That about four months since, a band, called the Daughters of Zion, (since called the Danite band,) was formed of the members of the Mormon church, . . . I consider Joseph Smith, jr., as the prime mover and organizer of this Danite band. The officers of the band, according to their grades, were brought before him, at a schoolhouse, together with Hiram Smith and Sidney Rigdon: the three composing the first presidency of the whole church. Joseph Smith Jr. blessed them, and prophesied over them: declaring that they should be the means, in the hands of God, of bringing forth the millenial kingdom. It was stated by Joseph Smith Jr., that it was necessary this band should be bound together by a covenant, that those who revealed the secrets of the society should be put to death . . . Instruction was giving by Joseph Smith, jr., that if any of them should get into a difficulty, the rest should help him out; and that they should stand by each other, right or wrong. This instruction was given at a Danite meeting, in a public address. (Senate Document 189, pages 1 and 2)

John Corrill testifies as follows:

I was afterwards invited to one of these meetings, where an oath, in substance the same as testified to by Dr. Avard, was administered. The society was ultimately organized into companies, and captains of tens and fifties were appointed. I took exceptions only to the teaching as to the duties of that society, wherein it was said, if one brother got into any kind of difficulty, it was the duty of the rest to help him out, right or wrong. At the second, or at least the last meeting I attended, the Presidency, (to wit: Joseph Smith jr., Hiram Smith, and Sidney Rigdon,) and also George W. Robertson, was there. (Senate Document 189, page 12)

John Cleminson testified as follows:

John Cleminson, a witness, produced, sworn, and examined, in behalf of the State, deposed and saith: Some time in June, I attended two or three Danite meetings; and it was taught there, as a part of the duty of the band, that they should support the presidency in all their designs, right or wrong; that whatever they said was to be obeyed, and whoever opposed the presidency in what they said, or desired done, should be expelled from the county, or have their lives taken. The three composing the presidency was at one of those meetings; and to satisfy the people, Dr. Avard called on Joseph Smith, jr., who gave them a pledge, that if they led them into a difficulty he would give them his head for a foot-ball, and that it was the will of God these things should be so. The teacher and active agent of the society was Dr. Avard, and his teachings were approved of by the presidency.

Speaking of a Danite meeting, Reed Peck testified:

I was present at one meeting when the officers of the society were presented and introduced to the presidency, each officer receiving a blessing from them. Avard stated that he had procured the presidency to come there, to show the society that what he had been doing was according to their direction or will; and while there, the presidency approved of Avard’s course in the society. (Senate Document 189, pages 17 and 18)

Burr Riggs testified as follows:

Mr. Rigdon said that the last man had run away from Far West that was a going to; that the next man who started, he should be pursued and brought back, dead or alive. This was put to a vote, and agreed to, without any one objecting to it. He further said, that one man had slipped his wind yesterday, and had been thrown aside into the brush for the buzzards to pick, and the first man who lisped it should die. (Senate Document 189, page 30)

William W. Phelps and many others testified in this investigation. There are 47 pages to testimony which is very revealing.

We have also reproduced another book which tells some things concerning the Danite band. The name of the book is Mormonism Exposed, Being a Journal of a Residence in Missouri for the 28th of May to the 20th of August, 1838, by William Swartzell, published in 1840. This is also in a plastic binding and sells for $1.50.

In the book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we have included much information on the Danite band and the doctrine of blood atonement. As yet, however, we have not included a sermon by Jedediah M. Grant (who was a member of the First Presidency in the Mormon Church) which was printed in the Mormon paper, the Deseret News, on July 27, 1854. Since most of our readers have not seen this sermon before, we will quote from it in this issue:

“‘What disposition ought the people of God to make of covenant breakers’ . . . I say what ought such a people to do with covenant breakers? ‘Why,’ says one, ‘forgive them to be sure.’ Very good, but what else ought they to do? What does the Apostle say? He says they are worthy of death . . . I am inclined to believe his decision was a correct one.

Then what ought this meek people, who keep the commandments of God do unto them? ‘Why’ says one, ‘they ought to pray to the Lord to kill them.’ I want to know if you would wish the Lord to come down and do all your dirty work . . .

Then there was another odd commandment—The Lord God commanded them not to pity the person whom they killed; but to execute the law of God upon persons worthy of death. This should be done by the entire congregation showing no pity. I have thought there would have to be quite a revolution among the Mormons, before such a commandment could be obeyed completely by them. The Mormons have a great deal of sympathy. For instance, if they can get a man before the tribunal administering the law of the land, and succeed in getting a rope round his neck, and having him hung up like a dead dog, it is all right; but if the Church and Kingdom of God should step forth and execute the law of God, O! what a burst of Mormon sympathy it would cause. I wish we were in a situation favorable to our doing that which is justifiable before God, without any contaminating influences of Gentile amalgamation, laws, and traditions, that the people of God might lay the axe to the root of the tree, and every tree that bringing not forth good fruit might be hewn down.

“...What! do you believe that people would do right and keep the law of God, by actually putting to death the transgressors?” Putting to death transgressors would exhibit the law of God, no difference by whom it was done; that is my opinion.

You talk of the doings of different governments, the United States if you please. What do they do with traitors? ... Do traitors to that Government forfeit their lives? ... But people will look into books of theology, and argue that the people of God have a right to try people for fellowship, but they have no right to try them on property or life. That makes the devil laugh, saying, I have got them on a hook now; ... But if the Government of God on earth, and Eternal Priesthood, with the sanction of High Heaven, in the midst of all his people, has passed sentence on certain sins when they appear in a person, has not the people of God a right to carry out that part of his law as well as any other portion of it? It is their right to baptize a sinner to save him, and it is also their right to kill a sinner to save him, when he commits those crimes that can only be atoned for by shedding his blood. If the Lord God forgives sins by baptism, and there is another law that certain sins cannot be atoned for by baptism, but by the shedding of the blood of the sinner, ... We would not kill a man, of course, unless we killed him to save him ... If you shall thus advance, and then turn and trample the holy commandments of God under you feet, and break your sacred and solemn covenants, and become traitors to the people of God, would you not be worthy of death? I think you would.

Do you think it would be any sin to kill me if I were to break my covenants? ... Do you believe you would kill me if I broke the covenants of God, and you had the Spirit of God? Yes; and the more Spirit of God
I had, the more I should strive to save your soul by spilling your blood, when you had committed sin that could not be remitted by baptism.

In the book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we show that some of the most powerful sermons on blood atonement were preached by Brigham Young himself.

I'M WARNING YOU

Several years ago we were sitting in the office of the Mormon Apostle
LeGrand Richards, when he threatened us as follows:

I'm warning you! Don't start anything against this church!

Since that time people have asked us such questions as: “Do you have a gun to protect yourself?” or “Do you have fire insurance on your equipment?” One man stated: “I would like to see you succeed, but I know they will burn you out.”

Fortunately, the Mormon leaders have not tried to destroy our press (as they did the Nauvoo Expositor), nor have they sent the Danites in the night (as Brigham Young used to do). Except for a few treating to sue or arrest us, and one man who threatened to punch Sandra “in the nose,” things have been rather peaceful. The Church has not used violence against us, as many people thought they would, but instead they have used silence as their chief weapon against us. But why silence? Is it our sincere belief that the Church leaders have no satisfactory answers to the charges of fraud and deceit that we have brought against them, and therefore they have used the “silent treatment” on us. This treatment seemed to work fairly well for the first few years, however, it is becoming less effective as time goes on. Many members of the Church are beginning to wonder why the Church leaders are so silent. Our mailing list is growing constantly, and there seems to be more interest than ever before. We are beginning to receive a great deal more of help from members of the Church who are very disturbed with the way their leaders have used deceit to preserve the image of the Church. Some have offered to help us obtain microfilms and photocopies of rare documents, and others have given us information which will be very helpful to us.

One man spent a great deal of time trying to find an addressing machine to help us put out our mailing list faster. After finding the proper machine, he paid half the cost of it. This will be a great help to us.

We hope to receive many new names for our mailing list, the Messenger is sent free to those on our mailing list.

LETTERS

“Thank you sincerely for sending the revised edition of your excellent work on Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? I am amazed at the tremendous amount of work and research it represents.

material available. I wish you every success in your difficult work.”

(Letter from Utah)

“I want to commend you on your Changes in J. S. History: it is a great piece of work.” (Letter from Illinois)

“Inclosed please find my order for four more of your very stimulating books. I thoroughly enjoy them and hope you continue. I have a great many of your publications and will not be satisfied until I have them all ...

“My I congratulate you on your research and your ability to ferret out these many materials. I don’t know how you do it, especially when you meet with so much opposition. Keep up the good work.” (Letter from Arizona)

“Could you send me 15 more copies of the advertisement for your book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? ... At the seminary I posted the ad for your book & also a list which the students could sign. I got 30 names of people who want the book.” (Letter from Minnesota)

OUT OF PRINT?

In the first issue of the Messenger we proved that the Mormon Church leaders are trying to suppress Wilford Wood’s photo-offset reprint of the first edition of the Book of Commandments, Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon. We reproduced a letter from the Deseret Book Store in which the following statement appeared:

Thank you for your letter ordering Joseph Smith Begins His Work
Vol. 1 & 2 by Wilford Wood. We are sorry to inform you that these two books are no longer available.

We also quoted an employee of the Deseret Book Store as saying:

“President David O. McKay won’t let us sell that anymore.” The same employee also stated:

“We’ve had several people leave the Church because of those books.
The priest and ministers of the other churches are using these books to confuse people. Because of the confusion we can’t sell them anymore.
President McKay has taken them out of circulation.

The reason the Mormon Church is trying to suppress these books is that the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith’s revelations have been changed. On May 8, 1965, we called the Deseret Book Store on the phone to find out if they were still suppressing the sale of these books, and also to find out if they were giving the same reason for not selling them.
The answer was that they are “out of print.” Of course, this statement is completely untrue. In a letter dated October 27, 1964, Wilford Wood stated: “There are plenty of books, both volumes and always will be.”

Modern Microfilm Company will continue to sell these books as long as they are available to us.

It would be very interesting if a large number of our readers would write or phone the Deseret Book Store concerning the suppression of these books. Their address is 44 East South Temple, Salt Lake City, Utah, and their phone number is 328-8191.
The Mormon Historian Joseph Fielding Smith has claimed that there is no truth in the statement that there have been thousands of changes in the Book of Mormon. He was reported as saying the following at the fall conference of 1961:

During the past week or two I have received a number of letters from different parts of the United States written by people, some of whom at least are a little concerned because they have been approached by enemies of the Church and enemies of the Book of Mormon, who had made the statement that there have been one or two or more thousand changes in the Book of Mormon since the first edition was published. Well, of course, there is no truth in that statement.

. . . there was not one thing in the Book of Mormon or in the second edition or any other edition since that in any way contradicts the first edition, . . .

Now, these Sons of Belial who circulate these reports evidently know better. I will not use the word that is in my mind. (Improvement Era, December 1961, pages 924-925)

In the book, Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, Joseph Fielding Smith made the following statement:

It is astonishing to what length the enemies of the Church will go in order to attempt to prove the Book of Mormon false. . . .

There were bound to be some typographical errors in the first edition, and perhaps an omission of a word or two. . . . A careful check of the list of changes submitted by these critics shows there is not one change or addition that is not in full harmony with the original text. Changes have been made in punctuation and a few other matters that needed correction, but never has any alteration or addition changed a single original thought. (Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, pages 199-200)

In a new book which we have just finished printing, 3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon, we prove that Joseph Fielding Smith is the man who is not telling the truth. There have been thousands of changes made in the Book of Mormon, and they are not in harmony with the original text. For example, on page 303 of the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon this statement appears:

. . . ye, I know that he allotteth unto men, yea, decreeth unto them decrees which are unalterable, according to their wills, . . .

In the 1964 edition [Alma 29:4] 8 words have been deleted:

. . . ye, I know that he allotteth unto men according to their wills, . . .

In the first edition, page 87, this statement appears:

. . . the mean man boweth down, . . .

In later editions [2 Nephi 12:9] this has been changed to read as follows:

. . . the mean man boweth not down, . . .

On page 200 of the first edition of the Book of Mormon we read as follows:

. . . king Benjamin had a gift from God, whereby he could interpret such engravings; . . .

In modern editions this has been changed to read:

. . . king Mosiah had a gift from God, whereby he could interpret such engravings; . . . (Book of Mormon, Mosiah 21:28)

A change has been made in the First Book of Nephi, evidently in an attempt to strengthen the Mormon claim that baptism was practiced by the people in the Old Testament. This verse is taken from Isaiah 48, and appears as follows in the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon:

Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which swear by the name of the Lord, . . . (Book of Mormon, 1830 ed., page 52)

In modern editions seven words have been added:

Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, who are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, or out of the waters of baptism, who swear by the name of the Lord, . . . (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 20:1)

Four important changes were made in the second edition of the Book of Mormon concerning the Godhead. One of the most significant changes was made in 1 Nephi 13:40. It was stated in this verse that the purpose of the Nephite records was to make known that Christ is the Eternal Father. In the first edition we read as follows:

. . . These last records, . . . shall make known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Eternal Father and the Savior . . . (Book of Mormon, 1830 edition, page 32) (Continued on page 2)

Bible Study

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. Remember that Jesus said that a man must be born again:

Jesus answered and said unto him, verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

NEW BOOK

3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon. This is a photomechanical reprint of the original 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon with all the changes marked. Contains a 16-page introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner which proves that the changes are not in harmony with the original text.

Joseph Smith stated that when he and the witnesses went out to pray concerning the Book of Mormon, a voice spoke from heaven telling them that the translation was correct:

. . . we heard a voice from out of the bright light above us, saying, “These plates have been revealed by the power of God, and they have been translated by the power of God. The translation of them which you have seen is correct, and I command you to bear record of what you now see and hear.” (History of the Church, by Joseph Smith, vol. 1, pages 54-55)

In spite of this statement, the Mormon leaders have made thousands of changes in the Book of Mormon. In the preface to 3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon we show that some of the changes were made as late as 1920.

We feel that all students of Mormonism will want this book because it clearly shows the changes that have been made and the deceptive methods used by the Mormon leaders to cover up these facts. Plastic binding.

Price: $5.00 — 2 for $9.00 — 4 for $15.00 — 10 for $30.00.
In later editions the words “the Son of” have been added:

... These last records, ... shall make known to all kindreds, tongues, and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the Eternal Father, and the Savior. ... (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 13:40)

It is interesting to note that even the signed statement by the eight witnesses to the Book of Mormon has been altered. In the 1830 edition (last page) it read:

... that Joseph Smith, Jr. the author and proprietor of this work, has shewn unto us the plates.

In the 1964 edition it reads:

... That Joseph Smith, Jun. the translator of this work, has shewn unto us the plates.

In the first edition of the Book of Mormon, page 31, the following appears:

... neither will the Lord God suffer that the Gentiles shall forever remain in that state of awful woundedness ...

In later editions, [1 Nephi 13:32], this has been changed to read:

Neither will the Lord God suffer that the Gentiles shall forever remain in the awful state of blindness ...

On page 260 of the first edition the following statement appears:

Behold, the Scriptures are before you; if ye will arrest them, it shall be to your own destruction.

In modern editions, [Alma 13:20], this has been changed to read:

Behold, the scriptures are before you, if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction.

A similar mistake is found on page 336 of the first edition:

... some have arrested the scriptures, ...

In modern editions, [Alma 41:1], this has been changed to read:

... some have wrested the scriptures, ...

We could go on listing the changes, but this should be sufficient to give the reader an idea of what will be found in the book, 3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon. This is a book we have spent months in preparing, and we consider it to be one of our largest and most important projects. We feel that this book will of great interest to our readers.

MORMONISM—Shadow or Reality?

It may interest our readers to know that we have sold five times more copies of the book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? than any other book we have printed. The response by those who have read the book has been very encouraging.

Myron J. Houghton made the following statement in a review published in the North Star Baptist:

For a single book which is comprehensive, effectively presenting and refuting Mormonism, this book is the best yet. (North Star Baptist, June-July, 1965 issue, page 26)

The Utah Christian Tract Society made this comment in their newsletter:

This publication by Jerald and Sandra Tanner, who are former Mormons, is by far the most comprehensive and best documented book on the Mormon system and contains more authentic material and information than any other book of which we are aware. It has 430 pages plus 87 reproductions of pages from rare, suppressed L.D.S. books, also reproduced letters from Mormon “authorities.” Two Mormon Apostles have threatened lawsuits. This book sells for $5.00 and is worth every penny of it. For the person who desires a thorough presentation of Mormon history, doctrines and practices, this book is a “must.” (Newsletter for May-June, 1965, vol. 5, number 4, published by the Utah Christian Tract Society)

This comment appeared in the Utah Evangel:

There is no better book than Tanner’s Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (one of our best sellers). (Utah Evangel, vol. 13, number 2, September 1965)

A minister in Utah made the following comment in a letter to us:

I certainly admire your courage and loyalty to the truth in publishing such a book, which, no doubt will be the means of turning many from darkness to light.

A member of the Mormon Church made the following comment in a letter to us:

Perhaps by way of interest, I might mention that I had studied deeply into our history and doctrine before coming upon your materials, ... It’s my opinion that your book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? if widely read by Mormons and Non-Mormons alike, would do more harm to the church than any other volume published in the last 50 to 75 years. It could almost tear the Church apart. Your approach is novel; you’ve used our own history and doctrine, and your quotations are accurate. (Letter from Arizona, dated July 28, 1965)

JOSEPH SMITH’S STRANGE ACCOUNT OF THE FIRST VISION

In a letter which we received from California the following statement appeared:

... today we received the two copies of Strange Account of the First Vision ... This will surely deal a great blow to the origin of the Mormon system. I just wonder how they will try to “explain it away!”

We feel that this is one of the most important documents which we have printed on Mormonism, and if it were to have a wide circulation we feel that it would surely deal a great blow to the origin of the Mormon system.

The price of this book is $1.50. The quantity prices are as follows:
3 for $4.00 — 5 for $6.00 — 10 for $9.00.

MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE

This is a photomechanical reprint of the complete (three volume) set of the Messenger and Advocate which was printed by the Mormon Church in the years 1834-1837. These books will be of great interest to all students of Mormonism because they deal with a very important period in Mormon history. The printing is clear and readable, and they are bound in black buckram. The price is $19.50 for the set of three volumes.
3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon

A Photo Reprint of the Original 1830 Edition of The Book of Mormon With all the Changes Marked

By Jerald & Sandra Tanner
On page 26 of the first edition of the Book of Mormon these words appear: "... by the people; yea, the Everlasting God, was ..." In modern editions of the Book of Mormon this has been changed to read: "... by the people; yea, the Son of the everlasting God was ..." (Book of Mormon, 1964 ed., 1 Nephi 11:32). Notice that the words “the Son of” have been added into the middle of this verse.

The photograph above is taken from the original handwritten manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which is in the Church Historian’s Library in Salt Lake City, Utah. The arrow to the side points to the line in which the words in question appear. These words read as follows: "... by the people yea the ever lasting God was ..." Notice that the words “the Son of” do not appear. The arrow above points to the place where the words “the Son of” would have to be inserted to bring the manuscript into conformity with the 1964 edition of the Book of Mormon. Since these words do not appear in the manuscript, this proves that the Mormon leaders have deliberately changed the Book of Mormon. This photograph also proves that the Church Historian Joseph Fielding Smith has deceived his people concerning the changes in the Book of Mormon, for in his book, Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, he made the following statement: “A careful check of the list of changes submitted by these critics shows there is not one change or addition that is not in full harmony with the original text. Changes have been made in punctuation and a few other matters that needed correction, but never has any alteration or addition changed a single original thought” (Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, page 200). The photograph above proves that Joseph Fielding Smith’s statement is absolutely untrue.

While this photograph is not too readable, a clear and readable photocopy is owned by Wilford Wood, who helped in obtaining the manuscript for the Mormon Church.
Negroes In The Priesthood

Bob Phillips states that there are at least sixty descendants of Elijah Abel in the Mormon Church. At least forty of these live within a radius of 100 miles of Salt Lake City, and, of course, some of them hold the Priesthood and are doing missionary work for the Church. Elijah Abel had six daughters, therefore many of his descendants do not have the name "Abel." Some of their children were apparently adopted into "white" families in Utah. It is evident, then, that some members of the Mormon Church who believe they are "white" are in reality part Negro.

In the book, Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro, we devote six pages to Elijah Abel, his descendants and other Negroes who have held the Priesthood in the Mormon Church.

The book has a plastic binding and will sell for $2.00 a copy. The quantity prices are: 2 for $3.50 — 5 for $7.00 — 10 for $12.00 — 20 for $20.00.

LACK OF FUNDS

Although we have sold many more books this year than we did last year, we still find ourselves in need of funds. In order to keep going last year we had to take out three additional loans. To meet the payments on these loans and our other necessary expenses we have to sell almost fifty dollars worth of books every day.

We have plans for several projects which we consider to be extremely important, however, we will need a good deal of money to carry these plans into effect. We owe one company over $1,400 for paper, and we must bring this balance down before charging any more paper with them. In order to raise the money we need we have decided to have another 10% sale on all our books and to sell gift certificates.

We hope that these two ideas will bring in the money that we need to continue this work in an effective manner.

10% SALE

This sale begins when our customers receive this notice, and it will continue until December 31, 1965.

A special price list is enclosed which shows the price of each book with the 10% discount already discounted.

To avoid confusion the sale does not apply to any orders placed prior to the time this paper is received.

GIFT CERTIFICATES

GIVE MODERN MICROFILM BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS

We have now printed gift certificates for those who wish to give Modern Microfilm books for Christmas, birthdays, etc. These certificates will be honored for the purchase of any books in stock at Modern Microfilm Co. The person who receives the certificate can either come to our store or send in his order by mail. We will send a book list and an order form for their convenience in ordering the books of their choice.

We will give a 10% discount on all gift certificates ordered before December 31, 1965. For example, if you were to order a $5.00 gift certificate you would only send $4.50. Below is an example of how you would fill out the order form to receive two gift certificates (one for $10.00 and one for $5.00). The quantity prices are: 2 for $3.50 — 5 for $7.00 — 10 for $12.00 — 20 for $20.00.

After receiving this chart we began to search through the records in the Genealogical Society, which is owned by the Mormon Church, to see if we could confirm the statement that Elijah Abel’s descendants have been ordained to the Priesthood. With the help of Bob Phillips we were able to find information that proves that the Negro blood in the Abel family has not prevented some of them from holding the Priesthood. We have obtained a photograph of Elijah Abel’s grandson’s ward membership record which proves that he was ordained to the Priesthood. This photograph is included in a new book we have just finished printing entitled, Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro.
Mormon leaders deleted Parley P. Pratt’s statements concerning polygamy. The Mormon Church, however, filled the void by adding 123 words. In the 1965 edition, page 164, 341 words have been deleted. It now reads as follows:

In the 1965 edition, page 29 of the first edition this statement appears:

Jesus Christ, a little babe like all the rest of us have been, grew to be a man, and “received a fulness of the glory of the Father, and he received all Power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was restored with the priesthood of the Saints of this age. Strict laws were also given and diligently taught . . .”

Hundreds of other words concerning the doctrine of polygamy have also been deleted without any indication. On page 29 of the first edition this statement appears:

Jesus Christ, a little babe like all the rest of us have been, grew to be a man, and “received a fulness of the glory of the Father, and he received all Power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was restored with the priesthood of the Saints of this age. Strict laws were also given and diligently taught . . .”

In the 1965 reprint, page 37 this has been changed to read:

Jesus Christ, a little babe like all the rest of us have been, grew to be a man, and “received a fulness of the glory of the Father, and he received all Power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was with him, for he dwelt in him.”

Notice that the Mormon leaders have completely rewritten this statement by Parley P. Pratt.

In chapter 5 which is entitled “Keys to the Mysteries of the Godhead,” Parley P. Pratt did not have anything to say concerning the Holy Ghost. The Mormon leaders, however, filled the vacuum by adding 123 words.

There are many other important changes which we do not have room to mention here, however, we have obtained photocopies of the original 1855 edition and have made a photomechanical reprint of it with all the changes marked. This book has a plastic binding. The price is $3.00 a copy. The quantity prices are 2 for $5.00 — 5 for $10.00 — 10 for $18.00.

CHANGES IN THE KEY TO THEOLOGY

Dr. Hugh Nibley, of the Brigham Young University, claims that Joseph Smith’s teachings “are so well-knit and perfectly logical that they have never had to undergo the slightest change or alteration during a century in which every other church in Christendom has continually revamped its doctrines” (No, Ma’am, That’s Not History, pages 57-58). On page 61 of the same book Dr. Nibley stated:

The gospel as the Mormons knew it sprang full-grown from the words of Joseph Smith. It has never been worked over or touched up in any way, and is free of revisions and alterations.

In a book we have just finished printing, Changes in the Key to Theology, we show that Dr. Nibley’s statement are completely false. The Mormon leaders not only change the doctrines of the Church, but they also change their books to make it appear that no doctrinal changes have been made. For example, in 1855 Parley P. Pratt published a book entitled, Key to the Science of Theology. Two years after this book was printed Parley P. Pratt (who was an Apostle in the Mormon Church) was assassinated at Van Buren, Arkansas. The Church, however, has continued to reprint his book; in 1965 the Deseret Book Co., which is owned by the Mormon Church, printed the “Ninth Edition.” We have compared the 1965 reprint with the original 1855 edition and have found many important changes.

Some of the most important changes are concerning the doctrine of polygamy. Today the Mormon leaders do not teach the doctrine of polygamy, but in 1855, when Parley P. Pratt wrote this book, polygamy was an accepted practice and doctrine of the Mormon Church. In the first edition of this book Parley P. Pratt defended the practice of polygamy. The 1883 edition (which was printed 26 years after his death) included this defense of polygamy. Sometime between 1883 and 1965, however, the Mormon leaders deleted Parley P. Pratt’s statements concerning polygamy. In the first edition the following statement appeared:

The principal object contemplated by this law, is the multiplication of the children of good and worthy fathers, who will teach them the truth, and train them in the holy principles of salvation. This is far preferable to sending them into the world in the lineages of an unworthy or ignorant parentage, to be educated in error, folly, ignorance and crime.

The peculiar characteristics of the blessings included in the Everlasting Covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their lineage, was the multiplicity of their seed, and the perpetuity of the royal, priestly and kingly power in their lineage.

To assist in carrying out and fulfilling this covenant, good and virtuous women were given to their faithful Prophets, rulers, and wise and virtuous men; and, as it was said of the four wives of Jacob, “These did build the house of Israel.”

While peculiar blessings and encouragements were given to a good and faithful man, and to his wives and children; while they were honored of God, and respected by all who knew them; while the father of a hundred children was had in greater honour than the hero of a hundred battles, adultery, fornication, and all unlawful intercourse was strictly prohibited, and even punished by the strictest laws—the penalty of which was death.

A daughter of Israel, who, by prostitution, was rendered unworthy, or unqualified for the duties of a virtuous wife and mother, was considered unfit to live. While the male who would thus trifle with the fountain of life, and contribute to render a female unworthy to answer the end of her creation, was also condemned to death.

Strict laws were also given and diligently taught . . . (The Key to Theology, 1855 ed., pages 163-164)

In the 1965 edition, page 164, 341 words have been deleted. It now reads as follows:

. . . restored with the priesthood of the Saints of this age. Strict laws were also given and diligently taught . . .

In the 1965 reprint, page 37 this has been changed to read:

Jesus Christ, a little babe like all the rest of us have been, grew to be a man, and “received a fulness of the glory of the Father, and he received all Power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was with him, for he dwelt in him.”

Notice that the Mormon leaders have completely rewritten this statement by Parley P. Pratt.

In chapter 5 which is entitled “Keys to the Mysteries of the Godhead,” Parley P. Pratt did not have anything to say concerning the Holy Ghost. The Mormon leaders, however, filled the vacuum by adding 123 words. Parley P. Pratt had much to say concerning the Holy Spirit in Mormon theology the Holy Spirit is considered to be separate from the Holy Ghost, but the Mormon leaders evidently did not like what he said, for they have deleted hundreds of words.

Bible Study

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome.

For God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. (1 Thessalonians 4:7)
The leaders of the Mormon Church have always found it very hard to accept criticism. In 1844 a newspaper was established in Nauvoo, Illinois, entitled the Nauvoo Expositor. This paper was opposed to Joseph Smith practicing polygamy and running for the office of President of the United States. After the Nauvoo Expositor had published its first number, the City Council met at this meeting Phineas Richards stated that he "was for making a short work" of the Nauvoo Expositor. Joseph Smith, who was the mayor, ordered the press destroyed. In the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 432, this statement is attributed to Joseph Smith:

The Council passed an ordinance declaring the Nauvoo Expositor a nuisance, and also issued an order to me to abate the said nuisance. I immediately ordered the Marshal to destroy it without delay. . . .

About 8 p.m., the Marshal returned and reported that he had removed the press, type, printed paper, and fixtures into the street, and destroyed them.

Vilate Kimball, wife of Heber C. Kimball, described the destruction of the Nauvoo Expositor as follows:

June 11th. Nauvoo was a scene of excitement last night. Some hundreds of the brethren turned out and burned the press of the opposite party. (Letter written by Vilate Kimball, published in the Life of Heber C. Kimball, page 350)

In Utah, on October 7, 1868, George Q. Cannon, who became a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church stated:

Yet we, for years have had in our city [Salt Lake City] a paper which publishes, if possible, more abominable lies about us and our people than were published by the "Nauvoo Expositor," for the abatement of which Hyrum Smith said he was willing to die. We have not noticed it; we have suffered it to go on undisturbed. But the times has come for us to take this matter in to consideration. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 12, page 292)

The Mormon Church had its own newspaper in Utah entitled the Deseret News. In 1870, however, a newspaper was established which was later to be known as the Salt Lake Tribune. The Mormon historian Joseph Fielding Smith quoted the historian Whitney as stating:

“The Nauvoo Expositor was holy writ compared with the Salt Lake Tribune.” It had been justly said of this sheet that it was “brought into the world to lie and was true to its mission.” (Essentials in Church History, page 548)

The Mormon leaders did not destroy the Salt Lake Tribune, however, they were gradually able to make it shift its emphasis from anti-Mormon to pro-Mormon. As one man explained it, the Salt Lake Tribune was “baptized” into the Mormon Church. The Tribune has now become a tool of the church. An employee of the Tribune stated that the suppression of news and the special favors shown to the Mormon Church made him “sick.”

While residents of Salt Lake City have two large daily newspapers (the Salt Lake Tribune and the Deseret News) neither one of these papers will report the news if it is unfavorable to the Mormon Church. The following is an example of the way the news is suppressed in Salt Lake City: On December 27, 28 and 29, 1965, the New York Times ran a series of three articles on the Mormon Church. Both newspapers in Salt Lake refused to print these articles. The Deseret News claimed that it did not print the articles because it was not a member of the Associated Press News Service. The Salt Lake Tribune could not offer this excuse since it is a member of the Associated Press. Instead, a man in the editorial department stated that the activities of the Mormon Church were “sufficiently” covered and there was no need to pick up these articles from the New York Times. The following are a few excerpts from the New York Times articles written by Wallace Turner:

SALT LAKE CITY — The great socio - economic - theo - cratic organization that built this city has entered a period of ferment.

Within the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—more commonly known as the Mormon Church—the liberal intellectuals are hungry as never before for avenues of discussion. Some of them will start a magazine soon for a outlet.

For many of these liberals the paramount question is the church’s attitude on Negroes, who are permitted to become members but cannot attain to the priesthood open to all other male members or become church officers.

At the other end of the doctrinal spectrum, some conservatives are causing concern by taking to polygamy—a practice officially discarded by the church 75 years ago—for which they are excommunicated. . . .

The problem of polygamy—for half a century a cardinal principle of Mormonism—has taken a number of members out of the church. One expert estimates that as many as 30,000 men, women and children live in families in which polygamy is practiced.

COLONY IN ARIZONA

Many live in and near Salt Lake City. Hundreds are concentrated in an isolated Arizona town, Colorado City. Others are scattered through the mountain West and in Mexico. . . .

Only by excommunication can a person leave the church. This may be had for the asking, but few ask, even when disenchanted with their religion.

Three officers were appointed to the editorial department, and run a small printing operation here that distributes such things as anti-Mormon books that have been out of print and pamphlets attacking the validity of the “Book of Mormon” as a divinely revealed work.

Mrs. Tanner is a great-granddaughter of Brigham Young she was holding a great-great-grandchild of the Mormon leader on her knee as she said:

“Even when I had decided in my mind that I did not believe the ‘Book of Mormon’ any longer, it was months before I could say it aloud.” (New York Times, December 27, 1965, pages 1, 18)

In a second article Wallace Turner stated:

SALT LAKE CITY—If George Romney runs for the Presidency of the United States his candidacy will produce button-popping pride among his coreligionists in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—the Mormons.

It would also focus attention on the church’s theologically oriented prejudice against Negroes—among whom there are about six million voters.

Since a Negro cannot become a priest, he cannot, in the Mormon view, be one of the elite in the after-life. And he cannot hold any position in the L.D.S. Church beyond simple membership. He is figuratively relegated to the back pew.

REED PECK MANUSCRIPT

While browsing through the books at James Wardle’s extensive library on Mormonism, we came across a book with the title, The Reed Peck Manuscript. Upon examination we found that it contained photocopies of a handwritten document written in 1839 by Reed Peck. We found this document to be extremely interesting because of the information it contained concerning the Mormon war in Missouri and the Danite band.

After reading this manuscript, we felt that it should be made available to the general public. Upon further investigation we found that Lu B. Cake had printed the entire manuscript in 1899, and that it was in the public domain.

We have now printed this entire document following the original manuscript faithfully with regard to spelling and punctuation.

On page 9 and 10 (of our printing) Reed Peck made this statement:

Some time previous to this secret meetings had been held… ignorant of the nature of these meetings I attended one about the last of June and heared a full disclosure of its object—Jared Carter Geo W. Robinson and Sampson Avard, under the instruction of the presidency, had formed a secret military society, called the “daughters of Zion” and were holding meetings to initiate members. The principles taught by Sampson Avard as spokesman were that “As the Lord had raised up a prophet in these last days like unto Moses it shall be the duty of this band to obey him in all things, and whatever he requires you shall perform being ready to give up life and property for the advancement of the cause. When any thing is to be performed no member shall have the privilege of judging whether it would be right or wrong but shall engage in its accomplishment and trust God for the result.”

It is not our business or place to know what is required by God, but he will inform us by means of the prophet and we must perform. If any one of you see a member of the band in difficulty in the surrounding country contending for instance with an enemy, you shall extricate him, even if in the wrong; if you have to do with his adversary as Moses did with the Egyptian put him under the sand and both pack off to Far West and we will take care of the matter ourselves. No person shall be suffered to speak evil or disrespectfully of the presidency. The secret signs and purposes of the society are not to be revealed on pain of death… The blood of my best friend must flow by my own hands if I would be a faithful Danite should the prophet command it. Said A. McRae in my hearing “If Joseph should tell me to kill VanBuren in his presidential chair I would immediately start and do my best to assassinate him let the consequences be as they would be…”

On page 13 of the Reed Peck Manuscript we find the following concerning John Corrill’s failure to obey a revelation:

John Corrill observed to a person in Far West that he did not “think it his duty to unite with the firm and that he had no confidence in the revelation that required it” Joseph Smith and S Rigdon learning that he had made this observation, chid him severely for his rebellion in the presence of several persons. Smith said to him “if you tell about the streets again that you do not believe this or that revelation of several persons Smith said to him “if you tell about the streets again that you do not believe this or that revelation I will walk on your neck sir” at the same time smiting his fists to evince his great rage. He talked of dissenters and cited us to the case of Judas, saying that Peter told him in a conversation a few days ago that himself hung Judas for betraying Christ. He also said “if you do not act differently and show yourself approved you shall never be admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven—I will stand at the entrance and oppose you myself and will keep you out if I have to take a fistsy cuff in doing it”.

B. H. Roberts, the Mormon Historian, admitted that Sidney Rigdon (who was a member of the First Presidency) preached a sermon in which he inferred that the “dissenting brethren” should be “trodden under the foot of men.” Reed Peck made this statement concerning this sermon:

…S. Rigdon took his text from the fifth chapter of Matthew “Ye are the salt of the earth but if the salt have lost its savour wherewith shall it be salted, it is henceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and be trodden under foot of men.” From this scripture he undertook to prove that when men embrace the gospel and afterwards lose their faith it is the duty of the Saints to trample them under their feet. He inferred the people that they had a set of men among them that had dissented from the church and were doing all in their power to destroy the presidency laying plans to take their lives & c., accused them of counterfeiting lying cheating and numerous other crimes and called on the people to rise en masse and rid the county of such a nuisance. He said it is the duty of this people to trample them into the earth and if the county cannot be freed from them any other way I will assist to trample them down or to erect a gallows on the square of Far West and hang them up as they did the gamblers at Vicksburgh and it would be an act at which the angels would smile with approbation. Joseph Smith in a short speech sanctioned what had been said by Rigdon, though said he I don’t want the brethren to act unlawfully but will tell them one thing Judas was a traitor and instead of hanging himself was hung by Peter, and with this hint the subject was dropped for the day having created a great excitement and prepared the people to execute anything that should be proposed. (The Reed Peck Manuscript, pages 6 and 7)

Dr. Hugh Nibley, of the Brigham Young University, claimed that Joseph Smith did not know anything about the Danites. Reed Peck, however, claimed that the First Presidency knew about the Danite Band:

At a meeting for the organization of the Danite Sampson Avard presented the society to the presidency who blessed them and accepted their services as though they were soon to be employed in executing some great design. They also made speeches to the society in which great military glory and conquest were represented as awaiting them,… (The Reed Peck Manuscript, page 11)

There are many other interesting incidents that Reed Peck relates in this book. We feel that those who are interested in the subject of Mormonism will have a great interest in this book. This book has a plastic binding. The regular price would be $2.00 a copy, if you were to buy this in the bookstores. Our special price during this 10% sale is $1.80. The quantity prices are: 2 for $3.15 — 5 for $6.30 — 10 for $10.80.

LETTERS

ORSON SPENCER

We have just completed a very limited (only 140 copies) reprint of the Letters of Orson Spencer. This is a photomechanical reprint of the 1891 edition. On page 207 of this book Orson Spencer states:

Do not tartle, sir, if I should tell you that monogamy, or the one-wife system, adopted throughout Christendom, is a very defective system. It does not answer the demands of society, and it is altogether inferior to the Patriarchal system of polygamy, as introduced by God himself.

The Mormon leaders now claim that the Father and the Son appeared to Joseph Smith when he was fifteen years old. Orson Spencer, however, stated that Joseph was seventeen when the “designs of heaven were first made known to him” (Letters of Orson Spencer, pages 25). On page 75 of the same book Orson Spencer states that it was only an “angel” that appeared to Joseph Smith.

This book will be of interest to those who are collecting early Mormon publications. This book has a plastic binding and will sell for $3.00 in the bookstores. Our special price during this 10% sale is $2.70. The quantity prices are: 2 for $4.50 — 5 for $9.00 — 10 for $16.20.

Bible Study

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome.

Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. (2 Timothy 2:15)

But he said, Yea rather; blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it. (Luke 11:28)
We wish to thank all those who placed orders during our 10% sale. One man gave us a gift of $20 which was greatly appreciated and came at a time when it was really needed.

Unfortunately, however, we did not receive the money that we needed to continue this work in an effective manner. For this reason and others we have decided to continue the 10% sale and to sell out all of our books (with the exception of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?: Joseph Smith’s Strange Account of the First Vision and Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro). It is very possible that these books will never be printed again, and this may be your last chance to get them. If we are not able to reprint these books at a later date, some of them will probably become collectors items and be worth a good deal of money. It is very possible that the Mormon Church will try to buy up these books; therefore, we hope that our customers will buy many of them and keep them out of the hands of the Church. We know of one book (which was critical of the Mormon Church) that was considered a failure at the time it was printed. As we understand it, however, the Church bought up many of the copies, and it is now a collectors item and is worth $35 to $50 a copy.

At any rate, a person would probably not go wrong in buying a large supply of Modern Microfilm books at the 10% discount. It would certainly help us to pay off many of our bills.

We are including a special price list which gives the prices with the 10% discount already deducted and also shows how many copies of each item we had left when we took inventory January 1, 1966. Some of the books will probably sell out fast; therefore, it would be wise to place your order immediately!

OUR PLANS FOR THE FUTURE

We hope that by selling these books we will be able to pay off our loans, and, if it is possible, to keep our equipment. We hope to spend some time in research and writing, and also to continue the Salt Lake City Messenger. After that the Lord may call us to some other work, or we may even continue Modern Microfilm Co. on a part time basis. Be this as it may, we feel that our work has been very effective. We have received much help and encouragement from members of the Mormon Church. For instance, a student at the Brigham Young University (the Mormon Church’s University) wrote us a letter in which he stated:

I consider myself obligated to you for not only your books but for the way in which my life and ideas have undergone a radical change for the better. . . .

I can do nothing too overtly to help you until I graduate for lack of funds, fear of some kind of reprisal like dishonoreishment or excommunication which would or might foul up my graduation from BYU. But what I can do I do. I think I have been moderately successful in advertising your work and publications to my friends who are much of the same opinions as myself. If I can do anything else for you please ask. (Letter from a student at the Brigham Young University, dated December 18, 1965)

Several men who have served on missions for the Mormon Church have taken a real interest in our work. One man (who had recently returned from a mission for the Church) claimed that he has completely lost faith in the Mormon Church and is considering entering the ministry in another church.

Besides receiving much help from members of the Mormon Church, we have received a great deal of help from those who are working with the Mormons. A minister in Idaho wrote us a letter in which he stated:

I ordered your masterful work - Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and I think that it is the most outstanding book that I have seen. I have already recommended it to others and will continue to do so. (Letter dated December 22, 1965)

We have many people on our mailing list who have written or will be writing books, pamphlets and theses on Mormonism. We feel that it has been a very important part of our work to supply these writers with source material. This material will help them to present a more complete picture of Mormonism to their readers. One man who will be writing on the subject of Mormonism sent us a letter in which he stated:

About a week ago I was asked . . . to teach one class session on Mormonism in the Polemics class. . . . yesterday, when I taught the class, everyone came away very enthusiastic. Among other books and literature which I brought to class, I also brought and promoted your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? which in my thinking has become a classic in its field.

Well, I must close. You have, through the literature and letters, created an enthusiasm in me to keep one pursuing the area of Mormonism. (Letter dated January 8, 1966)

INFORMATION THAT MUST BE MADE AVAILABLE

We feel that some of the most important information concerning Mormonism has yet to be printed. For instance, we have access to a microfilm of a handwritten document which was dictated by Joseph Smith which, we feel, will absolutely prove that Mormonism is false. At the present time the only thing that prevents us from publishing this document is the lack of money to buy the paper to print it on. The Mormon leaders have suppressed this document for 130 years, but we feel that it must be made available. Also we have a great deal of information concerning the Book of Mormon, the Temple Ceremony, blood atonement, the Danites, changes in Mormon publications, polygamy, the Book of Abraham, suppression of the records and many other subjects which we would like to make available to the public.

Our ability to make this information available hinges on how well we are able to sell the present material.

A VERY HARD WORK

Many people have told us that they would pray for our work. This is very encouraging to us because we realize that we could not have made it this far without God’s help, and we will need His help if we are to continue.

A man who worked at a publishing company in Salt Lake City told us that his company seldom prints less than 3,000 copies of a book at one time. He also stated that if they printed less than 3,000 the price of the book would go up to $10 a copy, and that they would not even consider printing less than 1,000 copies at a time. At Modern Microfilm Co. we have never printed more than 500 copies of a book at one time. On one of our latest books (Letters of Orson Spencer) we printed only 140 copies. We have had to reprint our large book on Mormonism at least ten different times. To make small printings like this takes a great deal of time. Most publishers would not even consider printing such small quantities, however, we have been forced to do this because of our lack of capital. For this reason we have had to work long hours. Many nights we have not quit working until 11 or 12 o’clock at night.

Actually, we should have had at least $10,000 to start this work, but we began with almost nothing. We had to borrow 250 of the 300 dollars that we needed for a down payment on a microfilm camera.

When we found that it was possible to make masters to print from a microfilm, we looked at an “offset” printing press. Since the price was almost $2,000, we were rather reluctant to buy it. We decided that if our income tax refund came the next day we would use it for a down payment. The next day the refund arrived in the mail, and this was the beginning of a long uphill battle. But even though the work has been hard and the hours long, we feel that our time has been well invested. One man who lives in California wrote us a letter in which he stated:

This is to compliment you on your outstanding and interesting work and also the excellent Salt Lake City Messenger.

Another man, who lives in Utah, wrote:

Keep up the work. Your efforts are the most inspiring and noble thing I have yet encountered.

Whether Modern Microfilm continues or not, we feel that our time has been well spent.
In the third article Wallace Turner stated: "live." (to have less importance in modern society than they did in pioneer days.

Another is the constant round of religious activities that seem are unable to reconcile their learning with their religion.

members of the L.D.S. Church. It is a fundamental reason given by many for their decision to stop attending church.

However, there are many others who equally oppose the church practice but who stay to continue the fight to force some change. One of these is Dr. Sterling McMurrin, provost of the University of Utah. . . .

Dr. J. D. Williams, professor of political science at the University of Utah, is another who objects to the church's practice on Negroes. He is a member of a stake council and has been a bishop, the chief officer of an L.D.S. ward . . . .

For some in the community of Mormons, the change is inevitable. But it is generally considered that it will not be made at one stroke but will come gradually.

The church moves slightly toward the Negro all the time. Proselyting is heavy now in Brazil, where many persons of mixed Negro blood live and where many such have undoubtedly been taken into the priesthood.

However, sometimes the church missionaries have been required to go to new priests and tell them they no longer may perform their priestly function—that research has shown they have Negro ancestry. Orders for this come from Salt Lake City.

The church will identify only one Negro who was ever a priest. He was Elijah Abel, an undertaker in Nauvoo, Ill.—and a good friend of Joseph Smith, the founder.

In the extensive Mormon records there is a statement made in 1879 by Zebedee Coltrin, the white Saint who said it was he who annointed Mr. Joseph Smith, the founder.

Joseph Smith's Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar suppressed for 130 years now comes to light. This document proves that Joseph Smith did not understand ancient Egyptian and that the Book of Abraham was a work of his imagination!

In the year 1835 the Mormon people purchased some Egyptian mummies and rolls of papyrus. Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, made this statement concerning the papyrus:

...I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt, etc., —a more full account of which will appear in its place, as I proceed to examine or unfold them. Truly we can say, the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236)

The Book of Abraham was published in 1842 and is now found as a part of the Pearl of Great Price (one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church).

Unfortunately, the original papyrus roll from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham was lost. Joseph Smith did, however, include three drawings in his Book of Abraham, and also gave a translation of much of the material which appeared on these drawings.

In the year 1912 F. S. Spaulding sent the facsimiles from the Pearl of Great Price to a number of the most noted Egyptologists. These Egyptologists examined the facsimiles and Joseph Smith's interpretation of them and declared that his interpretation was fraudulent. Letters from these Egyptologists are published in the book, Joseph Smith, Jr., as a translator, 1912, by F. S. Spaulding, D.D. On page 23 of his book F. S. Spaulding reproduces a letter from Dr. A. H. Sayce of Oxford, England. In this letter Dr. Sayce stated:

It is difficult to deal seriously with Joseph Smith's impudent fraud...Smith has turned the Goddess into a King and Osiris into Abraham.

Dr. W. M. Flinders Petrie of the London University stated:

To any one with knowledge of the large class of funeral documents to which these belong, the attempts to guess a meaning for them, in the professed explanations, are too absurd to be noticed. It may be safely said that there is not one single word that is true in these explanations. ...None but the ignorant could possibly be imposed on by such ludicrous blunders. (Joseph Smith, Jr., as a translator, page 24)

Dr. Arthur C. Mace, Asst. Curator, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, Dept. of Egyptian Art, stated:

I return herewith, ... the "Pearl of Great Price." The "Book of Abraham," it is hardly necessary to say, is a pure fabrication...Joseph Smith's interpretation of these cuts is a Farrago of nonsense from the beginning to end. Egyptian characters can now be read almost as easily as Greek, and five minutes' study in an Egyptian gallery of any museum should be enough to convince any educated man of the clumsiness of the imposture. (Joseph Smith, Jr., as a translator, page 27)

Rev. Prof. S. A. B. Mercer, Ph.D., Western Theological Seminary, Custodian Hibbard Collection, Egyptian Reproductions, stated:

3. That the author knew neither the Egyptian language nor the meaning of the most commonplace Egyptian figures; neither did any of those, whether human or Divine, who may have helped him in his interpretation, have any such knowledge. ...the explanatory notes to his fac-similes cannot be taken seriously by any scholar, as they seem to be undoubtedly the work of pure imagination. (Joseph Smith, Jr., as a translator, page 29)

The magazine section of the New York Times for December 29, 1912, carried this headline:

MUSEUM WALLS PROCLAIM FRAUD OF MORMON PROPHET

Under this headline appeared several pictures, one of which proves that the hypocephalus reproduced as Facsimile no. 2 in the Pearl of Great Price (supposed to have been drawn by Abraham) is in reality nothing but one of the "magical discs" which were placed under the head of a mummy. The picture shows a hypocephalus from the collection in the Berlin Museum which is almost identical to the one found in the Pearl of Great Price. Below is a photograph of this hypocephalus on the left side of the one found in the Pearl of Great Price.

In 1913 Dr. Samuel A. B. Mercer wrote a letter in which he claimed that Joseph Smith would not get more than zero in an examination on Egyptology:

10% SALE WILL END JUNE 30, 1966

We have decided to continue the 10% sale until June 30, 1966. The following books have sold out: Temple Mormonism, Selected Changes in the Book of Mormon, Race Problems as They Affect the Church, The Golden Bible and A Brief History of the Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Several of the other books have almost sold out. Since we do not plan to reprint many of these books, this may be your last chance to get them.

The book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? continues to be our biggest seller. We have now sold over 4,000 copies. A reader from Pennsylvania wrote us a letter in which he stated:

Some time ago you sent us...Mormonism—Shadow or Reality...we did not realize the great significance of this amazing and revealing book...That account you give, from Utah Church records, on the Manifesto, chapter 16, page 226, is terrific...This one chapter, alone, is worth the price of the book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. (Letter dated January 20, 1966)

Millennial Star

We have just finished printing volumes 6 and 7 of the Millennial Star. These volumes are photo-reprints of an early Mormon publication. We will take them to the binders as soon as we receive a sufficient number of orders. This is a very limited printing (only 250 of each volume), and they may never be reprinted. The printing in these volumes is very clear and readable, and they will be of great interest to the student of Mormonism.

Although these volumes will sell for $7.00 each in the bookstores, we will give a special price to those who will order them before June 30, 1966. We will sell these two volumes for $10.80 (this is $6.00 a volume with 10% deducted). The price for all 7 volumes will be $37.80.
ignorance of Egyptian as Smith does, could not possibly expect to get more than zero in an examination in Egyptology.

The science of Egyptology is well established as any one knows who is acquainted with the great Grammar of Erman a 3rd Ed. of which appeared in 1911.

I speak as a linguist when I say that if Smith knew Egyptian and correctly interpreted the facsimiles which you submitted to me, then I don’t know a word of Egyptian, and Erman’s Grammar is a fake, and all modern Egyptologists are deceived. (Improvement Era, vol. 16, page 615)

In the Utah Survey for September, 1913, Dr. Mercer wrote:

In the judgment of the scholarly world, therefore, Joseph Smith stands condemned of self-deception or imposition. (Utah Survey, September 1913, page 36)

Time magazine, November 3, 1952, recognized Samuel A. B. Mercer’s work in the Egyptian language:

Born the very year that the pyramids were discovered, soft-spoken Samuel Mercer has spent a lifetime studying ancient languages. He has specialized in cuneiform and hieroglyphics, has compiled grammars in Assyrian, Ethiopic and Egyptian, written a definitive study of the tablets of Tell el-Amarna, been professor of Semitic languages and Egyptology at the University of Toronto. Since 1946 he has devoted his full time and energies to working on the pyramid texts. (Time, November 3, 1952, page 66)

After reading this article LaMar Petersen wrote a letter to Dr. Mercer in which he stated:

Recently at the Salt Lake Public Library I read your analysis of the Book of Abraham controversy in the Utah Survey Magazine for September 1913. Imagine my surprise upon laying down the Survey and picking up Time Magazine for November 3, 1952 to find the article on page 66 telling of your latest work in the translation of Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Would you mind telling me if in the intervening thirty-nine years since 1913 you have altered your opinion in any way concerning Joseph Smith’s purported translation of the facsimiles appearing in the Book of Abraham? (Letter by LaMar Petersen to Dr. Mercer, December 16, 1952)

In a letter dated February 19, 1953, [copy of the letter in next column] Dr. Mercer replied that he had not changed his mind concerning Joseph Smith’s purported translation:

I do indeed remember my work on the “Book of Abraham,” although it is many years now since I have had occasion to think much about it, although I am sure that my views on the subject have not changed, because the question of translation was so clear-cut. (Letter by Dr. Samuel A.B. Mercer to LaMar Petersen, February 19, 1953)

Marvin Cowan, a Baptist missionary working among the Mormons, was told by different Mormons that the pamphlet by F. S. Spaulding was out-dated and that the Egyptologists today would probably give a different opinion concerning Joseph Smith's translation. After obtaining the names of prominent Egyptologists from the Smithsonian Institute, he sent them the facsimiles from the Pearl of Great Price along with a letter in which he asked if the Egyptian language was “completely decipherable,” also if the facsimiles enclosed were “true Egyptian writing or characters?” He also asked if Joseph’s explanations were “true interpretations of the pictures if they are Egyptian” and if the explanations are incorrect, “what do the three pictures mean?”

To date he has received two replies. In a letter dated March 16, 1966, John A. Wilson, Prof. of Egyptology at the University of Chicago, stated:

We have had previous occasion to comment on the illustrations in Joseph Smith, “The Pearl of Great Price.” Two or three documents are in question as the two oblong illustrations show pictures from the Egyptian Book of the Dead. Whether this is one papyrus or two is immaterial. In illustration No. 1 the god Anubis is preparing a mummified body on a bed. The head of the god has been miscopied as human and should be that of a jackal. Beside the head of the mummy there is a flying bird which represents the Egyptian’s soul. Under the bed there are four jars into which the soft inner parts of the body were placed by the ancient Egyptians. Figure 3 is even more common, showing the dead Egyptian led into the presence of the god Osiris for judgment as to his moral character in life. In these the hieroglyphs have been very sketchily copied, and probably could have been read on the original.

Figure 2 is a round disk made of cloth and jesso to be placed under the head of a mummy in the late period of Egyptian culture (after 900 B.C.). It shows the scenes customarily on such magical protection for the dead. In this the hieroglyphs can in part be checked and do correspond to those on such pieces as known in various museums. In fact the name of the dead appears as the same as that of Shishak in the Bible.

From the standpoint of the Egyptologist the explanations given with these illustrations are incorrect. The Egyptian language on such documents is decipherable and has appeared in translation in various books. If these copies were more accurate, one could probably read connected texts from them. (Letter from Prof. John A. Wilson, University of Chicago, March 16, 1966)

In another letter dated March 22, 1966, Richard A. Parker, of the Dept. of Egyptology, Brown University, stated:

To answer your questions: (1) The ancient Egyptian language can be called completely decipherable. There are some words in the vocabulary whose specific meaning is still undetermined but there are very few whose general meaning remains uncertain. We can read almost any text with a high degree of confidence.

(2) (a) The pictures you sent me are based upon Egyptian originals but are poor or distorted copies. Many of the hieroglyphs are recognizable but so many others have been so poorly copied that the illustrations cannot be read. (b) The explanations are completely wrong insofar as any interpretation of the Egyptian original is concerned. (c) Number 1 is an altered copy of a well-known scene of the dead god Osiris on his bier with a jackal-god Anubis acting as his embalmer. The four jars beneath the couch are four canopic jars with the heads of a human, baboon, jackal and falcon. The bird over Osiris is a ba or soul-bird. There are many variation of this scene in Egyptian monuments.

Number 2 is what we call a hypocephalus with scene and extracts from chapters of the Book of the Dead. It was placed on the mummy and buried with it. There are many examples of these.

Number 3 is a poor copy from a scene from some funerary papyrus in which the dead person is conducted by the goddess of truth and another unknown figure into the presence of Osiris seated on his throne with presumably Isis standing behind him. The hieroglyphs are so badly copied that nothing can be made out but this also is a very common scene.

JOSEPH SMITH’S EGYPTIAN ALPHABET

For 130 years the Mormon Church has suppressed a document which absolutely proves that Joseph Smith did not understand the Egyptian language. This document is known as the “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar.” In the month of July, 1835, Joseph Smith recorded the following in the History of the Church:

The remainder of this month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham, and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian languages as practiced by the ancients. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 238)

After Joseph Smith’s death the “Egyptian Alphabet” was brought to Utah. Little was known about the “Egyptian Alphabet” until the year 1935. James R. Clark, of the Brigham Young University, stated:

Your author was from 1932 to 1936 a student of Dr. Sperry’s at Brigham Young University and was in “on the ground floor” of this research with Dr. Sperry. This included our “discovery,” with the assistance of A. William Lund, assistant Church Historian, in February, 1935 of Joseph Smith’s translation of Abraham’s Alphabet and Grammar to accompany his (Abraham’s) record which we discussed in Chapter 8. (The Story of the Pearl of Great Price, by James R. Clark, page 156)

Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of the Brigham Young University, made this statement concerning the “Egyptian Alphabet”:

I went up to the Church of Historian’s office and lo and behold we found this old Egyptian grammar in the archives of the Church. . . . I am amazed even to this day how we managed to persuade the Church authorities to let us bring the Egyptian grammar down here to the B.Y.U. to have Dr. Hales photograph it for us. Here is the book. You will notice it says, “Egyptian Alphabet.” (Pearl of Great Price Conference, December 10, 1960, page 7 of 1964 ed.)

Dr. Sperry anticipated that the “Egyptian Alphabet” would help the Mormon Church to “answer more specifically the accusations that had been made by the Egyptologists who had made their pronouncements upon the material supplied by the Reverend Mr. Spaulding of Salt Lake City.” Instead of helping the Mormon leaders to answer the “accusations” made by the Egyptologist, the “Egyptian Alphabet” has turned out to be a source of embarrassment for them. James R. Clark stated that he was not in favor of submitting the “Egyptian Alphabet” to scholars:

Many people have asked me, “Well, why don’t they submit the grammar and alphabet to scholars?” Well, my answer is this, that the Prophet didn’t complete it. They have already disagreed with him, most of the scholars, on his translation. I’m wondering if there would be any change in their approach to it now to what it has been, and so I’m not personally in favor of submitting it. . . . I’m not in favor of re-opening the question. I’m in favor of doing what we’ve done with the Book of Mormon. Let the thing keep rolling and depend on our testimonies of the gospel. (Prophets and Problems of the Pearl of Great Price, B.Y.U., page 75)

Although the Mormon Church Historian’s Office has the original document and also a microfilm copy, members of the Mormon Church have been required to get special permission from Joseph Fielding Smith, Church Historian, to even see the microfilm. In one instance they even denied that they had such a document.

On December 10, 1960, Sidney B. Sperry was asked if the “Egyptian Alphabet” could be published:

Question: Why not publish the Egyptian grammar?
Answer: Well, I do not know whether the Church authorities would let us do it now or not. (Pearl of Great Price Conference, B.Y.U., page 9 of 1964 ed.)

Although the Mormon leaders have done their best to prevent it, microfilm copies of the “Egyptian Alphabet” have leaked out of their control. A copy of this film was sent to the British Museum. In a letter dated December 22, 1965, I. E. S. Edwards, Keeper of Dept. of Egyptian Antiquities, British Museum, made this statement concerning the “Egyptian Alphabet”:

I am writing rather belatedly to acknowledge the receipt of the film of the Mormon documents which you sent me recently.

I have looked at all the documents and I can only say that they reinforce, in my view, the opinion which I expressed in my letter to you of 11th November. The commentary, such as it is, shows that the writer could not possibly have understood ancient Egyptian. They simply do not deserve serious study.

Thus we see that the “Egyptian Alphabet” proves that Joseph Smith did not understand Egyptian and that the Book of Abraham is a work of his own imagination. We feel that a person does not have to be an Egyptologist to see that Joseph Smith’s “Egyptian Alphabet” is not authentic. For instance; a person has only to compare the Egyptian system of counting as found in the Encyclopaedia Britannica Junior, 1953 ed., page 350, with Joseph Smith’s purported system of counting found on page “G” of the “Egyptian Alphabet.” The real system of Egyptian counting does not resemble the system we use in America today, but Joseph Smith’s purported system looks almost like our own.

You will notice that in Joseph Smith’s system the numbers 1, 4, 5, 7 and 8 are almost identical to our numbers. The number 9 looks like our 9 written backwards. The number 10 looks like our 10 except that it is written backwards with a small cross through the one. Below is an actual photograph of part of Joseph Smith’s purported system of Egyptian counting:
Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of the B.Y.U., admits that Joseph Smith’s system is not the conventional system of Egyptian counting:

Now, I might point out that this Egyptian counting shows that we are not dealing with Egyptian in the conventional sense. For example, here, counting from one up to ten. (Dr. Sperry counts, reading from the book the Egyptian words.) Now that counting, so far as I am aware, is not used in conventional Egyptian. (Pearl of Great Price Conference, B.Y.U., page 8 of 1964 ed.)

Included in the “Egyptian Alphabet” are photographs of the original manuscript of the Book of Abraham. This manuscript contains the text for the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham 1:4 to 2:6. These photographs are very revealing for they show how many English words were translated from each character. In looking over the characters we find that in one instance one set of characters makes 71 words in English, another set makes 170, and still another set makes 234 words. One simple looking character makes 76 words in the Book of Abraham. Below is a photograph of this character set to the side of the words it makes in the Book of Abraham 1:13 and 14.

13 It was made after the form of a bedstead, such as was had among the Chaldeans, and it stood before the gods of Elkenah, Libnah, Mahmackrah, Korash, and also a god like unto that of Pharaoh, king of Egypt.
14 That you may have an un-derstanding of these gods, I have given you the fashion of them in the figures at the beginning, which manner of figures is called by the Chaldeans Rahleenos, which signifies hieroglyphics.

Notice that the purported Egyptian character is not much more complex than our letter E, yet it makes 76 words in English. These 76 words are composed of 334 letters. Now, it is really possible to imagine that one character (almost as simple as the English letter E) could be translated to make 76 words containing 334 letters?

Below is an actual photo of the Book of Abraham manuscript. Notice the large amount of English words which come from the small number of Egyptian characters. This is published in the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham 1:29-31.

A Mormon, who had done missionary work in the Mormon Church and was very interested in several languages, told us that when he saw the Book of Abraham manuscript and the number of words that were translated from each character, it absolutely destroyed his faith in Joseph Smith’s work as a translator. From then on he knew that the Book of Abraham was a fraud.

EGYPTIAN ALPHABET NOW AVAILABLE

We are now happy to announce that we have printed Joseph Smith’s “Egyptian Alphabet” and that it is now available to the general public. This document not only contains Joseph Smith’s purported translation of many Egyptian characters, the purported system of Egyptian counting, part of the Book of Abraham manuscript, but also an Egyptian drawing which Oliver Cowdery called “one of the greatest representations I have ever seen upon paper, or a writing substance.” Oliver Cowdery stated that this drawing was taken from the papyrus roll known as the “Book of Joseph.” Also included is a photograph of an actual piece of papyrus which may be part of the “Book of Abraham” or the “Book of Joseph,” and a drawing of the hypocephalus reproduced as Facsimile No. 2 in the Pearl of Great Price. This drawing is different in many respects from the printed version.

We feel that this document will absolutely prove that Mormonism is false.

Bible Study

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome.

With my whole heart have I sought thee:
O let me not wander from thy commandments.
Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee.

20% SALE ON ALL BOOKS

We were planning on ending the 10% sale on June 30th and going back to the regular prices. Unfortunately, however, things have taken a turn for the worse. We had arranged with a loan company for a loan of $1,300. We had agreed with them on the terms and everything was set up, but at the last minute they changed the terms making them so oppressive that we could not sign the contract. Since the majority of people in Utah are opposed to our work, we do not know where to go to borrow money.

While we feel that money could wisely be invested in our company, many of the people here would like to see our company fold. Since we do not know of any bank which is in favor of our work we feel that it is almost futile for us to try to borrow money in this city.

(Perhaps some of our customers might be interested in investing in our company. We would be willing to sign a promissory note and pay 8 percent interest. For instance, on a loan of $1,000 we could make a monthly payment of $48.34 for two years. This would give the investor $160 in interest at the end of that period. The more capital we have at this time the greater will be our chances of success. If you are interested in investing in our company at these terms write to us and we will make the necessary arrangements.)

We are very low on capital at the present time, and while we do not fear bankruptcy, we are rather concerned that one of us will have to hold an outside job. This would greatly reduce the amount of literature we could turn out. We have been working on a book for two years which, we believe, will be one of the most revealing books ever written on the subject of Mormonism. We hope to have this book out before too long, but if one of us has to get a regular job it will cause a long delay. Since we feel that this is by far the most important work we have yet attempted, we have decided to have a 20% sale on all of our books. We hope by this means to bring in enough money to finish this book soon.

The 10% sale which we had earlier in the year was a tremendous success and we have been able to continue full time up to the present time. We want to thank those who helped us at that time. If the 20% sale is a success we will be able to pay off most of our equipment and bring out the new book in a few months.

Remember we do not plan to reprint many of the books on our list. This may be your last chance to get them! With a 20% reduction in price this is the time to get those books you have been thinking about.

A special price list is enclosed which shows the price of each book with the 20% discount already deducted.

Although this sale will not end until August 31, 1966, it would be to your advantage to place your order early to insure getting the books of your choice.

NEW BOOK

David Brewer has just completed his thesis, “Utah Elites and Utah Racial Norms.” This thesis has been accepted by the University of Utah in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

This important study of the Negroes’ chances of obtaining equality in Utah is very revealing. David Brewer shows very plainly that the “Mormon church, which prevails in Utah, does not accord religious equality to Negroes” (page 160).

Dr. Brewer interviewed a number of the General Authorities of the Mormon church and found most of them “strongly opposed” to civil rights for the Negro. He also found that they were opposed to any change in the church’s Negro policy (a policy which prohibits Negroes from holding the Priesthood).

SPECIAL PRICE $3.96

This book will sell for $4.95 in the bookstores, but if ordered from us during this 20% sale the price will be $3.96. A MUST for your library.

A WORK OF THE IMAGINATION

In the April 1966 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we announced that we had printed a document entitled “Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet & Grammar.” This document was suppressed by the Mormon Church for 130 years because it proves that Joseph Smith did not understand ancient Egyptian and that his Book of Abraham was a work of his own imagination.

I. E. S. Edwards, Keeper of the Dept. of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, examined a microfilm copy of the original document, and in a letter dated December 22, 1965, said that “The writer could not possibly have understood ancient Egyptian.” Some time later a gift copy of the printed document was sent to him in a letter dated June 9, 1966, he acknowledged receipt of the document and again denounced Joseph Smith’s work as fraudulent. Below is a photo of that letter.

Dear Sir,

It was very kind of you to send me a copy of Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar which has been the subject of previous correspondence between us.

Perhaps it is needless to say that the book is largely a work of imagination and lacking in any kind of scientific value. One of the plates does not even contain ancient Egyptian writing but Arabic. The whole document reminds me of the writings of psychic practitioners who are sometimes sent to me.

I shall place it in our main library where it may be useful for reference.

Yours truly,

I. E. S. Edwards

Bible Study

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome.

For I am not ashamed of the gospel. I see it as the very power of God working for the salvation of everyone who believes it, both Jew and Greek. I see in it God’s plan for imparting righteousness to men, a process begun and continued by their faith.

(Romans 1:16-17 — J. B. Phillips translation)
TIMES AND SEASONS

While this sale lasts you can buy a complete set of the Times and Seasons for $30.00. After this sale is over if there are any copies of the Times and Seasons left we plan to raise the price to $47.50 a set. Be sure to order your set now. We do not plan on reprinting these volumes.

STILL WAITING

Many of our customers have been waiting to receive bound books. The binder has informed us that he ran out of black buckram used in the binding operation but will receive more soon. He plans to have the books done in a week or two. We are sorry for the delay.

?? ? CAN YOU HELP US ?? ?

We are doing research concerning the “Book of Joseph” and Oliver Cowdery’s “Defense.” We wonder if any of our readers have information that would help us with these matters. We are very interested in knowing if Wilford Wood is the man who turned the manuscript of the “Book of Joseph” over to the Church, and how can the authenticity of the typed copies be determined? We will keep your name confidential if you will help us with these matters.

MORMONISM—Shadow or Reality?

In an article published in the Church of God Evangel, page 8, April 18, 1966, Charles Beach, Professor of Languages, Lee College, made the following statement concerning the book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality:

> In a letter dated April 19, 1966, a man from California wrote:
> ...I ordered 30 copies of Mormonism on March 28 ... I cannot keep up with the orders now ... please send as soon as possible via fast motor freight (or whichever way is best) 100 copies of Mormonism ... I sell them 10 and 20 at a time now.
> Another man, from Utah, wrote us a letter in which he stated:
> Would you please send me one copy of the book “Mormonism.” I have read a borrowed copy and think it is probably the most informative book on Mormonism I have seen.
> The regular price for Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is $5.00 a copy, but the special price during this 20% sale is $4.00 — 2 for $7.20 — 4 for $12.00 — 10 for $24.00.

SURPRISE!!!

Imagine our surprise to see the following published in the letters to the editor, Sunday issue of the Salt Lake Tribune, June 26, 1966.

Books on Church Recommended

Editor, Tribune: This is in response to L. M. Montgomery’s letter of June 21, headed “Discrimination in Hiring.” Mr. Armstrong wanted to know what is an “Upstanding LDS Man.” I suggest he read “Mormonism,” by Gerald Tanner, and “Latter-Day Saints in the Modern Day World,” by William J. Whalen.

PAT HAMMAR

Kearns, Utah

Is the Salt Lake Tribune becoming more liberal or was this printed by mistake? It should be remembered that this is the same paper that refused our ad on the Book of Commandments because they said it was too controversial!!!

MYTH - MAKERS

Dr. Hugh Nibley has published a book entitled, The Myth Makers in which he states that “the whole structure of anti-Mormon scholarship rests on trumped-up evidence ... it is high time to take a new look at a pack of story-tellers who have been getting away with too much for too long” (The Myth Makers, Foreword).

While this may be true of some anti-Mormon books, the Mormon leaders themselves have been responsible for a great deal of myth-making. For years we have claimed that they changed the history and suppressed important documents; now one of their own members admits that this is the case. Frances Lee Menlove, a Mormon psychologist, wrote the following in an article for Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought:

But the story of Joseph Smith, the early Church, the hegira across the plains, and the consequent establishment of Zion is more than just history. It is the story of God directing His People to a new Dispensation. Perhaps because the history is so fraught with theological significance, it has been smoothed and whittled down, a wrinkle removed here and a sharp edge there. In many ways it has assumed the character of a myth. That these courageous and inspired men shared the shortcomings of all men cannot be seriously doubted. That the Saints were not perfect nor their leaders without error is evident to anyone who cares to read the original records of the Church. But the myths and the Myth-Making persist. Striking evidence for this is found in the fact that currently one of the most successful anti-Mormon proselytising techniques is merely to bring to light obscure or suppressed historical documents. Reading these historical documents arouses a considerable amount of incredulity, concern, and disenchantment among Mormons under the spell of this mythological view of history. That individuals find these bits and pieces of history so shocking and faith-shattering is at once the mael of fundamentalistic heresies and an indictment of the quasi-suppression of historical reality which propagates the one-sided view of Mormon history.

The relevance of this to honesty is obvious. The net result of mythologizing our history is that the hard truth is concealed. It is deception to select only congenial facts or to twist their meaning so that error or delusion is preserved or pretend that the Church exists now and has existed in a vacuum, uninfluenced by cultural values, passing fashions, and political ideologies.

There are other temptations to public dishonesty in the Church, temptations to use pretense and distortion to forward the work of the Church. This is the dishonesty of the missionary who presents only those facts or arguments which tend to support his purpose or who takes a scripture out of context or distorts its meaning a little to add to the evidence marshalled for the point he is making. Invoking a higher law or greater truth can also be a form of dishonesty. This occurs when someone’s views are suppressed or historical manuscripts censored, not because they are false but because they might cause dissension or disturb the faithful.

... Another motive behind some kinds of public dishonesty is the belief that the naked truth would be harmful to the simple believer. The assumption here is simply that the believer remains better off with his delusion intact, that faith suffers when it bumps into reality. The reasoning of those who distort or suppress reality or alter historical manuscripts to protect the delusions of the simple believer is similar to that of the man who murders a child to protect him from a violent world. (Dialogue, “The Challenge of Honesty,” Spring 1966, pages 49-50)

EMBARRASSING?

Ralph W. Hansen (the man who refused us photocopies when working as manuscript librarian of the B.Y.U.) has written the following concerning Modern Microfilm Co. in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1966, page 154:

> Microfilms, Xerox and other forms of photo-duplication have made possible inexpensive reproductions of out-of-print or rare books and newspapers. As far as the L.D.S. Church is concerned, such photo-publications are a mixed blessing. Gerald Tanner of Modern Microfilms (Salt Lake City, Utah) has used photo-publications to reproduce early Church and anti-Church works in wholesale lots. Mr. Tanner’s object is to embarrass the Church to which he at one time gave allegiance. His reproductions are often as weak as his motives for doing them.
Orson Pratt’s Troubles

Orson Pratt was ordained an Apostle in the Mormon Church on April 26, 1835. Because of his many writings, speeches and missionary work, Orson Pratt has been referred to as the “St. Paul of Mormonism.” In the year 1874 he was appointed as Church Historian. He died on October 3, 1881. Although Orson Pratt is recognized as one of the most influential early Mormon leaders, he had some serious problems with the other leaders.

One of Orson Pratt’s biggest problems was over the doctrine of polygamy. The Mormon writer Ivan J. Barrett stated:

His most trying difficulty was over the introduction of plural marriage, and yet when he fully understood it he became its foremost advocate. He arrived home from England in July 1841, and had not been informed by the Prophet or any Church official that plural marriages were being contracted. Rumors and his wife’s accusation of the Prophet of God wanting to take her (Orson’s wife) as his spiritual wife, shocked and affected the mind of Orson Pratt for over one year estranging him from the Prophet Joseph Smith. He was so agitated by what he had heard that at times he contemplated suicide. (More Remarkable Stories of How We Got the Revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, by Ivan J. Barrett, Extension Publications, Brigham Young University, page 40)

The Mormon writer T. Edgar Lyon stated:

At the time Orson Pratt returned to Nauvoo . . . he had not been informed . . . that plural marriages were being contracted. When he heard the rumors afloat in the city, he was naturally astonished, but when his wife told him that during his absence, Joseph Smith had attempted to seduce her, he was greatly agitated. (Thomas Edgar Lyon, “Orson Pratt—Early Mormon Leader,” M.A. Thesis University of Chicago, June, 1932, pages 26 of typed copy)

On page 28 of the same thesis, T. Edgar Lyon stated:

The Mormon writer T. Edgar Lyon gave us this information:

Ebenzer Robinson, an associate editor of the Times and Seasons, said Pratt was found five miles below Nauvoo, in a state of frenzy, sitting on the bank of the Mississippi River.

His fellow Apostles then took up his case and endeavored to win back his allegiance to the Prophet. Brigham Young’s Journal has this entry, for August 8, 1842:

On July 15, 1842, Orson Pratt was reported as “missing.” The following is recorded in Joseph Smith’s history:

Friday, 15 — It was reported early in the morning that Elder Orson Pratt was missing. I caused the Temple hands and the principal men of the city to make search for him. After which, a meeting was called at the Grove, and I gave the public a general outline of John C. Bennett’s conduct. (History of the Church, vol. 5, pages 60-61)

Under the date of August 29, 1842, Joseph Smith wrote:

Orson Pratt has attempted to destroy himself, and caused almost all the city to go in search of him . . . . And as to all that Orson Pratt, Sidney Rigdon, or George W. Robinson can do to prevent me, I can kick them off my heels, as many as you can name; I know what will become of them. . . . to the apostates and enemies, I will give a lashing every opportunity, and I will curse them. (History of the Church, vol. 5, pages 138-139)

Salt Lake City Messenger Issue 9

Assisted by Elders H. C. Kimball and Geo. A. Smith, I spent several days laboring with Orson Pratt, whose mind became so darkened by the influence and statements of his wife, that he came out in rebellion against Joseph, refusing to believe his testimony or obey his counsel. He said he would believe his wife in preference to the Prophet. Joseph told him if he did believe his wife and follow her suggestions, he would go to hell.

But Pratt was not convinced, even though the Prophet had threatened him with hell and on August 20th, Brigham Young recorded: “. . . Brother Orson Pratt was cut off from the Church.” The notice of his excommunication was not given the usual widespread publicity, however, and he continued to reside in Nauvoo, again occupied with teaching duties.

A meeting of citizens of Nauvoo was held July 22, 1842, and Joseph Smith said that “The object of the meeting was to correct the public mind relative to false reports put in circulation by Bennett and others, . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 70). A resolution was passed by the assembly which stated that Joseph Smith was a good, moral and virtuous man. Joseph Smith’s history, as it is published today, assures us that this resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote:

This resolution was adopted unanimously by the numerous assembly. (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 70)

In doing research on Joseph Smith’s history, however, we found that the word “unanimously” was interpolated into the text, and that it did not appear in Joseph Smith’s history as it was first published in the Millennial Star. In the Millennial Star this statement read a follows:

. . . which resolution was adopted by the numerous assembly. (Millennial Star, vol. 19, page 615)

Further research in the Mormon newspaper, The Wasp, has revealed the fact that the Mormon leaders made this change to cover up the fact that Orson Pratt and one or two others voted against the resolution. In the July 23, 1842, issue of The Wasp we read as follows:

Resolved — That, having heard that John C. Bennett was circulating many base falsehoods respecting . . . Joseph Smith, we do hereby manifest to the world that so far as we are acquainted with Joseph Smith we know him to be a good, moral, virtuous, peaceable and patriotic man, . . .

A vote was then called and the resolution adopted by a large concourse of citizens, numbering somewhere about a thousand men. Two or three, voted in the negative.

Elder Orson Pratt then rose and spoke at some length in explanation of his negative vote. (The Wasp, July 23, 1842, page 3)

Orson Pratt and his wife later returned to the church. According to John J. Stewart, Orson Pratt “became chief spokesman for the Church in defense of the principle of plural marriage” (Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, page 180, footnote 21). His wife, on the other hand, became a bitter enemy to polygamy. According to T. Edgar Lyon, Orson Pratt was not able to convince her that polygamy was from God.

In 1886, over forty years after the events in Nauvoo, Sarah Pratt still maintained that Joseph Smith had tried to seduce her:

It was in this way that I became acquainted with Dr. John C. Bennett. When my husband went to England as a missionary, he got the promise from Joseph that I should receive provisions from the tithing-house. Shortly afterward Joseph made his propositions to me and they enraged me so that I refused to accept any help from the tithing house or from the bishop. Having been always very clever and very busy with my needle, I began to take in sewing for the support of myself and children, and succeeded soon in making myself independent. When Bennett came to Nauvoo Joseph brought him to my house, stating that Bennett wanted some sewing done, and that I should do it for the doctor. I assented and Bennett gave me a great deal of work to do. He knew that Joseph had his plans set on me; Joseph made no secret of them before Bennett, and went so far in his impudence as to make propositions to me in the presence of Bennett, his bosom friend.

You should bear in mind that Joseph did not think of a marriage or sealing ceremony for many years. He used to state to his intended victims, as he did to me: “God does not care if we have a good time, if only other people do not know it.” He only introduced a marriage ceremony when he had found out that he could not get certain women without it. I think Louisa Beeman was the first case of this kind. If any woman, like me, opposed his wishes, he used to say: “Be silent, or I shall ruin your character. My character must be sustained in the interest of the church.” (Mormon Portraits, by Dr. W. Wyl, 1886 ed., pages 61-62)

Further information concerning this matter will be found in a forthcoming book entitled Joseph Smith and Polygamy, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner.

T. Edgar Lyon claims that this incident concerning polygamy destroyed Orson Pratt’s chances of becoming President of the Mormon Church. He claims that because of his excommunication Orson Pratt lost his seniority. T. Edgar Lyon states that “Had he not lost his seniority, at the death of Brigham Young in 1877, he would have been next in line for the presidency of the Church” (Thesis on Orson Pratt, page 30, footnote 2). Strange as it may seem, however, Joseph Smith’s history, as it was originally published, seems to show that Orson Pratt was not legally cut off and that he was restored to his former “standing” in the quorum of the Twelve. When Joseph Smith’s history was later reprinted three very important changes were made concerning Orson Pratt’s restoration to the quorum of the Twelve Apostles. In Joseph Smith’s history as first published in the Millennial Star, vol. 20, page 423, we read:

I told the council that as there was not a quorum present when Orson Pratt’s case came up before them, that he was still a member—that he had not been cut off legally, and I would find some other place for Amasa Lyman, to which the council agreed.

In the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 255, this was rewritten to read a follows:

I told the quorum: you may receive Orson back into the quorum of the Twelve and I can take Amasa into the First Presidency.

In the Millennial Star, vol. 20, page 423, Joseph Smith said:

. . . ordaining Orson Pratt to his former office and standing in the quorum of the Twelve.

When this was reprinted in the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 256, two words were deleted:

. . . ordaining Orson Pratt to his former office in the quorum of the Twelve.

In the Millennial Star, vol. 20, page 518, Joseph Smith said:

. . . I had restored Orson Pratt to his former standing in the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, . . .

In the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 264, this has been changed to read:

. . . I had restored Orson Pratt to the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, . . .

It would appear from the way Joseph Smith’s history was first printed that Orson Pratt did not lose his seniority and that he should have become president of the Mormon Church. The changes in Joseph Smith’s history evidently were made to cover up this fact. John Taylor, who became the third president of the Mormon Church, was not ordained to the Apostleship until December 19, 1838. Orson Pratt had been ordained to that office more than three years before; therefore, if he was restored to his “former standing in the quorum of the Twelve Apostles,” he should have been the third president of the Mormon Church.

Although Orson Pratt was finally able to accept the doctrine of plural marriage, he again ran into trouble when Brigham Young announced the Adam-God doctrine. On April 9, 1852, Brigham Young stated:
Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible Study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone — there are no obligations connected with attendance. The scripture lesson is given by Sandra Tanner.

We feel that the answers to life’s problems can be found in the Bible if we are willing to study it and apply its teachings to our lives. We have found the words of the Psalmist to be true:

Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. (Psalm 16:11)

We agree with John, who wrote:

Dear friends, let us love one another, because love if from God. Everyone who loves is a child of God and knows God, but the unloving know nothing of God. For God is love and his love was disclosed to us in this, that he sent his only Son into the world to bring us life. The love I speak of is not our love for God, but the love he showed to us in sending his Son as the remedy for the defilement of our sins. If God thus loved us, dear friends, we in turn are bound to love one another. Though God has never been seen by any man, God himself dwells in us if we love one another: his love is brought to perfection within us. (1 John 4:9-12, New English Bible translation)

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the Arch-angel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken—he is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 50)

Joseph Lee Robinson, in his journal and autobiography (this is the journal that the apostle LeGrand Richards tried to prevent us from seeing), stated that he feared that apostle Orson Pratt would apostatize because of this doctrine:

Oct. 6th attend Conference, a very interesting Conference, for at this meeting President Brigham Young said thus, that Adam and Eve, were the names of the first man and woman, of every Earth that was ever organized, and that Adam and Eve were the natural father and mother of every spirit that comes to this planet, or that receives tabernacles on this planet, consequently we are brothers and sisters, and that Adam was God, our eternal Father, this as Brother Heber remarked was letting the cat out of the Bag, and it came to pass, I believed every word . . . our Beloved Brother Orson Pratt told me he did not believe it he said he could prove by the scriptures it was not correct. I felt very sorry to hear professor, Orson Pratt say that, I feared lest he should apostatize. . . .

Orson Pratt also disagreed with Brigham Young’s doctrine that God himself continues to progress in knowledge and perfection. Brigham Young taught:

We are now, or may be, as perfect in our sphere as God and Angels are in theirs, but the greatest intelligence in existence can continually ascend to greater heights of perfection. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 93)

Wilford Woodruff stated:

God himself is increasing and progressing in knowledge, power, and dominion, and will do so, worlds without end. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 120)

Orson Pratt, however, taught that the Gods were not progressing in knowledge:

The Father and the Son do not progress in knowledge and wisdom, because they already know all things past, present, and to come. . . . Now we wish to be distinctly understood that each of these personal Gods has equal knowledge with all the rest; there are none among them that are in advance of the others in knowledge; though some may have been Gods as many millions of years, as there are particles of dust in all the universe, yet there is not one truth that such are in possession of but what every other God knows. They are all equal in knowledge, and in wisdom, and in the possession of that truth. None of these Gods are progressing in knowledge; neither can they progress in the acquirement of any truth.

98. Some have gone so far as to say that all the Gods were progressing in truth, and would continue to progress to all eternity, and that some were far in advance of others: but let us examine, for a moment, the absurdity of such a conjecture. . . . Have we any right to say that there is a boundless ocean of materials, acting under such Superior laws that none of the Gods to all ages of eternity can be able to understand them? We should like to know what Law Giver gave such superior laws? . . . This is the great absurdity, resulting from the vague conjecture that there will be an endless progression in knowledge among all the Gods. Such a conjecture is not only extremely absurd, but it is in direct opposition to what is revealed.

99. We shall now show from the revelations given through Joseph, the Seer, that God and his Son, Jesus Christ, are in possession of all knowledge, and that there is no more truth for them to learn. . . . (The Seer, pages 117-118)

Brigham Young openly differed with Orson Pratt on this issue. In a sermon delivered in the Tabernacle on January 13, 1867, Brigham Young stated:

. . . Brother Orson Pratt, has in theory, bounded the capacity of God. According to his theory, God can progress no further in knowledge and power; but the God that I serve is progressing eternally, and so are his children: they will increase to all eternity, if they are faithful. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 11, page 286)

J. M. Grant, a member of the First Presidency, made this statement concerning Orson Pratt’s teachings about the Gods:

. . . Orson Pratt lariatted out the Gods in his theory; his circle is as far as the string extends. My God is not lariatted out. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, page 126)

It is very interesting to note that the Mormon Church is still divided over this issue. Joseph Fielding Smith, who is now a member of the First Presidency, has sided with Orson Pratt, declaring that God does not progress in knowledge:

False notions about God’s progression. It seems very strange to me that members of the Church will hold to the doctrine, “God increases in knowledge as time goes on.” . . . Where has the Lord ever revealed to us that he is lacking in knowledge? That he is still learning new truth; discovering new laws that are unknown to him? I think this kind of doctrine is very dangerous. . . .

Will God destroy himself? I cannot comprehend God in his perfection having to spend time discovering laws and truth he does not know. Such a thought to me is destructive, not progressive. Should there be truth which God has not discovered, when may he discover it, and like a chemist who mixes certain elements and blows himself up, when will the Almighty find some hidden truth or law which will shatter all? Is there not a danger that some other personage may discover some greater truth than our Father knows? If such could be the case, what would become of God? (Doctrine of Salvation, vol. 1, pages 7, 8 and 10)

In volume two of Doctrine of Salvation, Joseph Fielding Smith states:

Our Father in heaven is infinite; he is perfect; he possesses all knowledge and wisdom. (Doctrine of Salvation, vol. 2, page 34)

One of Orson Pratt’s most serious disagreements with Brigham Young was over the book, Joseph Smith the Prophet. This book was written by Joseph Smith’s mother, Lucy Smith. Joseph F. Smith claimed that Orson Pratt published this book without the consent or knowledge of Brigham Young. Brigham Young evidently felt that the book was too revealing, for he ordered the first edition to be destroyed. In the Millennial Star for October 21, 1865, Lucy Smith’s book was severely condemned by the First Presidency of the Mormon Church:

Happening lately, while on a preaching trip to Cache Valley, to pick up a book which was lying on a table in the house where we were stopping, we were surprised to find that it was the book bearing the title, on the outside, of “Joseph Smith the Prophet.” . . . Our surprise at finding a copy of this work may be accounted for, by the fact of our having advertised some time ago that the book was incorrect, and that it should be gathered up and destroyed, so that no copies should be left; and, from this, we had supposed that not a single copy could be found in any of the houses of the Saints.

. . . It is sufficient to say that it is utterly unreliable as a history, as it contains many falsehoods and mistakes. We do not wish such a book to be lying on our shelves; . . . we, therefore, expect . . . every one in the Church, male and female, if they have such a book, to dispose of it so that it will never be read by any person again. If they do not, the responsibility of the evil results that may accrue from keeping it will rest upon them and not upon us . . .

Many of the Saints may not know that the book is inaccurate; but those who have been instructed respecting its character, and will still keep it on their tables, and have it in their houses as a valid and authentic history for their children to read, need rebuke. It is transmitting lies to posterity to take such a course, and we know that the curse of God will rest upon every one, after he comes to the knowledge of what is here said, who keeps these books for his children to learn and believe in lies.

We wish those who have these books to either hand them to their Bishops for them to be conveyed to the President’s or Historian’s Office, or send them themselves, that they may be disposed of; and they will please write their names in the books, with the name of the place where they reside, and if they wish to hand them over without pay in return, state so; and if they wish to get pay for them, state whether they desire it applied on Tithing, or wish the value returned in other books. (Millennial Star, vol. 27, pages 657-658)

This book was later changed and reprinted by the Mormon Church leaders, even though Joseph Smith’s mother had died. There were 2,035 words added, deleted or changed without any indication.

The Mormon leaders were evidently very upset with Orson Pratt, for they ordered other works published by him to be destroyed. In the same article as quoted above the First Presidency stated:

When we commenced this article, we did not think of extending our comments beyond the work already alluded to. We consider it our duty, however, and advisable for us to incorporate with this which we have already written, our views upon other doctrines which have been extensively published and widely received as the standard and authoritative doctrines of the church, but which are unsound. The views we allude to, and which we deem objectionable, have been published by Elder Orson Pratt . . . We do not wish incorrect and unsound doctrines to be handed down to posterity under the sanction of great names, to be received and valued by future generations as authentic and reliable, creating labor and mistakes. We do not wish such a book to pick up a book which was lying on a table in the house where we were staying, to be gathered up and destroyed, so that no copies should be left; and, from this, we had supposed that not a single copy could be found in any of the houses of the Saints.

The Seer, the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve Apostles wrote another article in which they stated:

There are great and important truths connected with the eternities of our God and with man’s existence past, present and future, which the Almighty, in his wisdom, sees fit to conceal from the children of men. The latter are evidently unprepared to receive them, and there could be no possible benefit accruing to them, at present, from their revelation. It is in this light that we view the points of doctrine which we have quoted. If they were true, we would think it unwise to have them made public as these have been. But the expounder of these points of doctrine acknowledges that he has not had any revelation from the heavens in relation to them, and we know that we have had no revelation from God respecting them, except to know that many of them are false, and that the publication of all of them is unwise and objectionable. . . . The last half of the tract entitled “The Holy Spirit,” contains excellent and conclusive arguments, and is all that could be wished; so also with many of his writings. But the Seer, The Great First Cause, the article in the Millennial Star of October 15th, and November 1, 1850, on the Holy Spirit, and the first half of the tract, also on the Holy Spirit, contain doctrines which we have felt impressed to disown, so that the Saints who now live, and who may live hereafter, may not be misled by our silence, or be left to misinterpret it. Where these objectionable works, or parts of works, are bound in volumes, or otherwise, they should be cut out and destroyed; with proper care this can be done without much, if any, injury to the volumes. (Millennial Star, vol. 27, pages 662-663)

Many members of the Mormon Church did destroy Orson Pratt’s works as their leaders asked them to do.

Quite recently a student at the Brigham Young University (the Mormon University) told us that the library at B.Y.U. had refused to give him photocopies of Orson Pratt’s “The Great First Cause.” They told him that they would give him copies of a few pages but not the entire document. They claimed that it would violate copyright restrictions. Now, as far as we have been able to determine, there was no copyright on “The Great First Cause,” and even if there had been a copyright, it would have expired more than sixty years ago. The student was aware of this fact and stated that he was leaving the B.Y.U. because of the narrow-mindedness he found at that school.

Within the Mormon Church there has been great interest in Orson Pratt’s books. Eugene Wagner has reprinted The Seer by the photo-offset method. This is a very good reproduction, bound, and is available from Modern Microfilm Co.

Fortunately, James D. Wardle has obtained copies of Orson Pratt’s other two books. These copies are complete (the controversial pamphlets “The Holy Spirit” and “The Great First Cause” have not been “cut out and destroyed”), and he has kindly consented to allow us to reproduce them.

The book, Orson Pratt’s Works, is especially interesting because it contains the discussion John Taylor had with the ministers in France, in which he denied that the Mormons believed in polygamy, although he had six wives at the time.

DIALOGUE

The new magazine, Dialogue, A Journal of Mormon Thought, appears to be a success. Last month it was given national publicity in Time Magazine. In an article entitled “For Ruffled Believers” the following appeared:

Unquestioning belief rather than critical self-examination has always been the Mormon style. Breaking with this tradition a group of young Mormon intellectuals, . . . have brought out Dialogue, . . . Dialogue has opened its pages to criticism from nonbelievers . . . it represents something so unusual in Mormonism that one church leader has ominously declared: “Dialogue can’t help but hurt the church.” Nonetheless, Dialogue’s growing subscription list now stands at more than 3,000, and its editors insist that Mormonism has nothing to fear from self-appraisal. Wallace Turner, former Pulitzer Prize winner and correspondent for the New York Times has now completed a book entitled The Mormon Establishment. This book will probably be one of the largest selling books concerning Mormonism since Fawn Brodie’s No Man Knows My History. In fact, the following statement by Fawn Brodie appears on the jacket of Wallace Turner’s book:

It is a courageous book . . . he is not afraid of attacking bigotry where he finds it, even in a highly respected and respectable church. He has cut through much of the secrecy that enshrouds the power of Mormon leadership, and exposed the structure with clarity and objectivity, as well as a perceptive regard for the overpowering impact of Mormon history on the present.

In our opinion, this book will deal a heavy blow to the foundation of the Mormon Church. While Mr. Turner is very fair with the Mormons and even goes out of his way to bestow praise where it is due, he is very critical of certain doctrine and practices, such as the Mormon doctrine concerning the Negro, the doctrine of polygamy and the interference of the Mormon leaders in politics. We feel that this book is very well written and extremely accurate.

At Modern Microfilm Company we have a very special interest in Wallace Turner’s book. In this book Wallace Turner devotes about eight pages to our work and Modern Microfilm Co. This will, no doubt, give a great boost to our work, and will probably be our greatest opportunity to get the public acquainted with our work.

Some of our readers will probably remember that Wallace Turner is the reporter who interviewed Hugh B. Brown, a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, in 1963. In this interview Hugh B. Brown was quoted as saying:

“We are in the midst of a survey looking toward the possibility of admitting Negroes,” said Hugh B. Brown, one of the two counselors serving President David O. McKay in the First Presidency of the Mormon Church.

“Believing as we do in divine revelation through the President of the church, we all await his decision,” Mr. Brown said.

Mr. Brown, a 79-year-old former attorney, said he believed that if the change were made, it would be a doctrinal revision for Mormonism of a magnitude matching the abandonment of polygamy in 1890. (New York Times, Western Edition, June 7, 1963)

After this article appeared in the New York Times, Hugh B. Brown claimed that he was misquoted. In his new book, Wallace Turner shows that Hugh B. Brown was not misquoted and that the Mormon Church’s own press representative had “approved” the quotes attributed to him (see The Mormon Establishment, pages 258-261).

In December of 1965 the New York Times ran a series of three articles concerning the Mormon Church which were written by Wallace Turner. These articles were very well written and very revealing. Although newspapers throughout the country ran these articles, the newspapers in Salt Lake City refused to print them. The Deseret News claimed that it did not print the articles because it was not a member of the Associated Press News Service. The Salt Lake Tribune could not offer this excuse, since it is a member of the Associated Press. A man in the editorial department of the Salt Lake Tribune stated that the reason they did not print these articles was that they felt that the activities of the Mormon Church were “sufficiently” covered and that there was no need to pick up these articles from the New York Times. In the January, 1966 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we told of the suppression of these articles by the newspapers in Salt Lake City. After quoting some from these articles we stated:

Although the Mormon leaders may be able to control the newspapers in Salt Lake City and keep them from printing articles such as these, we feel that the time will come when they will have to face these problems. They will not be able to keep their people in the dark forever! (Salt Lake City Messenger, January, 1966, page 4)

When we made this statement we had no idea that Wallace Turner would come out with a book on Mormonism. We know that Mr. Turner was very disappointed that the Mormon people in Salt Lake City could not read the articles he had written concerning them, but now that he has written a book there is no way that the Mormon leaders can stop their people from reading it. We feel that the time has now come when the Mormon leaders will have to face the truth. Their methods of silence and suppression are not going to be sufficient to keep their people in the dark. The light must break through, and we feel that Wallace Turner’s book will do much towards bringing light to a people who have been kept in the dark by their leaders.

Wallace Turner claims that “the most serious problem facing the LDS church today is the Negro question.” Wallace Turner “devotes two chapters to the burning issue of the Mormon doctrine on the inferiority of Negroes.” On page 244 of his book, Wallace Turner states:

So the ultimate effect of this aspect of LDS doctrine is as racist as anything asserted by the Theodore Bilbos and Robert Sheltons in the bigoted corners of the southern states . . . the LDS church actually is one of the most influential organs of racial bigotry in the United States. All the imposing list of wonderful and truly praiseworthy things about this tremendous and impressive institution help to conceal this ugly corner of its theology.

Concerning the Book of Abraham, which is the basis for the Mormon doctrine of discrimination against the Negro, Wallace Turner states:
The foundation on which this whole doctrine of Negro exclusion is based is in the clause or so in the Book of Abraham. Yet, of all the works attributed to Joseph Smith, this one is the most thoroughly denounced by the scholarly world. . . . The church has reproduced some copies of the hieroglyphics which the Prophet Joseph said he translated. The reproductions are accompanied with detailed statements of what the Prophet said the hieroglyphics show. It was almost as if the invitation were being extended to scholars to denounce the work. This they have done with gusto. . . . I am convinced by very simple direct evidence that the Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. (The Mormon Establishment, pages 232-233)

On pages 234-239 of his book, Wallace Turner gives the information which convinced him that the Book of Abraham is a “spurious translation.” Wallace Turner’s book is filled with interesting information. It has 12 chapters and 343 pages. The following are the chapter headings:

The Holy City by the Dead Sea

MORMONISM—Shadow or Reality?

In his book, The Mormon Establishment, Wallace Turner states:

The Tanners operate as the Modern Microfilm Company. They specialize in copying books and documents that are out of print, or have been suppressed in one way or another, but that bear on the history and doctrine of the LDS church. When I talked with them, they had thirty-one titles for sale. The best seller was Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? prepared by them jointly. They had sold about 3000 copies. (The Mormon Establishment, page 156)

Wallace Turner also stated:

The Tanners masterwork, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is an intricate weaving of arguments from many sources against the fundamental precept of the Saints’ doctrine—that Joseph Smith, Jr., was a prophet of God and that his production of the Book of Mormon, the revelations set down in Doctrine and Covenants, and further writings in the Pearl of Great Price represented the fruits of divine inspiration.

With the Tanners the church today finds itself faced by its own organization that does so much good throughout the world. The name of this organization is World Vision. World Vision is a nondenominational religious organization which seems to be devoted to helping the needy people of the world. World Vision supports more than 21,000 needy children in 20 countries. They send food, clothing, and medicine to needy areas throughout the world. They have just opened a new relief project in India where many people are starving to death.

We feel that many of our readers will be interested in helping an organization that does so much good throughout the world. For only $10 a month you can support an orphan (the cost is $15 a month in Viet Nam). This money pays for the food, clothing, schooling and other needs of each child. Each sponsor can exchange letters with his child (the letters are translated into English before they are forwarded to the sponsor). What a joy it is to help those who are in need, instead of spending our money for selfish reasons. For only $4 you can provide a pair of crutches for the needy in Viet Nam, or you can help to buy a wheelchair for those who have lost their legs in the conflict.

The Apostle James said:

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. (James 1:27)

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone—there are no obligations connected with attendance. The scripture lesson is given by Sandra Tanner.

We feel that the answers to life’s problems can be found in the Bible if we are willing to study it and apply its teachings to our lives.

For where envying and strife is, ther is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace. (James 3:16-18)
In the preface to his new and fascinating biography, Orrin Porter Rockwell: Man of God, Son of Thunder, Harold Schindler states:

> For those members of my church who may feel that I have wrongly opened forbidden doors, I offer these words by the late Brigham H. Roberts, assistant church historian, scholar, and member of the First Council of The Seventy:

> We need not follow our researches in any spirit of fear and trembling. We desire only to ascertain the truth; nothing but the truth will endure; and the ascertainment of the truth and the proclamation of the truth in any given case, or upon any subject, will do no harm to the work of the Lord which is itself truth. . . .

> (New Witnesses For God(Salt Lake City, 1909) vol. III, page 913)

> —Harold Schindler

> October, 1966

In writing his book on Orrin Porter Rockwell, Harold Schindler has brought to light an ugly chapter in Mormon history. Mr. Schindler does not take a Mormon point of view, neither does he take an anti-Mormon position, but looks at Orrin Porter Rockwell in a scholarly and objective manner.

On June 11, 1878, the Salt Lake Tribune stated that it was estimated Orrin Porter Rockwell had “participated in at least a hundred murders for the Church, none of which he ever divulged” (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, page 9).

The Mormon writer Nicholas Van Alfen, on the other hand states:

> He killed many men. But these cases were always in the performance of his duty as an officer. Notwithstanding the many attempts of Porter’s critics to slander him, there is not a single proof of his ever having taken a life wantonly. (Porter Rockwell—The Mormon Frontier Marshal, by Nicholas Van Alfen, 1964, page 93)

Harold Schindler does not go to either of the above extremes but instead he tries to find the real history of Mr. Rockwell. Mr. Schindler has spent many years researching documents, journals, manuscripts and rare books. The result is a book which can be relied upon.

According to Mr. Schindler’s research, Orrin Rockwell was born on June 28, 1813. He was one of the first to join the Mormon Church. In Missouri Rockwell joined the dreaded Danite band. The Mormon writer William E. Berrett states that the Danites were organized for the “purpose of plundering and murdering the enemies of the Saints” (The Restored Church, 1956 ed., page 198). He is, however, unwilling to admit the Joseph Smith had anything to do with the Danites.

Harold Schindler devotes a great deal of space to the Danite band. He quotes from journals, manuscripts, and other sources to establish the fact that the Danite band did exist and that Joseph Smith probably was responsible for its existence. On page 44 of his book, Mr. Schindler states:

> One of the great controversies surrounding the Sons of Dan concerns the question of whether or not Joseph knew and approved of its existence prior to the society’s public exposure in November, 1838. The point is relevant because if his denial of such knowledge are true, it marked the only occasion in Orrin Porter Rockwell’s life when he strayed from the dictates of the church by entering into an unauthorized doctrinal venture. His close relationship and devoted obedience to the prophet makes it inconceivable that he would have failed to inform Joseph of the Danites. Even so, the prophet’s absolute grip on the church precludes the possibility that Avard could have carried out an undertaking of such magnitude in secrecy. Finally, the argument presents itself that the prophet probably encouraged the concept, since it played a dual role of preventing a recurrence of the Kirtland rebellion by uncovering potential apostates immediately while at the same time protecting the Mormons against their Gentile enemies.

After the Mormons had been driven from Missouri by order of Lilburn W. Boggs, governor of the state, they literally hated the man. Mr. Schindler states:

> About this time Joseph angrily prophesied that Lilburn Boggs would “die by violent hands within a year.” And in a fit of pique he added that Governor Carlin would die in a ditch. (Orrin Porter Rockwell, page 72)

On May 6, 1842, an attempt was made on the life of Lilburn W. Boggs. The Mormon writer John J. Stewart stated:

> Unfortunately for Joseph, the Mormons and mankind generally, Boggs recovered despite three bullet wounds in the head and neck. (Joseph Smith—The Mormon Prophet, 1966 ed., page 171)

NEW BOOKS

ORRIN PORTER ROCKWELL; MAN OF GOD, SON OF THUNDER, by Harold Schindler. (See description of this book above.) This book is published by the University of Utah Press. The printing and art work are attractively done, and we feel that you will be proud to have it in your library. Price: $7.50

ON THE MORMON FRONTIER: The Diary of Hosea Stout, 1844-1861, edited by Juanita Brooks. Dale L. Morgan, a noted historian, states that the diary of Hosea Stout is “. . . one of the most magnificent windows upon Mormon history ever opened . . .” While Hosea Stout was a very prominent Mormon, he did not hesitate to make entries in his diary which are very embarrassing to the Mormon Church today. We feel that his journal contains proof that the Mormon leaders approved of violence and that Brigham Young taught that Adam is the only God with whom we have to do and the father of Jesus. The footnotes by Juanita Brooks are excellent. It is published by the University of Utah Press. Comes in two volumes — 769 large pages. Price: $17.50 a set.

THE MORMON ESTABLISHMENT by Wallace Turner. Mr. Turner, former Pulitzer Prize winner and correspondent for the New York Times, discusses such controversial subjects as: the anti-Negro doctrine, polygamy and Mormon interference in politics. Price: $6.00
John Whitmer, one of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, wrote a history of the Church in which he states:

As soon as the Lord gave Smith and the church favor in the eyes of the people among whom they lived, and began to prosper them and many began to gather to Nauvoo, Smith and the leaders began to exercise their hatred to those whom he called his enemies. He hired a man by the name of Porter Orrin Rockwell (who was one of the Gadianton band of whom I heretofore spoke) to go and murder a man by name of L. W. Boggs who had been elected governor by the people of the state of Missouri; but was not governor at the time Smith sent him to commit this crime. Boggs resided at independence, the place appointed for the land of Zion, yea, the New Jerusalem; so Rockwell went to Independence, and at night he went to the house of Boggs and shot him through the window; but he recovered. Rockwell was caught and put to jail, and I believe he was tried by a jury of inquest, but was not sufficient testimony to condemn him though it is a well-known fact that he was hired by Smith to kill Boggs. (John Whitmer’s History, chapter 21)

Although Harold Schindler does not definitely state that Orrin Porter Rockwell was guilty of the attempted assassination, he does bring out the fact that Rockwell was in the area and that he was using an assumed name:

Therefore, in February of 1842 when Orrin Porter Rockwell gathered up his family to visit Independence so that Luana, eight months pregnant with their fourth child, could be with her parents, Bennett, so he says, was not surprised at Joseph’s explanation that Rockwell had gone to “fulfill prophecy.” Once in Independence Rockwell set out to find work . . . Since Jackson County settlers still harbored a hatred for Mormons, Rockwell used an assumed name while in the area; he called himself Brown. (Orrin Porter Rockwell, page 73)

On page 75 and 76 of the same book, Harold Schindler states:

Outside the house a crowd had quickly gathered at first report of the murder attempt and now numbered nearly two hundred persons; one of the spectators searching the spot where the gunman had stood found traces of footprints in the mud, and in a partially-filled puddle he discovered a gun. Sheriff Reynolds studied the firearm carefully, . . . Reynolds surmised the recoil of such a heavy charge had kicked the pistol from the gun’s grasp, and failing to find it in the rain, the assassin had fled. While the sheriff mulled these thoughts in his mind, a storekeeper named Uhlinger recognized the weapon as one stolen from his shop.

“I thought the niggers had taken it, but that hired man of Ward’s—the one who used to work with the stallion—he came to in look at it just before it turned up missing!” the storekeeper said.

Grateful for a genuine lead, Reynolds began looking for the hired hand, “to ask some questions,” but the man was nowhere to be found. It was not long before the sheriff determined that Mr. Brown, the suspect, was Orrin Porter Rockwell.

On page 80 of the same book, Mr. Schindler states:

If Rockwell did fire the fateful shot, it would appear the decision was of his own making; he had no love for Boggs, and in Rockwell’s eyes the man had sinned against the church in ordering the expulsion of the Saints from Missouri. It also is possible Rockwell felt he was performing a religious duty as a member of the priesthood in fulfilling Joseph’s prophecy.

In footnote 27 on page 82, Harold Schindler states:

Much has been written of Boggs’ true feeling in regard to the attempt on his life. Mormon writers suggest the former governor had made a number of Gentile enemies, so many in fact, that to insinuate the church was to blame was typical of his bigotry. Even though the controversy over the near assassination will never be resolved, one thing can be stated as a certainty—Boggs sincerely believed his attacker was a Mormon. In 1846 when he journeyed west, he confided to his traveling companions that he understood the Saints were headed in the same direction and confessed he feared for his life because they had made an earlier attempt to kill him.

It is said that the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, promised Orrin Porter Rockwell that if he “would never cut his hair he would never die at the hands of his enemies” (Orrin Porter Rockwell—The Mormon Frontier Marshall, page 41).

At one time Joseph Smith had Orrin Porter Rockwell run a bar for him. Harold Schindler states:

Here, too, Joseph had plans. In a city where liquor was controlled by the mayor, what better business to be in than tavern-keeping? As a matter of fact, Joseph mused as he glanced at Rockwell’s shoulder-length hair, Nauvoo could also use a barbershop. If the two enterprises were combined, the operator of such an establishment would surely make money, especially since the prophet could not hope to accommodate every visitor to the city at his new Mansion House barroom. The idea appealed to Rockwell, and it suited Joseph’s plans as well. (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, page 110)

Joseph Smith’s son related the following:

About 1842, a new and larger house was built for us. . . Father proceeded to build an extensive addition running out from the south wing toward the east.

At any rate, it seemed spacious then, and a sign was put out giving it the dignified name of “The Nauvoo Mansion,” a house destined to become quite famous and interesting in its day. Mother was to be installed as landlady, and soon made a trip to Saint Louis . . .

When she returned Mother found installed in the keeping room of the hotel—that is to say, the main room where the guests assembled and where they were received upon arrival—a bar, with counter, shelves, bottles, glasses, and other paraphernalia customary for a fully-equipped tavern bar, and Porter Rockwell in charge as tender.

She was very much surprised and disturbed over this arrangement, but said nothing for a while . . . she asked me where Father was. I told her he was in the front room . . . Then she told me to go and tell him she wished to see him. I obeyed, and returned with him to the hall where Mother awaited him. “Joseph,” she asked, “what is the meaning of that bar in this house?” . . . “How does it look,” she asked, “for the spiritual head of a religious body to be keeping a hotel in which is a room fitted out as a liquor-selling establishment?”

He reminded her that all taverns had their bars at which liquor was sold or dispensed . . .

Mother’s reply came emphatically clear, though uttered quietly: “Well, Joseph, . . . I will take my children and go across to the old house and stay there, for I will not have them raised up under such conditions as this arrangement imposes upon us, nor have them mingle with the kind of men who frequent such a place. You are at liberty to make your choice; either that bar goes out of the house, or we will!”

It did not take Father long to make the choice, for he replied immediately, “Very well, Emma; I will have it removed at once”—and he did. (The Saints Herald, January 22, 1935, page 110)

After Joseph Smith’s death Orrin Porter Rockwell took another man’s wife. Harold Schindler states:

Prior to his arrest in 1843 on charges of assault on Governor Boggs, Rockwell had taken up residence in a tavern operated by Amos Davis, a Nauvoo Legion captain. It was this officer’s wife of whom Rockwell had become enamored. How long the affair had been blooming is not a matter of record, but he did acknowledge the ladies publiccy early in December of 1845. Because of his notoriety the matter did not pass unnoticed. Said The Warsaw Signal of December 10:

O. P. Rockwell—This delectable specimen of humanity, . . . the assassin of Governor Boggs, has taken to himself a wife—not his own wife, for be it remembered that he cast off the woman that law regarded as his wife long since; but he has appropriated to himself the wife of Amos Davis. It is generally the case that when a wife leave her husband to live with a seducer, they elope and settle in a place where they are not known; but there is no necessity for such a step in the Holy Nauvoo. So fashionable is it for the Heads of the church to appropriate the wives of other men to their own purposes, that it is regarded as no crime for one man to steal the companion of his neighbor and live with her in open unconfessed adultery. What a beautiful moral code is Mormonism!

... Davis did not depart from Nauvoo, a display of courage which placed him in a delicate and dangerous position, for one morning there appeared at his door the person of Mrs. Davis—in company with Rockwell. The astonished tavern keeper gawked in disbelief as his wife casually gathered together her belongings; Rockwell stood to one side and conspicuously inspected the trigger mechanism on his pistol. Scarcely had the couple closed the door on the hapless husband than word of the incident flashed through the streets of the city. (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, pages 148-149)

After Joseph Smith’s death Brigham Young became the leader of the Church. Among other things, Brigham Young is remembered for having taught that it was sometimes necessary to kill a person to save his soul. On one occasion he stated:

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, page 220)

Harold Schindler quotes Brigham Young as making this statement concerning those who did not belong to the Church:

They shall reverence and acknowledge the name of God and His priesthood, and if they set up their heads and seek to introduce iniquity into this camp and to trample on the priesthood, I swear to them, they shall never go back to tell the tale. (Orrin Porter Rockwell, page 163)

Harold Schindler tells how the Mormons murdered the Aiken Party in 1857. From the evidence which he presents, it would appear that Orrin Porter Rockwell and several others were involved in the murder of these men. On page 270 of his book, Mr. Schindler states:

The Californians had no way of knowing that a messenger had been dispatched by the wagonmaster alerting the Nauvoo Legion to their presence. Within hours, the unsuspecting travelers were arrested by men of Lot Smith’s command in Weber County. Their property confiscated, that gamblers were hustled off to Ogden for questioning. Next morning the prisoners were turned over to Colonel Chauncey West for transfer to Great Salt Lake City, where they were confined in the Tithing Office as spies. Mormons not assigned to Legion units in the field were rotated on guard duty over the six men until church authorities could reach a decision in their case.

On page 274-276 of the same book, Mr. Schindler states:

Twenty years later, when Sylvanus Collett was on trial for his life (charged with the murder of John Aiken), two Mormons, Joseph Skeen and his son, William, both took the witness stand and testified that Collett had told them the whole story of the Aiken Party. . . . Troubled by the gossip Skeen asked Collett about it and was told that he (Collett) had been an escort to the Aiken party from the north, they having been delivered over to Rockwell . . . and himself, with the order to make away with them. The Skeens, father and son, agreed in substance that Collett gave the sign, the son saying it was Rockwell) each of the four men in the escort, having selected a victim in advance, slipped a bar of iron from his sleeve and struck his man on the head. . . . Collett missed (his) man,” William Skeen told the court. In fact, he said, Collett was being badly beaten until Rockwell pulled a revolver and, firing across the campfire, shot Collett “man in the back. The wounded Californian lurched, fell into the brush, and escaped in the darkness. The bodies of the two Aikens and the colonel were thrown into the river; Tom Aiken and Richard were dead, but the icy water apparently revived John Aiken, who crawled to shore and made his was to Nephi.

... At any rate, after the two wounded men were patched up and put to bed in Foote’s hotel, Mrs. Frances Cazier, who had watched the drama with interest, noticed Rockwell and three others enter town after dark. Next morning she was standing in the doorway of her home adjacent to the Tithing Office and saw Rockwell sitting inside with several other men. At Collett’s trial she testified she heard a voice say: “Boy, you’ve made a bad job of it; two got away. Nephi won’t be trusted with another job.”

Fourteen-year-old Alice Lamb listened to a conversation between several Nephi residents in which the return of Aiken and Wright was discussed and a decision made to lure the two men to another spot and “there to make away with them.” Meanwhile, other people in Nephi were hearing and seeing things they would be asked about twenty years later. Guy Foote and Reuben Down had occasion to pass the Tithing Office corral; there they saw horses and pack animals belonging to the Aiken Party.

Four or five days after the two survivors had made their appearance in Nephi, they felt able to travel. . . . Shortly before they rode out of the settlement, Rockwell and several men were seen heading north.

The events of the next few hours remain much of a mystery, but William Skeen swore that Collett had boasted of ambushing Wright and Aiken at a place called Willow Creek, eight miles from Nephi. (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, pages 274-276)

Mr. Schindler goes on to tell that the Mormons attempted to murder another member of the Aiken Party “Near Point of the Mountain.” He escaped with “only bruises,” however, and came back to Great Salt Lake City. According to Bill Hickman, Brigham Young called him into his office and told him to murder the man who had escaped. Harold Schindler states:

Bill Hickman, fresh from a murder himself, enters the picture at this point. Told that “the boys have made a bad job of trying to put a man away,” Hickman says he was ordered to find Jones and “use him up.” . . . Hickman claims he and a man named Meacham took up their vigil near the springs . . . Hickman fired point-blank at Jones, the bullet smashing into his head . . . The body was dumped into a shallow ditch along a fence line, and the spot was marked with a white rag. Then, said Hickman:

We returned to the city to Gen. Grant’s, as per agreement, and found him at home with Gen. Kimball, O. P. Rockwell, and somebody else whose name I do not recollect now. They asked if all was right, and I told them it was. They got spades, and we all went back, deepened the ditch, put him in and buried him, returned to Grant’s, took some whisky, and separated for the night. The next day Kimball and I went to Brigham Young’s, told him that (Jones) was taken care of, and there would be no more stink about his stories. He said he was glad of it, (Jones) was the last one of the Aiken’s party, of whom there has been considerable said. I never saw until I saw him in the wagon that evening.

With the last spadeful of dirt on “Honesty” Jones’s body, five members of the Aiken Party had been murdered. (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, pages 278-279)
Even Nicholas Van Alfen, whose book is written in defense of Orrin Porter Rockwell, has to admit that he sometimes took the law into his own hands:

One cannot resist the conclusion that Porter nourished a growing hatred and an attitude of revenge against the type of man that characterized lawlessness and brutality. He became a peril to them because at times he was his own court, judge and executioner. (Porter Rockwell—The Mormon Frontier Marshal, pages 47-48)

On page 65 of the same book we find this statement:

John F. Everett, an old timer of Springville, Utah, knew Rockwell personally. Mr. Everett praised Porter highly but criticized him because too often he did not bother with the courts. If a man stole a horse and had to be chased a hundred miles, it was not likely that the thief would be brought in alive.

Harold Schindler tells that the U.S. marshal, P. K. Dotson, “held a warrant for Rockwell’s arrest on murder charges.” He was unable to arrest Rockwell, however, and in a letter to Judge John Cradlebaugh he stated:

I have received from you certain warrants of arrest against many persons, in your Judicial district, charged with murder, including on against J. D. Lee, John Highby (a bishop), Hoyte (his counselor), and thirty-six others, for the murder of one hundred and nineteen men, women and children, at Mountain Meadows, also one against Porter Rockwell, John A. Wolf, president of the Seventies . . . for the murder of the Aiken Brothers and two others; . . .

I regret to inform you that it is not in my power to execute any ofthese processes, I have made repeated efforts by the aid as well of the military, as of the civil posse, to execute the warrants last alluded to, but without success. So great is the number of persons engaged in the commission of these crimes, and such the feelings of the Mormon Church, and the community in their favor, that I cannot rely on a civil posse to aid me in arresting them . . . . (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, pages 292-293)

The following statement concerning Rockwell appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune:

Brutal in his instincts, lawless in his habits, and a fanatical divottee of the Prophet, the commands of this gloomy despot he received as the will of the Lord, and with the ferocity born of mistaken zeal, he grew to believe that the most acceptable service he could render the Almighty, as Lear expresses it, to “kill, kill, kill, kill, kill!” He killed unsuspecting travelers, whose boot was coveted by his prophet-master. He killed fellow Saints who held secrets that menaced the safety of their fellow criminals in the priesthood. He killed Apostles who dared to wag their tongues about the wrongs they had endured. And he killed mere sojourners in Zion merely to keep his hand in.

. . . The Danite Rockwell retired from the avenging business, and for some years past has been extensively engaged in raising horses and cattle. But the recollection of his evil deeds haunted him, and conscience preyed upon his soul like the undying worm. To gain escape from this fiery torment he sought the intoxicating bowl, and whenever he appeared in the streets of Salt Lake it was generally in the character of a vociferating maniac. (Salt Lake Tribune, June 11, 1878, as quoted in Orrin Porter Rockwell, page 363)

There can be little doubt that Orrin Porter Rockwell did have a drinking problem. Harold Schindler quotes Elijah Averett as saying:

Porter Rockwell was along for a bodyguard to Brigham, and while at Pipe (Springs) on the way back Port got rather drunk, and as they left Pipe Brigham and the driver of the team were sitting in the front seat looking solemnly ahead and Port was shouting and waving his hat . . . . (quoted in Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, page 356)

Nicholas Van Alfen stated:

The extent of Porter’s drinking in later years and all the accompanies it must have been frowned upon by Brigham Young and the Church people as a whole . . . . It seems that Porter was given special leniency. Old timers could still remember Rockwell riding up and down Main Street in Salt Lake City yelling like a wild Comanche as he lashed the signs on the stores fronts. Only Porter could get away with it. (Porter Rockwell—The Mormon Frontier Marshal, pages 153-154)

Orrin Porter Rockwell was held in full fellowship by the Church, and in 1873 he was sent on a mission. He died in 1878. At the time of his death he was awaiting trial for the murder of the Aiken party. The Salt Lake Tribune stated that “the gallows was cheated of one of the fittest candidates that ever cut a throat or plundered a traveler” (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, page 362). The Apostle Joseph F. Smith, on the other hand, paid tribute to Orrin Porter Rockwell. Harold Schindler states:

Nearly a thousand persons filled the Fourteenth Ward assembly rooms on June 12 for Rockwell’s funeral. Joseph F. Smith, a member of the Council of Twelve Apostles, delivered the eulogy. Elder Smith said: “He had his little faults, but Porter’s life on earth, taken altogether, was one worthy of example, and reflected honor upon the Church. Through all his trials he had never once forgotten his obligations to his brethren and his God. (Orrin Porter Rockwell; Man of God, Son of Thunder, page 364)

We feel that Harold Schindler has done a tremendous job in researching and writing about the life of Orrin Porter Rockwell. All of our readers should have a copy of this fine book. It is published by the University of Utah Press. The workmanship on this book is beautiful! We feel that you will be proud to have it in your library. The price is $7.50 a copy.

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone—there are no obligations connected with attendance. The scripture lesson is given by Sandra Tanner.

“But if it is at all possible for you, take pity upon us and help us.” “If it is possible,” said Jesus. “Everything is possible to one who has faith.” “I have faith,” cried the boy’s father: “help me where faith fails short.”

PROBLEMS IN MORNON TEXT

In our opinion LaMar Petersen’s booklet, Problems in Mormon Text, is one of the best works on the subject on Mormonism. Mr. Petersen has been doing research on Mormonism for over twenty years, so he is well qualified to write on this subject. Moreover, he has a very scholarly and honest way of dealing with his materials. We have a great deal of respect for Mr. Petersen, and we must admit that his constant help and encouragement have had much to do with the success of Modern Microfilm Co. His booklet, Problems in Mormon Text, and other research he has done have had a real effect upon our lives and upon our work.

The Mormon leaders have never been able to answer Mr. Petersen’s book; therefore, they have chosen to ignore it. However, John Blackmore (who was General Church Historian of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints) did see the value of Mr. Petersen’s booklet, and in a letter dated February 24, 1958, he stated:

I thank you for the two books Problems in Mormon Text. I find that the contents of your book and the interpretations of the text, demand a revaluation of the incidents of our religious theories and practices.

All of our readers should have a copy of Mr. Petersen’s booklet, Problems of Mormon Text. The price is only $.60.
We are very happy to announce that we have now completed the new book, Joseph Smith and Polygamy. This book contains a very detailed study of the Mormon doctrine of plural marriage.

We can only present a small portion of the material here, but the book itself is filled with new and important information concerning the subject of polygamy.

To begin with, the Mormons believed in monogamy. The Book of Mormon (which was published in 1830) stated that:

...David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. (Book of Mormon, page 111, [Jacob 2] verse 24)

In 1843, however, Joseph Smith gave a revelation which states the following:

Verily, thus said the Lord...you have inquired of my hand to know and understand wherein I, the Lord, justified my servants...David and Solomon,...as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines—...

David's wives and concubines were given unto him of me,...

Notice that the revelation states that David and Solomon were justified in their polygamous practices, whereas the Book of Mormon states that polygamy is an abominable practice. When the Mormon Apostle LeGrand Richards was asked concerning this contradiction, he stated:

Your fourth question:...explain Jacob, 2:23-27 compared to D. & C. 1[3]:2:1. In one place it said it was “abominable” and the other “justified.”

I am afraid I can’t adequately reconcile these two statements. If the one in Doctrine & Covenants 131:1 had omitted the names of David and Solomon, then I think I could reconcile the two statements. (Letter from LeGrand Richards to Morris L. Reynolds, dated July 14, 1966)

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe made this statement concerning Joseph Smith:

It is nothing short of miraculous that the enemies of Joseph Smith, who have resorted to almost every untruth about him, have seldom charged him with sex immorality. No woman’s name was ever linked, slyly, with his. He was so clean morally that even those who hated him and his doctrine most did not venture to accuse him of moral wrong. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, 1951, page 228)

In the book, Joseph Smith and Polygamy, we show that nothing could be further from the truth. For instance, Oliver Cowdery, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, accused Joseph Smith of having a “dirty, nasty, filthy affair” with a girl by the name of Fanny Alger. The Mormon writer Max Parkin made the following statement in his thesis for the Brigham Young University:

...the charge of adulterous relations “with a certain girl” was leveled against Smith by Cowdery in Missouri in 1837; this accusation became one of the complaints the Church had against Cowdery in his excommunication trial in Far West, April 12, 1838. In rationalizing Cowdery’s accusation, the Prophet testified “that Oliver Cowdery had been his bosom friend, therefore he entrusted him with many things.” (Conflicts at Kirtland, 1966, page 166)

Although the Mormon leaders denied that they were living plural marriage, they continued to add new wives to their families. Joseph Smith even asked for other men’s wives. In a sermon delivered in the Tabernacle in 1854, Jedediah M. Grant (second counselor to Brigham Young) stated:

When the family organization was revealed from heaven—the patriarchal order of God, and Joseph began, on the right and on the left, to add to his family, what a quaking there was in Israel. Says one brother to another, “Joseph says all covenants are done away, and none are binding but the new covenants; now suppose Joseph should come and say he wanted your wife, what would you say to that?” “I would tell him to go to hell.” This was the spirit of many in the early days of this Church.

What would a man of God say, who felt aright, when Joseph asked him for his money? He would say, “Yes, and I wish I had more to help to build up the kingdom of God.” Or if he came and said, “I want your wife?” “O yes,” he would say, “here she is, there are plenty more.”

Did the Prophet Joseph want every man’s wife he asked for? He did not. If such a man of God should come to me and say, “I want your gold and silver, or your wives,” I should say, “here they are, I wish I had more to give you, take all I have got.” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, pages 13-14)

In his book, Mormon Portraits, Dr. Wyl stated:

Joseph Smith finally demanded the wives of all the twelve apostles that were at home then in Nauvoo...That Joseph did demand and obtain the wives of the twelve, is proved beyond doubt by irrebuttable testimony. But there is further proof from a very high authority. Jedediah Grant, Brigham's counselor, said in one of his harangues...Do you think that the Prophet Joseph wanted the wives of the twelve that he asked for, merely to gratify himself? No; he did it to try the brethren. But if President Young wants my wife, or any of them, he can have them, etc...Vilate Kimball, the first wife of Heber C. Kimball, was a good, pure woman, she was better than her "religion," though a slave to it in a manner. She loved her husband, and he, not yet developed as the brute he later became, loved her, hence a reluctance to comply with the Lord's

ORRIN PORTER ROCKWELL: MAN OF GOD, SON OF THUNDER, by Harold Schindler. Mr. Schindler has spent many years researching documents, journals, manuscripts and rare books. The result is a book which can be relied upon. Printed by the University of Utah Press. Price: $7.50

ON THE MORMON FRONTIER: The Diary of Hosea Stout, 1844-1861, edited by Juanita Brooks. Dale L. Morgan, a noted historian, states that the diary of Hosea Stout is "...one of the most magnificent windows upon Mormon history ever opened..." While Hosea Stout was a very prominent Mormon, he did not hesitate to make entries in his diary which are very embarrassing to the Mormon Church today. We feel that his journal contains proof that the Mormon leaders approved of violence and that Brigham Young taught that Adam is the only God with whom we have to do and the father of Jesus. The footnotes by Juanita Brooks are excellent. It is published by the University of Utah Press. Comes in two volumes — 769 large pages. Price: $17.50 a set.

THE MORMON ESTABLISHMENT by Wallace Turner. Mr. Turner, former Pulitzer Prize winner and correspondent for the New York Times, discusses such controversial subjects as: the anti-Negro doctrine, polygamy and Mormon interference in politics. Price: $6.00
demand that Vilate should be \textit{consecrated} like the moveable property of the other “Apostles.” Still, Joseph was to them a prophet, and therefore the act might be right in him though simply damnable in any other man. They thought the command of the Lord must be obeyed in some way, and a “proxy” way suggested itself to their minds. They had a young daughter only getting out of girlhood, and the father apologizing to the prophet for his wife’s \textit{reluctance} to comply with \textit{his desires}, stating, however, that the act must be right or it would not be counseled—the abject slave of a father asked \textit{Joe if his daughter wouldn’t do as well as his wife}. Joe replied that she would do just as well, and the Lord would accept her instead. The half-ripe bud of womanhood was \textit{delivered over to the Prophet.} (\textit{Mormon Portraits}, by Dr. Wyl, 1886, pages 70-72)

The fact that Joseph Smith asked for Heber C. Kimball’s wife is verified in the book, \textit{The Life of Heber C. Kimball}, written by the Mormon Apostle Orson F. Whitney:

Before he would trust even Heber with the full secret, however, he put him to a test which few men would have been able to bear.

It was no less than a \textit{requirement for him to surrender his wife, his beloved Vilate, and give her to Joseph in marriage!}

The astounding revelation well-nigh paralyzed him. He could hardly believe he had heard aright. \textit{Yet Joseph was solemnly in earnest.} His next impulse was to spurn the proposition, and perhaps at that terrible moment a vague suspicion of the Prophet’s motive and the divinity of the revelation, shot like a poisoned arrow through his soul.

But only for a moment, if at all, was such a thought, such a \textit{suspicion} entertained. He knew Joseph to well, as a man, a friend, a brother, a servant of God, to doubt his truth or the \textit{divine origin of the behest he had made}. No; Joseph was God’s Prophet, His mouth-piece and oracle, and so long as he was so, his words were as the words of the Eternal One to Heber C. Kimball. His heart-strings might be torn, his feelings crucified and sown asunder, but so long as his faith in God and the Priesthood remained, heaven helping him, \textit{he would try and do as he was told}. Such, now, was his superhuman resolve.

Three days he fasted and wept and prayed. Then, with a broken and a bleeding heart, but with soul self-mastered for the \textit{sacrifice}, he led his darling wife to the Prophet’s house and presented her to Joseph.

It was enough—heavens accepted the sacrifice. The will for the deed was taken, and “accounted unto him for righteousness.” Joseph wept at this proof of devotion, and embracing Heber told him that was all that the Lord required. He had proved him, as a child of Abraham, that he would “do the works of Abraham,” holding back \textit{nothing}, but laying all upon the altar for God’s glory.

The Prophet joined the hands of the heroic and devoted pair, and then and there, by virtue of the sealing power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, Heber and Vilate Kimball were made husband and wife for all eternity. (\textit{Life of Heber C. Kimball}, by Orson F. Whitney, pages 333-335)

Ann Eliza Young made this statement:

Joseph not only paid his addresses to the young and unmarried women, but he sought “spiritual alliance” with many \textit{married} ladies who happened to strike his fancy. He taught them that all former marriages were null and void, and that they were at perfect liberty to make another choice of a husband. The marriage covenants were not binding, because they were ratified only by Gentile laws. These laws the Lord did not recognize; consequently all the women were free.

One woman said to me not very long since, while giving me some of her experiences in polygamy: “The greatest trial I ever endured in my life was living with my husband and deceiving him, by receiving Joseph’s attentions whenever he chose to come to me.”

Some of these women have since said they did not know who was the father of their children; \textit{...} (\textit{Wife No. 19}, by Ann-Eliza Young, 1876, pages 70-71)

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe admitted that Joseph Smith was sealed to married women, but he claimed that they were not to be his wives until after death. Patty Bartlett Sessions, the wife of David Sessions, however, made it very clear in her private journal that she was married to Joseph Smith for both “time” and “eternity”:

I was sealed to Joseph Smith by Willard Richards Mar. 9, 1842, in Newel K. Whitney’s chamber, Nauvoo, \textit{for time and all eternity}. . . . I was after Mr. Session’s death sealed to John Parry for time of the 27th, March, 1852, GSL City. (\textit{Private Journal of Patty Bartlett Sessions}, quoted in \textit{Intimate Disciple, Portrait of Willard Richards}, by Claire Noall, 1957, page 611)

The fact that some members of the Mormon Church were worried that someone else would take their wives is evidenced by a speech that Brigham Young gave on February 16, 1847. In this speech he stated:

There is another principle that has caused considerable uneasiness and trouble (E.I.) the idea of some men having \textit{more wives than one}. Such tremendous fear takes hold of some that they don’t know how to live and still they can’t die, and begin to whisper and talk around saying, I am actually afraid to go on a mission for fear some man will be sealed to my wife, or when they return home some will be babbling about you don’t know but what you have got another man’s wife. For my part some say I am afraid to speak to a young woman for fear that she belongs to somebody else or for fear somebody else wants her (others deny the faith as they think, but they never had any), and say that it is all from the devil and so on. . . . but those that suffer fears and jealousy to arise in their bosoms either back right out or get to be mighty righteous and for fear that they are sleeping with \textit{some other man’s wife} they kick up a broil at home and perhaps abuse their companions through jealousy, then go to some woman that does not understand which is right or wrong and tell her that she cannot be saved without a man and he has almighty power and can exalt and save her and likely tell her that there is no harm for them to sleep together before they are sealed then go to some clod head of an elder and get him to say their ceremony, all done without the knowledge or counsel of the authority of this church. \textit{...} . . . I was to say to the elders you now have the liberty to build up your kingdoms, one half of them would lie, swear, steal and fight like the very devil to get men and women sealed to them. They would even try to pass right by me and go to Jos. thinking to get between mine and the 12. Some have already tried to use an influence against me, but such jealousies and selfishness shall be stopped and if the brethren do not stop it I will blow it to the four winds by making them all come and be sealed to me and I through my father, and all this church to Jos. (Sermon by Brigham Young, quoted in \textit{Journals of John D. Lee}, 1846-1847, edited by Charles Kelly, 1938, pages 79-80)

There were all kinds of strange marriages under the Mormon plural wife system. According to Fawn Brodie, Joseph Smith married “five pairs of sisters” and “Patty and Sylvia Sessions” who were “mother and daughter.” The fact that Patty and Sylvia Sessions were mother and daughter is verified by the Mormon writer Claire Noall:

Sylvia Lyon, Patty’s \textit{daughter} and the \textit{wife} of Windsor J. Lyon, was already sealed to Joseph. This afternoon she was to put \textit{her mother’s hand in the Prophet’s.} (\textit{Intimate Disciple}, by Claire Noall, page 317)

L. John Nuttall, a prominent Mormon, told that John Taylor (who became president of the Mormon Church) promised his own sister that she could be sealed to him in the event that she could not be reconciled to continue with any of her husbands:

Monday Feb. 25, 1889.

\textit{...} Agnes Schwartz & her daughter Mary called this morning to see Prest. Woodruff, on her family matters which he promised to write to her about. She said that her brother John the late President John Taylor had told her some 30 years ago that if she could not be reconciled to continue with any of her husbands she might be sealed to his brother William or himself and she now wanted to be sealed to him. This is a very curious proceeding & which I dont understand. (Journal of L. John Nuttall, vol. 2, pages 362-363, taken from a typed copy at the B.Y.U.)
L. John Nuttall does not relate what happened, but if the sealing actually took place, John Taylor, according to Mormon doctrine, will find himself married to his own sister in the resurrection.

Heber C. Kimball, who was a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church, stated:

It would be as easy for the United States to build a tower to remove the sun, as to remove polygamy or the Church and kingdom of God. (Millennial Star, vol. 28, page 190)

Federal laws were passed against the practice of polygamy, and the Mormons found themselves in a real dilemma.

By the year 1888 many people were suggesting that the church have a new revelation which would suppress the practice of polygamy. Some friends of the church wrote an epistle stating that polygamy should be suppressed. They wanted the Mormon leaders to submit it to the people as if the leaders had written it themselves. The Mormon leaders rejected this proposal, but the fact that Wilford Woodruff had the epistle read before the “council of apostles” shows that he was desperate for a solution to the church’s predicament. L. John Nuttall recorded the following in his journal under the date of December 19, 1888:

Wednesday Dec. 19, 1888.

... This evening I attended a meeting of the council of apostles at the President’s office... The communication which Prest Woodruff handed to me last night was presented by Bro Woodruff who asked me to read it. I did, then by request read it again. The youngest member was then asked to speak his views in brief and as continued until all had spoken the brethren were very emphatic in opposing or accepting such a measure. They felt it had not come from the right source. Did not offer even as much as a mess of potage for the relinquishment of our religion. If we gave up one portion we would be required to give up all. could not accept. (Journal of L. John Nuttall, vol. 2, page 329 of typed copy at Brigham Young University)

The next day (December 20, 1888) L. John Nuttall made this statement in his journal:

Thursday Dec. 20, 1888

... This evening I attended a meeting of the council of apostles at the President’s office... The communication which Prest Woodruff handed to me last night was presented by Bro Woodruff who asked me to read it which I did, then by request read it again. The youngest member was then asked to speak his views in brief and as continued until all had spoken the brethren were very emphatic in opposing or accepting such a measure. They felt it had not come from the right source. Did not offer even as much as a mess of potage for the relinquishment of our religion. If we gave up one portion we would be required to give up all. could not accept any such documents nor their proposition. I felt glad that I was of the same mind. (p. 296)

In spite of the fact that the Mormon Church leaders taught that plural marriage could never be stopped, in 1890 Wilford Woodruff issued the Manifesto, which was supposed to stop the practice of plural marriage. The Mormon leaders promised to obey the law of the land, but many of them broke their promises. Very few people realized to what extent the leaders of the Mormon Church had broken their promises, until they were called to testify in the “Proceedings Before the Committee of Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate in the Matter of the Protests Against the Right of Hon. Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah, to Hold His Seat.”

Joseph F. Smith, who was the sixth President of the Mormon Church, admitted that he had continued to live in polygamy after the Manifesto and that he was violating both the laws of the land and the laws of God:

The Chairman. And in not doing it, you are violating the law?
Mr. Smith. The law of my state?
The Chairman. Yes.
Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.
Senator Overman. Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?
Mr. Smith. It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.
Senator Overman. If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?
Mr. Smith. I have admitted that Mr. Senator, a great many times here. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pages 334-335)

Walter M. Wolfe, who was at one time professor of geology at Brigham Young College, claimed that the Apostle John Henry Smith stated that the Manifesto was only a trick to beat the devil at his own game:

Mr. Wolfe. There was a meeting in the Brigham Young Academy, in Provo, Utah, that was addressed by B. F. Grant, a brother of Apostle Heber J. Grant. At that meeting Apostle John Henry Smith was present.
The Chairman. On what date was that; what year?
Mr. Wolfe. I don’t remember the year. It was in the late nineties, probably.
Mr. Carlisle. It was after the manifesto?
Mr. Wolfe. Yes, sir; it was after the manifesto. On my way home I walked several blocks with B. F. Grant and Apostle Smith and on the way we were talking about the conditions existing, and President Smith used these words to me: “Brother Wolfe, don’t you know that the manifesto is only a trick to beat the devil at his own game?” (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 4, page 13)

Walter M. Wolfe also gave this testimony:

Mr. Carlisle. Now, you may proceed to state what you know about Ovena Jorgensen and about her having contracted a plural marriage with somebody after your knowledge of her, after you became acquainted with her.
Mr. Wolfe. In the summer of 1897 I was in Colorado. On my return, at the beginning of the school year, I found that Ovena Jorgensen was not in attendance. She returned to school some time during the month of October. Shortly after her return she came to my house and asked me privately. She said: “Brother Wolfe, I have something that I must tell you, the reason why I have been late coming back to school. I have been married.” I said: “Not in polygamy.” She said: “Yes, sir, in polygamy. I have married Brother Okey.”

The Chairman. What year was that, professor.
Mr. Wolfe. This was in October, 1897.
Mr. Worthington. That she told you this?
Mr. Wolfe. This is her story to me.
Mr. Worthington. I say, it was in October, 1897, that she told you?
Mr. Wolfe. Yes, sir. I asked her how it had happened, and she said that some years before she had gone into service at the house of this man Okey; that he had loved her and she loved him. He had asked her to marry him and she had declined, saying that it was impossible on account of the manifesto, but she had promised that she would marry no one else. Mr. Okey visited President Woodruff several times, I should judge from her conversation, and each time was refused his request that he marry that girl. In August, 1897, Okey and the girl went together to see President Wilford Woodruff, and they laid the case before him. He brushed them aside with a wave of his hand and said he would have nothing to do with the matter, but referred them to President George Q. Cannon. George Q. Cannon asked if the girl had been through the Temple and received her endowments. They told him no. He said that that must be done first and then he would see as to the rest of it. They went through the Temple and the girl received her endowments. Then they were given a letter by President George Q. Cannon to President Ivins, of the Juarez Stake, and they went to Mexico.

The Chairman. Who was this letter to?
Mr. Wolfe. President A. W. Ivins, or the Juarez Stake.
The Chairman. Mexico?
Mr. Wolfe. Mexico; yes, sir. They went to Mexico, and there the girl told me the marriage ceremony was performed, and they returned to Utah.
Mr. Carlisle. This statement that you have made is the statement she made to you?

Mr. Chairman. You say they were given a letter to the president. What do you mean by that? what President?
Mr. Wolfe. President Ivins. The Mormon Church geographically is divided into stakes very much as the States of the Union are divided into counties.
(Reed Smoot Case, 1906, vol. 4, pages 10-11)

Stanley S. Ivins, the son of Anthony W. Ivins, told us that his father received instructions after the Manifesto to perform marriages for time and all eternity outside of the Mormon Temples. He was sent to Mexico and was told that when the First Presidency wanted a plural marriage performed they would send a letter with the couple who were to be married. Whenever he received these letters from the First Presidency, he knew that it was alright to perform the ceremony.

Stanley S. Ivins confirms the fact that his father, Anthony W. Ivins, did perform the marriage ceremony mentioned above and that he recorded this fact in his record book. Stanley Ivins also stated that Walter Wolfe’s testimony concerning this marriage hurt the church’s image so much that the First Presidency of the Church sent Anthony Ivins a letter requesting him to go back to Washington, D.C. and give false testimony before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate. The First Presidency of the Mormon Church actually wanted him to lie under oath and state that he did not perform the ceremony. Stanley Ivins stated that his father refused to go back to Washington, D. C. and lie about the marriage, even if Walter Wolfe’s testimony did damage the image of the Church.

The book, Joseph Smith and Polygamy, contains many other interesting things which we do not have room to discuss here. It contains information concerning the spiritual wife doctrine, the John C. Bennett book, the Nancy Rigdon affair, the Sarah Pratt affair and also the Martha H. Brotherton affair. Also included is a list of 84 women who may have been married to Joseph Smith.

— IMPORTANT LETTER —

On November 9, 1966, LaMar Petersen wrote a letter to the Manuscript Editor of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. About half of this letter was printed in volume 1, number 4, page 9.

We feel that this letter is rather important, and therefore we are publishing it in its entirety:

Dear Sir,

This is intended not so much a critique of James Allen’s “the Significance of Joseph Smith’s First Vision in Mormon Thought” in the autumn issue of Dialogue as a commendation. Generally Mr. Allen has been forthright and factual in his enumeration and study of source materials relating to this subject. To those in the L.D.S. Church nurtured on the familiar words of the Vision as found in the Pearl of Great Price and various other Church annals, the additional information here presented may be surprising, and to some disturbing. However, many of Dialogue’s readers are likely to agree with the thought expressed by P.A.M. Taylor on page 110: “secrecy does more harm to the Church’s reputation than could result from any disclosures from the archives.”

Mr. Allen is evidently not seeking to impose a dogmatic interpretation of the Vision but rather to juxtapose the accounts for easy comparison and analysis. He rightly notes that belief in the Vision is cardinal in the faith of the Saints, that it is the fulcrum upon which modern-day revelation rests.
This being so it is the more important that nothing pertinent be omitted.

In the editors’ preface to the autumn issue it states that portions of two early accounts by Joseph Smith of his First Vision are here printed “for the first time.” This is an error. Modern Microfilm Company of Salt Lake City, Jerald and Sandra Tanner proprietors, published one of these accounts
(the one referred to by Mr. Allen on page 39 as having been written “about 1833”) more than a year ago in a work entitled Joseph Smith’s Strange Account of the First Vision. Mr. Tanner informs me that more than 600 copies of this book have been sold to date. The statement credited to Levi

Edgar Young on page 4 and 14 of the Tanner work may have had a direct bearing on the emergence of the so-called 1833 document and they pose an important question in relation to Mr. Allen’s statement on page 35, “few if any who saw it realized its profound historical significance.” Though
Mr. Young was not sure of the date his description of the document fitted what has been revealed. His statements were first published in an earlier Tanner work, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History (January 1965) and provoked considerable discussion at the time.

Inasmuch as some who have written about the First Vision emphasize the importance of the identification of the personages as the Father and the Son (see for example Hugh Nibley, “Censoring Joseph Smith’s Story,” Improvement Era) Mr. Allen would have done well to point the lack of such identification is such standards as the Orson Pratt Remarkable Visions, the Wentworth Letter, and the Daniel Rupp account. These testaments are often used as source for the belief that Deity did indeed visit the youthful Prophet in the Grove, but it so happens that while the inference may be there, direct testimony is lacking.

It would have been an aid to the reader in evaluating the First Vision documents if the writer had referred to the incidents leading to the Vision as recorded in two prime accounts: (a) by Oliver Cowdery in the Messenger and Advocate in 1834-5 and (b) by Joseph Smith in the Times and Seasons in 1842. The motivation to prayer, the quest for guidance, the events leading to the appearance of a personage, or personages, are sufficiently similar as to cause confusion in the mind of the reader. Mr. Allen might have commented upon the parallels and differences and attempted some clarification. Many serious students of Mormonism feel that this [is] a problem which has gone begging for 120 years. One has only to note the references to the First Vision by Church Authorities in the Journal of Discourses to see that a review is needed. (See 1:299; 2:171, 196-7; 18:239; 20:167; 21:308; 25:157.) Compare also Deseret News, May 29, 1852, page 1, column 1, with History of the Church, vol. II, page 312,
ed. B. H. Roberts.)

One page 34 Mr. Allen says: “Perhaps the closest one may come to seeing a contemporary diarist’s account of the story is in the journal of Alexander Neibaur, which is located in the Church Historian’s office.”
It should be noted that such journals are not open for public inspection.
Several researchers have been denied access to this particular journal, including the donor. (This is according to a letter from Hugh Nibley to Jerald Tanner, photostat of which appears on page 23 of Tanner’s book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (Salt Lake City 1964).

Sincerely yours,

LaMar Petersen

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone—there are no obligations connected with attendance. The scripture lesson is given by Sandra Tanner.

Come to me, all of you who are weary and over-burdened, and I will give you rest! Put on my yoke and learn from me. For I am gentle and and my burden is light. (Matthew 11:28-30 Phillips Modern English Trans.)

ALMOST SOLD OUT!

We have just completed taking inventory and find that many of our books have almost sold out. For instance, there are only five copies of one of our publications left. There are only 18 copies of another left.
Another has only 27 copies, and another has 66. Two publications are down to 88 copies.

Several people have asked how many sets of the Times and Seasons we have left. We find that we have only 25 complete sets.

Since we do not plan to reprint many of these books, this may be your last chance to get them!
Sometime ago we announced that we were working on a book which we felt would be one of the most revealing works ever written on the subject of Mormonism. Because of a lack of money and time we have not been able to do much on this work. We now have a plan, however, which we feel will enable us to get this work out. Since it is such a large work, it will have to be printed in several volumes. We have now written part of volume one, and we are ready to start printing. It will entitled The Case Against Mormonism. We feel that it is our largest and most important work.

We are asking our readers to pay for volume one in advance so we can start printing right away. We will mail the sheets out as they are printed. We will try to send at least 20 printed sheets at a time. Volume one will contain 100 or more 8 1/2 by 11 inch sheets, which will contain a lot of information.

We are very anxious to see these pages preserved; therefore, we are including a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder with 19 rings (most binders have only 3 rings) the pages will be punched and our readers can put the pages in the binder as they arrive.

These loose-leaf binders sell retail from General Binding Corp. for over $3.00 a piece but we plan to get them in quantity at a much lower price.

We have now written part of volume one, and we are ready to start printing. It will entitled The Case Against Mormonism for only $4.95. The loose-leaf binder will be large enough to hold several other volumes. In these volumes we will deal with many new subjects. We can only present a very small portion of the material here.

IS ALL WELL IN ZION?

In 1966 Wallace Turner, former Pulitzer Prize winner and correspondent for the New York Times, published his book The Mormon Establishment. In this book Mr. Turner shows that the Mormon Church is facing several serious problems. Fawn M. Brodie, author of No Man Knows My History, has called this a “courageous book.” At the same time Mr. Turner’s book was published another book appeared, entitled The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today. This book was written by Robert Mullen, a former editor of Life Magazine who now “runs a world-wide public relations agency.” Although Mr. Mullen claims to be a non-Mormon, the book is obviously written in defense of the Mormon Church. John Cogley, of the New York Times, reviewed both Mr. Turner’s book and Mr. Mullen’s book in an article entitled “Where the Saints Have Trod.” In this review he stated:

The Mullen book smacks of the “authorized” account, with just enough mildly unfavorable material to make it credible to modern critical readers. Not surprising, Mr. Mullen, a Washington public relations professional, has been retained by the Church of Latter-Day Saints. Mr. Turner is a New York Times correspondent, who has made a study of the church’s teachings and regards the Mormons as a “fine people” but finds some of their doctrines repellent.

Forty-eight pages of the Turner book, for example, are devoted to what the author terms the Mormon’s “anti-Negro doctrine.” Mr. Mullen glides past the same doctrine in one-half of a compound sentence: “The Mormon theology has taught that the Negro race is not eligible for certain priesthood activities, although Negroes are welcome as Church members . . .”

Mr. Mullen’s book traces the familiar history . . . The story as history is endlessly fascinating. Unfortunately though, Mr. Mullen is too obvious about avoiding the “back corners” of Mormonism to put the Gentile reader wholly at ease. His swift passing over of issues that might possible embarrass the church is all too evident all too frequently. Even his choice of words to describe the few discredifying incidents he tackles appears to have been made with Madison Avenue forethought.

Mr. Turner filled in what Mr. Mullen avoided, but at times perhaps a bit too eagerly. Mr. Turner is a skilled, experienced reporter. . . . It is known that Mr. Turner’s earlier newspaper accounts of the Mormon dilemmas upset some in the church hierarchy. It does seem not altogether coincidental, then, that these two books should be turning up at the same time. (New York Times, Book Review Section, October 23, 1966, page 4 and 22)

One area in which Robert Mullen’s book is way off is that concerning the effectiveness of the Mormon missionary program. He claims:

Ten years later, 1962, the number of missionaries had almost quadrupled to 11,768 and the number of converts for the year was listed at 104,841.

In the years since, these figures have stabilized at about 12,000 missionaries and upward of 180,000 converts a year. But the interesting figure to many non-Mormon church people is the figure of average converts per missionary. This has risen in the past decade and a half from under four per missionary to above nine!

This reveals that the acceleration is not due merely to an increase in missionary numbers, but even more significantly is due to an improvement in missionary effectiveness. It is a point of immense interest to other denominations, faced with the desire for more members. (The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today, page 225)

While it must be admitted that the Mormon missionary effort has been very effective, it has not been nearly as successful as Mr. Mullen would have us believe. If Mr. Mullen had stated that the Mormon missionary program is bringing in 80,000 converts a year, instead of 180,000, he would have been much closer to the truth. Below are two charts showing the number of full-time missionaries from 1961 to 1965 (the figures were not yet available for 1966). These figures were taken from the Church Section of the Deseret News and from the Conference Reports.
When the number of converts began to drop the excuse given was that there were less full-time missionaries. While it is true that there were less missionaries in 1963 and 1964 than there were in 1962, there were more missionaries in 1965 than any other year. There were 1,725 more full-time missionaries in 1965 than there were in 1961, and yet there were less converts. There were more full-time missionaries in 1965 than there were in 1962, and yet there were 33,379 less converts!

In 1959 the Mormon missionaries brought 23,026 people into the Church. In 1960 they brought in 48,586. This was an increase of 100%. In 1961 they brought in 88,807 converts. In 1962 Henry D. Moyle, a member of the First Presidency, felt that they would “record another 100 per cent increase.” The following appeared in the Deseret News:

In his publicly expressed view, President Henry D. Moyle of the First Presidency, who, under the assignment of President David O. McKay, directs the great world-wide missionary effort of the Church, feels 1962 will record another 100% increase as did 1961. (Deseret News, Church Section, December 30, 1961, page 4)

In order to meet Mr. Moyle’s prediction, the missionaries would have needed to bring in over 170,000 converts in 1962. Instead they brought in 115,834. Still, this was a good increase. A minister reported that when he called the Church and asked for the number of converts for 1962, the man in the Missionary Department read the number and then stated that they would soon be bringing in a million converts a year. The next year after this prediction was made, the number of converts dropped to 105,210. In 1964 it was predicted that 100,000 converts would be brought into the Church:

Constant march of LDS missionaries to all parts of the world will maintain its high tempo in 1965 with a total of approximately 100,000 converts expected by the end of 1964.

Preaching the Gospel and baptizing of converts has been on a steady upward trend since the first missionaries started their march . . . in 1830. (Deseret News; Church Section, December 26, 1964)

Instead of bringing in the 100,000 converts, the figures dropped to 93,483. The next year (1965) the number of converts again fell off. That year they brought in only 82,455 converts.

SKYSCRAPERS

In 1960 the Mormon Church leaders announced some fantastic building plans. These plans would almost make a person think that the Mormon leaders believed that they would be bringing in a million converts a year. The headline of the Deseret News for October 7, 1960 read: “Pres. McKay Opens Conference; Vast Building Plans Disclosed.” In the article which followed these statements were made:

A dramatic multi-million dollar building program for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which will make sweeping changes on the administrative square and on Temple Square, was disclosed Friday. The program, covering a period of many years, calls for:

—Erection of a 38-story office building on the administrative square bordered by State, South Temple, Main and North Temple Streets.
—Construction of a modernistic 11-story Archives Building on the northeast corner of the intersection of Main and North Temple Streets.
Larger Annex
—Building a larger and more functional Temple Annex building that will provide 91,000 square feet of space.
—Addition of a 17 story annex to the Hotel Utah . . .
Church Building Committee Chairman Wendell Mendenhall said demolition of the buildings that will be razed—many of them well-known landmarks—should begin next spring.
He could not give an estimate of the amount of time that will be required to complete the project, but observed that “it will take years.”
A plaza with a fountain will be centered in the block behind the new Administration Building.
A reflecting pool on an axis across Main Street from the Temple will mirror the historic building.

To tower 500 feet above ground level, the new office building will be the first structure on the block to go up, Mr. Mendenhall said.
It will be erected on the northeast corner of the block, . . .
Mr. Mendenhall said the skyscraper will provide more than a million square feet of office space, with 30,000 square feet on each floor.
Plans for an observation tower atop the proposed 38-story Administration Building are tentative. Building Office spokesmen said telescopes may be installed for viewing the Salt Lake Valley from atop the building.
He said that the building, when completed, will have extra space for expansion.
It will require about 20 elevators, Mr. Mendenhall said.
The new Archives Building will house the Church Historian’s offices and library, the archives and library of the Genealogical Society.
The building will be of steel and concrete construction, and will provide approximately 400,000 square feet of office space, . . .
Construction of the Archives Building may begin in approximately a year to 15 months, Mr. Dunn said. (Deseret News, October 7, 1960, page 1 and 10A)
The site for the Archives Building was cleared, however, instead of the building going up, the site was made into a parking lot.

In an article published in the Deseret News, November 17, 1962, we find that the 38-story building was again cut down this time to 25 stories. No explanation appeared in the article as to why the building was to be smaller:

These old school buildings have been torn down to make way for the new 25-story Church Administration building and huge half-block subterranean parking area.

In 1966 Wallace Turner gave this report in regard to the progress of this building:

The building was started. The great underground garage has been completed. It includes the foundations for the twenty-five-story building. But as this is written, the plans for the building itself seem to have been shoved into a drawer somewhere. The roof of the garage is being covered with dirt for lawn, and the bare metal of the steel supports for the walls of the building are being treated against corrosion, since they stick up about three feet above the concrete of the garage roof. The plans are at a standstill.

But in typical Mormon fashion, the top leaders of the church speak of a "progression of plans for the building. The work is moving forward." Hugh B. Brown, the first counselor to President McKay, insisted that the office building was being constructed according to plan. (The Mormon Establishment, by Wallace Turner, pages 115-116)

The Mormon leaders will, no doubt, put up a building, but even if it is 25 stories, it will certainly not be according to the original plan.

The skyscraper in New York which, according to Newsweek, was supposed to be finished in 1965 has not even been started. On February 9, 1967, we called the Building Department of the Mormon Church. After talking with four different people, we were unable to find out anything concerning this building except that the plans had not even been drawn up!

The proposed Genealogical Research Center (which was expected to be "the largest genealogical research center in the world") was supposed to have been started in 1962, but according to a statement given by an employee of the Genealogical Society of February 9, 1967, the plans are at a standstill. He felt that when the 25-story Administration Building was completed, the Genealogical Society would move into it.

The Mormon writer John J. Stewart assures us that "Today the LDS Church is in excellent financial condition, having one of the greatest incomes of any private organization in the United States. More than a million dollars per day in tithing and other funds pour continuously into its treasury" (Joseph Smith The Mormon Prophet, 1966, page 183).

If the Mormon Church is in such excellent financial condition, why have they not gone forward with their "vast" building plans? Actually, it is almost impossible to find out the true financial condition of the Church because the Mormon leaders will not make this information available. Under such a system it would be very easy for someone in authority to walk off with some of the funds or for the Mormon leaders to make bad investments without the membership of the Church being aware of it. We feel that it is wrong for a church to keep this information from its people.

FALSE SCRIPTURE

Wallace Turner stated:

The foundation on which this whole doctrine of Negro exclusion is based is the clause or so in the Book of Abraham. Yet, of all the works attributed to Joseph Smith, this one is the most thoroughly denounced by the scholarly world. . . . I am convinced by very simple direct evidence that the Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. (The Mormon Establishment, pages 232-233)

In The Case Against Mormonism we hope to bring forth a lot of new information upon this subject.

In 1966 one of the world’s greatest Egyptologists Dr. Labib Habachi visited Salt Lake City. The Mormon leaders entertained him and even published an article about him in the Church Section of the Deseret News. This article called him an “Egyptian Expert.” On the next page is a photograph of this article as it appeared in the Deseret News, Church Section, March 12, 1966.
The following are some of the other subjects we hope to deal with in these volumes: the Temple Ceremony, changes in the Temple Ceremony, proof that the Book of Mormon is a product of the 19th century, the failure of the bank that was established by revelation, the truth about Robert C. Webb, bogus money, the book that disappeared, the Mormon Battalion, treason, the Inspired Revision of the Bible, the 1826 trial of Joseph Smith, the principle of Adoption, the Church Law Observation and Enforcement Committee, the secret Council of 50 and its attempt to destroy freedom in America, the Mormon wars in Missouri and Utah, David Whitmer’s little-known revelation, many cases of stealing and killing in the name of the Lord, and hundreds of other important subjects.

We also hope to include hundreds of photographs of rare Mormon documents and publications. In short, we feel that this will be the most revealing work ever written on the subject of Mormonism. We are asking our readers to pay for volume one in advance. The pages will be mailed as they are printed (we will try to mail at least 20 pages at a time.) We are including a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder to preserve and protect the pages. The price for volume one of The Case Against Mormonism (including the loose-leaf binder) is $4.95. The quantity prices are: 2 for $8.95 — 4 for $14.95 — 10 for $29.70. Please include your zip code as the Post Office requires this on all packages.

A PERSONAL GOD?

To all those who will send us their address and zip code we will send a FREE COPY of Is There a Personal God? This is a 56-page pamphlet by Jerald Tanner. We would like to have all of our readers have a copy of this pamphlet. Please write for your free copy today.

THE MORMON ESTABLISHMENT

We have now sold over 250 copies of Wallace Turner’s book, The Mormon Establishment. Mr. Turner is a former Pulitzer Prize winner and correspondent for the New York Times. We feel that this is an excellent book of Mormonism. Mr. Turner discusses such controversial subjects as; the anti-Negro doctrine, polygamy and Mormon interference in politics. The price is $6.00. The quantity prices will be 2 for $10.95 — 10 for $49.50.

ON THE MORMON FRONTIER: The Diary of Hosea Stout, 1844-1861, edited by Juanita Brooks, printed by the University of Utah Press. Two volumes — 769 pages. Price: $17.50

ORRIN PORTER ROCKWELL: MAN OF GOD, SON OF THUNDER, by Harold Schindler. This is a book which can be relied upon. Printed by the University of Utah Press. Price: $7.50

This may be YOUR LAST CHANCE

We are sorry to report that another book, Why Egyptologists Reject the Book of Abraham, has sold out. Some of the other books are almost gone; therefore, this may be your last chance to obtain them, as we do not have plans to reprint them.

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone—there are no obligations connected with attendance.
THE MORMON KINGDOM

In working on our new book, The Case Against Mormonism, we have decided that we have so much material that it will be necessary for us to write still another book. This book will be entitled The Mormon Kingdom. (At the end of this article we will explain how our readers may obtain this work.) Because of the limited amount of space we can only present a very small portion of the material here.

A TREASONOUS PLAN?

In the Preface to his new and fascinating book Quest For Empire, The Political Kingdom of God and the Council of Fifty in Mormon History, Klaus J. Hanson states:

... the idea of a political kingdom of God, promulgated by a secret “Council of Fifty,” is by far the most important key to an understanding of the Mormon past.

On page 24 of the same book, we find the following statement:

Certain non-Mormons, curiously enough, seem to have known more about the political ambitions of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young than most faithful Latter-day Saints.

In the year 1838, Thomas B. Marsh, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles in the Mormon Church, left the Mormons and made an affidavit in which he stated:

The plan of said Smith, the Prophet, is to take this State, and he professes to his people to intend taking the United States and ultimately the whole world. This is the belief of the Church, and my own opinion of the Prophet’s plans and intentions. (Affidavit of Thomas B. Marsh, as printed in A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839, by Leland Gentry, Brigham Young University, 1965, page 414)

Not long before his death, Joseph Smith formed a secret organization known as the “Council of Fifty.” The Mormon writer John J. Stewart states:

... the idea of a political kingdom of God, promulgated by a secret “Council of Fifty,” is by far the most important key to an understanding of the Mormon past.

In the year 1838, Thomas B. Marsh, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles in the Mormon Church, left the Mormons and made an affidavit in which he stated:

The plan of said Smith, the Prophet, is to take this State, and he professes to his people to intend taking the United States and ultimately the whole world. This is the belief of the Church, and my own opinion of the Prophet’s plans and intentions. (Affidavit of Thomas B. Marsh, as printed in A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839, by Leland Gentry, Brigham Young University, 1965, page 414)

Klaus J. Hanson makes this statement concerning members of the “Council of Fifty”:

... members of the Council of Fifty, like the Freemasons, donned special robes in their private ceremonies, and “offered up” secret signs. (Quest For Empire, Michigan State University Press, 1967, page 56)

On page 64 and 65 of the same book Klaus Hanson states:

Secrecy at times went so far that papers accumulated during a meeting were burned at the close of the session. ... Ultimately, ... the whole world would be aware of the existence of the Council of Fifty. In fact, it is difficult to see how it could have been otherwise, since world government was to be one of the Council’s primary missions.

The Mormon writer J. D. Williams made this statement:

And in the case of the Grand Council of the Kingdom, the Church obviously contemplated far more than “giving advice.” Believed to have been organized in March, 1844, the Grand Council (or “Council of Fifty”) was to be the government of the Kingdom of God (which Kingdom was not the Church but the ultimate governing body for all mankind). The Council was composed of two non-Mormons and forty-eight to fifty Mormon high priests. ... The picture is one of a secret government, responsible not to the governed but to ecclesiastical authority, which will provide benign rule for all people, without election. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1966, pages 47-48)

The Mormon Apostle Orson Hyde once stated:

What the world calls “Mormonism” will rule every nation. Joseph Smith and Brigham Young will be the head. God has decreed it, and his own right arm will accomplish it. This will make the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 53)

John Taylor, who became the third President of the Mormon Church, made this statement:

We do believe it, and we honestly acknowledge that this is that kingdom which the Lord has commenced to establish upon the earth, and that it will not only govern all people in a religious capacity, but also in a political capacity. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 11, page 53)

Heber C. Kimball, who was a member of the First Presidency, made this statement in 1859:

And so nations will bow to this kingdom, sooner, or later, and all hell cannot help it. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 170)

On another occasion Heber C. Kimball prophesied:

And the President of the United States will bow to us and come to consult the authorities of this Church to know what he had best do for his people.

You don’t believe this. Wait and see. ... (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 93)

JOSEPH SMITH ORDAINED KING

Thomas Ford, the Governor of Illinois, made this statement a few months after Joseph Smith’s death:

It was asserted that Joseph Smith, the founder and head of the Mormon Church, had caused himself to be crowned and anointed King of the Mormons: ... (Nauvoo Neighbor, January 1, 1845) (Continued on page 2)

THE CASE AGAINST MORMONISM

A large number of our readers have ordered The Case Against Mormonism, volume one, in advance and are receiving the pages as we print them. A man in Illinois wrote: “Your new production came today. You are still doing a great job. Keep it up.” One group ordered ten copies, and when we sent out the binder and first printed pages, they ordered eighteen more.

We feel that this will be the most revealing work ever written on the subject of Mormonism. We are asking our readers to pay for volume one in advance. The pages will be mailed as they are printed. We are including a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder to preserve and protect the pages. The price for volume one of The Case Against Mormonism (including the loose-leaf binder) is: $4.95. The quantity prices are 2 for $8.95 — 4 for $14.95 — 10 for $29.70.

ANOTHER BOOK SOLD OUT

We are sorry to report that another book, The Elders’ Journal, has sold out. Some of the other books are almost gone; therefore, this may be your last chance to obtain them. We do not have any plans to reprint them. Please do not order books that are marked sold out.

SPURIOUS?

Even though B. H. Roberts (who was the Assistant Mormon Church Historian) accepted the “Defense” as the work of Oliver Cowdery, we have found some material that seems to show that it may have been spurious. We have made a study of this matter and have prepared a pamphlet entitled A Critical Look—A Study of the Overstreet “Confession” and the Cowdery “Defense.”

While this may not be of much interest to our general readers all those who are writing or who are making a detailed study of Mormonism should be familiar with this work. The price is 50¢ for one copy — 5 for $2.00 — 10 for $3.00.
William Marks, who had been a member of the secret “Council of Fifty,” admitted in 1853 that Joseph Smith had been ordained to be a king before his death:

I was also witness to the introduction (secretly) of a kingly form of government, in which Joseph suffered himself to be ordained a king, to reign over the house of Israel forever; which I could not conceive to be in accordance with the laws of the church, but I did not oppose this move, thinking it none of my business. (Zion’s Harbinger and Bancemy’s Organ, St. Louis, July, 1853, page 53)

According to Dan Jones, Wilson Law heard Joseph Smith say that “the kingdom referred to was already set up, and that he was the king over it” (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 568-569).

The Mormon writer Klaus J. Hanson, who wrote his master’s thesis on the “Political Kingdom of God” at the Brigham Young University, made this statement:

The scriptures indicated that Christ would rule as king over the kingdom of God. Smith took this idea quite literally and thought it only logical that he, as predecessor of the Savior, should enjoy certain prerogatives of royalty. Consequently, shortly before his death, the prophet apparently had himself ordained as “king on earth.” Brigham Young, upon his arrival in the Salt Lake Valley, likewise reportedly had this ceremony performed in the Council of Fifty . . .

The title of king may have been a metaphor, but the power deriving from the office was not. In this respect it is especially important to recall that Smith held his political office by divine right and not by popular sovereignty. However metaphorical these royal pretensions may have been, Smith apparently knew that they were so potentially dangerous as to be entrusted only to the initiated. (Quest For Empire, pages 66-67)

In his master’s thesis, Klaus J. Hanson tells that George Miller, who had been a member of the “Council of Fifty,” admitted the Joseph Smith was ordained to be king:

Rumors implying that the Prophet assumed royal pretensions are somewhat substantiated by George Miller who stated on one occasion that “In this council we ordained Joseph Smith as King of earth.” (“The Theory and Practice of the Political Kingdom of God in Mormon History, 1829-1890,” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, 1959, typed copy, page 114)

In Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Klaus J. Hanson frankly admitted:

...Joseph Smith did start a political kingdom of God and a Council of Fifty; He was made King over the organization; . . . (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1966, page 104)

The Mormon Apostle Parley P. Pratt made this statement:

This Priesthood, including that of the Aaronic, holds the keys of revelation of the oracles of God to man upon the earth; the power and right to give laws and commandments to individuals, churches, rulers, nations and the world; to appoint, ordain, and establish constitutions and kingdoms; to appoint kings, presidents, governors or judges, and to ordain or anoint them to their several holy callings, also to instruct, warn, or reprove them by the word of the Lord. (Key to the Science of Theology; 1855, page 66)

JOSEPH SMITH FOR PRESIDENT

In 1844 the “Council of Fifty” decided to run Joseph Smith for the presidency of the United States. Klaus J. Hanson states:

... the Council of Fifty, while seriously contemplating the possibility of emigration, also considered a rather spectacular alternative, namely, to run its leader the presidency of the United States in the campaign of 1844 . . . Smith and the Council of Fifty seem to have taken the election quite seriously, much more so, indeed, than both Mormons and anti-Mormons have heretofore suspected. (Quest for Empire, page 74)

The Elders of the Church were actually called to electioneer for Joseph Smith. Brigham Young made this statement at a special meeting of the Elders, April 9, 1844:

It is now time to have a President of the United States. Elders will be sent to preach the Gospel and electioneer. (History of the Church, by Joseph Smith, vol. 6, page 322)

At the same meeting, Heber C. Kimball made this statement:

We are going to arrange a plan for Conferences, and we design to send Elders to all the different States to get up meetings and protracted meetings, and electioneer for Joseph to be the next President. (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 325)

Some Mormons have claimed that Joseph Smith was not serious in his attempt to run for the presidency. Klaus J. Hanson, however, makes this statement:

... the Council of Fifty decided to send all available elders on missions to campaign for Joseph Smith and to preach Mormonism at the same time . . . In the privacy of the Council of Fifty, Smith clearly viewed his candidacy more seriously than in public . . . Smith’s own care in keeping the true purposes of his candidacy secret indicates that he knew that the public at large would treat him as demented if it learned of his actual hopes; but this realization also reveals that he at least knew what he was doing. . . .

If Smith had not believed his election in 1844 to be a possibility, why did he enlist the entire manpower of the church in a quixotic venture? (Quest For Empire, pages 78-79)

The attempt by Joseph Smith to become President was evidently a treasonous plot to bring the United States Government under the rule of the Priesthood. Klaus J. Hanson stated:

But what if, through a bold stroke, he could capture the United States for the kingdom? The Council of Fifty thought there might be a chance and nominated the Mormon prophet for the Presidency of the United States. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1966, page 67)

Joseph Smith was apparently planning to reign as a king over the people of the United States. George Miller, who had been a member of the “Council of Fifty,” made this statement in a letter dated June 28, 1855:

It was further determined in Council that all the elders should set out on missions to all the States to get up an electoral ticket, and do everything in our power to have Joseph elected president. If we succeeded in making a majority of the voters converts to our faith, and elected Joseph president, in such an event the dominion of the kingdom would be forever established in the United States; and if not successful, we could fall back on Texas, and be a kingdom notwithstanding. (Letter written by George Miller, dated June 28, 1855, as quoted in Joseph Smith and World Government, by Hyrum Andrus, Salt Lake City, 1963, page 54)

Instead of going to Texas the Mormons settled in the Great Salt Lake valley. Hyrum Andrus admits the Smith and “even considered the alternative of establishing the Saints in the capacity of an independent nation, should all other alternatives fail” (Joseph Smith and World Government, page 60). Klaus J. Hanson stated:

Although the Council of Fifty never fully realized its goal of establishing the Kingdom of God as a separate nation in the Great Basin, it ceaselessly worked in that direction for as long as it seemed possible. . . . Although Brigham Young apparently realized in 1847 that it was impossible to cut the political threads with the United States in the near future, he did his best to render those threads as thin and weak as possible. As a result, the Council of Fifty launched the State of Deseret at a time when it was in absolute political control of the Great Basin, . . . The fact is that the Mormons had migrated to the Rockies precisely for the purpose of setting up their own government, . . . (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1966, pages 68-69)

On September 6, 1857, Hosea Stout recorded the following in his journal:

President B. Young in his Sermon declared that the thre[al]d was cut between us and the U.S. and that the Almighty recognized us as a free and independent people and that no officer appointed by government (sent to [crossed out]) should come and rule over us from this time forth. (On the Mormon Frontier. The Diary of Hosea Stout, edited by Juanita Brooks, vol. 2, page 636)
THE KINGDOM IN UTAH

In a footnote on page 200 of Klaus J. Hanson’s book, Quest For Empire, we find the following:

Former Bishop Andrew Cahoon, whose father Reynolds Cahoon had been a member of the Council of Fifty, testified in 1889: “The King of that Kingdom that was set up on the earth was the head of the Church. Brigham Young proclaimed himself King here in Salt Lake Valley before there was a house built, in 1847.”

Perhaps Heber C. Kimball was referring to this when he said:

The Church and kingdom to which we belong will become the kingdom of our God and his Christ, and brother Brigham Young will become President of the United States.

And I tell you he will be something more; but we do not now want to give him the name: but he is called and ordained to a far greater station than that, and he is foreordained to take that station, and he has got it; and I am Vice-President, and brother Wells is the Secretary of the Interior—yes, and of all the armies in the flesh.

You don’t believe that; but I can tell you it is one of the smallest things that I can think of. You may think that I am joking; but I am perfectly willing that brother Long should write every word of it; for I can see it as naturally as I see the earth and the productions thereof. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 219)

The historian Hurbert Howe Bancroft made this statement concerning an incident that happened on July 24, 1857:

All eyes turned at once to Brigham . . . Gathering the people around him, he repeated the words uttered ten years before, prophesying even now that at no distant day he would himself become President of the United States, or dictate who should be President. (History of Utah, photomechanical reprint of 1889 edition, page 505)

The early Mormons accepted Brigham Young as their dictator. On April 6, 1862, Brigham Young stood before the Mormon people assembled in the Salt Lake Tabernacle and made this statement:

As formerly, I present myself before you this morning in the capacity Providence has lead me to occupy, acknowledged and sustained by you as the dictator, counsellor, and adviser of the people of God. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 9, page 267)

Heber C. Kimball made this statement:

President Young is our governor and our dictator. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 19)

On another occasion he stated:

. . . we look up to President Young as our leader, Prophet, and dictator. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 222)

On August 13, 1871, Brigham Young boasted:

I sometimes say to my brethren, “I have been your dictator for twenty-seven years—over a quarter of a century I have dictated this people; that ought to be some evidence that my course is onward and upward.” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, page 205)

Under the dictatorship of Brigham Young the Mormon people had very little freedom. John Taylor, who later became the third President of the Mormon Church, stated:

Was the kingdom that the Prophets talked about, that should be set up in the latter times, going to be a Church? Yes. And a State? Yes, it was going to be both Church and State, to rule both temporally and spiritually. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 24)

On another occasion he stated:

We used to have a difference between Church and State, but it is all one now. Thank God, we have no more temporal and spiritual! (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 266)

The Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt remarked:

Ours is an Ecclesiastical Church, and an Ecclesiastical State. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 8, page 105)

Klaus J. Hanson makes this statement about the Mormon Kingdom:

Church and kingdom thus had come full circle. For the most part, they were separate in theory only. Ultimately, no distinction could be drawn between the two. The priesthood that controlled the church also controlled the state. (Quest of Empire, page 36)

On pages 137-138 of the same book, Klaus J. Hanson gives us this interesting information:

An examination of Utah territorial legislatures from 1851 to 1896 reveals that not until the 1880’s, when the influx of Gentiles into the territory in large numbers began to crack Mormon hegemony, did the Council of Fifty lose its political influence. . . .

Since church members followed the advice of the hierarchy in matters both spiritual and temporal, the Council never had any difficulty in assuring election of its candidates. Nominations were made by leading church authorities; absence of the secret ballot assured that only the most recalcitrant would dare oppose the official slate. Stanley S. Ivins, in a study of eighteen annual elections from 1852 to 1870, observed that “of the 96,107 votes cast, over this 18 years period, 96 per cent went to the regular candidate. And if the known Gentile ballots are eliminated, the percentage rises to 97.4.” Casting a vote in opposition to approved candidates was severely frowned upon, but was not in and of itself grounds for disciplinary action. Running for political office without church approval, however, was a much more serious matter. In the Mormon colony of San Bernardino, California, B. F. Grouard and F. M. Van Leuven were disfellowshipped simply because they ran for political office against other church members nominated by the authorities, who, incidentally, also happened to be members of the Council of Fifty. Another case of willful opposition to the political counsel of church leaders occurred in 1854. One of the candidates nominated as representative for Salt Lake County in the legislature, Albert P. Rockwood, had incurred the dislike of a group of voters, who nominated a candidate of their own, Stephen H. Hales, in opposition. According to John Hyde, Jr., a Mormon apostate, Hales obtained the majority; “Stephen Hales was accordingly sent for by Brigham, who gave him a severe reprimand for daring to allow his name to be used as an opponent of ‘the church nomination.’” Hales was compelled to resign, and Rockwood seated instead. The most important fact of this incident, apparently unknown to Hales and his supporters, and to Hyde, was that Rockwood belonged to the Council of Fifty.

Brigham Young became the governor of the territory, and Heber C. Kimball boasted that all the members of the Legislature in Utah held the Priesthood:

It is the best legislative body there is upon the face of the earth, because they hold the Priesthood, and there is no person there only those who hold it—the leading men of Israel. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 129)

The Mormon people were taught to all vote one way, John Taylor stated:

In political matters we are pretty well united. At our elections we generally vote as a unit. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 11, page 355)

Brigham Young was very opposed to democratic elections. On April 8, 1871, he remarked:

This is the plant or tree from which schism springs; and every government lays the foundation of its own downfall when it permits what are called democratic elections. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, page 93)

In 1853 Dr. Bernhisel was chosen as a delegate to Congress in the Mormon Tabernacle. Brigham Young stated:
If we wish to make political speeches, and it is necessary, for the best interest of the cause and Kingdom of God, to make them on the Sabbath, we do it. . . .

Brother Kimball has seconded the motion, that Doctor Bernhisel be sent back to Washington, as our delegate. All who are in favor of it, raise your right hands. (More than two thousand hands were at once seen above the heads of the congregation.)

This has turned into a caucus meeting. It is all right, I would call for an opposite vote if I thought any person would vote. I will try it, however. (Not a single hand was raised in opposition.) (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 188)

In The Mormon Kingdom we hope to be able to give a very detailed study of the Mormon struggle for power. Volume one will deal with the Mormon Church in New York, Missouri and Ohio. In other volumes we hope to deal with the Church in Illinois and in Utah. We feel that this will be a very important work and that all of our readers should have a copy.

We are asking our readers to pay for volume one in advance. The pages will be mailed as they are printed (we will try to mail about 20 pages at a time). Volume one will contain at least 100 pages. The pages will be 8 1/2 by 11 inches; therefore, they will contain a lot of information. We are including a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder to preserve and protect the pages. The price for volume one of The Mormon Kingdom (including the loose-leaf binder) is $4.95. The quantity prices are: 2 for $8.95 — 4 for $14.95 — 10 for $29.70.

A TESTING TIME?

The following statement appeared in an article in Time Magazine:

Outwardly secure and successful, the unique religion created by Joseph Smith and carried to Utah by Brigham Young is none the less at a testing time. Much as in the churches of mainstream Christianity, Mormonism is being prodded out of its old ways by a new generation of believers who temper loyalty to the faith with a conviction that its doctrines need updating. Worried about the relevance of Mormonism, some of them are all but openly critical of the policies fostered by the church’s venerable, conservative hierarchy. . . . The doctrine most under fire within the church is the traditional teaching that Negroes, the cursed sons of Cain, are not eligible for the priesthood, . . . Williams [J. D. Williams] calls it “un-Christian and theologically unsound,” says that the teaching “looks so anachronistic that it engenders hostility in the world around us.”

Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, a Mormon who describes himself as “deeply troubled by the issue,” says that the church’s policy “is like granting citizenship and saying ‘you can’t hold office.’” (Time, April 14, 1967, page 104)

Paul Hughes, publisher’s consultant of Reveille Magazine, wrote an article in which he stated:

George Romney has precipitated a crisis in the Mormon Church that may well rank with the plague of the locusts, and this time there are no providential gulls in sight.

As a liberal Republican aspiring to the presidency, Romney can point to a commendable civil rights record during his governorship in Michigan. As one of the Latter-day Saints, Romney is compelled at the same time to point to a church which officially sanctifies race prejudice and which declares today, as it has for over a century, that people with black skins are inferior creatures because that’s just the way the Lord wants them.

This may eventually fragment Romney into warring halves. More important, it could trust the Mormons, who have always referred proudly to themselves as a “peculiar people,” completely outside the pale of American life. There is, however, a third threat which is not nearly as well known: Interior tensions, accelerating now for many years, may shatter the church beyond all redemption. . . . the Mormons themselves do not know exactly how they painted themselves into this suffocating corner. They quote vague traditions. They refer to conflicting scriptural justifications. They consult their highest officers, and the truth is that they don’t really know, either. (The Oregonian, Portland, Oregon, April 2, 1967)

In the last Messenger we showed that the Mormon Church has had a steady decline in the number of converts from 1962 to 1965. The figures for 1966 are now available (see charts in next column). They show that the decline has continued in spite of the fact that there were more full-time missionaries than ever before.

With the number of converts decreasing and the dissatisfaction within, the Church is truly facing a crisis.

R.L.D.S. CHURCH

Unfortunately, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has refused to provide us with information which is vital to the research we are doing. We have letters dating back to 1961 from them and will be forced to print them unless they immediately notify us of a change of policy.

A PERSONAL GOD?

To all those who will send us their address and zip code we will send a FREE COPY of Is There a Personal God? This is a 56-page pamphlet by Jerald Tanner. We would like to have all of our readers have a copy of this pamphlet. Please write for your free copy today.

Thankful

A couple in Missouri has given us a great deal of financial help. It came at a time when we really needed it, and we are very thankful to them and to the Lord for laying our work upon their hearts.

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone.

Who among you is wise or clever? Let his right conduct give practical proof of it, with the modesty that comes of wisdom.

James 3:13 — The New English Bible
The Mormon Apostle LeGrand Richards made this statement:

> On the morning of a beautiful spring day in 1820 there occurred one of the most important and momentous events in this world's history. God, the Eternal Father and His Son, Jesus Christ, appeared to Joseph Smith and gave instructions concerning the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth in these latter days. (A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, 1966, page 7)

Joseph Smith published this story in the Mormon publication, Times and Seasons, in 1842. The following is the description of the vision as written by Joseph Smith:

> ... there was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion. It commenced with the Methodists, but soon became general among all the sects in that region of country, indeed the whole district of country seemed affected by it, and great multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties, ... I retired to the woods ... It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of eighteen hundred and twenty ... I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, ... When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other) “This is my beloved Son, hear him.” ... I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, ... I was answered that I must join none of them, for they are all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt, ... He again forbade me to join with any of them: and many other things did he say unto me which I cannot write at this time. (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pages 727-728, 748-749)

To the Mormon people the First Vision is extremely important. They use this story to prove that God and Christ are two distinct personages and that they both have a body. In other words, they use it to prove that God, Himself, is only an exalted man. George Q. Cannon, who was a member of the First Presidency, made this statement in 1883:

> This revelation dissipated all misconceptions and all false ideas, ... The Father came accompanied by the Son thus showing that there were two personages of the Godhead, ... Joseph saw that the Father had a form; that He had a head; that He had arms; that He had limbs; and He had feet; that He had a face and a tongue. ... (Journal of Discourses, vol. 24, page 372)

STRANGE ACCOUNTS

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe made this comment concerning Joseph Smith’s First Vision:

> The First Vision of 1820 is of first importance in the history of Joseph Smith. Upon its reality rest the truth and value of his subsequent work. Professed enemies of Joseph Smith and his work, have felt themselves helpless in their efforts to destroy the reality of the First Vision and have said little about it. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, page 19)

For years the Mormon leaders have publicly maintained the Joseph Smith told only one story concerning the First Vision. Preston Nibley made this statement: “Joseph Smith lived a little more than twenty-four years after this first vision. During this time he told but one story—....” (Joseph Smith the Prophet, 1944, page 30).

At the very time that Preston Nibley made this statement the Mormon leaders were suppressing at least two accounts of the First Vision, which were written prior to the account which Joseph Smith published in the Times and Seasons.

Levi Edgar Young, who was the head of the Seven Presidents of Seventies in the Mormon Church, told LaMar Petersen that he had examined a “strange” account of the First Vision and was told not to reveal what it contained. After hearing LaMar Petersen’s account of his interview with Levi Edgar Young, we wrote to Joseph Fielding Smith, the Mormon Church Historian, enclosing $1.00 and asking for a photocopy of this “strange” account. Unfortunately, this letter was never answered, and we had almost given up hope of ever seeing this document. To our great surprise, however, two “strange” accounts have now come to light. The first appeared in the thesis, “An Analysis of the Accounts Relating Joseph Smith’s Early Visions,” by Paul R. Cheesman. Mr. Cheesman was a student at the Brigham Young University—a Mormon university. He evidently wrote his thesis in rebuttal to statements we had made concerning the First Vision in our writings. Although he tries to support the First Vision story, he has reproduced a document dictated by Joseph Smith himself which not only proves that he did not see the Father and the Son in 1820, but also casts a shadow of doubt upon his entire story of the origin of the church. This document was reproduced in Appendix D of Mr. Cheesman’s thesis.

James B. Allen, Associate Professor of History at Brigham Young University, made this statement concerning the document: of the early experiences of the Mormon prophet and includes the story of the first vision. While the story varies in some details from the version presently accepted, enough is there to indicate that at least as early as 1833 Joseph Smith contemplated writing and perhaps publishing it. The manuscript has apparently lain in the L.D.S. Church Historian's office for many years, and yet few if any who saw it realized its profound historical significance. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1966, page 35)

> One of the most significant documents of the period yet discovered was brought to light in 1965 by Paul R. Cheesman, a graduate student at Brigham Young University. This is a handwritten manuscript apparently composed about 1833 and either written or dictated by Joseph Smith. It contains an account (Continued on page 2)

The “strange” account of the vision reads as follows:

. . . a pillar of light above the brightness of the sun at noon day come down from above and rested upon me and I was filled with the Spirit of god and the Lord opened the heavens upon me and I saw the Lord and he spake unto me saying Joseph my son Thy Sins are forgiven thee, go thy way walk in my statutes and keep my commandments behold I am the Lord of glory I was crucified for the world, that all those who believe on my name may have Eternal life behold he won't lie in sin at this time and none doeth good no not one they have turned aside from the gospel and keep not my commandments they draw near to me with their lips while their hearts are far from me and mine anger is kindling against the inhabitants of the earth to bring to pass that which hath been spoken by the mouth of the prophets and apostles behold and lo I come quickly as it was written of me in the cloudy clothed in the glory of my Father . . . (“An Analysis of the Accounts Relating Joseph Smith’s Early Visions,” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, by Paul R. Cheesman, May, 1965, page 129)

Notice that in this account Joseph Smith said, “I saw the Lord,” whereas in the printed account he said, “I saw two personages.” This is definitely a contradiction. In the first account Joseph Smith told that the Lord said he was “crucified for the world.” This would mean that the personage was Jesus Christ. Therefore, we see that Joseph Smith did not include God the Father in his first account of the vision. James B. Allen stated:

In this story, only one personage was mentioned, and this was obviously the Son, for he spoke of having been crucified. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1966, page 40)

Paul R. Cheesman tries to excuse this by saying:

As he writes briefly of the vision, he does not mention the Father as being present; however, this does not indicate that he was not present. (“An Analysis of the Accounts Relating Joseph Smith’s Early Visions,” page 63)

This explanation by Paul Cheesman does not seem reasonable. Actually, in the first account Joseph Smith quotes the Lord as saying more words than in the printed account. Why would he not mention the most important part of the story?

If God the Father had appeared in this vision, Joseph Smith certainly would have included this information in his first account. It is absolutely impossible for us to believe that Joseph Smith would not have mentioned the Father if He had actually appeared.

The only reasonable explanation for the Father not being mentioned is that Joseph Smith did not see God the Father, and that he made up this part of the story after he dictated the first manuscript. This, of course, throws a shadow of doubt upon the whole story.

Although Mr. Cheesman evidently wrote his thesis in defense of Joseph Smith’s story of the First Vision, by including the “strange” account he has probably done more to destroy the story than he could ever imagine. It not only shows that Joseph Smith was a deceiver, but it also shows that the Mormon leaders have been suppressing vital information from their people.

After this “strange” account came to light, a Mormon Seminary teacher told us that there was still another account of the First Vision which the Mormon leaders were suppressing. To our great surprise, this second account was published in the Autumn, 1966, issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. Although this magazine is published by Mormons, it has “no official connection” with the Mormon Church, and therefore the Mormon leaders cannot dictate what can or cannot appear in this publication. This account appeared in an article by James B. Allen, Associate Professor of History at the BYU, and bishop of the BYU Sixteenth Ward. Mr. Allen made this statement concerning the document:

Another document of almost equal importance has recently been brought to light by a member of the staff at the Church Historian’s office. It is located in the back of Book A-1 of the handwritten manuscript of the History of the Church (commonly referred to as the “Manuscript History”). . . . In short, it is almost certain that the document in the back of the book comprises the original notes from which the “Manuscript History” was later compiled, and is actually a daily account of Joseph Smith’s activities in 1835, as recorded by a scribe. The importance of the manuscript here lies in the fact that the scribe wrote down what Joseph Smith said to his visitor, and he began . . . with an account of the first vision. Again, the details of the story vary somewhat from the accepted version . . . . (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1966, pages 35-36)

We being wrought up in my mind respecting the subject of Religion, and looking at the different systems taught the children of men, I knew not who was right or who was wrong but considered it of the first importance to me that I should be right in matters of so much moment, matter involving eternal consequences.

Being thus perplexed in mind I retired to the silent grove and there bowed before the Lord, under a realising sense (if the Bible be true) ask and you shall receive, knock and it shall be opened, seek and you shall find, and again if any man lack wisdom, let of God [sic] who giveth to all men liberally & upbraideth not. Information was what I most desired, at this time and with a fixed determination to obtain it. I called on the Lord for the first time in the place above stated, or in other words, I made a fruitless attempt to pray. My tongue seemed to be swollen in my mouth, so that I could not utter, I heard a noise behind me like some one walking towards me, I strove again to pray, but could not; the noise of walking seemed to draw nearer; I sprang upon my feet and looked around, but I saw no person, or thing that was calculated to produce the noise of walking. I knelted again, my mouth was opened and my tongue loosened; I called on the Lord in mighty prayer. A pillar of fire appeared above my head; which presently rested down upon me, and filled me with unspeakable joy. A personage appeared in the midst of this pillar of flame, which was spread all around and yet nothing consumed. Another personage soon appeared like unto the first; he said unto me thy sins are forgiven thee.

He testified also unto me that Jesus Christ is the son of God. I saw many angels in this vision. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1966, pages 40-41)

Earl E. Olson, who is now the Assistant Church Historian, has confirmed the fact that James B. Allen has accurately reproduced this document. In a letter dated October 26, 1966, he stated:

The quote which you referred to in your letter of October 21 pertaining to Joseph Smith’s first vision which is recorded in Book A-1 of the Documentary History appears in the issue of Dialogue on page 40. We have compared the account in Dialogue with the original recording as we have it here and find that it is identical word for word and has been accurately copied. (Letter from Earl Olson, to W. P. Walters, dated October 26, 1966)

In this account of the First Vision there is absolutely nothing to show that the personages were God and Christ. The statement, “He testified also unto me that Jesus Christ is the son of God,” would seem to show that the personages were not the Father and the Son. If Joseph Smith had intended to show that the personage who spoke was Jesus, he probably would have said something like this: “He testified also unto me that He was the Son of God.” On the other hand, if he would probably have said something like this: “He testified also unto me that Jesus Christ was His Son.”

Joseph Smith’s statement that the second personage did not appear until after the first contradicts the version that he later published. In the published version he stated that “when the light rested upon me I saw two personages, . . .”

As if this was not bad enough, he states there were “many angels in this vision.” Neither of the other versions indicated that there were “many angels.”

Now we have three different accounts of the First Vision, and every one of them is different. The first account says there was only one personage. The second account says there were many, and the third says there were two. We would, of course, expect some variations in any story told more than once, but we feel that there are so many variations in Joseph Smith’s story and they are of such a nature that they make it impossible to believe.
NO REVIVAL IN 1820

In Joseph Smith’s published account of the First Vision he tells that a revival was taking place in his neighborhood at the time he had his vision. This would mean that the revival was going strong in the spring of 1820. Joseph Smith states that “great multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties” at the time of this revival. The Mormon writer Preston Nibley stated that there are “several accounts of the religious revival which took place at Palmyra in the spring of 1820” (Joseph Smith the Prophet, 1944, page 21). We have checked the references which Preston Nibley gives and have found them to be spurious (see The Case Against Mormonism, page 111-112). Mr. Nibley gives two references from a publication which are supposed to refer to the 1820 revival. We have found, however, that these references do not refer to a revival in 1820, but rather to one in the years 1824-25. These references have been found in the Wayne Sentinel under the date of March 2, 1825.

In briefly looking over the Palmyra Register (the local newspaper) we have found no evidence of a revival in Palmyra in 1820. Wesley P. Walters, of Marissa, Illinois, whom we consider to be one of the best authorities on Mormon history, had made a very thorough study of the revivals in Palmyra and vicinity and has come to the conclusion that there was absolutely no revival in 1820. In a letter to us dated July 6, 1966, Wesley P. Walters states:

In the light of the historical records of the day, it is clear to see that there was no revival in either Palmyra or in its immediate neighborhood in the year 1820, in either the Methodist, Baptist or Presbyterian churches. To maintain such an idea is to fly in the face of every piece of contemporary historical information. In fact, Smith could hardly have chosen a poorer year in which to locate his revival story. All the churches in all the denominations seem to have been in a slump and barely struggling to maintain their existence.

Wesley Walters has written an article entitled, “New Light on Mormon Origins From the Palmyra (N.Y.) Revival.” This article will be published in the near future. Mr. Walters has kindly given us permission to quote from his manuscript. In this manuscript he states:

… the point at which one might most conclusively test the accuracy of Smith’s story has never been adequately explored. A vision, by its inward, personal nature, does not lend itself to historical investigation. A revival is a different matter, especially one such as Joseph Smith describes, in which “great multitudes” were said to have joined the various churches involved. Such a revival does not pass from the scene without leaving some traces in the records and publications of the period. In this study we wish to show by contemporary records that the revival, which Smith claimed occurred in 1820, did not really occur until the fall of 1824. We also show that in 1820 there was no revival in any of the churches in Palmyra or its vicinity. In short, our investigation shows that the statement of Joseph Smith, Jr. can not be true when he claims that he was stirred up by an 1820 revival to make his inquiry in the grove near his home. (“New Light On Mormon Origins…” typed copy, pages 1-2)

The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts claimed that both Rev. Stockton and Rev. Lane were present at the revival, which he claims occurred in the spring of 1820:

… the Reverend Mr. Stockton of the Presbyterian church was the leading spirit… The Reverend Mr. Lane of the Methodist church preached a sermon on the subject, “What church shall I join?” He quoted the golden text of James—“… The text made a deep impression on the mind of the Prophet. (A Comprehensive History of the Church, 1930, vol. 1, pages 51-53)

Wesley Walters, however, shows this could not have occurred in 1820:

The records, however of both the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, to which Mr. Stockton and Mr. Lane respectively belonged, make it clear that neither of these men were assigned to the Palmyra area until 1824. Rev. Benjamin B. Stockton from March 4, 1818 until June 30, 1822 was serving as pastor of the church at Skaneateles, N.Y. While he did visit Palmyra for a speech to the youth missionary society in October 1822, the Palmyra newspaper still describes him as “Rev. Stockton of Skaneateles.” The earliest contemporary reference to his ministering in the Palmyra area is in connection with a wedding November 26, 1823, just a week after Alvin Smith’s death. Following this date there are several references to his performing some service there, but he was not installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church until February 18, 1824. It is in this latter year, 1824, that Rev. James Hotchkin, in cataloging the revivals that occurred in the churches of Geneva Presbytery, writes, under the heading of the Palmyra church, that “a copious shower of grace passed over this region in 1824, under the labors of Mr. Stockton, and a large number were gathered into the church, some of whom are now pillars in Christ’s house.”

In the summer of 1819 Rev. Mr. Lane, whom Mormon writers have correctly identified as Rev. George Lane, was assigned to serve the Susquehanna District in central Pennsylvania, over 150 miles from Palmyra. He served this area for 5 years and not until July of 1824 did he receive an appointment to serve as Presiding Elder of the Ontario District in which Palmyra is located. This post he held only until January of 1825 when ill health in his family forced him to leave the ministry for a while. Any revival, therefore, in which both Lane and Stockton shared, as the accounts of Oliver Cowdery and William Smith both indicate, has to fall in the latter half of the year 1824, and not in the year 1820.

An even more surprising confirmation that this revival occurred in 1824 and not in 1820 has just recently come to light. While searching through some dusty volumes of early Methodist literature at a near-by Methodist college, imagine our surprise and elation when we stumbled upon Rev. George Lane’s own personal account of the Palmyra revival. It was written, not at some years distance from the event as the Mormon accounts all were, while the revival was still in progress and was printed a few months later. Lane’s account gives us not only the year 1824, but even the month and date. By the aid of this account, supplemented by numerous additional references which we shortly thereafter uncovered, we are able to give nearly a month-by-month progress report on the spread of the revival through the community and surrounding area, and it was indeed an outstanding revival. (“New Light On Mormon Origins From The Palmyra (N.Y) Revival,” typed copy, pages 4-5)

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe maintained the Palmyra was “swept in the winter and spring of 1820 by a religious revival” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, page 1). He claimed that Reverend Lane took part in this revival. On page 22 of this book he stated that Oliver Cowdery “in his letters confirms the story of Reverend Lane and the date of his work in Palmyra.”

Actually, Oliver Cowdery did not confirm the date as 1820. Instead he insisted that the correct date should be “1823” (see his letter in the Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, page 78). In footnote 10 on page 22 of his book, Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, John A. Widtsoe stated:

Reverend Lane himself confirms the dates of the revival. It was in 1820, not 1823.

Notice that John A. Widtsoe gives no source for this statement. When Wesley P. Walters wrote the LDS Church Historian’s office asking for documentation of the Apostle Widtsoe’s statement, he received a letter from Lauritz G. Petersen, Assistant Librarian. In this letter Lauritz Petersen stated:

The letter that you sent to Mr. Earl Olson was handed to me to answer. I checked all the footnotes or found the footnote[s] for Mr. Widtsoe’s book on Joseph Smith.

The reference made by Mr. Widtsoe on page 22 in n. 10 could not be verified. I asked Mr. Widtsoe not to insert it in the book, but he did anyway. (Letter from Lauritz G. Petersen, Assistant Church Librarian, to Wesley P. Walters, dated December 7, 1824)

From this it would appear that the Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe used deception in order to try to prove that the revival occurred in 1820. Wesley P. Walters shows beyond any question that the revival did not start until 1824:

By September 1825 the results of the revival of Palmyra had become a matter of record. The Presbyterian church reported 99 admitted on examination and the Baptist had received 94 by baptism, while the Methodist circuit showed an increase of 208. Cowdery’s claim of “large additions” and Joseph Smith’s statement that “great multitudes united themselves to the different religious parties” was certainly no over-statement.
When we turn to the year 1920, however, the “great multitudes” are conspicuously missing. The Presbyterian Church in Palmyra certainly experienced no awakening that year. Rev. James Hotchklin’s history records revivals for the church as occurring in the years 1817, 1824, 1829, etc, but nothing for the year 1820. The records of Presbytery and Synod give the same picture. Early in February 1820 Presbytery reported revivals at Geneva (summer 1819), and Junius 1st and Cayuga (“lately”) all a considerable distance from Palmyra, with “prospects of a revival” at Canandaigua and Phelps, 15 and 25 miles distant. While the “effects” of these revivals were reported in September 1820 as continuing, the remainder of that year and the next showed “no distinct mention of a revival,” “no special revival in any of our congregations,” “no general revivals of religion during the year.” Since these reports always rejoice at any sign of a revival in the churches, it is inconceivable that a great awakening had occurred in their Palmyra congregation and gone completely unnoticed.

The Baptist Church records also show clearly that they had no revival in 1820, for the Palmyra congregation gained only 5 by baptism, while the neighboring Baptist churches of Lyons, Canandaigua and Farmington showed net losses of 4, 5 and 9 respectively. An examination of the figures for the years preceding and following 1820 yields the same picture of no revival so far as the Baptist Church of the area is concerned.

The Methodist figures, though referring to the entire circuit, give the same results, for they show net losses of 23 for 1819, 6 for 1820, and 40 for 1821. This hardly fits Joseph Smith’s description of “great multitudes” being added to the churches of the area. In fact the Mormon Prophet could hardly have picked a poorer year in which to place his revival, so far as the Methodists were concerned.

Another significant omission lies in the area of the religious press. The denominational magazines of that day were full of reports of revivals, some even devoting a separate section to it. These publications carried over a dozen glowing reports of the revival that broke out at Palmyra in the winter of 1816-1817. Likewise, the 1824-1825 revivals is covered in an equal number of reports. These same magazines, however, while busily engaged in reporting revivals during the 1819 to 1821 period, contain not a single mention of any revival occurring in the Palmyra area during that time. It is unbelievable that every one of the denominations affected by a revival such as Joseph Smith described as happening in 1820 could have completely overlooked the event.

The only reasonable explanation for this massive silence is that no revival occurred at Palmyra in 1820.

. . . We believe that the firmness of the revival date as the fall of 1824, the features of Smith’s story as fitting only that date, and the absence of any revival in the year 1820 are established beyond any reasonable doubt, and will force upon Mormon writers a drastic re-evaluation of the foundation of their church. (“New Light on Mormon Origins From the Palmyra (N.Y.) Revival,” typed copy, pages 8-10 and 15)

In a summary to his study, Wesley P. Walters stated:

Shall we suppose that Prophet Smith really had a vision as he claimed but that his mind had merely become fuzzy on the date of the happening? Since the revival is a matter of historical record and that date can’t be changed, will it help any to move Smith’s vision to the spring of 1825 instead of the spring of 1820? We believe not. Smith claimed that he was told about the Book of Mormon plates September 21, 1823. This was his second vision. If we move his first vision to the spring of 1825, however, then he would already know about the plates before he ever asked for heavenly guidance. The only way, then, to make his story hang together would be to reshuffle all of his dates. This, however, would completely change the character of his story. Instead of being the naive boy of 14, he would in 1825 be a young man of 19 who in less than a year had found himself a married man. Such a change would only emphasize more clearly that he must have fabricated his story out of whole cloth.

Joseph made his great mistake when he tried to alter the course of history by moving a whole revival back some 4 years. This defect places his entire movement upon a crumbling foundation. For our part we agree that “life is too short to follow something false, when we can follow what is true” (Richard Evans). We urge all to find in Christ alone “the way, the truth and the life.”

In The Case Against Mormonism we devote 43 pages to Joseph Smith’s First Vision. All of our readers should have a copy of this book. See the front page for further information.

FRAUDULENT ACTS

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe made this statement concerning Joseph Smith:

No reliable evidence of dishonesty has yet been uncovered. There is no evidence that he at any time attempted to escape his financial obligations. Instead, the evidence is that he sought to meet every honest obligation.

For example, after leaving Kirtland where his life was in jeopardy, he made a list of his creditors and the amount owed each. That was the method of an honest man. There was no subterfuge. . . . Sooner or later, his honest debts were paid. (Gospel Interpretations, page 141)

Now, while it is true that Joseph Smith made a list of his creditors, he apparently did not intend to pay them, for in 1842 he tried to take out bankruptcy. The Mormon writer John A. Stewart states:

In summer of 1842 he had reluctantly availed himself of the bankruptcy law passed by Congress, to dispose of a staggering debt load, . . . (Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, page 183)

Shortly after Joseph Smith petitioned to be declared a bankrupt, John C. Bennett published his book, History of the Saints. In this book he charged that Joseph Smith fraudulently transferred some of his property to others to avoid losing it. J. Butterfield, United States Attorney for the District of Illinois, saw John C. Bennett’s charges printed in the Sangamo Journal on July 15, 1842. He felt that an investigation should be made to see if Bennett’s accusations were true. Joseph Smith and four others had signed a promissory note to the United States Government for $4,866.38 in 1840 which they had not paid off. Therefore, Butterfield proceeded to Nauvoo to make his investigation. After making the investigation, he wrote a letter to C. B. Penrose, Solicitor of the Treasury, in which he stated:

Upon my arrival at Nauvoo I made a very full examination into the transfers of property made by Joseph Smith upon the eve of his application for the benefit of the said act, and I succeeded beyond my expectations; I found that after the passage of the Bankrupt Act, and after he had contracted the debt upon which the judg’t. in favor of the United States was rendered against him, he made voluntary conveyances of real estate of an amount much more than sufficient to satisfy the judgement to his wife and to his infant children and friends, without any consideration whatever: I found that all the statement made by Gen’l Bennett in relation to Joseph Smith’s fraudulent transfers of his property were true; and that there were several other fraudulent conveyances not mentioned by him. . . . I shall be ready to establish such fraudulent acts on the part of Joseph Smith as will prevent his discharge. (Letter by J. Butterfield, U.S. Attorney for the District of Illinois to C. B. Penrose, Solicitor of the Treasury, dated October 13, 1842, found in the National Archives of the United States, Records of the Solicitor of the Treasury, Record Group 206, microfilm copy)

The attempt to stop Joseph Smith was successful, for on August 6, 1844, Butterfield wrote Penrose a letter in which he stated: “I defeated Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet from obtaining the benefit of the Bankrupt Act.” Since Smith died in 1844, the matter was not settled until after his death. In a “Reference Service Report” from the National Archives, dated September 23, 1963, we find that a judgment “was rendered against the widow of Joseph Smith and 104 other defendants . . . in which the decree of the court was satisfied by sale of the defendant’s lands.”

For many years anti-Mormon writers have accused the early Mormon leaders of fraud, treason, stealing, counterfeiting, murder and many other crimes. We have made a very thorough study of these charges, and, like Butterfield, we have succeeded beyond our expectations. In our work, The Mormon Kingdom we will deal with all of these subjects. See the front page for further information concerning this work.

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone.
Paul Hughes, publisher’s consultant of Reveille Magazine, wrote an article in which he stated:

George Romney has precipitated a crisis in the Mormon Church that may well rank with the plague of the locusts, and this time there are no providential gulls in sight.

... interior tensions, accelerating now for many years, may shatter the church beyond all redemption. (The Oregonian, Portland, Oregon, April 2, 1967)

Two of the most serious problems facing the Mormon Church today are the Negro question and the question of the authenticity of the Book of Abraham. These two issues could very well “shatter the church beyond all redemption.”

In the year 1835 the Mormon people purchased some Egyptian mummies and rolls of papyrus. Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, made this statement concerning the papyri:

...I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt, etc.,—a more full account of which will appear in its place, as I proceed to examine or unfold them. Truly we can say, the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236)

The Book of Abraham was published in 1842 and is now found as a part of the Pearl of Great Price (one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church).

For a long period of time the Mormon leaders claimed that the original papyri were burned in the Chicago fire. On November 27, 1967, however, the Deseret News announced:

NEW YORK — A collection of papyrus manuscripts, long believed to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871, was presented to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints here Monday by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Included in the papyri is a manuscript identified as the original document from which Joseph Smith had copied the drawing which he called “Facsimile No. 1” and published with the Book of Abraham. (Deseret News, November 27, 1967, page 1)

Even though the papyri were lost for a number of years, Joseph Smith included three drawing in his Book of Abraham and also gave a translation of much of the material which appeared in these drawings.

In the year 1912 F. S. Spalding sent the facsimiles from the Pearl of Great Price to a number of the most noted Egyptologists. These Egyptologists examined the facsimiles and Joseph Smith’s interpretation of them and declared that his interpretation was fraudulent. Letters from these Egyptologists are published in the book, Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, 1912, by F. S. Smith was not able to translate Egyptian and that the Book of Abraham was a work of his own imagination. What the Mormon leaders claimed were the writings of Abraham and Joseph in Egypt turn out to be nothing but parts of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. Very revealing. Price: 50¢ — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

NOW BACK IN PRINT!

For a number of months we have been sold out of the book, Why Egyptologists Reject the Book of Abraham. We are now happy to announce, however, that it is back in print. Although it has not been our policy to reprint books that have sold out we have received so many requests for this particular book that we felt that it had to be reprinted. Because of the recent papyri find and the articles by Hugh Nibley in the Improvement Era, this book has become even more significant. It contains photomechanical reprints of Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, by F. S. Spalding, D.D. and Joseph Smith as an Interpreter and Translator of Egyptian, by Samuel A. B. Mercer, Ph.D.

Price: $1.50 — 3 for $4.00 — 5 for $6.00 — 10 for $9.00.

SPECIAL ON “CASE” & “KINGDOM”

Our two major works are entitled, The Case Against Mormonism and The Mormon Kingdom. A reader from Canada made this statement in a letter to us:

Allow me first to congratulate you for both The Mormon Kingdom and The Case Against Mormonism. I must confess that I had my doubts that you would be able to surpass your efforts in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? but I can assure you that these doubts have been dissipated. Your discussion of “The First Vision” alone in The Case Against Mormonism justifies the investment.

Now that we have completed volume 1 of The Case Against Mormonism, we are selling it in plastic binding for $2.95 — 2 for $4.95 — 5 for $9.95 — 10 for $17.70.

We have also completed 112 pages of volume 2 of The Case Against Mormonism. This volume deals primarily with the Book of Mormon. In order to receive the pages as they are printed the reader must have the vinyl loose-leaf binder. To receive these two volumes and the loose-leaf binder the customer would normally pay $7.90. We are having a special, however, and if these two volumes are ordered before March 31, 1968, the reader will receive both volumes and the binder for only $6.95.

We have completed 82 pages of the first volume of the Mormon Kingdom. The normal price for volume 1 (including the vinyl binder) is $4.95, but if it is ordered before March 31, 1968, the price will be only $3.95.

* * NEW BOOKS * *

The Mormon Papyri Question, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A 28-page pamphlet dealing with the recent discovery of the Mormon papyri. Proves that Joseph Smith was not able to translate Egyptian and that the Book of Abraham was a work of his own imagination. What the Mormon leaders claimed were the writings of Abraham and Joseph in Egypt turn out to be nothing but parts of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. Very revealing. Price: 50¢ — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

The Negro in Mormon Theology, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A 58-page pamphlet. Most important material which appeared in Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro is included in this pamphlet. Also contains new material. Alvin R. Dyer’s speech, which was “not” meant for the investigator, is printed in full. Price: 50¢ — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

Spalding, D.D. On page 27 of this pamphlet we find the following statement by Dr. Arthur C. Mace, Asst. Curator, Metropolitan Museum of Art, Dept. of Egyptian Art:

I return herewith, . . . the Pearl of Great Price. The “Book of Abraham,” it is hardly necessary to say, is a pure fabrication . . . Joseph Smith’s interpretation of these cuts is a farrago of nonsense from beginning to end. Egyptian characters can now be read almost as easily as Greek, and five minutes’ study in an Egyptian gallery of any museum should be enough to convince any educated man of the clumsiness of the imposture. (Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, page 27)

In 1964 we reprinted F. S. Spalding’s pamphlet in a work titled Why Egyptologists Reject the Book of Abraham. Wallace Turner, a correspondent for the New York Times, examined this work and came to the following conclusion:

. . . I am convinced by very simple direct evidence that the Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. (The Mormon Establishment, by Wallace Turner, 1966, page 233)

In 1966 we published Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar—a document which the Mormon leaders had suppressed for 130 years. This work was submitted to some of the world’s top Egyptologists. These Egyptologists examined Joseph Smith’s work and denounced it as fraudulent.

The Mormon leaders have tried to ignore the criticism of the Book of Abraham and Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and to pretend that they have no problems. We predicted that the time would come when they would have to face their problems. Perhaps that time has now come.

The January 1968 issue of the Improvement Era, a Mormon publication, announced:

Recent challenges that question the authenticity of many statements in one of the standard works of the Church, the Pearl of Great Price, have reopened an old discussion . . . Brother Hugh Nibley, . . . presents in this fascinating series some of the material that must be considered in the reappraisal of certain Egyptological aspects of the Pearl of Great Price for which the time is now ripe. (Improvement Era, January 1968, pages 18-19)

In the first article Dr. Nibley makes this statement concerning our photo-reprint of the Spalding book:

The recent reissuing of Bishop Franklin S. Spalding’s little book, Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, though not meant to revive an old discussion but rather to extinguish any lingering sparks of it, is nonetheless a welcome invitation, or rather challenge, to those who take the Pearl of Great Price seriously, for long experience has shown that the Latter-day Saints only become aware of the nature and genius of their modern scripture when relentless and obstreperous criticism from the outside forces them to take a closer look at what they have, with the usual result of putting those scriptures in a much stronger position than they were before. We have all neglected the Pearl of Great Price for too long, and should be grateful to those who would now call us to account.

In this introductory study we make no excuse for poking around among old bones, since other have dug them up to daunt us; but we should warn them that if they insist on bringing up the ghosts of the dead, they may soon find themselves with more on their hands than they had bargained for . . . it is others who have conjured up the ghostly jury to testify against the Prophet; and unless they are given satisfaction, their sponsors can spread abroad, as they did in Bishop Spalding’s day, the false report that the Scholars have spoken the final word and “completely demolished” (that was their expression) for all time the Pearl of Great Price and its author’s claim to revelation. (Improvement Era, January, 1968, pages 18-19)

We have been asked if we are going to prepare an answer to Dr. Nibley’s articles. That answer is that we intend to deal at length with his accusations in a later volume of The Case Against Mormonism. In the meantime, we have prepared a pamphlet by Dr. Nibley and other members of the church. This pamphlet is entitled The Mormon Papyri Question. In it we show that Egyptologists have not changed their minds and that the discovery of the original papyri proves beyond all doubt that Joseph Smith did not understand ancient Egyptian.

THE MISSING HEAD

Egyptologists have always claimed that Joseph Smith was in error when he interpreted Facsimile No. 1 as an idolatrous priest trying to sacrifice Abraham on the altar. They feel that this is a picture from the Egyptian of the Dead, and that it is in reality the god Anubis preparing a mummified body. In a letter dated March 16, 1966, John A. Wilson, Professor of Egyptology at the University of Chicago, stated:

In illustration No. 1 the god Anubis is preparing a mummified body on a bed. The head of the god has been miscopied as human and should be that of a jackal. Beside the head of the mummy there is a flying bird which represents the Egyptian's soul. Under the bed there are four jars into which the soft inner parts of the body were placed by the ancient Egyptians.

Richard A. Parker, of the Dept. of Egyptology at Brown University, made a similar statement in a letter dated March 22, 1966:

(c) Number 1 is an altered copy of a well known scene of the dear god Osiris on his bier with a jackal-god Anubis acting as his embalmer. The four jars beneath the couch are four canopic jars with the heads of a human, baboon, jackal and falcon. The bird over Osiris is a ba or soul-bird. There are many variations of this scene in Egyptian monuments.

After the papyri were turned over to the Mormon Church by the Metropolitan Museum, Marvin Cowan sent pictures from the Deseret News to these same Egyptologists and asked if the photographs of the original papyri would cause them to change their opinion. In a letter dated January 5, 1968, John A. Wilson, Prof. of Egyptology at the University of Chicago, stated:

. . . as far as I am concerned I see pieces of two or possible three different papyri and every one of them looks like a traditional Book of the Dead.

Mr. Cowan asked Dr. Parker these questions concerning the papyrus Joseph Smith reproduced as Facsimile No. 1 in the Book of Abraham:

1. On page seven of the enclosed article is a picture of the papyrus from which Joseph Smith drew facsimile #1. (a) Would you still say this is the god Anubis preparing a mummified body? (b) Do you see anything in the picture that would change what you previously told me?

In a letter dated January 9, 1968, Dr. Parker replied:

1. (a) Yes.
   (b) No

John A. Wilson also continued to maintain that the picture showed “Anubis and the corpse” (Letter dated January 5, 1968).

Thus we see that the Egyptologists have not changed their opinions regarding this matter.

A century ago the French Egyptologist Theodule Deveria claimed that the Mormons had altered the scene shown as Facsimile No. 1 in the Book of Abraham. In 1912 Dr. Albert M. Lythgoe, head of the Department of Egyptian Art of the Metropolitan Museum, made a similar charge:

Dr. Lythgoe took up some of the slight discrepancies in the Mormon pictures from the Egyptian originals. He expressed the wish that he might see the original papyri that the Prophet Smith translated or a photograph of it, instead of drawings made from it. In the first of the Mormon figures the god Anubis, bending over the mummy, was shown with a human and a strangely un-Egyptian head, instead of the jackal’s head usual to such a scene. And a knife had been drawn into the god’s hand. (New York Times, Magazine Sect., December 29, 1912)

Samuel A. B. Mercer stated:

It has, indeed, been questioned whether the head on figure 3 is genuine. A question has also been raised as to the genuineness of the knife in the hand. These questions are quite legitimate in the light of our knowledge of Egyptian art. (The Utah Survey, vol. 1, no. 1, September, 1913, pages 18-19)

In 1966 the Egyptologist John A. Wilson and Richard A. Parker still maintained that the scene found in Facsimile No. 1 had been altered.

R. C. Webb (whose real name was J. C. Homans) wrote in defense of the Mormon position. At the time he wrote his book, the original papyrus from which Facsimile No. 1 was drawn was not available. Therefore, he was able to criticize the Egyptologists for claiming that alterations had been made. Now that the papyrus has been located, the entire picture has changed. The Mormon position has been considerably weakened because the portions of the papyrus which have been in question—i.e., the parts that would have contained the head of Anubis and the knife—are missing! (See photograph on front page, taken from the Deseret News, November 27, 1967)

Dr. Aziz S. Atiya, the man credited with finding the Mormon papyri at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, stated that “the head had fallen off, and I could see that the papyrus was stuck on paper, nineteenth century paper. The head was completed in pencil, apparently by Joseph Smith, . . .” (Improvement Era, January 1968, page 13).

As we have shown, the Egyptologist John A. Wilson made this statement to Marvin Cowan in 1966: “The head of the god has been miscopied as human and should be that of a jackal” (Letter dated March 16, 1966). When Mr. Cowan sent the photograph of the original papyrus to Mr. Wilson, he replied:

Finally, you want to know about the embalming scene and I am comforted to see that the standing figure has no head. I am sure that it never had a human head, as all of these illustrations show an animal head. In Ryerson, Pl. XLVIII, the vignette for B.D. 151 shows the jackal-god Anubis bending over a couch, with his hands on a recumbent human figure. (Letter from John A. Wilson, dated January 5, 1968)

BOOK OF THE DEAD

In a letter to Grant Heward, I. E. S. Edwards, Keeper of the Department of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, made this statement concerning the Mormon papyri:

It is not my intention to belittle the gift of the Metropolitan but it should be remembered that this papyrus has really no antiquarian value. Any Book of the Dead of so late a date is corrupt and there is no need to try to solve the corruptions because earlier texts lacking many of the errors exist. (Letter dated December 20, 1967)

Evidently the Mormon leaders are now willing to concede that part of the papyri belong to the Egyptian Book of the Dead. On December 2, 1967, the L.D.S. Church Section of the Deseret News carried this statement:

The other papyri in the gift include conventional hieroglyphic and hieratic Egyptian funerary texts. Such papyri, including the Book of the Dead, were commonly buried with Egyptian mummies. (Deseret News, Church Sec., December 2, 1967, page 7)

Now that the Mormon leaders have admitted that at least part of the papyri are from the Egyptian Book of the Dead, they have placed themselves in a very precarious position. One of the drawings on the papyri was previously identified by the Mormons as part of the “Book of Joseph.” This book was supposed to have been written by Joseph in Egypt thousands of years ago. In the next column is a photograph of this portion as it appeared in the Deseret News, November 27, 1967.

Notice that the snake appears to be standing on legs. This portion is very important, for Oliver Cowdery, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, claimed that this drawing appeared in the “Book of Joseph.” In a letter published in the Messenger and Advocate (a Mormon publication) in 1835, Oliver Cowdery stated:

Upon the subject of the Egyptian records, or rather the writings of Abraham and Joseph, . . .

The language in which this record is written is very comprehensive, . . . The serpent, represented as walking, or formed in a manner to be able to walk, standing in front of, and near a female figure, is to me, one of the greatest representations I have ever seen upon paper, or a writing substance; . . . Enoch’s Pillar, as mentioned by Josephus, is upon the same roll. . . . The inner end of the same roll, (Joseph’s record,) presents a representation of the judgement: . . . (Messenger and Advocate, vol. 2, pages 234 and 236)

The statements by the early leaders of the Mormon Church place the present-day leaders in a very difficult situation. If they continue to maintain that this drawing is part of the “Book of Joseph,” they will be expected to furnish proof that it was written by the Israelites. Also, a translation of the Egyptian writing next to the drawing must relate to the creation or the early history of man rather than to Egyptian funerary texts. If, on the other hand, the Mormon leaders admit that it is from the Egyptian Book of the Dead, they will cast a shadow of doubt on Joseph Smith’s work.

In a letter to John A. Wilson, Professor of Egyptology at the University of Chicago, Marvin Cowan asked this question: “2. Mormon sources claim that the papyrus showing a snake walking on two legs toward a man is the ‘Book of Joseph’! Do you agree?” John A. Wilson replied:

You ask about one of the illustrations which shows a walking snake. It is just above three other illustrations all of which occur in regular order in late Books of the Dead. Papyrus Ryerson (about 500-200 B.C.) and Papyrus Milbank (about 350-100 B.C.) both in the Oriental Institute, published by T. George Allen, (“The Egyptian Book of the Dead,” Chicago, 1960), with the texts here noted on Plates XXIV-XXV and LXVIII.

In each papyrus, vignette of a man with a stick, facing a column—vignette for Book of the Dead, Chapter 72.

In each papyrus, next vignette in order shows a man with a stick, facing a column—vignette for B.D. 73.

In Ryerson only, next vignette in order shows a man with a stick, facing a column—vignette for B.D. 74.

In each papyrus, next vignette shows a bird with a sceptre projecting from its back—vignette for B.D. 75. (Letter from John A. Wilson to Marvin Cowan, dated January 5, 1968)

Thus we see that the Mormon leaders are confronted with a serious problem. To claim that it is the writings of Joseph is to challenge the science of Egyptology, but to admit that it isn’t amounts to discrediting Joseph Smith’s work.

We hope to deal at great length with these matters in a later volume of The Case Against Mormonism. In the meantime, we have prepared a 28-page pamphlet entitled, The Mormon Papyri Question. This pamphlet contains a great deal of information which we do not have room to include here. The prices are: 50¢ each — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

Just as we were ready to print this paper, we received word that Dr. Hugh Nibley, who is supposed to be the Church’s top authority on the Egyptian language, had repudiated Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar. This rumor has now been confirmed.

In 1966 we published Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar. This document was submitted to some of the world’s top Egyptologists. These Egyptologists denounced it as a fraud. In fact, I. E. S. Edwards, Keeper of the Dept. of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, said the Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar was “largely a piece of imagination and lacking in any kind of scientific value.” (See photograph of this letter in The Mormon Papyri Question.)

When we heard that Dr. Nibley had repudiated this document we could hardly believe it, for Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar, was supposed to have been the very key to the translation of the Book of Abraham. Yet, strange as it may seem, we find the following statements by Dr. Nibley in the Brigham Young University Studies:

Which brings us to the subject of Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Grammar, because a surprising number of people have recently undertaken studies of that remarkable work. This writer, however, has never spent so much as five minutes with the Egyptian Grammar, and does not intend to unless he is forced to it. When parties in Salt Lake procured and reproduced photographs of this document, they advertized it with the usual sensationalism as a “Hidden Document Revealed. Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar suppressed for 130 Years Now Comes to Light. This document proves that Joseph Smith did not understand Egyptian and that the Book of Abraham was a work of his imagination!” Joseph Smith never pretended to understand Egyptian, nor that the Book of Abraham was a work of his scholarship: if this document as advertized proves anything it is that some people will go to any length of skulduggery to make a case out of nothing. For if the so-called Alphabet and Grammar were meant as an inspired communication it would have been published as such, not “hidden” or “suppressed for 130 years.” It was hidden and suppressed for the same reason that Brigham Young’s laundry lists are hidden and suppressed, because it was nobody else’s business. Let us allow Joseph Smith at least for the time being the luxury of a moment of privacy, of a little speculation on his own there on his hands and knees in the front room of the Mansion House, with papyri spread out around him on the floor. The fact that he kept his notes strictly to himself’s evidence enough that they were his own private concern and were never meant as a message to the Church.

This is a very important point. The whole attack against the Book of Abraham in the past has been based on the perfectly false principle that whatever a prophet does must be of a supernatural nature and whatever he says must have the authority of scripture, and that hence if a prophet ever betrays the slightest sign of human weakness or any mortal limitation he must necessarily be a false prophet. . . . The sectarian world has never been able to see how it is possible to have revelations and still learn by trial and error: If a prophet ever betrays the slightest sign of human weakness or any mortal limitation he must have the authority of scripture, and that hence if a prophet ever betrays the slightest sign of human weakness or any mortal limitation he must necessarily be a false prophet. . . . Dr. Hugh Nibley, who is supposed to be the Mormon Church’s top authority on the Egyptian language, made this statement:

... a few faded and tattered little scraps of papyrus may serve to remind the Latter-day Saints of how sadly they have neglected serious education ... Not only has our image suffered by such tragic neglect, but now in the moment of truth the Mormons have to face the world unprepared, after having been given a hundred years’ fair warning. (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968, pages 171-172)

Recent developments with regard to Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Papyri have demonstrated the truth of Dr. Nibley’s statement. Since the day the Metropolitan Museum of Art presented the papyri to the Church, the Mormon leaders have made one mistake after another until they have painted themselves into a corner, and truth now demands that they repudiate the Book of Abraham and renounce the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages.

The fall of the Book of Abraham has been brought about by the identification of the piece of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham. Below is a photograph of the fragment.

The identification of this fragment as the original from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham has been made possible by a comparison with Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar—a document published by Modern Microfilm Co. in 1966. Dr. James R. Clark, of the Brigham Young University, gives us this information:

... there are in existence today in the Church Historian’s Office what seems to be two separate manuscripts of Joseph Smith’s translations from the papyrus rolls, presumably in the hand writing of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery; ... One manuscript is the Alphabet and Grammar ... Within this Alphabet and Grammar there is a copy of the characters, together with their translation of Abraham 1:4-28 only. (The Story of the Pearl of Great Price, Salt Lake City, 1962, pages 172-173)

The Mormon leaders were either not aware of the fact that the gift of papyri included the fragment which was the basis for the text in the Book of Abraham, or they hoped no one else would notice it. The following statement appeared in the Mormon paper, Deseret News: “As far as has yet been determined, the papyri do not contain any of the original material translated as the Book of Abraham itself” (Deseret News, November 28, 1967). Before publishing photographs of the papyri, the Brigham Young University Studies had advertised that they were going to print pictures of the Book of Abraham Papyri. When the photographs appeared there was an apology which read:

Our calling them the Book of Abraham Papyri in some of our advertisements did not reflect the official Church identification which is the present title we use: The Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri. We regret the error. Ed. (page 179)

The Mormon publication, Improvement Era, February, 1968, contains color photographs of the papyri. The fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham is found on page 41—the very last photograph. It is labeled: “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated).”

All of the first two rows of characters on the papyrus fragment can be found in the manuscript of the Book of Abraham that is published in Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar. Grant Heward has done further research regarding this matter. He has copied the characters from pictures of another manuscript of the Book of Abraham at the Brigham Young University. This manuscript goes further than the one in the “Alphabet and Grammar.” Mr. Heward has found that the characters on this manuscript continue in consecutive order into the fourth line of the papyrus. This would bring the text to Abraham 2:20 in the Pearl of Great Price. If Joseph Smith continued to translate the same number of English words to each Egyptian character in the chapters which followed, then the text for the entire Book of Abraham is probably contained on this one fragment of papyrus.
THE DILEMMA

In 1966 Grant Heward, a man who had done missionary work for the Mormon Church, prepared a paper in which he criticized Joseph Smith’s translations of the Egyptian language. He distributed his paper at the April, 1967 Conference of the Mormon Church. On June 21, 1967, he was excommunicated from the Mormon Church. This was probably one of the greatest mistakes the Mormon leaders have ever made. Mr. Heward has continued his study of the Egyptian language. He was able to identify the name of the mummy mentioned in the Mormon papyri. Henry G. Fischer, Curator of Egyptian Art at the Metropolitan Museum, confirmed the identification in a letter dated December 8, 1967:

It is very astute of you to have recognized the name of the original owner of some of the papyri that have recently been given to the Latter Day Saints. Your copies are very good indeed, both of the woman’s name and that of her father. (Letter from Henry G. Fischer to Grant Heward, dated December 8, 1967)

Mr. Heward has carefully examined the piece of papyrus that has been identified as the source of the Book of Abraham, and he feels it is probably a part of the Egyptian “Book of Breathings.” The following information concerning the “Book of Breathings” is given by Sir E. A. Wallis Budge:

Of special interest among the works which were popular in the Ptolemeic and Graeco-Roman periods, and probably later, is the “Shai en Sensen,” or “Book of Breathings.” In this composition we find ideas and beliefs which were derived from the Book of the Dead, . . . (Book of the Dead, An English Translation . . . of the Theban Recension, . . . New York, 1951, Introduction, page xvii)

It is very interesting to note that Dr. Nibley has already labeled the fragment of papyrus Joseph Smith used as the basis for the Book of Abraham as “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” (Improvement Era, February 1968, page 41).

One of the meanings of the Egyptian word “sensen” is breathing. It is written in hieratic as follows:

The reader will find the word “sensen” on the fourth line of the papyrus identified as the original used by Joseph Smith as the basis for the Book of Abraham. This word is used as a part of the title “Book of Breathings.” Below is a photograph of a small portion of the text from the “Book of Breathings” compared with a portion of the papyrus Joseph Smith used for the Book of Abraham. The reader will note the striking similarity between the two. The portion on the right is taken from the Papyrus of Kerasher, British Museum, No. 9995. The portion on the left is taken from the fourth line of the papyrus Joseph Smith used in his production of the Book of Abraham.

The reader will note that Joseph Smith used less than four lines from the papyrus to make 51 verses in the Book of Abraham. These 51 verses are composed of more than 2,000 English words! A person does not have to be an Egyptologist to know that it would be impossible to translate over 2,000 words from a few Egyptian characters. Common sense tells us that this would be absolutely impossible. Therefore, it is obvious that Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham is a spurious work.

The Mormon leaders are now confronted with a very serious problem. If they maintain that the fragment of papyrus contains the story found in the Book of Abraham they will find themselves challenging the science of Egyptology. Many members of the Mormon Church want to know the truth concerning the Book of Abraham especially since it is the source of the anti-Negro doctrine. It has been rumored that Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought (a publication that is not controlled by the Mormon leaders) is going to publish the translations in Dialogue. A lot of questions have to be answered in this business. . . .

NIBLEY RETREATS

Although Dr. Nibley is still trying to maintain that the Book of Abraham is authentic, it is obvious that he is retreating from many of the positions that the Church previously held regarding this matter.

Mormon writers used to claim that Joseph Smith understood the Egyptian language and that his “Egyptian Alphabet” was the very key to the translation of the Book of Abraham. Dr. Nibley, however, now maintains that Joseph Smith did not understand the Egyptian language and that his “Egyptian Alphabet” is worthless:

Which brings us to the subject of Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Grammar, . . . This writer, however, has never spent so much as five minutes with the Egyptian Grammar, and does not intend to unless he is forced to it . . . Joseph Smith never pretended to understand Egyptian, nor that the Book of Abraham was a work of his scholarship: . . . (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968, page 176)

In a letter dated February 8, 1968, Dr. Nibley stated:

Joseph Smith played around with Egyptian documents, but by his own admission he was only trying to read them. We tell about this in the forthcoming Era for March. A lot of questions have to be answered in this business. . . .

The wonderful thing about these papyri is that they raise so many interesting questions. You want the answers all at once, but that would spoil all the fun. (Letter dated February 8, 1968)

To begin with the Mormon leaders claimed that Joseph Smith had the very original papyri which Abraham and Joseph wrote upon. Egyptologists, however, claimed that the facsimiles proved the papyri were of a later date. Dr. Nibley tries to bring the Church’s position into line with the opinions expressed by Egyptologists by stating:

The commonest objection to the authenticity of the Facsimiles is that they are of too late a date to have been drawn by Abraham. But Joseph Smith never claimed that they were autographic manuscripts or that they dated from the time of Abraham. (Improvement Era, February, 1968, page 20)

Dr. Nibley is certainly wrong about this matter. Joseph Smith did claim that they were autographic manuscripts. Josiah Quincy claimed that Joseph Smith told him the following:

“That is the handwriting of Abraham, the Father of the Faithful,” said the prophet. “This is the autograph of Moses, and these lines were written by his brother Aaron.” (Figures of the past as quoted in Among the Mormons, pages 136-137)

In 1840 Joseph Smith was quoted as making this statement:

“These ancient records,” said he, “throw great light on the subject of Christianity . . . I will show you how I interpret certain parts. There,“said
Joseph Smith claimed that the two rolls of papyrus which the Mormons purchased in 1835 contained the writings of Abraham and Joseph:

I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt, etc., etc. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236)

Egyptologists claim that all Joseph Smith had was papyri containing Egyptian funerary texts or portions of the Book of the Dead. Now that the original papyri has been located the Mormon leaders are almost forced to admit that at least part of it is from the Book of the Dead.

One of the pieces of papyrus that has been located contains a drawing of a snake standing on legs. In 1835 the Mormon leaders identified this as being from the “Book of Joseph.” In fact, Oliver Cowdery (one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon) claimed that “The serpent, represented as walking, or formed in a manner to be able to walk, standing in front of, and near a female figure, is to me, one of the greatest representations I have ever seen upon paper, or a writing substance; etc.” (Messager and Advocate, vol. 2, page 236). The Mormons evidently considered the drawing of the serpent on legs to be of importance, for a copy of it was included in Joseph Smith’s “Egyptian Alphabet.” At a Pearl of Great Price Conference, held on December 10, 1960, Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of the Brigham Young University, displayed the drawing of the snake on legs and stated: “Here Eve is apparently talking to the serpent. Notice, the serpent is on legs!” (Pearl of Great Price Conference, December 10, 1960, 1964 edition, page 8)

In the Mormon Papyri Question we stated:

If the Mormon leaders continue to maintain that this drawing is part of the “Book of Joseph,” they will be expected to furnish proof that it was written by Joseph in Egypt. . . . If, on the other hand, the Mormon leaders admit that it is from the Egyptian Book of the Dead, they will cast a shadow of doubt on Joseph Smith’s work. (Mormon Papyri Question, page 17)

Evidently the Mormon leaders have chosen to “cast a shadow of doubt on Joseph Smith’s work,” for in the Improvement Era, February, 1968, they admit that the drawing of the snake on legs is “from the Book of the Dead” (page 40). Dr. Nibley was asked if the papyri contained the Book of Joseph, he replied:

If the papyri contain any of the Book of Joseph it is not a part that has been translated. (Letter dated February 8, 1968)

We wonder how far the Mormon leaders can retreat on this issue without admitting that the Book of Abraham is a spurious work.

We have been doing research with regard to the authenticity of the Book of Abraham for a number of years and feel that we have found some very important material. We were planning on presenting this material in a later volume of the Case Against Mormonism, but because of the importance of the papyri find and the discussion concerning this matter we have decided to begin work on it immediately. Therefore, the remaining pages (112 are now completed) of volume 2 of the Case Against Mormonism will be devoted to this subject. We feel that all of our readers should have a copy of this work so that they can receive the pages as they are printed. The regular price for volumes one and two (which includes a beautiful vinyl loose-leaf binder) is $7.90. At the present time, however, we are having a special. If the two volumes are ordered before April 30, 1968, the price is only $6.95.

SMOKE SCREEN

Even though the papyri were lost for a number of years, Joseph Smith included three drawing in his Book of Abraham, and also gave a translation of much of the material which appeared in these drawings.

In 1912 F. S. Spalding sent the facsimiles from the Pearl of Great Price to a number of the most noted Egyptologists. These Egyptologists examined the facsimiles and Joseph Smith’s interpretation of them and declared that his interpretation was fraudulent. Letters from these Egyptologists are published in the book Joseph Smith, Jr. as a Translator, by F. S. Spalding.

Dr. Nibley seems to feel that by attacking Spalding and his book he can create a great smoke screen to cover up the fact that he is not able to defend Joseph Smith’s translations of the Egyptian language. Dr. Nibley has been extremely unfair in this attack. He even criticizes F. S. Spalding for the Church’s dishonesty. Speaking of the facsimiles that Spalding sent to the Egyptologists, Dr. Nibley states:

. . . the miserable copies that Bishop Spalding circulated among his jury of experts made a very poor impression, and their raw clumsiness was in every case attributed to the Prophet himself. . . . It makes all the difference in the world what particular text a scholar has to work with, as a comparison of the recently discovered original of Facsimile 1 with the copies of it that Spalding sent to the critics should make clear to anyone. (Improvement Era, February, 1968, pages 20-21)

Because Dr. Nibley does not make this matter clear, the reader would get the impression that Spalding altered the copies that he sent to the Egyptologists. Now, what was it that Spalding sent to the Egyptologists anyway? It was the Pearl of Great Price—the official publication of the Church—which contains the facsimiles. After Dr. Arthur C. Mace (Assistant Curator, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, Department of Egyptian Art) examined the facsimiles, he wrote a letter to Spalding in which he stated:

“I return herewith, under separate cover, the Pearl of Great Price. The ‘Book of Abraham,’ it is hardly necessary to say, is a pure fabrication.” (Joseph Smith, Jr. as a Translator, page 27)

This statement proves that it was the Church’s printing of the Pearl of Great Price which was submitted to the Egyptologists. Dr. James R. Clark, of the Brigham Young University, states that it was the “1907 printing” of the Pearl of Great Price that the Egyptologist examined. (Story of the Pearl of Great Price, page 61)

Now, why should Dr. Nibley make a point out of the fact that Spalding submitted “miserable copies” to the Egyptologist, when it was the Mormon leaders themselves who made the changes and alterations in the facsimiles? Isn’t this being very unfair?

In the Brigham Young University Studies Dr. Nibley admits that the facsimiles which the Church now publishes in the Pearl of Great Price are not accurate:

The Pearl of Great Price itself admirably illustrates the issue. The facsimiles now in use are extremely bad reproductions, far inferior to the first engravings published in 1842. Am I, then, as a member of the Church bound to consult the present official edition and that only, and regard it as flawless, bad as it is, because it is the official publication of the Church? (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968, page 177)

We are glad that Dr. Nibley has made this statement, for it is certainly the truth. But, we ask, why did he not include it in his article in the Improvement Era? As his article stands in the Improvement Era the reader would get the impression that F. S. Spalding made the changes, whereas the truth is that the Mormon leaders are responsible.

Actually, accurate copies hurt the Church’s position more than they help it. In the Mormon Papyri Question, page 8, we show that photographs of the original papyrus from which the Mormons copied Facsimile No. 1 have been submitted to Egyptologists, and they have denounced it in the same manner that the Egyptologists did in 1912. Because of Dr. Nibley’s distortions of the truth and because of a large demand we have reprinted the book Why Egyptologists Reject the Book of Abraham. This book contains F. S. Spalding’s work, Joseph Smith, Jr. as a Translator, and Joseph Smith as an Interpreter and Translator of Egyptian, by Samuel A. Mercer, Ph.D. Price: $1.50 — 3 for $4.00 — 5 for $6.00 — 10 for $9.00.

CONTENTS OF PAPYRUS

In our work Case Against Mormonism we plan to have a great deal of information concerning the papyri which have recently been presented to the Mormon Church. We hope to have pictures and translations of these papyri. In the meantime, Grant Heward has given us a rendition of a portion of the papyri for publication in this Messenger. Even though this is just a rough rendition, it will give the reader a good idea of what is contained in the papyri.

Mr. Heward has given us this statement to publish with his rendition of the portion which deals with the subject “Transforming into a Swallow”:

The difficult choices of hieroglyphic rendering from the hieratic were many times made easier by careful comparison with hieroglyphic texts of two Books of the Dead papyri as well as fragments from four coffin texts. My English rendering was guided by the translations made of the two papyri. This rough English rendition was completed February 26, 1968.

Below, on the left side of the page, the reader will find a photograph of the papyrus which deals with this subject. Since the papyrus was cut or broken off in the middle of the text, it was necessary to put part of another photo with it to complete the text. These photographs are found in the Improvement Era, February 1968, page 40E and 40F.

On the right side of the page the reader will find that Grant Heward has transcribed the hieratic text into hieroglyphs. Alan Gardiner gives this explanation for this procedure:

Individual hieratic hands differ as all handwriting is apt to differ; for this reason Egyptologists, before translating a hieratic text, habitually transcribe it into hieroglyphs, just as the modern printer sets up a modern author’s manuscript in type (Egyptian Grammar, by Alan Gardiner, third ed., page 10).

Mr. Heward’s rendering of this text is as follows:

Transforming into a Swallow

Here begins the spells for making transformations:

The spell for making the transformation into a swallow. . . . The Osiris daughter Min, justified, born to Neshonsu, justified, says: I am a swallow, I am a swallow. I am that scorpion, the two daughters of Ra. Hail, gods with sweet aroma. (Hail) flame, that comes out of the horizon. Hail you in the city. I have brought the keeper from the midst of his domain. Give your hands. Let me pass the days in the flames of purification. I have advanced with a message. I have come holding the report. Open up to me. How shall I tell what I have seen? I am like Horus, governor of the boat, when the right side of his father was given him. Set, that son of Nut, was under the fetters he made of Osiris. He who is in Sehem (inspected) me. I stretch out my arms over Osiris. I have advanced for the examination. I came to speak. I am he that goes to be judged — I come forth magnified at the gate of Nebeder. I am purified at the great Uaret. I have put away my wickednesses. I have put away utterly my offences. I have put away all the taints of evil that concerns me upon the earth. I have purified myself. I have made myself like God. I completed the journey. I am like you. I have come forth by day. I have advanced on my legs. I have attained mastery over my way. . . . God of light, I know the hidden roads and the gates of Sehet Aaru. I live there. I, even I have come, I have overthrown my enemies upon the earth, although my body is a wrapped mummy.

If this book be known by the deceased, he shall come forth by day from Khert-Neter, and he shall go in (again) after he hath come forth. If this spell is overlooked (by the deceased), he shall not go in again after he hath come forth (and he) shall not know (how) to come forth by day.

Mr. Heward does not claim that his rendition is perfect, and it may be that a few changes will be made at a later date. However this may be, it is obvious that the papyri contain only Egyptian funerary texts and have nothing to do with Abraham or Joseph as the early Mormon leaders taught.

A false balance is abomination to the Lord: but a just weight is his delight.
PAPYRI NOT ABOUT ABRAHAM

In the year 1835 the Mormon people purchased some Egyptian mummies and rolls of papyrus. Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet, translated a portion of the papyrus and published it under the title “The Book of Abraham.” This book is now found as part of the Pearl of Great Price—one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church. For a long period of time the Mormon leaders claimed that the original papyri were burned in the Chicago fire. On November 27, 1967, however, the Deseret News (a Mormon newspaper) announced:

“A collection of papyrus manuscripts, long believed to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire in 1871, was presented to the Church . . . by the Metropolitan Museum of Art . . . Included in the papyri is a manuscript identified as the original document from which Joseph Smith had copied the drawing which he called “Facsimile No. 1” and published with the Book of Abraham. (Deseret News, November 27, 1967, page 1)

After the discovery was announced many members of the Mormon Church felt that Joseph Smith’s work had been vindicated. Dr. Hugh Nibley, however, warned his people that there was trouble ahead. On December 1, 1967, the Daily Universe, published at the Brigham Young University, reported these statements by Dr. Nibley:

“The papyri scripts given to the Church do not prove the Book of Abraham is true,” Dr. Hugh Nibley said in an academics office-sponsored assembly Wednesday night. “LDS scholars are caught flat footed by this discovery,” he went on to say. According to Dr. Nibley, Mormon scholars should have been doing added research on the Pearl of Great Price years ago. Non-Mormon scholars will bring in questions regarding the manuscripts which will be hard to answer because of lack of scholarly knowledge on the subject.

In the speech delivered primarily on the attitude of Brigham Young on education, Dr. Nibley said worldly discoveries are going to “bury the Church in criticism” if members of the Church don’t take it upon themselves to become a people of learning. . . . Mormons ought to know as much or more as others, “but they don’t;” Dr. Nibley said, quoting Brigham Young. (Daily Universe, Brigham Young University, December 1, 1967)

Although these are strange words to be coming from the man whom the Mormon leaders have chosen to defend the “Book of Abraham,” they are certainly the truth.

In the last issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we stated that since the day the Metropolitan Museum presented the papyri to the Church, “the Mormon leaders have made one mistake after another until they have painted themselves into a corner, and truth now demands that they repudiate the Book of Abraham and renounce the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages.” We also stated that “the fall of the Book of Abraham has been brought about by the identification of the piece of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham.” On the second page of the same Messenger we stated that “Mr. Heward has carefully examined the piece of papyrus that has been identified as the source of the Book of Abraham, and he feels that it is probably a part of the Egyptian ‘Book of Breathings.’”

We can now announce that Grant Heward’s identification was correct, and that the papyrus fragment which Joseph Smith called the “Book of Abraham” is in reality nothing but a part of the “Book of Breathings.” One of the most noted Egyptologists in the world had confirmed the fact that it is part of the “Book of Breathings.” His statement will be published at a later date. E. A. Wallis Budge has given us this information concerning the “Book of Breathings”:

Of special interest among the works which were popular in the Ptolemaic and Graeco-Roman periods, and probably later, is the “Shai en Sensen,” or “Book of Breathings.” In this composition we find ideas and beliefs which were derived from the Book of the Dead, . . . (The Book of the Dead, An English Translation of the Chapters, Hymns, Etc. of the Theban Recension, With Introduction, Notes, Etc., New York, 1951, page xlviii)

A TRANSLATION

Many important things have occurred since the publication of our last Messenger. One of the most significant, however, is that Dee Jay Nelson, a Mormon philologist, has made a translation of the Mormon Papyri and was unable to find anything concerning Abraham. We have published Mr. Nelson’s work under the title The Joseph Smith Papyri—A Translation and Preliminary Survey of the Ta-shert-Min and Ter Papyri.

Mr. Nelson examined the original papyri fragments with Dr. Nibley at the Brigham Young University. He was given photographs by special permission of N. Eldon Tanner (a member of the First Presidency of the Mormon Church) before they were published in the Improvement Era. After completing his translation, Mr. Nelson contacted us and asked if we wanted to print it. We felt honored, but we asked him why he did not have the Church print it. He replied that his translation came out unfavorable for the Church, and he felt that they would not print it. He stated that Dr. Nibley seemed to be stalling, and he felt that his people should know the truth about the papyri. Therefore, he decided to let us publish his findings.

REJECTED

After we had finished the printing on Mr. Nelson’s book we decided toadvertize it in the papers in Salt Lake City. On April 1, 1968, we submitted the following ad to the Newspaper Agency Corporation:

“The Joseph Smith Papyri”

Modern Microfilm Co.

They accepted our money, and we were given the understanding that the ad would appear in both the Deseret News and the Salt Lake Tribune on April 6, 1968. The ad did appear in the Tribune, but on April 3, 1968, the Deseret News informed us that they had decided not to run the ad. We tried to discuss the matter with N. Eldon Tanner, a member of the First Presidency, but he refused to give us any help with regard to this matter. It would appear, then, that the Mormon leaders are not willing to let their people know both sides of this issue. Dr. Hugh Nibley claims that it is the non-Mormons that are not willing to print both sides of the issue. Speaking of Spalding’s work on the Book of Abraham, Dr. Nibley states:

And in the discussion that followed, the Mormons proved their good faith and sincerity by printing in the pages of the Improvement Era the letters of Bishop Spalding and his supporters. . . . There was no such dialogue in the non-Mormon periodicals in which Dr. Spalding published, including his own Utah newspaper, The Utah Survey; in spite of his constant protests of impartiality and intellectual integrity, only his own and like opinions ever appeared there. (Improvement Era, January, 1968, page 21)

While it may be true that publications controlled by the Mormon Church allowed some dialogue fifty years ago, it is certainly not true today. The fact that the Deseret News will no even allow us to advertize Dee Jay Nelson’s book proves that the Mormon leaders do not want their people to know the truth about the papyri.
NOTHING ABOUT ABRAHAM

As we indicated above, Mr. Nelson was unable to find any mention of Abraham or his religion in any portion of the papyri. He found the names of many pagan gods who were worshipped by the Egyptians but nothing concerning the God of Abraham. He classifies the fragment which has been identified as the source of the Book of Abraham as part of the “Ter Papyri” and states that it is part of the “Book of Breathings”:

The Ter Papyrus is a copy of a work which was particularly popular in Ptolemaic and Roman times and was completely unknown before about 600 B.C. On the Ter Fragment No. 1 the name of the work appears twice, in column 1, line 5 and in column 2, line 7. Its name again appears on Fragment No. 2 (the smaller of the two fragments) in column 1, line 4. In ancient times it was called the Shait en Sensen, or Book of Breathings. The essence of the religious philosophy behind its contents was the restoration of life and breath to the dead. (The Joseph Smith Papyri—A Translation and Preliminary Survey of the Ta-shert-Min and Ter Papyri, by Dee Jay Nelson, Salt Lake City, 1968, page 36)

On pages 40 and 41 of the same book, we find these statements:

This piece is clearly a part of the same papyrus as the other unillustrated fragment. It is a part of the Ptolemaic text known as the Shait en Sensen or Book of Breathings. This fact is established by the appearance of the name of the book in column 1, line 4.

1. This papyrus is a traditional copy of the Shait en Sensen, Book of Breathings and is of a late origin. It most probably was written in the Ptolemaic Period (after 332 B.C.). Both Fragments are damaged to the extent of at least half of their original area. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, pages 40-41)

It is interesting to note that Dee Jay Nelson and Grant Heward did their work independent of each other, yet they both concluded that the fragment of papyrus that has been identified as the source of the Book of Abraham is in reality a part of the “Book of Breathings.”

In the last Messenger we included a rendition by Grant Heward of a portion of the papyri. Mr. Heward’s rendition showed that it was a “spell for making the transformation into a swallow.” Dee Jay Nelson came to the same conclusion. His translation begins: “Spell for transforming one’s self into the form of a swallow” (The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 16).

One portion of Mr. Nelson’s book that is very interesting is his translation and comments concerning the fragment of papyrus which is reproduced as Facsimile No. 1 in the Book of Abraham. Joseph Smith claimed that this was a representation of an idolatrous priest trying to sacrifice Abraham on an altar. Dee Jay Nelson, however, shows that it is in reality the god Anubis preparing a mummified body:

This fragment bears the original vignette from which the cut for Facsimile No. 1 in the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham was made. It is badly damaged. . . . On the backing paper the missing part of the body and arms of the person on the bier and the shoulder and head of the standing figure have been crudely sketched in. This was presumably done by Joseph Smith or certainly by some individual in the Nineteenth Century. . . .

This scene is intimately familiar to me. I have seen it many times. As a matter of fact, in one temple alone, located at Denderah, thirty seven miles north of Luxor are twenty nine wall bas-reliefs representing Osiris lying upon a lion-headed bier which exactly resembles the one on this papyrus fragment. Five of these even show him with one leg raised above the bed. Two of them also show a jackal-headed god standing near the foot of the bier (behind it) facing the head. One of these has the following similarities. I should say, precise equivalents:

1. The bier has a lions head and an upturned tail.
2. A person is lying on the bier, face up.
3. The hands of the reclining person are held above his face, palms downward (the sign of grief).
4. The reclining figure has his right leg somewhat elevated.
5. A dark figure stands near the foot of the bier facing the head of the couch.
6. A hawk-headed bird (ba) hovers over the reclining figure.

This scene of Anubis embalming Osiris is often seen in copies of the Shait en Sensen, Book of Breathings. An example is the Book of Breathings Papyrus of Kerasher now in the British Museum. . . .

Summary concerning the Ter Papyrus Fragment No. 3

1. This fragment bears the original illustration from which the cut for Facsimile No. 1, Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham was made. Its identification is undeniable.
2. The fragment is badly damaged.
3. This vignette is typical of scenes from the Shait en Sensen, Book of Breathings, showing Osiris lying dead upon his funeral bier in the process of being embalmed by the jackal-headed god, Anubis.
4. The illustration is of the type popular in the Ptolemaic Period after 332 B.C. The corrupt hieroglyphic text is also typical of this era.
5. The hieroglyphic bookhand characters used in the vertical columns are poorly formed, sometimes written backwards and a basic and often unusual spelling is used.
6. The fragmentary text names the gods Min, Khensu, Anubis and Osiris. It also states that the hawk hovering over the head of Osiris is the ba or soul. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, pages 41-43 and 45)

We do not have room here to include Dee Jay Nelson’s translation of the text, but his summary should be sufficient to convince the reader that the scene has nothing to do with Abraham.

Speaking of all the papyrus fragments turned over to the Mormon Church by the Metropolitan Museum, Mr. Nelson states:

The Ta-shert-Min Papyrus (10 fragments) is a copy of a typical late period funeral text known as the Per em Heru or Book of the Dead and the Ter Papyrus is a copy of the Shait en Sensen or Book of Breathings. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 5)

Thus it appears that the Book of Abraham has no historical basis and that it is a work of Joseph Smith’s imagination.

The reader will remember that Grant Heward was excommunicated from the Mormon Church for criticizing the “Book of Abraham.” We do not feel, however, that they will excommunicate Mr. Nelson because he is a nationally known explorer naturalist. He is a member of the Adventurers Club and has given lectures on the Dead Sea Scrolls. In 1957 he was invited by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion to make the first motion picture of the Dead Sea Scrolls. It is very unlikely that the Mormon leaders will excommunicate such a man.

The Joseph Smith Papyri—A Translation and Preliminary Survey of the Ta-shert-Min and Ter Papyri, is a 48-page booklet which is filled with important information concerning the Mormon Papyri. We highly recommend it. The prices are: 75¢ each — 3 for $2.00 — 5 for $3.00 — 10 for $4.50.

DR. NIBLEY EVADES THE ISSUE

The Improvement Era, April, 1968, contains a short article by Dr. Hugh Nibley trying to discredit our last issue of the Messenger and attempts to explain why he has wasted four issues of the Improvement Era criticizing Bishop Spalding’s pamphlet and has not dealt with “the new problems” regarding the papyri:

The first draft of this series of articles was written some years before the Church came into possession of the recently acquired papyri, and had already been slated to appear in the Era when big news broke. They were never meant as an examination of the new evidence, though they do provide a necessary approach to it. Since the new problems could not be dealt with instantly, and the preliminary material was already at hand, it was decided to release the historical background material while working on the other. . . .

The criticism of the Pearl of Great Price, like those of the Book of Mormon, have always had a weakness for instant solutions. As soon as anyone starts putting a long equation on the blackboard or begins to demonstrate the steps in the solution of an involved problem these students cry out, “Never mind all that—you are just stalling; give us the answer!” They would prefer to have the teacher say, “Students, I am a mathematician, and the answer is zero because I say so. Class dismissed.” This has been the ingratiating method of the Pearl of Great Price critics from the beginning. . . .

As an example of how complicated the issues can become, we call attention to the March 1968 issue of a privately but widely circulated news sheet, “The Salt Lake City Messenger,” announcing in characteristically sensational headlines “The Fall of the Book of Abraham.” At last!
The publishers of the news sheet were kind enough to provide the reader with a demonstration of their Egyptology at work, in the form of a transcription and translation by a Mr. Heward of a section of one of the LDS papyri. The picture of a swallow on the fragment makes it possible for even the rankest amateur like this writer to spot at once the corresponding passage in Budge’s much-publicized translation as Chapter 86 of the Book of the Dead. The student who takes the pains to compare Budge’s translation of Ani, Mr. Heward’s purported translation of the LDS fragment, and the LDS fragment itself will soon discover that Mr. H. is not translating the LDS fragment at all, but simply paraphrasing Budge. The papyrus of Ani and the LDS fragment are much alike, but they are far from identical, and whenever the two differ it is the text of Budge that Mr. H. translates, in the language of Budge, and not the LDS manuscript, which he claims to be reading. Space will not allow here the presentation of the many passages in the translation in which this is glaringly apparent.

This is another example of a principle that has been only too fully illustrated in Pearl of Great Price criticism, namely, that it is easy to fool the public on matters of which the public knows nothing. No one is more eager than this writer to get out of the critical Slough of Despond and start discussing the wonderful discoveries that are now casting a strange new light on the Book of Abraham. But before we can do that, we must deal with a lot of preliminary questions that others have raised. — H.N. (Improvement Era, April, 1968, pages 65-66)

Before we say anything about Dr. Nibley’s accusation against Grant Heward, we should point out that he has side-stepped the main issue. Our argument that the Book of Abraham has fallen was based primarily upon the fact that the original fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham has been located (see photograph in the Salt Lake City Messenger, issue 17, page 1). The translation concerning the swallow of course provides evidence that Joseph Smith did not have the writings of Abraham or Joseph of Egypt since it is a part of the Book of the Dead, but the main issue is that the original papyrus fragment which Joseph Smith used as the basis of the Book of Abraham has been located. Our contention is that this fragment is part of the Egyptian “Book of Breathings” and has nothing to do with Abraham. Now, unless Dr. Nibley can translate this fragment and prove that it contains the writings of Abraham as they appear in the Pearl of Great Price, then the Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. We do not believe that Dr. Nibley can do this, and we feel certain that this is the reason he has side-stepped the real issue.

Now, concerning the accusation against Grant Heward: Dr. Nibley states that “whenever” the LDS fragment and the papyrus of Ani differ Mr. Heward follows “the text of Budge.” This accusation is certainly untrue, for if Mr. Heward had only followed the text given by Budge he would not have been aware of the fact that there are two persons mentioned in the first part of the spell. E. A. Wallis Budge gives this rendering of the first part of the chapter as it appears in the papyrus of Ani:

The Osiris Ani, whose word is truth, saith:—I am a swallow, [I am] a swallow. (The Book of the Dead, The Hieroglyphic Transcript of the Papyrus of Ani, the Translation into English and an Introduction by E. A. Wallis Budge, New York, 1960, page 521)

Grant Heward, however, renders the first part of the LDS fragment as follows:

The Osiris daughter Min, justified, born to Neshonsu, justified, says: I am a swallow, I am a swallow. (Salt Lake City Messenger, issue no. 17, page 4)

Dee Jay Nelson—who we must remember did his work independent of Grant Heward—gives this rendering to the LDS fragment:

To be said by Osiris Ta-sheret-Min, who is true of work, daughter of Nes-Khensu, who is true of word.

I am a swallow, I am a swallow. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 16)

It should be obvious from this that Dr. Nibley’s accusation is without foundation. Notice that Dr. Nibley claims that he could furnish “many” passages to prove that Mr. Heward was not reading the LDS fragment, yet he states that he does “not” have room to include them in his article. We feel that if Dr. Nibley is going to make such a serious charge he should furnish his own translation of the fragment and point out the places where Grant Heward is in error.

IS DR. NIBLEY QUALIFIED?

In a letter to the editor of the Deseret News, Julian R. Durham stated:

There has been some comment regarding the recently discovered Book of Abraham papyri, that the Church submit them to the foremost scholars in the field of Egyptology. . . .

Today the papyri are in the hands of one of the best qualified Egyptologists in the world. Hugh Nibley, a foremost church scholar who has demonstrated on an intellectual basis the capabilities of Joseph Smith in language studies. (Deseret News, December 27, 1967)

There are a number of reasons why we seriously doubt that Dr. Nibley is “one of the best qualified Egyptologists in the world.” To begin with, Dr. Nibley has only given us a very small “demonstration” of his “Egyptology at work.” It appears in the Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968:

This fragment, which has been badly fitted together like some of the others, belongs to the same roll as the other hieratic papyri, as is apparent from recurring elements of the owner’s name, that appears a number of times in full in the other fragments . . . Which may be “translated” as something like “The Osiris daughter of Min, true of word (or justified, deceased, triumphant, etc., i.e. tested and found true and faithful), declared blessed (as a dead person, the word being written merely by a stroke, since the proper hieroglyph was considered magically dangerous), belonging to Khons (or in the company of Khons, the moon-god), justified.” Or, simply as a name something like Taimin Mutninessikhoum.

Dr. Nibley’s work is used in a short article in the Improvement Era:

The writings on the recently recovered fragments show that all of these Book of the Dead papyri belonged to the lady Taimin Mutninessikhoum. (Improvement Era, February 1968, page 40)

Dee Jay Nelson makes this statement concerning Dr. Nibley’s work:

On page 40 of the February 1968 issue of the Improvement Era is a brief article describing color photographs of the new papyrus fragments. The article names the beneficiary for whom one of the papyri was written. She is called, “the lady Taimin Mutninessikhoum.” I presume that this name was supplied by Dr. Hugh Nibley. It is incorrect. . . . Dr. Nibley, whom I know to be a skilled and capable scholar, has inadvertently combined the names of the beneficiary of the papyrus and her mother. . . . Taimin Mutninessikhoum is a transliteration combining the name Ta-sheret-Min with the connecting phrase meaning “daughter of,” mes en and Nes-Khensu (the mother’s name). This error was quite natural, particularly considering that the connecting phrase, mes en is abbreviated whenever it appears in the Ta-sheret-Min Papyrus. Ta-sheret-Min and Nes-Khensu are the correct transliterations. I have been substantiated in my transliteration by several of the world’s most renowned Egyptian philologist (mentioned by name in the introduction to this study) though in small variations even they did not agree exactly. One rendered the names Tai-shery-Min and Nes-Khonsu and another transliterated them Ta-sheret-Men and Nes-Khensu. I find no argument with either. Both scholars were examining poor hand-copied versions of the names which appear in one of Joseph Smith, Jr.’s notebooks (done in the 1830’s).

Everyone Welcome!

We are now holding a Bible study in our home at 1350 S. West Temple, every Thursday evening at 8:00 pm. Everyone is welcome. This is not connected with any particular group or church. Attendance is open to everyone.

A PERSONAL GOD?

To all those who will send us their address and zip code we will send a FREE COPY of Is There a Personal God? This is a 56-page pamphlet by Jerald Tanner.
The so-called Metropolitan Papyrus Fragments came to my attention several months after I consulted with these experts and serve to substantiate my original findings. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 48)

The reader will note that Grant Heward recognized that the papyri mentioned both the daughter and one of her parents. If Mr. Heward is “the rankest amateur” and only followed the translation of Budge, how was he able to recognize the two names?

We feel that since Dr. Nibley combined the two names into one, he cannot be considered “one of the best qualified Egyptologists in the world.”

There is another fact that should be considered in this matter: Dr. Nibley had had photographs of the original papyri for about two years. We have a copy of a letter from an Egyptologist which is dated August 27, 1967. In this letter we find the following statement:

In the summer of 1966, Prof. Nibley showed me enlargements of the photographs; they had been obtained by a third party and passed on to Prof. Nibley, who was evidently interested in purchasing the papyri, which included the embalming scene reproduced (with many imaginative restorations since the original is badly damaged in the PGP [Pearl of Great Price]) . . . There is no question that they are late (probably Roman Period) MSS of the Book of the Dead and similar funerary literature, and Prof. Nibley, who had already had the time to study the photographs, had identified several chapters of the BD [Book of the Dead] . . .

Now, if Dr. Nibley is “one of the best qualified Egyptologists in the world,” why has he not completed a translation of all the papyri. He has had two years to work on it. Dee Jay Nelson completed his “Translation and Preliminary Survey” in less than two months. Grant Heward also did his work on the text concerning the swallow in less than two months. Dr. Nibley, however, has had the papyri for about two years and has given us nothing but the name Taimin Mutninesikhouso, which is in reality two separate names.

In the February, 1968, issue of the Improvement Era we find this statement:

With our readers, the staff of the Improvement Era will be looking forward with eager anticipation to additional developments in this fascinating story, and to the unfolding of the meaning of the hieroglyphics and illustrations on these valuable manuscripts as they are given by Dr. Nibley in his articles.

The March issue of the Improvement Era appeared, but Dr. Nibley chose to still remain silent concerning the meaning of the Egyptian writing. It is in this issue that we find the statement:

The first draft of this series of articles was written some years before the Church came into possession of the recently acquired papyri. . . . Since the new problems could not be dealt with instantly, and the preliminary material was already at hand, it was decided to release the historical background material while working on the other. . . . The critics of the Pearl of Great Price . . . have always had a weakness for instant solutions. (Improvement Era, April, 1968, page 65)

Dr. Nibley’s attempt to explain why he has not unfolded the meaning of the “hieroglyphics and illustrations” may satisfy those who do not know the facts concerning this matter, but those who are aware that he has had photographs of the papyri for about two years find his explanation rather ridiculous.

In a letter dated February 8, 1968, Dr. Nibley claims that he has translated some of the papyri:

The papyri are not difficult to translate, and two of my professors at Chicago have agreed to translate them. Last month in the presence of witnesses I made a translation of some of the papyri which has been duly dated and notorized, so that when my betters (and they are infinitely my betters) come out with their translation you can see whether I am totally inept or only nearly so. (Letter dated February 8, 1968)

We do not feel that “one of the best qualified Egyptologists in the world” would follow such a procedure. Instead of having his translation “dated and notorized” Dr. Nibley should have published it in the Improvement Era.

It is interesting to note, that the translations which Dr. Nibley’s professors at Chicago are working on were not requested by Dr. Nibley or the Church leaders. It was the editors of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought (a publication that is not controlled by the Mormon Church) who requested the translations.

From the evidence given above it appears that Dr. Nibley is not really qualified to deal with the papyri, and the Mormon leaders made a serious mistake when they turned the whole matter over to him.

THE MOMENT OF TRUTH

Dr. Hugh Nibley has made this statement:

. . . a few faded and tattered little scraps of papyrus may serve to remind the Latter-day Saints of how sadly they have neglected serious education. . . . Not only has our image suffered by such tragic neglect, but now in the moment of truth the Mormons have to face the world unprepared, after having been given a hundred year’s fair warning. (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968, pages 171-172)

It appears that Dr. Nibley himself is unprepared and that he has no real answers to give his people. We have shown that the original papyrus fragment Joseph Smith used as the basis for the Book of Abraham has been identified and that this fragment is in reality a part of the Egyptian “Book of Breathings.”

It contains nothing concerning Abraham or his religion, and it cannot be used to support the anti-Negro doctrine. Truly, this is the moment of truth for the Mormon people. Stewart L. Udall, who is Secretary of the Interior, has made this statement concerning the anti-Negro doctrine:

We Mormons cannot escape persistent, painful inquiries into the sources and grounds of this belief. . . . This issue must be resolved . . . It must be resolved because we are wrong and it is past the time when we should have seen the right. A failure to act here is sure to demean our faith, damage the minds and morals of our youth, and undermine the integrity of our Christian ethic. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1967, pages 5-6)

Stewart L. Udall’s words might be applied with equal force to the Book of Abraham which is the real source of the anti-Negro doctrine.

We plan to deal at great length with the Book of Abraham in our work, The Case Against Mormonism. This work will contain photographs and vital material concerning the fragments of papyrus which have been turned over to the Mormon Church. We feel that this will be our most important work and we hope that all of our customers will order it. We have completed 112 pages of vol. 2 (dealing with the Book of Mormon) and will mail out the remaining pages concerning the Book of Abraham as they are printed. The regular price for volumes one and two (which includes a beautiful vinyl loose-leaf binder) is $7.90. At the present time, however, we are having a special which we are extending until May 31, 1968. If the two volumes are ordered before that day the price is only $6.95. We only have a limited number of binders with printing on the outside, and the ones we order in the future will probably not have this printing because the price has been raised.

 NEW BOOKS **

The Joseph Smith Papyri — A Translation & Preliminary Survey, by Dee Jay Nelson. A 48-page booklet which contains a translation and vital information concerning the Mormon Papyri. This work proves that the papyri have absolutely nothing to do with Abraham. Although this booklet is written in a very scientific and unemotional manner, the Deseret News would not allow it to be advertized. We highly recommend this booklet. The Negro in Mormon Theology, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A 58-page pamphlet. Most important material which appeared in Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro is included in this pamphlet. Also contains new material. Alvin R. Dyer’s speech, which was “not” meant for the investigator, is printed in full. Price: 50¢ — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

PAPYRI PROVE BOOK OF ABRAHAM UNTRUE

It was just a little over six months ago that the Metropolitan Museum of Art presented to the Mormon Church a collection of papyri which once belonged to Joseph Smith. Before this transaction, it was generally believed that this collection had been completely destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871.

Joseph Smith had used part of the papyri as the basis for a work he called “The Book of Abraham.” He claimed that Abraham had written this book on papyrus thousands of years ago. In 1842 he published his translation of this book, and the Mormon people accepted it as scripture. It is now published as a part of the Pearl of Great Price—one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church.

When the Mormon leaders announced that the papyri had been found, many members of the Church felt that Joseph Smith’s work had been vindicated. Those who knew the most about the situation, however, advised their people to be cautious. Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of the Brigham Young University, stated: “...as members of the Church we ought not to overrate the importance of this discovery” (Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, March 1, 1968, page 8). Dr. James R. Clark gave a similar warning on page 8 of the same publication:

I agree with that point of view, Dr. Sperry. If there is anything we should stress here tonight, it is that conclusions should not be drawn at this point. We might even set ourselves up as a committee of three to serve as a warning voice to alert members of the Church to the great danger of claiming too much at this stage. The new materials have not yet been studied, and it would be better to reserve judgment for a time.

Dr. Hugh Nibley, who is supposed to be the Mormon Church’s top authority of the Egyptian language, warned his people that there was trouble ahead. On December 1, 1967, the Daily Universe, published at the Brigham Young University, reported this statement by Dr. Nibley:

“The papyri scripts given to the Church do not prove the Book of Abraham is true,” Dr. Hugh Nibley said in an Academics Office-sponsored assembly Wednesday night. “LDS scholars are caught flat footed by this discovery,” he went on to say. (Daily Universe, Brigham Young University, December 1, 1967)

In an article published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Dr. Nibley stated:

When I first saw photos of the papyri I made myself disagreeable by throwing a great deal of cold water around. For publicity they were great, and as far as I can see their main value is still in calling the attention of Latter-day Saints to the existence of scriptures which they have studiously ignored through the years. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1968, page 102)

A Devastating Blow

While Dr. Nibley and a few others may have realized that the papyri could not be used to prove Joseph Smith’s work true, they evidently were not aware of the devastating blow that the papyri were about to deal to the “Book of Abraham.” Within six months from the time the Metropolitan Museum gave the papyri to the Church, the Book of Abraham had been proven untrue!

At first the Mormon leaders were only willing to admit that one fragment of the papyri had any direct connection with the Book of Abraham. This was the piece that has the picture found on Facsimile No. 1 in the Pearl of Great Price. The following statement appeared in the Mormon paper, Deseret News: “As far as has yet been determined, the papyri do not contain any of the original material translated as the Book of Abraham itself” (Deseret News: November 28, 1967).

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March, 1968, we announced that the “piece of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham” had been located among the papyri. We quoted Dr. James R. Clark, of the Brigham Young University, as stating that Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar contained two separate handwritten manuscripts. These manuscripts contain the text of part of the Book of Abraham, and they show the Egyptian characters Joseph Smith used to make this text. In the same Messenger we furnished photographic proof that these characters were taken from the fragment of papyrus which the Improvement Era labeled: “XI. ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” (Improvement Era, February, 1968, page 41). The evidence which we presented could not be refuted, and Dr. Nibley has now had to admit that the “Sensen” text is related to the Book of Abraham.

He began breaking the news in the Improvement Era:

...the presence on the scene of some of the original papyri, including those used by the prophet in preparing the text of the Book of Abraham and the Facsimiles with their commentaries, has not raised a single new question, though, as we shall see, it has solved some old ones. (Improvement Era, May, 1968, page 54)

Dr. Nibley made this admission in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought:

NEW BOOKS

Is the Book of Abraham True?

By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A 23-page pamphlet which proves beyond all doubt that the Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. At a meeting held at the University of Utah on May 20, 1968, Dr. Nibley admitted that the “Sensen” fragment seemed to supply the characters for the Book of Abraham:

Within a week of the publication of the papyri students began calling my attention, in fact, within a day or two, I think it was Witorf [?], called my attention to the fact that, the very definite fact that, one of the fragments seemed to supply all of the symbols for the Book of Abraham. This was the little “Sensen” scroll. Here are the symbols. The symbols are arranged here, and the interpretation goes along here and this interpretation turns out to be the Book of Abraham. Well, what about that? Here is the little “Sensen” because that name occurs frequently in it, the papyrus, in which a handful of Egyptian symbols was apparently expanded in translation to the whole Book of Abraham. This raises a lot of questions. It doesn’t answer any questions, unless we’re mindreaders. (Speech given by Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968)

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March, 1968, we stated that Grant Heward felt that the piece of papyrus Joseph Smith used as a basis for his “Book of Abraham” was in reality a part of the Egyptian “Book of Breathings.” His identification has now been confirmed. Dee Jay Nelson, a Mormon philologist, who worked independently on the Joseph Smith Papyri, came to exactly the same conclusion. He made this comment concerning this fragment of papyrus:

1. This papyrus is a traditional copy of the Shait en Sensen, Book of Breathings and is of a late origin. It most probably was written in the Ptolemaic Period (after 332 B.C.) (The Joseph Smith Papyri — A Translation and Preliminary Survey of the Tu-sheret-Min and Ter Papyrus, by Dee Jay Nelson, Salt Lake City, 1968, page 41)

Two of the most prominent Egyptologists in the United States have also confirmed this identification. John A. Wilson, who is Professor of Egyptology at the University of Chicago, made this statement:

Document D is a related mortuary text of late times, the so-called Book of Breathings, in a hieratic hand coarser than that of Document B. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1968, page 68)

Richard A. Parker also confirmed the fact that what Joseph Smith claimed was the Book of Abraham was in reality the Book of Breathings. The editors of Dialogue stated:

Richard A. Parker is the Wilbour Professor of Egyptology and Chairman of the Department of Egyptology at Brown University. His primary interest is in the later stages of Egyptian language and history. He remarks that the Book of Breathings is a late (Ptolemaic and Roman periods) and greatly reduced version of the Book of the Dead. No comprehensive study of it has yet been undertaken and no manuscript has yet been published adequately. He would provisionally date the two Book of Breathings fragments in the Church’s possession to the last century before or the first century of the Christian era. . . . (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1968, page 86)

The editors of Dialogue persuaded Dr. Parker to translate “the important ‘sensen’ text.” His translation reads as follows:

1. [. . .] this great pool of Khonsu
2. [Osiris Hor, justified], born of Tayhebyt, a man likewise.
3. After (his) two arms are [fast]ened to his breast, one wraps the Book of Breathings, which is
4. with writing both inside and outside of it, with royal linen, it being placed (at) his left arm
5. near his heart, this having been done at his
6. wrapping and outside it. If this book be recited for him, then
7. he will breath like the soul[s of the gods] for ever and

The reader will see that Richard Parker’s translation bears no resemblance to Joseph Smith’s purported translation of the same text. Thus we see that the Book of Abraham has been proven untrue because the original papyrus contains no reference to Abraham or his religion. Richard Parker translates only 83 English words from this text, whereas Joseph Smith’s rendition contained thousands of words.

Dr. Hugh Nibley had a copy of Richard Parker’s translation before it appeared in Dialogue and in a speech delivered May 20, 1968, he stated:

. . . Professor Parker has translated that controversial little thing called the “Sensen” papyrus, the little section, that text that matches up with some of the Book of Abraham.

Strange as it may seem, Dr. Nibley admits that Richard Parker is “the best man in America” for this particular text, and that he did a “nice” job:

. . . here is Parker’s translation of the “Sensen” papyrus. . . . Parker being the best man in America for this particular period and style of writing. And Parker agreed to do it and he’s done it. So it’s nice. . . . it will be available within a month. I’m sure, in the next issue of the Dialogue. (Speech by Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968)

It is now becoming rather obvious that Dr. Nibley is unprepared to deal with the problems related to the translation of the Book of Abraham, and that he has no real answers to give his people. In an article published in Dialogue, he stated:

Since the Sen-Sen business makes very little sense to anybody, while the Book of Abraham makes very good sense, one might suppose that Smith could have produced the latter without any reference to the former—that he could have written the Book of Abraham more easily, in fact, without having to bother himself with those meaningless squiggles. But if the Sen-Sen symbols are explicable, why does he use them at all? His only purpose would have been to impress others, but he keeps the whole operation strictly to himself and never circulates the Sen-Sen papyrus as he did the Facsimiles. And why on earth would he fasten on this particularly ugly little piece and completely bypass the whole collection of handsome illustrated documents at his disposal? Did he really think he was translating? If so he was acting in good faith. But was he really translating? If so, it was by a process which quite escapes the understanding of the specialists and lies in the realm of the imponderable.

No one has begun to look into the Sen-Sen problem seriously. . . . Today nobody claims that Joseph Smith got his information through ordinary scholarly channels. In that case one wonders how any amount of checking along ordinary scholarly channels is going to get us very far. (Dialogue, Summer, 1968, page 101)

When Dr. Nibley spoke at the University of Utah, May 20, 1968, he admitted that if Joseph Smith was “really translating the papyri” he did it in a way that is unknown to Egyptologists:

By what process could the Book of Abraham have been squeezed out of a few brief signs? Nobody has told us yet. Was Joseph Smith really translating the papyri? If so, it was not in any way known to Egyptology. Was he then merely pretending to translate them? But he never really put these symbols forth as his source. He published the facsimiles, but these always remained among his private papers. These were not for circulation. He’s not pretending to be doing anything here. He’s not seeking to impress anyone at all. Nobody knew about this little work he was carrying on. He never published them as he did the facsimiles. Did he really need these symbols? This is a funny thing. Are they actually the source upon which he depended? Well, if he really depended on them, he must really have been translating them. But, you say, he couldn’t possibly have been translating. Could he have used this as a source at all? These questions arise. If he was merely faking, of course, pretending to be translating them, well, he wouldn’t need the Egyptian text at all. Yet he used one, and he used it secretly. Why would he secretly make use of a text he didn’t need at all? This was just a nuisance, really, all these symbols. He’s not pretending to be doing anything here. He’s not seeking to impress anyone at all. It doesn’t answer any questions, because that name occurs frequently in it, the papyrus, in which a handful of Egyptian symbols was apparently expanded in translation to the whole Book of Abraham. According to this theory, he could have produced the latter without any reference to the former—that he could have written the Book of Abraham more easily, in fact, without having to bother himself with those meaningless squiggles. But if the Sen-Sen symbols are explicable, why does he use them at all? His only purpose would have been to impress others, but he keeps the whole operation strictly to himself and never circulates the Sen-Sen papyrus as he did the Facsimiles. And why on earth would he fasten on this particularly ugly little piece and completely bypass the whole collection of handsome illustrated documents at his disposal? Did he really think he was translating? If so he was acting in good faith. But was he really translating? If so, it was by a process which quite escapes the understanding of the specialists and lies in the realm of the imponderable.

No one has begun to look into the Sen-Sen problem seriously. . . . Today nobody claims that Joseph Smith got his information through ordinary scholarly channels. In that case one wonders how any amount of checking along ordinary scholarly channels is going to get us very far. (Dialogue, Summer, 1968, page 101)
FACING REALITY

In an article written for the Brigham Young University Studies, Dr. Nibley stated:

It has long been known that the characters “interpreted” by Joseph Smith in his Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar are treated by him as super-cryptograms; and now it is apparent that the source of those characters is the unillustrated fragment on which the word Sen-Sen appears repeatedly. This identifies it as possibly belonging to those writings known as The Book of Breathings, though that in turn is merely “compilations and excerpts from older funerary spells and burial formulas.” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring, 1968, page 249)

While Dr. Nibley is willing to admit that the “Sensen” text contains the characters Joseph Smith used in his Book of Abraham manuscript and that this text may be from the Book of Breathings, he is not willing to face reality and admit that the Book of Abraham is a forgery. He is willing to admit that the Richard Parker has made a “fine” translation of the “Sensen” fragment, but he is unable to face the implications of this translation. Dr. Nibley has now gone so far as to claim that the “Sensen” text may have a second meaning unknown to Egyptologists:

…you very often have texts of double meaning… it’s quite possible, say, that this “Sensen” papyrus, telling a straightforward innocent little story or something like that, should contain also a totally different text concealed within it… they [the Egyptians] know what they’re doing, but we don’t. We don’t have the key. (Speech by Dr. Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968)

In the same meeting Dr. Nibley was asked “if the key to this concentrated language is not had by Egyptologists, do we have any hope of having the Book of Abraham ever translated?” Dr. Nibley replied: “I don’t know. That’s an interesting thing. We don’t know what may turn up in another manuscript, or something like that.”

We feel that Dr. Nibley is guilty of deception when he claims that the Mormon Papyri may have a second meaning unknown to Egyptologists. This is about as ridiculous as claiming that the world is flat in this day of space travel. When Marvin Cowan asked Professor Richard Parker if that papyrus could have a second meaning, he replied that he knew of “no Egyptologist who would support such a claim” (Letter from Richard Parker, dated January 9, 1968).

It is becoming very obvious to many people that Dr. Nibley is just stalling. He has no answers to give his people, and he is doing his best to make the issue as confused as possible. In the speech he gave at the University of Utah he made this statement concerning his critics:

…why are they in such a hurry for rushing to judgement? What’s all the hurry about? People say I keep dragging my feet; of course I have been dragging [my feet]. There is no hurry here. Professor Atiya says, “Learn to be patient with the Egyptians.”

Evidently, Dr. Nibley wants us to forget about the papyri, and judge the Book of Abraham by its similarity to a number of old apocryphal writings. He states:

… it is folly to come out with a verdict about the Book of Abraham until we have studied fully and carefully the great and growing corpus of ancient Abrahamic literature, even if it takes us years to get through it; … the Book of Abraham itself is a book of legends about Abraham which can only be tested in the light of other such legends, which can at least give us hints as to whether Joseph Smith was making it all up or not. … the Abraham literature is of course a great hodge-podge of stuff coming from many different centuries. But because of the ways in which legends and traditions were swapped around, with very ancient and authentic bits sometimes turning up in the most unlikely places, often buried in bushes of nonsense, we cannot escape the obligation of reading everything. … Let’s not get ahead of the game, or overlook any possibility that there might be something there after all … it is just possible that there are things that might be said in favor of the Book of Abraham. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer, 1968, pages 102-105)

It appears that Dr. Nibley wants us to ignore the evidence which the “Sensen” fragment furnishes and wait for years while he searches through “bushels of nonsense” and “legends” hoping that he may find something that may be used as evidence for the Book of Abraham. Such a suggestion is absurd. What better evidence could there be than that furnished by the original text? To ignore this evidence is to ignore the truth entirely. The evidence is very clear. The Book of Abraham is a spurious translation. It has no historical basis, and it is plain that it is a work of Joseph Smith’s imagination! Truth now demands that the Mormon people repudiate this book and the anti-Negro doctrine that is contained in its pages.

We have prepared a 23-page booklet on this subject entitled, Is the Book of Abraham True? In this booklet we go into these matters in far greater detail than we have room to do here. We urge all of our readers to order it. We feel that it contains some of the best material we have ever compiled. Price: 50¢ — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00.

NIBLEY ENDORSES NELSON’S WORK

In the last Messenger we told that Dee Jay Nelson, a Mormon Egyptologist, was given photographs of the Mormon Papyri by special permission of N. Eldon Tanner (a member of the First Presidency) before they were published in the Improvement Era. Mr. Nelson translated the papyri, but he felt that the Church leaders would not print it. Therefore, he turned his work over to us for publication. On April 1, 1968, we submitted the following ad to the Newspaper Agency Corporation:

THE JOSEPH SMITH PAPYRI
A Translation & Preliminary Survey
BY DEE JAY NELSON

Price: 75¢
3 for $2.00 — 5 for $3.00 — 10 for $4.50
MODERN MICROFILM CO.
Box 1884 — Salt Lake City, Utah 84110
Utah mail orders add sales tax — we pay postage

The Salt Lake Tribune ran the ad, but the editor of the Deseret News informed us that they would not run it. We asked N. Eldon Tanner if he did not feel a moral obligation concerning the matter. He replied that he did not. We asked the editor of the Deseret News why the ad was rejected. He stated that he did not believe it was a correct translation. He claimed that he had a conversation with Dr. Nibley concerning Nelson’s work, and that Nibley had told him that he did not believe the translation was correct.

If Dr. Nibley made the statements that the editor of the Deseret News attributed to him (and we have no evidence that he did, other than this man’s word), he seems to have now changed his mind. Dr. Nibley wrote the following for the Brigham Young University Studies:

The publication to the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri has now begun to bear fruit. Two efforts at translation and commentary have already appeared, the one an example of pitfalls to be avoided, the other a conscientious piece of work for which the Latter-Day Saints owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Dee Jay Nelson. … This is a conscientious and courageous piece of work … Nelson

A REAL DIALOGUE

In the Spring of 1966 a group of Mormons published the first issue of a publication entitled, Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought. The editors of this journal claimed that they would present both sides of an issue, but we were rather skeptical and felt the they might eventually be controlled by the Mormon leaders and become like the Improvement Era. We felt that they would not accept an article from us. This spring, however, we worked with Grant Heward and prepared an article which we submitted to them. This article included some material which we have never printed before. In this article we produced photographic proof that Facsimile No. 2 of the Book of Abraham was altered before it was first published. We could hardly imagine that they would print this article since it dealt such a devastating blow to the authenticity of the Book of Abraham. To our great delight, however, they published it in the Summer 1968 issue. We understand that they printed 8,000 copies! This will reach many of the Mormon people who do not read our Messenger.

Just before the article appeared, one of the editors wrote us a letter in which he stated: “Actually it’s hard for me to believe that we’re actually going to publish your article. . . . I think that you can’t really say that we aren’t a forum anymore. At least, we’ve tried hard to move in that direction.” We must admit that the editors of Dialogue have made a courageous move in the last issue. They have given us a chance to present our views, and they have allowed Dr. Nibley to make a rebuttal. This is certainly fair. We must admit that this is a real dialogue. More important than this, however, is the fact that they have submitted photographs of the papyri to some of the most qualified Egyptologists in the world and have printed their translations and interpretations concerning the papyri. We must congratulate them for this move. It shows both honesty and courage.

We plan to sell copies of this particular issue (Summer 1968), since it contains so much material which is related to our work. The price for this issue is $2.00 for each copy. We cannot give any discount to dealers, and those who want back issues will have to write directly to the publishers.

MORE HARM THAN GOOD?

After the papyri were presented to the Mormon Church they were “turned over to Dr. Hugh Nibley, . . . for further research and study” (Improvement Era, January 1968, page 13). On page 19 of the same issue we were assured that Dr. Nibley “is eminently qualified for the project he has undertaken.” In the February issue of the same publication we were told that Dr. Nibley was going to unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics and illustrations on these valuable manuscripts” (Ibid., page 40-H). Dr. Nibley gave a “demonstration” of his “Egyptology at work” which was printed in the Brigham Young University Studies. This was a rendition of a name that appeared in the papyri. Dr. Nibley’s rendition was accepted by the Improvement Era:

The writings on the recently recovered fragments show that all of these Book of the Dead papyri belonged to the Lady Taimin Mutninesihonsu. (Improvement Era, February 1968, page 40)

It soon became obvious that Dr. Nibley had made a mistake. Dee Jay Nelson stated that Dr. Nibley’s work was “incorrect.” He showed that Nibley had “combined the name of the beneficiary of the papyrus and her mother . . . Taimin Mutninesihonsu is a transliteration combining the name Ta-sheret–Min with the connecting phrase meaning “daughter of,” mes en and Nes-Khensu (the mother’s name) (The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 48).

John A. Wilson also rendered this as two different names: “Document B is a Book of the Dead composed for a lady named Ta-sheret–Min (‘the Daughter of the god Min’) born to the lady Nes-Khonsu . . .” (Dialogue, Summer, 1968, page 71). Richard A. Parker also rendered this as two separate names (page 87).

After Dr. Nibley made this mistake, he seemed to give up the idea of unfolding “the meaning of the hieroglyphics and illustrations.” He has written the following in the Brigham Young University Studies:

We have often been asked during the past months why we did not proceed with all haste to produce a translation of the papyri the moment they came into our possession. Well, for thing others are far better equipped to do the job than we are, and some of those others early expressed a willingness to undertake it. But, more important, it is doubtful whether any translation could do as much good as harm. (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer, 1968, page 251)

It would appear, then, that Dr. Nibley was not qualified to give a translation of the papyri. If it had not been for Dialogue, Dee Jay Nelson, and Grant Heward we would still be in the dark concerning the meaning of the papyri. Dr. Nibley has had the papyri down at the B.Y.U. for six months, yet he has not given us a translation. Strange as it may seem, this is the same man who mocked the Egyptologists of 1912 for not taking Joseph Smith’s work seriously: “If such individuals could not take the thing seriously, they should have turned the assignment over to others who would be willing to do so if only for the sake of argument” (Improvement Era, April, 1968, page 66). We feel that Dr. Nibley’s words fit his own situation. If he “could not take the thing seriously,” why did he not turn “the assignment over to others who would be willing to do so?” Why did John A. Wilson and the other Egyptologist have to work from photographs while Dr. Nibley kept possession of the papyri?

PRAY FOR US

We are very thankful for those who have been praying for us and for our work. The Lord has really been blessing the work. The developments with regard to the papyri have been nothing short of miraculous. Many people’s eyes have been opened to the truth by this matter. With the Lord’s help we hope to see even more results. Please continue to pray for us.

A DELAY

Because of the importance of the papyri we have spent a great deal of time studying the Egyptian language and religion. Although this will help us in our writing concerning this subject, it has caused a delay in our two works, The Case Against Mormonism and The Mormon Kingdom. So far we have completed 112 pages of vol. 2 of The Case Against Mormonism, and hope to be mailing out more pages soon. This work will contain our best material concerning the Book of Abraham. The price for volumes one and two is $7.90—this includes a beautiful vinyl loose-leaf binder. We have completed 84 pages of the first volume of The Mormon Kingdom. This work sells for $4.95.
The Mormon Prophet David O. McKay made this statement in a letter dated November 3, 1947:

I know of no scriptural basis for denying the Priesthood to Negroes other than one verse in the Book of Abraham (1:26); however, I believe, as you suggest, that the real reason dates back to our pre-existent life. (Mormonism and the Negro, by John J. Stewart and William E. Berrett, Part 2, page 19)

Although the President of the Mormon Church could use this verse from the Book of Abraham in defense of the Church’s anti-Negro doctrine in 1947, today the Mormon leaders find themselves faced with a serious problem, for the Book of Abraham has been proven to be a spurious work. Wallace Turner wrote the following in the New York Times:

San Francisco, July 14 — Papyrus fragments about 2,300 years old have created bitter wrangling among intellectuals of the Mormon world. The argument is theological and archeological, but it could turn sociological by undermining the scriptural basis for the Mormon’s discrimination against Negroes.

Since the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York gave the fragments to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints last November, the ancient documents have reopened old disputes about the divinity of the inspiration of Joseph Smith Jr., the Mormon Prophet.

The papyri are part of an Egyptian scroll acquired by the Mormons in 1835 and translated by Smith as the Book of Abraham, one of the Mormons’ sacred works.

It had been assumed for decades that all of the original papyri were destroyed in the Chicago fire. The discovery last year that 11 papyrus fragments in the Metropolitan Museum had been involved in the production of the Book of Abraham was an electrifying event for Mormon intellectuals. . . .

The attack has come from within the Mormon community, from scholars who were born into Mormonism but who no longer believe. Most of the 2.5 million Mormon church members have paid scant attention.

Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, now in its third year as the single nonchurch-controlled publication aimed at Mormons, devotes a section of its summer issue to examining the papyri controversy. The editors are devout Mormon scholars.

But one article in Dialogue was written by two heretics notorious to the church establishment in Salt Lake City. They are Jerald Tanner, who left the church several years ago, and Grant S. Heward, recently excommunicated.

They maintain that one of the fragments, when compared with the Smith manuscript of the Book of Abraham, shows this:

“Joseph Smith apparently translated many English words from each Egyptian character. The characters from fewer than four lines of the papyrus make up 49 verses of the Book of Abraham, containing more than 2,000 words.”

They argue that “the Egyptian characters cannot conceivably have enough information channels (component parts) to convey the amount of material translated from them.”

The church’s answer, also in Dialogue, came from Dr. Hugh Nibley, a faculty member of the church’s Brigham Young University.

In the working paper used by the Prophet Joseph, Dr. Nibley wrote, the Egyptian symbols were only headings. “Today nobody claims that Joseph Smith got his information through ordinary scholarly channels,” he said. (New York Times, Thursday, July 5, 1968)
Dee Jay’s research in Egyptology began . . . when he was discharged from the U.S. Submarine Service. After making a superficial study of ancient languages in the States he decided to add some dimension to his scant knowledge, so he traveled as a stoker in the black bunkers of a freighter to Egypt where he attached himself to the fallahin crew of Hussein Ibrahim, excavation foreman working under Zakaria Goneim, at Memphis. The late Zakaria Goneim was for many years keeper of antiquities at the Necropolis of Saqqara. Dee Jay studied three forms of the ancient language under this famous Egyptian Egyptologist. . . . His studies have taken him several times to Europe and six times to the Middle East where he has conferred with experts . . . His discoveries inspired King Farouk to present him with a small collection of Egyptian antiquities which he has added to over the years.

Reed Neuberger gave this information which was published in the Montana Arts, vol. 20, no. 1, page 21:

Dee Jay Nelson is an internationally-known lecturer on archaeological and natural history subjects and has presented just over 4,000 lectures in four countries and 46 states . . .

In the past ten years the Nelsons have made six trips to the Middle East to film historic relics and to conduct archaeological excavations. Two of these have been in Egypt, one at Giza and the second at Saqqara. Among their discoveries were a set of bronze plates inscribed with ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics dating from about 1,400 B.C. These are now a part of their own private collection of antiquities.

Mr. Nelson, an Egyptian philologist by avocation, reads, writes and speaks ancient Egyptian, being skilled in reading hieroglyphics, hieratic and Coptic. His original researches include the first translation of the “The Egyptian Book of Life, . . .”

Mr. Nelson has become a nationally known explorer naturalist. He is a member of the Adventurers Club and gives lectures on the Dead Sea Scrolls. In 1957 he was invited by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion to make the first motion picture of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Since Dee Jay Nelson is an Elder in the Mormon Church, he has taken a great deal of interest in the Book of Abraham. At that time he had only the Facsimiles in the Book of Abraham with which to work.

Dr. Hugh Nibley, of the Brigham Young University, learned of Mr. Nelson’s abilities and felt that he would be “enormously useful to the Church.” On January 4, 1968, Mr. Nelson visited with Dr. Nibley at the Brigham Young University and examined the papyri. Dr. Nibley agreed that Nelson should translate the papyri and sent a note to N. Eldon Tanner (a member of the First Presidency) stating that “it would be a good idea to let Prof. Dee J. Nelson have copies” of the papyri. After completing the translation, Mr. Nelson contacted us and asked if we wanted to print it. He felt that Dr. Nibley seemed to be stalling and that his people should know the truth about the papyri; therefore, he decided to let us publish his findings.

Evidently the Mormon leaders did not want their people to know the truth about the papyri, for the Church’s newspaper, Deseret News, would not allow us to advertise Mr. Nelson’s translation. Strange as it may seem, however, Dr. Nibley gave his endorsement to Mr. Nelson’s work:

The publication of the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri has now begun to bear fruit. Two efforts at translation and commentary have already appeared, the one an example of pitfalls to be avoided, the other a conscientious piece of work for which the Latter-day Saints owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Dee Jay Nelson. . . . This is a conscientious and courageous piece of work . . . Nelson has been careful to consult top-ranking scholars where he has found himself in doubt. He has taken the first step in a serious study of the Facsimiles of the Pearl of Great Price, supplying students with a usable and reliable translation of the available papyri that once belonged to Joseph Smith. (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring, 1968, pages 245 and 247)

Dr. Nibley also stated: “It would now seem that the Latter-day Saints are being pushed by force of circumstances through the door they have so long been reluctant to enter. And to Mr. Dee Jay Nelson goes the credit of being the first to make the plunge” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring, 1968, page 254).

Dee Jay Nelson’s plunge into the study of Egyptology and the Book of Abraham, however, has forced him to reject the book. After many years of study, Mr. Nelson has come to the conclusion that the Mormon Church must give up the Book of Abraham. In a letter dated July 13, 1968, he stated:

I have been swamped lately by letters and long distance telephone calls from troubled people. Almost every one of them asks if I really believe that the Book of Abraham is untrue and each seems almost pleadingly eager for me to defend it. To each I have said that I do not believe it.

Mr. Nelson informed us that in one week he “received 33 letters and 19 long distance calls about the Book of Abraham and the papyri.” Previous to this he had counted 40 letters in a “two month period.” Even though Mr. Nelson has been busy answering questions, he has completed two new books which show why the Mormon Church must repudiate the Book of Abraham. These books are entitled, The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2 and Joseph Smith’s “Eye of Ra,” A Preliminary Survey and First Translation of Facsimile No. 2 in the Book of Abraham.

In the Introduction to The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2, Mr. Nelson states:

My views are as sympathetic to the Latter-day Saints Church teachings as they can be without compromising the accepted and proven principles of Egyptology . . . I find myself standing precariously between two poles. Truth will triumph in the end.

IDENTIFICATION CORRECT

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March, 1968, we stated: “The fall of the Book of Abraham has been brought about by the identification of the piece of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham.”

Dee Jay Nelson confirms the fact that the piece of papyrus Joseph Smith used as the basis for his Book of Abraham is among the papyri which the Metropolitan Museum gave to the Mormon Church in November of 1967. He states:

What do the newly discovered “Metropolitan Papyri” have to do with the Book of Abraham? The original ancient Egyptian text from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham has been found! A substantial part of it can be seen in column 1 (right hand) on the smaller Hor Sensen Papyrus Fragment (unillustrated) . . .

DIALOGUE

The Summer 1968 issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought contains a great deal of interesting information on the Mormon Papyri. Besides translations of the Papyri by top Egyptologists (John A. Wilson and Richard Parker), this issue contains an article by the R.L.D.S. Church Historian Richard P. Howard. Also included is an article by Grant Heward and Richard Parker, a rebuttal by Dr. Hugh Nibley.

Because this issue contains so much material which is related to our work we have decided to sell it. The price is $2.00 for each copy. We cannot give any discount to dealers, and those who want back issues will have to write directly to the publisher.
How do we know that Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham from column 1 of the Hor Sensen Fragment No. 1? Joseph Smith tells us that it is so in the most positive of ways by supplying a list of the ancient characters and attaching to it the “translation.” This list of characters, though crudely copied, precisely matches the first two lines of hieratic characters in column 1 on Hor Papyrus Fragment No. 1. Joseph Smith’s character list and the attached “translation” is found in the notebook entitled Grammar and Alphabet of the Egyptian Language. Before the disclosure that the Joseph Smith Papyri had been found in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City, I had succeeded in identifying the characters accompanying Joseph Smith’s “translation” as traditional hieratic and had, in spite of the poor quality of the copy, identified several individual characters, but it was Grant Wether who later pointed out to me that the characters drawn by Joseph Smith in the left hand margin of the Grammar and Alphabet were the same as in the Original Hor Sensen text. The fact is indubitable. The “translation” starts on page 3 of the Grammar and Alphabet and almost exactly matches the published version of the Book of Abraham beginning with Chapter 1, verse 4 and ending with Chapter 2, verse 5. We can be absolutely sure that Joseph Smith intended the “translation” to match the characters written down the left margin because beginning on page S (there is some inconsistency in his page numbering) he again lists the characters in the margin and repeats the “translation” almost word-for-word. The groups of marginal characters are in each instance represented by the same “translations.” If the characters were irrelevant and independent of the “translation,” as some have suggested, they would not have been so meticulously placed and identically oriented in each of the two “translations.” This fact proves without a doubt that the “translation” relates to the marginal characters and to no others. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2, pages 13-14)

A FALSE TRANSLATION

In The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2, Dee Jay Nelson devotes 10 pages to the “Sensen” text and proves beyond all doubt that Joseph Smith’s “translation” of it—i.e., the Book of Abraham—is completely false. On page 14 he states:

Let us compare a portion of Joseph Smith’s Grammar and Alphabet Book of Abraham “translation” with a traditional translation. The words which I have marked Nos. 5 and 6, according to Joseph Smith read, “Now after the priest of Elk Kee nah was smitten that he died there came a fulfilment of those things which were spoken unto me concerning the land of Chaldea, that there should be a famine in the land; and accordingly a famine prevailed throughout all the land of Chaldea and my father was sorely tormented because of the famine, and he repented of the evil which he had determined against me, to take away my life: But the records of the fathers even the patriarchs concerning the right of priesthood the lord my God preserved in mine own hand; Therefore a knowledge of the beginning of creation and also of the planets, and of the stars, as it was made known unto the fathers, have I kept even unto this day.” This is a substantial “translation” (130 words) to be represented by 4 perfectly normal hieratic characters which any trained Egyptian philologists transliterate MS N (mes en) and mean “offspring of” or “born of.” Word No. 7 is the personal name of the mother, T3Y - Hbyt (Tai-Khebit), yet Joseph Smith tells us that these precise characters mean, “And I shall endeavor to write some of these things, upon this record, for the benefit of my posterity that shall come after me. Now the Lord God caused the famine to so sore in land of Ur insomuch that my brother died: but Terah my father yet lived in the land of Ur of the Chaldees. And it came to pass, that I Abram took Sarai to wife and Nehor my brother took Melkah to wife who was the daughter of Haran” (85 words). Compare these two parts of Joseph Smith’s “translation” with the Book of Abraham, Chapter 1, verse 29 through Chapter 2, verse 2.

On page 16-17 of the same book, Mr. Nelson states:

It was determined by a careful count that in current printed editions of the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham, Chapter 1, verse 4 through Chapter 2, verse 5 there are precisely 1,125 English words. These were derived from 46 margin characters accompanying the two Grammar and Alphabet “translations.” This last figure is only approximately correct. . . If 46 is the correct number, the ratio of English words to Egyptian characters is 25 to 1. I have never heard of a written language, ancient or modern, which was this compact. Is this ratio realistic? It is possible to convey simple thoughts with a veritable mountain of words. I was sure that the message in the “translation” could be expressed more simply and this might make the ratio more feasible. To test this theory a computer was what I needed so I went to the Landa Data Center in California and put my problem to them. They agreed to program a computer to the task of calculating the mathematical possibility that the first two lines of column 1 of the Hor Sensen Fragment could produce the required minimum number of words to convey the message in the Book of Abraham, Chapter 1, verse 4 through Chapter 2, verse 5. The machine used was a Sigma 7 multi-use time sharing environment computer manufactured by the Scientific Data Systems Corporation, Los Angeles, California. I asked the operator to simplify the thoughts in the 1,125 word Book of Abraham “translation” without sacrificing any of the basic meanings. The computer answer was 482 words which means that each Egyptian character is supposed to translate into just over 10 English words. The ratio is still fantastic though we have given Joseph Smith’s claim the benefit of the doubt by reducing the English “translation” to its simplest form. This 10:1 ratio includes the proper nouns in the Book of Abraham. Between Chapter 1, verse 4 and the of Chapter 2, verse 5 there are 65 of them. These contain approximately 296 English vocabables excluding those least audible connecting vowels. The only reasonable way to represent proper names in a translation is transliterate them. The name of the god Mahmackrah has 10 letters representing 7 vocabables and it is repeated three times in the “translation.” Shagreel, a proper name with 8 letters, has 6 vocabables. Elkenah [has] 5 vocabables and it is repeated in the 33 verses five separate times. The 46 marginal Grammar and Alphabet characters can not duplicate the vocabables in the proper names in the “translation” and even if they could that would leave 1,060 words unaccounted for.

A SECOND MEANING?

Dr. Hugh Nibley, the Mormon apologists, has gone so far as to suggest that the “Sensen” text may have a second meaning unknown to Egyptologists:

. . . you very often have texts if double meaning . . . it’s quite possible, say, that this “Sensen” papyrus, telling a straight forward innocent little story or something like that, should contain also a totally different text concealed within . . . they [the Egyptian] know what they’re doing, but we don’t. We don’t have the key. (Speech by Dr. Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968)

Dr. Nibley states that Joseph Smith treated the characters as super-cryptograms:

It has long been known that the characters “interpreted” by Joseph Smith in his Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar are treated by him as super-cryptograms; and now it is apparent that the source of those characters is the unillustrated fragment on which the word Sen-Sen appears repeatedly. This identifies it as possibly belonging to those writings known as The Book of Breathings, though that in turn is merely “compilations and excerpts from older funerary spells and burial formulas.” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1968, page 249)

Dee Jay Nelson shows that Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that the Sensen text might have a “different text concealed within it” is absolutely ridiculous:

Some say Joseph Smith did not translate the literal meaning of those two Hor Sensen lines but rather the crypto-meaning. This is not even remotely possible. Cryptograms invariably had meanings allied to the literal meanings. In any case, the complex idea in Joseph Smith’s “translation” outnumber the elements in the hieratic characters which could contain the cryptogram code. It is mathematically impossible to express the total complexities of Joseph Smith’s “translation” with the characters involved. (The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2, page 14)

A PERSONAL GOD?

To all those who will send us their address and zip code we will send a FREE COPY of Is There a Personal God? This is a 56-page pamphlet by Jerald Tanner.
In the book, Joseph Smith’s “Eye of Ra.” Dee Jay Nelson shows that what Joseph Smith claimed was the Book of Abraham was in reality a pagan text which was written more than a thousand years after the time of Abraham:

Biblical experts believe that Abraham lived sometime around 1800 B.C., but the calligraphy, spelling and contents of the Hor Sensen Papyrus give every indication that it was not written until nearly the time of Christ (possibly shortly after). Egyptologists believe that the Sensen texts (Book of Breathing) were not even composed until about the Seventh Century B.C. There are inconsistencies here. To compound the divergency, the traditional translation of the Sensen funerary text deals with matters unrelated to the subject matter of Joseph Smith’s “translation.” I have read several publications by learned members of the Church who insist that the papyrus found in the Egyptian catacomb was not actually written by the hand of Abraham but that it was a copy of an original work by him. I can not read this meaning into the statement which I repeat for your consideration . . . “Translation of the Book of Abraham written by his own hand upon papyrus and found in the catacombs of Egypt.” Even if one concedes to the viewpoint that the papyrus possessed by Joseph Smith in the early Nineteenth Century was a copy and not the original, one is faced with the unmistakable fact that this ancient document deals with pagan gods and pagan beliefs without mentioning Abraham or anything even remotely associated with him. I have already given reasons why it is unlikely that a hidden message or cryptogram is in this text. Certainly it could not convey such an irrelevant account as is contained in the Book of Abraham. The title of this longer manuscript is quite explicit in stating that this “translation” which Joseph Smith did had been taken from “writing(s)” which were “upon papyrus.” This leaves no doubt as to where the Book of Abraham message reposed. The specific papyrus referred to is the Hor Sensen Papyrus which had been “found in the catacombs of Egypt.” If we accept Joseph Smith’s claims we are forced to the conclusion that the Hor Sensen Papyrus in addition to conveying a normal Book of Breathing message also tells in cipher a part of the history of Abraham. If the many other papyri which have been found inscribed with this text contain the same coded history of Abraham and he was the author of the first of these from which all others were copied this would be very real condensation of the ancient Patriarch because religious meanings of the Book of Breathing (Sensen) are as pagan as can be and flaunt religious practices which were most abhorrent to Abraham. (Joseph Smith’s “Eye of Ra,” page 25)

To be well informed about the papyri question the reader should have both of Dee Jay Nelson’s new books, The Joseph Smith Papyri, Part 2, and Joseph Smith’s “Eye or Ra.” We highly recommend both these books.

RIDICULOUS IDEAS!

After we published the last issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we received the following letter:

I’ve read your articles and in spite of everything you said I testify I know the Book of Abraham is the Word of God. If I was President McKay I would order that Grant S. Heward be assassinated.

In a letter dated July 20, 1968, this same man stated: “God knows I don’t really want the murder of Mr. Heward.” Instead, he had another solution. He felt that the President of the Church should order that the papyrus be destroyed:

I’ve come to the conclusion that the manuscript found was not the manuscript the Prophet Joseph Smith used. I think it is a forgery to force the Church to give the Negroes the Priesthood. If I was President McKay I would have the manuscript destroyed.

We do not feel that this man is typical of the Mormon people. In fact, his letters show evidence that he is not a well-adjusted person. Nevertheless, his thinking concerning the Book of Abraham is somewhat similar to that of many other Mormons. They would not go so far as to suggest that the papyrus or Grant Heward be destroyed, but they feel that the Book of Abraham is the “Word of God” and that any evidence to the contrary must be ignored. Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that the papyrus might have a second meaning is almost as ridiculous as the idea that it is a “forgery.” And his suggestion that we ignore the evidence furnished by the papyrus and judge the Book of Abraham by its similarity to a number of old apocryphal writings is preposterous. The Mormon people cannot afford to wait for “years” while Dr. Nibley searches through these old “legends.” Now is the time to face this problem. The evidence furnished by the original papyrus is very clear. The Book of Abraham is a spurious work. It has no historical basis, and it is plain that it is the work of Joseph Smith’s imagination! Truth now demands that the Mormon people repudiate this book and the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages.

WHICH WAY TO HAPPINESS?

J. B. Phillips made this statement concerning the sad condition of the world:

The diagnoses of the world’s sickness (and, therefore, of the individuals who comprise the world) is that the power to love has been wrongly directed. It has either been turned in upon itself or given to the wrong things. The outward symptoms, and the results, of this misdirection are plainly obvious (at least in other people) in what we call “sin” or “selfishness.” The drastic “conversion” which God-become-Man [Christ] called for is the reversal of the wrong attitude, the deliberate giving of the whole power to love, first to God, and then to other people. Without this reversal He spoke quite blantly of a world doomed to destruction. (Your God Is Too Small, page 121)

Myron Augsburger wrote:

True love cannot be expressed for things, for things only serve personal ends and affections for things is turned inward and is closed and selfish. Love for a person is outgoing and genuine as it cares to share relationship rather than to use the person . . . Only the born-again person knows the transformation of divine love through the indwelling Spirit, and can express a measure of the love that Jesus commanded toward both friends and enemies. . . . The evidence that one has been delivered from the selfishness of sin is the expression of Christian love. The Christ-indwelled person is a disciple of the inner life, one whose motive is the glory of his Lord. (Plas Living, pages 25, 26, 27 & 45)

SPECIAL OFFER ON “CASE”

Our most important work on Mormonism is entitled, The Case Against Mormonism. In this work we have covered such subjects as: changes in Mormon publications, changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations, Joseph Smith’s First Vision and the Book of Mormon. We plan to have a great deal of information concerning the papyri and the Book of Abraham. In fact, we have already completed 32 pages on this subject.

The first volume is now finished, and we have completed 144 pages in the second volume. The remaining pages will be mailed out as soon as they are completed. To receive both these volumes and a vinyl loose-leaf binder the customer would normally pay $7.90. We are having a special, however, and if these two volumes are ordered before October 15, 1968, the price will be only $6.95.

ORDER TODAY!

Another book, The Mountain Meadows Massacre, has sold out. This makes 21 publications which are no longer available. Since we have no plans to reprint these books they have become collector’s items and will become more valuable as time goes on. For instance, the book 3,913 Changes in the Book of Mormon, originally sold for $5.00, but there are a number of people today who would be willing to pay $25.00 to obtain a copy.

A number of our books are almost sold out; therefore, this may be your last chance to order them. PLACE YOUR ORDER TODAY!

+ Donations +

A number of people have made donations to help us in our work. We are always glad to receive these, but we should probably warn our readers that they cannot be deducted from their income tax.
From the very first day that the Metropolitan Museum presented the papyri to the Mormon Church, the Church leaders were willing to admit that the drawing which Joseph Smith used for Facsimile No. 1 in the Book of Abraham was among the manuscripts. They were reluctant to admit, however, that the fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the text for the Book of Abraham itself was among the collection. In the Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1968, we pointed out that the fragment of papyrus which Dr. Nibley labeled “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” was the fragment Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham from. Below is a photograph of the right side of this papyrus.

Illustration No. 1 — A photograph of the right side of the fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham.

In the Improvement Era, May 1968, Dr. Nibley admitted that the papyrus Joseph Smith used “in preparing the text of the Book of Abraham” had been located. At a meeting held at the University of Utah, May 20, 1968, Dr. Nibley stated:

Within a week of the publication of the papyri students began calling my attention . . . to the fact that, the very definite fact that, one of the fragments seemed to supply all of the symbols for the Book of Abraham. This was the little “Sensen” scroll. Here are the symbols. The symbols are arranged here, and the interpretation goes along here and this interpretation turns out to be the Book of Abraham.

This fragment of papyrus has now been translated by three different Egyptologists, and they have all come to the conclusion that it is in reality an appendage to the Egyptian “Book of Breathings” and has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. Therefore, the Book of Abraham has been proven to be a spurious work.

When the Improvement Era published photographs of the papyri in the February 1968 issue, we were told that Dr. Nibley would unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics and illustrations on these valuable manuscripts” (page 40-H). Eight months have passed and Dr. Nibley still has not unfolded the meaning “of the hieroglyphics and illustrations.” Finally, in the November 1968 issue Dr. Nibley admits that he does not intend to deal with the “Sensen” papyrus which Joseph Smith used as the basis for his Book of Abraham. Instead, he intends to deal only with the Facsimiles:

From the very beginning this writer has been rightly accused of an almost callous unconcern for the newly located papyri (all except that one matching Facsimile 1) as evidence for or against the authenticity of the Book of Abraham . . . in the following articles we are going to discuss only the Facsimiles and the interpretation thereof, passing by in silence those writings which do not belong to the Book of Abraham, even though that book may have been the end product of a process in which they had a part . . .

For those who wish to attack or defend the Pearl of Great Price, there is quite enough material contained in the facsimiles to keep things lively for some time to come, without having to wrangle about hypothetical claims while the clear-cut claims of the facsimiles go unheeded. (Improvement Era, November 1968, pages 36-38)
FALSIFICATION PROVEN

Even though we will not accept Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that we ignore the “Sensen” text, we feel that a very good case could be made against the Book of Abraham on the basis of the facsimiles alone.

Although the original of Facsimile No. 2 has not been located, the papyri that have been found prove beyond all doubt that the drawing which appears in the Book of Abraham has been falsified. Evidently the original disk which Joseph Smith had was damaged. Portions of it were either unreadable or they had fallen away, and when the Mormons made the woodcut for Facsimile No. 2, they falsely inserted writing from the papyrus which was not on the original disk. The fact that part of the original was either missing or damaged is proven by a drawing which appears in Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar. This drawing was suppressed for 130 years. The reader will find a photograph of this drawing in Illustration No. 2 shown above. Notice the missing areas on this drawing. In Illustration No. 3 the reader will find a photograph of Facsimile No. 2, as it was first published in the Times and Seasons in 1842. Notice that the missing areas have been filled in.

Grant Heward has been convinced for some time that Facsimiles No. 2 contains portions that have been falsified. He finally came to the conclusion that the damaged or missing areas around the edge of Facsimile No. 2 had been filled in with hieratic characters. (This is supposed to be written in hieroglyphic characters.) Working on this theory he made an astounding discovery. He found that the characters had been copied from the same piece of papyrus Joseph Smith used as a basis for the text in the Book of Abraham (see Illustration No. 1 on first page). One group of characters from line two of the “Sensen” fragment was copied twice along the edge of Facsimile No. 2. The characters which follow were taken from line 3. The remaining characters were probably taken from line 4, but they are poorly copied. The readers will see that Mr. Heward was correct by comparing the characters in Illustration No. 3.

At the time Grant Heward was making his discovery concerning the characters that were inserted around the outer edge, we were examining Facsimile No. 2 and found the word “Sensen” written in Figure 14 (Joseph Smith assigned numbers to different portions of the disk). A more careful check revealed that the entire name of the “Book of Breathings” had been written in Figures 14 and 15. These characters were taken from the fourth line of the fragment which has been identified as the one used for the Book of Abraham text (see Illustration No. 2 shown above).

It also appears that the area at the top of Facsimile No. 2 showing a god in a boat was evidently copied from the fragment of papyrus which Dr. Nibley labeled “IV. Framed (‘Trinity’) papyrus” (see Illustration No. 2).

After carefully examining this evidence we worked with Grant Heward and prepared an article which was published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1968, pages 92-98. In the face of the documented proof which we presented, Dr. Nibley maintains that Facsimile No. 2 has not been falsified:

> Then too, we must recognize that there are sections of hieroglyphic text in Facsimile 2 that present-day Egyptologists read without too much trouble: since these legible portions are found to be correct and conventional Egyptian, it is perfectly plain that nobody has falsified or jumbled them, as was charged. That is to say, whenever the text can be checked, everything is found to be in order. (Improvement Era, September 1968, page 74)

We feel that Dr. Nibley is deliberately misrepresenting the facts with regard to this matter. It is plain for anyone to see that everything is not in order. The Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson states:

> An article entitled “The Source of the Book of Abraham identified” by Grant S. Heward and Jerald Tanner which appeared in the summer issue of Dialogue (page 92), pointed out that several hieratic passages from the Hor Sensen Papyrus had been copied onto the right hand portion of Facsimile No. 2 which appears in printed editions of the Book of Abraham . . . It also demonstrated in an excellent illustration that part of line 4 of column 1 on the same Hor Sensen Fragment had been copied onto the right hand ends of each of those three horizontal lines which are designated on Facsimile No. 2 as Figs. 13, 14 and 15. I critically examined these claims and found that they were absolutely correct . . . I am convinced that hieratic did not appear upon the original ancient article because those areas upon which this type of script is written precisely agree with those areas which have been left blank on the hypocephalus ink drawing . . . The places where the hieroglyphic writing ends and hieratic begins on printed copies of Facsimile No. 2 are precisely the same as the places where the hieroglyphic writing ends and blank spaces appear on the . . . drawing. I believe that Joseph Smith, Mr. Reuben Hedlock (the engraver) or one of Smith’s associates copied the characters from the Hor Papyrus onto the woodcut master to fill the areas which were damaged and unreadable on the original hypocephalus. These amulets are very fragile and subject to damage . . .

Why did Joseph Smith copy parts of the Hor Sensen Papyrus and the so-called Book of Abraham characters upon a printed cut of an irrelevant and pagan object such as the hypocephalus represented in Facsimile No. 2? The fact that he (or an associate) did so is inescapable . . . (Joseph Smith’s “Eye of Ra,” by Dee Jay Nelson, pages 22, 23 and 25)

Facsimile No. 2 was reconstructed in a very peculiar way. First, areas that are blank in the drawing in the “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar” have been filled in with characters and drawings from other documents. Second, line of hieratic and hieroglyphic writing are joined together in a strange way—introducing foreign and unrelated thoughts. Third, to add to the confusion, the hieratic writing is inserted upside down in relation to the hieroglyphic text on the same lines.

The information which we have presented shows beyond all doubt that Joseph Smith did not have any idea of what the Egyptian language or drawings were all about. He did not even seem to know when the Egyptian writing was upside down. The most serious indictment against him, however, is that he falsified the documents and made many imaginative additions to the drawings.

Dr. Hugh Nibley claims that Joseph Smith cannot be held responsible for mistakes in the Facsimiles:

First of all, Joseph Smith did not draw the Facsimiles; they were the work of a professional wood engraver, Reuben Hedlock, . . . Some critics have noted that some of the numbers that have been added to Facsimiles 2 are upside down, and have again assumed that Joseph Smith put them that way; but as R. C. Webb points out, “There is no evidence before us that Smith is responsible for it.” (Improvement Era, February, 1968, page 20)

While Joseph Smith cannot be held responsible for charges made after his death, he is certainly responsible for the falsifications that were made when the Book of Abraham was first published in 1842. Actually, Joseph Smith was the editor of the Times and Seasons at the time the facsimiles were printed. Under the date of March 4, 1842, we find this statement in his history:

During the forenoon I was at my office and the printing office, correcting the first plate or cut of the records of Father Abraham, prepared by Reuben Hedlock, for the Times and Seasons, . . . (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 519)

Under the date of March 4, 1842, we find this entry in Joseph Smith’s History:

Friday, 4. — At my office exhibiting the Book of Abraham in the original of Brother Reuben Hedlock, so that he might take the size of the several plates or cuts, and prepare the blocks for the Times and Seasons; and also gave instruction concerning the arrangement of the writing on the large cut, illustrating the principles of astronomy; with other general business. (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 543)

The “large cut” refers to Facsimile No. 2 because it was printed “in double page size” in the Times and Seasons.

Joseph Smith’s statement that he “gave instructions concerning the arrangement of the writing” on this cut becomes much more significant now that we know that portions were added from other documents. Thus we see that Joseph Smith would have been aware of the falsifications made in the Facsimiles, and therefore he stands responsible for the fraudulent reconstruction.

FACSIMILE NO. 1

Egyptologists have always claimed that Joseph Smith was in error when he interpreted Facsimile No. 1 as an idolatrous priest trying to sacrifice Abraham on an altar. They feel that this is in reality the god Osiris on a couch who is attended by the god Anubis. A century ago the French Egyptologist Theodule Deveria claimed that the Mormons had altered the scene shown in Facsimile No. 1. In 1912 Dr. Albert M. Lythgoe, head of the Department of Egyptian Art of the Metropolitan Museum, made a similar charge:

Dr. Lythgoe took up some of the slight discrepancies in the Mormon pictures from the Egyptian originals. He expressed the wish that he might see the original papyrus that the Prophet Smith translated or a photograph of it, instead of drawings made from it. In the first of the Mormon figures the god Anubis, bending over the mummy, was shown with a Human and a strangely un-Egyptian head, instead of the jackal’s head usual to such a scene. (New York Times, Magazine Sect., December 29, 1912)

The Mormon leaders denied that alterations had been made, but now that we have the original papyrus their position has been considerably weakened because the portions of the papyrus that have been in question are missing (see Illustration No. 4).

Dr. Aziz S. Atiya, the man credited with finding the Mormon Papyri, stated that “the head had fallen off, and I could see that the papyrus was stuck on paper, nineteenth century paper. The head was completed in pencil, apparently by Joseph Smith, . . . (Improvement Era, January 1968, page 13).

Dr. Hugh Nibley has stated that the papyri “were in excellent condition when Joseph Smith worked with them.” He claims that Facsimile No. 1 was damaged after the woodcut was made for the Times and Seasons.

VOL. 3 — ‘CASE AGAINST MORMONISM’

We will soon begin printing the third volume of The Case Against Mormonism. The pages will be mailed out as they are printed (probably about 20 or more at a time). Volume 3 will be filled with new and important information concerning Mormonism. Some of this material represents years of research. In order to receive the pages as they are printed the reader must have a ring binder to keep the pages in. For those who have already ordered the other volumes and have the binder the price for vol. 3 will be $2.95. We realize, however, that some of our readers have not ordered the first two volumes or the binder. Therefore, we are giving a special price to those who order all three volumes at this time. The usual price for the three volumes and the binder (this is a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder) is $10.85, but if they are ordered before December 15, 1968, the price will be only $8.95.

A PERSONAL GOD?

To all those who will send us their address and zip code we will send a FREE COPY of Is There a Personal God? This is a 56-page pamphlet by Jerald Tanner.
We feel that there is a great deal of evidence to show that the papyri were damaged when Joseph Smith obtained them. In 1837, just two years after Joseph Smith obtained the papyri, William S. West made this statement:

There were records torn by being taken from the roll of embalming salve which contained them, and some parts entirely lost, but Smith is to translate the whole by divine inspiration and that which is lost, like Nebuchadnezzar’s dream, can be interpreted as well as that which is preserved. (A Few Interesting Facts Respecting the Rise, Progress and Pretensions of the Mormons, as quoted in Pearl of Great Price Conference, 1964 ed., pg 55)

This statement shows that the papyri were not “in excellent condition” at the time Joseph Smith worked with them.

In a desperate attempt to save the Book of Abraham, Dr. Nibley has claimed that “an old portrait” of Joseph Smith’s mother proves that Facsimile No. 1 has not been altered. In Illustration No. 6 the reader will see a photograph of this portrait. Dr. Nibley makes this comment concerning it:

... evidence that Facsimile 1 has been honestly reproduced is found in an early independent copy of it by an artist (very probably non-Mormon) who was using it for purely decorative purposes and without the intention of proving anything. It is to be found in an old portrait of Lucy Mack Smith, the Prophet’s mother.... The picture was located by President Joseph F. Smith and Preston Nibley in a farmhouse near Nauvoo.

In 1942 President George Albert Smith, ... visited a relative, Salisbury Smith, ... Mr. Smith took the brethren to a farm near Carthage to see “Aunt Clara,” the 83-year-old daughter of Lucy, the youngest daughter of Lucy Mack Smith. She showed them a picture of her grandmother, ... She refused to part with the picture but allowed the brethren to have it photographed, ... In the portrait the artist has decorated the wall space behind his subject with her most prized possession—the original of Facsimile 1. ... there can be no doubt that it is the original papyrus hanging on the wall, ... Mrs. Smith would certainly not have gone to the expense and trouble of framing, and then have proudly displayed, a printed copy of no value whatever (they existed by the thousands) while she still had the original in her possession. The artist, ... has given us a rapid, fairly accurate, and unbiased sketch of what the papyrus looked like before it was damaged. It matches our printed reproductions, and not the proposed restoration. (Improvement Era, September 1968, pg 78)

Even though the photograph Dr. Nibley included in the Improvement Era was not clear, there were a number of reasons for believing that it was not a drawing of the original papyrus. To begin with, the portrait does not include the four lines of hieroglyphic writing found at the sides of the original papyrus (see photograph of original papyrus in Illustration No. 4). Dee Jay Nelson made this interesting observation:

The fragile nature of the ancient papyrus would not have allowed the sides to be folded under without breaking them. The original fragment could not have otherwise been framed as it is seen in the portrait. (Letter dated September 15, 1968)

A close examination of the photograph published in the Improvement Era revealed that numbers were present on the drawing. Dee Jay Nelson stated:

I examined the half-tone Era print under a low power microscope and found that even through the screening of the photograph one can distinguish numbers designating the various elements and that these numbers appear exactly in those locations where they are found upon this Facsimile in printed editions of the Book of Abraham. The numbers 2, 8 and 11 are the most definite. On a photograph ... rather than a half-tone print they should be even more evident. This indicated that it is a print hanging on the wall and not the original papyrus fragment.

Although we were convinced that numbers were on the photograph which appeared in the Improvement Era, we felt that it would be hard to convince others since the reproduction was so unclear. We felt that a good photograph of the original portrait would prove Dr. Nibley’s argument untrue.

Michael Marquardt began to do research with regard to this matter. His findings were sent to Wesley P. Walters (who has done so much for us in the past). Wesley Walters continued to do research with regard to this matter and finally found the original portrait in the possession of Charles W. Boyd in Chicago, Illinois. Wesley Walters has photographed this portrait and has allowed us to use it in the Salt Lake City Messenger. The reader will find this in Illustration No. 7. (We will probably have additional photographs in The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3.) The reader will see that the numbers which appear in the published version of the Book of Abraham (see Illustration No. 5) are visible in this photograph. They appear in exactly the same places as on the printed version. The numbers which are most obvious are: 1, to the right of the bird’s head; 2, under the knife; 3, to the left of the standing figure; 7, on the second jar from the left; 8, between the first and second jar; 9, on the crocodile; 11, below the mouth of the crocodile.

Since these numbers do not appear on the original papyrus (see Illustration No. 4) and were added to the printed copies to explain the drawing, this could not possibly be a drawing of the original papyrus. Thus we see that the statement that this is the “original Papyrus hanging on the wall” has been proven untrue.

In The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, we will have a great deal of material concerning the falsification of the facsimiles.

WORDS OF CHRIST:

I tell you the truth: no one can see the Kingdom of God unless he is born again. (John 3:3)

I am the way, I am the truth, I am the life; no one goes to the Father except by me. (John 14:6)

From the inside, from a man’s heart, come the evil ideas which lead him to do immoral things, to rob, kill, commit adultery, covet, and do all sort of evil things; deceit, indecency, jealousy, slander, pride, and folly—all these evil things come from inside a man and make him unclean. (Mark 7:21-23)
The Mormon Church leaders now claim that the church has almost 3,000,000 members, and they predict that if they continue to grow at the same rate they will have 10,000,000 members by 2000 A.D. (Deseret News, Church Section, October 21, 1967, page 1)

One Mormon wrote: “As a Mormon I am impressed with the tremendous growth of the Church. I understand that our membership will soon reach 3 million. I note with interest that while most other churches are floundering and drifting, the Mormon Church seems to be on course and as a result is a very successful religion. By 1975 we will probably be one of the five largest churches in America. As far as I know, the only problems the Church has are those associated with rapid growth.”

Is All Well in Zion?

While the growth of the Mormon Church has been rather impressive, we do not feel that this makes them “on course” or shows that there are no problems except those associated with rapid growth. Actually, there are very serious problems which the Mormon leaders must face if they continue to send missionaries throughout the world. The LDS missionary is supposed to tell each prospective convert that God has spoken from heaven and restored the true Church of Christ to the earth. After this he proceeds to tell the contact that his church is false. In fact, the handbook used by the missionary tells him that the contact must reach this conclusion: “There was a complete apostasy and my church is false.” In fact, the handbook used by the missionary tells him that the contact must reach this conclusion: “There was a complete apostasy and my church is false” (A Uniform System for Teaching Investigators, published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, August 1961, page 9).

If God had actually spoken from heaven and established the Mormon Church, we would not object to this attack upon the contact’s religion, but there is convincing evidence that no such revelation has been given.

In fact, the very revelations upon which the LDS Church is based, i.e., the Book of Mormon, Pearl of Great Price, and the Doctrine and Covenants, can now be shown to be man-made.

Plagiarism

The Book of Mormon was supposed to have been translated from ancient gold plates by Joseph Smith, yet we have found that it quotes from the Westminster Confession which was not written until 1646 A.D. (see our Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, pages 71-73). We have also shown a number of parallels between the Book of Mormon and the Wayway Sentinel, a newspaper in Joseph Smith’s area. On pages 107-108 of our Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, we show that a statement which was supposed to have been made by Lehi almost 600 years before the time of Christ, quotes from the works of William Shakespeare, who was not born until 1564 A.D. Below is a comparison of the statement in the Book of Mormon with the words of Shakespeare:

2 Nephi 1:14

... from whence no traveler can return;

Shakespeare

... from whose bourn no traveller returns... (Hamlet, Act 3, Scene 1, as quoted in Commentary on the Book of Mormon, vol. 1, page 237)

The Mormon apologist Sidney B. Sperry, made this comment:

In fairness to critics, and in anticipation of future discussions of the problem, we wish to call attention to a particular word used in the quotations by both Lehi and Shakespeare, . . . The word we have in mind is “traveller.” It stands out like a sore thumb as far as Lehi is concerned. . . .

We are led to the conclusion that the only word that Joseph Smith might have put into Lehi’s mouth from Shakespeare, assuming he was exposed to the lines from Hamlet, is “traveller.” (The Problems of the Book of Mormon, 1964, pages 128-129)

Even though Dr. Sperry admits that the word “traveller” might have been “put into Lehi’s mouth from Shakespeare,” he states that it “would be very difficult to prove that Joseph Smith was familiar with the works of Shakespeare; it would be especially difficult to prove that he was acquainted with the Bard’s work at the time he made his translation of the Book of Mormon” (Problems of the Book of Mormon, page 124).

Although we have shown that “Shakespeare’s works, 10 vols.” were sold at the Wayway Bookstore in Joseph Smith’s neighborhood (Wayway Sentinel, January 26, 1825), we now have a much better idea of where Joseph Smith might have found these words. In 1825 Josiah Priest published a book in Albany, N.Y., entitled The Wonders of Nature and Providence Displayed. Rev. Wesley P. Walters has sent us a photograph of an original copy of this book containing a sticker showing that it belonged to the “Manchester Library.” This is very interesting because, according to Joseph Smith’s own story, he lived in “Manchester” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:3). Mr. Walters also found that library records show that this book was checked out by a number of people during the year 1827. Therefore it was well known in the area of Palmyra and Manchester.

The interesting thing about this book is that it contains a story which quotes the words of Shakespeare. In quoting these words, however, they are in the wrong order, and this makes the end of the quotation almost identical to that in the Book of Mormon.

2 Nephi 1:14

... from whence no traveler can return;

Wonders of Nature

... from whence no traveller returns. (The Wonders of Nature and Providence Displayed, 1825, page 469)

NEW BOOK — A Translation & Study of Facsimile No. 3 by Dee Jay Nelson. Mr. Nelson has devoted a great deal of time to Facsimile No. 3 in the Book of Abraham. He realizes that he could be excommunicated from the Mormon Church, but he feels that the truth must be made known. This pamphlet contains many drawings. Price: 75¢
Because of this quotation we feel that there must be a relationship between these two books, and this is strengthened by a number of other important parallels. The Book of Mormon teaches that the Indians are the descendants of a group of Hebrews who came to America. The Wonders of Nature and Providence, Displayed (published five years before the Book of Mormon) contains “proofs that the Indians of North America are lineally descended from the ancient Hebrews” (Wonders, page 297).

Josiah Priest’s book contains a great deal of information about the Indians. It is interesting to note that Josiah Priest’s book speaks of the “isthmus of Darien” and uses the words “narrow neck of land.” These same words are found in the Book of Mormon. Below is a comparison:

Ether 10:20

... the narrow neck of land, by the place where the sea divides the land.

Wonders of Nature

... a narrow keck of land is interposed between two vast oceans. (page 598)

There are other important parallels which we hope to present in our work, The Case Against Mormonism.

Temple Ceremonies

In past issues of the Messenger we have shown that the anti-Negro doctrine comes from the Book of Abraham, and that the translation of the papyri by Egyptologists has destroyed the basis of this doctrine. The translation of the papyri may have other serious effects upon the doctrines of the Mormon Church. The Mormon writer Hyrum L. Andrus, for instance, claims that Joseph Smith obtained “essential elements” of the LDS Temple Ceremony from the papyri:

Evidence indicates that Joseph Smith obtained the essential covenants, keywords, etc., of the temple ceremony from the writings of Abraham. (See Facsimile No. 2 figures 3 and 8.) ... Having obtained essential elements of this ceremony from the writings of Abraham, he then organized them into a formal ceremony, ... (God, Man and the Universe, 1968, page 334)

Now that it is plain that the papyri were nothing but pagan documents, Mormons must look elsewhere for the origin of these ceremonies. We feel that at least part of the Temple Ceremony came from Freemasonry.

Although the temple ceremonies are secret, several exposures have been printed. Temple Mormonism, Its Evolution, Ritual and Meaning, published in 1931, is supposed to be one of the most accurate accounts.

When we compared the temple ritual with the Masonic ceremony we were astonished by the similarities. For instance, the “five points of fellowship” are almost identical. In the Mormon ceremony we find the following:

The five points of fellowship are given by putting the inside of the right foot to the inside of the Lord’s, the inside of your knee to his, laying your breast close to his, your left hands on each other’s backs, and each one putting his mouth to the other’s ear, in which position the Lord whispers: Lord— “This is the sign of the token: “Health to the navel, narrow in the bones, ...” (Temple Mormonism, page 22)

In his book, Freemasonry Exposed, Capt. William Morgan gave this information concerning the “five points of fellowship” in the Masonic Lodge:

He (the candidate) is raised on what is called the five points of fellowship, which are foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back and mouth to ear. This is done by putting the inside of your right foot to the inside of the right foot of the person to whom you are going to give the word, the inside of your knee to his, laying your right breast against his, your left hands on the back of each other, and your mouths to each other’s right ear (in which position alone you are permitted to give the word), and whisper the word Mahah-bone. He is also told that Mahah-bone signifies narrow in the bone. (Freemasonry Exposed, page 84)

William Morgan’s book was first published in Batavia, N.Y., in 1827. We know that it was a very popular book, and that the Mormon Apostle Heber C. Kimball had a copy. Although Joseph Smith was probably familiar with this book, the connection between Mormonism and Masonry is even closer than this, for Joseph himself joined the Masonic Lodge in Nauvoo in 1842. We find the following in Joseph Smith’s History under the date of March 15, 1842:

In the evening I received the first degree in Freemasonry in the Nauvoo Lodge, assembled in my general business office. (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 551)

The next day Joseph Smith stated:

I was with the Masonic Lodge and rose to the sublime degree. (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 552)

Less than two months later, May 4, 1842, Joseph Smith introduced the temple ceremonies, and according to his own statement, it was in the same room “where the Masonic fraternity meet occasionally”:

I spent the day in my general business office, or lodge room (that is where the Masonic fraternity meet occasionally, for want of a better place) in council with . . . Patriarch Hyrum Smith, . . . and President Brigham Young and Elders Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards, instructing them in the principles and order of the Priesthood, attending to washings, anointings, endowments and the communication of keys pertaining to the Aaronic Priesthood, and so on to the highest order of the Melchisedek Priesthood, . . . (History of the Church, vol. 5, pages 1-2)

Some Mormon writers have admitted that there are similarities between the temple ceremony and the Masonic ritual. E. Cecil McGavrin stated:

It is evident that the Masonic ritual embraces a few features that resemble the rudimental ceremonies of the Temple Endowment, yet these few points of similarity are largely restricted to the rituals pertaining to the Aaronic priesthood. (Mormonism and Masonry, page 197)

We feel that there are more than just a few points of similarity,” and we hope to document these parallels in the next chapter of our work, The Mormon Kingdom. Also, we plan to print the Mormon temple ceremony and show some of the important changes that have been made in it through the years. We want to bring the ceremony right up to date. One couple who has been through the temple about fifty times has helped us and another man who has been through over a hundred times has agreed to help.

The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1 (which will have the information concerning the temple ceremony) usually sells for $4.95, but if it is ordered before March 31, 1969, the price will be only $4.45 (this includes a top quality vinyl loose-leaf binder. One hundred and four pages are already printed, and the rest will be mailed out as soon as they are printed.) — Special Prices: $4.45 — 2 for $8.05 — 4 for $13.45.

Lord Blesses Papyri Work

In a letter, dated September 15, 1968, the Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson wrote:

Does it not impress you that the fact against the Book of Abraham are coming one on the heels of another? I believe that God has decided that the time is right that these untruths (Book of Abraham) be unmasked (in this decade). Do you not also think that God is blessing us greatly by giving us this chance to serve His purposes!

We feel that we would be very ungrateful if we did not acknowledge the hand of God in this work, for he has blessed it in a wonderful way. We are able to testify that God “is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us” (Ephesians 3:20).

Dee Jay Nelson has completed another pamphlet concerning the Book of Abraham. It is entitled, A Translation and Study of Facsimile No. 3 in the Book of Abraham. On page 26 of this study, Dee Jay Nelson states: “... Joseph Smith’s explanation attached to Facsimile No. 3 is almost totally incorrect.” On page 5 of the same pamphlet, we find this statement by Mr. Nelson:

I am, per consequence, torn between two philosophic extremes . . . what I have been urged to believe as an Elder of my church and what I have been urged to believe as an Egyptologist. There is no reconciling the two!

If Joseph Smith, Jr. correctly interpreted the Pearl of Great Price illustrations we must conclude that the science of Egyptology is based upon fallacies and Egyptian philology is erroneous. I take exception to Joseph Smith’s interpretation of this Facsimile. It does not conform with the mass of archaeological evidence nor with the laboriously established principles of Egyptology.
Amazing Progress

In February, 1968, we began printing material concerning the papyri which were given to the Mormon Church by the Metropolitan Museum. Since that time we have made a great deal of progress. In fact, an article by Dr. Hugh Nibley which was recently published in the Brigham Young University Studies clearly reveals the progress we have made. As most of our readers know, Dr. Nibley was appointed by the Church leaders to defend the Book of Abraham, yet he has been unable to handle the job and now appears to be in a rather serious predicament.

In the Messenger for March, 1968, we demonstrated that one of the fragments of papyrus which the Metropolitan Museum gave to the Church—i.e., the “Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” was the fragment Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham from. Dr. Nibley admitted that this fragment supplied “the symbols for the Book of Abraham,” but he was unable to explain how Joseph Smith derived the text of the Book of Abraham from it. The fragment was translated by qualified Egyptologists and found to be part of a pagan text known as the “Book of Breathings.” Dr. Nibley did not contest this, and in a speech delivered at the University of Utah, May 20, 1968, he stated:

By what process could the Book of Abraham have been squeezed out of a few brief signs? Nobody has told us yet. Was Joseph Smith really translating the papyri? If so, it was not in any way known to Egyptology.

Dr. Nibley’s recent article in the Brigham Young University Studies shows that he is no closer to finding an answer to this problem than he was on May 20, 1968. In this article he states:

We still suspect that there is a relationship between the two documents, but we don’t know what it is.

On October 12, 1968, two graduate students in Near Eastern studies at the University of Utah, R. Crapo and J. A. Tvednes, presented an interesting hypothesis to explain the relationship between the Breathing Certificate and the Book of Abraham... it seems that the idea is that if one takes the actual meaning of the hieratic signs in the order in which they occur, they can be roughly matched up with certain general themes of the Book of Abraham which occur in the same order. ... This would make the “Sen-Sen” papyrus a sort of prompter’s sheet. True, the document tells a connected and consistent story, but then it would have to do that in order to serve as an effective aid to memory by itself being easily memorized.

Far-fetched as it may seem, there are many ancient examples of this sort of thing, the best-known of which is the alphabet itself... The classic example of a work which condenses the meaning of whole chapters into a single letter is the Sefer Yetzirah, etc.

The condensing of matter on prompting sheets is a very old practice, etc. the famous Stele C14 in the Louvre “consists of sentences which read like the headings of chapters,” though they also make a connected text. We could, and in time probably will, furnish many examples of this sort of thing. In a preliminary statement in Dialogue it was suggested that the hieratic symbols placed over against the long sections of the Book of Abraham might be viewed not as texts but as topic headings. We still don’t know what the connection is, but one thing is certain—that the relationship between the two texts was never meant to be that of a direct translation. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1968, pages 101-102)

Dr. Nibley’s statement that the papyrus may have only been a “sort of prompter’s sheet” is certainly not in harmony with the statements of Joseph Smith concerning the papyrus and the translation. He stated:

... I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, etc. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236)

Joseph Smith did claim that he made a direct translation of the papyrus, and in his history it is called “a correct translation” (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 352).

Dr. Nibley does not inspire much confidence in Joseph Smith’s work as a translator, for he states:

... Joseph Smith has made it clear that his inspiration is by no means bound to any ancient text, but is free to take wings at any time. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1968, page 71)

Since the Mormon leaders cannot show any connection between the meaning of the “‘Sensen’ papyrus and the text of the Book of Abraham, they should admit that the Book of Abraham is a work of Joseph Smith’s imagination. It should no longer be considered as scripture, and the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages should be rejected. Naomi Woodbury, a Mormon who has studied Egyptology, made this statement in a letter to the editor of Dialogue: A Journal of Thought:

Let us not lose sight of what I think is the primary importance of this papyri find. It can free us from our dilemma about excluding Negroes from the Priesthood. Perhaps our Father in Heaven intended the papyri to come to light now for just this purpose. I have shared the growing concern in the Church about this exclusion. (Dialogue, Autumn 1968, page 8)

Abraham’s Drawings?

When Joseph Smith printed the Book of Abraham he included three facsimiles which were supposed to have been drawn by Abraham. Although Egyptologists claimed that these were drawings from Egyptian funerary papyri, Mormon writers have defended them. William E. Berrett wrote:

The translation made by Joseph Smith, and facsimiles of some of the engravings, remain as one of the greatest contributions to the field of religion...

No prophet ever gave to the world a stronger challenge of his divine calling than did Joseph Smith in his publication of the Book of Abraham. (The Restored Church, page 144)

Anti-Mormon writers not only claimed that these drawings were pagan, but they also stated that the Mormons had falsified them before publication. Now that some of the original papyri have been located, both charges have been established.

Dr. Nibley tried to defend the facsimiles, but he has now found himself in a serious dilemma. In the Improvement Era for September 1968, Dr. Nibley claimed that “evidence that Facsimile I has been honestly reproduced is found in an... old portrait of Lucy Mack Smith,..." He claimed that the drawing showed the “original papyrus hanging on the wall,” and that it “matches our printed reproductions, and not the proposed restoration.”

Dr. Nibley’s photograph of it was very unclear, but Wesley P. Walters located the original portrait in Chicago, Illinois. The original proves beyond all doubt that it shows the printed facsimile and not the original papyrus. It even has the figure numbers that were added by Rueben Hedlock who made the engraving for the printed cut. Dr. Nibley now admits that he “overlooked” the numbers, and that it was only “after the article went to press” that he got his first good look at the picture. In a dialogue between himself and the opposition, Dr. Nibley states:

They: Speaking of naive suggestions, when you used that portrait of Lucy Mack Smith to guarantee the integrity of Facsimile No. 1 “before it was damaged,” why didn’t you call attention to the numbers indicating some of the figures in the pictures? The numbers weren’t part of the original papyrus, you know.

We: We completely overlooked the numbers until after the article went to press. Only then did we get our first good look at the picture. So you win a point. We now assume that the artists consulted the Hedlock reproduction. (BYU Studies, Autumn 1968, page 82)

On page 98-99 of the same article we find the following:

They (by letter): You admit that the sketch of Facsimile No. 1 in the Lucy Mack Smith portrait has the Hedlock numbers on it; yet you think it significant that it may indicate the actual state of preservation of the papyrus at the time the portrait was made. How do you reconcile the two propositions?

We: Well, naturally that artist would not keep his model sitting and suffering while he sketched in the little picture on the wall; with plenty of Hedlock reproductions going around he could easily fill in that part at his leisure—so he did. But at the same time he made an undeniable effort to indicate that the framed thing on the wall really was the original. Better photographs accent the wrinkling and the frame, and it still remains unthinkable that the old lady should have displayed a mere printed copy—the only “original” Hedlock would be a wood-block!
Even though Dr. Nibley now admits that the printed reproduction was “consulted” he still maintains that the portrait furnishes evidence concerning the state of the papyrus:

... in examining the portrait closely we discovered something of importance that is not discernible in the Improvement Era reproduction, something that is not in the Hedlock drawing. The artist has drawn a jagged line right across the top of the facsimile, cutting off the top both of the priest’s head and of the bird’s head but leaving the rest, including the knife in the priest’s hand untouched. The areas above the jagged line is of a slightly lighter shade than that below, and in the original may be of a different color. It seems to mark the limit of the papyrus, i.e., of the damage to the thing, at some time after the Mormons had acquired it. It is nearly all there. In other things also the painter of Mrs. Smith’s portrait departs from the Hedlock engraving.

They: What about the wrinkling? It seems to us that some of the wrinkles supposedly in the papyrus extend right out beyond and include the picture frame.

We: The paint could have run where the artists made extra heavy vertical markings (providing he used water colors), or else the wrinkles could belong to the big portrait itself, of which we have only a photograph. But the picture frame is clearly a frame, closely resembling the one in which other papyri are still mounted, and most of the wrinkling is definitely confined within its borders as if it really belonged to the papyri. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1968, pages 82-85)

It is hard to believe that Dr. Nibley would continue to try to see things in this portrait, especially after he had to admit that it contains the figure numbers from the printed facsimile. Wesley P. Walters has written a letter to Dr. Nibley which he has given us permission to quote. In this letter we find these statements:

I was surprised to see you still drawing conclusions from the Lucy Smith portrait, and yet you have never seen the original.

I have seen the original water color and can assure you that none of the points you have been making on the basis of poor photographs are correct. The wrinkles are not painted-in wrinkles, but wrinkles in the paper on which the entire painting was made. This can be seen from the enclosed photo, . . .

There is no painted-in line across the top as you try to indicate in your article. The color close-up enclosed should make this clear. What makes it appear to be a line in the photo you reproduced is partly due to the way the shadows made by the wrinkles in the paper fall. It is also due partly to the contrasty nature of the print which over-emphasized the streaky nature of the painting itself. As a person who did water colors all through high school and college, I can assure you that it is extremely difficult to get the color to flow evenly without settling more densely in at least one or two areas. This is the type of thing that has occurred in the area above the head of the reeling figure. This same type of spottiness occurs over the entire background behind Lucy Smith.

If you would make the effort to see the original in Chicago, I believe that even you would be convinced. It would at least save you the necessity of making retractions and would be far more fitting to one’s posture as a scholar.

(Letter dated January 23, 1968)

In Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1968, pages 92-98 evidence was presented which showed that the original of Facsimile No. 2 was damaged when Joseph Smith worked with it and that he made false restorations from the Book of the Dead and the Book of Breathings papyri which he had in his possession Dr. Nibley, however, maintained that Facsimile No. 2 had not been falsified:

Then too, we must recognize that there are sections of hieroglyphic text in Facsimile 2 that present-day Egyptologists read without too much trouble: since these legible portions are found to be correct and conventional Egyptian, it is perfectly plain that nobody has falsified or jumbled them, as was charged. That is to say, whenever the text can be checked, everything is found to be in order. (Improvement Era, September, 1968, page 74)

We were, of course, very disturbed to find that Dr. Nibley would deny these false restorations in the face of documented proof. We republished evidence in our last issue of the Messenger and were able to distribute thousands of copies. It seems that truth has prevailed, for Dr. Nibley now admits that “restorations” were made in Facsimile No. 2:

(4) The Hedlock engraving when compared with an early sketch showing parts of Facsimile No. 2 to be missing shows definite signs of attempted restoration.

(5) The restoration was not as extensive as the other sketch would indicate, and no clear instances of such have been demonstrated on Facsimile No. 1.

(6) The restorations on Facsimile No. 2 are limited to the filling in of gaps, not the alteration of existing symbols. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1968, page 92)

Even though Dr. Nibley now admits that restorations were made, he seems unwilling to face the implications:

They: Let’s turn to Facsimile No. 2, where we have much clearer evidence of restoration. In the Church Historian’s Office among the papers of the EAG is a rather well-done pen-and-ink sketch of the facsimile made by some Mormon at an early date. This, we believe, is the way the hypocephalus looked when it came into Joseph Smith’s hands; and in it there are certain parts missing and we are shown exactly what they are. Now these parts are not missing in the official engraving of the hypocephalus, Facsimile No. 2 which can only mean that they have been later supplied. You will notice that a large part of the inscription around the rim is missing, and this has been filled in with hieratic characters from other papyri definitely known to have been in the possession of Joseph Smith. So there you have it.

We: Since the restored portions of the rim with their crude repetitions (hardly an attempt to be subtle) are not a subject of inspired commentary, we don’t think that is too important. (BYU Studies, Autumn 1968, page 86-87)

Although Joseph Smith does not try to translate the writing around the rim, he states that it “will be given in the own due time of the Lord” (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham, page 35). We feel that this matter cannot be as easily dismissed as Dr. Nibley would have us believe. To begin with, it shows that Joseph Smith knew absolutely nothing about the Egyptian language, for the portion which is added from the “Book of Breathings” is written in hieratic, whereas the writing that appears on Facsimile No. 2 is hieroglyphic writing. Also, the characters that were added into the blank area were added upside down, so that they read in the opposite direction to the rest of the text. The Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson states: “For a Sensen (Book of Breathings) inscription to be written upon a hypocephalus is about as logical as to find part of the Koran in the New Testament” (Joseph Smith’s “Eye of Ra,” page 22).

We feel that this matter also reflects seriously upon Joseph Smith’s honesty. Scholars, of course, do not object to restorations in a text if they are sincere attempts to restore a missing portion. For instance, in 1961 a stone inscription was found at Caesarea. The second line was damaged, but scholars were able to read “ . . . tius Pilate” (The Biblical World, edited by Charles E. Pfeiffer, page 156). Since Pontius Pilate had resided in Caesarea, they felt that it was reasonable to restore “Pon” to complete the name “Pontius Pilate.” This type of restoration is reasonable. In Joseph Smith’s case, however, it seems to be an attempt to deceive rather than to restore what was on the original document. No one who is honest with himself could approve of these false restorations. How can we possibly trust the rest of Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham after seeing what he did with Facsimile No. 2?

From Dr. Nibley’s article, it would appear that he has yielded a great deal of ground. In fact, some of his statements are very similar to the ones Grant Heward was excommunicated for less than two years ago.

WORDS OF CHRIST:

“If you are faithful to owhat I have said, you are truly my disciples. And you will know the truth and the truth will set you free! . . . Believe me when I tell you that every man who commits sin is a slave. . . . If the Son, then, sets you free, you are really free!” (John 8:31-36) (Phillips)

REVIVALS AND VISIONS

The Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith claimed that when he was 14 years old there was a revival in his neighborhood. Because of this excitement he went into the woods to pray, and “two personages” appeared to him. One of them pointed to the other and said: “This is my beloved Son, hear him.” The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe claims that this vision of God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ “is of first importance in the history of Joseph Smith. Upon its reality rest the truth and value of his subsequent work” (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, page 19).

For many years Mormon writers claimed that Joseph Smith “told but one story” concerning the First Vision, but now it has become obvious that he told several conflicting stories concerning this vision.

LaMar Petersen was one of the first to learn that the Mormon leaders were suppressing important material concerning the first vision. In 1953 he met with Levi Edgar Young, head of the Seven Presidents of Seventies in the Mormon Church. The following is from notes by Mr. Petersen of the interview with Levi Edgar Young, held February 5, 1953:

His [Levi Edgar Young’s] curiosity was excited when reading in Roberts’ Doc. History reference to “documents from which these writings were compiled.” Asked to see them. Told to get higher permission. Obtained that permission. Examined the documents. Written, he thought, about 1837 or 1838. Was told not to copy or tell what they contained. Said it was a “strange” account of the First Vision. Was put back in vault. Remains unused, unknown.

Since that interview two “strange” account of the first vision have come to light. Paul R. Cheesman included the first in Appendix D of his thesis. We printed this account in 1965 under the title, “Joseph Smith’s Strange Account of the First Vision.” The other “strange” account appeared in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, in 1966. We reprinted these accounts in the Salt Lake Messenger and The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 1 and thousands of copies have been circulated. Some Mormons doubted the authenticity of these “strange” accounts, and the LDS Church leaders did not make any public statements concerning them. Nevertheless, we continued to circulate these accounts and predicted that the time would come when the Mormon leaders would have to face these problems. Finally, four years after we printed “Joseph Smith’s Strange Account of the First Vision,” the Church Historian’s Office has publicly confirmed the authenticity of both these “strange” accounts. The following statement appeared in the Mormon newspaper, Deseret News:

Dean C. Jessee, a staff member at the Church historian’s office in Salt Lake City, searched through documents of the Church historian’s library concerning events of the 1820’s. He located and analyzed three early accounts of Joseph Smith’s first vision dictated by the Prophet himself.

Through other historical approaches and techniques, he has determined the dates, sources, and records of these accounts. Published in the BYU Studies with his report are photographic reproductions of these early accounts in the handwriting of the Prophet’s personal scribes. (Deseret News, Church Section, May 3, 1968, page 15)

From these statements a person would be led to believe that Dean C. Jessee made some new discovery, but an examination of the BYU Studies, Spring 1969, reveals that the three accounts are: (1) The account we published in 1965 under the title, “Joseph Smith’s Strange Account of the First Vision.” Dean C. Jessee claims that this account was written in 1831 or 1832. (2) The account published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought in 1966. This is the account Joseph Smith gave to “Joshua the Jewish Minister” in 1835. (3) The official account which is published by the church in the Pearl of Great Price. Dean C. Jessee, however, has shown how it appears in the original handwritten manuscript, before the changes were made.

This issue of the BYU Studies contains photographs of all these documents. The reader may wonder why the church would allow the “strange” accounts to be published after suppressing them for over 130 years. We feel that they have been forced to own up to these documents. The LDS Church leaders apparently feel that it would be better to tell their people about these documents now than to have them eventually find out through “apostate” sources. This is certainly a most interesting example of reverse psychology. They suppressed the documents all these years, but now they allow them to be published as if they were proud of them. They claim, in fact, that 10,000 copies of the BYU Studies have been printed! Dr. Richard L. Anderson of the BYU, not only acknowledges the authenticity of the “strange” accounts, but he even calls them “official accounts of the First Vision from the Prophet”:

Before one can prove that Joseph Smith contradicts history, he must be sure of what Joseph Smith claimed. There are four official accounts of the First Vision from the Prophet. The three manuscript texts are printed in Dean Jessee’s articles in this issue. As he shows, their dates of composition are 1831-1832, 1835, and 1838. This 1838 account was published as the “History of Joseph Smith” in 1842. The fourth account is Joseph Smith’s “Wentworth Letter,” also published in 1842. (BYU Studies, Spring 1969, page 373)

ONE, TWO, OR MANY?

Dr. Truman G. Madsen, of the BYU, claims that the harmony of the documents is impressive:

Now that we have copies of the three early manuscript accounts of the First Vision bound in this single volume, we are impressed with their harmony considering the very different circumstances of their writing: (1) the 1831-32 manuscript is apparently an attempt to get it on record; (2) the 1835 account relates a spontaneous interview between the Prophet and a Jewish minister, recorded by his scribe “as nearly as follows” and (3) the 1838 record was written to answer “the many reports” circulating as far west an Missouri which the Prophet said were designed to militate against the character of the Church. (BYU Studies, Spring 1969, page 240)

New Books

THE FIRST VISION EXAMINED — A Study of New Theories and Documents Regarding Joseph Smith’s First Vision and the 1820 Revival, by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. This 50-page pamphlet presents new and important material relating to Joseph Smith’s First Vision. It shows that the Mormon research team has failed in their effort to establish an 1820 revival in Palmyra, and how they have skirted the real issues involved in this controversy. It also provides new evidence found in “Joseph Smith’s Manuscript History,” Book A-1, regarding two important changes in Joseph Smith’s History. Prices: 50¢ each — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00

— NOW COMPLETED —

THE MORMON KINGDOM, VOL. 1

By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. This volume contains the most accurate and up to date account of the Temple ceremony. Also discusses the changes in the ceremony, changes in the Temple garments, the relationship to Masonry, the “Oath of Vengeance,” the doctrine of “Blood Atonement,” baptism for the dead, the Danites, the Council of 50, the failure of the Kirtland Bank, the war in Missouri, Joseph Smith’s secret ordination as King and his candidacy for President of the United States. The Mormon Kingdom is now available in plastic binding for just $2.95. The quantity prices are: 2 for $4.95 — 5 for $9.95 — 10 for $17.70. (Also available in loose-leaf binder for $4.95)
We feel that Dr. Madsen is not facing reality when he claims that these accounts are harmonious. In the first account Joseph Smith states:

...I saw the Lord and he spake unto me saying Joseph my son Thy sins are forgiven thee. (BYU Studies, Spring 1969, page 281)

In the second account Joseph Smith stated:

A personage appeared in the midst of this pillar of flame, which was spread all around and yet nothing consumed. Another personage soon appeared like unto the first: he said unto me thy sins are forgiven thee. He testified also unto me that Jesus Christ is the son of God. I saw many angels in this vision. (BYU Studies, Spring 1969, page 285)

In the account published by the church in the Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith stated:

...I saw two Personages. . . . One of them spake unto me, calling me by name and said, pointing to the other—This is My Beloved Son. Hear Him! (Pearl of Great Price, page 48, v. 17)

We would, of course, expect some variations in any story, but we feel that there are so many variations in Joseph Smith’s story and they are of such a nature that they make it impossible to believe.

In the first written account Joseph Smith stated that only one personage appeared to him. The second account says there were many, and the third account says there were two.

When Lauritz G. Petersen, Research Supervisor at the Church Historian’s Office, was asked concerning the different accounts of the first vision he wrote a letter in which he stated:

We are not concerned really with which of the two Versions of the First Vision is right. . . . Personally I would take the version which the Prophet Joseph Smith gave himself when he stated that he saw two personages. Regardless whether he saw one or two the fact remains that Jesus Christ is mentioned in both of them.

It is obvious from this statement that Mormon apologists are beginning to retreat from the idea that God the Father appeared to Joseph Smith. This is actually a very important matter, for Mormon leaders have used this vision as evidence for their doctrine of a plurality of gods. They have stated that this vision proves that God and Christ are two distinct personages and that they both have a body. They use this vision to prove that God Himself is only an exalted man.

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe stated:

Two personages, the Father and the Son, stood before Joseph. The Father asked the Son to deliver the message to the boy. There was no mingling of personalities in the vision. Each of the personages was an individual member of the Godhead. Each one separately took part in the vision. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, page 7)

Those who argue that the “strange” accounts of the first vision can be harmonized with Joseph Smith’s printed account might do well to read a speech given by S. Dilworth Young, of the First Council of Seventy. This speech was given sometime before the “strange” accounts became known to the public. We quote from this speech:

I cannot remember the time when I have not heard the story, . . . concerning the coming of the Father and the Son to the Prophet Joseph Smith. . . . I am concerned however with one item which has recently been called to my attention on this matter. There appears to be going about our communities some writing to the effect that the Prophet Joseph Smith evolved his doctrine from what might have been a vision, in which he is supposed to have said that he saw an angel, instead of the Father and Son. According to this theory, by the time he was inspired to write the occurrence in 1838, he had come to the conclusion that there were two beings.

This rather shocked me. I can see no reason why the Prophet, with his brilliant mind, would have failed to remember in sharp relief every detail of the eventful day. . . . How then could any man conceive that the Prophet, receiving such a vision as he received, would not remember it and would fail to write it clearly, distinctly, and accurately? (Improvement Era, June 1957, page 436)

Now that we have the “strange” accounts we find that the first vision story did evolve. Joseph Smith originally taught that only one personage appeared, but after he changed his doctrine concerning the Godhead he also changed the story of the First Vision.

NO REVIVAL

In Joseph Smith’s story of the First Vision he tells of a great revival in his neighborhood just before he had his vision.

In 1967 the Utah Christian Tract Society published Wesley P. Walters’ study, New Light on Mormon Origins From the Palmyra (N.Y.) Revival. In the forward to this work Mr. Walters states:

Mormons account for the origin of their movement by quoting from a narrative written by their prophet Joseph Smith, Jr. in 1838. In this account he claims that a revival broke out in the Palmyra, New York area in 1820 . . . Information which we have recently uncovered conclusively proves that the revival did not occur until the fall of 1824 and that no revival occurred between 1819 and 1823 in the Palmyra vicinity.

Mormon scholars became very concerned when they saw Wesley P. Walters’ study. They were so disturbed, in fact, that a team was sent back east to do research concerning the first vision and other matters dealing with the history of the Mormon Church in New York. Although the scholars who went east “secured libraries, studied newspapers, and sought to find private individuals who might uncover hitherto unknown source materials” (BYU Studies, Spring, page 242) they were unable to find evidence of a revival in Palmyra in 1820. In their article, “Mormon Origins in New York,” James B. Allen and Leonard J. Arrington report:

What evidence do we have, other than the word of Joseph Smith, that there was “an unusual excitement on the subject of religion” in the vicinity of Palmyra in 1820? Up to this point little such evidence has been uncovered, and Walters challenged the story in the article referred to above. (BYU Studies, Spring 1969, page 272)

Before Mr. Walters’ study appeared Mormon writers taught that the revival occurred right in Palmyra, but since the Mormon research team has been unable to find evidence of a revival in Palmyra Mormon apologists are now beginning to forsake Palmyra and search elsewhere for a revival. Lauritz G. Petersen, Research Supervisor at the Church Historian’s Office, made these statements in a letter dated November 1, 1968:

Now let me ask you a question. Where was the revival? In Palmyra? He doesn’t mention a revival at all. He mentions an unusual excitement [sic] in the “Whole district of country.” Could an excitement [sic] be caused by a revival somewhere near the area? He doesn’t mention being to a revival. If there was a revival somewhere outside of Palmyra and the news of it had already excited the village, would or could it be possible that the Smith family have travelled there to sell root beer and cakes?

Although it is true that Joseph Smith does not use the word Palmyra, his description makes it very clear that he was referring to this area. He states that there “was in the place where we lived an unusual excitement on the subject of religion” (History of the Church, vol. 1, page 2).

In 1843 Joseph Smith told a reporter from the New York Spectator that the revival occurred “in the neighborhood where I lived, . . .” (Joseph Smith the Prophet, by Preston Nibley, pages 30-31).

Before Mr. Walters’ pamphlet appeared Mormon writers were claiming that there was a great deal of evidence to show that there was a revival in Palmyra in 1820. The Religious Advocate of Rochester has been cited by Mormon writers as showing that there was such a revival. The Mormon Apostle Gordon B. Hinckley stated:

One week a Rochester paper noted: “more than two hundred souls have become hopeful subjects of divine grace in Palmyra and Macedon, Manchester, Lyons, and Ontario since the late revival commenced.” The week following it was able to report “that in Palmyra and Macedon . . . more than four hundred souls have already confessed that the Lord is good.” (Truth Restored, Salt Lake City, 1969, page 2)

In The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 1 pages 111-112, we showed that these purported references from the Religious Advocate of Rochester actually appeared in the Wayne Sentinel on March 2, 1825, and therefore had nothing to do with the Palmyra area.

The following statement is recorded in Joseph Smith’s History under the date of March 15, 1842: “In the evening I received the First Degree in Free Masonry in the Nauvoo Lodge, assembled in my general business office” (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 551). The next day Joseph Smith stated: “I was with the Masonic Lodge and rose to the sublime degree” (History of the Church, vol. 4, page 552). Less than two months later, May 4, 1842, Joseph Smith established the secret Temple ceremony among the Mormon people.

In the last issue of the Messenger we showed that the “five points of fellowship” found in the Mormon Temple ceremony are almost identical to those used by the Masons in their ritual. In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 159-164, we have documented 27 parallels between the Masonic ritual and the Mormon Temple ceremony.

OATHS CHANGED

From testimony given in The Reed Smoot Case and other investigations, we are convinced that the oaths administered in the Temple were originally very crude. August W. Lundstrom testified that the penalty he agreed to for revealing the first token was to have “the throat cut from ear to ear.” The second was to “have my breast cut asunder and my vitals torn out,” and the third was that he would have his body “cut asunder and my entrails gushed out” (The Reed Smoot Case, vol. 2, pages 160-162). Since that time the oaths have been greatly modified. The changes were probably made within the last thirty or forty years. Below is a comparison of the oaths as they were published in Temple Mormonism in 1931 with the way they are given today.

Temple Mormonism

As Given Today (1969)

Although the oaths are no longer as crude as they used to be, Mormons who go through the Temple still draw the thumb across the throat, stomach, etc., and are told that “The representation of the penalties indicates different ways in which life may be taken” (The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 129).

A careful examination of the oaths as originally given reveals that they were taken from Masonry. Below is a comparison of Mormon and Masonic oaths.

Mormons

... we will not reveal any of the secrets of this, the first token of the Aaronic priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Should we do so, we agree that our throats be cut from ear to ear and our tongues torn out by their roots. (Temple Mormonism, page 20)

... we will not reveal any of the secrets of this, the first token of the Aaronic priesthood, together with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Rather than do so I would suffer my life to be taken. (The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 129)

... we will not reveal any of the secrets of this, the second token of the Aaronic Priesthood, together with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Rather than do so I would suffer my life to be taken. (The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 131)

Masons

... I will . . . never reveal any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of the secret arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry . . . binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots. . . . (Freemasonry Exposed, pages 21-22)

As Given Today (1969)

... we will not reveal any of the secrets of this, the first token of the Aaronic priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Should we do so, we agree that our throats be cut from ear to ear and our tongues torn out by their roots. (Temple Mormonism, page 20)

... I will never reveal the first token of the Melchizedek Priesthood, with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Should we do so, we agree that our bodies be cut asunder in the midst and all our bowels gush out. (Temple Mormonism, page 20)

... I will never reveal the second token of the Aaronic Priesthood, together with its accompanying name, sign and penalty. Rather than do so I would suffer my life to be taken. (The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 131)

... I will never reveal the first token of the Melchizedek Priesthood or sign of the nail, with its accompanying name, sign or penalty. Rather than do so I would suffer my life to be taken. (The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 132)

OATHS CHANGED

From the comparisons above it is obvious that the oaths used in the Mormon Temple ceremony were derived from Masonry. In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, we present what we feel is conclusive proof that many essential elements of the Temple ritual were taken from Masonry. This volume also includes the most accurate and up to date account of the Temple ceremony. We also discuss the changes in the ceremony, changes in the Temple garment, the “Oath of Vengeance,” the doctrine of “Blood Atonement,” baptism for the dead, the Danites, the Council of 50, the war in Missouri, Joseph Smith’s secret ordination as King and his candidacy for President of the United States.

The Mormon Kingdom is now available in plastic binding for just $2.95. The quantity prices are: 2 for $4.95 — 5 for $9.95 — 10 for $17.70. (Also available in loose leaf binder for $4.95)

IT ALREADY HURTS!

In the November 1968 issue of the Improvement Era, page 101, we found an advertisement in which this statement appeared: “Hunger Hurts!” Under such a title one might expect to find something concerning the people who are starving in India or Africa; instead, however, we found this question: “is your year’s supply important?” This was not a plea for the hungry, but an advertisement for a “food storage booklet.” (The Mormon leaders have been counseling their people to store food in case of an emergency.)

This advertisement reminded us again of the selfishness of man. Most of us who live in America have enough to eat, and many people have a surplus, yet millions of people throughout the world are starving to death. What are we going to do about it?
Should we think of storing food and other things for ourselves when millions of people are starving to death? In the 25th chapter of Matthew Jesus tells us that in the judgment the righteous will be separated from the wicked. Then the righteous will be told:

... Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: ... Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matthew 25:44-40)

... And the King shall answer... (Matthew 25:34-40)

Above are photographs of boys who are starving to death in Biafra. The reader might wonder if there is anything that he can do to help these children.

World-Wide Missions answers YES:

The lives of Biafrans are, literally, in your hands. Just as a doctor feels for a pulse and it gets slower and slower, then stops, so is the life of many people in Biafra and the liberated areas in your hands. If you act, they may live. If you—and you and you—across America and around the world fail to act, a death by starvation will be the result.

In a recent news letter written by Dr. Basil Miller, of World-Wide Missions, we find this statement:

The best way you can show your love for these children and the starving parents is by feeding them right now.

Your gift, every penny of it, will go to the fighting Biafrans in the liberated area. . . .

It has one purpose alone—to feed the starving.

By this means, you can show your loving care. By this means, you can prove your faith in the Master . . .

In the liberated area, your gift of $1 will furnish food for a family for one day. Think how it spreads and increases in value. The price of a hamburger, french fries and a coke means life for an entire family, or it will feed an underprivileged, near-starving child for days.

LATEST “FINDS”

Some people have told us that we should be patient with the Church Historian’s Office and they will eventually make all of the Church records available. Judging from past experience, however, we feel that they will not make these documents available until a great deal of pressure has been applied by members of the Church. Take for instance the “strange” accounts of the First Vision. These documents were “located and analyzed” only after a great deal of pressure was applied. Another example is the fragment of papyrus which the Church Historian’s Office suppressed for 130 years. Jay M. Todd, an editor and staff writer for the Church’s Improvement Era, states that Dr. Clark, of BYU, knew about this fragment for thirty years but was told to suppress this information:

Outside of a few associates, Dr. Clark had kept the fragment a matter of confidence, under instructions from the historian’s office, for over 30 years. (The Sage of the Book of Abraham, Salt Lake City, 1969, page 364)

An Egyptologist told us that he wrote to the Historian’s Office and asked if they had any of Joseph Smith’s papyri. They replied that they did not. In 1966 we printed Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar, which included a photograph of this fragment. Grant Heward identified it as an actual fragment of papyrus, and in the Salt Lake Messenger for April, 1966, we stated that the Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar included "a photograph of an actual piece of papyrus which may be part of the ‘Book of Abraham’ or the ‘Book of Joseph!’” Almost two years after we published a photograph of this fragment of papyrus, the Church leaders decided that it was time to “find” it. The LDS Church Section of the Deseret News carried this statement on February 10, 1968:

Mr. Walters’ main argument is that no revival occurred in Palmyra itself. But even that fact cannot be established absolutely. It is a negative claim and depends on negative evidence, which is always tenuous. Mr. Walters relies on the absence of revival reports, but just because someone failed to write a report of an event does not mean it did not occur. . . . The point is that although we think a revival should have been recorded, there are many reasons why it could have been missed. We cannot know for sure that an event did not occur unless reliable witnesses on the scene say no, and thus far Mr. Walters has found none such to testify. (Dialogue, Spring 1969, page 87)

It would appear, then, that all evidence for a revival in Palmyra and vicinity has fallen, and that Wesley P. Walters’ work has been vindicated. All that the Mormon research team have been able to do is to confirm his original findings. The result of their research is published in the BYU Studies, Spring 1969. We feel that most of these writers have not dealt with the real issues involved, nor have they given enough credit to Wesley P. Walters for the research he has done. The editors of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, on the other hand, “felt that the issues Reverend Walters raises should be dealt with directly and in the context of a full statement of his arguments.” Therefore, they printed his work, a response from Richard L. Bushman, and Mr. Walters reply to Dr. Bushman (see Dialogue, Spring 1969, pages 58-100). We must congratulate the editors of Dialogue for their honesty with regard to this matter.

In the last year a great deal of new information has come to light concerning Joseph Smith’s First Vision and the 1820 revival. Because of this new information and the increased interest in this matter we have prepared a new pamphlet entitled, The First Vision Examined—A Study of New Theories and Documents Regarding Joseph Smith’s First Vision and the 1820 Revival. In this pamphlet we provide important new evidence found in "Joseph Smith’s Manuscript History," Book A-1, regarding two important changes in his History of the Church. We also show that the Mormon research team has failed to establish a revival in Palmyra in 1820 and that they have not dealt with the real issues involved in the controversy over the First Vision.

The prices on this pamphlet are: 50¢ each — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00. ■
At the time Joseph Smith established the Mormon Church, many people believed that the moon was a habitable globe. Adam Clark, a Protestant writer, stated: “There is scarcely any doubt now remaining in the philosophical world that the moon is a habitable globe” (Clark’s Commentary, vol. 1, page 36). Josiah Priest made this statement:

“It is believed and asserted by astronomers as their opinion, obtained from telescopic observation, that the moon, . . . is a globe in ruins, or if not so, at least is frequently much convulsed by the operations of volcanic fires. Its surface, as seen through the glasses, is found extremely mountainous, . . . a great number of rivers, creeks, lakes and small seas must divide the land of this globe into a vast number of tracts of country, which are doubtless filled with animals,—consequently with rational beings in the form of men, as ourselves, for we can conceive of none other, as fitted to preside over its animals. The same we believe of all the stars of heaven. (American Antiquities and Discoveries in the West, Albany, N.Y., 1835, page 396)

Although we know that Joseph Smith was influenced by the views of his time, he claimed to receive his information directly from heaven. Oliver B. Huntington, who was a member of the Mormon Church in Joseph Smith’s time, claimed that Smith gave the following information concerning the inhabitants of the moon:

INHABITANTS OF THE MOON

“The inhabitants of the moon are more of a uniform size than the inhabitants of the earth, being about 6 feet in height.

“They dress very much like the quaker style and are quite general in style, or the fashion of dress.

“‘They live to be very old; coming generally, near a thousand years.”

This is the description of them as given by Joseph The Seer, and he could “see” whatever he asked the father in the name of Jesus to see. (Journal of Oliver B. Huntington, vol. 2, page 166 of typed copy at the Utah State Historical Society)

Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, also seemed to believe that the moon was inhabited (see Journal of Discourses, vol. 13, page 271, or Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 89) but it is doubtful that many Mormons today can accept Joseph Smith’s statement about the “inhabitants of the moon,” especially in light of the fact that men have now landed on the moon.

Joseph Smith’s statement concerning the “inhabitants of the moon,” however, raises a very important question: Could it be possible that Joseph Smith’s revelations—the revelations which are accepted as scripture by the Mormon people—are the product of his own imagination, influenced by the thinking of his time, rather than revelations from God?

NEPHITES

We feel that the works of Josiah Priest had a real influence on Joseph Smith’s thinking. Joseph Smith was probably very familiar with Priest’s American Antiquities (which speaks of the moon being a habitable globe), for he quotes from this book in the Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pages 813-814.

In 1825—five years before the Book of Mormon was published—Josiah Priest wrote a book entitled, The Wonders of Nature and Providence Displayed. In the Salt Lake Messenger, issue No. 22, we presented evidence that seems to show that Joseph Smith used material from this book when he wrote the Book of Mormon. Priest’s book contained “Proofs that the Indians of North America are linearly descended from the ancient Hebrews” (The Wonders of Nature and Providence Displayed, Albany, N.Y., 1825, page 297). The Book of Mormon also teaches that the Indians are the descendants of a group of Hebrews who came to America.

However this may be, the Mormon people accept the Book of Mormon as scripture. Some members of the Church have made some fantastic claims about archaeologists using the Book of Mormon. For instance, we are informed that a letter which was written to Ernest L. English on May 3, 1936, was duplicated and “distributed to LDS church members by leaders (local) in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1959.” We quote the following from this letter:

. . . it was 1920 before the Smithsonian Institute officially recognized the Book of Mormon as a record of value. All discoveries up to this time were found to fit the Book of Mormon accounts and so the heads of the Archaeological Department decided to make an effort to discover some of the large cities described in the Book of Mormon records.

All members of the department were required to study the account and make rough-maps of the various populated centers. When I visited the Smithsonian Institute Library in 1933 I noticed that there were over thirty copies of the Book of Mormon on file . . . it is true that the Book of Mormon has been the guide to almost all of the major discoveries.

When Col. Lindbergh flew to South America five years ago, he was able to sight heretofore undiscovered cities which the archaeologists at the Institute had mapped out according to the locations described in the Book of Mormon. This record is now quoted by the members of the Institute as an authority and is recognized by all advanced students in the field.

This special price includes the beautiful vinyl loose-leaf binder which will hold all three volumes. We have completed 78 pages of volume 3 and will mail out the remaining pages as soon as they are printed. All of our readers should have this work.

In a review of the first two volumes of this work, Dr. Kenneth Kantzer, Dean of Trinity Evangelical Divinity School stated:

These books represent no ordinary polemic against Mormonism. This is the definitive, fully-documented, utterly-devastating case against the divine authority and truthfulness of the foundational documents upon which the Mormon religion is based. (Evangelical Beacon, October 8, 1968, page 7)
Because of many false statements, such as the one printed above, the Smithsonian Institute has been forced to publish a statement concerning these matters. In this statement we find the following:

1. The Smithsonian Institution has never used the Book of Mormon in any way as a scientific guide. Smithsonian archaeologists see no connection between the archeology of the New World and the subject matter of the Book.

We have recently completed a 64-page book entitled, Archaeology and the Book of Mormon. In this book we show that archeology does not support the Book of Mormon, and that the Nephites mentioned in the Book of Mormon never really existed. In fact, all evidence seems to show that the Nephites were as mythical as Joseph Smith's description of the "inhabitants of the moon."

One of the subjects which we cover is the "Lehi Tree-of-Life Stone." We devote 18 pages to this matter in the new book. The following is a sample of some of the information we give on this subject.

In 1965 the Mormon-owned Deseret News announced that the El Paso Times had published an article which seemed to show that the Book of Mormon had been proven by archaeologists. The article had appeared in the El Paso Times on July 4, 1965. In this article we find the following statements:

The Book of Mormon, . . . is purported to be an ecclesiastical and historical record of the American continent . . . .

Archaeologists have conceded the possible existence of such a record, and a recent archaeological find in Mexico has been interpreted of relevance to its authenticity.

A large carving unearthed in Chiapas, Mexico, has been interpreted and offers the first sound evidence of the near-eastern origin of its carvers—an origin set in the Book of Mormon.

... Three name glyphs on the carving have been translated as "Lehi," "Sariah," and "Nephi," prominent names in the Book of Mormon, and the study shows a detailed symbolization of a crucial scene in the book termed "Lehi's Vision of the Tree of Life." It may be one of the most important finds in the history of archeology, some think. (El Paso Times, July 4, 1965)

At first sight this article appears to be very impressive, but careful research shows it to be nothing but old Mormon propaganda rewritten. In the book, Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, we show that this is a rehash of material which appeared in a sheet entitled, "Near East Type Ancient Carving Found in Mexico," which was published in Safford, Arizona, a few years before. When we wrote to the El Paso Times for information regarding this article, we were informed that it was submitted to the newspaper by "missionaries" from the Mormon Church:

The material, in somewhat elongated form, was submitted to our religion desk by Robert Elder and Vaughn Byington, missionaries of the Church of Christ of Latter-Day Saints assigned to El Paso wards.

The information was written by Mr. Byington, who said his sources were articles obtained at the Department of Archaeology, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah. (Letter from Joseph Rice, Religion Editor, El Paso Times, dated November 3, 1965)

A photograph of this letter is found in our book Archaeology and the Book of Mormon.

Notice that the article in the El Paso Times stated: "Three name glyphs on the carving have been translated as 'Lehi,' 'Sariah,' and 'Nephi,' prominent names in the Book of Mormon. . . . " Dr. M. Wells Jakeman, of Brigham Young University, is responsible for the idea that these names appear on this stone. In our book, Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, we show that this claim is not based on facts, and that Dr. Jakeman has not read a single Book of Mormon name on this carving.

We sent a copy of the clipping from the El Paso Times to the Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson. After examining this clipping, Mr. Nelson made the following statement:

Thank you for the kind letter and the newspaper clipping. I never take much stock in newspaper articles which do not carry bylines. I think someone is talking through his hat when he claims that the names "Lehi, Sariah and Nephi" are written upon the Tree of Life Stella. I have studied the features of that stella very carefully . . . I found nothing which transmuted into the three names. . . .

Believe me when I say that nothing would delight me more than to learn that I am wrong and that the Tree-of-Life Stella was made to commemorate Lehi's dream and that the names had been found and identified. I must be honest with myself though. I don't buy the story. (Letter from Dee Jay Nelson, dated December 16, 1968)

Dee Jay Nelson's statement is especially interesting in light of the fact that he is probably the most qualified Egyptologist in the Mormon Church and has also studied Mayan glyphs. Furthermore, he wishes to prove the Book of Mormon true, but he will not accept evidence which he knows to be false.

Mr. Nelson is certainly not the only Mormon who has questioned the identification of Lehi and his family on the carving. Dr. John L. Sorenson has served as Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Brigham Young University and was editor of the University Archaeological Society Newsletter from August 15, 1951, to July 1, 1952. Writing in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Dr. Sorenson stated:

... the uncontrolled use of trait comparison leads to absurd conclusions. Particularly, it leads to overambitious interpretations of shared meaning and historical relationship, as in Jakeman's previous pseudo-identifications of "Lehi" (and other characters from the Book of Mormon) on an Irapan monument. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1966, page 148)

Dr. Hugh Nibley does not seem to accept Dr. Jakeman's work on the "Lehi Tree-of-Life Stone." In fact, Dr. Nibley frankly admits that there is no definite archaeological evidence to support the Book of Mormon:

Of course, almost any object could conceivably have some connection with the Book of Mormon, but nothing short of an inscription which could be read and roughly dated could bridge the gap between what might be called a preactualistic archeology and contact with the realities of Nephiite civilization.

The possibility that a great nation or empire that once dominated vast areas of land and flourished for centuries could actually get lost and stay lost in spite of every effort of men to discover its traces, has been demonstrated many times since Schliemann found the real world of the Mycenaeans. . . .

So it is with the Nephites. All that we have to go on to date is a written history. That does not mean that our Nephites are necessarily mythical, . . . as things stand we are still in the pre-archaeological and pre-archaeological stages of Book of Mormon study. Which means that there is nothing whatever that an anthropologist or archaeologist as such can say about the Book of Mormon. Nephiite civilization was urban in nature. . . . It could just as easily and completely vanish from sight as did the worlds of Ugarit, Ur, or Carcosa; and until some physical remnant of it, no matter how trivial, has been identified beyond question, what can any student of physical remains possibly have to say about it? Everything written so far by anthropologists or archaeologists—even real archaeologists—about the Book of Mormon must be discounted, for the same reason that we must discount studies of the lost Atlantic: not because it did not exist, but because it has not yet been found. (Since Cumorah, Salt Lake City, Utah, 1967, pages 243-244)

Joseph’s “Inspired” Bible

Joseph Smith claimed that after the Bible came from the Jews to the Gentiles, a “great and abominable church” was formed, and that this church made many changes in the Scriptures. In the Book of Mormon we read:

... thou seest the foundation of a great abominable church which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away. (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 13:26)

Mormon writers still teach that the “great and abominable Church” altered the Bible. Joseph Fielding Smith, Jr. (son of the Mormon Historian Joseph Fielding Smith) made this statement:

The early “Apostate Fathers” did not think it was wrong to tamper with inspired Scripture. If any scripture seemed to endanger their viewpoint, it was altered, transplanted, or completely removed from the Biblical text. All this was done that they might keep their traditions. Such mutilation was considered justifiable to preserve the so-called “purity” of their doctrines. (Religious Truths Defined, page 175)

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe made this statement concerning Joseph Smith’s criticism of the text of the Bible:

The teachings of the Book of Mormon, and the revelations he had received, convinced Joseph that in the Bible were many errors... after placing the matter before the Lord, he began the so-called “inspired translation” of the Bible...

Towards the end of the year 1830, with Sidney Rigdon as assistant, he began a somewhat full “explanation and review” of the Old and New Testaments. The work then done is a convincing evidence of Joseph’s inspiration. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, Salt Lake City, 1951, page 139)

In 1859 the Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt claimed that the “oldest manuscripts of the New Testament which this age are in possession of are supposed to date from the sixth century of the Christian era” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 26). While the Apostle Pratt’s statement was an exaggeration (Codex Vaticanus was probably written in the fourth century), there was a substantial gap between the original manuscripts and the earliest copies known to scholars. Consequently, Mormons would not accept these manuscripts as evidence against Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Translation” of the Bible.

Since the turn of the century the situation has entirely changed, for papyrus fragments have been found which virtually close the gap and prove that the Scriptures have not been rewritten by a “great and abominable church.” F. F. Bruce, of the University of Manchester, states:

In addition to the two excellent MSS of the fourth century mentioned above, which are the earliest of some thousands known to us, considerable fragments remain of papyrus copies of books of the New Testament dated from 100 to 200 years earlier still. The Chester Beatty Biblical Papyri, the existence of which was made public in 1931, consists of portions of eleven papyrus codices, three of which contained most of the New Testament writings. One of these, containing the four Gospels with Acts, belong to the first half of the third century; another, containing Paul’s letters to churches and the Epistle to the Hebrews, was copied at the beginning of the third century; the third, containing Revelation, belongs to the second half of the same century. . . .

Earlier still is a fragment of a papyrus codex containing John xviii. 31-33, 37f., now in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, dated on palaeographical grounds around AD 130, showing that the latest of the four Gospels, which was written according to tradition, at Ephesus between AD 90 and 100, was circulating in Egypt within about forty years of its composition (if, as is most likely, this papyrus originated in Egypt, where it was acquired in 1917). It must be regarded as being, by half a century, the earliest extant fragment of the New Testament.

A more recently discovered papyrus manuscript of the same Gospel, while not so early as the Rylands papyrus, is incomparably better preserved: this is the Papyrus Bodmer II, whose discovery was announced by the Bodmer Library of Geneva in 1956: it was written about AD 200, and contains the first fourteen chapters of the Gospel of John with but one lacuna (of twenty-two verses), and considerable portions of the last seven chapters. (The New Testament Documents—Are They Reliable? Grand Rapids, Michigan, 1976, pages 17-18)

The Papyrus Bodmer II, dated about 200 A.D., provides an excellent test for Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Translation” of the Bible. Below is a photograph of the first page “of the Gospel of John in Papyrus Bodmer II.” This is taken from The Biblical Archaeologist, September, 1957.

The reader will notice that we have placed an arrow at the beginning of the text of the Gospel of John—the writing just above this is the introduction to John’s Gospel. In this study we are only dealing with the first line and about half of the second. Below we have copied the characters—written in the “Greek Uncial Script”—from the papyrus, and with the help of Berry’s Interlinear Literal Translation of the Greek New Testament we have been able to divide the words and give the English translation below each word.

EN ARKH HN 0 LOGOS KAI 0 LOGOS HN
In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and God was the Word.

The reader will note that the right side of the fragment is damaged, and that we have restored the word which translates “God” (ΩΣ is an abbreviation for ΘΕΟΣ). According to Floyd V. Filson the word “God” is always abbreviated in this manuscript (The Biblical Archaeologist, September, 1957, page 59). Except for the last letter in the word ΘΕΟΣ, this is the only restoration we have had to make. This word means “the,” but in this case it is best to leave it untranslated. W. E. Vine states that “the article is often used with proper names, but must not be rendered in English” (New Testament Greek Grammar, page 21).

It is extremely interesting to find that the translation of the papyrus confirms the reading found in both the King James Version and the Revised Standard Version:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

When we examine Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Revision,” however, we find that this verse has been drastically altered:

In the beginning was the Gospel preached through the Son. And the Gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God.

While Joseph Smith would have us believe that he was restoring the text of the Bible to its original purity, the evidence indicates just the opposite. Because of recent discoveries of papyrus manuscripts Mormon writers are faced with a serious dilemma. It is almost impossible to maintain Joseph Smith’s teachings concerning the Bible in light of these discoveries.

Dr. Richard L. Anderson, of Brigham Young University, is undoubtedly one of the top authorities on Bible manuscripts in the Mormon Church. In a paper read at the “Fourteenth Annual Symposium on the Archaeology of the Scriptures,” Dr. Anderson seemed to be warning his people against the idea that the New Testament has been drastically altered:
This process of uncovering the major papyri manuscripts of the New Testament has largely taken place not only in our own century, but in our own generation. . . . Almost the whole New Testament is represented in the papyri fragments. The only two exceptions now are I and II Timothy. The real achievement, then, is that the antiquity of the text has now been pushed back almost another century. . . . the gap now separating the time of the writing of the New Testament and the oldest preserved manuscripts is now generally no more than 200 years. To underline the extent of the findings, let us stress that some part of every book of the New Testament is represented by papyri dated as early as the third century, with the present exception of Philmemon, I Timothy, II Timothy, I, II and III John. . . . As to its antiquity, p 46 is thought by leading papyrologists to be no later than 200 A.D. This means that the oldest collection of Paul’s letters now dates from a maximum of 150 years after Paul wrote. With such an early collection, the question naturally arises how the text is different from the traditional one. Differences lie in numerous details, but the outstanding conclusion is that there is little, if any, significant change. . . .

Among the Bodmer Papyri, the greatest treasures are the copies of the Gospels dating back to the end of the second century. The original publication took place in 1956 of a manuscript enumerated P66. It is a practically complete copy of the Gospel of John, which the editor dates about 200 A.D. . . . the most impressive contribution of the new manuscripts of Luke and John is not the few differences, but the extent of their agreement with the life and teachings of Christ as preserved in other manuscripts. . . . For a book to undergo progressive uncovering of its manuscript history and come out with so little debatable in its text is a great tribute to its essential authenticity. In tracing the history of manuscript investigation, the student finds that two great facts emerge. First, no new manuscript discovery has produced significant differences in the essential story. This survey has disclosed the leading textual controversies, and together they would be well within one percent of the text. Stated differently, all manuscripts agree on the essential correctness of 99% of the verses in the New Testament. . . .

Robert J. Matthews, Director of Academic Research for the Department of Seminaries and Institutes in the Mormon Church, has done a great deal of research on Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Version” of the Bible. In an article published in a recent issue of BYU Studies, Dr. Matthews goes so far as to admit the possibility that Joseph Smith may have added material which was never contained in the original manuscripts of the Bible:

The question might be raised whether the Prophet actually restored the text as Matthew wrote it, or whether, being the seer that he was, he went even beyond Matthew’s text and recorded an event that actually took place during the delivery of the Sermon, but which Matthew did not include. . . . It is probable that the Inspired Version is many things, and that only portions of it represent restorations while other portions may be interpolations, enlargements, clarifications and the like.

The science of textual criticism offers an objection to the Inspired Version being a restoration of the original text on the basis that the Prophet’s work is not extensively supported by the many ancient manuscripts and fragments of the Bible that are now in common use by scholars. However, this may possibly be accounted for in two ways. First, no original manuscripts of the Bible are available, and even the earliest available documents are removed from the originals by many decades. Corruption of the texts could have taken place in the intervening years. Second, many of the passages in the Inspired Version may be reiterations of events which were either not recorded by the Biblical writers or were lost before the Bible was compiled in which case even the original Bible manuscripts would not contain the information.

My analysis leads me to conclude that the Inspired Version is many things. There are passages that are strongly persuasive of being restorations of the original text, or even of historical events beyond the text. There are other passages that may be inspired explanations, but not necessarily restorations.

In 1843 some brass plates were reported to have been found near Kinderhook, Illinois. The Mormon used these plates as evidence for the Book of Mormon (see Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 406), but it later turned out that they were forgeries that were made to trap Joseph Smith. On June 30, 1879, W. Fugate wrote a letter to James T. Cobb. In this letter we find these statements:

I received your letter in regard to those plates and will say that they are a humbug, gotten up by Robert Wilely, Bridge Whiton and myself. . . . We read in Pratt’s prophecy that “Truth is yet to spring out of the earth.” We concluded to prove the prophecy by way of a joke. We soon made our plans and executed them. Bridge Whiton cut them out of some pieces of copper; Wiley and I made the hieroglyphics by making impressions on beeswax and filling them with acid and putting it on the plates. (The Kinderhook Plates, by Welby W. Ricks, reprinted from Improvement Era, September 1962)

Evidently Joseph Smith was not aware of the fact that the plates were made to trick him, for Charlotte Haven stated that he “said that the figures or writing on them was similar to that in which the Book of Mormon was written, . . . he thought that by the help of revelation he would be able to translate them” (Letter dated May 2, 1843, as printed in Overland Monthly, December 1890, page 630).

Under the date of May 1, 1843, this statement appeared in Joseph Smith’s History:

I have translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, through the loins of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth. (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 372)

After Joseph Smith’s death the Kinderhook plates were lost. Fortunately however, one of the plates has recently been found in the Chicago Historical Society Museum. In 1962 Welby W. Ricks wrote an article for the Improvement Era in which he told about the plate in Chicago and claimed that the discovery “reaffirms” Joseph Smith’s “prophetic calling.” Mr. Ricks claimed that there were discrepancies in Fugate’s account of how the plates were made, but he furnished no evidence to show that they were genuine relics of antiquity.

During the summer of 1965 George M. Lawrence, a Mormon physicist, was given permission to examine and make “some non-destructive physical studies of the surviving plate.” In the Summary to his study, we find this statement:

The plate is not pure copper. It may be a low zinc brass or a bronze. The dimensions, tolerances, composition and workmanship are consistent with the facilities of an 1843 blacksmith shop and with the fraud stories of the original participants. (“Report of a Physical Study of the Kinderhook Plate Number 5,” by George M. Lawrence)

In our new book, Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, we have six pages of information on the Kinderhook plates. The reader will, no doubt, be interested in learning more about these plates and Mr. Lawrence’s research with them. In this 64-page book we cover such subjects as: the Book of Mormon in light of archaeological findings in the New World, the disagreement between Dr. Nibley and Dr. Jakeman over archaeology and the Book of Mormon, Nephite coins, the Anthon transcript, Mayan glyphs, Parahyba text, Kinderhook plates, Newark stones, Lehi Tree-of-Life Stone, and the problem of Book of Mormon geography.

The prices on this book are: $2.00 each — 2 for $3.50 — 5 for $7.00 — 10 for $12.00.
VIOLENCE IN ZION

The Mormon leaders teach that because of apostasy the true Church of Christ has been lost from the earth. They claim, however, that in 1830 the Lord restored His Church through the Prophet Joseph Smith.

When we compare the methods used by Christ and His Apostles with those used by Joseph Smith and other early Mormon leaders, we find great discrepancies. It was Joseph Smith himself who once said: “I am not so much a ‘Christian’ as many suppose I am. When a man undertakes to ride me for a horse, I feel disposed to kick up and throw him off, and ride him.” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 335). Joseph Smith related the following incident in his History of the Church: “Josiah Butterfield came to my house and insulted me so outrageously that I kicked him out of the house, across the yard, and into the street” (History of the Church, by Joseph Smith, vol. 5, page 316).

Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, was very prone to the use of violent methods. In fact, he even based a doctrine on the use of violence. This doctrine is known as “Blood Atonement.” Brigham Young made these statements in one of his sermons:

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves: if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind. (Desert News, February 18, 1857; also reprinted in the Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pages 219-220)

In our work, The Mormon Kingdom, we have a great deal to say about the doctrine of “Blood Atonement.” The Mormon leaders not only preached this doctrine, but it was actually put into practice. Gustive O. Larson, Professor of Church History at the Brigham Young University, admits that this is the case:

To whatever extent the preaching on Blood Atonement may have influenced action, it would have been in relation to Mormon disciplinary action among its own members. In point would be a verbally reported case of a Mr. Johnson in Cedar City who was found guilty of adultery with his stepdaughter by a bishop’s court and sentenced to death for atonement of his sin. According to the report of reputable eyewitnesses, judgment was executed with consent of the offender who went to his unconsecrated grave in full confidence of salvation through the shedding of blood. Such a case, however primitive, is understandable within the meaning of the doctrine and the emotional extremes of the reformation. (Utah Historical Quarterly, January, 1958, page 62, footnote 39)

John D. Lee claimed that some enemies of the church were killed in Nauvoo by orders from the Church leaders:

I knew of many men being killed in Nauvoo by the Danites. It was then the rule that all the enemies of Joseph Smith should be killed, and I know of many who were quietly put out of the way by the orders of Joseph and his Apostles while the Church was there. (Confessions of John D. Lee, photographic reprint of 1880 edition, page 284)

The people of Illinois were well aware of the fact that the Mormon leaders used violent methods in dealing with their enemies. In the Warsaw Signal for January 7, 1846, we find the following reprinted from the Springfield Journal:

Some other disclosures are talked of as having been made: the manner in which persons are disposed of, who are supposed to be enemies of the leading Mormons. They are seized by some members of the Danite or other band, a leather strap placed around the neck, so that if the least resistance is made, they are choked; and in this condition they are taken to a skiff, carried to the middle of the river, their bowels ripped open, and their bodies sunk. This is what is termed making “catfish bait” of their enemies. It is said that quite a number of persons were disposed of in this manner.

According to John D. Lee, the police in Nauvoo were very similar to the Danite organization:

Whatever the police were ordered to do, they were to do and ask no questions . . . Under Brigham Young, Hosea Stout was Chief of Police. They showed me where they buried a man in a lot near the Masonic Hall. They said they got him tight and were joking with him while some men were digging his grave. They asked him to go with them into a pit of corn, saying it was fully grown. They told him they had a jug of whiskey caught out there. They led him to his grave, and told him to get down there, and hand up the jug, and he should have the first drink. As he bent over to get down, Rosswell Stevens struck him with his police cane on the back of the head and dropped him. They then tightened a cord around his neck to shut off his wind, and then they covered him up, and set the hill of corn back on his grave to cover him up, any tracks that might lead to his discovery.

Another man they took in a boat, about two o’clock at night for a ride. When out in the channel of the river, the man who sat behind him struck him upon the head and stunned him. They then tied a rope around his neck and a stone to the other end of the rope, and sent him to the bottom of Mississippi River. (Confessions of John D. Lee, page 159)

Notice that Lee claimed that the Mormon police committed murders for the Church and that “Under Brigham Young, Hosea Stout was Chief of Police.” Fortunately, Hosea Stout’s diary has survived, and it is certainly one of the most revealing documents that we have ever encountered. The fact that it was written by a faithful Mormon makes it even more significant. In his diary Hosea Stout frankly tells of some of the violent methods used by the Mormon leaders. For instance, under the date of April 3, 1845, Hosea Stout recorded the following in his diary:

Archaeology and the Book of Mormon
By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. This is a 64-page book dealing with such subjects as: the Book of Mormon in light of archaeological findings in the New World, the disagreement between Dr. Nibley and Dr. Jakeman over archaeology and the Book of Mormon, Nephite coins, the Anthon transcript, Mayan glyphs, the Parahyba text, Kinderhook plates, Newark stones, Lehi Tree of Life Stone, and the problem of Book of Mormon geography. Reg. $2.00 — Special Price ‘til December 31, 1969: $1.80 — 2 for $3.15 — 5 for $6.30 — 10 for $10.80
In the morning I went to the Temple and was roughly accosted by Bros Cahoon & Cutler about a circumstance which took place last night at the Temple. They said that the Old Police had beat a man almost to death in the Temple. To which I replied I was glad of it and that I had given orders to that effect in case anyone should be found in the Temple after night and they had only done as they were told, or ordered, . . . we concluded to lay the matter before President Brigham Young and get his advice, as we went we met Brother H. C. Kimball and while relating the matter to him Brother Brigham came to us and we related the matter to him and he approved of the proceedings of the Police and said he wanted us to still guard the Temple after which he & Br. Kimball went to the Temple to regulate the matters there which was done to our satisfaction and justification. (On The Mormon Frontier: The Diary of Hosea Stout, edited by Juanita Brooks, vol. 1, page 32)

Under the date of January 9, 1846, Hosea Stout recorded:

When we came to the Temple somewhat a considerable number of the guard were assembled and among them was William Hibbard son of the old man Hibbard. He was evidently come as a spy. When I saw him I told Scott that we must “bounce a stone off of his head” to which he agreed we prepared accordingly & I got an opportunity & hit him on the back of his head which came very near taking his life. But few knew anything about what was the matter he left the ground out of his senses when he came to himself he could not tell what had happened to him & (On The Mormon Frontier: The Diary of Hosea Stout, vol. 1, page 103)

BILL HICKMAN

Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, once stated:

And if the Gentiles wish to see a few tricks, we have “Mormons” that can perform them. We have the meanest devils on the earth in our midst, and we intend to keep them, for we have use for them; and if the Devil does not look sharp, we will cheat him out of them at the last, for they will reform and go to heaven with us. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 176)

Brigham Young may have had Bill Hickman on his mind when he made this statement, for he was considered as a man that would do anything mean. There is good reason to believe that Hickman was involved in crime when the Church was in Nauvoo. The Warsaw Signal, March 26, 1845, printed a letter which contained this statement:

Wm. A. Hickman stole some bacon, was put in jail, in a few days was bailed out by two brother Mormons . . .

The Bloomington Herald, November 22, 1845, published this statement by Edward Bonney concerning Hickman:

. . . Wm. A. Hickman, a fugitive from justice, . . . has twice been chased from Missouri into Nauvoo, with stolen horses, within the last two months. (Bloomington Herald, November 22, 1845, typed copy)

Bill Hickman was finally arrested and put in prison. In his autobiography Bill Hickman states:

I stayed a few days, and when the jailer came in one afternoon, I knocked him down, . . . and left, and have not been back since, which was about twenty-five years ago. (Brigham Destroying Angel, pages 46)

In Utah the Mormon leaders not only protected him from justice, but they actually encouraged him in his crimes. This fact is made very plain in the journal of John Bennion. In 1860 Bennion felt that Hickman should be punished for his evil deeds, but he soon learned that Bishop Gardiner “had been bound & could not act” against Hickman and that the Mormon Apostle Orson Hyde, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, taught that a man should not be punished for stealing from the “gentiles.” We copy the following from Bennion’s journal:

Sat 13 went to the city met Bp Gardner had a talk with him about W. A. Hickmans wicked course for some time past he said that up till now he had been bound & could not act I told him I was not bound neither was I afraid to expose the wickedness of any man that it was my duty to expose we got home about sun down in the evening I met with Bp & councilors & parties concerned [to] try George Hickman for stealing mules when about to commence trial Elder Hyde come in and by Gardners solicitation he preached and the trial was postponed after meeting Bp council & Elder Hyde had a long talk in my house by Hyde said speaking of stealing that a man may steal & be influenced by the Spirit of the Lord to do it that Hickman had done it years past said that he never would institute a trial against a brother for stealing from the gentiles but stealing from his brethren he was done on it he laid down much teaching on the subject

S 14th went to meeting at the mill to hear br Hyde . . . he give much good instruction spoke on last nights intention to try Hickman give it as the Word of the Lord to set him free for the past, bid him go & sin no more. (“John Bennion Journal,” October 13 and 14, 1860, original journal located at Utah State Historical Society)

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 62, we quoted Mary Ettie V. Smith as stating that the Apostle Orson Hyde received stolen goods at Kanesville and that Bill Hickman was involved in this stealing. In the light of the reference given above, it would appear that Mrs. Smith was telling the truth.

Toward the end of his life Bill Hickman wrote a book in which he stated that he had committed his crimes with the approval of the Mormon Church leaders. He even claimed that he had committed murderers by the orders of Brigham Young and the Apostle Orson Hyde. For instance, he stated that he murdered Jessie Hartly after receiving orders from these men.

Before examining Hickman’s account of the murder of Hartly, it is interesting to read Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith’s comments concerning this matter:

About the time referred to in the last chapter, Jessie T. Hartly came to Great Salt Lake City. He was a man of education and intelligence, and a lawyer by profession. . . . and soon after married a Mormon girl by the name of Bullock, which involved a profession, at least, of Mormonism. It was afterwards supposed by some that his aim was to learn the mysteries of the Church, in order to make an expose of them afterwards. . . . the Prophet regarded him with suspicion, as a fit person to be appointed missionary preacher among the Gentiles. As is customary in such cases, he was proposed in open convention, when all the Heads of the Church were on the stand; and the Prophet rose at once with that air of judicial authority, from which those who know best understand there is no appeal, and said: “This man, Hartly, is guilty of heresy. He has been writing to his friends in Oregon against the Church, and has attempted to expose us to the world, and he should be sent to hell cross lots.” This was the end of the matter as to Hartly.

His friends after this avoided him, and it was understood that his fate was sealed. He knew that to remain was death; he therefore left his wife and child, and attempted to effect an escape.

Not many days after he had gone, Wiley Norton told us, with a feeling of exultation, that they had made sure of another enemy of the church. That the bones of Jesse Hartly were in the canons, and that he was afraid they would be overlooked at the Resurrection, unless he had better success in “pleading” in the next world than in this, referring to his practice as a lawyer.

Nearly a year and half after this, when on our way to the States, I saw the widow of Jesse Hartly at Green River. She had been a very pretty woman, and was at that time but twenty-two years old. I think she was the most heart-broken human being I have ever seen. . . . she commenced by saying:

“You may have suffered; and if you have been a Mormon wife, you must have known sorrow. But the cruelty of my own fate, I am sure, is without a parallel—even in this land of cruelty.”

“I married Jesse Hartly, knowing he was a ‘Gentile’ in fact, but he passed for a Mormon, but that made no difference with me, although I was a Mormon, because he was a noble man, and sought only the right. By being my husband, he was brought into closer contact with the members of the Church, and was thus soon enabled to learn many things about us, and about the Heads of the Church, that he did not approve, and of which I was ignorant, although, I had been brought up among the Saints; and which, if known among the Gentiles, would have greatly damaged us. I do not understand all he discovered, or all he did; but they found he had written against the Church, and he was cut off, and the Prophet required as an atonement for his sins, that he should lay down his life. . . . They kill those there who have committed sins too great to be atoned for in any other way. The Prophet says, if they submit to this he can save them, otherwise they are lost. Oft! that is horrible. But my husband refused to be sacrificed, and so set out alone for the United States: thinking there might at least a hope of success. I told him when he left me, and left his child, that he would be killed, and so he was. William Hickman and another Danite, shot him in the canons; and I have often since been obliged to cook for this man, when he passed this way, knowing all the while, he had killed my husband. My child soon followed after its father, and I hope to die also; for why should I live? They have brought me here, where I wish to remain, rather than to return to Salt Lake, where the murderers of my husband curse the earth, and roll in affluence unpunished." (Mormonism: Its Rise, Progress, And Present Condition, Hartford, 1870, pages 308-311)

In his confessions Bill Hickman frankly admitted that he had killed Hartly, and he states that Brigham Young and Orson Hyde had ordered the killing:

When we had got across what was known as the Big Mountain, and into East Canon, some three or four miles, one Mr. Hartly came to us from Provo City. This Hartly was a young lawyer who had come to Salt Lake from Oregon the fall before, and had married a Miss Bullock, of Provo, a respectable lady of a good family. But word had come to Salt Lake (so said, I never knew whether it did or not), that he had been engaged in some counterfeit affair. He was a fine-looking, intelligent young man. He told me he had never worked any is his life, and was going to Fort Bridger or Green River to see if he could not get a job of clerking, or something that he could do. But previous to this, at the April Conference, Brigham Young, before the congregation, gave him a tremendous blowing up, calling him all sorts of bad names, and saying he ought to have his throat cut, which made him feel very bad. He declared he was not guilty of the charges.

I saw Orson Hyde looking very sour at him, and after he had been in camp an hour or two, Hyde told me that he had orders from Brigham Young, if he came to Fort Supply to have him used up. "Now," said he, "I want you and George Boyd to do it." I saw him and Boyd talking together; then Boyd came to me and said: "It's all right, Bill; I will help you to kill that fellow." One of our teams was two or three miles behind, and Orson Hyde wished me to go back and see if anything had happened to it. Boyd saddled his horse to go with me, but Hartly stepped up and said he would go if Boyd would let him have his horse. Orson Hyde said: "Let him have your horse," which Boyd did. Orson Hyde then whispered to me: "Now is your time; don't let him come back." We started, and about half a mile on had to cross the canon stream, which was midisides to our horses. While crossing, Hartly got a shot and fell dead in the creek. His horse took fright and ran back to camp.

I went on and met Hosea Stout, who told me the team was coming close by. I turned back, Stout with me, for our camp. Stout asked me if I had seen that fellow, meaning Hartly. I told him he had come to our camp, and he said from what he had heard he ought to be killed. I then told him all that had happened, and he said that was good. When I returned to camp Boyd told me that his horse come into camp with blood on the saddle, and he and some of the boys took it to the creek and washed it off. Orson Hyde told me that was well done; that he and some others had gone on the side of the mountain, and lectures were delivered against girls marrying gentiles & winter Saints & all that was not native to the earth, and roll in affluence unpunished." (Mormonism: Its Rise, Progress, And Present Condition, Hartford, 1870, pages 308-311)

Hosea Stout also mentioned Orson Hyde's speech to the company:

This evening Elder Hyde informed the company that Mr J___ Hartley who did not make his appearance to day with us had most likely had some dishonest intentions by his leaving & wished the guard to renew their diligence least their horses might be stolen. (On The Mormon Frontier, vol. 2, page 514)

The fact that Mrs. Hartley told of the murder of her husband years before Hickman made his confession, and that Hosea Stout's diary confirms many of the details around in Hickman's confession, seems to prove that Hartley was murdered by orders of the Mormon leaders. We must agree with a statement made by J. H. Beadle:

But those accustomed to judging the weight of evidence can come to but one conclusion: Jesse Hartley was murdered for apostasy, and the charge of counterfeit was cooked up to furnish some sort of excuse to those of the Mormons who could not "swallow the strong doctrine of blood-atonement." (Brigham's Destroying Angel, Appendix C, pages 204-205)

As we examine the history of the Mormon Church, it becomes very apparent that the Mormon leaders were attempting to establish a kingdom by some very worldly methods. These methods in many cases were just the opposite of what Jesus taught. When he was brought before Pilate he stated: "... My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, ... but now is my kingdom not from hence" (John 18:36).

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, we have a great deal of information concerning the men who killed and committed violent acts for the early Mormon leaders. We cover such subjects as: the actual practice of Blood Atonement, whipping, emasculation, Hosea Stout, Bill Hickman, Orrin Porter Rockwell, Tom Brown, the Hodges, the murder of Miller and Lieza, the murder of Irvine Hodges, and the murder of Col. Davenport. We hope to deal with many other important subjects in the volume. We feel that this is a very important work and that all of our readers should have this.

The first volume of The Mormon Kingdom is now finished and we have completed 32 pages in the second volume. The remaining pages will be mailed out as soon as they are completed. To receive both these volumes and a vinyl loose-leaf binder the customer would normally pay $7.90. We are having a special, however, and if these two volumes are ordered before December 31, 1969, the price will be only $6.95!

YOU?

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven. —Matthew 5:16
Besides the devastating evidence against the authenticity of the Book of Abraham, there is additional evidence which we should consider. For instance, it is plain to see that Joseph Smith borrowed heavily from the King James Version of the Bible. An example is Genesis 12:1 compared with the Book of Abraham 2:3.

Genesis 12:1

Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee:

Book of Abraham 2:3

Now the Lord had said unto me: Abraham, get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee.

We could cite many parallels, but these should be sufficient to convince the reader that the two texts are related. Now, we feel that the only logical explanation for this relationship is that Joseph Smith merely borrowed from the Bible, rewriting and adding to the text as he went along. Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of Brigham Young University, on the other hand, states that the Book of Abraham was in existence before Genesis was written and that Genesis was taken from it! Dr. Sperry states:

... the writer believes that the second chapter of Abraham is the original, of which Gen. 12:1-13 is an abridgment. This is a remarkable fact. ... (Ancient Records Testify in Papyrus and Stone, Salt Lake City, 1938, page 81)

On pages 83-84 of the same book, Dr. Sperry states:

For a number of years I have strongly felt that chapter 2 of the Book of Abraham is the original account from which Gen. 12:1-13 was made. Putting it another way, the account in Genesis is nothing more or less than an abridgment of that in the Book of Abraham. ... The similarity cannot be accidental ... a linguistic study of the Book of Abraham and of the parallel versions of the Bible points unmistakably to the independent character of the Egyptian record and to the conclusion that it is, at least, the possible original from whence the account in Genesis was taken.

Although Dr. Sperry’s idea that Genesis was taken from the Book of Abraham may seem fantastic, it is the only answer he could give that would not undermine the Book of Abraham. To say that the Book of Abraham came from Genesis is to label it a fraud. Of course, now that we have the original papyrus from which the Book of Abraham was “translated,” we know that it is in reality nothing but an Egyptian funerary document and has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. But even if the original papyrus were not available, there would be sufficient evidence to show that the Book of Abraham was written after Genesis.

It is extremely interesting to note that the Book of Abraham itself seems to catch Joseph Smith in the process of changing his doctrine concerning the Godhead. In the first part of the Book of Abraham we do not find the doctrine of a plurality of Gods. For instance, in Abraham 2:1 we read: “Now the Lord God caused the famine to wax sore ...” This part of the Book of Abraham was probably written in 1835. The Mormon writer Jay M. Todd states: “Another fact of relevance in the matter is the amount of present-day Book of Abraham in the hand of Warren Parrish: chapter 1:1-2:18. This is also the exact length of the first installment in the 1842 Times and Seasons. One tends to wonder if that is as far as the Prophet reached in his 1835 work” (The Sage of the Book of Abraham, page 228). As we examine the text of the Book of Abraham we find that it is the part which was “translated” in March, 1842, which contains the doctrine of a plurality of Gods. The words “the Gods” appear more than forty times in the fourth and fifth chapters of the Book of Abraham.

Actually, chapters four and five of the Book of Abraham appear to be nothing but the first of Genesis rewritten to include a plurality of Gods. The word “God” is changed to “the Gods” and wherever the word “he” refers to God it has been changed to “they.” It would appear, however, that in one instance Joseph Smith forgot to change the word “he” to “they” and that it had to be changed after his death. He was apparently copying from Genesis 1:16, which reads:

And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. He made the stars also. (Genesis 1:16)

Joseph Smith rewrote this to read as follows:

And the Gods organized the two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; with the lesser light He set the stars, also; ... (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, page 721)

This was reprinted the same way in the Millennial Star, August 1842, vol. 3, page 51. In the Pearl of Great Price it has been changed to read:

And the Gods organized the two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; with the lesser light they set the stars also. (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham 4:16)

In The Case Against Mormonism, volumes 2 and 3, we give a great deal of information concerning the Book of Abraham. (See the SPECIAL OFFER below.)

Teach us, O God, the love that is revealed in Jesus Christ. Grant us the graces of humility and of an inquiring mind, and by Thy Spirit guide us into all truth, through Christ our Lord. Amen. —Student Prayer
Those of us who grew up in the Mormon Church know the Church teaches that the revelations of Joseph Smith are supposed to be received as if from God’s “own mouth” (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 21, verse 5), and that the present-day leader is supposed to be God’s mouthpiece on earth. The ward teacher’s message for June 1945 contained these statements:

Any latter-day Saints who denounces or opposes, whether actively or otherwise, any plan or doctrine advocated by the “prophets, seers, and revelators” of the Church is cultivating the spirit of apostasy... Lucifer... wins a great victory when he can get members of the Church to speak against their leaders and to “do their own thinking.”

When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they propose a plan—it is God’s plan. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. (Improvement Era, June 1945, page 354)

In making a study of Mormon Church history we ran across a number of things that have led us to question the wisdom of blindly following the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” of the Church.

To begin with, David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, makes it clear that Joseph Smith sometimes gave false revelations. He stated:

When the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, more money was needed to finish the printing of it. . . . Brother Hyrum said it had been suggested to him that some of the brethren might go to Toronto, Canada, and sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon for considerable money; and he persuaded Joseph to inquire of the Lord about it. Joseph concluded to do so. He had not yet given up the stone. Joseph looked into the hat in which he placed the stone, and received a revelation that some of the brethren should go to Toronto, Canada, and that they would sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon. Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery went to Toronto on this mission, but they failed entirely to sell the copy-right, returning without any money. Joseph was at my father’s house when they returned. I was there also, and am an eye witness to these facts. Jacob Whitmer and John Whitmer were also present when Hiram Page and Oliver Cowdery returned from Canada. Well, we were all in great trouble; and we asked Joseph how it was that he had received a revelation from the Lord for some brethren to go to Toronto and sell the copy-right, and the brethren had utterly failed in their undertaking. Joseph did not know how it was, so he enquired of the Lord about it, and beheld the following revelation came through the stone: “Some revelations are of God: some revelations are of man: and some revelations are of the devil.” So we see that the revelation to go to Toronto and sell the copy-right was not of God, but was of the devil or of the heart of man. . . . I will say here, that I could tell you other false revelations that came through Brother Joseph as mouthpiece, (not through the stone) but this will suffice. Many of Brother Joseph’s revelations were never printed. The revelation to go to Canada was written down on paper, but was never printed. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, pages 30-31)

The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts makes these comments concerning this matter:

...we have here an alleged revelation received by the Prophet, through the “Seer Stone,” directing or allowing men to go on a mission to Canada, which fails of its purpose:... Then in explanation of the failure of that revelation, the Prophet’s announcement that all revelations are not of God; some are of men and some are even from evil sources. ...The revelation respecting the Toronto journey was not of God, surely; else it would not have failed; but the Prophet, overwhelmed in his deep anxiety for the progress of the work saw reflected in the “Seer Stone” his own thought, or that suggested to him by his brother Hyrum, rather than the thought of God... in this instance of the Toronto journey, Joseph was evidently not directed by the inspiration of the Lord. (A Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 1, page 165)

While David Whitmer felt that some of Joseph Smith’s printed revelations were from God, he was skeptical of many of the rest. For instance, he stated that “the revelation on polygamy is not of God” (An Address to All Believers in Christ, page 44). Although the revelation on polygamy is still printed in the Doctrine and Covenants as Section 132, it is no longer practiced by the Mormon people. At one time, however, polygamy was a burning issue. When Lorenzo Snow, who later became President of the Mormon Church, was on trial for practicing polygamy, Mr. Bierbower, the prosecuting attorney, predicted that if he was convicted, “a new revelation would soon follow, changing the divine law of celestial marriage.” To this Lorenzo Snow replied:

Whatever fame Mr. Bierbower may have secured as a lawyer, he certainly will fail as a prophet. The severest prosecutions have never been followed by revelations changing a divine law, obedience to which brought imprisonment or martyrdom.

Though I go to prison, God will not change his law of celestial marriage. But the man, the people, the nation, that oppose and fight against this doctrine and the Church of God, will be overthrown. (Historical Record, page 144)

It was not long after Lorenzo Snow made this statement that the Church was forced to give up the practice of polygamy. In 1890 Wilford Woodruff, the fourth President of the Church, issued the Manifesto—i.e., a revelation which was supposed to stop the practice of polygamy.

THE COMING CRISIS

Today the Church is faced with a crisis that is similar to the one it encountered in 1890 over polygamy. This controversy stems from the fact that Mormon leaders teach that the Negroes are cursed by God and therefore ineligible to hold the Priesthood. The Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen stated:

If I were to marry a Negro woman and have children by her, my children would all be cursed as to the Priesthood. Do I want my children cursed as to the priesthood? If there is one drop of Negro blood in my children, as I have read to you, they receive the curse.

This doctrine is derived from Joseph Smith’s “translation” of the Book of Abraham. David O. McKay, the ninth President of the Mormon Church made this statement in a letter dated November 3, 1947:

I know of no scriptural basis for denying the Priesthood to Negroes other than one verse in the Book of Abraham (1:26); however, I believe, as you suggest, that the real reason dates back to our pre-existant life. (Mormonism and the Negro, part 2, page 19)
Since the Book of Abraham contains the verse that is used for “denying the Priesthood to Negroes,” it should be examined with a very critical eye. Joseph Smith claimed that this book was a correct translation of a roll of Egyptian papyrus which he obtained in 1835.

While Egyptologists questioned the authenticity of Joseph Smith’s work because of his interpretation of three drawings included in the printed version of the “Book of Abraham,” they were unable to prove that the text of book itself was mistranslated because the original papyrus had become lost. On November 27, 1967, however, the entire picture changed, for the Deseret News announced that “A collection of papyrius manuscripts, long believed to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871, was presented to The Church . . . by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. . . . Included in the papyri is a manuscript identified as the original document from which Joseph Smith had copied the drawing which he called ‘Facsimile No. 1’ and published with the Book of Abraham” (Deseret News, November 27, 1967, page 1). While the Church leaders were willing to admit that the drawing which Joseph Smith used for Fac. No. 1 in the Book of Abraham was among the manuscripts they were reluctant to admit that the fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the text for the Book of Abraham itself was among the collection. In the Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1968, we pointed out that the fragment of Papyrus which Dr. Nibley labeled “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” was the fragment Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham from. In the Mormon publication, Improvement Era, May 1968, Dr. Nibley finally admitted that the papyrus Joseph Smith used “in preparing the text of the Book of Abraham” had been located.

This fragment of papyrus has now been translated by three different Egyptologists, and they have all come to the conclusion that it is in reality an appendage to the Egyptian “Book of Breaths,” and has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. Therefore, the Book of Abraham has been proven to be a spurious work.

Dee Jay Nelson, one of the Egyptologists who translated the papyrus, is a member of the Mormon Church. Mr. Nelson’s research has led him to the conclusion that his church must give up the Book of Abraham. In a letter dated July 13, 1968, he stated: “I have been swamped lately by letters and long distance telephone calls from troubled people. Almost every one of them asks if I really believe that the Book of Abraham is untrue and each seems almost pleadingly eager for me to defend it. To each I have said that I do not believe it.” Mr. Nelson informed us that in one week he “received 33 letters and 19 long distance calls about the Book of Abraham & the papyri.”

Since David O. McKay, the ninth President of the Mormon Church, has stated that he knows of “no scriptural basis for denying the Priesthood to Negroes other than one verse in the Book of Abraham,” and since the Egyptologists have declared the Book of Abraham a spurious work, it appears that there is no real basis for this doctrine.

THE GREAT STALL

The Mormon leaders seem to feel that if they ignore this problem it will eventually go away. They have appointed Dr. Hugh Nibley, of Brigham Young University, to unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics.” Although Dr. Nibley knows several languages, he was not qualified to translate the Egyptian papyri.

In fact, in a letter to the Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson, Dr. Nibley claimed that he did not even want to “get involved in the P.G.P. business.” (The letters “P.G.P.” are, of course, an abbreviation for Pearl of Great Price. The Book of Abraham is printed as part of the Pearl of Great Price.) Dr. Nibley stated:

I don’t consider myself an Egyptologist at all, and don’t intend to get involved in the P.G.P. business unless I am forced into it—which will probably be sooner than that. . . . I see no reason in the world why you should not be taken into the confidence of the Brethren if this thing ever comes out into the open; in fact, you should be enormously useful to the Church. . . . As you know, there are parties in Salt Lake who are howling for a showdown on the P.G.P.; if they have their way we may have to get together. (Letter from Dr. Hugh Nibley to Dee Jay Nelson, dated June 27, 1967)

Whether Dr. Nibley wanted to or not, he now finds himself deeply involved in the “P.G.P. business,” and the Mormon people are looking to him for answers. After writing almost 400 pages on the papyri, the Mormon writer Jay M. Todd has to admit that he has not discussed “the meaning of the papyri themselves” and refers the readers to Dr. Nibley’s work:

One major remaining issue remains still undiscussed in this background study, and that is the meaning of the papyri themselves. That issue shall remain undiscussed. Egyptologists in and out of the Church will address themselves to that area for some years to come. The import and significance of the papyri recently rediscovered will be told Latter-day Saints by Dr. Hugh Nibley, to whom the First Presidency has given the assignment. Surely his mind and hand will be blessed, and his report will be one of immense interest and significance to members of the Church. (The Saga of the Book of Abraham, Salt Lake City, 1969, pages 387-388)

Dr. Nibley has written many articles for the Improvement Era, but so far he has not translated the papyri or made any attempt to tell the Mormon people “the meaning of the papyri themselves.” He has had photographs of the papyri since “the summer of 1966,” and the original papyri have been at BYU since they were presented to the Church, yet he has failed to produce a translation. In a letter dated February 8, 1968, Dr. Nibley stated that the “papyri are not difficult to translate,” and that he had “made a translation of some of the papyri.” If Dr. Nibley has made a translation why hasn’t he published it? Dee Jay Nelson completed his “Translation and Preliminary Survey” in less than two months. Hugh Nibley has had photographs of the papyri for about four years, yet he has not published a translation. The picture of Dr. Nibley working with the papyri on the front page of this Messenger is taken from the Brigham Young University Alumni, February, 1970. The caption under the picture contains this statement: “Hugh Nibley works at translating some of the papyri donated recently to the Church. Copies of the writings of Abraham will be shown at the Alumni Reception—College of Religion reception in the Hotel Utah during April General Conference.”

While the article goes on to state that “copies of the Book of Abraham papyri” would be displayed, it says nothing about Dr. Nibley completing a translation before April Conference. There is good reason to believe that Dr. Nibley will never publish a translation of the papyri, for in an article he wrote in 1968, he stated: “. . . it is doubtful whether any translation could do as much good as harm” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1968, page 251).

NAIVE VIEW

Although the Mormon leaders have refused to face the facts concerning the Book of Abraham, there is evidence that some of the Mormon people are beginning to look seriously at the problem. For instance, the Latter-day Saints Student Association publication, LDSA Commentary, has published some interesting information by Richley Crapo and John Tvedtines. While these men still hold to the idea that the Book of Abraham is divinely inspired they admit that it cannot be a literal translation of the papyri as the church has always taught. In one article they state:

The rediscovery of the Joseph Smith Papyri in 1967 has facilitated further research into the origin and nature of the Book of Abraham and has made it possible to reformulate entirely our concepts about the process by which Joseph Smith produced the Book of Abraham. . . .

Lacking the original papyri or any significant amount of information about the materials which stimulated the writing of the Book of Abraham, the members of the Church have always assumed that book to have been a literal translation of a document written by Abraham himself. Now it is possible to supersede this naive view with a deeper understanding of the origins of that book. . . . One of the recently acquired papyri, it seems, is directly related to the Book of Abraham. Critics of the Church have labelled the source from which the book of Abraham was “translated.”

Upon examination of the original papyrus fragments presented to the Church, and others discovered that the Egyptian hieratic characters of the “preface” portion of the Small Sensen Fragment were essentially those contained in the left-hand column of Joseph Smith’s notes concerning the Book of Abraham. These Egyptian words were juxtaposed in the order in which they occur on the papyri to verses from the Book of Abraham. It appears therefore, that Joseph Smith connected the Book of Abraham to the Small Sensen Fragment. This conclusion is supported by the fact pointed out by Dr. Klaus Baer, a well-known Egyptologist, that the Small Sensen Fragment immediately followed and was originally attached to the left side of the papyri bearing “Facsimile 1.” . . .

Our own translation and those of several Egyptologists of the Small Sensen Fragment have demonstrated that this papyrus is part of an Egyptian funerary document. Its relationship to the Book of Abraham must, then, be something other than has long been thought. The possibility of its use as a mnemonic device in connection with an Abrahamic oral tradition was suggested by our further studies. (LDSS Commentary, March 27, 1969)

INTO THE FIRE

On November 13, 1969, the Salt Lake Tribune stated that Stanford University “announced Wednesday it will schedule no new athletic or other competitions with Brigham Young University because of alleged racial discrimination by the Mormon Church.” Obert C. Tanner, professor of philosophy at the University of Utah, called Stanford’s action “easily the sharpest criticism of the Mormon religion in this century” (Salt Lake Tribune, January 7, 1970). After Stanford University made this announcement, it appeared that the Mormon leaders might change the doctrine concerning the Negro. On December 25, 1969, the following appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune:

San Francisco — The Mormon Church’s denial of its priesthood to Negroes of African lineage “will change in the not too distant future,” according to Hugh B. Brown, one of the highest ranking officials of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Lester Kinsolving, religious columnist for the San Francisco Chronicle reported Wednesday.

Pres. Brown, who is first counselor to Pres. David O. McKay, told Mr. Kinsolving that admission of Negroes to the priesthood will come about “in the ordinary evolution of things as we go along, since human rights are basic to the church.”

When asked if he thought that this change would come about during Pres. McKay’s presidency, he replied:

“Well, that’s impossible to predict. He’ll be right now.” . . . Pres. Brown disclosed Wednesday that Willard Wymans [from Stanford University, . . . had contacted him . . . Pres. Brown also disclosed that he had told Wymans that “the church is not prejudiced in any way but this one, but I think that will change.” (Salt Lake Tribune, December 25, 1969)

Shortly after this members of the Mormon Church were surprised to learn that David O. McKay, the ninth President of the Church, held some very liberal views with regard to the Negro. This information came from a letter Sterling McMurrin had written to Llewelyn R. McKay (David O. McKay’s son) in 1968. In this letter Dr. McMurrin stated:

I am writing this letter, with copies to your brothers Lawrence, Edward, and Robert, to tell you of a conversation with your father in the Spring of 1954. . . .

At one point in the conversation I introduced the subject of the common belief among the Church membership that Negroes are under a divine curse. I told him that I regarded this doctrine as both false and morally abhorrent and that some weeks earlier, in a class in my own Ward, I had made it clear that I did not accept the doctrine and that I wanted to be known as a dissenter to the class instructor’s statements about “our beliefs” in this matter.

President McKay replied that he was “glad” that I had taken this stand, as he also did not believe this teaching. He stated his position in the matter very forcefully and clearly and said with considerable feeling that “there is not now, and there never has been, a doctrine in the Church that the Negroes are under a divine curse.” He insisted that there is no doctrine of any kind pertaining to the Negro. “We believe,” he said, “that we have scriptural precedent for with the privilege of the Priesthood and have been denied the privilege of Priesthood and the fullness of the blessings of the Gospel. These are the descendants of Cain. Moreover, they have been made to feel their inferiority and have been separated from the rest of mankind from the beginning . . . we will also hope that blessings may eventually be given to our Negro brethren, for they are our brethren—children of God—notwithstanding their black covering emblematical of eternal darkness. (The Way to Perfection, page 101-102)

Since the Church has run into trouble because of the anti-Negro doctrine, Joseph Fielding Smith has become more guarded in his statements. Notice that in his book, The Way to Perfection, page 101, he plainly stated that Negroes are “an inferior race,” yet when the Church was in serious trouble because of George Romney’s political ambitions, Joseph Fielding Smith stated that the Mormons have never described the Negro as “belonging to an ‘inferior race’”:

“The ignorance on the part of writers who do not belong to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in relation to the view of the ‘Mormons’ on the status religiously or otherwise of the Negro is inexusable. . . .

“The Latter-day Saints, so commonly called ‘Mormons’ have no animosity towards the Negro. Neither have they described him as belonging to an ‘inferior race.’” (Deseret News, Church Section, June 14, 1962, page 3)

Joseph Fielding Smith is the same man who tried to hide the fact that some Negroes were ordained to the Priesthood in the Mormon Church. On June 8, 1960, a woman who was a member of the Mormon Church, wrote a letter to Joseph Fielding Smith asking him if it was true that Negroes had been ordained Elders. The answer she received was postmarked June 10, 1960, and read: “Negroes were not ordained in the early Church.” Three years later, Joseph Fielding Smith was forced to admit that at least one Negro, Elijah Abel, had been ordained. In a letter dated April 10, 1963, Joseph Fielding Smith stated: “. . . this statement that Elijah Abel was so ordained has traveled to the end of the earth.” In the same letter Joseph Fielding Smith stated:

It is true that Elders of the Church laid hands on a Negro and blessed him “apparently” with the Priesthood, but they could not give that which the Lord had denied. It is true that Elijah Abel was so “ordained.”

Wallace Turner gives this information concerning Negroes in the Priesthood:

The continual LDS insistence on racial bigotry has another serious defect, too, since it assumes that the prohibition is equal to all Negroes and always has been. This is untrue. All Mormons who have ever studied the matter know that Elijah Abel, the Nauvoo mortician who was a friend of Joseph Smith, was a priesthood member, even becoming a Seventy. . . .

Jerald and Sandra Tanner, in a short book they call Joseph Smith’s Curse Upon the Negro, assert that Enoch Abel, a son of Elijah, was ordained as an elder in Logan, Utah, and that his son, Elijah, a grandson of the first Elijah
Abel, was ordained a priest in 1934 and an elder in Logan in 1935. About the descendants of the pioneer Negro Mormon, the Tanners write:

“At least forty of these live within a radius of 100 miles of Salt Lake City, and, of course, some of them hold the Priesthood and are doing missionary work for the church.” (The Mormon Establishment, Boston, 1966, pages 241-243)

The Mormon writer Armand L. Mauss stated:

One wonders, for example, why the Lord permitted the ordination of Elijah Abel (and I have even heard it claimed that Church records would show Abel’s sons and grandsons to have been ordained too, although I have never seen any such records or their facsimiles). (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1967, page 24)

In order to verify the fact that Abel’s descendants were ordained we have obtained a photograph from the Record of Members of the Logan Tenth Ward for the years 1927-1943. This photograph proves that Elijah Abel (the grandson of the Negro Elijah Abel) was ordained to the Priesthood. Notice that he was ordained a Priest July 5, 1934, and an Elder September 29, 1935.

The Mormon writer John L. Lund seems willing to admit that Abel’s descendants have been ordained: “It is also apparently true that several other Negroes, including some of Elijah Abel’s descendants, have been ordained to the Priesthood” (The Church and the Negro, 1967, page 78).

NEGOEES IN CHOIR

It is obvious that the situation between Mormons and Negroes is becoming very tense. The following appeared in the Denver Post on November 15, 1969:

The Rev. Roy Flournoy . . . called for reform of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) in what he alleged is a practice of racism against blacks. . . .

The Church of the Black Cross, . . . is called for:

—Boycott of Mormon goods, such as record albums of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

—Discouraging tourist travel to Utah, home state of the church.

—Taxpayer petitions to the government asking that the Mormon church’s tax-exempt status be abolished. . . .

Flournoy added that he believes the average member of the Mormon Church would willingly remove such doctrines from his religion and would welcome outside pressure to do so. . . .

“I believe racism has been forced upon Mormons by its leaders, and isn’t the philosophy of the people,” Flournoy said.

The reader will notice that the Church of the Black Cross is calling for a boycott “of Mormon goods, such as record albums of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.” Shortly after this article appeared the Mormons decided to bring some Negroes into their choir. Wallace Turner states: “recently the Mormon Tabernacle Choir took in two Negro women as second sopranos, and reportedly, is about to welcome a Negro tenor” (New York Times, January 25, 1970).

Almost a month after Wallace Turner published his article in the New York Times, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

Black faces are among the sea of white ones in the 375-voice Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

The two new members of the 122-year-old choir are Negroes Wynetta Martin and Marilyn Yuille. . . . Mrs. Martin . . . and her two daughters, came to Salt Lake City in 1967 “because my stake president in San Diego said that I had a mission to do here, in his words ‘to teach love among all people.’ I sold everything I had and flew to Salt Lake,” she said.

She first applied for membership in the choir after she arrived but her dream wasn’t realized until last month. . . .

Miss Yuille “just happened into the Tabernacle Choir.” . . . she came to Utah last summer and the group’s conductor, Dr. Jay E. Welch, also assistant Tabernacle Choir director, encouraged her to audition . . .

“I thought he was kidding but when he cornered me at a fireside and I discovered he was serious, I decided to audition,” she explained. She auditioned for choir director Richard P. Condie on Dec. 2, and sang at her first performance Dec. 4.” (Salt Lake Tribune, February 21, 1970)

It is interesting to note that Mrs. Martin waited two or three years to get into the choir, whereas Miss Yuille was singing in the choir only two days after her audition. This whole matter looks especially strange when we consider the fact that Miss Yuille was put in the choir less than three weeks after the Denver Post announced that the Church of the Black Cross was calling for a boycott of “Mormon goods, such as record albums of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.”

A reliable source within the Church reveals that the Church is considering taking two more Negroes into the Tabernacle Choir. There is, of course, opposition to this plan within the Church, so it is impossible to say whether this will actually work out.

BYU TROUBLES

The Church-operated Brigham Young University has received a great deal of criticism from those who are seeking equal rights for the Negro. In rebuttal to these charges, Ernest L. Wilkinson, President of BYU, made this statement:

True, there are not many black students on our campus. Just how many there are I do not know . . . .

Their decisions may have been based on their belief that their social life would be curtailed. . . . as far as we know there is not a single Negro family residing in the entire county in which BYU is located, and this we are told by Negroes is an important factor in the decision black students make in not coming to BYU.

You should be informed that we have had Negro athletes. . . . we welcome black athletes at BYU provided they satisfy our entrance requirements and are willing to abide by our standards.

We shall continue to try to bring them to BYU. . . . (Daily Universe, Brigham Young University, December 15, 1969)

While it is true that the BYU has had black athletes, the record for recruiting them has not been very impressive. In fact, the Salt Lake Tribune, November 26, 1969, reported that the “BYU has had no varsity black athletes since the late 1950s when two Negroes were on the track team. No Negroes have ever played on the varsity football or basketball teams, school officials have said.”

Recently the Salt Lake Tribune reported that BYU would have a Negro football player this year. Tom Hudspeth, head football coach at BYU, has made some very revealing statements concerning this matter. He admits that in the past Negro athletes have been discouraged from coming to BYU and that one of the “rules” at BYU is that there be no “inter-racial dating.” The following appeared in the Daily Herald, published at Provo, Utah:

Springville — The protests and demonstrations which are being launched against BYU are just an easy entrance into other problems the Negroes feel they have, Tom Hudspeth, head BYU football coach, told the Springville Chamber of Commerce recently at an early morning breakfast meeting.

“The shame of all this is that these young men are victims of circumstances. . . . The only answer is to stand fast, and we are going to do that. We will not change our policies,” he declared.

Negro Here

Coach Hudspeth pointed out that he has a young Negro man on the campus now, and they feel this is the time to bring him into the athletic program.

“In the past we felt we should discourage the Negroes because we felt they would not be happy in the social situation here. We have certain rules and regulations which we won’t change. They must meet academic standards. We will not allow inter-racial dating. We are only 35 minutes from Salt Lake City where there is a Negro community, and we are setting up appointments and introductions there.” . . . Coach Hudspeth declared that the young Negro man is from a junior college in Oklahoma . . . “We felt we could work out something to relieve a little of the pressure. This is the only way we have changed our policy,” he said. . . .

Coach Hudspeth indicated that “a lot of people are mad at me right now because they feel we are giving in.” (Daily Herald, Provo, Utah, February 16, 1970)
Brigham Young University athletic teams have been met with “a gathering wave of protest” during the last two years. Finally, on February 5, 1970, the BYU basketball team was met with the “most violent demonstration” it had ever encountered. The Salt Lake Tribune reported:

Fort Collins, Colo.— The most violent demonstration yet against Brigham Young University by black students protesting the Provo school’s allegedly racist policies took place here Thursday night.

The real violence, however, erupted at halftime when approximately 100-150 black students shuffled out of the stands and walked out on the court.

The violence occurred as campus police tried to remove the blacks from the floor. . . a photographer . . . was struck on the head with a metal object and was taken to a Fort Collins hospital. . . an object described as a Molotov Cocktail, huge and flaming, was tossed on the court. It was quickly brushed off the floor by an alert attendant. (Salt Lake Tribune, February 6, 1970)

TRUE REVELATION

While the Mormon leaders claim that the Church is led by revelation, many people are beginning to realize that this claim cannot substantiated. To accept their “revelation” concerning the Negro, it is necessary to reject the Spirit of God which works within us. The Lord plainly reveals to us, as he did to Peter many years ago, that “God is no respecter of persons” (Acts 10:34) to accept the anti-Negro doctrine is to deny the spirit of revelation. If we allow others to do our thinking on this vital issue it could lead to violence or bloodshed. Because we felt that it was not right to put our trust in man, we separated ourselves from the Mormon Church. Those who choose to remain in the Church should at least make it clear that they do not support the anti-Negro doctrine. Stewart L. Udall, who served as Secretary of the Interior, has made this statement:

We Mormons cannot escape persistent, painful inquiries into the sources and grounds of this belief. . . This issue must be resolved . . . It must be resolved because we are wrong and it is past the time when we should have seen the right. A failure to act here is sure to demean our faith, damage the minds and morals of our youth, and undermine the integrity of our Christian ethic. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1967, pages 5-6)

We have now completed a book of over 70 pages entitled: Mormons and Negroes. This book contains the information found in our previous work on this subject plus a great deal more. We cover such subjects as: the protest against BYU and the Mormon Church, racism at BYU, dissatisfaction in the Church, the question of a new revelation, President McKay’s statements to Dr. McMurrin, Negroes who have held the Priesthood, the failure of the Nigerian Mission, slavery and civil rights among the Mormons, and many other important subjects. Also included is the complete text of the Apostle Mark E. Petersen’s speech “Race Problems—As They Affect The Church.” The prices on this book are: $2.00 each — 2 for $3.50 — 5 for $7.00 — 10 for $12.00.

Help Send Food

In the February 1970 issue of the newsletter published by the World-Wide Missions we find the following:

“My food tastes bitter in my mouth. Every bite I take brings pictures of the horror of my own people in Biafra,” said Dr. Njaka who had just returned from Biafra, his native land. “Here in America we throw away enough every day to keep Biafra from starving.”

He had come to my office begging for supplies for his people. World-Wide Missions had on hand several tons for shipment and we prayed and discussed what to do about it. He said:

“We need money to ship all of these supplies to my native land. I can get them in. Will you ask your people to help supply the funds for shipment?”

My friend, now as multiplied thousands are starving in Biafra, I ask you, “Will you send a gift to ship the supplies we have on hand?”

All gifts to World-Wide Missions are tax-deductible. Donations should be sent to the following address:

CONQUERING PREJUDICE

While the Mormons have not retaliated against the demonstrators, there are extremists on both sides, and this could lead to bloodshed. Perhaps we could all learn a lesson from a Negro who became a Christian. Tom Skinner grew up in Harlem and became the leader of “the Harlem Lords”—a gang of over 100 young men. He had “led the fellows in more than fifteen large scale gang fights.” In his book, Black and Free, he states:

Just as the racist convinces himself that his racial prejudice is really good for both races, I had gotten to the place where I could take a bottle, bash it across a fellow’s head and be undisturbed about it. I could take that same bottle, break it in half, and shove the glass in the man’s face and twist it without even batting my eye.

By the time I left the gang I had twenty-two notches on the handle of my knife which meant that my blade had gone into twenty-two different fellows. (Black and Free, Michigan, 1969, pages 40-41)

One night Tom Skinner was “preparing strategy for a gang fight.” This was to be “the largest gang rumble ever to take place in the city of New York.” Five gangs “were going to unite together to fight a coalition of gangs from the other side of the city.” Over “3,000 fellows” were to be involved in this fight. While planning this gang war, Tom Skinner was listening to a rock and roll program on the radio. At nine o’clock that night an “unscheduled gospel program came on.” Mr. Skinner states:

I tried to turn to another station, but somehow I found myself compelled to listen to this uncouth preacher.

I went on mapping out the strategy that I planned, trying to ignore what the preacher was saying. Yet, what he was saying got through to me.

This uncouth, uneducated preacher spoke from II Corinthians, chapter 5, verse 17, a passage which says, “Wherefore, if any man be in Christ he is a new creature. Old things are passed away and behold all things are become new.”

That night Tom Skinner decided to leave the gang and become a Christian. On pages 68-69 of his book, Black and Free, Mr. Skinner gives this interesting information:

If I had not been reached by Jesus Christ I would either be dead, in prison, or graduated to a higher form of hoodlumism. . . Jesus Christ is alive in me. My life has new meaning and purpose because of Him.

The tremendous work that the Spirit of God had done in my life in transforming me soon became evident to me. He took the bigotry, hate and violence out of my life. I had reached the place where I hated white people and blamed them for all the atrocities, immorality and social injustices that were brought against the Negro. Now that hate was gone.

In a football game several weeks later, my new-found Christian love met another test. . . I pulled out and blocked the defensive end, knocking him out of play. . . . The kid that I happened to block got up and was furious. He jumped in front of me and slammed me in the stomach. As I bent over from the blow he hacked me across the back. I hit the ground as he kicked me shouting, “You dirty black nigger! I’ll teach you a thing or two!”

Under normal circumstances the old Tom Skinner would have jumped up and pulverized this white boy. But instead, I got up from the ground and found myself looking this fellow in the face. A smile broke across my face and I said to him, “You know, because of Jesus Christ, I love you anyway.” . . . I was a new person! Here was Tom Skinner who, six weeks before, would have tried to kill this white bigot, bashed him. Now I was able to look into the face I normally would have smashed, and tell him that I loved him in Christ.

The kid threw his helmet down to the ground, ran off the field, and couldn’t play for the rest of the game. When the game was over he met me in the locker room and said to me, “Tom, you’ve done more to knock prejudice out of me by telling me that you loved me than you would have if you’d socked my jaw in.”

I became convinced that the only answer to the prejudice, the bigotry, and the hate that exists in our world today is that people allow the love of God through the Person of Jesus Christ to be expressed through them.

Karl Menninger, a noted psychiatrist, once stated that “love is the medicine for the sickness of the world,” and Jesus himself stated: “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another” (John 13:35).

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, pages 31-42, we show that the early Mormon leaders taught the doctrine of “Blood Atonement.” The Church’s own newspaper, the Deseret News, quoted Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church as saying:

> Now take a person in this congregation . . . and suppose that he is overtaken in a gross fault, that he has committed a sin that he knows will deprive him of that exaltation which he desires, and that he cannot attain to it without the shedding of his blood, and also knows that by having his blood shed he will atone for that sin, and be saved and exalted with the Gods, is there a man or woman in this house but what would say, “shed my blood that I may be saved and exalted with the Gods?”

> All mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves, even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brother or sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of their blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood?

> I could refer you to plenty of instances where men have been righteously slain, in order to atone for their sins. I have seen scores and hundreds of people for whom there would have been a chance (in the last resurrection there will be) if their lives had been taken and their blood spilled on the ground as a smoking incense to the Almighty, but who are now angels to the devil . . . I have known a great many men who left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them . . .

> This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it . . . that is the way to love mankind.

>Sermon by Brigham Young, delivered in the Mormon Tabernacle, February 8, 1857, printed in the Deseret News, February 18, 1857)

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, we list ten offenses for which a person might have been put to death by the early Mormon leaders. They are: murder, adultery or immorality, stealing, using the name of the Lord in vain, refusing to receive the gospel, marrying an African, covenant breaking, apostasy, lying and counterfeiting.

Joseph Fielding Smith, who recently became the tenth President of the Mormon Church, made this statement concerning the doctrine of Blood Atonement:

> Joseph Smith taught that there were certain sins so grievous that man may commit, that they will place the transgressors beyond the power of the atonement of Christ. If these offenses are committed, then the blood of Christ will not cleanse them from their sins even though they repent. Therefore their only hope is to have their own blood shed to atone, as far as possible, in their behalf. (Doctrine of Salvation, vol. 1 page 135)

> Although Joseph Fielding Smith admits that Joseph Smith taught “Blood Atonement,” he is willing to admit that the Mormon people never actually practiced it:

> But that the Church practices “Blood Atonement” on apostates or any others, which is preached by ministers of the “Reorganization” is a damnable falsehood for which the accusers must answer . . .

> Did you not know that not a single individual was ever “blood atoned,” as you are pleased to call it, for apostasy or any other cause? (Ibid., pages 136-137)

> In volume 2 of The Mormon Kingdom we plan to show that Joseph Fielding Smith’s statement is far from the truth. We feel that we can document the fact that well over 100 people lost their lives because of the Mormon doctrine of “Blood Atonement” and the idea that those who opposed the Church should be put to death.

> One case of “Blood Atonement” was reported by Sarah S. Leavitt in her record book:

> The first person I spoke to after I entered Salt Lake was Dr. Vaun. He came running out of a house and appeared much pleased to see me. He said, “Well, Mrs. Leavitt, I have joined the church.” Of course, I was glad and was in hopes he had repented of his sins and would forsake them. But in this I was disappointed, for he sought the women’s company and with the help of love powders succeeded in gratifying his hellish desires. He was called up before the authorities more than once and confessed his sins and asked forgiveness. He was forgiven and he said if he was ever found guilty again his life should be the penalty. He knew the law of God required it. He was guilty again and was shot and killed. Oh, the weakness and depravity of man, to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage, or in other words, sell their souls’ salvation for a few moments of carnal pleasure. (Sarah S. Leavitt Journal, page 41)

This was probably the same case which Hosea Stout recorded in his journal on February 15, 1851:

> They bring news that M.D. Hambleton on last Sunday killed Dr. J. M. Vaughan for similar conduct with Mrs. H. as took place with Dr & Foots wife last summer. (On the Mormon Frontier; The Diary of Hosea Stout, edited by Juanita Brooks, vol. 2, pages 393)

Gustive O. Larson, Professor of Church History at Brigham Young University, admits that “Blood Atonement” was actually practiced by the Mormons:

> To whatever extent the preaching on blood atonement may have influenced action, it would have been in relation to Mormon disciplinary action among its own members. In point would be a verbally reported case of a Mr. Johnson in Cedar City who was found guilty of adultery with his stepdaughter by a Bishop’s Court and sentenced to death for atonement of his sin. According to the report of reputable eye witnesses, judgement was executed with consent of the offender who went to his unseconsecrated grave in full confidence of salvation through the shedding of blood. Such a case, however primitive, is understandable within the meaning of the doctrine and the emotional extremes of the Reformation. (Utah Historical Quarterly, January, 1958, page 62, footnote 39)

Recently the journals of Abraham H. Cannon came to light. These journals—now located in the Special Collections Department of the Brigham Young University Library—contain some very revealing information regarding the doctrine of Blood Atonement. Under the date of December 6, 1889, the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon (son of George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency) recorded the following in his journal:

> About 4:30 p.m. this meeting adjourned and was followed by a meeting of Presidents Woodruff, Cannon and Smith and Bros. Lyman and Grant . . . In speaking of the recent examination before Judge Anderson Father said that he understood when he had his endowments in Nauvoo that he took an oath against the murderers of the Prophet Joseph as well as other prophets, and if he had ever met any of those who had taken a hand in that massacre he would undoubtedly have attempted to avenge the blood of the Martyrs. The Prophet charged Stephen Markham to avenge his blood should he be slain; after the Prophet's death Bro. Markham attempted to tell this to an assembly of the Saints, but Willard Richards pulled him down from the stand, as he feared the effect on the enraged people.—Bro. Joseph F. Smith was traveling some years ago near Carthage when he met a man who said he had just arrived five minutes too late to see the Smiths killed. Instantly a dark cloud seemed to overshadow Bro. Smith and he asked how this man looked upon the deed. Bro. S. was oppressed by a most horrible feeling as he waited for a reply. After a brief pause the man answered, “just as I have always looked up on it—that it was a d_d cold-blooded murder.” The cloud immediately lifted from Bro. Smith and he found that he had his open pocket knife grasped in his hand in his pocket, and he believes that had this man given his approval to that murder of the prophets he would have immediately struck him to the heart. ("Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon," December 6, 1889, pages 205-206)

Photographs of the journals of Abraham H. Cannon were made before they were taken to the Brigham Young University Library. We have been offered photographs from three different sources, and therefore we are able to provide photocopies of four important pages—i.e., the pages cited above and two pages concerning the Adam-God doctrine—from these journals freely upon request.

The statement cited above from the journal of the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon tends to verify our work in The Mormon Kingdom concerning the doctrine of Blood Atonement. On pages 131-137 of vol. 1, we demonstrated that the early Mormons had an “Oath of Vengeance” in their Temple ceremony in which they pledged themselves to avenge Joseph Smith’s blood. This is verified in the quotation above by the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, when he states that his father (George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency) admitted that when “he had his endowments in Nauvoo that he took an oath against the murderers of the Prophet Joseph as well as other prophets, and if he had ever met any of those who had taken a hand in that massacre he would undoubtedly have attempted to avenge the blood of the martyrs.”

The statement that Joseph F. Smith was about to murder a man with his “pocket knife” if he expressed approval of Joseph Smith’s death reveals the intense hatred which the early Mormon leaders felt toward their enemies. Joseph F. Smith later became the sixth President of the Mormon Church, and his son Joseph Fielding Smith recently became the tenth President of the Mormon Church.

Statements like the ones quoted above led to the death of many people in Utah. We will have a great deal more to say about this subject in our work, *The Mormon Kingdom. ■

A DELAY

Although we have spent a great deal of time doing research on our books, The Case Against Mormonism and The Mormon Kingdom, we did not have any pages ready to mail out with this issue of the Messenger. We hope, however, to finish both these volumes in the near future. So far we have completed 62 pages of The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, and 32 pages of The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2.

Is Adam Christ’s Father?

Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, once stated: “Now, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 51). This statement is in conflict with both the Bible and the Book of Mormon (see Matthew 1:18-20; Book of Mormon, Alma 7:10). In spite of the teachings of the Bible and the Book of Mormon, Joseph Fielding Smith, who recently became President of the Church, has denied that Christ was begotten by the Holy Ghost: “They tell us the Book of Mormon states that Jesus was begotten of the Holy Ghost. I challenge that statement. The Book of Mormon teaches no such thing! Neither does the Bible” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 1, page 19).

Since Mormon theology teaches that God himself is a man instead of a spirit and is the literal father of Christ, the birth of Christ is considered a natural, rather than miraculous, occurrence. The Mormon writer Carlford B. Broderick made these comments:

There are two basic elements in the Gospel view of sexuality as I interpret it from the scriptures. The first is that sex is good—that sexuality, far from being the antithesis of spirituality, is actually an attribute of God. . . . In the light of their understanding that God is a procreating personage of flesh and bone, latter-day prophets have made it clear that despite what it says in Matthew 1:20, the Holy Ghost was not the father of Jesus. . . . The Savior was fathered by a personage of flesh and bone, and was literally what Nephi said he was, “son of the Eternal Father.” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1967, pages 100-101)

Brigham Young had this to say concerning the birth of Christ:

The man Joseph, the husband of Mary, did not, that we know of, have more than one wife, but Mary the wife of Joseph had another husband. (Deseret News, October 10, 1866)

The Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt stated:

The fleshly body if Jesus required a Mother as well as a Father. Therefore, the Father and Mother of Jesus, according to the flesh, must have been associated together in the capacity of husband and wife: hence the Virgin Mary must have been, for the time being, the lawful wife of God the Father: we use the term lawful Wife, because it would be blasphemous in the highest degree to say that He overshadowed her or begat the Savior unlawfully. It would have been unlawful for any man to have interfered with Mary, who was already espoused to Joseph; for such a heinous crime would have subjected both the guilty parties to death, according to the law of Moses. But God having created all men and women, had the most perfect right to do with His own creation, according to His holy will and pleasure: He had a lawful right to overshadow the Virgin Mary in the capacity of a husband, and beget a Son, although she was espoused to another; for the law which he gave to govern men and women was not intended to govern Himself, or to prescribe rules for his own conduct. It was also lawful in Him, after having thus dealt with Mary, to give her to Joseph her espoused husband. Whether God the Father gave Mary to Joseph for time only, or for time and eternity, we are not informed. Inasmuch as God was the first husband to her, it may be that He only gave her to be the wife of Joseph while in this mortal state, and that He intended after the resurrection to again take her as one of his own wives to raise up immortal spirits in eternity. (The Seer, page 158)

On April 9, 1852, Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, went so far as to declare that Adam “is our Father and our God” and that he is the Father of Jesus:

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the Arch-angel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken—he is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later . . . When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family: . . . Jesus, our elder brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character that was in the garden.
of Eden, and who is our Father in Heaven . . . Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. I will repeat a little anecdote. I was in conversation with a certain learned professor upon this subject, when I replied, to this idea—"if the Son was begotten by the Holy Ghost, it would be very dangerous to baptize and confirm females, and give the Holy Ghost to them, lest he should beget children, to be palmed upon the Elders by the people, bringing the Elders into great difficulties." (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pages 50-51)

Although this doctrine is no longer taught by the Mormon leaders, there is a great deal of evidence to show that it was taught and accepted for many years. For instance, on Wednesday, February 7, 1877, L. John Nuttall recorded in his journal that Brigham Young taught in the Temple that Jesus was the son of Adam:

Wed. 7 at Temple. I officiated as Recorder at the font—. . . Prest Young was filled with the spirit of God & revelation & said, . . . Adam was an immortal being when he came on this earth . . . and had begotten all the spirit that was to come to this earth and Eve our common Mother who is the mother of all living bore those spirits in the celestial world . . .

Father Adam’s oldest son (Jesus the Savior) who is the heir of the family is Father Adam’s first begotten in the spirit world, who according to the flesh is the only begotten as it is written. (In his divinity he having gone back into the spirit world, and come in the spirit to Mary and she conceived . . .) ("Journal of L. John Nuttall," vol. 1, pages 18-21, taken from a typed copy at the Brigham Young University).

As late as 1888 George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency, was teaching that Adam was the father of Jesus. His son recorded the following in his journal on March 10, 1888:

As we drove home Father told me that all his success in life was due to his zeal for the work of God . . . He asked me what I understood concerning Mary conceiving the Savior; and as I found no answer, he asked what was to prevent Father Adam from visiting and overshadowing the mother of Jesus. “Then,” said I, “he must have been a resurrected Being.” “Yes,” said he, “and though Christ is said to have been the first fruits of them that slept, yet the Savior said he did nothing but what He had seen His Father do, for He had power to lay down His life and take it up again. Adam, though made of dust, was made, as Pres. Young said, of the dust of another planet than this.”—I was very much instructed by the conversation and this days services. ("Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon," vol. 10, page 178, original located at Brigham Young University, Special Collections)

On June 23, 1889, Abraham H. Cannon recorded this statement in his journal:

Father proved to my entire satisfaction this morning by passages from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that all men, even the sons of perdition, will be resurrected and stand before God to be judged. He believes that Jesus Christ is Jehovah, and that Adam is his Father and our God; that under certain unknown conditions the benefits of the Savior’s atonement extend to our entire solar system. ("Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon," June 23, 1889, page 39)

Even before the turn of the century the Mormon leaders seemed to be ashamed of the Adam-God doctrine. On November 28, 1898, George Q. Cannon stated:

I was stopped yesterday afternoon by a young man, who wanted to know whether Adam was the Father of our Lord and Savior—whether he was the being we worshipped, etc. . . . Concerning the doctrine in regard to Adam and the Savior, the Prophet Brigham Young taught some things concerning that; but the First Presidency and the twelve do not think it wise to advocate these matters. (Proceedings of the First Sunday School Convention of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, 1899, as quoted in “The Position of Adam in Latter-day Saint Scriptures and Theology,” Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, August, 1953, pages 69-70)

In our book, The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, we plan to devote a chapter to the Adam-God doctrine and one to the virgin birth in Mormon theology.

“...Our lives constantly manifest what we truly think about God!”

“...Forfeiting the Game”?...

In an article published in the New York Times, May 3, 1970, Wallace Turner wrote:

SAN FRANCISCO, May 2 — The “Book of Abraham,” which provides the theological basis for the Utah Mormon churches excluding Negroes from its priesthood, has been described as “simply the product of Joseph Smith Jr.’s imagination” by a leading scholar in a branch of the church Mr. Smith founded.

It was the Book of Abraham that Mr. Smith produced as a translation of papyri he acquired along with four Egyptian mummies in 1835.

The papyri were thought to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871. But, reasoning from crude copies, Egyptologists have argued for decades that the papyri did not say what Joseph Smith said they said, and were instead quite ordinary burial papers of the sort found with mummies.

Three years ago the original papyri from which Joseph Smith worked to produce the Book of Abraham were found in the Metropolitan Museum in New York . . .

The growing social impact of Negro resentment of the Utah Mormons’ exclusion of them from full participation in the church has served to focus further attention on the credibility of the Book of Abraham. This is because there is a story among its thousands of words that is cited as the reason for prohibiting Negroes from entering the priesthood orders.

Black athletes at the University of Wyoming have refused to play against teams from Brigham Young University, the Utah Mormon school. Stanford University has served notice of intention to sever athletic relationships with the school . . .

Mr. Howard pointed out that the publication in 1966 by Modern Microfilm Company of Salt Lake City of Joseph Smith Jr.’s original “Egyptian alphabet and grammar” allowed scholars to discover how the prophet worked in producing the Book of Abraham.

Mr. Howard cited the work of Dee Jay Nelson, an older in the Utah Mormon Church and a philologist with 20 years’ experience in Egyptology. Mr. Nelson took two words from the papyrus fragment and showed their translation properly to be “offspring of” or “born of.”

Joseph Smith Jr. produced a 132-word passage in the Book of Abraham and attributed it to those words, Mr. Howard wrote. He also suggested that the Prophet Joseph used the “curse of Ham” argument against Negroes as a means of reconciling differences that arose among his followers when Elijah Abel, a Negro, was ordained into the priesthood March 3, 1836, . . .

“Whatever the intent of Joseph Smith in expounding this view of the Negro,” Mr. Howard wrote, “it is clear that the ancient papyri from Egypt contained no such information.”

Mr. Howard wrote that “it may be helpful to suggest that the ‘Book of Abraham’ represents simply the product of Joseph Smith Jr.’s imagination, wrought out in the midst of what to him must have been a very crucial and demanding complex set of circumstances.” (New York Times, May 3, 1970)

For many years the Salt Lake Tribune refused to take articles critical of the Mormon Church. Times are changing, however, for the article quoted above was printed in the Salt Lake Tribune on May 4, 1970. While the part concerning the Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson was not included, the Salt Lake Tribune contains some additional material concerning the Book of Abraham. In an article entitled “LDS Affirm ‘Abraham’” we find the following:

The First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints accepts the “Book of Abraham” as “scripture given to us through the Prophet (Joseph Smith),” President N. Eldon Tanner said Sunday night.

President Tanner, second counselor in the church’s First Presidency, made the statement in response to an article saying the translation of the “Book of Abraham” was the product of Joseph Smith Jr.’s “imagination.”
The article appears in a publication of the Reorganized Church . . .

Author of the article is Richard P. Howard, historian for the RLDS. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 4, 1970)

Joseph Smith clearly stated that he “translated” the Book of Abraham from the papyrus, but since Egyptologists have proven that the papyrus is in reality an Egyptian funerary text known as the “Book of Breathings,” Mormon apologists are faced with a serious problem. James R. Harris, of Brigham Young University, now suggests that Joseph Smith received the Book of Abraham by revelation before he obtained the papyrus and that the papyrus was “defective” and “unnecessary” to the production of the Book of Abraham. In an article published in Brigham Young University Studies he made these revealing statement:

A possibility that the text of the Book of Abraham may have been defective and therefore both inadequate and unnecessary to the production of a revealed translation is explored and proposed by Todd (pages 289, 325).

We may have observed additional support for this theory about a month before Todd went to press. The second article in a series on The Three Witnesses was published by Richard L. Anderson. In a quote from a patriarchal blessing recorded in 1833, December 13, (Patriarchal Blessing Book, No. 1, pages 8-9) Oliver Cowdery (recorder) added this comment:

But before baptism our souls were drawn out in mighty prayer . . . and we diligently sought for the right of the fathers, and the authority of the Holy Priesthood, and the power to administer in the same; for we desired to be followers of righteousness and the possessors of greater knowledge, even the knowledge of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God. (See also The Improvement Era, September 1968, page 20) . . .

Comparing this quote with Abraham 1:2 would support the theory that a papyrus text in the hands of the prophet was not essential to production of the translation:

I sought for the blessings of the father, and the right where unto I should be ordained to administer the same; having been myself a follower of righteousness, desiring also to be one who possessed great knowledge, and to be a greater follower of righteousness and to possess a greater knowledge . . .

The near identical wording of these passages would indicate that some of the text of the Book of Abraham was revealed and recorded before the Abraham Papyri came into the possession of Joseph Smith. (Brigham Young University Studies, Autumn 1969, pages 126-127)

James R. Harris, Assistant Professor of Religious Education at Brigham Young University, has apparently uncovered the source for some of the text of the Book of Abraham, but he does not seem to realize the serious implications of this important discovery. From Dr. Harris’ comments it would appear that he is willing to accept the idea that the Book of Abraham did not come from the papyrus. He would apparently have us believe that at least some of the text of the Book of Abraham was revealed to Joseph Smith before December 13, 1833, and that Oliver Cowdery borrowed his statements from there. While this would explain the “near identical wording,” it is not facing the reality of Joseph Smith’s statements that the Book of Abraham came from the papyrus.

A much more logical explanation is that Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham is work of his own imagination and that he derived his ideas from Oliver Cowdery and several other sources.

In an article published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1969, page 93, Lester Bush states that “the parallels between Mormon Scripture and the contemporary pro-slavery arguments are striking.” He goes on to point out that even before Joseph Smith received the papyri, W. W. Phelps had published an article which contains ideas similar to the Book of Abraham. This article was published in the Messenger and Advocate in March, 1835, and according to the History of the Church, Joseph Smith did not receive the papyri until July of the same year. In this article we find the following:

Is or is it not apparent from reason and analogy as drawn from a careful reading of the Scriptures, that God causes the saints, or people that fall away from his church to be cursed in time, with a black skin? Was or was not Cain, being marked, obliged to inherit the curse, he and his children, forever? And if so, as Ham, like other sons of God, might break the rule of God, by marrying out of the church, did or did he not, have a Canaanite wife, whereby some of the black seed was preserved through the flood, and his son, Canaan, after he laughed at his grandfather’s nakedness, heireid three curses; one from Cain for killing Abel; one from Ham for marrying a black wife, and one from Noah for ridiculing what God had respect for? Are or are not the Indians a sample of marking with blackness for rebellion against God’s holy word and holy order? And can or can we not observe in the countenances of almost all nations, except the Gentile, a dark, sallow hue, which tells the sons of God, without a line of history, that they have fallen or changed from the original beauty and grace of father Adam? (Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, page 82)

In his Book of Abraham, Joseph Smith seemed to follow the same argument used by Phelps—i.e., that Ham married a Canaanite woman and thus “the curse” was “preserved” in the land:

Now this king of Egypt was a descendant from the loins of Ham, and was a partaker of the blood of the Canaanites by birth.

From this descent sprang all the Egyptians, and thus the blood of the Canaanites was preserved in the land.

The land of Egypt being first discovered by a woman, who was the daughter of Ham, and the daughter of Egyptians, which in the Chaldean signifies Egypt, which signifies that which is forbidden.

When this woman discovered the land it was under water, who afterward settled her sons in it; and thus, from Ham, sprang that race which preserved the curse in the land. (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham, 1:21-24)

Mormon leaders use these verses to try to prove that the Negroes were cursed and therefore cannot hold the Priesthood. John Taylor, the third President of the Mormon Church, made this statement:

And after the flood we are told that the curse that had been pronounced upon Cain was continued through Ham’s wife, as he had married a wife of that seed. And why did it pass through the flood? Because it was necessary that the Devil should have a representation upon the earth as well as God; . . . (Journal of Discourses, vol. 22, page 364)

That Joseph Smith may have borrowed ideas from W. W. Phelps or Oliver Cowdery is not too surprising, for both these men were good writers, and worked with him on the papyri. In Joseph Smith’s History we read the following under the date of July 5, 1835: “ . . . with W. W. Phelps and Oliver Cowdery as scribes, I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236).

JOSEPHUS

It is very possible that the writings of the Jewish historian Josephus had some influence on the Book of Abraham 1:23 we read of “the daughter of Egyptus, . . .” This name is not found in the Bible, but in “Flavius Josephus Against Apion,” we read: “ . . . Manetho says that Sethosis himself was called Egyptus, . . .” (Josephus, translated by William Whiston, Michigan, 1966, page 612).

According to the Book of Abraham, the Lord revealed the principles of astronomy to Abraham before he went into Egypt. In Abraham 3:15 we read: “And the Lord said unto me: Abraham, I show these things unto thee before ye go into Egypt, that ye may declare all these words.” At the bottom of the explanation to Facsimile No. 3 in the Book of Abraham we find this statement: “Abraham is reasoning upon the principles of astronomy, in the King’s court.” While the Bible does not even use the word “astronomy,” Josephus claimed that Abraham taught the Egyptians “the science of astronomy”: . . . Abram conferred with each of them, . . . He communicated to them arithmetic, and delivered to them the science of astronomy: . . . (Josephus, page 33)

The Mormon leaders must have been familiar with Josephus at the time the Book of Abraham was written, for in a letter, dated December 22, 1835, Oliver Cowdery stated: “ . . . Josephus says that the descendants of Seth were virtuous, and possessed a great knowledge of the heavenly bodies . . . (Messenger and Advocate, vol. 2, page 236)

In The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, we will deal with this matter at greater length and show other sources from which the Book of Abraham was probably derived.
FILIBUSTER ENDS

When the papyri were given to the Mormon Church by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Dr. Hugh Nibley, of Brigham Young University, was assigned by the Church leaders to give a report to his people. He began a series of articles for the Improvement Era in January, 1968. This series ran for over two years, and was finally brought to a conclusion with the issue published May, 1970. Dr. Nibley was supposed to unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics” in this series of articles. In our last Messenger we stated: “There is good reason to believe that Dr. Nibley will never publish a translation of the papyrus, for in an article he wrote in 1968, he stated: ‘... it is doubtful whether any translation could do as much good as harm’ (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1968, page 251).” This prediction seems to be proving true, for Dr. Nibley has completed his series of articles and no translation has appeared. It would appear that Dr. Nibley’s main objective was to blind the eyes of his fellow Church members so that they could not see the real issues involved in this matter. Although he used almost 2,000 footnotes, he never did deal with the main problem. In the issue for August, 1969, Dr. Nibley made this fantastic statement:

From here on the reader might as well know that this writer intends to show that the Book of the Dead fragments, the Breathing Papyrus, and the three facsimiles, that is, all the available Egyptian materials that were once in the possession of Joseph Smith, contain the elements of a single story, which happens to be the story of Abraham as told in the Book of Abraham and the early Jewish legends. (Improvement Era, August 1969, page 75)

Dr. Nibley’s concluding article makes it clear that he was unable to demonstrate any relationship between the papyri and the Book of Abraham. Nevertheless, he encourages members of the Mormon Church to go on stalling lest they be accused of “forfeiting the game”:

Since the basic charges against Joseph Smith emerging from the study of the newly found papyri have not been discussed in the pages of the Era, it may be well to review them briefly here. Two documents of the Joseph Smith Papyri were identified and translated in 1967/8, the one comprising sections from the Book of the Dead, the other being the much rarer but still unknown “Sen-

sen” Papyrus or “Book of Breathings.” Neither of these texts contained the same reading matter as the Book of Abraham, but who said they should?... What supports the idea that the Book of Abraham was thought by Joseph Smith to be a translation of the Breathing Certificate? Two things: first, that the “Breathing text” was originally adjoined to Facsimile 1 on the same strip of papyrus, and second that the symbols from the “Breathing text” are interpreted bit by bit in a writing known as “the Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar” in which the interpretation turns out to be the same as the text of the English Book of Abraham. No slightest knowledge of Egyptian is necessary to convince anybody that when a symbol as brief as CAT is “translated” by an involved paragraph of over one hundred words, we are not dealing with a “translation” in any accepted sense of the word. The “Alphabet and Grammar” was never given out as an official or inspired document, was never meant for publication, never placed before the Church for approval, never discussed for the record, never explained to the world as the facsimiles were. 1968 priority went to the newly found papyri, which had never been translated and about which many people were understandably curious and impatient. But when it soon became apparent that those documents did not contain any of the text of the Book of Abraham as we have it, it was time for the Egyptologists, having done their work and done it well, either to bow out of the scene or to go on to the more important and essential problems of the facsimiles. It is only the last step that counts, as the French say, and so far nobody has taken it. The hopes for a quick decision with the finding of the Joseph Smith Papyri were blasted when it became apparent on the one hand that those documents do not contain the Book of Abraham, and on the other that the connection between the so-called Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar and the Book of Abraham is anything but clear. The work has hardly begun, but people still seek the safe and easy solution of authority and ask with impatience, “Can’t you spare us all that speculation and surmising and comparing and illustrating and simply give us the results?” The anti-Mormons have been only too glad to do just that, but we must never let them make us forget that proof is a process, not an answer, and that there is no such thing as total knowledge.

Many Latter-day Saints have not been too happy with the Joseph Smith Papyri, which instead of giving them all the answers only set them to work on a lot of problems with which none of this generation is prepared to deal. But it was the Mormons who started this game, and it is their responsibility to keep it going. They can never again leave the field without forfeiting the game. The bringing forth of the papyrus fragments in 1967 was a reminder to the Saints that they are still expected to do their homework and may claim... no special revelation or convenient handout solutions as long as they ignore the vast treasure-house of materials that God has placed within their reach.

So far we have only taken a preliminary view of a few problems raised by Facsimile No. 1, and hardly even mentioned Facsimiles 2 and 3. . . . We have dealt entirely in possibilities, never in certitudes, possibilities being all we need to keep the door open. . . . As long as a single aspect of any problem raised by the Book of Abraham remains unexamined, as long as there is the remotest possibility that any slight detail of any significance may have been overlooked, as long as a single possible relevant text remains unread, we must hold our final word in abeyance. . . .

Who, then, is to decide these weighty matters? That is just the point: Is it necessary to decide here and now? The Mormons have always hesitated and asked for time, waiting (though rarely seeking) for further light and knowledge. Significantly, it has always been the Egyptians, usually the very soul of caution, who have insisted on a once-for-all, here-and-now, before-we-leave-the-room decision and have been desperately determined not to prolong the discussion. That is still their policy, and it forces us to return upon their own heads the routine question that the world would confound the demolish us: You scholars have spoken; why don’t you do the honest thing and admit that you don’t know a blessed thing about the facsimiles, that you haven’t made even a superficial study of them. . . . Why not admit that the relationship between the “Alphabet and Grammar” and the Book of Abraham is an enigma, full of odd contradictions and unexplained anomalies? Why not admit that you are not privy to the mind of Joseph Smith? That the test of the Book of Abraham lies in what it says, not in the manner in which it may have been composed, and that a thorough test of its contents would require a scope of research that no scholar today has any intention of undertaking, a scope of knowledge that few if any scholars today possess? . . .

Until now, no one has done much more than play around with the bedizenizing treasury of the Pearl of Great Price. “They” would not, we could not make of the Book of Abraham an object of serious study. The time has come to change all that. (Improvement Era, May, 1970, pages 82, 83, 93 and 94)

While the evidence clearly shows that the Book of Abraham is a product of Joseph Smith’s imagination, Dr. Nibley would have his people continue to stall and evade the main issue. The Mormon leaders can continue to ignore the evidence against the Book of Abraham and the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages, but such a course may very well lead to violence and bloodshed. In the last Messenger we point out that the Church-operated Brigham Young University has received a great deal of criticism from those who are seeking equal rights for the Negro. We also showed that Brigham Young University athletic teams have been met with “a gathering wave of protest” during the last two years. There is every reason to believe that this situation will get worse.

The Deseret News for April, 4, 1970, contained these statements:

Harry Edwards, the man most responsible for mounting discontent against Brigham Young University athletic teams, vowed in Salt Lake City Friday that “Things will get worse unless Mormon (Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints) doctrine is changed.”

A change of doctrine which forbids Blacks to hold the priesthood and places them in an inferior human role, is the only action by Mormon authorities which will prevent escalation of activity against BYU, and I think I could go on national television and have it stopped.”

Referring to members of the press, Edwards said: “If things don’t get better by next fall, those who travel with BYU should invest in hard hats and asbestos suits.” (Deseret News, April 4, 1970)

The Salt Lake Tribune carried these statements in an article printed the same day:

Mr. Edwards spoke briefly in criticism of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its doctrine of barring Negroes from the priesthood . . . The structure of the church “is crumbling” from within by the hierarchy’s action, he said.

If the church is destroyed, it will not be from the blacks . . . but by the fact that the 20th Century has caught up with the state of Utah,” Mr. Edwards said. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 4, 1970)

From the information we have presented it is plain to see that if the Mormon leaders continue to ignore these problems the consequence could be disastrous.
MORMON SCRIPTURES AND THE BIBLE

Milton R. Hunter, of the First Council of the Seventy in the Mormon Church, recently was quoted as saying the following:

The Prophet Joseph Smith produced for the world three new volumes of holy scriptures, namely the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price, and, in addition, he revised the Bible. No prophet who has ever lived has accomplished such a tremendous feat. There are only 177 pages in the Old Testament attributed to Moses, while Joseph Smith either translated through the gift and power of God or received as direct revelation from Jehovah 835. (Deseret News, Church Section, July 18, 1970, page 14)

The Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt once made this statement:

This generation have more that one thousand times the amount of evidence to demonstrate and forever establish the Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon than they have in favor of the Bible! (Orson Pratt’s Works, “Evidences of the Book of Mormon and Bible Compared,” 1851, page 64)

We have recently completed a new book entitled Mormon Scriptures and the Bible. In this book we have compared the evidence for the Bible with that for Mormon scriptures. This evidence clearly shows that Mormon writers are being very unrealistic when they make statements such as those quoted from the writings of Orson Pratt and Milton R. Hunter.

The Apostle Pratt’s statement that there is “more than one thousand times” the amount of evidence to prove the Book of Mormon than to prove the Bible is certainly a misrepresentation. In our Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, we show that the only evidence for the Book of Mormon is the testimony of the witnesses and that this testimony can not be relied upon. Many Mormons have claimed that the Book of Mormon is supported by archaeological evidence, but a careful examination reveals that there is no evidence that the Nephites—i.e., the people mentioned in the Book of Mormon—ever really existed. In fact, Dr. Hugh Nibley, who is supposed to be the Church’s greatest scholar, admits that there is no definite archaeological evidence to support the story found in the Book of Mormon:

Of course, almost any object could conceivably have some connection with the Book of Mormon, but nothing short of an inscription which could be read and roughly dated could bridge the gap between what might be called a pre-actualistic archaeology and contact with the realities of Nephite civilization.

The possibility that a great nation or empire that once dominated vast areas of land and flourished for centuries could actually get lost and stay lost in spite of every effort of men to discover its traces, has been demonstrated many times since Schliemann found the real world of the Mycenaeans.

So it is with the Nephites. All that we have to go on to date is a written history. That does not mean that our Nephites are necessarily mythical, . . . as things stand we are still in the pre-archaeological and pre-archaeological stages of Book of Mormon study. Which means that there is nothing whatever that an anthropologist or archaeologist as such can say about the Book of Mormon. Nephite civilization was urban in nature, . . . It could just as easily and completely vanish from sight as did the worlds of Ugarit, Ur, or Chosos; and until some physical remnant of it, no matter how trivial, has been identified beyond question, what can any student of physical remains possibly have to say about it? Everything written so far by anthropologist or archaeologists—even real archaeologists—about the Book of Mormon must be discounted, for the same reason that we must discount studies of the lost Atlantians: not because it did not exist, but because it has not yet been found. (Since Cumorah, Salt Lake City, Utah, 1967, pages 243-244)

While the Nephites are never mentioned in any ancient inscription, the existence of the Israelites is verified by many inscriptions dating back hundreds of years before the time of Christ. The “earliest archaeological reference to the people of Israel” is a stele of the Egyptian ruler Merneptah which is now in the Egyptian Museum in Cairo. In The Biblical World we find this information concerning this stele:

Merneptah, son and successor of Ramesses II, ruled Egypt from ca. 1224 to ca. 1214 B.C. . . . . His campaign in Palestine, waged during the fifth year of his reign (ca. 1220 B.C.) is commemorated on a large black granite stele which was found in Merneptah’s mortuary temple in Thebes. At the top is a representation of Merneptah and the god Amun, . . . . Merneptah states: Israel is laid waste, his seed is not; Hurru (i.e. Syria) is become a widow for Egypt.

The stele provides the first mention of Israel on ancient monuments, and provides proof that Israel was in western Palestine by 1220 B.C. (The Biblical World, edited by Charles F. Pfeiffer, Michigan, 1966, pages 380-381)

John A. Wilson, a noted Egyptologist from the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, made this comment concerning this stele: This is the customary magniloquent claim that the god-king was victorious over all opponents, whether he had met them in battle or not. The appearance of Israel in an Asiatic context is interesting, but has no meaning in terms of armed conflict against Egypt. It merely shows that an Egyptian scribe was conscious of a people known as Israel somewhere in Palestine or Transjordan. (The Culture of Ancient Egypt, University of Chicago Press, 1965, page 255)

Many other references from ancient sources could be cited to prove that the Israelites actually existed. If Mormon writers could find evidence such as this for the Book of Mormon, we would be forced to consider its claim to be a divinely inspired record. As far as historical and manuscript evidence is concerned Joseph Smith’s scriptures have absolutely no foundation. The “records of the Nephites,” for instance, were never cited by any ancient writer, nor are there any known manuscripts or even fragments of manuscripts in existence older than the ones dictated by Joseph Smith in the late 1820s. Joseph Smith’s Book of Moses is likewise without documentary support. The only handwritten manuscripts for the Book of Moses are those dictated by Joseph Smith in the early 1830s. Since Joseph Smith revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants do not purport to be translations of ancient records, we would not expect to find any manuscript evidence concerning them. There is one revelation, however, which purports to be a translation of a “record made on parchment by John and hidden up by himself.” This revelation is found in the Doctrine and Covenants as Section 7. There is no documentary support for it other than a handwritten copy from Joseph Smith’s time. The Book of Abraham purports to be a translation of an ancient Egyptian papyrus. We have already shown, however, that the original papyrus is in reality the Egyptian “Book of Breathing” and has nothing to do with Abraham or his
DEAD SEA SCROLLS

The Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt once stated that the “oldest manuscripts of any of the books of the Old Testament at the present day date from the twelfth century of the Christian era” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 23). While this statement may have been true on Orson Pratt’s time, the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls has changed the entire picture. We now have some manuscripts that date back prior to the time of Christ.

The Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in 1947 when a boy threw a rock into a cave near the Dead Sea. He was startled by the sound of something breaking and later came back to find jars with ancient manuscripts in them. This was only the beginning, for further search by a number of people led to the discovery of many important manuscripts. When scholars learned of these manuscripts they were elated. Edmund Wilson gives this interesting information:

Dr. Trever at once sent off prints of columns of the Isaiah scroll to Dr. W. F. Albright of Johns Hopkins, one of the ablest living Biblical archaeologists and an authority on the Nash Papyrus, which he had studied intensively over a period of years. They heard from him by air mail on March 15. He had written the same day he received the letter: “My heartiest congratulations on the greatest manuscript discovery of modern times! There is no doubt in my mind that the script is more archaic than that of the Nash Papyrus . . . I should prefer a date around 100 B.C. . . . What an absolutely incredible find! And there can happily not be the slightest doubt in the world about the genuineness of the manuscript.” (The Dead Sea Scrolls: 1947-1969, by Edmund Wilson, New York, 1969, page 18)

They set out now to examine systematically all the caves in the Qumran neighborhood. They entered two hundred and sixty-seven, . . . Several of the caves contained scrolls, which, unprotected by jars, were in a state of disintegration, . . . The fragments of these collected ran into the tens of thousands. It was becoming more and more apparent that a library had been hidden here—a library which seems to have included almost all the books of the Bible [the Old Testament], a number of apocryphal works and the literature of an early religious sect. (Ibid., page 25)

In this book, The Ancient Library of Qumran, Frank Moore Cross, Jr., gives this information:

A sketch of the contents of Cave IV may be helpful in the discussions to follow. . . . 382 manuscripts have been identified from this cave. . . . Of the manuscripts identified thus far, about one hundred, slightly more than one fourth of the total, are biblical. All of the books of the Hebrew canon are now extant, with the exception of the Book of Esther . . . .

Three very old documents have been found in Cave IV. . . . they include an old copy of Samuel, preserved in only a handful of fragments; a patched and worn section of Jeremiah, . . . and a copy of Exodus . . . of which only a column and a few tatters are extant . . . .

The archaic Samuel scroll can date scarcely later that 200 B.C. A date in the last quarter of the third century is preferable. The Jeremiah is probably slightly later. The archaic Exodus has not been subject to detailed paleographical analysis; . . . Nevertheless it appears to be no later than the old Samuel fragments and probably is earlier.

The biblical scrolls from Qumran span in date about three centuries. A few archaic specimens carry us back to the end of the third century, as we have seen. The heavy majority, however, date in the first century B.C. and in the first Christian century. . . . (The Ancient Library of Qumran, by Frank Moore Cross, Jr., Garden City, New York, 1961, pages 39, 40, 42 and 43)

In a recent article Frank Moore Cross writes:

For the science of paleography, it is difficult to exaggerate the importance of these papyri. . . . the dating proposed by the writer for the archaic Samuel manuscript (ca. 225 B.C.E.) now appears to be minimal. The chronology of the Archaic Period (pre-Hasmonaeans) may prove too low by a generation; the archaic Samuel then would date from 275-225 B.C.E. (New Directions in Biblical Archaeology, edited by David Noel Freedman and Jonas C. Greenfield, Garden City, New York, 1969, page 53)

Mormon scholars accept the authenticity of the Dead Sea Scrolls, although they have not come to grips with the serious problems which these manuscripts create for the Book of Mormon and the “Inspired Version” of the Bible. The Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen stated:

Although the extent of the verses preserved is so slight, in one respect this tiny scrap of papyrus possesses quite as much evidential value as would the complete codex. Just as Robinson Crusoe, seeing but a single footprint in the sand, concluded that another human being, with two feet, was present on the island with him, so PS2 [Rylands Greek Papyrus 457] proves the existence and use of the Fourth Gospel during the first half of the second century in a provincial town along the Nile, far removed from its traditional place of composition (Ephesus in Asia Minor). Had this little fragment been known during the middle of the past century, that school of New Testament criticism which was inspired by the brilliant Tubingen professor, Ferdinand Christian Baur, could not have argued that the Fourth Gospel was not composed until about the year 160. (The Text of the New Testament, page 39)

In recent times papyrus manuscripts which are even older than the three manuscripts mentioned above have been discovered. Although these papyrus manuscripts are “relatively fragmentary,” almost every book in the New Testament is represented. In the Salt Lake City Messenger, Issue 24, we printed a photograph of “Papyrus Bodmer II,” which contains the book of John and is dated about 200 A.D. An even earlier fragment from the book of John has been located. Below is a photograph taken from The Biblical Archaeologist, September 1957, page 61. This photograph shows “Rylands Greek Papyrus 457, dated about 125-130 A.D., the oldest known fragment of a New Testament manuscript. It contains John 18:31-33 on one side and 18:38 on the other. Both sides are shown.”

Bruce M. Metzger makes these interesting observations concerning this fragment of papyrus:

Although the extent of the verses preserved is so slight, in one respect this tiny scrap of papyrus possesses quite as much evidential value as would the complete codex. Just as Robinson Crusoe, seeing but a single footprint in the sand, concluded that another human being, with two feet, was present on the island with him, so PS2 [Rylands Greek Papyrus 457] proves the existence and use of the Fourth Gospel during the first half of the second century in a provincial town along the Nile, far removed from its traditional place of composition (Ephesus in Asia Minor). Had this little fragment been known during the middle of the past century, that school of New Testament criticism which was inspired by the brilliant Tubingen professor, Ferdinand Christian Baur, could not have argued that the Fourth Gospel was not composed until about the year 160. (The Text of the New Testament, page 39)
Until recently, scholars depended on Hebrew manuscripts of the Old Testament dating only from the 9th to the 11th Centuries A.D., but now come the Dead Sea Scrolls dating back as far as the 3rd Century B.C. They include a nearly complete text of Isaiah and fragments of all Old Testament books except Esther. (As Translated Correctly, pages 3-4)

Millar Burrows, a noted authority on the Dead Sea Scrolls, made this statement with regard to the Isaiah scrolls:

The first of the prophetic books, Isaiah, was evidently, as we have seen, the most popular in the Qumran community. In addition to the two scrolls from Cave 1, there are more or less extensive fragments of thirteen others from Cave 4. Like the later and incomplete scroll from Cave 1, the Cave 4 fragments agree closely with the Masoretic text. This demonstration of the antiquity of our traditional text in the book of Isaiah is all the more important in view of the quite different indications in our books.

By far the most interesting and useful of all the Isaiah manuscripts for the study of the text is the complete St. Mark’s Isaiah scroll... It too supports the accuracy, by and large, of the Masoretic text... (More Light on the Dead Sea Scrolls, New York, 1958, page 146)

On page 172 of the same book, Millar Burrows states that the St. Mark scroll of Isaiah gives “the complete text of the book in a manuscript which cannot be dated much after 100 B.C. at the latest.”

Werner Keller made these observations about this scroll:

The text of Isaiah from the cave at Qumran had actually been copied about 100 B.C., as Professor Albright had been first to recognize. The remarkable and wonderful fact is that ancient scroll of Isaiah, just like the book of the prophet in any printed Bible, whether in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, German, or any other language, has sixty-six chapters and agrees with our present-day text. (The Bible as History, by Werner Keller, translated by William Neil, New York, 1957, pages 423-424)

Bible scholars have reason to rejoice over the discovery of manuscripts of Isaiah dating back to ancient times. Mormon scholars, however, are faced with a dilemma, for although these manuscripts support the text of the Bible, they could turn out to be one of the strongest evidences against Joseph Smith’s “Inscribed Revision” of the Bible and his “translation” of the text of Isaiah found in the Book of Mormon. For years Mormon scholars have labored to prove that the text of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon is actually a translation of an ancient copy of Isaiah and is therefore superior to the translation found in the Bible. They have attempted to show parallels between the text of Isaiah found in the Book of Mormon and that found in some ancient manuscripts. In our book Mormon Scriptures and the Bible we show that these parallels are of little value because these manuscripts were known and studied in Joseph Smith’s time.

If Mormon writers could find similarities between the text of the Book of Mormon and documents that were not known in Joseph Smith’s day, this type of evidence would be impressive. The Dead Sea Scrolls, for instance, should provide a great deal of evidence for the Book of Mormon if it is really an ancient record. The Isaiah scroll found at Qumran Cave 1 should have caused a great deal of joy among Mormon scholars, for here is a manuscript of Isaiah which is hundreds of years older than any manuscript previously known. Surely, if the Book of Mormon is true, this manuscript should be filled with evidence to support the text of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon and thus prove that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. Instead of proving the Book of Mormon, however, it has turned out to be a great disappointment to Mormon scholars. Lewis M. Rogers, who was assistant professor of religion at Brigham Young University, wrote a paper which is entitled “The Significance of the Scrolls and a Word of Caution.” In this article he stated:

It has been noted that deviations from the Masoretic text in the newly found Isaiah scrolls were minor, indicating a faithful preservation of the accepted Scriptures. However, variations from the standard in fragments from the Book of Samuel were startling, for they appeared to follow the Greek or Septuagint rather than the Masoretic text. . . . Latter-day Saints have cause to rejoice with other Christians and Jews for the new light and fresh perspective brought to them by the Dead Sea Scrolls, but occasionally they need to be reminded that their hopes and emotions make them vulnerable. It is quite possible that claims for the Book of Mormon and for L.D.S. theology will not be greatly advanced as a consequence of this discovery. (Progress in Archaeology, Brigham Young University, 1963, pages 46-47)

The Mormon scholar Sidney B. Sperry, of Brigham Young University, frankly admits that the Dead Sea Scrolls do not help the case for the Book of Mormon:

After reading the Scrolls very carefully, I come to the conclusion that there is not a line in them that suggests that their writers knew the Gospel as understood by Latter-day Saints. In fact, there are a few passages that seem to prove the contrary. . . .

We should be especially interested in the light the Isaiah scroll throws on the problem of the Isaiah text in the Book of Mormon. I have compared in some detail the text of the scroll with its parallels in the Book of Mormon text. This tedious task has revealed that the scroll seldom agrees with the departures of the Book of Mormon text from that of the conventional Masoretic text of Isaiah and consequently the Authorized Version. The conclusions I come to as a result of these comparative studies may be set down as follows:

1. Despite the supposed antiquity of the scroll, its text is inferior to the conventional Hebrew text that has come down to us in the King James Version.

2. If the date assigned to the scroll is correct, we must conclude that serious changes took place in the text prior to the coming of Christ. If my thinking is correct, however, the pronouncement of Nephi concerning the perversion of the scriptures (1 Nephi 13:26) would suggest that we give through to the possibility that the Isaiah scroll is dated a little too early—let us say about 150 years.

3. The Isaiah scroll is of relatively little use to Latter-day Saints as showing the antiquity of the text of Isaiah in the Book of Mormon.

4. The Book of Mormon text of Isaiah should warn us that the use of the Isaiah scroll of Qumran for purposes of textual criticism is open to grave suspicion.

What then do I see as valuable in the Scrolls? It should be understood that they have great value to the scholar in matters pertaining to Hebrew spelling, grammar and paleography. The Scrolls undoubtedly contribute much to the history of Judaism and Christianity, and specialists of the Old and New Testaments are properly much concerned with them. . . .

But aside from their technical value to scholars, I believe that the importance of the Scrolls in a religious sense has been highly overrated by certain scholars. Their practical importance to Latter-day Saints is relatively small. (Progress in Archaeology, pages 52-54)

It is interesting to see how Dr. Sperry has to detract from the Isaiah scroll in his attempt to save the Book of Mormon. The reason that Dr. Sperry does not want too accept the date of 100 B.C. for the Isaiah scroll is quite obvious to those who are familiar with the teachings of the Book of Mormon. The Mormons claim that the Catholics conspired to alter the Bible. The Book of Mormon plainly states that these changes were made after the time of Christ and after the formation of the Catholic Church:

The book that thou beholdest is a record of the Jews... the book proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew; and when it proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew it contained the plainness of the gospel of the Lord... these things go forth from the Jews in purity unto the Gentiles. . . . thou seest the foundation of a great and abominable church, which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts... they might pervert the right ways of the Lord, . . . After the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church, . . . there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God. (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 13:23-28)

NEW BOOK

MORMON SCRIPTURES and the BIBLE

By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. A 53-page book dealing with such subjects as: the decline of the importance of the Bible in Mormon theology, the influences of Bible critics on Mormonism, the charge that the Catholics conspired to alter the Scriptures, a comparison of the manuscript evidence for the Bible and Mormon scriptures, the Isaiah text in the Book of Mormon in the light of the Septuagint Version and the Dead Sea Scrolls, a study of a hand-written copy of one of Joseph Smith’s revelations which reveals serious changes in the printed version, Young’s attempt to suppress Joseph Smith’s Inspired Revision, how Smith ignored his own renderings, Smith’s failure to see the places in the text of the Bible that really needed correction, the lack of support in ancient manuscripts for Smith’s “Inspired” renderings, relationship of the Book of Enoch to the Inspired Revision, how Smith changes his own revision, changes in the Pearl of Great Price, and the changes in the “Lectures on Faith.” This book is filled with new and important information. The regular price will be $2.00, but if it is ordered before September 30, 1970, the price will be only $1.80 — 2 for $3.15 — 5 for $6.30 — 10 for $10.80.
If the “great Isaiah Scroll” found at Qumran was written 100 years before Christ as scholars claim, then it is obvious that the Catholics did not alter the book of Isaiah. Consequently, the Book of Mormon is incorrect in charging that the Catholics conspired to change the Bible.

Also it should be remembered that this scroll is a Jewish production, and the Book of Mormon claims that the Jews had the Scriptures in their “purity.” Why, then, does this scroll fail to support the text of Isaiah as found in the Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith’s Inspired Revision of the Bible?

Dr. Sperry is well aware of the fact that the Catholics did not exist before the time of Christ, and therefore he suggests that the Isaiah scroll may not have been written until about 50 A.D., but it was a persecuted minority and hardly fits the description of the “great and abominable church” found in the Book of Mormon. Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Mormon Church, has stated that the Catholics did not become the “ruling power in religion” until after the beginning of the fourth century (Essentials in Church History, page 10).

Because of Old Testament manuscripts found in the area of the Dead Sea and the discovery of papyrus manuscripts of the New Testament, it is almost impossible to maintain Joseph Smith’s teaching that the Catholics conspired to change the Bible. Dr. Richard L. Anderson, one of the top authorities on Bible manuscripts in the Mormon Church, has frankly admitted that the idea that the New Testament has been drastically changed cannot be maintained in the light of new discoveries:

It is easy to get lost in debate on details and fail to see the overwhelming agreement of all manuscripts to the historical record of the New Testament... (For a book to undergo progressive uncovering of its manuscript history and come out with so little debatable in its text is a great tribute to its essential authenticity. In tracing the history of manuscript investigation, the student finds that two great facts emerge. First, no new manuscript discovery has produced serious differences in the essential story. The survey has disclosed the leading textual controversies, and together they would be well within one percent of the text. Stated differently, all manuscripts agree on the essential correctness of 99% of the verses in the New Testament. There is more reason today, then, to agree with him [Sir Fredric Kenyon] that we possess the New Testament “in substantial integrity” and to underline that “the variations of text are so entirely questions of detail, not of essential substance.”

It is true that the Latter-day Saints have taken the position that the present Bible is much changed from its original form. However, greatest changes would logically have occurred in writings more remote than the New Testament. The textual history of the New Testament gives every reason to assume a fairly stable transmission of the documents we possess. Major losses might occur by elimination of whole books rather than alteration of those admitted as canonical. Nor do subsequent changes have to be based on open changes of the writings. The forces of evil are more effective at changing the meaning of true terms and concepts than removing them. (Fourteenth Annual Symposium of the Archaeology of the Scriptures, Brigham Young University, 1963, pages 57-59)

The Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen has written a book on the Bible in which he made several serious errors. He even goes so far as to judge the text of the Bible by the text found in the Book of Mormon. The following references to the Bible are taken from the book:

Many insertions were made, some of them “slanted” for selfish purposes, while at times deliberate falsifications and fabrications were perpetrated. (As Translated Correctly, Salt Lake City, 1966, page 4)

It is evident then that many of the “plain and precious” things were omitted from the Bible by failure to choose all of the authentic books for inclusion, and by deliberate changes, deletions and forgeries. . . . (Ibid., page 14)

A direct reference to baptism was plainly deleted from Isaiah 48:1. In the Old Testament this reference reads:

“Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which sware by the name of the Lord, . . .” (Ibid., page 14)

And now note this same passage from the brass plates [the Book of Mormon]: “Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, who are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, or out of the waters of baptism, who sware by the name of the Lord. . . .” (1 Nephi 20:1)

But the Bible as we know it is a different volume from what it was—and would have been—had it not been changed so much by those with selfish interests. (Ibid., page 67)

The Apostle Petersen certainly picked a poor example to prove his charge, for there is definite proof that the change was made in the text of the Book of Mormon rather than in the text of the Bible. The text of the original 1830 printing of the Book of Mormon reads as follows:

Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of the Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which sware by the name of the Lord, . . . (Book of Mormon, 1830 edition, page 52)

In later editions of the Book of Mormon this has been changed to read:

Hearken and hear this, O house of Jacob, who are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, or out of the waters of baptism, who sware by the name of the Lord, . . . (Book of Mormon, 1964 edition, 1 Nephi 20:1)

Notice that the clause, “or out of the waters of baptism,” has been added. Richard P. Howard’s new book, Restoration Scriptures, page 117, plainly shows that these words did not appear in the original handwritten manuscript.

“INSPIRED REVISION”

The Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe gives this information concerning Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Version” of the Bible:

Joseph Smith accepted the Bible as far as it was translated correctly but felt that many errors which should correctly had crept into the work. . . . he endeavored through inspiration from on high to correct those many departures from the original text. This was not fully completed when he died, but his manuscript exists in the original and in copies, and has been published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is a remarkable evidence of the prophetic power of Joseph Smith. Hundreds of changes make clear many a disputed text. (Joseph Smith—Seeker After Truth, page 139)

Although the Mormon Church has never printed the Inspired Version, the Reorganized Church’s printing is now available at the Mormon owned Deseret Book Store, and Mormon scholars use it freely in their writings. Bruce R. McConkie, of the First Council of the Seventy, states: “. . . the marvelous flood of light and knowledge revealed through the Inspired Version of the Bible is one of the great evidences of the divine mission of Joseph Smith” (Mormon Doctrine, Salt Lake City, 1958, page 352).

While the Mormon Church has not printed the Inspired Revision in its entirety, a few chapters are printed in the Pearl of Great Price, under the title “Book of Moses.” Joseph Smith’s “inspired” revision of Matthew, chapter 24, is also included in the Pearl of Great Price. The Mormon Church accepts the Pearl of Great Price as scripture, and it is one of the four standard works of the LDS Church.

Some of Joseph Smith’s “inspired” renderings were apparently written in rebuttal to Bible critics. For instance, Thomas Paine was very critical of the account of creation found in Genesis. The first verse of Genesis reads: “In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.” Paine made this comment concerning this matter:

The manner in which the account opens shows it to be traditionary. It begins abruptly; it is nothing that speaks; it is nobody that hears; it is addressed to nobody; it has neither first, second, nor third person; it has every criterion of being a tradition; it has no voucher. Moses does not take it upon himself by introducing it with the formality that he uses on other occasions, such as that of saying, “the Lord spake unto Moses, saying.”

Why it has been called the Mosaic account of the Creation, I am at a loss to conceive. (The Age of Reason, reprinted by the Thomas Paine Foundation, New York, page 20)

An examination of Joseph Smith’s “inspired” translation of this portion of Scripture, leads us to believe that he was answering Thomas Paine’s argument:

. . . The Lord spake unto Moses, saying: . . . in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest. (Pearl of Great Price, Book of Moses, 2:1)

Notice that Joseph Smith added the exact words that Thomas Paine said should be in Genesis to prove that it was written by Moses.

Joseph Smith not only attempted answer the critics in his Inspired Revision, but he even added prophecies concerning himself and the Book of Mormon.
Mormon. In fact, he even added his own name in an interpolation of about 800 words which he added to Genesis, Chapter 50:

. . . and his name shall be called Joseph, and it shall be after the name of his father; . . . the thing which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand shall bring my people unto salvation. (Inspired Revision, Genesis 50:33)

Besides adding his own name to the Bible, Joseph Smith added many of his own views. For instance, his bias against people with a dark skin is apparent in several interpolations he made in the book of Genesis:

And there was a blackness came upon all the children of Canaan, that they were despised among all people . . .

And it came to pass, that Enoch continued to call upon all the people, save it were the people of Cainan, to repent . . .

And Enoch also beheld the residue of the people which were the sons of Adam, and they were a mixture of all the seed of Adam, save it were the seed of Cain; for the seed of Cain were black, and had not place among them. (Inspired Revision, Genesis 7:10, 14 and 29)

These same interpolations are found in the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Moses 7:8, 12 and 22.

In the King James Version, Genesis 9:26 reads:

And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant.

In his Inspired revision, Joseph Smith changed this to indicate that a “veil of darkness” came upon Canaan:

And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant, and a veil of darkness shall cover him, that he shall be known among all men. (Inspired Revision, Genesis 9:30)

Joseph Smith’s rendition of this verse is not supported by the Septuagint Version of the Bible—the Septuagint is a Greek version of the Old Testament said to have been translated from the Hebrew text two or three hundred years before the time of Christ. The Septuagint Version reads: “And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Sem, and Chanaan shall be his bond-servant” (Septuagint Version, Genesis 9:26).

Joseph Smith not only made many unnecessary changes in the Bible, but he also failed to see the places where the text of the Bible really needed correction. There is one statement in the King James Version, 1 John 5:7 and 8 which scholars are certain is an interpolation. In modern versions of the Bible this statement has been removed to conform with the ancient Greek manuscripts. Below is a comparison of the text in the King James Version and that found in the Revised Standard Version.

KING JAMES

. . . there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water and the blood: and these three agree in one. (The New Testament in Four Version, page 766)

REVISED STANDARD

There are three witnesses, the Spirit, the water, and the blood; and these three agree. (The New Testament in Four Versions, page 766)

In the book, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts, we find the following information concerning this interpolation:

The text is found in no Greek MSS. except a few of very late date in which it has been inserted from the Latin. It is a purely Latin interpolation of African origin, which, beginning as a gloss, first found its way into the text of Spain, where it appears in the Freising Fragments, and later in the Vulgate codices Cavensis and Tobelenus. Thence it spread over Europe as an unequivocal Scripture “proof” of the doctrine of the Trinity. (Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts, page 258)

Even in Joseph Smith’s time this portion of 1 John was rejected by many scholars. Adam Clarke stated:

Though a conscientious advocate for the sacred doctrine contained in the disputed text, and which I think expressly enough revealed in several other parts of the sacred writing, I must own the passage in question stands on a most dubious foundation. (Clarke’s Commentary, vol. 6, page 929)

An examination of the writings of Mormon scholars reveals that they also question the authenticity of this verse. Arch S. Reynolds stated: “The extraneous matter added in the Authorized Version is clearly an interpolation, since the above is wanting in every manuscript except one before the fourteenth century, and in all early versions” (“A Study of Joseph Smith’s Bible Revision,” typed copy, page 169). Richard L. Anderson, of the Brigham Young University, stated: “One of the few major additions that seem apparent is 1 John 5:7. . . . The text of the fifth century did not speak of the heavenly Trinity, and the fact that very few Greek manuscripts add the heavenly Trinity makes it probable that this comment was not an original part of John’s letter” (Fourteenth Annual Symposium on the Archaeology of the Scriptures, Brigham Young University, 1963, page 53).
Now, if Joseph Smith was inspired at all in his work on the Scriptures we would expect to find this interpolation removed in his “Inspired Revision.” Instead, we find that it appears exactly as written in the King James Version!

Many Mormon writers have claimed that Joseph Smith never completed his Inspired Revision. Evidence, however, showing that in 1833 Joseph Smith considered his “translation” as finished. In a letter dated July 2, 1833, signed by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon and F. G. Williams, the following statement is found:

We this day finished the translation of the scriptures, for which we return gratitude to our Heavenly Father, . . . (History of the Church, vol. 1, page 368)

Earlier in this paper we quoted the Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe as saying that the Inspired Revision is “a remarkable evidence of the prophetic power of Joseph Smith.” We cannot accept this statement, for a careful examination of his work reveals unmistakable evidence that it is merely a human production and contains many serious errors.

Within the last year or two scholars from both the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church have made some astonishing admissions concerning the Inspired Revision. Robert J. Matthews, Director of Academic Research for the Department of Seminaries and Institutes in the Utah Church, goes so far as to admit that Joseph Smith may have added material which was never contained in the original manuscripts of the Bible:

The question might be raised whether the Prophet actually restored the text as Matthew wrote it, or whether, being the seer that he was, he went even beyond Matthew’s text and recorded an event that actually took place during the delivery of the Sermon, but which Matthew did not include. . . . It is probable that the Inspired Version is many things, and the only portions of it represent restorations while other portions may be explanations, interpolations, enlargements, clarifications and the like . . . many of the passages in the Inspired Version may be reiterations of events which were either not recorded by the Biblical writers or were lost before the Bible was compiled, in which case even the original Bible manuscripts would not contain the information. (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1969, pages 170 and 173)

Richard P. Howard, Church Historian of the Reorganized Church, appears to be on the verge of repudiating the Inspired Version. In his recent book, Restoration Scriptures, Richard P. Howard made these statements:

Viewing these subjects as he did from the vantage point of his own Christian background, Joseph Smith quite naturally would have tended to read into the symbolic pre-Christian language of the Old Testament certain uniquely Christian meanings. . . . For example, references to the Holy Ghost and to the Only Begotten—terms arising from the early Christian community—help one to see that even at this early stage of development the text in a sense represents Joseph Smith’s studied theological commentary on the King James Version of the early Genesis chapters of the Bible.

. . . the manuscripts indicate rather clearly that Joseph Smith, Jr., by his continued practice of revising his earlier texts (occasionally as many as three times), demonstrated that he did not believe that at any of those points of revision he had dictated a perfectly inerrant text by the power or voice of God . . . It is thus unnecessary and could be misleading to claim “direct” revelation in the determination of the entire text of the Inspired Version as the preface written for the 1867 edition apparently implied. (Ibid., page 151)

In our book, Mormon Scriptures and the Bible, we devote more than 20 pages to Joseph Smith’s Inspired Version of the Bible. This book has 53 large 8 1/2 by 11 inch pages and covers such topics as: the influence of Bible critics on Mormonism, the Apostle Pratt’s attacks on the Bible, the charge that the Catholics conspired to alter the Scriptures, a comparison of the manuscript evidence for the Bible and for Mormon scriptures, the Isaiah text in the Book of Mormon in the light of the Septuagint Version and the Dead Sea Scrolls, a study of a handwritten copy of one of Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Revision,” which reveals serious changes in the printed version, Brigham Young’s attempt to suppress Joseph Smith’s “Inspired Revision,” Joseph Smith’s failure to see the places in the text of the Bible that really needed correction, the lack of support in ancient manuscripts for Joseph Smith’s “Inspired” renderings, how Joseph changed his own revision, & changes in the Pearl of Great Price.

In 1877 the Vermont Historical Gazetteer printed the following information:

About 1800, occurred the “Wood scrape,” . . . a strange affair in which the Wood families, then living here, were the leading actors . . . the Woods dug for money in various parts of the town, and were engaged in this for nearly a year; . . . they used hazel-rods which they pretended would lead them to places where money had been buried, . . . His [Nathaniel Wood’s] peculiar religious doctrines will appear as we proceed . . . he regarded himself and his followers as modern Israelites or Jews . . .

In this condition we find Nathaniel Wood and his followers when the hazel-rod was introduced, and the money digging commenced; but the Woods did not commence it . . .

A man by the name of Winchell, as he called himself when he came here, was the first man who used the hazel-rod. . . . He was a fugitive from justice from Orange county, Vermont, where he had been engaged in counterfeiting. He first went to a Mr. Cowdry’s in Wells, who then lived in that town, near the line between Wells and Middletown, in the house now owned and occupied by Robert Parks, Esq. Cowdry was the father of Oliver Cowdery, the noted Mormon, who claimed to have been one of the witnesses to Joe Smith’s revelations, and to have written the book Mormon, as it was deciphered by Smith from the golden plates . . . Winchell said at Cowdry’s some little time, keeping himself concealed, and it is the opinion of some with whom I have conversed that he commenced his operations of digging for money in Wells, but I have been unable to determine as to that . . .

Winchell next turns up in Middletown, at Ezekiel Perry’s . . . and here he began to use the hazel-rod (whether he had before used it at Cowdry’s, in Wells, I cannot say) . . . he gathered quite a number about him . . . and told them there was money buried in that region, and with his rod he could find it, and if they would assist in digging it out, and forever keep it a secret, he would give them a part of the money . . . we should, perhaps, say a word about this rod . . . The best description we can give of it is this: It was a stick of what has been known as witch-hazel . . . It was cut with two prongs, in the form of a fork, . . . From the use of this stick Winchell and[d] [the Woods pretended to divine all sorts of things to suit their purpose . . . Winchell held up his rod, got some motion from it, and told them the money was in an iron chest and covered with a large stone, and that they would soon come to it . . .

The Woods then commenced using the hazel rod and digging for money . . . Winchell was with them, but it was not generally known, he being concealed . . . “Priest Wood,” . . . seemed to throw his whole soul into the rod delusion, but his use of the rod was mostly as a concealed . . . “Priest Wood,” . . . seemed to throw his whole soul into the rod delusion, but his use of the rod was mostly as a concealed . . .

That the system of religion promulgated by Nathaniel Wood, and adopted by his followers in 1800, was the same, or “much the same,” as the Mormons adopted on the start, is beyond question . . . The Woods were very fruitful in prophecies, especially after the hazel rod came to their use; so were the Mormons in the beginning of their creed . . . This same Winchell or Wingate, the counterfeiter, who introduced the rod here, and was with the Woods in their operations, afterwards went to Palmyra, New York, the home of Joe Smith . . . he was there early enough to get Joe Smith’s father to digging for money . . . I have been told that Joe Smith’s father resided in Poultney at the time of the Wood movement here, and that he was in it, and one of the leading roddmen. Of this I cannot speak positively, for the want of satisfactory evidence, but that he was a roddman under the tuition of this counterfeiter after he went to Palmyra has been proven, to my satisfaction, at least. I have before said that Oliver Cowdry’s father was in the “Wood scrape.” He then lived in Wells, afterwards in Middletown, after that went to Palmyra, and there we find these men with the counterfeiter, Winchell, searching for money over the hills and mountains with the hazel-rod, and their sons Joe and Oliver, as soon as they were old enough, were in the same business, . . . It is not claimed that any of the Woods . . . ever had anything to do with Mormonism after it was known to the world as such, but their religion and their ways of deceiving the people by pretended revelations and otherwise, were brought along down by the Smiths, the Cowdrys, and the counterfeiter. They used the rod, that is, the elder Smith and Cowdry, and pretended by that to obtain revelation, . . . their sons Joe jr. and Oliver . . . commenced their education with the use of the hazel-rod or forked stick, in searching for hidden treasures—though afterwards they used what they called enchanted stones. (Vermont Historical Gazetteer, edited by Abby Maria Hemenway, Claremont, N.H., 1877, vol. 3, pages 810-814 and 818-819)

In a new book entitled Joseph Smith and Money-Digging we have carefully examined the charges which claim that Joseph Smith was a money-digger and believed in divining rods and peep stones. We will give a brief summary of our conclusions in this paper.

The fact that Joseph Smith believed in divining rods has been obscured by two important changes in one of his revelations. These changes were obviously made to cover up the fact that he had endorsed the idea that Oliver Cowdery had a gift from God to work with a divining rod. Below is a comparison of the way this revelation was first printed in the Book of Commandments and the way it has been changed to read in recent editions of the Doctrine and Covenants (see photograph in our Case Against Mormonism, vol. 1, page 144, Change F).

Book of Commandments

Now this is not all, for you have another gift, which is the gift of working with the rod: behold it has told you things: behold there is no other power to save God, that can cause this rod of nature, to work in your hands . . . (Book of Commandments 7:3)

Doctrine and Covenants

Now this is not all thy gift; for you have another gift, which is the gift of Aaron: behold it has told you many things; Behold, there is no other power to save the power of God, that can cause this gift of Aaron to be with you. (Doctrine and Covenants 8:6 and 7)

The reader will notice that the words “working with the rod” and “rod of nature” have been entirely deleted from this revelation without any indication. While the Utah Mormon leaders have failed to come to grips with this important issue, Richard P. Howard, Reorganized LDS Church Historian, made these startling admissions in a book recently published by his Church:

◆ NEW BOOK — Joseph Smith and Money-Digging

By Jerald and Sandra Tanner. This book deals with such subjects as money-digging in Joseph Smith’s time, treasures that slipped into the ground, statements by Martin Harris and Brigham Young on money-digging, Joseph Smith’s “seer stone,” the use of the “seer stone” to find the Book of Mormon plates and its use to translate the book itself, the agreement between Joseph Smith and other money-diggers, other seer stones among the Mormon, the “cave” in the hill Cumorah, the relationship of money-digging to the story of the gold plates of the Book of Mormon and to the text of the book, the use of the divining rod in the early Mormon Church, the revelation regarding treasure hunting, the 1826 trial of Joseph Smith, an analysis of different accounts of the trial, Joseph Smith’s use of the “seer stone” to find treasures for Josiah Stowell, and the practice of sacrificing lambs to find treasures. This book also contains a photographic reprinted of the affidavits regarding Joseph Smith’s money-digging activities which were published by E. D. Howe in 1834.

Several writers have established that both in Vermont and in western New York in the early 1800’s, one of the many forms which enthusiastic religion took was the adaptation of the witch hazel stick (used then and even to this date for locating underground water sources) to religious purposes. For example, the “divining rod” was used effectively by one Nathaniel Wood in Rutland County, Vermont, in 1801. Wood, Winchell, William Cowdery, Jr., and his son, Oliver Cowdery, all had some knowledge of and associations with the various uses, both secular and sacred, of the forked witch hazel rod. Winchell and others used such a rod in seeking buried treasure; . . . when Joseph Smith met Oliver Cowdery in April, 1829, he found a man peculiarly adept in the use of the forked rod . . . He soon was Joseph’s close friend and confidant, his scribe and trusted counselor. In the midst of such mutual rapport and against the background of his own experiments with and uses of oracular media, Joseph Smith’s April,1829, affirmations about Cowdery’s unnatural powers related to working with the rod are quite understandable. . . .

By the time that Joseph Smith approached the reinterpretation and wording of this document for the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, he had the time and experience necessary to place his 1829 assessment of the meaning of Cowdery’s gift of working with the rod in a somewhat more accurate perspective. Both he and Cowdery had developed away from an emphasis on the religious or mystical meanings in such mechanical objects as the water witching rod. Joseph’s 1835 wording of this document . . . left behind the apparent 1829 reliance upon external media, which by 1835 had assumed in Joseph’s mind overtones of superstition and speculative experimentation. (Restoration Scriptures, Independence, Mo., 1969, pages 211-214)

In our new book, Joseph Smith and Money-Digging, we have photographically reproduced the affidavits relating to money-digging which were first printed by E. D. Howe in 1834. In one of these affidavits Peter Ingersoll stated:

I, Peter Ingersoll, first became acquainted with the family of Joseph Smith, Sen. in the year of our Lord, 1822. . . .

The general employment of the family, was digging for money. . . . I was once ploughing near the house of Joseph Smith, Sen. about noon, he requested me to walk with him a short distance from his house, for the purpose of seeing whether a mineral rod would work in my hand, saying at the same time he was confident it would. . . . he cut a small witch hazel bush and gave me direction how to hold it. He then went off some rods, and told me to say to the rod, “work to the money,” which I did, in an audible voice. He rebuked me severely for speaking it loud, and said it must be spoken in a whisper. This was rare sport for me. While the old man was standing off some rods, throwing himself into various shapes, I told him the rod did not work. He seemed much surprized at this, and said he thought he saw it move a whisper. This was rare sport for me. While the old man was standing off some rods, throwing himself into various shapes, I told him the rod did not work. He seemed much surprized at this, and said he thought he saw it move. He then put it into his hat, and then his face into the top of his hat. . . . After obtaining the stone, he began to publish abroad what wonders he could discover by looking in it, . . .

There is a great deal of evidence to show that Joseph Smith used the “seer stone” to search for buried treasures. Martin Harris, one of the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon, made these comments concerning Joseph Smith’s “stone”:

These plates were found at the north point of a hill two miles north of Manchester village. Joseph had a stone which was dug from the well of Mason Chase, twenty-four feet from the surface. In this stone he could see many things to my certain knowledge. It was by means of this stone he first discovered these plates.

“Therefore, he placed me in the second place of magistracy of this church; without me he has a stone he says contains the characters engraven on the plates. (Comprehensive History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, vol. 1, page 129)

In Joseph Smith and Money-Digging we reproduce an affidavit from Willard Chase which contains these revealing statements:

I became acquainted with the Smith family . . . in the year 1820. At that time, they were engaged in the money digging business, which they followed until the latter part of the season of 1827. In the year 1822, I was engaged in digging a well. I employed Alvin and Joseph Smith to assist me; . . . After digging about twenty feet below the surface of the earth, we discovered a singularly appearing stone, which excited my curiosity. I brought it to the top of the well, and as we were examining it, Joseph put it into his hat, and then his face into the top of his hat . . . . After obtaining the stone, he began to publish abroad what wonders he could discover by looking in it, . . .

In her book, No Man Knows My History, Fawn M. Brodie states:

In March 1826 Joseph’s magic arts for the first time brought him into serious trouble. One of Stowel’s neighbors, Peter Bridgeman, swore out a warrant for the youth’s arrest on the charge of being a disorderly person and an impostor . . . . the court pronounced him guilty, though what sentence was finally passed the record does not say. (No Man Knows My History, page 30)

We quote the following from the “court record” as it was first published in Fraser’s Magazine in 1873:

Warrant issued upon written complaint upon oath of Peter G. Bridgeman, who informed that one Joseph Smith of Bainbridge was a disorderly person and an impostor.

Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826. Prisoner examined: says that he came from the town of Palmyra, and had been at the house of Josiah Stowel in Bainbridge . . . . That he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and he looked for Mr. Stowel several times, and had informed him where he could find these treasures, and Mr. Stowel had been engaged in digging for them . . . he had occasionally been in the habit of looking through this stone to find lost property for three years, but of late had pretty much given it up on account of its injuring his health, especially his eyes, making them sore; that he did not solicit business of this kind, and had always rather declined having anything to do with this business.

Josiah Stowel sworn: says that prisoner had been at his house . . . he pretended to have skill of telling where hidden treasures in the earth were by means of looking though a certain stone . . . he positively knew that the prisoner could tell, and did possess the art of seeing those valuable treasures through the medium of said stone . . . that prisoner had told by means of this stone where a Mr. Bacon had buried money . . . that had said it was in a certain root of a stump five feet from surface of the earth, and with it would be found a tail feather; that said Stowel and prisoner thereupon commenced digging, found a tail feather, but money was gone; that he supposed the money moved down.
That prisoner did offer his services; that he never deceived him; that prisoner looked through stone and described Josiah Stowell’s house and outhouses, while at Palmry at Simpson Stowell’s correctly; . . . That he had been in company with prisoner digging for gold, and had the most implicit faith in prisoner’s skill. (Fraser’s Magazine, February 1873, page 229)

In our book Joseph Smith and Money-Digging we have printed this document in its entirety and have devoted over 15 pages to an examination of its authenticity.

When Fawn Brodie printed this document Mormon writers claimed that it was spurious. She had reprinted it from the New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. Since this encyclopedia did not print this account until 1883, there was a wide gap between the date of the trial and the published version. Since Mormon scholars contested the authenticity of the trial, scholars began to search for more documentation. Helen L. Fairbanks, of Guernsey Memorial Library, Norwich, N.Y., made a very interesting discovery. She found that Dr. W. D. Purple, who had lived in Bainbridge and claimed to be an eyewitness to the trial had written concerning it in The Chenango Union, May 3, 1877. We have reproduced this article in its entirety in Joseph Smith and Money-Digging. While Mormon writers were willing to concede that Purple mentioned the trial in 1877, they felt confident that no earlier mention of the trial would be discovered. Dr. Francis W. Kirkham made this statement: “No account of the life of Joseph Smith confessed in a court of law that he had used a seer stone for any purpose, and especially that the record of such confession was in existence” (A New Witness for Christ in America, vol. 1, pages 386-387). Further research led to the discovery that the “court record” had been printed ten years previous to this in Fraser’s Magazine. In a “Supplement” to his book, Dr. Kirkham conceded that it had been printed in 1873.

Finally, Dale L. Morgan, a noted historian, discovered that the trial was actually mentioned as early as 1831 in a letter published in the Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, printed in Utica, N.Y., the letter is “signed A.W.B.,” and Mr. Morgan identifies him from subsequent articles as A. W. Benton” (No Man Knows My History, page 418 A). Since Mr. Benton lived in Bainbridge, his account is very important. Wesley P. Walters had furnished us with a photograph of Benton’s account as it appears in the Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate. We cite the following from that publication:

Messrs. Editors— . . . thinking that a fuller history of their founder, Joseph Smith, Jr. might be interesting. . . . I will take the trouble to make a few remarks . . . For several years preceding the appearance of his book, he was about the country in the character of a glass-looker: pretending, by means of a certain stone, or glass, which he put in a hat, to be able to discover lost goods, hidden treasures, mines of gold and silver, &c. . . . In this town, a wealthy farmer, named Josiah Stowell, together with others, spent large sums of money in digging for hidden money, which this Smith pretended he could see, and told them where to dig; but they never found their treasure. At length the public, becoming wearied with the base imposition which he was palming upon the credulity of the ignorant, for the purpose of sponging his living from their earnings, had him arrested as a disorderly person, tried and condemned before a court of justice. But considering his youth, (he then being a minor,) and thinking he might reform his conduct, he was designedly allowed to escape. This was four or five years ago. (Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, April 9, 1831, page 120)

In Joseph Smith and Money-Digging we have graphically reproduced A. W. Benton’s entire letter. From what we quoted above, however, the reader will notice that Benton claimed that Joseph Smith was “arrested as a disorderly person.” This agrees well with the “court record” for it states that Joseph Smith was “a disorderly person and an impostor.” Benton’s statement also agrees with the “court record” in stating that Joseph Smith was found guilty. The “court record” states that the trial took place on March 20, 1826. This would have been five years prior to the time Benton wrote his letter in 1831. Mr. Benton states that the trial took place “four or five years ago.”

Dr. Hugh Nibley tries to dismiss Benton’s letter as “fiction.” In his book, The Myth Makers, page 157, he states: “. . . are inclined to regard A.W.B.’s story of the 1826 trial as fiction . . . without the reality of the peep-stones, the whole legend of the 1826 trial collapses . . . the 1826 trial, unattested in any source but his for fifty years, was a product of A.W.B.’s own wishful thinking.”

Actually, there is some very good evidence from a Mormon source to show that Joseph Smith had some trouble with the law at the time he was working for Josiah Stowell. In 1835 Oliver Cowdery, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, wrote the following:

Soon after this visit to Cumorah, a gentleman from the south part of the State, . . . employed our brother . . . This gentleman, whose name is Stowell, resided in the town of Bainbridge, . . . Some forty miles south, . . . is said to be a cave . . . where a company of Spaniards, . . . coined a large quantity of money; . . . our brother was required to spend a few months with some others in excavating the earth, in pursuit of this treasure . . .

On the private character of our brother I need add nothing further, at present, previous to his obtaining the records of the Nephites, only that while in the country, some very officious person complained of him as a disorderly person, and brought him before the authorities of the county; but there being no cause of action he was honorably acquitted.” ( Latter Day Saints’ Messenger and Advocate, October, 1835, vol. 2, pages 200-201)

While Oliver Cowdery disagrees with the “court record” when he states that Joseph Smith was acquitted, he is in agreement with the “court record” and with A. W. Benton’s letter in stating that Joseph Smith was charged with being “a disorderly person.”

Although the “court record” itself was not published until many years after Joseph Smith’s death, the information given in the record seems to agree well with facts derived from many other sources. For instance, in the “court record” we read that Josiah Stowell “positively knew that the prisoner could tell, and did possess the art of seeing those valuable treasures through the medium of said stone.” . . . Josiah Smith’s own mother confirms the fact that Stowell came to her son for help in locating hidden treasures:

A short time before the house was completed, a man, by the name of Josiah Stotel, came from Chenango county, New York, with the view of getting Joseph to assist him in digging for a silver mine. He came for Joseph on account of having heard that he possessed certain keys, by which he could discern things invisible to the natural eye. . . . Joseph and several others, returned with him and commenced digging.” (Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet, London 1853, page 91-91)

The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts states that Stowell came to Joseph Smith because he had “heard of Joseph Smith’s gift of seership” (Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, page 82).

Martin Harris, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, gave this very revealing information:

When Joseph found this stone, there was a company digging in Harmony, Pa., and they took Joseph to look in the stone for them, and he did so for a while, and then he told them the enchantment was so strong that he could not see, and they gave it up. (Tiffany’s Monthly, 1959, page 164)

A careful examination of the whole story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and even the text of the book itself reveals that it originated in the mind of someone who was familiar with the practice of money-digging. We deal with this at some length in Joseph Smith and Money-Digging, but for lack of space in this paper we will simply point out that the “seer stone” used in “translating” the book seems to have been nothing but a common “peep stone.” Isaac Hale, Joseph Smith’s father-in-law, made these statements in an affidavit dated March 20, 1834:

I first became acquainted with Joseph Smith, Jr. in November, 1825. He was at that time in the employ of a set of men who were called “money-diggers,” and his occupation was that of seeing, or pretending to see by means of a stone placed in his hat, and his hat closed over his face. In this way he pretended to discover minerals and hidden treasure. . . . Young Smith gave the “money-diggers’ great encouragement, at first, but when they had arrived in digging, to near the place where he had stated an immense treasure would be found—he said the enchantment was so powerful that he could not see . . . Young Smith made several visits at my house, and at length asked my consent to his marrying my daughter Emma. This I refused, and gave my reasons for so doing; some of which were, that he was a stranger, and followed a business that I could not approve; . . . he returned, and while I was absent from home, carried off my daughter, into the state of New York, where they were married . . . they returned, bringing with them a Peter Ingersol, . . .

Issue 29

From this information it would appear that Joseph Smith was almost an accessory after the fact, since, according to his own statement, he warned Cowdery to flee from the law if he was guilty. A few years later a man by the name of Joseph H. Jackson claimed that Joseph Smith and other Mormon leaders operated a bogus press in Nauvoo, and that Joseph Smith told him “that in Ohio, he, Dr. Boynton, Lyman Wight, Oliver Cowdery, and Hyrum, were engaged with others in a bogus establishment on Licking Creek, but that their operations were cut short by the bursting of the Kirtland Bank” (The Adventures and Experience of Joseph H. Jackson: ... Warsaw, Illinois, 1846, page 15).

Jackson revealed Joseph Smith’s connection with counterfeiting in a letter printed in the Warsaw Signal on June 5, 1844. Within a few weeks, however, Joseph Smith had been murdered, and therefore he was never brought before the law on this charge. Brigham Young and some of the other Mormon Apostles were indicted. On January 7, 1846, the Warsaw Signal contained the following:

During the last week, twelve bills of indictment, for counterfeiting Mexican dollars, and American half dollars and dimes, were found by the Grand Jury, ... embracing some of the “Holy Twelve,” and other prominent Mormons, ... From incidental remarks made by some of the witnesses in private conversation (not before the jury,) we are led to believe that a large amount of counterfeit coin of the above description, is, and has been for a long time past, circulating in the western country. ... It was said that the Mormons had three presses for counterfeiting the coin named, and that Joe Smith worked most industriously at the business.

Brigham Young and the other Mormon leaders had no intention of submitting to the law. Although Young denied he was guilty of counterfeiting, he admitted in the History of the Church that he had tricked the U.S. Marshal. Under the date of December 23, 1845, we find the following:

One-five p.m. Almon W. Bubbitt came into the Temple and informed me that there were some of federal officers ... in the city for the purpose of arresting some of the Twelve, especially Amasa Lyman and myself. ... William Miller put on my cap and Kimball’s cloak and went downstairs meeting the marshal ... as he was about getting into my carriage the marshal arrested him, on a writ from the United States court, charging him with counterfeiting the coin of the United States. ... The marshal put up at Hamilton’s Tavern, and the rumor soon spread through town that Brigham Young was in the custody of the marshall. ... William Backenstos was called in and he told them William Miller was not Brigham Young. ... Eight-twenty, I left the Temple disguised ... to elude the vexatious writs of our persecutors. (History of the Church, vol. 7, pages 549-551)

While the Mormon leaders remained in Nauvoo they were constantly bothered by the law. They claimed that they would not allow themselves to be arrested because they might meet the same fate as Joseph Smith. John Taylor, who became the third President of the Mormon Church, threatened the officers who attempted to serve writs with death. Brigham Young stated:

Saturday, 12. ... the U.S. deputy marshal for the district of Illinois arrived in town with writs for myself and others.

Sunday, 13.—Meeting at the stand. Elders Heber C. Kimball and John Taylor preached. Several officers attended meeting. Elder Taylor gave them to understand that if they made an attempt to serve writs on him it would cost them their lives. ... (History of the Church, vol. 7, page 395-396)

In 1846 the Mormon leaders fled from Nauvoo and headed west. While the anti-Mormons were demanding that the Mormons leave Illinois, the indictments for counterfeiting apparently speeded up the process. The Mormon writer Kenneth W. Godfrey made this statement:

Warrants pending for the arrest of Brigham Young and other leaders on charges of counterfeiting were among the reasons for the early departure of the Saints from the “city of Joseph” in February rather than in the spring as originally proposed. (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1968, page 215)

The United States Government has preserved some important records concerning the indictment of the Mormon leaders for counterfeiting. In a “Reference Service Report,” dated December 11, 1963, Hardee Allen made these statements:

Inquiry: Information about Records Relating to the Indictment in Illinois of Brigham Young, Mormon Leader, and Apostles of the Mormon Church, 1845-1848, for counterfeiting.
Report: The records of the Solicitor of the Treasury (National Archives Record Group 206) contain a few summary references to the indictment, and proceedings thereunder, of Brigham Young and eleven other men on the charge of counterfeiting, the indictments having been presented in December 1845 in the United State Circuit Court for the District of Illinois. . . . The National Archives can furnish negative photostats of the pertinent United States Attorneys’ reports (from Reports of the U.S. District Attorneys, From 1845 to 1850), as follows:

1. Report of Suits Pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Illinois at its December Term 1845, listing suits brought in that court on indictments for counterfeiting, dated December 17 and December 18, 1845, against Brigham Young and 11 other men, . . .

2. Report of Suits Pending at the June Term 1846, which identifies Brigham Young and most of the others charged with counterfeiting as ‘not arrested.’ 1 page; negative photostat, 75 cents.

. . . .

“The United States Attorneys’ reports in the records of the Solicitor of the Treasury do not show the disposition of the charges against Brigham Young and 10 others. . . . the reports of the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Illinois. . . . do contain a report for the December Term 1848 which shows that the cases against Brigham Young and 10 others (not including Edward Bonney), indicted for counterfeiting, had been dismissed at that Term of the court. The National Archives can furnish negative photostats of the pertinent Clerks’ reports (from Reports of the Clerks of the U.S. Court, 1846 to 1850). . . .”

In the same “Reference Service Report,” Hardee Allen lists 16 reports that are related to these indictments and states that “The National Archives can supply negative photostats of any of these reports at the price listed, or a 35mm. microfilm of all of them (16 pages) for $2.50.” We have obtained a copy of this microfilm and find it very revealing. According to these records, Brigham Young and four of the other Apostles (Willard Richards, John Taylor, Parley P. Pratt and Orson Hyde) were indicted “for counterfeiting the current coin of the U.S.” (A photograph of a U.S. government record showing the indictments against the Mormon leaders for counterfeiting will be sent free upon request.) Among the list of those indicted we find the name of Theodore Turley. This comment concerning Turley appears in a handwritten note on the record showing the indictment: “This is an indictment for counterfeiting the current coin of the U.S. The defendant, who is the chief manufacturer of dies &c resides at Nauvoo. From the testimony before the Grand Jury, it appeared that counterfeiting coin has been largely carried on at that place for some years. The defendant evades the service of process.” Joseph Smith was certainly acquainted with Turley, for he made this statement in his History of the Church: “I told Theodore Turley that I had no objection to his building a brewery” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 300). Under the Brigham Young leadership, Theodore Turley became a member of the secret Council of Fifty (Quest for Empire, page 224). Under the date of November 16, 1845, Brigham Young recorded that “Elder Theodore Turley has been arrested at Alton on a charge of bogus-making” (History of the Church, vol. 7, page 525). Turley apparently received help to pay his bail and then fled west with the Mormons. A. U.S. Government record dated January 12, 1847, contains this statement concerning Turley: “The deft in this case is beyond the reach of process—proceedings against his bail have been had—further proceedings useless.” Under the date of March 28, 1846, Brigham Young recorded the following in his “Manuscript History”: “I met my captains of Tens at the Post Office at 3:40 p.m.; immediately after which Theodore Turley came into the Council and reported that Edward Bonney, Haight and another man had been in pursuit of him for two or three days, . . . by several meanderings and disguises he had escaped them; that his family were at Richardson’s Point, and had not team sufficient to bring them on” (“Manuscript History of Brigham Young,” March 28, 1846, typed copy). On November 28, 1847, Brigham Young recorded this statement in the History of the Church:

I met with the Twelve and high council in the forenoon, Theodore Turley and Joseph Fielding were voted members of the high council. (History of the Church, vol. 7, page 620)

Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith gives this very revealing information concerning counterfeiting in her book:

“When we were on the route through Iowa, it occurred, that one day, when one of the wagons was upset, the press for making bogus money rolled into sight. . . . the business of counterfeiting was carried on extensively, and that too under the personal sanction and blessing of the Prophet Joseph, and of the Twelve. . . . One thing is certain; this bogus press was carried, to my certain knowledge, to Salt Lake, . . . (Mormonism: Its Rise, Progress, and Present Condition, Hartford, 1870, pages 28-29)
While dressing the next morning, Wallace [her husband] accidentally left his belt in my room; . . . which I examined . . . and found it to contain about three hundred dollars of bogus money . . . . The discovery . . . sharpened my curiosity, . . . I made it convenient, . . . to question Joseph Young, brother of the Prophet, about it. I commenced by telling him I thought he had given Wallace more than his share of bogus money . . . Brother Joseph, thrown off his guard, replied, “Did he get me a span of horses?”

I told him I did not know but he bought one for himself.

“Yes, yes,” said brother Joseph, thinking I knew all about it, as some of the wives of the Prophet did; “he can sell the bogus any time to the Missourians, . . . we shall be off and beyond their reach, and they can whistle.”

I thus ascertained . . . that my husband was a thief and a counterfeiter, . . . soon after this, a man came to our house, who was unknown to me, and had a long conversation with Wallace . . . . Wallace told me it was necessary for us to move to St. Joseph, Mo.; that he was going there by direction, and in the service of the Church . . . .

The reader will not be surprised to know, what I soon learned to be true, that this “business” was selling bogus money, and buying with it various kinds of property needed by the Church, and forwarding it to Council Bluffs . . . .

The horses, and other booty purchased or stolen, was forwarded at one to Kanesville, and was there received by Orson Hyde . . . . Orson Hyde is one of the “Twelve Apostles,” and is often in the States. There are now many persons living by whom these facts can be proved.

The bogus money used by these men, was mostly made at Nauvoo; but I have heretofore mentioned that the press used in its manufacture was taken west, and on to Salt Lake in the wagon of Peter Haws, and was at this time at Kanesville. This man Haws, is now living on Humbolt River, west of Great Salt Lake City. (Ibid., pages 103-107)

Mrs. Smith’s statement that the Mormon Apostle Orson Hyde received the stolen property at Kanesville is very interesting, for we know that Orson Hyde approved of stealing from the Gentiles. In his journal of October 13, 1860, John Bennion recorded that “after meeting Bp council & Elder Hyde had a long talk in my house Br Hyde said speaking of stealing that a man may steal & be influenced by the Spirit of the Lord to do it that Hickman had done it years past said that he never would institute a trial against a brother for stealing from the Gentiles but stealing from his brethren he was down on it . . . .” (The reader will find the complete statement by Bennion in The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, pages 11-12)

It is also interesting to note that the U.S. Government records show that the Mormon Apostle Orson Hyde was indicted for counterfeiting at Nauvoo.

Mrs. Smith states that a bogus press was hauled west in the wagon of “Peter Haws.” This seems very likely, for Brigham Young himself admitted that Peter Haws was involved in the bogus business after the Mormons left Nauvoo:

While I was standing with Prest. Kimball at his tent, an outcry was heard from Peter Haws’ Camp; we repaired thither and found that Haws and Thomas Williams and two others had a quarrel about some property, etc. that Haws had let Williams have some bogus money on shares and Williams had not paid him his share of the profits. I reproved them for dealing in base coin and told Haws he could not govern himself, his family, or a company; and unless he repented and forsook such dishonesty, the hand of the Lord would be against him and all those who partook of such corruption. (“Manuscript History of Brigham Young,” May 12, 1846, typed copy)

The U.S. Government records show that Peter Haws was indicted along with the Mormon leaders for counterfeiting in Nauvoo. Klaus J. Hansen shows that Peter Haws was a member of the “Council of Fifty under Joseph Smith” (Quest For Empire, page 223).

Brigham Young’s rebuke of Peter Haws can hardly be taken very seriously, since Haws continued to serve in the “Council of Fifty in Colonial Utah, 1847-49” (Quest For Empire, page 225). When we find that both Peter Haws and Brigham Young were under indictment for counterfeiting and were fleeing from the law at the time, it throws a new light on this incident.

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, we plan to devote about 20 pages to the subject of counterfeiting in the early Mormon Church. So far we have completed 50 pages of vol. 2, and the remaining pages will be mailed out as soon as completed. To receive both these volumes and a vinyl loose leaf binder the customer would normally pay $7.90. We are having a special, however, and if these two volumes are ordered before October 31, 1970, the price will be only $6.95!
Carl Gustav Jung, one of the world’s greatest psychiatrists, made these very interesting observations:

All mass movements, as one might expect, slip with the greatest ease down an inclined plane represented by large numbers. Where the many are, there is security; what the many believe must of course be true; what the many want must be worth striving for, and necessary, and therefore good. In the clamor of the many there lies the power to snatch wish-fulfillments by force; sweetest of all, however, is that gentle and painless slipping back into the kingdom of childhood, into the paradise of parental care, into happy-go-luckiness and irresponsibility. All the thinking and looking after are done from the top; to all questions there is an answer; and for all needs the necessary provision is made. The infantile dream state of the mass man is so unrealistic that he never thinks to ask who is paying for this paradise. The balancing of accounts is left to a higher political or social authority, which welcomes the task, for its power is thereby increased; and the more power it has, the weaker and more helpless the individual becomes. (The Undiscovered Self, pages 70-71)

Very few organizations would want to admit that “all the thinking and looking after are done from the top.” The Mormon Church, however, is an exception. In fact, the ward teacher’s message for June 1945 contained these statements:

Any Latter-day Saint who denounces or opposes, whether actively or otherwise, any plan or doctrine advocated by the “prophets, seers, and revelators” of the Church is cultivating the spirit of apostasy . . . Lucifer . . . wins a great victory when he can get members of the Church to speak against their leaders and to “do their own thinking.” . . . When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they purpose a plan—it is God’s plan. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. (Improvement Era, June 1945, page 354)

Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, once stated:

The Lord Almighty leads this Church, and he will never suffer you to be led astray if you are found doing your duty. You may go home and sleep as sweetly as a babe in its mother’s arms, as to any danger of your leaders leading you astray, . . . (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 289)

Heber C. Kimball, First Counsellor to Brigham Young, made these statements:

. . . learn to do as you are told, . . . if you are told by your leader to do a thing, do it, none of your business whether it is right or wrong. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 32)

If you do things according to counsel and they are wrong, the consequences will fall on the heads of those who counseled you, so don’t be troubled. (William Clayton’s Journal, page 334)

Joseph Fielding Smith, who recently became the tenth President of the Church, made this statement:

“Therefore it behooves us, as Latter-day Saints, to put our trust in the presiding authorities of the Church . . . Saints safe in following Church authorities. No man ever went astray by following the counsel of the authorities of the Church. (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 1, page 243)

Those of us who grew up in the Mormon Church were taught that the revelations of Joseph Smith should be received as if from God’s “own mouth” (Doctrine and Covenants 21:5), and that the present-day leader is supposed to be God’s mouthpiece on earth. A careful study of Mormon history and doctrine, however, led us the conclusion that it is wrong to allow others to do our thinking or to put trust in man.
Perhaps those coals, I thought, were from wood burned by Father Adam, . . .

I felt sure, however, that the rocks were the identical rocks that he placed there, for Joseph said, “That altar was built by our Father Adam and there he offered sacrifice.” . . . according to the words of the Prophet Joseph, mankind in that age emigrated eastwardly until they reached the country on or near the Atlantic coast; and that in or near Carolina Noah built his remarkable ship, in which he, his family, and all kinds of animals lived a few days over one year without coming out of it. (The Juvenile Instructor, Organ for Young Latter Day Saints, November 15, 1845, pages 700-701)

Mr. Huntington also claimed that Joseph Smith described the inhabitants of the moon:

“The inhabitants of the moon are more of a uniform size than the inhabitants of the earth, being about 6 feet in height.

“They dress very much like the quaker style and are quite general in style, or the fashion of dress.

“They live to be very old; coming generally, near a thousand years.

This is the description of them as given by Joseph the Seer, and he could “see” whatever he asked the father in the name of Jesus to see. (Journal of Oliver B. Huntington, page 166 of typed copy at Utah State Historical Society; original journal in Henry E. Huntington Library, Pasadena, California)

Although many people could not accept Joseph Smith’s claims, there were a number of people who gave support to his ideas. Martin Harris, for instance, provided Joseph Smith with financial support and became one of the “Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon.” Like Joseph Smith, Martin Harris was a visionary man. William A. Linn gives this information:

Daniel Hendrix relates that as he and Harris were riding to the village one evening, and he remarked on the beauty of the moon, Harris replied that if his companion could only see it as he had, he might well call it beautiful, explaining that he had actually visited the moon, and added that it “was only the faithful who were permitted to visit the celestial regions.” (The Story of the Mormons, New York, 1902, page 35)

Joseph Smith seemed to have great power over the mind of Martin Harris. Mary Rollins Lightner—a devout Mormon—related the following:

A few evenings after his [Joseph Smith’s] visit to our house, Mother and I went over to the Smith home. . . . I sat with others on a plank. . . . After prayer and singing, Joseph began talking. Suddenly he stopped and seemed almost transfixed. He was looking ahead and his face outshone the candle. . . . A short time he looked at us very solemnly and said, “Brothers and Sisters, do you know who has been in our midst this night?” One of the Smith family said, “An angel of the Lord.” Joseph did not answer. Martin Harris was sitting at the Prophet’s feet on a box. He slid to his knees, clasped his arms around the Prophet’s knees and said, “I know, it was our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.”

Joseph put his hand on Martin’s head and answered, “Martin, God revealed that to you. Brothers and Sisters, the Savior has been in our midst. I want you to remember it. He cast a veil over your eyes for you could not endure to look upon him.” (“Mary Elizabeth Rollins Lightner Journal,” as quoted in Conflict at Kirtland, by Max Parkin, pages 82-83)

Although Joseph Smith was able to persuade Martin Harris to become a witness to the Book of Mormon, he had a great deal of trouble with him. In a revelation given in July of 1828, Martin Harris is called a “wicked man”:

And when thou deliverest up that which God had given thee sight and power to translate, thou deliverest up that which was sacred into the hands of a wicked man.

Who has set at naught the counsels of God, and has broken the most sacred promises which were made before God, and has depended upon his own judgment and boasted in his own wisdom. (Doctrine and Covenants, 3:12-13)

Joseph Smith certainly made a mistake when he chose Martin Harris to be one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, for it would be hard to find a more unstable person as far as religion is concerned. In an affidavit dated November 28, 1833, G. W. Stoddard, a resident of Palmyra, stated that as a farmer Harris was “industrious and enterprising,” but that his “moral and religious character was such, as not to entitle him to respect among his neighbors. . . . He was first an orthodox Quaker, then a Universalist, next a Restorationer, then a Baptist, next a Presbyterian, and then a Mormon” (Mormonism Unveiled, by E. D. Howe, 1834, page 260-261).

Martin Harris’ instability did not end when he joined the Mormon Church. In 1846 the Mormon Church’s own publication, Millennial Star, reported the following concerning Harris:

One of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, yielded to the spirit and temptation of the devil a number of years ago—turned against Joseph Smith and became his bitter enemy. He was filled with the rage and madness of a demon. One day he would be one thing, and another day another thing. He soon became partially deranged or shattered, as many believe, flying from one thing to another, as if reason and common sense were thrown off their balance. In one of his fits of Monomania, he went and joined the “Shakers” or followers of Anne Lee. He tarried with them a year or two, or perhaps longer, having had some flare ups while among them; but since Strang has made his entry into the apostate ranks, and hoisted his standard for the rebellious to flock to, Martin leaves the “Shakers,” whom he knows to be right, and has known it for many years, as he said, and joins Strang . . . if the Saints wish to know what the Lord hath said of him, they may turn to the 178th page of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the person there called a “wicked man” is no other than Martin Harris, . . . It is not the first time the Lord chose a wicked man as a witness. . . . evil men like Harris, out of the evil treasure of their hearts bring forth evil things. . . .

Just as our paper was going to press, we learned that Martin Harris, . . . had landed in Liverpool. . . . there was a strangeness about him, and about one or two who came with him. A lying deceptive spirit attends them. . . . they are of their father, the devil, who was a liar from the beginning, and abode not in the truth. The very countenance of Harris will show to every spiritual-minded person who sees him, that the wrath of God is upon him. (Latter-Day Saint’s Millennial Star, vol. 8, November 15, 1846, pages 124-128)

The Mormon writer Richard L. Anderson admits that Martin Harris “changed his religious position eight times” during the period he was in Kirtland, Ohio:

He and other prominent dissenters in the Church were formally excommunicated in the last week of December 1837 . . . Martin Harris remained at Kirtland for the next 30 years in the condition of a fossil embedded in an earlier layer of sediment . . .

Martin Harris also felt strong resentment against Church leaders, in large part stemming from the blow to his ego in never being given a major office. If such thinking is obviously immature, it was nevertheless real to the man who had sacrificed domestic peace, fortune, and reputation to bring about the printing of the Book of Mormon and the founding of the Church. Real or supposed rejection breeds hostility and, at its worst, retaliation. . . .

The foregoing tendencies explain the spiritual wanderlust that afflicted the solitary witness at Kirtland. In this period of his life he changed his religious position eight times, including a rebaptism by a Nauvoo missionary in 1842. Every affiliation of Martin Harris was with some Mormon group except when he was affiliated with the Shaker belief, a position not basically contrary to his Book of Mormon testimony because the foundation of that movement was acceptance of personal revelation from heavenly beings. (Improvement Era, March 1969, page 63)

If we add the “eight times” that Martin Harris changed his religious position in Kirtland to the five changes he made before, we find that he changed his mind thirteen times! Richard Anderson is forced to admit that Martin Harris’ life shows evidence of “religious instability” (Ibid.). The Mormon writer E. Cecil McGavin states that “Martin Harris was an unaggressive, vacillating, easily influenced person who was no more pugnacious than a rabbit . . . His conviction of one day might vanish and be replaced by doubt and fear before the setting of the sun. He was changeable, fickle, and puerile in his judgement and conduct” (The Historical Background for the Doctrine and Covenants, page 23, as quoted in an unpublished manuscript by LaMar Petersen).

At one time Martin Harris even went on a mission for the Strangites. Andrew Jenson, who was Assistant Church Historian wrote the following in the book Church Chronology, under the date of October 1, 1846:

— Martin Harris and others, followers of the apostate James J. Strang, preached among the Saints in England, but could get no influence. (Church Chronology, page 31)

The fact that Martin Harris would join with such a group casts a shadow of doubt upon his testimony to the Book of Mormon, for the Strangites claimed that James Jesse Strang found some plates which he translated with the Urim and Thummim. The Mormons, of course, claim that Strang was a deceiver.

The reader will notice that Richard Anderson admitted that Martin Harris “affiliated with the Shaker belief,” although he feels that this position was “not basically contrary to his Book of Mormon testimony because the foundation of that movement was acceptance of personal revelation from heavenly beings” (Improvement Era, March 1969, page 63).

Now, while it is true that the Shakers believed in revelation, a Mormon could not accept these revelations without repudiating the teachings of Joseph Smith. For instance, the Shakers felt that “Christ has made his second appearance on earth, in a chosen female known by the name of Ann Lee, and acknowledged by us as our blessed mother in the work of redemption” (Sacred Roll and Book, page 358). If Martin Harris accepted this teaching, he was certainly out of harmony with Joseph Smith’s revelations, for in one of the revelations we read that the Son of Man cometh not in the form of a woman, . . .” (Doctrine and Covenants, 49:22)

The Shakers, of course, did not believe the Book of Mormon, but they had a book entitled A Holy, Sacred and Divine Roll and Book: From the Lord God of Heaven, to the Inhabitants of Earth. More than sixty individuals gave testimony to the “Sacred Roll and Book.” Although not all of them mention angels appearing, some of them tell of many angels visiting them—one woman told of eight different visions.

The evidence seems to show that Martin Harris accepted this book as divine revelation. In our Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, page 50, we cited a very revealing statement by Clark Braden:

Harris declared repeatedly that he had as much evidence for a Shaker book he had as for the Book of Mormon. (The Braden and Kelly Debate, page 173)

Since we published this statement evidence has been brought to light from a Mormon source which shows that Harris claimed to have a greater testimony to the Shakers than to the Book of Mormon. In a thesis written at Brigham Young University, Wayne Cutler Gunnell stated that on December 31, 1844, “Phineas H. Young [Brigham Young’s brother] and other leaders of the Kirtland organization” wrote a letter to Brigham Young in which they stated:

There are in this place all kinds of teaching; Martin Harris is a firm believer in Shakerism, says his testimony is greater than it was of the Book of Mormon. (“Martin Harris—Witness and Benefactor to the Book of Mormon,” 1955, page 52)

The fact that Martin Harris would even join with such a group shows that he was unstable and easily influenced by men. Therefore, we feel that his testimony that the Book of Mormon was of divine origin cannot be relied upon. How can we put our trust in a man who was constantly following after movements like the Shakers? Brigham Young himself once stated:

Some of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, who handled the plates and conversed with the angels of God, were afterwards left to doubt and to disbelieve that they had ever seen an angel. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 164)

In the Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2, we devote a great deal of space to the witnesses to the Book of Mormon.

THE TEST

Although a great deal of evidence against Joseph Smith’s claims was presented during the 19th century, the most devastating evidence has come to light within the last few years.

Since Joseph Smith claimed that an angel took the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated, and since both the Kinderhook plates and the Book of Abraham papyri were lost, it appeared that Joseph Smith’s ability as a translator could not be tested. As to Joseph Smith’s claim that the moon was inhabited, very few people living in the 19th century would have believed that some day it would be possible for men to go there. In fact, as late as 1958 Joseph Fielding Smith (who recently became President of the Mormon Church) made these statements:

In relation to the present trend of science in the development of synthetic planets which, for a season revolve around the earth and the trend of science in developing guided missiles, or even the sending of passengers to the moon and other planets, you need not to be troubled in the least . . . Naturally the wonders in the heavens that man has created will be numbered among the signs which have been predicted—the airplanes, the guided missiles, and man-made planets that revolve around the earth. Keep it in mind however, that such man-made planets belong to this earth, and it is doubtful that man will ever be permitted to make any instrument or ship to travel through space and visit the moon or any distant planet.

The Lord will permit men to go so far and no farther, and when they get beyond the proper bounds, he will check them . . .

When man was placed on this earth it became his probationary, or mortal home. Here he is destined to stay until his earthly life is completed, . . . Here we are, and here we should be content to stay. All this talk about space travel and the visiting of other worlds brings to mind vividly an attempt long ago made by foolish men who tried to build to heaven . . . wise men will be content and will wait until the time comes when this earth is cleansed and purified from all sin for heavenly visits, and in that day they will come. (Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, pages 189-192)

Although astronauts have now shown that Joseph Smith’s statements about the moon are not correct, a more serious problem faces the Church. In 1967 the original papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the Book of Abraham was discovered. Egyptologists translated it and found that it has nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. In other words, Joseph Smith’s translation was proven to be completely incorrect. This was a devastating blow to the Church because the Mormon leaders had canonized the Book of Abraham and had made it the very basis of the anti-Negro doctrine.

In spite of the fact that the papyrus absolutely proves that the Book of Abraham is spurious, the Mormon leaders have decided that they cannot give it up without undermining the whole foundation of Mormonism:

The First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints accepts the Book of Abraham as “scripture given to us through the Prophet (Joseph Smith),” President N. Eldon Tanner said Sunday night.

President Tanner, second counselor in the church’s First Presidency, made the statement in response to an article saying the translation of the Book of Abraham was the product of Joseph Smith Jr.’s “imagination.”

The article appears in a publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints . . . Author of the article is Richard P. Howard, historian for the RLDS. (Salt Lake Tribune, May 4, 1970, page 12B)

In a letter to the Editor of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1968, page 8, Naomi Woodbury suggested that the translation of the papyri by Egyptologists could “free us from our dilemma about excluding Negroes from the Priesthood. Perhaps our Father in Heaven intended the papyri to come to light now for just this purpose.” Unfortunately, in an organization where “the thinking” is done from the top, it is almost impossible for the ordinary member to oppose decisions made by the Church leaders. Jim Bridel, a student at Brigham Young University, made this very clear in a statement regarding the anti-Negro doctrine of the Church:

“Most students are unconcerned. They look at it as a matter that the Church will have to decide. You have to understand we are taught unquestioning obedience,” said Jim Bridel, a BYU junior. (Salt Lake Tribune, November 30, 1969, page 12D)

The Mormon writer Klaus Hansen makes these interesting observations in an article recently published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought:

To a professional historian, for example, the recent translation of the Joseph Smith papyri may well represent the potentially most damaging case against Mormonism since its foundation. Yet the “Powers That Be” at the Church Historian’s Office should take comfort in the fact that the almost total lack of response to this translation is an uncanny proof of Frank Kermode’s observation that even the most devastating act of disconfirmation will have no effect whatever on true believers. Perhaps an even more telling response is that of the “liberals,” or cultural Mormons. After the Joseph Smith papyri affair, one might well have expected a mass exodus of these people from the Church. Yet none has occurred. Why? Because cultural Mormons, of course, do not believe in the historical authenticity of the Mormon scriptures in the first place. So there is nothing to disconfirm. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1970, page 110)
The reader will remember that Dr. Hugh Nibley wrote a letter to the Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson in which he stated: “I don’t consider myself an Egyptologist at all, and don’t intend to get involved in the P.G.P. business unless I am forced into it . . . .” (Letter by Hugh Nibley dated June 27, 1967). In the Improvement Era for August 1968, page 56, he admitted that he was “anything but an Egyptologist.” Several years ago Dr. Nibley took some classes in the Egyptian language at the University of Chicago under John A. Wilson and Klaus Baer, but it now appears that Dr. Nibley feels he knows more about the papyri than his tutors! In a letter dated December 11, 1970, Dr. Nibley wrote:

The evidence supporting the Book of Abraham is simply overpowering. In a series of articles in the Era that ended last June I brought up a few important points necessary to laying a foundation for serious study of the subject . . . . Joseph Smith or anyone else could not possibly have faked the Book of Abraham, which I perfectly convinced is a true record. Some of our ideas about it may call for rectification from time to time, but, of the authenticity of the book there can be no doubt . . . . I have studied with both Prof. Baer and Wilson, who translated some of the Misses; they are splendid men but they have no idea of what these particular manuscripts are about . . . . Before long you will see that the Book of Abraham furnishes some of the best evidence for the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph . . . . I must ask you to be patient until this can be demonstrated more fully. (Letter from Hugh Nibley, dated December 11, 1970)

It is really hard to believe that a man could go to such great lengths to keep from facing the truth about the Book of Abraham. How long do the Mormon leaders think they can continue this deception?

The Mormon Church has already had serious trouble with Negroes over the doctrine found in the Book of Abraham that Negroes cannot hold the priesthood. Instead of facing the truth with regard to this matter and giving the priesthood to Negroes, they are trying to pacify them in other ways. Negroes have been added to the Tabernacle Choir and the football team at Brigham Young University, and on June 13, 1970, the Deseret News reported the following:

The bonds of brotherhood between members of the Church and a Negro congregation in Salt Lake City were fastened this week with a plea “to let all America see that blacks and whites can live peacefully together.” Some 500 persons representing the leadership of the Church, including President Joseph Fielding Smith, and of the Church of God in Christ participated in a banquet Wednesday night, climaxing the month-long “Operation Good Samaritan.”

The project started when Rev. M. A. Givens Jr., minister of Deliverance Temple, Church of God in Christ, asked officials of the LDS Church to assist his congregation in raising funds to complete construction of their church building in Salt Lake City.

The Presiding Bishopric accepted the opportunity as a challenge to the Mormon youth to raise at least $30,000 for the building. Youth in 566 wards of the 71 stakes in the Salt Lake and Bountiful areas accepted the challenge and went to work on a variety of fund-raising projects . . . .

Presiding Bishop John H. Vandenberg told the banquet-goers that with 14 more stakes to report, the youths have already raised $32,949. He said that 28,000 young men and women participated in the project . . . .

Music for the banquet was provided by Mrs. Jessie Evans Smith, wife of President Smith, who sang two solo numbers, and the all-Negro Utah Community Choir, which also preformed two selections. (Deseret News, Church Section, June 13, 1970)

Although we feel that this was a good move and that many members of the Mormon Church participated in this project in a sincere effort to help the Negroes, the deed would have been more impressive if it had been performed ten or twenty years ago. Even some members of the church felt that their leaders were trying to buy off the Negro people. In a letter to the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, Bill Morrison stated:

Editor, Tribune: I noticed with incredulity an article in the Salt Lake Tribune (June 10) entitled “Negro Faith, LDS Join In Deliverence Fund.” The substance of the article was that the LDS Church was aiding the construction of the Deliverance Temple, a building owned by the Church of God in Christ, a Negro denomination.

Since I am LDS and take my religion seriously, I question the wisdom of my church leaders giving material or other aid for the purpose of building up another church. A fundamental concept of any religion is that the reason for its existence is that it, and it alone, harbors the truth necessary for salvation.

The Mormon Church adheres to this, but is engaging in support of the growth of another religion . . . . the LDS Church should focus on consolidating its position rather than being concerned with building up the congregations of other churches. The money raised for building Deliverence Temple could have gone to a nonsectarian use such as aid for the mentally retarded or those physically unable to help themselves.

The question appears to be one of aiding the Negro rather than one of aiding a different religion. Would the Mormon Church give $32,000 for construction of a Catholic cathedral? A Jewish synagogue? Probably not.

Why the Negro? The Mormon Church has discriminated against the Negro since its inception. Let’s drop all the rhetoric excusing this and admit it. The aid therefore appears to be a case of LDS Church leaders, in their weakness, attempting to placate the Negro.

If the purpose of this aid isn’t tacit support of another religion but rather an expression of guilt or an attempt at placation, does this mean that the general authorities believe God has erred in not allowing the Negro to hold the priesthood in the LDS Church? (Salt Lake Tribune, June 23, 1970)

Regardless of the motives of the Mormon leaders in performing this deed, we feel that it is a step in the right direction.

FROM A TEA-CHEST?

In the book Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, pages 25-31, we discussed the Kinderhook plates. These plates were made to trick Joseph Smith. Smith claimed that he “translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, through the loins of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 372).

All of the plates were lost, but in 1962 the Improvement Era announced that one of them had been rediscovered. It was claimed that research revealed that false statements had been made concerning the Kinderhook plates and that the “plates are now back in their original category of genuine.” In 1965, however, George Lawrence, a Mormon physicist, examined the plate and found that “the dimensions, tolerances, composition and workmanship are consistent with the facilities of an 1843 blacksmith shop and with the fraud stories of the original participants.” Mr. Lawrence submitted his study to the BYU Archaeological Society, but since they seemed reluctant to print it he allowed us to make public some of his research (see Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, pages 28-29). Mormon scholars will eventually have to come to grips with this problem, and John A. Wittorf has made a move in this direction. Although he still wants to maintain Joseph Smith’s reputation as a translator, he cites George Lawrence’s study and discusses the implications if the plates are “ultimately demonstrated to be fraudulent”:

. . . a report of a physical examination of the plate in 1965 by George M. Lawrence, a Mormon physicist, contained the conclusion that:

“The plate is neither pure copper nor ordinary brass. It may be a low zinc brass or a bronze. The dimensions, tolerances, composition and workmanship are consistent with the facilities of an 1843 blacksmith shop and with the fraud stories of the original participants . . . .”

In view of present archaeological evidence, neither brass nor bronze appears to have been known in North America until European times. It is thought that the first bronze in the New World was probably made in Bolivia about AD 700 . . . In light of the known use of metal in North America, brass or bronze plates in an Illinois mound, bound together with what was reported to be a rusted iron ring, should be regarded with suspicion. However, this would not preclude the possibility of their having been brought into North America from elsewhere . . . .

Joseph Smith’s behavior with regard to the Kinderhook Plates is quite interesting when viewed in perspective. He made no attempt to purchase these artifacts on behalf of the Church, as he did in the case of the papyri from which the Book of Abraham was translated; he forwarded no specific claims for the plates with respect to the Book of Mormon, although he evidently approved of John Taylor’s Times and Seasons editorial on the plates as evidence for the authenticity of the Book; and he left no indication that he was planning to utilize them for the production of another work of scripture as the Quincy Whig, with its headline “Material for Another Mormon Book,” apparently expected him to do.

Accepting the find as genuine, Joseph had facsimile drawings of the plates made, presumably for future study. The brevity of his translation of “a portion of the plates” precludes the possibility that—if the plates are ultimately
Mr. Owens became interested in the idea that the characters might have been “copied from the lid of a Chinese tea-chest,” and submitted the facsimiles of the Kinderhook plates to scholars. On January 10, 1969, he received a letter from Charles T. Sylvester, of the Embassy of the United States of America, Taipei, Taiwan, which contained this information:

According to Professor Li Hsueh-chih of Academia Sinica and National Taiwan University the language on the inscriptions which you sent is that of the Lo tribe that lives in Yunnan Province in the southwest of mainland China. Unfortunately, Professor Li said that he could identify the writing but could not read the inscription . . .

On March 19, 1969, Bruce Owens received a letter from Kun Chang, Department of Oriental Languages, University of California, Berkeley. In this letter we find this statement: “The inscriptions enclosed seem to be the ideographs used by the Lolo tribes in Yunnan.” The Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson also feels that “the script is indeed that of the Lo tribe” (Letter dated August 1, 1969), but he has not been trained to actually read this language.

It is very likely that the men who made the Kinderhook plates had access to a tea-chest. According to Joseph Smith’s mother, her husband received a tea-chest before they moved to Palmyra:

... the only thing which had been brought for Mr. Smith from China was a small chest of tea, which had been delivered into his care, for my husband. (Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith, Liverpool, 1853, page 50) . . .

ARCHAEOLOGY AND THE BOOK OF MORMON

In 1969 we published our book Archaeology and the Book of Mormon. On January 10, 1970, we received a letter from the Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson in which the following statements appeared:

The booklets, The Mormon Kingdom and Archaeology and the Book of Mormon arrived in the mail today. Thank you for sending them . . . I already had a copy of Archaeology and the Book of Mormon but sat myself down this evening and read it again from beginning to end. I must say without qualification that I indorse your views completely as put down in this work (and you may quote me as having said so).

We are very happy with this endorsement of our work. Dee Jay Nelson is probably the most qualified Egyptologist in the Mormon Church, and he has spent years trying to prove that the Book of Mormon is true.
Since printing Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, a number of important things relating to the Book of Mormon and archaeology have come to light. Therefore, we have added an Appendix of 22 pages to this book. This new material brings the book right up to date and increases its value. Those who have already obtained the book will be happy to know that they can obtain a copy of the new material without purchasing the entire book (price of the new Appendix alone is $1.00).

In the new Appendix we deal with Dr. Cyrus Gordon’s claim that a stone found at Bat Creek in Tennessee proves that if the Mormon Church were to accept Gordon’s claim it could actually weaken their case for the Nephites.

In this Appendix we show that there is a growing division between Mormon archaeologists. From 1948 to 1961 the Department of Archaeology at Brigham Young University sent “five archaeological expeditions to Middle America,” but since no evidence for the Nephites has been found interest has declined. The Mormon archaeologist Ross. T. Christensen states:

(2) The archaeology of the Scriptures, which once occupied the center of the picture, indeed was the very purpose for which the Department was created in the first place, now seems to be only a peripheral field. This great study, for which Elder Widtsoe and President McDonald had such high hopes . . . has now been relegated to the position of simply a private research interest on the part of two of the Department’s five faculty members . . . it cannot be said that BYU now officially supports through its archaeology department any kind of research program in the archaeology of the Scriptures. In other words, even though the Department’s original assignment in this field has never been explicitly annulled, still no genuine official support is now forthcoming (Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology, Brigham Young University, June 1970, page 8).

If the Book of Mormon were a true history, we would expect to find hundreds, if not thousands, of inscriptions written in Hebrew or reformed Egyptian in the New World. In 1958 Thomas Stuart Ferguson, a Mormon scholar who founded the New World Archaeological Foundation, stated that digging should continue at an “accelerated pace” and that “eventually we should find decipherable inscriptions in modified (reformed) Egyptian, in a modified or pure Hebrew or in cuneiform, referring to some unique person, place or event in the Book of Mormon” (One Fold and One Shepherd, page 263). On December 2, 1970, we had the opportunity to ask Mr. Ferguson if any such inscription had been found. He indicated that nothing had been found. Although he believed that Bat Creek inscription was written in Hebrew, he felt that it had nothing to do with the people mentioned in the Book of Mormon. It would appear, then, that there is still no proof that the Nephites ever existed. The situation remains the same as it was when Dr. Hugh Nibley wrote these words:

Of course, almost any object could conceivably have some connection with the Book of Mormon, but nothing short of an inscription which could be read and roughly dated could bridge the gap between what might be called a pre-actualistic archaeology and contact with the realities of Nephite civilization . . . All that we have to go on to date is a written history. That does not mean that our Nephites are necessarily mythical, . . . Nephite civilization . . . could just as easily and completely vanish from sight as did the worlds of Ugarit, Ur, or Cnossos; and until some physical remnant of it, no matter how trivial, has been identified beyond question, what can any student of physical remains possibly have to say about it? Everything written so far by anthropologists or archaeologists—even real archaeologists—about the Book of Mormon must be discounted, for the same reason that we must discount studies of the lost Atlantis: not because it did not exist, but because it has not yet been found. (Since Cumorah, 1967, pages 243-244)

While Dr. Nibley would be willing to accept any archaeological evidence for the Book of Mormon, he seems to have closed his mind to any evidence against it. He states:

For one thing the Book of Mormon is immune to attack from the West. No matter how much archaeological evidence may pile up one way or the other, the fact remains that the Book of Mormon never claims to be telling the story of all the people who ever lived in the western hemisphere. . . . Thus, where research in America may conceivably bring forth a wealth of evidence to support the Book of Mormon, no findings can be taken as unequivocal evidence against it. (Improvement Era, November 1970, page 115)

Joseph Fielding Smith, who recently became President of the Mormon Church, has stated:

It is the personal opinion of the writer that the Lord does not intend that the Book of Mormon, at least at the present time, shall be proved true by any archaeological findings. (Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, page 196)

In our book Archaeology and the Book of Mormon we devote a great deal of space to the problems one encounters when he tries to reconcile the Book of Mormon with archaeological discoveries. Notice the description of this book below.

WHOM CAN WE TRUST?

It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. (Psalm 118:8)

SOMEONE has taken the time to count all the verses in the Bible and claims that this text is in the exact center of the Scriptures. Whether this is right or not, it certainly is a verse that highlights a central truth. Both in salvation and sanctification we must trust in the Lord Jesus Christ and not put our faith in anything or anyone, including ourselves. . . .

Reliable Revelations?

In our three-volume work The Case Against Mormonism, we have presented a great deal of evidence which demonstrates that the Book of Abraham was a work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination and that the anti-Negro doctrine contained in its pages must be abandoned.

Fawn M. Brodie has recently come out with a “Revised and Enlarged” edition of her book No Man Knows My History. In this new edition she makes these interesting comments concerning the Book of Abraham problem:

From the standpoint of the church which survived him, the Book of Abraham was the most unfortunate thing Joseph ever wrote. By outlining the Civil War, which forever banished slavery as an issue between Mormon and gentile, its racial doctrine preserved the discrimination that is the ugliest thesis in existing Mormon theology.

Moreover, the book laid Joseph open to the ridicule of future scholars, for his papyri were almost certain to be examined at some later date by experts in the Egyptian language. Unlike the golden plates, which had been whisked back into heaven, the mummies and papyri were kept exhibit in both Kirtland and Nauvoo. The actual papyri escaped scholarly examination for many years. So after Joseph’s death they were sold . . . and were thought to have burned in the great Chicago fire. Such a disaster might have ended all chance of exposing Joseph’s mistake had he not preserved three facsimiles of the papyri, which he published in 1842 with elaborate interpretations.

These interpretations were first challenged in 1860, . . . to examine the facsimiles agreed that they were ordinary funeral documents such as can be found on thousands of Egyptian graves. The discovery in 1967 that eleven fragments of the papyri had found their way to the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art led to fresh interpretations by scholars which confirmed the earlier appraisals. (No Man Knows My History, New York, 1971, pages 174-175)

On pages 422-425 of the same book, Mrs. Brodie states:

. . . when the eleven fragments were given to the Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake City, many of the devout thought confidently that they would prove to be scientific evidence of the divine claims of their prophet.

Translation of the fragments by Egyptologists John S. Wilson and Klaus Baer of the University of Chicago Oriental Institute and Richard A. Parker of Brown University, indicated, however, that some of the fragments were Book of the Dead scrolls . . . and that others were from the Egyptian Book of Breathings, . . .

A remarkable compilation of the documentation on the papyri appeared in 1968 in two issues of Dialogue, A Journal of Mormon Thought, a scholarly Mormon publication not subject to censorship by the church leadership. . . . Professor Hugh Nibley of the Brigham Young University wrote defensively:

“So far everything that has appeared in print about the newly found papyri has been written either by hysterical opponents of everything Mormon or by people innocent of any bias in favor of Joseph Smith. . . . we have seen some of the papyri that were in Smith’s possession but there is no evidence that we have seen them all, and it is apparent that only one small piece among them has any direct bearing on the Book of Abraham.”

The controversy over the papyri was further heightened in 1968 by that acquisition and publication by Jerald Tanner of a filmed copy of Joseph Smith’s “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar.” Formerly unknown save to Mormon archivists, which proved to be at least as damaging to Joseph Smith’s claims as a translator as the translations of the papyri by the Egyptologists. Tanner, together with Grant Heward, in commenting on the specific explanations Joseph Smith gave for numerous Egyptian characters, pointed out that “The characters from fewer than four lines of the papyrus make up forty-nine verses of the Book of Abraham, containing more than two thousand words.” Their study indicates that the Book of Abraham did in fact come from a portion of the papyri now under scrutiny by scholars, and that Professor Nibley’s suggestion that the Book of Abraham was translated from papyri not yet found is without foundation.

What makes for an intolerable complication to the Book of Abraham controversy is the fact that several lines in the sacred book constitute the theological basis for the Mormon Church’s long-standing discrimination against the Negro. . . .

From this “scriptural precedent” the Mormon Church over the years developed an elaborate Jim Crow system in regard to black converts. Though all white and Oriental males were granted the right to “hold the priesthood,” this right was denied to all blacks. . . . the Mormon leadership now faces a dilemma of peculiar complexity. To heed the Egyptologists means repudiation of the Book of Abraham, which could make all of Joseph Smith’s holy books suspect. To give the blacks the priesthood without a new revelation or “manifesto” also means implicit repudiation of the Book of Abraham. But to continue to deny blacks the full privileges or membership in the Church on the basis of a book that is manifestly suspect as history seems to be an increasing number of Mormons an immoral process, alien to the ideas of the Declaration of Independence and to the fundamental injunction of Christianity about loving one’s neighbor as oneself. . . .

If the Mormon Church does not modify its racist practices, it seems likely that its future converts in large part will continue to come, as they have been in recent years, from right-wing groups who are hostile to black people under any circumstances. If so, the alienation of the intellectuals from the Church will continue. . . . As a social organization the Church is a dynamo of inexhaustible energy. It remains to be seen if Mormon leadership now seriously impeded by its failure to retire before they become aged the men at the peak of the pyramid, can continue to direct this dynamo in the direction of social betterment and racial understanding. (No Man Knows My History, pages 422-425)

In an article entitled “What is ‘The Book of Breathings’?” Dr. Hugh Nibley now frankly admits that the facsimiles for Joseph Smith’s “Book of Abraham” were taken from the Book of Breathings papyrus. He admits that the Book of Breathings is an Egyptian funerary text, but he is still unwilling to admit that the Book of Abraham is spurious:

Upon their publication in 1967, the Joseph Smith Papyri Nos. X and XI were quickly and easily identified as pages from the Egyptian “Book of Breathings.” . . . the Book of Breathings is before all else, as Bonnet observes, a composite, made up of “compilations and excerpts from older funerary sources and Mortuary formulas.” . . . The Book of Breathings is the great time binder; it comes towards the end of Egyptian civilization and so wraps everything up, right from the beginning . . .

The lateness of the “Breathing” documents, instead of detracting from their value actually enhances it. For it not only gives them a chance to embrace the entire funerary literature of the past, but places them in that crucial moment of transition in which they are able to transmit much ancient Egyptian lore to early Jewish and Christian circles. . . .

Of particular interest to us is the close association of the Book of Breathings with the Facsimiles of the Book of Abraham. It can be easily shown by matching up the fibers of the papyri that the text of Joseph Smith Pap. No. XI was written on the same strip of material as Facsimile Number 1, the writing beginning immediately to the left of the “lion-couch” scene . . .

Thus our “Sensen” Papyrus is closely bound to all three facsimiles by physical contact, putting us under moral obligation to search out possible relationships between the content of the four documents.

As a “packaging job” the Book of Breathings is a most remarkable performance, “an attempt to include all essential elements of belief in a future life in a work shorter and more simple than the Book of the Dead.” . . .

The Book of Breathings is the end-product of a long process of abbreviating and epitomizing which was characteristicly Egyptian . . . the Book of Breathings . . . contains the essential elements of the Egyptian funerary rites from the earliest times; . . . The Book of Breathings is not to be dismissed as it has been, as a mere talisman against stinking corpses; it is a sermon on breathing in every Egyptian sense of the word. ( Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1971) pages 153, 158-160, 162-164 and 166)
It would appear that Dr. Nibley still has no real answers to give his people and that the authenticity of the Book of Abraham has been disproven by the translations of the Egyptologists.

In our Case Against Mormonism we not only show that the Book of Abraham is spurious but also that the Book of Mormon is a product of the 19th century and that Joseph Smith’s revelations have been changed. In a review of the first two volumes of this work Kenneth Kantzer, Dean of Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, made these statements:

> These books represent no ordinary polemic against Mormonism. This is the definitive, fully-documented, utterly-devastating case against the divine authority and truthfulness of the foundational documents upon which the Mormon religion is based. . . . It is difficult to see how the Mormon church can survive the devastating destruction of its foundations as presented in these volumes. (Evangelical Beacon, Minneapolis, Minn., vol. 42, no.1, October 8, 1968, page 7)

Marvin S. Hill, who teaches history at Brigham Young University, seems to feel that the Church can survive almost any attack on its scriptures by appealing to the fact that it is led by revelation at the present time:

> While Mormons venerate their sacred books, . . . the final word comes not from any scriptural passage but from the living oracles. The Saints hang more upon the words of their prophets than upon the canons of the written law. This is one reason it may make little difference to them if they are told that some of the divine books have been altered, or even that the accepted view of the origin of one of their books might have to be revised.

> . . . Yesterday’s mistakes and revisions seem insignificant when compared with the advantage of social stability which derives from waiting upon the word of the Lord. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1970, page 96)

In The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, we show that even though the Church claims to be led by revelation the evidence clearly shows that it is not. Joseph F. Smith, the sixth President of the Mormon Church, testified as follows in the Reed Smoot Investigation:

> Senator Dubois.— Have you received any revelations from God, which has been submitted by you and the apostles to the body of the church in their semiannual conference, which revelation had been sustained by that conference, through the upholding of their hands?
> Mr. Smith.— Since when?
> Senator Dubois.— Since you became President of the Church.
> Mr. Smith.— No, sir; none whatever.
> Senator Dubois. — Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became President of the Church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?
> Mr. Smith.— I cannot say that I have.
> Senator Dubois.— Can you say that you have not?
> Mr. Smith.— No; I cannot say that I have not.
> Senator Dubois.— Then you do not know whether you have received any such revelations as you have described or whether you have not?
> Mr. Smith.— Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently but they are not in the sense of revelations. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 483-484)

On page 99 of the same volume Joseph F. Smith stated: “Mr. Smith, I have never pretended to nor do I profess to have received revelations.” From this it is plain to see that just because a man is ordained a “Prophet, Seer, and Revelator,” it does not necessarily mean that he is. If Joseph F. Smith was only as susceptible to the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord as “any good Methodist,” then why should his word be trusted above that of a good Methodist?

> Although the Mormon Church is supposed to be led by revelation the evidence of this revelation is very hard to find. No new revelations have been added to the Doctrine and Covenants since the Manifesto of 1890.

We are told that revelation is found in the Conferences of the Church, when the leaders of the Church speak under the inspiration of the Lord, but how can we know when they are speaking under the Spirit of the Lord? Obviously, much of what has been said at the conferences of the church down through the years was not spoken under the inspiration of the Lord.

Today the Mormon Church is faced with some very serious problems, and these problems are complicated by the fact that some of the Mormon leaders are very old. Wallace Turner made these statements:

> In 1966, I attended the April conference in Salt Lake City and was able to watch the almost casual way this disposal of power was reaffirmed. President David O. McKay was then greatly enfeebled by age and a stroke. He sat in the top row of the tiers of seats for the General Authorities while his first counselor, Hugh B. Brown, spoke, explaining that President McKay was “presiding” while Brown was “conducting” the meeting. Then the ninety-two old man slowly moved two or three steps to the rostrum, so aged and frail that one’s anxiety was increased lest he fall. He spoke slowly and indistinctly and with great effort. Since his stoke at age ninety his once-powerful voice had faded. But he was still handsome and straight as he stood erect at the rostrum, . . .

> (The Mormon Establishment, pages 52-53)

David O. McKay lived to be 96 years old, but he was in very poor health toward the end of his life and was hardly in any condition to function as Prophet, Seer and Revelator for the Church.

Instead of appointing a younger man to lead the Church, they chose Joseph Fielding Smith who is now 94 years old. He is the son of Joseph F. Smith—the man who testified that although he was the Prophet, Seer and Revelator of the Church, he had never received a revelation.

In our three volumes of The Case Against Mormonism we deal at great lengths with these matters. The reader will notice that we have extended our special offer on The Case Against Mormonism. The regular price for all three volumes is $8.85, but if they are ordered before August 31, 1971, the price will be only $6.95.

MORE SKELETONS?

After Joseph Smith’s death the Egyptian papyri, which were supposed to contain the books of Abraham and Joseph, were lost. In 1967, however, the Mormon Church announced the “discovery” of eleven pieces of this papyri at the Metropolitan Museum. Another fragment had also been preserved in the Church Historian’s Office, but the Mormon leaders tried to suppress this fact. Jay M. Todd, who has served as an editor and staff writer for the Church’s Improvement Era, states that Dr. Clark, of Brigham Young University, knew about this fragment for thirty years but was told to suppress this information:

> “Outside of a few associates, Dr. Clark had kept the fragment a matter of confidence, under instructions from the Historians Office, for over 30 years” (The Sage of the Book of Abraham, Salt Lake City, 1969, page 364).

Two years after we published a photographic fragment of this Joseph Smith’s “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar,” the Church leaders decided that it was time to “find” it. The LDS Church Section of the Church’s Deseret News carried this statement from February 10, 1968:

> “An interesting development in the work going on at BYU by Dr. Hugh Nibley on the papyri fragments turned over to the Church by the New York Museum of Art is the locating of another fragment in the vaults at the Church Historian’s Office.”

We now have evidence which seems to show that the Mormon leaders have still not brought all of the skeletons out of the closet. In the Messenger for October, 1970, we stated: “We have heard from two separate sources that Dr. Nibley has discovered more of Joseph Smith’s papyri—possibly Facsimile No. 2. If any of our readers know the location of the papyri or have any other information on this subject we would appreciate it if they would let us know.”

In a letter dated October 5, 1970, we received the following information:

> I received your Salt Lake City Messenger . . . you mention about more papyri and for any information on the subject.

Here is what I know:

> The first I heard about more Joseph Smith Papyri was from you . . . I went to see ____ [a prominent Mormon who is acquainted with Dr. Nibley] . . . He stated . . . Nibley told him that there was more papyri found and that it was discovered in Texas . . . Mention was made by Nibley that Facsimile No. 2 was among the papyri.

The same man who sent us this information talked with another man who claimed:

> Hugh Nibley mentioned that there were 2 scrolls still in existence which were once in the possession of Joseph Smith. One was owned by Emma Smith and the other by someone who had some connection with the R.L.D.S. Church. . . .

> The Papyrus is in a small town safe and it is owned by an antique dealer. The dealer bought it from Emma Smith or relatives; he believed that they were sacred and said that they were Joseph’s. He also said that they had Masonic symbols on the Papyrus and that he wouldn’t sell them even for $750.00.
It could be that Dr. Nibley’s has known of this papyri for some time. In The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, page 1, we stated:

A friend of Dr. Nibley’s gave us this information in a letter dated August 13, 1968: “I saw photographs of them [i.e., the papyri in the Metropolitan Museum] for the first time in 1963, I believe . . . I wrote Nibley that some of the Joseph Smith papyri still existed but that I was not at liberty to say where, and he wrote me about the same time that someone in Utah had located a pile of unpublished Joseph Smith papyri.”

However this may be, it would appear that Dr. Nibley has recently made statements which would indicate that more of the papyri are still in existence and that he knows their location. Now, these papyri may be very important to those who are studying Mormonism, but we do not feel that we can put a great deal of stock in the statement that they are in Texas. This may be the case, but we remember that Dr. Atiya tried to divert us when we were on the track of the papyri in the Metropolitan Museum. He had a friend of ours write to a university back East when he knew the exact location of the papyri.

Perhaps some of our readers can provide a few clues that could lead to the discovery of the rest of the papyri. These manuscripts may contain some very important evidence concerning the development of the Mormon Church.

GOD’S POWER

On April 23, 1971, the Salt Lake Tribune printed this statement: “Utah is ranked among the five states in the country with the worst drug abuse problems on a per capita basis, a national authority on drug abuse and treatment said there Thursday.”

The drug situation in Utah as well as in other parts of the country certainly points to the fact that there is a spiritual problem in America today. We feel, however, that the Lord is able to deal with this problem. In an earlier issue of the Messenger we discussed the conversion of Tom Skinner. The reader may remember that Tom Skinner grew up in Harlem and became the leader of “the Harlem Lords” — a gang of over 100 men. He had “led the fellows in more than fifteen large scale gang fights.” In his book Black and Free he states that he “had twenty-two notches on the handle of my knife which meant that my blade had gone into twenty-two fellows.” One night Skinner was “preparing strategy for a gang fight.” This was to be “the largest gang rumble ever to take place in the city of New York.” Five gangs “were going to unite together to fight a coalition of gangs from the other side of the city.” Over “3,000 fellows” were to be involved in this fight. While planning this gang war, Tom Skinner was listening to a rock and roll program on the radio. At nine o’clock that night an “unscheduled gospel program came on.” That night Tom Skinner decided to leave the gang and become a Christian. He states:

For the first time in my life I took a good look at Jesus Christ. Not so much what Tom Skinner had done— the money I’d stolen, the fact that there were fellows who were going to bear permanent bodily injury for the rest of their lives because of me and the gang fights I’d led. But I began to think of what I had become, arrogant, proud, bigoted, hateful. I was as bigoted as any white racist. (Black and Free, page 57)

. . . that particular night I came to Jesus Christ. Because God can’t lie, Jesus Christ actually took up residence in my life and began to live in me, and He’s been living there ever since.

It’s been the most thrilling, the most adventurous life I believe a person could ever live. I’ve had the privilege of actually having the God of heaven and earth live inside me. . . .

I turned the radio off and began to think about the wonder of this new life—and was confronted with a reminder of the old Tom Skinner.

There in front of me were the plans for the rumble. Here was a dilemma! (Ibid., page 64)

You don’t just walk up to a gang of fellows that you’ve been leading around for two years in rioting, looting, fighting and law-breaking and say, “Well, guys, it’s been nice knowing you. So long.”

No one quits a gang. In fact, just two weeks before I had personally broken the arms and legs of two fellows who told me they were going to quit. And these fellows got off easy. . . .

The preacher signed off the air that night by saying that the promise of God to any person who receives Christ is that He will never leave you nor forsake you. He quoted a passage from the Bible that went like this: “Jesus says, Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.”

That’s all I had to protect myself as I walked to the meeting place of the Harlem Lords—just a promise of God.

I moved into the smoky room and walked to the front. There were 129 fellows in that room. Every one of them carried a knife. Some had guns—and none of them had any reservations about using their weapons. . . .
I motioned for silence and began to speak. I told of the broadcast—how the speaker had given me insight to truth I’d never heard before. I told them that I was convinced Jesus Christ had died for all the sins I’d ever committed, and had given me ever-lasting life.

“Last night, I asked Him to come inside me and live in me. And He answered me,” I said.

All the time I was talking, I could see the number two man in the gang. His nickname was “The Mop.” We call him “The Mop” because whenever there was a gang fight, this fellow wasn’t happy unless he drew blood from someone and wiped his foot in it. I knew “The Mop” wanted to be number one man. He would term my telling them that I had committed my life to Jesus Christ as a sign of weakness. And he would relish the opportunity to put his knife between my ribs or across my throat.

I forced myself to finish without weakening. . . . You could have heard a pin drop. No one spoke. No one even moved. I walked down the aisle and out into the night air, half expecting a knife to come tearing into my back or a bullet to dig into my flesh. But nothing! I walked out without one person raising a hand against me.

I nearly shouted my thankfulness to God.

Two nights later I saw “The Mop” on the street. He motioned to me and said, “Tom, I wanna talk to you.”

We stopped and he grinned. “You know,” he said, “the other night when you got up and walked out of that meeting I was gonna really cut you up. I was all set to put my knife right in your back.”

“And why didn’t you?”

“I couldn’t move,” he said, his eyes growing wider. “It was like somebody was holding me back—like I was glued to my seat!”

He licked his lips and continued. “And I talked to some of the other guys, too. I wasn’t the only one. They said the same thing—that something, somebody, actually held them back in their seats.”

Now my eyes widened and I felt the hair on the back of my neck rise.

“What d’ya make of it Tom?” he asked.

“I know that the Christ I’ve committed myself to isn’t just some fictitious character who lived two thousand years ago . . . some nebulous spirit floating around in the air somewhere. I know now that Jesus Christ is alive! He’s real! . . .”

The toughness was gone from my former associate in crime. I turned to “The Mop” and asked, “Would you like to know who that ‘Somebody’ was who kept you glued to your seat?”

He nodded.

Standing on 153rd Street and McCombs Place—two blocks from the Polo Grounds—an ex-gang leader, a Christian less than 48 hours, led another group member to Christ. Apart from the thrill of my own commitment to Christ, I can’t think of any other experience as thrilling as introducing “The Mop” to Jesus Christ.

“The Mop” has since graduated from law school and has entered one of the largest law firms in the city of New York, proof that Jesus Christ transforms the whole individual. (Ibid., pages 65-67)

Many people believe that Christianity has failed, J. B. Phillips, however, made this observation:

How many people, what proportion of people, do you suppose have ever tried to take the teaching of Jesus Christ seriously in any century? Your guess is as good as mine; but I should seriously doubt it’s ever been much more than a very small percentage. Most people, even if you can get them to take the trouble to learn what Jesus Christ really said, did and taught, don’t do anything about it. So how can you be surprised that the result seems so poor? I don’t believe that Christianity, the real thing, has ever failed, but I am certain that it hasn’t been given a fair chance to work, by most people. It’s so much easier to go your own sweet way and say that Christianity is a beautiful ideal since a great many people take the line of least resistance, that’s just what’s happened. The results are written all over the world. But don’t blame Christianity, blame people—you might even blame yourself. (Plain Christianity, page 66)

We thoroughly agree with J. B. Phillips. The gospel of Christ worked for us. It changed our lives, and we believe that it will do the same for anyone who will try it. It does not matter what we have done in the past; God stands ready to forgive us.

Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. (Isaiah 1:18)

As we indicated in our last Messenger, we are working on a full size book on Christianity and hope to have it published in the near future.

New Find Undermines Mormonism

We feel very honored and happy to announce one of the most important discoveries since Joseph Smith founded the Mormon Church in 1830. This is the discovery by Wesley P. Walters of an original document which is more than 140 years old. This document proves that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, New York, in 1826. (The reader will find a photograph of this discovery on page two of this paper.) The importance of this discovery cannot be overstated, for it establishes the historicity of the account of the trial which was first published in Fraser’s Magazine in 1873. We quote the following from that publication:

Warrant issued upon written complaint upon oath of Peter G. Bridgeman, who informed that one Joseph Smith of Bainbridge was a disorderly person and an impostor.

Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826. Prisoner examined: says that he came from the town of Palmyra, and had been at the house of Josiah Stowel in Bainbridge most of time since; had small part of time been employed in looking for mines, but the major part had been employed by said Stowel on his farm, and going to school. That he had a certain stone which he had occasionally looked at to determine where hidden treasures in the bowels of the earth were; that he professed to tell in this manner where gold mines were a distance under ground, and had looked for Mr. Stowel several times, and had informed him where he could find these treasure, and Mr. Stowel had been engaged in digging for them. That at Palmyra he pretended to tell by looking at this stone where coined money was buried in Pennsylvania, and while at Palmyra had frequently ascertained in that way where most property was of various kinds; that he had occasionally been three years, but of late had pretty much given it up on account of his injuring his health, especially his eyes, making them sore; that he did not solicit business of this kind, and had always rather declined having anything to do with this business.

Josiah Stowel sworn: says that prisoner had been at his house something like five months; had been employed by him to work on farm part of time; that he pretended to have skill of telling where hidden treasures in the earth were by means of looking through a certain stone; that prisoner had looked for him sometimes; once to tell him about money buried in Bend Mountain in Pennsylvania, once for gold on Monument Hill, and once for a salt spring; and that he positively knew that the prisoner could tell, and did possess the art of seeing those valuable treasures through the medium of said stone; that he found the (word illegible) at Bend and Monument Hill as prisoner represented it; that prisoner had looked through said stone for Deacon Attleton for a mine, did not exactly find it, but got a ___ (word unfinished) of ore which resembled gold, he thinks; that prisoner had told by means of this stone where a Mr. Bacon had buried money; that he and prisoner had been in search of it; that prisoner said it was in a certain root of a stump five feet from surface of the earth, and with it would be found a tail feather; that said Stowel and prisoner there upon commenced digging, found a tail feather, but money was not; that he supposed the money moved down. That prisoner did offer his services; that he never deceived him; that prisoner looked through stone and described Josiah Stowel’s house and outhouses, while at Palmyra at Simpson Stowel’s, correctly; that he had told about a painted tree, with a man’s head painted upon by means of said stone. That he had been in company with prisoner digging for gold, and had the most implicit faith in prisoner’s skill.

Arad Stowel sworn: says that he went to see whether prisoner could convince him that he possessed the skill he professed to have, upon which prisoner laid a book upon a white cloth, and proposed looking through another stone which was white and transparent, hold the stone to the candle, turn his head to book, and read. The deception appeared so palpable that witness went off disgusted.

McMaster sworn: says he went with Arad Stowel, and likewise came away disgruntled. Prisoner pretended to him that he could discover objects at a distance by holding this white stone to the sun or candle; that prisoner rather declined looking into a hat at his dark coloured stone, as he said it hurt his eyes.

Although the Bainbridge court record was printed a few times, it did not become too well known until Fawn Brodie printed it in her book No Man Knows My History. Immediately after her book was printed the Mormon leaders declared that the record was a forgery. The following statements appeared in the “Church Section” of the Deseret News:

. . . the alleged find is no discovery at all, for the purported record has been included in other books . . . after all her puffing and promise the author produces no court record at all though persistently calling it such . . . This alleged record is obviously spurious . . . The really vital things which a true record must contain are not there, though there is a lot of surplus verbiage set out in an impossible order which the court was not required to keep.

Above is a photograph of Justice Albert Neely’s bill showing the costs involved in several trials in 1826. The fifth item from the top mentions the trial of “Joseph Smith The Glass looker.” When the letter “s” was repeated in documents of Joseph Smith’s time, as in the word “glass,” the two letters appeared as a “p” (see the word “assault” in items 1, 4, 7 and 9). To the left we have typed out the portion of the bill which mentions Joseph Smith. This bill proves that the published court record is authentic.
however, led to the discovery that the “court record” had been printed ten years previous to this in Fraser’s Magazine. In a “Supplement” to his book, Dr. Kirkham conceded that it had been printed in 1873.

Dale L. Morgan did research on this matter and discovered that the trial was actually mentioned as early as 1831 in a letter published in the Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, printed in Utica, N.Y. The letter is “signed” A.W.B., and Mr. Morgan identifies him from subsequent articles as A.W. Benton ("No Man Knows My History", page 418 A). Since Mr. Benton lived in Bainbridge, his account is very important:

Messrs. Editors—... thinking that a fuller history of their founder, Joseph Smith, jr. might be interesting... I will take the trouble to make a few remarks... For several years preceding the appearance of his book, he was about the country in the character of a glass looker: Pretending, by means of a certain stone, or glass, which he put in a hat, to be able to discover lost goods, hidden treasures, mines of gold and silver, &c. &c. In this town, a wealthy farmer, named Josiah Stowell, together with others spent large sums of money in digging for hidden money, which this Smith pretended he could see, and told them where to dig; but they never found their treasure. At length the public, becoming wearied with the base imposition which he was palming upon the credulity of the ignorant, for the purpose of sponging his living from their earnings, had him arrested as a disorderly person, tried and condemned before a court of justice. But considering his youth, (he then being a minor,) and thinking he might reform his conduct, he was designedly allowed to escape. This was four or five years ago. (Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate, April 9, 1831, page 120)

Dr. Hugh Nibley tries to dismiss Benton’s letter as “fiction.” In his book The Myth Makers, page 157, we find the following: “...we are inclined to regard A.W. B.’s story of the 1826 trials as fiction... without the reality of the peep-stones, the whole legend of the 1826 trials collapses... the 1826 trial, unattested in any source but his for fifty years, was a product of A.W. B.’s wishful thinking.”

We could not agree with Dr. Nibley concerning this matter. In our book Joseph Smith and Money-Digging, we devoted over 15 pages to the question of the authenticity of the trial. On page 38 we concluded: “Although the evidence supporting the authenticity of the ‘court record’ seems to be rather convincing, more research needs to be done.” During the past two years Wesley P. Walters has been doing a great deal of research and has made some very important discoveries which tend to support the 1826 trial. The discovery which we report in this issue of the Messenger, however, is certainly the most important, for it absolutely proves that the 1826 trial actually took place and that the published report is authentic.

The document which Wesley P. Walters has found is Justice Albert Neely’s bill showing the costs involved in several trials in 1826. The reader can see from the photograph on page 2 that the fifth item from the top mentions the trial of “Joseph Smith The Glass Looker.” This statement alone seems to show that the published account of the trial is authentic. Besides this, however, Neely’s bill provides additional evidence. It states that the trial took place on “March 20, 1826,” and this is precisely the date found in the published account of the trial: “Prisoner brought before Court March 20, 1826” (Fraser’s Magazine, February 1873, page 229). In Albert Neely’s bill the fee for this trial is listed as "$2.68," and this is the exact figure found in the printed record:...

In the face of this evidence it is impossible to continue to deny the authenticity of the court record.

IMPORTANCE OF DISCOVERY

Now that Wesley P. Walters has proven beyond all doubt that the Bainbridge court record is authentic, it will be interesting to see how the Mormon leaders will react. They have previously stated that the record is “spurious.” The Mormon scholar Francis W. Kirkham has stated that if the court record could be proven authentic, it would show that Mormonism itself is untrue:

A careful study of all facts regarding this alleged confession of Joseph Smith in a court of law that he had used a seer stone to find hidden treasure for purposes of fraud, must come to the conclusion that no such record was ever made, and therefore, is not in existence. ...If any evidence had been in existence that Joseph Smith had used a seer stone for fraud and deception, and especially had he made this confession in a court of law as early as 1826, or four years before the Book of Mormon was printed, and this confession was in a court record, it would have been impossible for him to have organized the restored Church. (A New Witness For Christ In America, vol. 1, page 385-387)

If a court record could be identified, and if it contained a confession by Joseph Smith which revealed him to be a poor, ignorant, deluded, and superstitious person—unable himself to write a book of any consequence, and whose church could not endure because it attracted only similar persons of low mentality—if such a court record confession could be identified and proved, then it follows that his believers must deny his claimed divine guidance which led them to follow him... How could he be a Prophet of God, the leader of the Restored Church to these tens of thousands, if he had been the superstitious fraud which “the pages from a book” declared he confessed to be? (Ibid., pages 486-487)

In his book The Myth Makers, Dr. Hugh Nibley has written almost 20 pages in an attempt to discredit the “Bainbridge court record.” On page 142 of Dr. Nibley’s book we find this statement: “... If this court record is authentic it is the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith.” Dr. Nibley’s book also states that if the authenticity of the court record could be established it would be “the most devastating blow to Smith ever delivered...” (Ibid.)

Now that the authenticity of the court record has been established, the Mormon Church leaders are faced with a serious dilemma. The record shows plainly that Joseph Smith was deeply involved in magic practices at the very time he was supposed to be preparing himself to receive the plates for the Book of Mormon. A careful examination of Joseph Smith’s story of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and even the text of the book itself reveals that it is just an extension of his money-digging practices. For example, the court record shows that Joseph Smith had used a stone placed in his hat to find treasures “for three years” prior to 1826. Now according to eye witnesses to the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith translated the plates in the same manner. David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, stated:

I will now give you a description of the manner in which the Book of Mormon was translated. Joseph would put the seer stone into a hat, and put his face in the hat, drawing it closely around his face to exclude the light; and in the darkness the spiritual light would shine. A piece of something resembling parchment would appear, and on that appeared the writing. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, by David Whitmer, page 12)

The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts frankly admitted that Joseph Smith sometimes used a “Seer Stone” to translate:

The seer stone referred to here was a chocolate-colored, somewhat egg-shaped stone which the Prophet found while digging a well in company with his brother Hyrum, for Mr. Clark Chase, near Palmyra, N.Y. It possessed the qualities of Urim and Thummim, since by means of it—as described above—as well as by means of the Interpreters found with the Nephite record, Joseph was able to translate the characters engraved on the plates. (A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Published by the Church, vol. 1, page 129)

In the Book of Mormon we read: “And the Lord said: I will prepare unto my servant Gazelem, a stone, which shall shine forth in darkness unto light, ...” (Book of Mormon, Alma 37:23). In the Doctrine and Covenants 78:9, Gazelem is identified as “Joseph Smith Jun.”

It is interesting to note that the gold plates of the Book of Mormon were supposed to have been found in the Hill Cumorah. In light of the court record, however, this sounds like just another extension of Joseph Smith’s money-digging schemes. In our book Joseph Smith and Money-Digging we explore these parallels at greater length.

DOES TRUTH MATTER?

Jesus once said: “And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:32). Those of us who were raised in the Mormon Church should be glad that the Lord has sent us light so that we can be set free from the errors into which Joseph Smith has led us. Unfortunately, however, Jesus also said that “men loved darkness rather than light, ...” (John 3:19). It is sometimes very difficult to receive the truth when it comes in conflict with our preconceived opinions.
The reader will remember that when the original papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham was rediscovered in 1867, it was submitted to Egyptologists. These Egyptologists translated the papyrus and found that it was in reality the Egyptian “Book of Breathings” and had nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. This was a perfect opportunity for the Mormon leaders to free themselves from the anti-Negro doctrine found in the Book of Abraham, but instead they decided to suppress the truth concerning this matter. A number of fantastic theories were proposed in an attempt to save the Book of Abraham. Some claimed that the characters on the papyrus had a double meaning and some even went so far as to state that Joseph Smith received the Book of Abraham by revelation and didn’t even need the papyrus! Dr. Henry Eyring, for instance, recently made this statement:

Now, the Lord didn’t need the Book of Abraham—those scrolls. He was pretty well clear on everything without that. So whatever was on them wouldn’t have helped him much, I suspect, and so the essential ingredient in the Book of Abraham is whatever the Prophet was inspired to write down… To me, it’s very exciting to study the Book of Abraham itself to find out how the Lord works. . . . I wouldn’t look in it to find out whether He does work or not—I already know that. I also wouldn’t look into the matter to find out whether I thought Joseph Smith was a Prophet, because I think there are a hundred things—in fact, to anyone who is curious, I would be glad to enumerate them—where it seems to me evident that he was much more than that… I don’t like to say it in this crude way, but I think it’s quite an interesting way, maybe a shocking way: it wouldn’t make a bit of difference to me if the scholars, studying the scrolls that led the Prophet to think about the problem of Abraham and write about it—it wouldn’t make a bit of difference to me if they discovered that it was a bill of lading for wheat in the Lower Nile. You see, some people don’t feel that way about it. But I think the Lord actually inspired Joseph. (Book of Abraham Symposium, April 3, 1970, Salt Lake Institute of Religion, page 3)

Dr. Eyring’s idea is about as far from reality as it is possible to get, for Joseph Smith himself claimed that the Book of Abraham was a “correct translation” of the papyrus (see History of the Church, vol. 2, page 351). It would seem that some of the Mormon scholars have made up their minds that Joseph Smith was a prophet and no amount of evidence will convince them otherwise. This reminds us of the International Flat Earth Research Society. The Salt Lake Tribune for July 26, 1969, reported:

. . . Flat Earthist Secretary Samuel Shenton . . . has not wavered in his beliefs despite astronomers orbiting the earth and flying to the moon. All that, including moon landing he said, is just part of a great deception by NASA and its contractors and the manufacturers of globe maps who have a vested interest in perpetuating the globite teaching. . . . “Once you get your teeth into it, it turns your stomach over that such deception can go perhaps to your children,” he said.

The astronauts are hypnotized into believing they go into space, Shelton contended.

Although some of the Mormon scholars will not receive any evidence against Joseph Smith, there is a growing number who are searching for the truth. To those who really want to know the truth, the discovery by Wesley P. Walters will be very important. It would be almost as foolish to ignore the evidence concerning the 1826 trial as to maintain that the earth is flat.

Just as we were preparing to print this paper, Wesley P. Walters sent us a photograph of another original document dealing with the arrest of Joseph Smith in 1826. Although we do not have room to include it here, we will have a photograph of it in our new booklet Joseph Smith’s 1826 Trial. This new booklet contains important information of the trial and its significance. Also included are affidavits concerning Joseph Smith’s money-digging—some of them have never appeared in any of our other works. These affidavits provide additional evidence that Joseph Smith used his “Seer Stone” to search for buried treasures.

JOSEPH SMITH & MONEY-DIGGING

In light of the new discovery concerning the 1826 trial our book Joseph Smith & Money-Digging should be very interesting to our readers. Besides devoting over 15 pages to the 1826 trial, we covered such subjects as: the common practice of money-digging in Joseph Smith’s time, treasures that slipped into the ground, statements by Martin Harris and Brigham Young on money-digging, Joseph Smith’s “seer stone,” the use of the “seer stone” to find the Book of Mormon plates and its use to translate the book itself, the agreement between Smith and the other money-diggers, the “cave” in the hill Cumorah, the use of the divining rod in the early Mormon Church, the revelation regarding treasure hunting, the practice of sacrificing lambs to find treasures. This book also contains a photographic reprint of the affidavits regarding Joseph Smith’s money-digging activities which were published by E. D. Howe in 1834. The regular price on this book is $2.50, but if it is ordered before September 30, 1971, the price will be $2.25. The quantity prices are: 2 for $3.60 – 5 for $7.20 – 10 for $13.50.

NEW LIGHT ON MOONMEN

In the Messenger for August 1969, we quoted Oliver B. Huntington (a friend of Joseph Smith) as saying:

Inhabitants of the moon
“The inhabitants of the moon are more of a uniform size than the inhabitants of the earth, being about 6 feet in height. “The dress very much like the quaker style and are quite general in style, or the fashion of dress. “They live to be very old; coming generally, near a thousand years.”

This is the description of them as given by Joseph the Seer, and he could “see” whatever he asked the father in the name of Jesus to see. (Journal of Oliver B. Huntington, vol. 2, page 166 of typed copy at the Utah State Historical Society)

A number of people have found it difficult to accept this reference since it comes from a private journal. Recently, however, a friend pointed out to us that an article concerning this matter was printed in 1892 in the Young Woman’s Journal, a Mormon publication, published by the Young Ladies’ Mutual Improvement Associations of Zion. The article, written by Oliver B. Huntington, was entitled “The Inhabitants of the Moon.” This article reads as follows:

Astronomers and philosophers have, from time almost immemorial until very recently, asserted that the moon was uninhabited, that it had no atmosphere, etc. But recent discoveries, through the means of powerful telescopes, have given scientists a doubt or two upon the old theory. Nearly all the great discoveries of men in the last half century have, in one way or another, either directly or indirectly, contributed to prove Joseph Smith to be a Prophet.

As far back as 1837, I know that he said the moon was inhabited by men and women the same as this earth, and that they lived to a greater age than we do—that they live generally near the age of 1000 years.

He described the men as averaging near six feet in height, and dressing quite uniformly in something near the Quaker style.

In my Patriarchal blessing, given by the father of Joseph the Prophet, in Kirtland, 1837, I was told that I should preach the gospel before I was 21 years of age; that I should preach the gospel to the inhabitants upon the islands of the sea and—to the inhabitants of the moon, even the planet you can now behold with your eyes.

The first two promises have been fulfilled, and the latter may be verified. From the verification of two promises we may reasonably expect the third to be fulfilled also.

Men have lost millions of dollars, and hundreds of lives to find a country beyond the north pole; and they will yet find that country—a warm, fruitful country, inhabited by the ten tribes of Israel, a country divided by a river, on one side of which lives the half tribe of Manasseh, which is more numerous than all the others. So said the Prophet . . .

Cedar Fort, Utah, February 6,1892. (Young Woman’s Journal, vol. 3, no. 6, pages 263-264)

For additional information on this subject see our publication The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 3, page 129.

THE MORMON KINGDOM

We are still working on volume 2 of The Mormon Kingdom and hope to have it finished in the next few months. We have completed 70 pages so far.
For many years we have been gathering material for a book of Christianity. We are now happy to announce that this work has been completed and is now available. In this book we devote over twenty pages to a discussion of evolution and creation. We show, for instance, that while men like Julian S. Huxley and Bertrand Russell questioned the existence of a Creator, Thomas Paine, an avowed enemy to Christianity, was forced to acknowledge that there must be a God. In his book, The Age of Reason, he made these statements:

But some, perhaps, will say: Are we to have no word of God—no revelation? I answer, Yes; there is a word of God; there is a revelation. The Word of God is the creation we behold and it is in this word, which no human invention can counterfeit or alter, that God speaketh universally to man . . . The Creation speaketh an universal language, independently of human speech or human language, multiplied and various as they maybe. It is an ever-existing original, which every man can read. It cannot be forged; it cannot be counterfeited; it cannot be lost; it cannot be altered; it cannot be suppressed. . . .

Do we want to contemplate his power? We see it in the immensity of the Creation. Do we want to contemplate his wisdom? We see it in the unchangeable order by which the incomprehensible whole is governed. . . .

The only idea man can affix to the name of God is that of a first cause, the cause of all things. And incomprehensible and difficult as it is for a man to conceive what a first cause is, he arrives at the belief of it from the tenfold greater difficulty of disbelieving it. . . .

In like manner of reasoning, everything we behold carries in itself the internal evidence that it did not make itself. Every man is an evidence to himself that he did not make himself; neither could his father make himself, nor his grandfather, nor any of his race; neither could any tree, plant, or animal make itself; and it is the conviction arising from this evidence that carries us on, as it were, by necessity to the belief of a first cause eternally existing, of a nature totally different to any material existence we know of, and by the power of which all things exist; and this first cause man calls God.

. . . Canst thou by searching find our God? Yes; because, in the first place, I know I did not make myself, and yet I have existence; and by searching into the nature of other things, I find that no other thing could make itself; and yet millions of other things exist; therefore it is, that I know, by positive conclusion resulting from this search, that there is a power superior to all those things, and that power is God. (The Age of Reason, by Thomas Paine. pages 31-35)

In his book, Man Does Not Stand Alone, A. Cressy Morrison wrote the following:

So many essential conditions are necessary for life to exist on our earth that it is mathematically impossible that all of them could exist in proper relationship by chance on any one earth at one time. Therefore, there must be in nature some form of intelligent direction. If this be true, then there must be a purpose. (Man Does Not Stand Alone, page 13)

The lens of our eye varies in density so that all rays are brought into focus. Man finds this unattainable in any homogeneous substance, such as glass. All the marvelous adjustments of lens, rods, cones, nerves, and all else must have occurred simultaneously, for before each of them was complete, sight was impossible. How could one necessary factor know and adjust itself to each of the requirements of the others? . . . Nature would have had a job in developing the science of optics unless somewhere along the line there was a little help from intelligence. (Ibid., pages 51-52)

Sir Arthur Keith, who was one of the world’s most noted anthropologist, admitted that the development of their eye was hard to explain:

What are we to say, then, about such a complicated and efficient instrument as the human eye? If it had been made of wood, brass, and glass, it would have been said to have been planned for a purpose, but because it has been “evolved,” is made up of living tissues, and came into existence without a preliminary “blueprint,” it is not purposive. Are not my critics, by the use of a verbal quibble, seeking a sophist’s escape from a real difficulty? Would it not be more honest to say that the finer purposive adaptations we see in plants and animals remain, as yet, unexplained? The eye has been evolved; that much is quite certain; the living vital forces which have molded it are probably still at work, but as yet we have not isolated them. I could as easily believe the theory of the Trinity as one which maintains that living, developing protoplasm, by merely throws of chance, brought the human eye into existence. (Evolution and Ethics, by Sir Arthur Keith, 1947, page 238)

Even the simple cells of which the human body is composed have been found to be extremely complex. On June 2, 1970, the Salt Lake Tribune printed this statement:

The cell is the basic unit of all living matter. Only a few generations ago it was thought of as mostly an enclosed sac of protoplasm or living jelly, with only a few finer structures outside the cell nucleus.

Today, as a result of electron microscopy, biologists know the cell is no empty blob but a densely occupied factory, with many structures doing many jobs.

Since even the simplest cells are extremely complex, it is very difficult to believe that the human body, with all its organs, could have been developed by mere chance. In his book of the evolution of man, William Howells has to admit that “man must be looked at as an extraordinary achievement of design and organization” (Mankind in the Making, New York, 1967, page 349).

We feel that the design found in living matter and throughout the universe shows that there is a Creator.

Anthropologists use the argument of design in their attempt to prove the antiquity of man. For instance, a stone which has been chipped in a purposeful way might be considered to tool of an ancient man. Hartmut Bastian states:

... he [Boucher de Parthes] also unearthed a number of very oddly shaped stones such as bad always been found here and there and had been dismissed casually as freaks of Nature. ... Suddenly these stones caught his attention: their shaping was no “freak of nature,” but the result of purposeful work by the hands of men . . . A stone fashioned as an implement presupposes a prehistoric man who must have made it. But acceptance of this fact only gained ground during the second half of the last century. (And Then Came Man, New York, 1964, page 308)

It is true that a stone “fashioned as an implement” seems to show that it has been made by an intelligent creature, and the more complex the design of the tool the more unlikely that it is a “freak of nature.” Now, using this same type of reasoning with regard to living matter, we feel that the brain, eyes and other complex organs found in man “presupposes” a Creator. Are not these organs the “result of purposeful work by the hands” of God?

In our new book A Look At Christianity we have a great deal to say about this matter. We also deal with such subjects as: the age of the earth and of life, the earliest man, the Flood, the report of the discovery of Noah’s Ark, Egypt and the Bible, evidence from Palestine, the Moabite Stone, Assyrian records, the Dead Sea Scrolls, the importance of love, the destructive effects of hate, reconciliation with God, our own testimony, the historicity of Jesus, early writings concerning Christianity, manuscripts of the New Testament, recent papyri discoveries, the historical setting of the New Testament, and many other important matters. This book has 91 large pages and is bound in plastic binding. It will usually sell for $1.00, but if it is ordered before September 30, 1971, the price will be only 90¢.

NOTE: We have been gathering material for this book for a number of years. Normally a book of this size would sell for at least $2.50 a copy, but since we feel this information is so vital we are selling it at this bargain price.

YOUR WONDERFUL BODY

I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. (Psalm 139:14)

The man who heads the medical school of the University of Mississippi, Dr. A. C. Guyton, says: “The human body is the most beautifully engineered and the most complicated system there is. It works by means of several hundred patterns of control, each affecting the other. A complete understanding of it can hardly be gained without the help of computer with their ability to handle vast amounts of data. For instance, the brain has 10 billion nerve cells to record what you learn. The information travels inside you at speeds of up to 300 miles per hour over a network of nerve fibers 100 thousand miles long! There are more interconnections in your nervous system than there are street corners in the entire world!” Your brain which weighs less than four pounds can do certain things that couldn’t be matched by ALL of the world’s computers!

Biochemists tell us that utilizing the most up-to-date laboratory equipment, the typical protein must be boiled for at least 24 hours in a chemical solution to be thoroughly broken down. However, the chemical plant of your body completes the identical job in only four hours and with high temperatures. A portion of skin the size of a postage stamp contains four yards of nerves. In all, there are millions of these nerve endings, fanning through your skin, each of them especially constructed to deliver only one type of message, heat, cold, pain, or pressure. In a single day your blood travels about 168 million miles—the equivalent of 6720 times around the world! No wonder David exclaimed, “I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made.” — H. G. B. THOT: Proper praise of God for your marvelous body involves giving it back to Him for spiritual service (Rom. 12:1, 2).

Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History

Suppressed records reveal that drastic changes were made in Joseph Smith’s History after his death. New research shows that less than 40% of the material attributed to Joseph Smith was actually compiled before his death.

Joseph Fielding Smith, the tenth President of the Mormon Church, stated: “The most important history in the world is the history of our Church, and it is the most accurate history in all the world, it must be so” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 199). The Mormon Apostle LeGrand Richards also claimed that no changes have been made in the History of the Church. In a letter Morris L. Reynolds he stated: “Your second question: ‘Has Joseph Smith’s History been changed from the original history?’ No. No changes have been made in meaning in any way” (Letter by LeGrand Richards, dated May 11, 1966). Dr. Hugh Nibley also stated that “There have been no changes in Joseph Smith’s history” (Letter dated May 12, 1966).

The material which follows will prove beyond all doubt that the statements quoted above are completely false. Actually, the Mormon historians have broken all the rules on honesty in their publication of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. They have deleted, added and changed thousands of words without any indication. Many of the changes in Joseph Smith’s History have been made to cover up the fact that the Mormon leaders have made important changes in the policies and doctrines of the Church. Take, for instance, the “Word of Wisdom.” The “Word of Wisdom” is a revelation given by Joseph Smith on February 27, 1833. It forbids the use of hot drinks, alcoholic beverages and tobacco. The Mormon writer John J. Stewart made this statement concerning the “Word of Wisdom”:

. . . no one can hold high office in the Church, on even the stake or ward level, nor participate in temple work, who is a known user of tea, coffee, liquor or tobacco.

The Prophet himself carefully observed the Word of Wisdom. . . . (Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, Salt Lake City, 1966, page 90)

In spite of this statement by John J. Stewart, Joseph Smith did not keep the “Word of Wisdom,” and at times he would even advise others to disobey it. In a thesis written at Brigham Young University, Gary Dean Guthrie gives the following information:

Joseph tested the Saints to make sure their testimonies were of his religion and not of him as a personable leader. Amasa Lyman, of the First Presidency, related:

“Joseph Smith tried the faith of the Saints many times by his peculiarities. At one time, he had preached a powerful sermon on the Word of Wisdom, and immediately thereafter, he rode through the streets of Nauvoo smoking a cigar. Some of the brethren were tried as was Abraham of old.” (“Joseph Smith as an Administrator,” Master’s Thesis, Brigham Young University, May, 1969, page 161)

Mr. Guthrie’s source for this reference is the diary of the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, vol. xix, October 1, 1895. The original journal is now located in the Special Collections Dept. of the Brigham Young University Library. Because of the importance that is now placed upon the “Word of Wisdom,” most members of the Church are shocked when they find out that Joseph Smith did not keep it. It is very surprising to learn that Joseph Smith, the man who introduced the Temple Ceremony into the Mormon Church, would not be able to go through the Temple if he were living today because of his frequent use of alcoholic beverages. In his history, Joseph Smith admitted several times that he drank wine, and under the date of June 1, 1844, he stated that he had “a glass of beer at Moessers.” The statement concerning the glass of beer was apparently very embarrassing to later Mormon leaders, for in recent editions of the History of the Church it has been deleted. When Joseph Smith’s statement was first published in the Latter-Day Saints’ Milennial Star, it read as follows:

Then went to John P. Greene’s, and paid him and another brother $200. Drank a glass of beer at Moessers. Called at William Clayton’s, . . . (Millennial Star, vol. 23, page 720)
When this statement was reprinted in the History of the Church, seven words were deleted without any indication:

Then went to John P. Greene’s, and paid him and another brother $200. Called at William Clayton’s, . . . (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 424)

Other important changes concerning the “Word of Wisdom” were made in Joseph Smith’s History. At one time Joseph Smith encouraged some “brethren” to break the “Word of Wisdom”:

It was reported to me that some of the brethren had been drinking whisky that day in violation of the Word of Wisdom. I called the brethren in and investigated the case, and was satisfied that no evil had been done, AND GAVE THEM A COUPLE OF DOLLARS, WITH DIRECTIONS TO REPLENISH THE BOTTLE TO STIMULATE THEM IN THE FATIGUES OF THEIR SLEEPLESS JOURNEY. (Millennial Star, vol. 21, page 283)

When this was reprinted in the History of the Church, the last 23 words—the words we have capitalized—were deleted without any indication (see History of the Church, vol. 5, page 450)

Another important change was made in the History under the date of June 27, 1844—the day of Joseph Smith’s death. In the version that was first published (Millennial Star, vol. 24, page 471), Joseph Smith recommended that the Apostle Richards use a “pipe and tobacco” to settle his stomach. When this was reprinted in the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 614, the words “pipe and tobacco” were removed and the word “medicine” has been inserted.

WRITTEN BY JOSEPH SMITH?

A few years ago we published a book entitled Changes in Joseph Smith’s History. In this book we stated:

Mormon Historians state that in 1838 Joseph Smith began writing the account of the history of the Church which is now published by the Church. Joseph Smith began publishing this history in the Times and Seasons in 1842. It was published in installments, and therefore only part of the history was published before Joseph Smith’s death. The Church continued to publish the history in the Times and Seasons after his death until they were driven from Nauvoo. The remainder of the history was published in the Millennial Star and also in the Deseret News. . . .

In 1961 we wrote to many of the highest authorities in the Mormon Church and asked for a microfilm of Joseph Smith’s history in the handwritten form, as well as other manuscripts. The Mormon Church leaders refused to allow us to have a microfilm or to allow us to examine the documents. The Mormon Apostle LeGrand Richards answered our letter as follows:

“I am returning herewith the $10 enclosed in your letter of April 7.

“I have no interest, whatever, in doing anything to furnish you information you ask for in your letter for the purpose for which you desire the same.”

Not only has the history of the Church been changed since it was first printed, but there is also evidence to prove that changes were made before it was first printed. . . . Charles Wesley Wandell, who worked in the Church Historian’s Office after the death of Joseph Smith, accused the leaders of the Mormon Church of falsifying the history. When he saw the way that they were printing it in 1855, he made this comment in his journal:

“I notice the interpolations because having been employed (myself) in the Historian’s Office at Nauvoo by Doctor Richards, and employed, too, in 1845, in compiling this very autobiography, I know that after Joseph’s death his biographer was ‘doctor’d’ to suit the new order of things, and this too, by the direct order of Brigham Young to Doctor Richards and systematically by Richards” (Statement from the journal of Charles Wesley Wandell, as printed in the Journal of History, vol. 8, page 76).

On the title page to vol. 1 of the History of the Church, this statement appears: “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet by himself”; this study, however, reveals that much of the history was not written by Joseph Smith. Only a small part of the history was printed during Joseph Smith’s lifetime, and we are very suspicious that Joseph Smith did not finish writing the history before his death. Joseph Smith probably kept a journal which the historians used to write part of the history. The entries in the History of the Church for 1835 sound very much like a day-to-day journal. The Church Historians, no doubt, used Joseph Smith’s journals, but they also interpolated material of their own and tried to make it appear that Joseph Smith had written it. An example is found in the Millennial Star, vol. 19, page 7:

“. . . on this evening Joseph the Seer commenced giving instructions to the scribe concerning writing the proclamation to the kings of the earth, . . .”

It is very obvious that Joseph Smith did not write this; when this was reprinted in the History of the Church, the words “Joseph The Seer” were changed to the word “I.”

It is interesting to note that in 1844 Joseph Smith said: “For the last three years I have a record of all my acts and proceedings, for I have kept several good, faithful, and efficient clerks in constant employ: they have accompanied me everywhere, and carefully kept my history” (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 409). The last few years of Joseph Smith’s life in the History of the Church are filled with personal incidents, however, in the year 1840 there seems to be a vacuum. There seems to be an abundance of information concerning England but very little concerning incidents that were happening in Nauvoo (where Joseph Smith was). The interesting thing about this is that Brigham Young, George A. Smith and Heber C. Kimball (the men who “revised” Joseph Smith’s history after his death) were in England at this time. Could it be that they wrote this part of the history after Joseph Smith’s death? See especially the History of the Church, vol. 6, pages 233-239. . . .

The Mormon Historians evidently feel that more changes can be won to the church with a bogus history than with a true factual one. It is apparently felt that the truth will not bear its own weight and that a little forgery here and there is not wrong as long as it helps win converts to the Church. Men go to prison for the crime of forgery, however, the Mormon Church leaders seem to be immune from punishment because it is a religious document they have falsified. Perhaps some day the members of the Church will demand an honest history and that the “secret manuscripts” be made available.

NEW DISCOVERIES

Since we published our book, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, a great deal of information has come to light which tends to confirm our conclusions concerning the falsification of Joseph Smith’s History. For instance, a microfilm copy of the original handwritten manuscript of Joseph Smith’s History, “Book A-1,” was recently given to us. This manuscript is the basis for the History of the Church, “Book A-1,” and therefore it is written in the “Addenda” which follows page 553 of the History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 295-297, seventy-four words were added which were not in the Times and Seasons (see vol. 5, page 673). This interpolation reads as follows:

About the 8th of November I received a visit from Elders Joseph Young, Brigham Young, and Heber C. Kimball of Mendon, Monroe county, New York. They spent four or five days at Kirtland, during which we had many interesting moments. At one of our interviews, Brother Brigham Young and John P. Greene spoke in tongues, which was the first time I had heard this gift among the brethren; others also spoke, and I received the gift myself.

This interpolation was certainly made after Joseph Smith’s death and is an obvious attempt to glorify Brigham Young. The interpolation was too large to be inserted into the handwritten manuscript at its proper place (page 240), and therefore it is written in the “Addenda” which follows page 553 of Book A-1. (The “Addenda” contains a great deal of material which was to be inserted into Joseph Smith’s History and was obviously written after his death.) Below is a photograph from the “Addenda” showing the words concerning Brigham Young which were to be added to the History of the Church.
The reader will notice that although the Mormon leaders added most of this interpolation into Joseph Smith’s History, they omitted two lines (see arrow). These lines contain some very important information: “Brother Joseph Young is a great man, but Brigham is a greater, and the time will come when he will preside over the whole Church.”

Although the Mormon Historians added the part about Brigham Young speaking in tongues, they have never dared to add the prophecy that Brigham Young was to become leader of the Church. We must remember that many people questioned the leadership of Brigham Young. In fact, the Apostle William Smith—Joseph Smith’s brother—left the Church and stated that he once heard Joseph say that if Brigham Young ever led the Church “he would certainly lead it to destruction” (Warsaw Signal, October 29, 1845). However, this may be, the Mormon historians never dared to add in the “prophecy” found in the “Addenda.” They probably realized that the dissenters would question such a statement in Joseph Smith’s History and ask for proof. An examination of the original manuscript, however, would soon reveal that the prophecy is a forgery made after Brigham Young had become the leader of the Church.

For more information concerning Book A-1 see our new publication Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History.

Although we now have a film of the handwritten manuscript of Joseph Smith’s History up to 1836, the remaining portion is still suppressed. Fortunately, we have another film which sheds a great deal of light on this period. This is a copy of a film in the Church Historian’s Office of the newspaper published in Nauvoo by the Mormons. This newspaper was originally called The Wasp but the name was later changed to The Nauvoo Neighbor. A woman who lived outside of Utah told us that she could borrow a copy which had previously been made of the film in the Church Historian’s Office and wondered if we could get a firm in Salt Lake City to make duplicate copies. Although there were no copyright restrictions on the film, the company refused to make copies because the Church Historian’s Office would be opposed to it. Finally, it was duplicated outside the State of Utah and a copy was sent to us.

We wondered why the Church Historians Office had suppressed this film, and with this question in mind we began our research on it. At first we found nothing of importance, but then one day we noticed that some words had been crossed out with a pen or pencil and some other words written in their place. Naturally, we wondered why the words had been changed in this newspaper. The answer soon became apparent. We found that the article which contained these words was reprinted in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. The words which were crossed out on the newspaper were left out in Joseph Smith’s History, and the words which were written in by hand on the newspaper appeared in Joseph Smith’s History. We found this same pattern in many other articles reprinted in the History of the Church. Where words were crossed out on the newspaper, they were deleted from Joseph Smith’s History, and where words were added in by hand on the newspaper they were also found in the History. From this one possible conclusion could be reached; we had a film of the very pages which the Mormon Church Historians used when they compiled Joseph Smith’s History, and the handwriting clearly revealed the falsifications which they made in composing the History. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that the name “W. Richards” is written on the top of many of the pages, and Brigham Young claimed that Willard Richards helped in “revising” Joseph Smith’s History after his death (History of the Church, vol. 7, page 411).

We have more information on this matter in Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History.

The film of The Wasp and The Nauvoo Neighbor not only proves that the changes made in Joseph Smith’s History were deliberate falsifications, but it also seems to show that Joseph Smith did not finish the History of the Church and that it was actually written after his death. Many of the articles from the newspaper used in Joseph Smith’s History are introduced with a statement like the one found in the History of the Church, vol. 6, age 171: “I insert the following from the Neighbor, . . .” This, of course, is what we would expect to find if Joseph Smith actually wrote the History of the Church. In our study of the film, however, we found articles marked to be included in Joseph Smith’s History, but inserted in the History of the Church as if they were the very words of Joseph Smith himself.

Many cases could be cited to show that the Mormon Historians borrowed heavily form the newspaper published in Nauvoo when they composed Joseph Smith’s History. The film of The Wasp and The Nauvoo Neighbor has helped us solve a problem which we mentioned in our book, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History. On page 60 of that book we stated:

In the Millennial Star, vol. 19, page 630, Joseph Smith supposedly said: “. . . they left them in the care of the Marshall, without the original writ by which they were arrested, and by which only they could be retained, and returned back to Governor Carlin for further instructions, and Messrs. Smith and Rockwell went about their business.”

In the History of the Church, vol. 5, page 87, this has been changed to read: “. . . they left us in the care of the marshal, without the original writ by which we were arrested, and by which we could be retained, and returned to Governor Carlin for further instructions, and myself and Rockwell went about our business.”

It would appear that Joseph Smith did not write this part of the history, and that the Mormon Historians forgot the change these words when they first printed them. Later the “mistake” was corrected.

It is interesting to note that Joseph Smith’s prophecy that the “Saints” would “be driven to the Rocky Mountains” appears only two paragraphs before this. Could it be that this was not written by Joseph Smith, but by someone after the Mormons were driven to Utah? (Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, page 60)

Now that we have examined the film of the newspaper published at Nauvoo, we know the exact source for the portion of Joseph Smith’s History which deals with his arrest. This is an article published in The Wasp on August 13, 1842. Below is a comparison of the article from The Wasp and the material which was purported to have been written by Joseph Smith in his History of the Church. In The Wasp we read as follows:

. . . Joseph Smith was arrested . . . upon the affidavit of Ex-Governor Boggs, . . . Mr. Rockwell was arrested at the same time as principal. There was no evasion of the officers, . . . they left them in care of the Marshall, without the original writ by which they were arrested, and by which only they could be retained, and returned back to Gov. Carlin for further instructions,—and Messrs. Smith and Rockwell went about their business . . .

As to Mr. Smith, we have yet to learn by what rule of right he was arrested to be transported to Missouri . . . (The Wasp, August 13, 1842)

That this is the source for the entry in Joseph Smith’s History for August 8, 1842, is obvious to anyone who will make a careful comparison:

I was arrested . . . upon the affidavit of Ex-Governor Boggs, . . . Brother Rockwell was arrested at the same time as principal. There was no evasion of the officers, . . . they left us in the care of the Marshall, without the original writ by retained, and returned to Governor Carlin for further instructions, and myself and Rockwell went about our business.

I have yet to learn by what rule of right I was arrested to be transported to Missouri . . . (History of the Church, vol. 5, pages 86-87)

In our new publication Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History we stated:

The discovery of the source of the material concerning Joseph Smith’s arrest certainly casts a shadow of doubt upon the authorship of the prophecy that the Saints would “become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 85). The material concerning his arrest from The Wasp is inserted in the History of the Church only twelve words after Joseph Smith’s famous prophecy, and the top of the paragraph containing the prophecy may have been taken from another article on the same page of The Wasp. In this article we find the following: “We attended the installation of Rising Sun Lodge of Ancient York Masons, at Montrose, . . . The deputy Grand Master of Illinois, Gen. Adams, installed the officers” (The Wasp, August 13, 1842). Joseph Smith’s History contains almost the same words, although they are in a slightly different order. It states that he witnessed “the installation of the officers of the Rising Sun Lodge Ancient York Masons, at Montrose by General James Adams, Deputy Grand-Master of Illinois” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 85).

It is also interesting to note that the same issue of The Wasp contains a poem which speaks of “the Rocky Mountains,” and a lengthy quotation from an unpublished work entitled “Life in the Rocky Mountains.” There is some evidence that Joseph Smith considered going west to build his kingdom, but
The reader will notice that the part concerning the Mormons becoming “a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains” has been crammed in at the bottom in a smaller handwriting, and this would seem to indicate that it was added sometime after the page had originally been written.

It is interesting to note that the Mormon writer Nephi Morris wrote a book of the “Prophecies of Joseph Smith” in 1920. The Church leaders allowed him to publish a photograph of the prophecy as printed in the Deseret News for November 7, 1855, but he apparently had no access to the original manuscript. He stated: “It was published in its regular order as the History of the Church appeared in that paper. We have not had access to the original record as kept by the Prophet, containing this remarkable prophecy” (Prophecies of Joseph Smith and Their Fulfillment, page 63).

Now that we have a photograph of the page containing this “prophecy,” we can see why it was suppressed for all these years.

There is another change in the History of the Church that seems to be related to this matter. In Joseph Smith’s History as it was first published in the Millennial Star, vol. 23, page 280, the following words were attributed to Joseph Smith: “The Lord has an established law in relation to the matter: there must be a particular spot for the salvation of our dead. I verily believe this will be the place; . . . .”

In the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 319, this has been changed to read: “The Lord has an established law in relation to the matter: there must be a particular spot for the salvation of our dead I verily believe there will be a place, . . . .”

The reason for this change is obvious; the Mormons were driven from Nauvoo in 1846, just two years after Joseph Smith had said “this will be the place.” It is reported that when Brigham Young looked over the valley where Salt Lake City now stands he stated: “This is the place.” A temple has been built at Salt Lake City, and work for the dead is performed in this temple. The change in the location of the headquarters of the Church seemed to make it necessary to change Joseph Smith’s statement.

STARTLING ADMISSIONS

The evidence concerning the changes in Joseph Smith’s History is already beginning to have an effect on some of the Mormon scholars. Davis Bitton cited a number of changes which we mentioned in our book Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, and made these interesting observations concerning the History of the Church:

> . . . the basic text itself has not been treated with proper respect. When we compare the DHC with the earlier published versions, fact, we discover that hundreds of changes have been made. These include deletions, additions, and simple changes of wording . . . for researchers in early Mormon history Rule Number One is “Do not rely on the DHC; never use a quotation from it without comparing the earlier versions.” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1968, pages 31-32)

In his new book Nightfall At Nauvoo the Mormon writers Samuel W. Taylor made these comments concerning Joseph Smith’s History:

> This work, known as the “Documentary” history, is a rich vein that must be mined with care . . . this work has been “corrected” by many hands, making corroboration from original sources necessary. Jerald and Sandra Tanner, in their Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, detail “More than 62,000 words deleted” in the first six volumes. Even so, the Tanners overlooked some changes, a notable example being alteration of the conference minutes of October, 1843, concerning Sidney Rigdon. (Nightfall At Nauvoo, New York, 1971, page 383)

Just as we were preparing to print our new book Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History, Dean C. Jesse, a member of the staff at the LDS Church Historian’s Office, published an article in the Brigham Young University Studies which contains some very startling admissions. His work verifies our contention that Joseph Smith did not finish his History of the Church and that it was actually completed after his death. He states:

> At the time of Joseph Smith’s death, the narrative was written to August 5, 1838.

> By February 4, 1846, the day the books were packed for the journey west, the History had been completed to March 1, 1843, . . . . resumption of work on the History occurred on “Dec. 1, 1853 [when] Dr. Willard Richards wrote one line of History being sick at the time—and was never able to do any more.” . . .

> The remainder of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church from March 1, 1843, to August 8, 1844, was completed under the direction of George A. Smith . . . .

> The Joseph Smith History was finished in August 1856, seventeen years after it was begun. (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, pages 466, 469, 470 and 472)

Dean C. Jesse frankly admits that the manuscript was only completed to page 812 at the time of Joseph Smith’s death (Ibid., page 457). Since there were almost 2,200 pages, this would mean that over 60% of Joseph Smith’s History was not compiled during his lifetime!

As we had suspected, Willard Richards played a prominent part in making up this bogus history after Joseph Smith’s death in 1844. Dean C. Jesse stated: “Bullock became the chief scribe under Willard Richards when work resumed on the Joseph Smith History in 1845” (Ibid., page 456).

Dean C. Jesse cites a letter from the Mormon Historian George A. Smith which shows that he was still writing the last part of Joseph Smith’s History many years after Smith’s death:

> On the 10th April 1854, I commenced to perform the duties of Historian by taking up the History of Joseph Smith where Dr. Willard Richards had left it . . . . I had to revise and compare two years of back history which he had compiled, filling up numerous spaces which had been marked as omissions on memoranda by Dr. Richards. . . . The severe application of thought to the principles of the History, the exercise of memory &c., have caused me to suffer much from a nervous headache or inflammation of the brain; and my application of mind being in exercise both day and night, deprived me of a great portion of necessary sleep. (Letter from George A. Smith to Woodruff, April 21, 1856, as cited in BYU Studies, Summer 1971, pages 470-472)

This letter certainly provides devastating evidence against the authenticity of “Joseph Smith’s History.” Take, for instance, the “prophecy” concerning the Rocky Mountains. It could have been added when George A. Smith was tampering with this portion of the History in Utah in 1854. At any rate, Dean C. Jesse’s study proves that this prophecy could not have been written in “Joseph Smith’s Manuscript History” until at least a year after Joseph Smith’s death. He shows that page 1362 of the Manuscript History— the page containing the prophecy—was not even written until July 4, 1845! Thus, even if the small handwriting was added on the same day, it could not have been written during Joseph Smith’s lifetime. Unless the Mormon leaders can establish that the entry in the Manuscript History was taken from another source written during Joseph Smith’s lifetime, the “prophecy” as found in the History of the Church becomes of no historical value.

We must commend Dean C. Jesse, of the Church Historians Office, for his article on Joseph Smith’s History. It is certainly one of the most honest and scholarly articles that has ever appeared in a Mormon publication. The Mormon leaders must now face the serious implications of this whole matter. Less than 40% of the history attributed to Joseph Smith was written during his lifetime, and this portion has had serious changes made in it. The remaining portion—more than 60%—was not even compiled until after Smith’s death. Since it was written by men who believed in falsification and deceit, it cannot be trusted as a reliable history of Joseph Smith.

Our new book Falsification of Joseph Smith’s History contains more information and photographs suppressed for over a hundred years (see description on page 1 of this paper).
Reign of the Mormon Kings

We are happy to announce that we have now completed the second volume of The Mormon Kingdom. In the first volume of this work (temporarily out of print) we showed that Joseph Smith formed a secret organization known as the “Council of Fifty” and “suffered himself to be ordained king” when he lived in Nauvoo, Illinois. When Fawn Brodie pointed this out in her book No Man Knows My History, Dr. Hugh Nibley claimed that there was not enough evidence to support such a claim (see No Ma'am That's Not History, page 40). In our book The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, we show that Mormon scholars are now accepting the fact that Joseph Smith was ordained king. The Mormon writer Klaus J. Hansen, for instance, frankly admitted that “Joseph Smith did start a political kingdom of God and a Council of Fifty; he was made king over that organization; . . .” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1966, page 104). Kenneth Godfrey, Director of the LDS Institute at Stanford University, also admits that Joseph Smith was “ordained ‘King over the Immediate House of Israel’ by the Council of Fifty” (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter, 1968, pages 212-213). Richard D. Poll, Professor of History and Political Science at Brigham Young University, also seems willing to concede that Smith was ordained king:

That neither the Prophet nor the Council was totally preoccupied with the political race is clear from the investigations of Texas and other possible new homes for the Saints which were in progress, and also from the intriguing and rather convincingly documented report that the Prophet was ordained “King on Earth” in the Council during this period. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1968, page 19, n. 11)

The practice of ordaining the President of the Mormon Church as “King on Earth” did not cease with the death of Smith. The Mormon writer Klaus J. Hansen states: “. . . the prophet apparently had himself ordained as ‘King on Earth.’ Brigham Young, upon his arrival in the Salt Lake Valley, likewise reportedly had this ceremony performed in the Council of Fifty” (Quest for Empire, page 66). On page 200, footnote 74, of the same book, Hansen gives this information:

Former Bishop Andrew Cahoon, whose father Reynolds Cahoon had been a member of the Council of Fifty, testified in 1889: “The King of that Kingdom that was set up on the earth was the head of the Church Brigham Young proclaimed himself King here in Salt Lake Valley before there was a house built, in 1847.”

The journal of the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon has recently come to light. It shows that after Brigham Young’s death there was a discussion in the Council of Fifty as to whether John Taylor, the third President of the Church, should be ordained king:

Father [George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency] said Moses Thatcher’s drawing away from his brethren commenced as far as his knowledge concerning it went, at a time when the Council of Fifty met in the old City Hall, and Moses opposed the proposition to anoint John Taylor as Prophet, Priest and king, and Moses’ opposition prevailed at that time. Moses has constantly opposed the increase of power in the hands of the President of the Church. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” December 2, 1895, page 198, original at Brigham Young University Library)

The Apostle Cannon’s Journal also shows that the Council of Fifty was still in existence in 1884:

It is interesting to note that the “Minutes of the Council of Fifty,” for 1880 list Joseph F. Smith as a member (Quest for Empire, page 226). Joseph F. Smith became the sixth President of the Mormon Church, and his son, Joseph Fielding Smith, recently became the tenth President.

In The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, we have a great deal of information concerning the Council of 50 and how it controlled early Utah. We also deal with such subjects as: Mormonism and money, how Church leaders used Church funds for private gain, Joseph F. Smith’s testimony on church businesses, the involvement of the Church in business today, how the Apostles condemn a paid ministry yet receive large salaries, politics in early Utah, the Law Observance and Enforcement Committee in the Church, the Mountain Meadows Massacre, the Utah War, the practice of Blood Atonement in Utah, Brigham Young’s indictment for murder, robbing the Gentiles, counterfeiting, and many other important subjects.

The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 2, is now available in plastic binding for $2.95. The quantity prices are: 2 for $4.95 – 5 for $9.95 – 10 for $17.70. (NOTE—SEE SPECIAL OFFER ON PAGE 1 OF THIS PAPER.)
Godhood and start their own world. However, the Bible states:

...God himself, who sits enthroned in yonder heavens, is a man like unto one of yourselves, that is the great secret...I am going to tell you how God came to be God. We have imagined that God was God from all eternity...God himself; the Father of us all dwelt on an earth the same as Jesus Christ himself did, ... You have got to learn how to be Gods yourselves; to be kings and priests of God, the same as all Gods have done; by going from a small degree to another, from grace to grace, from exaltation to exaltation, ... (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pages 613-614)

Brigham Young, the second president of the Mormon Church, taught:

He is our Father—the Father of our spirits, and was once a man in mortal flesh as we are, and is now an exalted being...God has once been a finite being;... (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7 page 333)

...But I expect, if I am faithful with yourselves, that I shall see the time with yourselves that we shall know how to prepare to organize an earth like this—know how to people that earth, how to redeem it, how to sanctify it, and how to glorify it, with those who live upon it. ... Consequently every earth has its redeemer, and every earth has its tempter;... (Ibid., vol. 14, page 71)

The Mormon Church teaches that God is married and that there is a Heavenly Mother as well as a Heavenly Father. Milton R. Hunter writes:

The stupendous truth of the existence of a Heavenly Mother, as well as a Heavenly Father, became established facts in Mormon theology. ... Man, as a spirit, was begotten and born of Heavenly Parents, and reared to maturity in the eternal mansions of the Father prior to coming upon the earth in a temporal body... (The Gospel Through the Ages, pages 98-99)

Writing in 1853, the Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt tried to calculate the number of years it took God and His Wife to give birth to all the spirits that were to come to this earth:

...As soon as each God has begotten many millions of male and female spirits, ... he, in connection with his sons, organizes a new world, after a similar order to the one which we now inhabit, where he sends both the male and female spirits to inherit tabernacles of flesh and bones. ... The inhabitants of each world are required to reverence, adore, and worship their own personal father who dwells in the Heaven which they formerly inhabited ... The number of the sons and daughters of God, born in Heaven before this earth was formed, is not known to us. ... Seventy thousand million, therefore, is a rough approximation to the number of inhabitants which the Lord destined to dwell in the flesh on this earth... Add to seventy thousand million, the third part which fell, namely, thirty-five thousand million, and the sum amounts to one hundred and five thousand million, which was the approximate number of the sons and daughters of God in Heaven before the rebellion which broke out among them.

If we admit that one personage was the Father of all this great family, and that they were all born of the same Mother, the period of time intervening between the birth of the oldest and the youngest spirit must have been immense. If we suppose, as an average, that only one year intervened between each birth, then it would have required, over one hundred thousand million of years from the same Mother to have given birth to this vast family. (The Seer, pages 37-38)

The Mormon Church teaches that those who are married in a Mormon temple and obey the principles of the Mormon faith may eventually attain Godhood and start their own world. However, the Bible states:

...I am he: before me there was no God formed neither shall there be after me. I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no savior. (Isaiah 43:10-11)

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent. ... (Numbers 25:19)

For I am the Lord, I change not; (Malachi 3:6)

The Bible and Mormon Doctrine also deals with such subjects as: do we need modern day revelation, what is the gospel, is salvation by grace or works, what is the true church, did we pre-exist, how many kingdoms in heaven, do we need temple work, what priesthood do we need, and the nature of God.

One church has already purchased 150 copies. Their treasurer wrote:

MORMONISM — SHADOW or REALITY?

In 1966 Wallace Turner, a correspondent for the New York Times, wrote the following:

Dr. Thomas F. O’Dea, a sociologist at Columbia University, who wrote a major study called The Mormons when he taught at the University of Utah, insists that the church is in the midst of a crisis . . . in keeping with Dr. O’Dea’s theory of the sleeping crisis, one of the most influential apostates of the 1960s has been a young machinist, who with his wife, left the church and now makes a living printing books and documents which contradict official Mormon pronouncements.

His name is Jerald Tanner. His wife, Sandra, is a great-great-granddaughter of Brigham Young . . . .

The Tanners operate as the Modern Microfilm Company. They specialize in copying books and documents that are out of print, or have been suppressed in one way or another, but that bear on the history and doctrine of the LDS church. When I talked with them, they had thirty-one titles for sale, the best seller was Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? prepared by them jointly. They had sold about 3000 copies . . . . The Tanners’ masterwork, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is an intricate weaving of arguments from many sources against the fundamental precepts of the Saints’ doctrine—that Joseph Smith, Jr., was a prophet of God . . . .

With the Tanners the church today finds itself faced by its own techniques of argument and its own words turned back against it to create doubts and uneasiness among some members. The campaign is effective, too, and of this there is no doubt. (The Mormon Establishment, by Wallace Turner, Boston, 1966, pages 153-156, 159, 160 and 162)

Since printing the book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? in 1964, many important things have happened. By far the most important was the rediscovery of the papyri from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham, for these papyri prove that the Book of Abraham is the work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination. Another important discovery was that the Mormon Church had been suppressing important accounts of Joseph Smith’s First Vision which differ from the account printed in the Pearl of Great Price. Wesley P. Walters discovered an original document which proves beyond all doubt that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, New York, in 1826. Wesley P. Walters has also discovered that there was no revival in Palmyra, and we are baptizing these people into the Church. . . .

Many other important discoveries have also been made since we published Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? in 1964. These discoveries, which have come to light one right after another, have taken a great deal of our time. In 1967 we began printing our work, The Case Against Mormonism. This was a three-volume work and dealt with many of the new discoveries. We have also completed a two-volume work entitled The Mormon Kingdom. Besides this we have printed a number of other books concerning Mormonism. The publication of these new books has kept us very busy.

After printing thousands of copies of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? the metal plates began to break down. We hoped to get out an enlarged edition of this book, but we were unable to find the time. Consequently, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? went out of print for a number of years. We are now happy to announce, however, that we have found the time to bring out a new enlarged and revised edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? This is by far our most important work, for we have taken the best material out of the old edition and combined it with the most important material from the publications we have printed since 1964. In addition we have added a great deal of new material that has never before appeared in print. Condensing all this material into one volume has been a tremendous task, but we feel that our efforts will be rewarded by the fact that more people will have access to the material. This new edition actually contains more than twice as much material as the old edition.

Just as we were preparing to print the new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Michael Marquardt called our attention to some new and important information concerning the Mormon doctrines about the Negro and polygamy. Fortunately, we were able to add this new information in Appendix B.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENT ON NEGROES

A very important document concerning the anti-Negro doctrine of the Mormon Church was found in the George Albert Smith Papers at the University of Utah Library. George Albert Smith served as President of the Mormon Church from 1945 to 1951. His private papers are preserved at the University of Utah Library. Among this collection is a document listed as, “Excerpts From the Weekly Council Meetings of the Quorum of the Church, 1849-1940.” Since this document throws a great deal of light on the development of the anti-Negro doctrine, we printed it in its entirety in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 582-585. The first Council Meeting is dated January 25, 1940. In the report of this Council Meeting we find the following about the Negro:

President Clark said at his request the clerk of the Council had copied from the old records of the Council discussions that have been had in the past on this subject. He said that he was positive that it was impossible with reference to the Brazilians to tell those who have Negro blood and those who have not, and we are baptizing these people into the Church. . . .

President Clark suggested that this matter be referred to the Twelve who might appoint a sub-committee to go into the matter with great care and make some ruling or reaffirm whatever ruling has been made on this question in the past as to whether or not one drop of negro blood deprives a man of the right to receive the priesthood. ("Excerpts From the Weekly Council Meetings of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, . . . “ as printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 582.)

As we examine these discussions from the “old records of the Council” it is plain to see that the Mormon doctrine forbidding Negroes the Priesthood or access to the temple rites grew out of rumor and prejudice and did not come by revelation as the Mormon leaders have always claimed.

Joseph F. Smith, the sixth “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” of the Mormon Church, seemed to have no revelation on this subject. The following is taken from a Council Meeting held January 2, 1902:

President Smith, replying to this, referred to the doctrine taught by President Young which . . . he believed in himself, to the effect that the children of Gentile parents, in whose veins may exist a single drop of the blood of Ephraim, might be all pure-blooded Gentiles excepting one, and that one might extract all the blood of Ephraim from his parents’ veins, and be actually a full-blooded Ephraimithe. He also referred to the case of a man named Billingsby, whose ancestor away back married an Indian woman, and whose descendants in every branch of his family were pure whites, with one exception, and that exception was one pure blooded Indian in every branch of the family . . . the same had been found to be the case with stockmen engaged in the improvement of breeds. Assuming therefore this doctrine to be sound, while the children of a man in whose veins may exist a single drop of negro blood, might be entirely white, yet one of his descendants might turn out to be a pronounced negro. And the question in President Smith's mind was, when shall we get light enough to determine each case of its merits? He gave it as his opinion that in all cases where the blood of Cain showed itself, however slight, the line should be drawn there; but where children of tainted parents were found to be pure Ephraimites, they might be admitted to the temple. This was only an opinion, however, the subject would no doubt be considered later. ("Extracts" as printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality, pages 583-584)

On August 26, 1908, President Joseph F. Smith told that a Negro woman was sealed as a servant to Joseph Smith:

The same efforts he said had been made by Aunt Jane to receive her endowments and be sealed to her husband and have her children sealed to their parents and her appeal was made to all the Presidents from President Young down to the present First Presidency. But President Cannon conceived the idea that, under the circumstances, it would be proper to permit her to go to the temple to be adopted to the Prophet Joseph Smith as his servant and this was done. This seemed to ease her mind for a little while but did not satisfy her, and she still pleaded for her endowments.

The idea that this Negro woman should be sealed as a servant apparently stems from the teaching that slavery was a “divine institution.” Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, once stated that the Civil War could not free the slaves:

Ham will continue to be servant of servants, as the Lord decreed, until the curse is removed. Will the present struggle free the slave? No; . . . for Ham must be the servant of servants until the curse is removed. Can you destroy the decrees of the Almighty? You cannot. (Millennial Star, vol. 25, page 787; also published in Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 250)

The idea that the Negro is only worthy of the position of a servant has deep roots in Mormon theology. Mark E. Petersen, who is now serving as an Apostle in the Church, said that if a “ Negro is faithful all his days, he can and will enter the celestial kingdom. He will go there as a servant, but he will get celestial glory” (Race Problems—As They Affect the Church, address by Mark E. Petersen at the Convention of Teachers of Religion on the College Level, Brigham Young University, August 27, 1954).

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 266, we quote Brigham Young as saying:

Shall I tell you the law of God in regard to the African race? If the white man who belongs to the chosen seed mixes his blood with the seed of Cain, the penalty, under the law of God, is death on the spot. This will always be so. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 110)

In the “Excerpts From the Weekly Council Meetings of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles,” Brigham Young’s statement is cited under the date of March 8, 1863. In a Council Meeting held August 22, 1895, we read the following:

President Cannon remarked that the Prophet Joseph taught this doctrine: That the seed of Cain could not receive the Priesthood nor act in any of the offices of the priesthood until the seed of Abel should come forward and take precedence over Cain’s offspring; and that any white man who mingled his seed with that of Cain should be killed, and thus prevent any of the seed of Cain’s coming into possession of the priesthood.

In a report of a Council Meeting held December 15, 1897, we find the following:

A letter . . . was read, . . . enclosing a letter from Elder S. P. Oldham, who asked Brother Lyman the following questions, and Brother Lyman forwarded it to be answered by the First Presidency: “Can a man (white) be permitted to receive the priesthood, who has a wife who is either black or is tainted with negro blood?”

President Cannon said he had understood President Taylor to say that a man who had the priesthood who would marry a woman of the accursed seed, that if the law of the Lord were administered upon him . . . he would be killed, and his offspring, for the reason that the Lord had determined that the seed of Cain should not receive the priesthood in the flesh; and that this was the penalty put upon Cain, because if he had received the priesthood the seed of the murderer would get ahead of the seed of Abel who was murdered. The point, President Cannon said, which President Taylor sought to make was that if a white man who had received the priesthood should have children by a negro woman, he could go back and act for his dead ancestors on his wife’s side, and he therefore thought it would be improper for a man, as for instance the case referred to, to receive the priesthood for the reasons assigned as being those given by President Taylor.

While there was no formal action taken, this seemed to be the mind of the Council, President Snow adding that the way might be opened for the man referred to in the case under consideration to get a divorce from his present wife and marry a white woman, and he would then be entitled to the priesthood. ("Extracts" as printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 582)

This document certainly reveals the state of confusion that the Mormon leaders found themselves in as they tried to formulate their anti-Negro doctrine. It is plain to see that they did not know where to draw the line as to who could be ordained to the Priesthood. The Apostle John Henry Smith felt that “persons in whose veins the white blood predominated should not be barred from the temple.” Joseph F. Smith, the sixth President of the Church, gave it as his opinion that “in all cases where the blood of Cain showed itself, however slight, the line should be drawn there; but where children of tainted parents were found to be pure Ephraimites, they might be admitted to the temple.” While Joseph F. Smith was still serving as President of the Church, the following decision was reached: “Number 3—The descendants of Ham may receive baptism and confirmation but no one known to have in his veins negro blood, (it matters not how remote a degree) can either have the Priesthood in any degree or the blessings of the Temple of God; no matter how otherwise worthy he may be” (“Extracts,” as printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 584).

This is the policy that the Mormon leaders claim they follow today. In our new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we point out that there have been a number of cases where people with Negro blood have been ordained to the Priesthood. For instance, the Negro blood in Elijah Abel and his descendants did not prevent them from holding the Priesthood. Although there is some false information concerning Elijah Abel in the “Excerpts From the Weekly Council Meeting of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles,” these records show that on August 22, 1895:

President Joseph F. Smith told of Brother Abel having been ordained a Seventy and afterwards a High Priest at Kirtland under the direction of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we pointed out that some of Elijah Abel’s children married into the white race and that their descendants hold the Priesthood and do missionary work for the Mormon Church today. Although the Mormon leaders are aware of this, no attempt has been made to remove these special privileges from Elijah Abel’s descendants. The hypocrisy of this whole matter of giving special privileges was made plain in a letter from Joseph E. Taylor to John Taylor, the third President of the Church:

President J. Taylor Sept. 5th, 1885

Dear Brother

Now comes a case of a young girl residing in the Eighteenth Ward of the City by the name of Laura Berry whose mother was a white woman but whose father was a very light mulatto. It appears she has fallen in love with brother Barons Son and it is reciprocated.

But the question of jeopardizing his future by such an alliance has caused a halt. She now desires to press her claim to privileges that others who are tainted with that blood have received. For example, the Meads family in the Eleventh Ward Mrs. Jones Elder Sister; (the former now resides in Logan) I am cognizant of all these having received their endowments here.

Brother Meads is a white man he married his wife many years ago; she was a quadroon and died some three years ago their children (the oldest a girl, are married to a white man) are all very dark.

The question I desire to ask is: Can you give this girl any privileges of a like character? The girl is very pretty and quite white and would not be suspected as having tainted blood in her veins unless her parentage was known. Again I subscribe myself your brother in the Faith. (Letter from Joseph E. Taylor to President John Taylor, Sept. 5, 1885, Church Historical Department, John Taylor Letter File, b1346, Box 20, file #3, typed copy)
GENESIS GROUP

Because of the anti-Negro doctrine there are not many blacks in the Mormon Church, and there is reason to believe that some of the blacks within the Church are almost at the point of rebellion. Recently a group was organized within the Church which is known as the “Genesis Group.”

H. Michael Marquardt has interviewed a member of this group and has obtained some important information. In his notes of an interview held November 7, 1971, we find the following concerning the Genesis Group:

Set up for Black missionary work. . . . The Group hopes to reinitiate Black members in the Salt Lake Area. Main objective is to get the Priesthood and then do missionary work among the Black both in America and throughout the world . . . June 24, 1971 was the first time that the First Presidency and Twelve have prayed in the Temple about whether Black members of the Church should hold the Priesthood. The First Presidency and Twelve were not in agreement on the question. But they did agree that the Genesis Group should be formed.

An article concerning the Genesis Group which appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune caused some confusion among members of the Church. In this article we find these statements:

A stake for black members of the Church . . . has been formed in Salt Lake City. The organization, called Genesis Group, is part of the auxiliary program of the Liberty Stake.

Ruffin Bridgetforth Jr., president of the group, said the stake was in total concordance with the Mormon Church. Gordon B. Hinckley, Thomas S. Monson and Boyd K. Packer, members of the Council of Twelve Apostles, set the stake apart Oct. 19. (Salt Lake Tribune, October 24, 1971)

This article caused confusion because it referred to the group as a “stake.” Now, if the group were actually a “stake” this would mean that the blacks had received the Priesthood, and that Ruffin Bridgetforth is a stake president—a stake president, of course, has to hold the Priesthood.

That the Church did not give the Priesthood to the blacks is very plain from an article which appeared in the Church Section of the Deseret News—the Mormon newspaper. This article does not use the word “stake” or even the word “branch” when referring to the Genesis Group:

An organization for black members of the Church, called the Genesis Group, was formed as part of the auxiliary program of Liberty Stake in Salt Lake City. Designed to serve all black members in the Salt Lake Valley, the group will meet and conduct Relief Society, Primary and MIA for the benefit and enjoyment of their members, but will attend their respective Sunday School and sacrament meetings in their home wards, where they will retain their membership.

The group will meet in the Third Ward facility at 119 E. 7th South. A group presidency was called, sustained and set apart as follows: President Ruffin Bridgetforth, Darius Gray, first counselor, and Eugene Orr, second counselor . . . .

The group will work with the auxiliaries of Liberty Stake. Liberty Stake also has the Danish, Norwegian, Chinese and Japanese branches as part of the stake. (Deseret News, October 23, 1971)

The reader will notice that the Genesis Group is never referred to in this article as a “stake.” It is referred to only as a “part of the auxiliary program of Liberty Stake.” While the article speaks of the “Danish, Norwegian, Chinese and Japanese branches,” the word “branch” is not used with regard to the Genesis Group. It is only a “group.” It has a “group presidency,” not a Stake Presidency nor even a Branch Presidency. This “group presidency” has no Priesthood authority and can only preside over meetings for the women and young people. They must return to their home wards for “their respective Sunday School and sacrament meetings.” The reason that the black people have to return to their own wards for the meetings on Sunday is very clear: these meetings require someone who has the Priesthood. The sacrament is passed twice on Sunday, and black people can neither bless nor pass it. Therefore, they have to return to their “home wards” on Sunday so that the white boys can serve them the sacrament!

At first glance, it would appear that the Genesis Group is moving in the wrong direction—i.e., they seem to be moving toward segregation. As we examine the matter more closely, however, we see that segregation could actually be a victory for the black people. The Mormon Church cannot allow blacks to become completely segregated because this would mean they would have to give them the Priesthood. Other churches which discriminate against blacks at least allow them to have their own congregations and perform their own ordinances. The Mormon leaders, however, say that the ordinances of the Mormon Church cannot be performed without their Priesthood, and since blacks cannot have the Priesthood they cannot even achieve segregation! If they could perform ordinances for their own people, it would actually be a step toward equality. It is reported that the Genesis Group is friendly toward white people and that they are welcomed into the services. From all this we conclude that the Genesis Group really wants Priesthood, and that they are only using segregation as a means of obtaining it.

On July 2, 1972, Joseph Fielding Smith, the tenth President of the Mormon Church, had a heart attack and died. Although President Smith was responsible for much of the anti-Negro feelings in the Mormon Church, there is no evidence that there will be a change in policy. On July 8, 1972, the Salt Lake Tribune, carried an article which contained this information:

Harold B. Lee was chosen Friday as president of the Church . . .

President Lee was asked if any change is contemplated in spiritual interpretations of the church which bars blacks from holding the priesthood.

“To one who doesn’t believe in revelation, as we do, there can be no adequate explanation,” he responded. “We stand by and wait until the Lord speaks.” (Salt Lake Tribune, July 8, 1972)

For more information concerning the origin and development of the anti-Negro doctrine in the Mormon Church, see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 262-293.

SECRET WIVES AND CONCUBINES

On July 12, 1843, the Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith dictated the revelation which sanctioned the practice of plural marriage. This revelation is still printed in the Doctrine and Covenants—one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church. It appears as Section 132. In verse 52, Joseph Smith’s wife is instructed to receive the other women:

And let mine handmaid, Emma Smith, receive all those that have been given unto my servant Joseph, and who are virtuous and pure before me; and those who are not pure, and have said they were pure, shall be destroyed, saith the Lord God.

History shows that Emma Smith had a difficult time receiving this commandment. Lucy W. Kimball made this statement:

. . . the Prophet Joseph and his wife Emma offered us a home in their family, . . . I was married to Joseph Smith on the 4th of March 1843, . . . My sister Eliza was also married to Joseph a few days later. This was done without the knowledge of Emma Smith. Two months afterward she consented to give her husband two wives, providing he would give her the privilege of choosing them. She accordingly chose my sister Eliza and myself, and to save family trouble brother Joseph thought it best to have another ceremony performed. Accordingly on the 11th of May, 1843, we were sealed to Joseph Smith a second time, in Emma’s presence, . . . From that very hour, however, Emma was our bitter enemy, . . . we were obligated to leave the house and find another home. (Historical Record, page 240)

Plural marriage led to some very serious quarrels between Joseph and Emma Smith. For additional information on this subject see our new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 210-211.

No one knows for sure how many wives Joseph Smith had. The Assistant Church Historian Andrew Jenson listed 27 women who were married to him (see Historical Record, pages 233-234). The Mormon writer John J. Stewart, however, states that Joseph Smith may have married 36 or even 48 wives: “. . . he married many other women, perhaps three or four dozen or more, . . .” (B Brigham Young and His Wives, page 31). Stanley S. Ivins stated that the number of Joseph Smith’s wives “can only be guessed at but it might have gone as high as sixty or more” (Western Humanities Review, vol. 10, pages 232-233).

After Joseph Smith’s death the Mormon leaders sealed over 200 women to him to be his wives in eternity.

In an article published in Western Humanities Review, vol. 10, pages 232-233, Stanley S. Ivins stated that “Brigham Young is usually credited with only twenty-seven wives, but he was sealed to more than twice that many living women, and to at least 150 more who had died.” The Mormon writer John J. Stewart lists the names of 52 women who were sealed to Brigham Young, and then he makes this statement: “There were perhaps one or two
The Mormon leaders became obsessed with building up their own kingdoms. According to Stanley S. Ivin, the Endowment House Records reveal that on November 22, 1870, the Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt had himself sealed to 101 dead women. On November 29, 1870, he was sealed to 109 dead women. The same day (November 29, 1870) 91 dead women were sealed to his brother, Parley P. Pratt, who had died in 1857. Mr. Ivin found that the St. George Temple Records show that Wilford Woodruff—who later became the fourth President of the Mormon Church—was sealed to 189 dead women in a period of slightly over two years (January 29, 1879, to March 14, 1881). Moses Franklin Farnsworth was sealed to 345 dead women in a two year period.

The Apostle Abraham H. Cannon recorded this interesting item in his diary in 1894:

Thursday, April 5th, 1894 . . . I met with the Quorum and Presidency in the temple . . . President Woodruff then spoke . . . In searching out my genealogy I found about four hundred of my female kindred who were never married. I asked Pres. Young what I should do with them. He said for me to have them sealed to me unless there were more that [than?] 999 of them. The doctrine startled me, but I had it done . . . (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” April 5, 1894, vol. 18, pages 66-67)

Heber C. Kimball, a member of the First Presidency under Brigham Young, believed that in the resurrection he would be able to have “thousands” of wives (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pages 212-213). At any rate, the Mormon leaders found themselves in serious trouble with the U.S. Government because of the practice of polygamy. They did every thing in their power to escape the federal officials. Wilford Woodruff, who became the fourth President of the Mormon Church, had an armed guard to protect him. In a letter written in 1887, Wilford Woodruff stated:

I have a large stout man who goes with me every -------[where?] night and day carried 2 pistols & a double barrel shot gun and says he will shoot the marshals if they come to take me (Don’t tell anybody this) so I am ----well garded . . . (Letter from Wilford Woodruff to Miss Nellie Atkin, dated September 3, 1887, microfilm copy of the original)

Under the dates of October 17 and 18, 1890, the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon recorded the following in his journal:

Uncle David came in about noon and told me that he had a conversation with Lindsey Sprague, a deputy marshal, who told him that there were papers out for me and he learned that it was indeed a fact that a warrant was issued and in Doyle’s hands for my arrest. . . . Saturday, Oct. 18th, 1890 . . . Bro. Wilcken came and informed me that he had bought Doyle off, and had got his promise that I should not be molested, nor should any other person without sufficient notice being given for them to escape, and to get witnesses out of the way. He gave Bro. Wilcken the names of some 51 persons whose arrest he intended to try and effect on a trip he and another deputy intended to undertake today, through Utah and Emery counties.

A messenger was therefore despatched to give these people warning. Thus with a little money a channel of communication is kept open between the government offices and the suffering and persecuted Church members. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” October 17 and 18, 1890)

Before the year 1890 the Mormon leaders were declaring that plural marriage was essential for “man’s highest exaltation in the life to come,” and that the Church never could give up this principle (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pages 228-234).

Before Wilford Woodruff became President of the Mormon Church he stated that the church could not give up polygamy (Journal of Discourses, vol. 13, page 166). After he became President he even claimed to receive a revelation that he should not yield to the pressure of the government. Under the date of December 19, 1889, the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon recorded the following in his journal:

During our meeting a revelation was read which Pres. Woodruff received Sunday evening, Nov. 24th. Propositions had been made for the Church to make some concessions to the Courts in regard to its principles. Both of Pres. Woodruff’s counselors refused to advise him as to the course he should pursue, and he therefore laid the matter before the Lord. The answer came quick and strong. The word of the Lord was for us not to yield one particle of that which he had revealed and established. He had done and would continue to care for his work and those of the Saints who were faithful, and we need have no fear of our enemies when we were in the line of our duty. We are promised redemption and deliverance if we will trust in God and not in the arm of flesh . . . The whole revelation was filled with words of the greatest encouragement and comfort, and my heart was filled with joy and peace during the entire reading. It sets all doubts at rest concerning the course to pursue. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” December 29, 1889)

Before a year had passed Wilford Woodruff had issued the Manifesto which was supposed to end the practice of plural marriage in the Church. Because of the fact that Woodruff had previously taught that polygamy could not be discontinued and had even claimed to receive revelation to that effect, the other leaders of the Mormon Church were confused by his Manifesto. That there was division among the highest leaders of the Mormon Church at the time the Manifesto was issued is evident from the journal of the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon (see quotations in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 234). Although the leaders of the Mormon Church promised to obey the laws of the land, many of them broke their promises. Very few people, however, realized to what extend they had deviated from their word until they were called on to testify in the “Proceedings Before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United State Senate in the Matter of the Protests Against the Right of Hon. Reed Smoot, a Senator From the State of Utah, to Hold His Seat.” Joseph F. Smith, the sixth President of the Mormon Church, admitted that he had continued to practice unlawful cohabitation after the Manifesto:

Senator Overman. Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land?
Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.
Senator Overman. If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?
Mr. Smith. I have admitted that, Mr. Senator, a great many times here. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 312)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we present a great deal of information which proves that the Mormon leaders were not only engaging in unlawful cohabitation after the Manifesto, but that they were actually performing new plural marriages. Many of these marriages were performed in Mexico. On pages 237-238 we show that Joseph F. Smith married a plural wife to the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon off the coast of California some six years after the Manifesto was issued. Mrs. Wilhelmina C. Ellis, who had been a plural wife of the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon, gave this testimony:

Mrs. Ellis. He told me to pack his grip or his satchel and told me he was going on a trip. When did he marry Lillian Hamlin?
Mr. Tayler. Of what year?
Mrs. Ellis. After June 12 and before July 2.
Mr. Tayler. Did you not know they were married on the high sea?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. You were a plural wife?
Mrs. Ellis. Nineteen.
Mr. Tayler. How old were you when you married Abraham Cannon?
Mr. Smith. Nineteen.
Mrs. Ellis. You were a plural wife?
Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.
Mrs. Ellis. When did he marry Lillian Hamlin?
Mr. Smith. After June 12 and before July 2.
Mr. Tayler. Of what year?
Mrs. Ellis. 1896.
Mr. Tayler. He was at that time an Apostle?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Did he say he was going away that day, or that evening, to California?
Mrs. Ellis. He told me to pack his grip or his satchel and told me he was going to this trip.
Mr. Tayler. What did he say about Miss Hamlin?
Mrs. Ellis. Of course I understood, in fact he said she was going with him and President Smith.
Mr. Tayler. And President Smith?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. And that they were going to be married?
Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir.
Mr. Tayler. Did you not know they were married on the high sea?
Mrs. Ellis. Only from reports.
Mr. Tayler. That is not an essential part of the inquiry. [To the witness.] I was an inference from the fact that your husband said he was going to marry her, and went away to California for that purpose, and that Joseph F. Smith went along with them. From that you inferred that Joseph F. Smith had married them?

Mrs. Ellis. Yes, sir. (Reed Smoot Case, Vol. 2, pages 141-144)

President Smith denied that he performed the marriage ceremony, but he acknowledged that he did go on a trip with Lillian Hamlin and the Apostle Cannon at the very time when the marriage was supposed to have taken place:

Mr. Smith. . . . The first time I ever saw her [Lillian Hamlin], . . . was some time in June—I do not remember the date—1896. I was at that time president of the Sterling Mining and Milling Company . . . . I was asked by the board of directors to accompany Abraham H. Cannon to Los Angeles, . . . I accompanied Abraham H. Cannon and his wife on that trip, and had one of my wives with me on that trip.

Mr. Tayler. When did you first learn that Lillian Hamlin was his wife?

Mr. Smith. The first that I suspected anything of the kind was on that trip, because I never knew the lady before. (The Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 111)

Mr. Tayler. Did you have any talk on that journey . . . as to when they were married?

Mr. Smith. No, sir.

Mr. Tayler. Did you have any talk with either of them?

Mr. Smith. Not in the least.

Mr. Tayler. Not in the least?

Mr. Smith. Not in the least, sir; and no one ever mentioned to me that they were or were not married. I simply judged they were married because they were living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Tayler. Did you say anything by way of criticism to Abraham Cannon?

Mr. Smith. No, sir.

Mr. Tayler. For going about with this wife?

Mr. Smith. No, sir; I did not. (Ibid., pages 127-128)

Mr. Tayler. Now, the church—I gather from your statement the officials of the church have been ever since 1890, and are now, very sensitive as to the charge that plural marriages have been solemnized.

Mr. Worthington. Since the manifesto?

Mr. Tayler. Since the manifesto.

Mr. Smith. Yes; I think we have been very sensitive about that.

Mr. Tayler. Very sensitive?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Mr. Tayler. What inquiry did you make to find out whether Abraham H. Cannon, one of the twelve apostles of the church, had made a plural marriage?

Mr. Smith. I made no inquiry at all.

Mr. Tayler. Did you have any interest in finding out whether there had been—

Mr. Smith. Not the least. (Ibid., pages 476-477)

Frank J. Cannon claimed that his father, George Q. Cannon, told him that Joseph F. Smith performed the ceremony (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 238)

In the Reed Smoot Case, vol. 2, page 265, Abraham H. Cannon’s widow, Mrs. Ellis, was questioned about his diary. She replied: “I have seen it, but not since his death.” Recently many diaries belonging to Abraham H. Cannon have come to light. Unfortunately, however, if Cannon kept a diary at the time of his marriage in 1896, it has not been made public.

Even though we do not have the Apostle Cannon’s diary for 1896, Michael Marquardt has pointed out some references in his diary for 1894 which throw important light on this marriage and on the attitude of the Mormon leaders concerning polygamy after the Manifesto. (The Apostle Cannon’s diaries are now located in the Brigham Young University Library and photocopies are found at the University of Utah Library and the Utah State Historical Society.)

Long before Abraham H. Cannon’s diaries came to light, his brother Frank J. Cannon quoted his father George Q. Cannon as saying:

“... President Smith obtained the acquiescence of President Woodruff, on the plea that it wasn’t an ordinary case of polygamy but merely a fulfilment of the biblical instruction that a man should take his dead brother’s wife. Lillian was betrothed to David, and had been sealed to him in eternity after his death...” (Under the Prophet in Utah, Boston, 1911, page 177)
Now, according to the diary of Abraham H. Cannon, his father, George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency, lamented the fact that his sons could not raise up seed to David through polygamy: “My son David died without seed, and his brothers cannot do a work for him, in rearing children to bear his name because of the Manifesto” (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” April 5, 1894, vol. 18, page 70).

From an entry in the Apostle Cannon’s diary for October 24, 1894, it would appear that the Mormon leaders had decided that a plural marriage could be performed in Mexico to raise up seed to David. Although the diary has been damaged at this point and a few words are missing, the remaining portion shows that the Mormon leaders did not take the Manifesto seriously:

After meeting I went to the President’s Office and _____ Father [George Q. Cannon] about taking a wife for David. I told him David had taken Annie[e] _______ cousin, through the veil in life, and suggested she might be a good pe___ sealed to him for eternity. The suggestion pleased Father very much, and _____ Angus was there, He spoke to him about it in the presence of the Presidency. _____ not object providing Annie is willing. The Presidents Woodruff and Smith both said[ ] they were willing for such a ceremony to occur, if done in Mexico, and Pres. Woodruff[ ] promised the Lord’s blessing to follow such an act. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” October 24, 1894, vol. 18, page 170)

We may never know if Annie was “willing” to enter into this plural marriage, but we do know that less than two years later Lillian Hamlin was married to the Apostle Cannon. Mrs. Wilhelmina C. Ellis, who had been one of Cannon’s plural wives testified:

Mrs. Ellis. He said he could marry her out of the State—out of the United States.
Mr. Tayler. What conversation did you have with him then about his going away and about his getting married again? What did he say first about going?
Mrs. Ellis. He told me he was going to marry her for time, and that she would be David’s wife for eternity. (The Reed Smooth Case, vol. 2; pages 142-143)

The Apostle Abraham H. Cannon’s journal not only reveals that the Mormon leaders approved of polygamy after the Manifesto, but it shows that they were considering the idea of a secret system of concubinage wherein men and women could live together without being actually married:

Father [George Q. Cannon] now spoke of the unfortunate condition of the people at present in regard to marriage. . . . I believe in concubinage, or some plan whereby men and women can live together under sacred ordinances and vows until they can be married. . . . such a condition would have to be kept secret, until the laws of our government change to permit the holy order of wedlock which God has revealed, which will undoubtedly occur at not distant day, in order to correct the social evil. . . . ——— Pres. Snow. “I have no doubt but concubinage will yet be practiced in this Church, but I had not thought of it in this connection. When the nations are troubled good women will come here for safety and blessing, and men will accept them as concubines.” ——— Pres. Woodruff: “If men enter into some practice of this character to raise a righteous posterity, they will be justified in it. . . .” (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” April 5, 1894, vol. 18, page 70)

It is interesting to note that Joseph Smith’s revelation on polygamy also said that concubinage was justifiable in God’s sight: “Abraham received concubines and they bore him children; and it was accounted unto him for righteousness. . . .” (Doctrines and Covenants 132:37)

At any rate, the diaries of the Apostle Abraham H. Cannon reveal devastating evidence against the Mormon Church, and this evidence cannot be easily dismissed. The Mormon writer Kenneth W. Godfrey feels that the Apostle Abraham Cannon’s diaries present an accurate picture of what was being said by the Mormon leaders in private: “…what were the Mormon leaders saying in private? With the recent acquisition of the Abraham H. Cannon diaries it is now possible to accurately report what was taking place in meetings of the Council of the Twelve Apostles” (“Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1970, page 22). We understand that there has recently been an attempt to suppress the Cannon diaries, but we know that they are still available at the University of Utah Library and the Utah State Historical Society. These diaries need to be thoroughly searched for they throw a great deal of light on Mormon history.

In the new enlarged edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we have many quotations from the Cannon journals and from other unimpeachable sources which prove beyond all doubt that Mormonism was not founded on truth.

This is by far our most comprehensive and revealing work on Mormonism. See description of this book below.

One of the most serious problems facing a student of Mormon history today is that those who have gone before us have not always been honest. Both Mormon and anti-Mormon writers have been guilty of deceit, and this has sometimes led to problems for those who desire to know the real truth about Joseph Smith and the origin of the Mormon Church.

An example of a forgery which went undetected for many years is an anti-Mormon publication entitled, "Defence in a Rehearsal of My Grounds for Separating Myself from the Latter Day Saints." This "Defence" was supposed to have been written by Oliver Cowdery, one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon, in 1839. For a number of years we accepted this document as being authentic. Even B. H. Roberts, who was probably the most famous Mormon historian, accepted the "Defence" as the work of Oliver Cowdery. Fawn M. Brodie also accepted the "Defence" as an authentic document, but she cautioned: "Apparently there are no copies of the original extant." On November 15, 1960, however, Pauline Hancock received a letter from Yale University Library which contained the statement that they had obtained a photographic copy of the original of Oliver Cowdery's "Defence." Mrs. Hancock told us that the original copy was located in or near Independence, Missouri. Wesley P. Walters later located and examined this copy. Unfortunately, it turned out to be a copy printed more than 60 years after Cowdery was supposed to have written it. In 1967 we did a great deal of research on the "Defence." In the Salt Lake City Messenger for May 1967, we stated: "Even though B. H. Roberts (who was the Assistant Mormon Church Historian) accepted the 'Defence' as the work of Oliver Cowdery, we have found some material that seems to show that it may have been spurious. We have made a study of this matter and have prepared a pamphlet entitled A Critical Look—A Study of the Overstreet 'Confession' and the Cowdery 'Defence.' " In the conclusion to this pamphlet we said:

After carefully examining the evidence, we have come to the conclusion that the "Defence" is probably a spurious work, written sometime after 1887—i.e., after David Whitmer's pamphlet appeared. Until an original copy or a contemporary reference to it is found, we must regard it as spurious. Perhaps some of our readers will have some information concerning the "Defence" or the Overstreet "Confession" which we are not aware of. If so, they can write us at: Box 1884, Salt Lake City, Utah.

While we received a few letters from people who still maintained the "Defence" was authentic, no one has furnished any new evidence that would lead us to change our mind.

In the pamphlet A Critical Look, we demonstrated that the person who made up the "Defence" used some articles which Oliver Cowdery wrote for the Messenger and Advocate, in 1834-35. This made the "Defence" appear to be in the style of Oliver Cowdery and helped to fool many people. A careful examination of some of the portions lifted from the Messenger and Advocate, however, shows they are so unnaturally inserted into the "Defence" that they give the whole thing away (see A Critical Look, pages 22-27).

In the same publication (A Critical Look) we also showed that the Overstreet "Confession" is a forgery. This is another anti-Mormon document which purports to show that Oliver Cowdery did not make a speech at Council Bluffs, Iowa, which the Mormons attribute to him. Instead, a man by the name of Oliver Overstreet was supposed to have been paid $5,000.00 by Brigham Young to impersonate Oliver Cowdery. In the pamphlet A Critical Look, pages 4-6, we show that Oliver Cowdery was at Council Bluffs, and therefore it would have been impossible for Mr. Overstreet to have impersonated him.

While we have suspected for some time that there may have been some relationship between the Oliver Cowdery "Defence" and the Overstreet "Confession," recently we have become convinced that they came from the hand of the same impostor. To begin with, both documents are related to Oliver Cowdery and his apostasy from the Mormon Church. Both the "Defence" and the "Confession" began to be circulated after the turn of the century, and in neither case can a 19th century copy be located. The most astonishing thing about this whole matter, however, is that the Overstreet "Confession" reveals the exact method that the impostor used in writing the "Defence." The reader will remember that we have previously stated that portions of Oliver Cowdery's early writings were used in the "Defence" to make it appear that it is written in his style. Now, in the Overstreet "Confession," Mr. Overstreet claimed that he was told to read some articles written by Oliver Cowdery so that he would be able to impersonate him: "To enable me to know what to say and do, Bro. Miller had me read some articles written by Cowdery and also gave me some voice drill, assuring me that he would make a verbatim record of my remarks, while personating Mr. Cowdery to be preserved for future use under Br. Brigham Young's direction; and that my part in the matter he was confident would never be known or suspected" (A Critical Look, page 1).

The fact that many portions of Oliver Cowdery's writings have been inserted into the "Defence" makes it very difficult to compare its style with that found in the "Confession." For instance, in an article published in the Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, page 14, Oliver Cowdery stated: "And what serves to render the reflection past expression on this point is, that from his hand I received baptism, by the direction of the angel of God ..." The reader will notice that while most of the words were copied verbatim from the Messenger and Advocate, the words "in its bitterness to me" did not appear there. This is very interesting because in the Overstreet "Confession" we find the words "bitter to me." (A Critical Look, page 1)

The reader will probably be pleased to learn that we have reprinted A Critical Look—A Study of the Overstreet "Confession" and the Cowdery "Defence." We have included it in a special offer which is explained on the last page of this issue of the Messenger.

LIBERTY TAKEN ON HISTORY

Although it is easy for Mormon writers to accept the fact that these two anti-Mormon documents are forgeries, it is very difficult for them to be as objective about the documents upon which their own church is founded. For instance, in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142, we prove that more than 60% of Joseph Smith's History of the Church was not compiled until after his death although the Mormon leaders have published it under his name. The remaining portion—less than 40%—compiled in his lifetime had serious changes made in it after his death. We pointed out that that material was taken from newspapers and journals and changed to the first person to make it appear that Joseph Smith had written it. One brief example should suffice: in the newspaper The Wasp for August 13, 1842, we read: “As to Mr. Smith, we have yet to learn by what rule of right he was arrested to be transported to Missouri . . . .” This was inserted in the History of the Church and changed to the first person to make it appear that it was written by Joseph Smith: “I have yet to learn by what rule of right I was arrested to be transported to Missouri . . . .” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 87)

Although a few Mormon writers have been willing to admit that changes have been made in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, there has been a reluctance to admit that material has been stolen from many sources and made to appear as if it were written by Joseph Smith. One Mormon scholar tried to inform his people about this matter in a book he was writing, but before publication this material was deleted by those who edited his book. The Mormon scholar Paul R. Cheesman has made a very revealing statement concerning Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. It is found in an unpublished manuscript at the Brigham Young University Library and reads as follows:

As of now, the original source of Joseph Smith’s statement, under the date of May 1, 1843, concerning the Kinderhook Plate, cannot be found. Much of Volume V of the Documentary History of the Church was recorded by Leo Hawkins in 1853, after the saints were in Utah, and was collected by Willard Richards from journals (Dean Jesse, Church Historian’s office, Appendix #2). Liberty was taken by historians of those days to put the narrative in the first person. Even though the source was not as such. Verification of the authenticity of Joseph Smith’s statement is still under study. In examining the diary of Willard Richards, the compiler of Volume V, the Kinderhook story is not found there. Our research has taken us through numerous diaries and letters written at this particular time, and the Kinderhook story is not mentioned. (“An Analysis of the Kinderhook Plate,” by Paul R. Cheesman, March, 1970, Brigham Young University Library.)

Just as we were preparing to print this issue of the Messenger we learned that another Mormon scholar has now admitted that “large portions” of Joseph Smith’s History were not written by him. Marvin S. Hill, of the Brigham Young University History Department, made these very revealing statement:

One reason that Brodie concluded that Joseph had veiled his personality behind a “perpetual flow of words” in his history may be that she assumed he had actually dictated most of it. We now know that large portions of the history were not dictated but were written by scribes and later transferred into the first person to read as though the words were Joseph’s. That fact makes what few things Joseph Smith wrote himself of great significance. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1972, page 76)

The reader will notice that some Mormon writers now admit that Joseph Smith’s History was not finished until after his death and that sources not written by Joseph Smith were put in “the first person” to make it appear that they were written by Smith himself. The Mormon leaders must face the serious implications of this whole matter. The Mormon scholar Hugh Nibley says: “A forgery is defined by specialists in ancient documents as ‘any document which was not produced in the time, place, and manner claimed by it or its publishers’” (Since Camorah, page 160). Under this definition the History of the Church must be classed as a forgery. It is every bit as spurious as the “Defence” or the Overstreet “Confession.” Mormon writers might maintain that Joseph Smith’s History is partly based on Joseph Smith’s private journals. This is undoubtedly true, but which portions were taken from there and which portions were taken from other sources? The whole truth may never be known unless the Mormon leaders release all the manuscripts relating to this matter. A person might just as reasonably try to justify the writing of the “Defence” as to uphold Joseph Smith’s History as the Mormon Church prints it today. We could say that part of the “Defence” actually comes from Cowdery’s writings and that many of the incidents it relates are historically accurate. This would of course be true, but it is still a forgery and it would be dishonest for us to continue using it as Cowdery’s work. If we did use it there would be no end to the ridicule that Mormon writers would heap upon us. This ridicule would, of course, be justified, for we could not blame the Mormons for protesting against the use of a bogus document which attacks their Church. The question we would like to ask Mormon scholars is this: will they be as objective about Joseph Smith’s History as they are about the “Defence”?” We feel that an honest investigation of the material which we present in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-142, will show the reader that Joseph Smith’s History of the Church is a bogus history.

The Mormon leaders are certainly aware of the fact that they are confronted with a serious problem with regard to Joseph Smith’s History, and it may very well be that they will try to phase it out. The Church recently announced that a “sixteen-volume Sesquicentennial History has been launched” (Mormon History Association Newsletter, March 10, 1973, page 5). From reports we have heard this new history will be written by prominent Mormon scholars and will be far more honest than Joseph Smith’s History. While this is certainly a step in the right direction, we feel that the Mormon leaders should first publicly repudiate Joseph Smith’s History before bringing out a new one.

STILL SuppressING records?

For many years we have maintained that the Mormon leaders do not want their people to know the truth about Joseph Smith and the foundation of the Church. The following appeared in the publication Tiffany’s Monthly in 1859:

People sometimes wonder that the Mormon can revere Joseph Smith. That they can by any means make a Saint of him. But they must remember, that the Joseph Smith preached in England, and the one shot at Carthage, Ill., are not the same. The ideal prophet differs widely from the real person. To one, ignorant of his character, he may be made the impersonation of every virtue. He may be associated in the mind with all that is true, pure, and lovely and divine. Art may make him, indeed, an object of religious veneration. But remember, the Joseph Smith thus venerated, is not the real, actual Joseph Smith . . . but one that art has created.

The Mormon leaders have gone to great lengths to keep their people from finding the real Joseph Smith. In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 11-13, we demonstrated that the Mormon leaders have suppressed the records which would reveal the truth about Joseph Smith and the origin of his Church. We showed that Dr. Hugh Nibley, who many Mormons feel is the top scholar in the Church, donated his great-grandfather’s journal to the Church Historian’s Office. This journal contained important information about Joseph Smith. The Mormon Historian Joseph Fielding Smith took the journal and locked it up in a safe, and when Dr. Nibley wanted to see it at a later time he was refused. In a letter dated March 21, 1961, Dr. Nibley stated: “Actually, the last time I asked permission to see the Journal I was refused. Any attempt to reproduce it at this time is out of the question.” (See photograph of this letter in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 12)

For a number of years we severely criticized the Church for suppressing the documents which would reveal the truth about Joseph Smith. Finally, in 1972 it appeared that the Church was going to have a change of policy. Dr. Leonard J. Arrington was appointed Church Historian. The Deseret News for January 15, 1972, stated that Arrington’s appointment “marks the first time that this important post has been filled by going outside the membership of the church’s general authorities . . .” While Dr. Arrington is an active Mormon, many people considered him to be very liberal. The thing that made the appointment of Dr. Arrington most surprising was that he had been critical of the Church leaders’ policy of suppressing the documents. Writing in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1966, page 26, Dr. Arrington stated:

It is unfortunate for the cause of Mormon history that the Church Historian’s Library, which is in the possession of virtually all of the diaries of leading Mormons, has not seen fit to publish these diaries or to permit qualified historians to use them without restriction.

On March 18,1972, the Deseret News announced that James B. Allen and Davis Bitton had been appointed “as assistant church historians.” These appointments came as a real shock, for both these men are rather liberal. Davis Bitton had even criticized the Church for changing Joseph Smith’s History. He cited a number of changes which we mentioned in our book Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, and made these interesting observations:

. . . the basic text itself has not been treated with proper respect. When we compare the DHC with the earlier versions, in fact, we discover that hundreds of changes have been made. These include deletion, additions, and simple changes of wording . . . for researchers in early Mormon history Rule Number One is “do not rely on the DCH; never use a quotation from it without comparing the earlier versions.” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1968, pages 31-32)

With men like Arrington, Allen and Bitton we expected great changes in the policy of the Church with regard to the documents which have been suppressed. Unfortunately, however, the Mormon leaders have not allowed these men to proceed as they had planned. Now, it is true that there has been some improvement. We understand that a person can now obtain photocopies of many books which were not available in the past, and a Mormon scholar reported to us that he had better access to manuscript material than in the past.
While this may be true, the archives are certainly not available to everyone, and there is evidence that the First Presidency of the Church is trying to stop some of Dr. Arrington’s plans. For instance, on November 24, 1972, the Mormon-owned Deseret News announced that an organization known as “Friends of Church History” would be formed:

Friends of Church History, a group of professional and nonprofessional history buffs will hold an organizational meeting Thursday Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m. in the General Church Office Building, . . . .

The meeting, . . . is open to all persons with an interest in the history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints . . . .

Monthly meetings will be held at which papers will be presented thus providing members with a means of keeping up-to-date on current research and new interpretations, Smart added . . . .

“it will be a meeting of the like-minded, a chance for Church history buffs to stimulate thought and encourage study among their group and beyond,” commented Dr. Leonard Arrington, . . . .

The group, which will operate in cooperation with the Church’s Historical [department, will have access to the department’s facilities for research and study. (Deseret News, November 24, 1972)

The Friends of Church History got off to a great start. We understand that about 500 people attended the first meeting. Dr. Arrington was probably elated by the large turn out, but the Mormon leaders could see that this would cause serious problems for the Church. With a large group studying Church history the truth about Joseph Smith and the foundation of the Church would be very likely to emerge. They could not stand for their people to learn about the real Joseph Smith; therefore, an order was issued by the First Presidency that the next meeting should be cancelled. Meetings were to be held “the fourth Thursday of each month,” but no meetings have been held since November 30, 1972. On April 27, 1973, we talked to a woman in Dr. Arrington’s office. She admitted that the group did not meet in April and could not give a date when the group might meet again. She went so far as to say that they were “not sure” of the standing of the Friends of Church History. It is reported that Dr. Arrington was recently asked why the Friends of Church History were not meeting. He replied that they were still “thrashing out” the constitution. When a prominent Mormon scholar was told of Dr. Arrington’s statement, he said that they were “thrashing out more than the constitution.” William B. Smart—the man who was supposed to head the Friends of Church History—confirmed that it was the “First Presidency” that gave the order to “hold” it up.

On December 13, 1972, the Deseret News announced that “Elder Joseph Anderson has been appointed director of the Historical Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.” Joseph Anderson is a man who believes in suppression of the records, and he could make it very difficult for Dr. Arrington. On March 8, 1973, a member of the Church asked Joseph Anderson concerning an unpublished revelation of Joseph Smith. His reply was that it “isn’t available.” It would now appear that the Mormon leaders are still in charge of the Historical Department and that Dr. Arrington is only the “Church Historian” in name. When asked about access to documents he states that he is in charge of writing and researching but has nothing to do with persons wanting to do their research in the Church Historical Department of the Church. He refers a person to Earl Olsen who is the Church Archivist. Earl Olsen has been refusing access to the documents for many years. In the case where the man wanted to see an unpublished revelation of Joseph Smith, he had first asked Earl Olsen. Olsen told him he must get permission from the First Presidency. He called the First Presidency’s Office, but they referred him back to Joseph Anderson. Anderson told him to call back in a few days, but when he did he was told that it “isn’t available.” This is almost the same routine that used to go on when Joseph Fielding Smith was Church Historian. Even the Mormon scholar who claims to have better access to material admits that the Mormon leaders are still not making all the documents available. For instance, the journal of George Q. Cannon may never be made available because it contains so much revealing material concerning the secret Council of 50. Although there has certainly been an improvement in the Church Historical Department since Dr. Arrington’s appointment, some of the liberal Mormons fear that he is beginning to compromise. We know that he was planning to print Joseph Smith’s journals, but we also know that some of the Mormon leaders would be very opposed to this since it would tend to further undermine the History of the Church and to reveal the truth about Joseph Smith. We hope that many people will put pressure on the Church to make the journals of Joseph Smith available. If pressure is not applied it may very well be that these journals may never be made available. Members of the Church can be especially effective in this regard. If enough people will unite against the suppressive measures of the Mormon leaders they will be forced to release these documents. We know of one woman who had the courage to tell the Mormon leaders to either make a suppressed document available or remove her name from the Church records. Of course they did not comply with either request, but we know that if enough people will stand up for the truth great things will be accomplished. We feel that the Mormon leaders were forced into appointing Dr. Arrington as Church Historian because of the pressure that was exerted upon them. Now that he has been appointed, however, they have tried to take away the powers of his office and to make him compromise his position. We feel that the documents belong to the Mormon people and that they should raise their voice in protest against these oppressive measures.

JOSEPH SMITH AND ADULTERY

When Mormon apologists are unable to refute our arguments against the Church, they will often resort to dishonesty by accusing us of adultery or polygamy. For instance, in a letter dated February 26, 1973, we find the following:

A close friend of mine was recently converted to Mormonism . . . . I gave my friend your original thesis, Mormonism, and I could tell him was somewhat disturbed after reading it. But after discussing the thesis with some elders of his church, he came back with this statement about you: “Gerald Tanner was excommunicated from the Church on the charge of adultery.” Mr. Tanner, I would be most appreciate to hear your comment as to any truth that may surround this statement.

We, of course, replied that there is no truth in this statement and that we requested our names to be withdrawn from the rolls of the Church. We pointed out that we have photographically reproduced the letters relating to this matter (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 575) and that these letters plainly show that there was no “charge of adultery” involved. In a letter addressed to “Brother Jerald Tanner” and dated August 28, 1960, the Cannon Seventh Ward Bishopric stated: “In accordance with your request your name has been removed from the records and you are no longer considered a member of said Church.”

Actually, the truth of the matter is that we felt that the Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith was guilty of adultery. This helped lead us to the conclusion that he was not a prophet and that we should ask for our names to be removed from the rolls of the Church. In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 202-251, we show that the Mormon doctrine of plural marriage was not the divine system that many people believe it was. In fact, there is evidence that Joseph Smith was involved with other women long before he gave his famous revelation on polygamy on July 12, 1843. The Mormon writer Max Parkin made this statement concerning a girl by the name of Fanny Alger:

The charge of adulterous “relations with a certain girl” was leveled against Smith by Cowdery in Missouri in 1837; this accusation became one of the complaints the Church had against Cowdery in his excommunication trial in Far West, April 12, 1838. In rationalizing Cowdery’s accusation, the Prophet testified “that Oliver Cowdery had been his bosom friend, therefore he entrusted him with many things.” (Conflict at Kirtland, 1966, page 166)

Max Parkin’s source for this information is the “Far West Record.” This is an unpublished “record book containing minutes of meetings in Kirtland and Far West, Missouri.” The original is in the Church Historical Department. At one time Michael Marquardt was allowed access to a typed copy on microfilm at the Church Historical Office. He copied some important material from it which has never been published. We take the following from his notes:

David W. Patten testifies, that he went to Oliver Cowdery to enquire of him if a certain story was true re[s]pecting J. Smith’s committing adultery with a certain girl, when he turned on his heel and insinuated as though he was guilty: Also said that Joseph told him, he had confessed to Emma, also that he has used his influence to urge on lawsuits.

Thomas B. Marsh testifies that while in Kirtland last summer, David W. Patten asked Oliver Cowdery if Joseph Smith Jr. had confessed to his wife that he was guilty of adultery with a certain girl, when Oliver Cowdery cocked up his eye very knowingly and hesitated to answer the question, saying, he did not know as he was bound to answer the question yet conveyed the idea that it was true. Last fall after Oliver came to this place he heard a conversation take place between Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery when J. Smith asked... him if he had ever confessed to him that he was guilty of adultery, when after a considerable winking etc he said No. Joseph the asked him if he ever told him that he confessed to any body, when he answered no.

Joseph Smith, Jr. testifies that Oliver Cowdery had been his bosom friend, therefore he intrusted him with many things. He then gave a history respecting the girl business. Also that Oliver Cowdery took him one side and said, that he had come to the conclusion to get property and if he could not get it one way he would another. . . (“Far West Record,” page 117)

Oliver Cowdery was one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon. In a letter dated January 21, 1838, Cowdery plainly stated that Joseph Smith had an “affair” with Fanny Alger:

When he [Joseph Smith] was there we had some conversation in which in every instance I did not fail to affirm that what I said was strictly true. A dirty, nasty, filthy affair of his and Fanny Alger’s was talked over in which I strictly declared that I had never deserted from the truth in the matter, and as I supposed was admitted by himself. (Letter written by Oliver Cowdery and recorded by his brother Warren Cowdery; see photograph in The Mormon Kingdom, vol. 1, page 27)

Mormon writers admit that there was a connection between Joseph Smith and Fanny Alger, however, they claim that Fanny Alger was Joseph Smith’s plural wife and that he was commanded by God to enter into polygamy.

Andrew Jenson, who was the Assistant L.D.S. Church Historian, made a list of 27 women who were sealed to Joseph Smith. In this list he said the following concerning Fanny Alger: “Fanny Alger, one of the first plural wives sealed to the Prophet” (Historical Record, page 233). The Mormon writer John J. Stewart gives this interesting information:

Benjamin F. Johnson, another close friend to Joseph . . . says, “In 1835, at Kirtland, . . . there lived then with his family [the Prophet’s] a neighbor’s daughter. Fanny Alger, a very nice and comely young woman . . . toward whom not only myself but everyone, seemed partial, for the amiability of her character; and it was whispered even then that Joseph loved her.” Johnson, a Church patriarch at the time of writing, put his finger on the beginning of Oliver Cowdery’s and Warren Parrish’s downfall—Parrish was the Prophet’s secretary: “There was some trouble with Oliver Cowdery, and whisper said it was relating to a girl then living in his (the Prophet’s) family; and I was afterwards told by Warren Parrish, that he himself and Oliver Cowdery did know that Joseph had Fannie Alger as wife, for they were spied upon and found together.” . . . “Without doubt in my mind,” says Johnson, “Fannie Alger was, at Kirtland, the Prophet’s first plural wife . . .” One of the charges against Cowdery when he was excommunicated was that he had insinuated that Joseph was guilty of adultery. (Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, pages 103-104)

A PRETENDED MARRIAGE

Because of his relationships with other women Joseph Smith began to find himself in trouble with the law, his own followers and his first wife Emma. He found it necessary, therefore, to use a great deal of deceit to keep the matter from becoming public knowledge. This fact is made very evident in the case of his secret relationship with Sarah Ann Whitney. According to the Assistant Church Historian, Sarah Ann Whitney was married to Joseph Smith by her father, Newel K. Whitney: “Sarah Ann Whitney, afterwards the wife of Pres. Heber C. Kimball married to Joseph July 27, 1842, her father Newel K. Whitney officiating” (Historical Record, vol. 6, May 1887, pages 223-34).

As we pointed out in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 581, Michael Marquardt discovered photographs of a letter written by Joseph Smith himself and addressed to Bishop Newel K. Whitney and his wife. It is very interesting because Smith asks the “three” of them—presumably Mr. and Mrs. Whitney and their young daughter Sarah Ann, to whom Joseph Smith was secretly married—to come see him by night. In the letter Joseph Smith makes it very clear that he does not want them to come when Emma, his first wife, would be present:

. . . All three of you can come and see me in the fore part of the night, . . . The only thing to be careful of is to find out when Emma comes then you cannot be safe, but when she is not here, there is the most perfect safety: . . . I think Emma won’t come tonight if she don’t fail to come tonight, I subscribe myself your obedient and affectionate, companion, and friend. Joseph Smith

Since finding photographs of this important letter in the George A. Smith Collection at the University of Utah Library, Michael Marquardt has completed some very important research concerning this whole affair. His findings are so important that we are publishing them in a pamphlet entitled, The Strange Marriages of Sarah Ann Whitney to Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, Joseph C. Kingsbury and Heber C. Kimball (see special offer on page 6 of this Messenger). Among other things that Mr. Marquardt has discovered is the fact that Joseph Smith actually performed a “pretended” marriage ceremony between Sarah Ann Whitney and Joseph C. Kingsbury so that his own relationship with her would not be noticed. Mr. Marquardt cites the following from “The History of Joseph C. Kingsbury,” a document that is now in the Western Americana of the University of Utah Library:

. . . on the 29th of April 1843 I according to President Joseph Smith Council & others agreed to Stand by Sarah Ann Whitney as supposed to be her husband & had a prete[n]ded marriage for the purpose of Bringing about the purposes of God in these last days as spoken by the mouth of the Prophet Isaiah Jeremiah Ezekiel and also Joseph Smith, & Sarah Ann Should Reed a Great Glory Honor & eternal lives and I also Should Reed a Great Glory, Honor & eternal lives to the full desire of my heart in having my Companion Caroline in the first Resurrection to claim her & no one have power to take her from me & we both shall be Crowned & enthroned together in the Celestial Kingdom of God . . . (“The History of Joseph C. Kingsbury,” University of Utah Library)

That a man professing to be a prophet of God would perform a “pretended” marriage to cover up his own iniquity is almost beyond belief.

In his pamphlet, Mr. Marquard goes on to show that after Joseph Smith’s death, Sarah Ann Whitney continued to live with Joseph C. Kingsbury in this “pretended” marriage. While living with Kingsbury she became pregnant with the Apostle Heber C. Kimball’s child. Seven months later she was married to Kimball for “time” in the Nauvoo Temple, but she continued to live with Kingsbury until after the child was born. All these facts are well documented in Michael Marquardt’s pamphlet. We highly recommend this work.

From the above it would appear that Joseph Smith had absolutely no regard for the sacred vows involved in marriage. In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we show that Joseph Smith took married as well as single women as his plural wives.

ABRAHAM AND NEGROES

In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 294-369, we prove beyond all doubt that the Book of Abraham—which contains the basis for the anti-Negro doctrine—is a product of Joseph Smith’s own imagination and that it must be repudiated by the Mormon people. On page 304 of this book we show that Wesley P. Walters—one of the top scholars on Mormon history—may have forced the Mormon leaders to make the rediscovery of the Joseph Smith Papyri public and thus set the stage for its translation by Egyptologists. We are now happy to announce that Mr. Walters has written a pamphlet on the Book of Abraham (see special offer on page 6 of this Messenger). Wesley P. Walters’ achievements in Mormon history have been astounding. He is the man who demonstrated that there was no revival in Palmyra in 1820 as Joseph Smith had claimed. As if this were no enough, he discovered the document which proved that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty before a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, N.Y., in 1826. Mormon scholars had claimed that if this court trial could ever be established it would be the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith.

After the discovery by Walters, the Mormon scholar Marvin S. Hill, of the History Dept. at Brigham Young University, published a statement in which he said: “If a study of the handwriting and paper of the originals demonstrates their authenticity, it will confirm that there was a trial in 1826 and that glass looking was an issue at the trial.” It would appear that Marvin S. Hill now accepts the authenticity of the discovery for he makes the following statement in the latest issue of Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought: “There may be little doubt now, as I have indicated elsewhere, that Joseph Smith was brought to trial in 1826 on a charge, not exactly clear, associated with money digging” (Dialogue, A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1972, page 77).

Besides making these important discoveries Wesley P. Walters has also proved his objectivity by helping us to discover the truth about the Cowdery “Defence.” His new pamphlet is entitled, Joseph Smith Among the Egyptians. In this new work Wesley P. Walters states:
In April of that year [1966] Jerald and Sandra Tanner published a photomechanical reproduction of the “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar” which Joseph had begun to put together in 1835. Although a few Mormon scholars had known of the existence of this material since about 1935, it was not generally available to most Mormon or to non-Mormon scholars . . . When the scholarly world through the Tanners’ publication got their first good look at this bizarre method of translating Egyptian, some Mormons became unsettled to the point of losing their faith in Smith’s ability to translate Egyptian. Yet a more shattering blow to their faith was still to come to the following year.

On November 27,1967, the news media carried an unexpected announcement that a portion of the papyri which Joseph Smith had acquired in 1835 was still in existence and had been turned over to the Mormon church by the Metropolitan Museum of Art . . . Now at last the official material was available for judging the Mormon leader’s translating ability. What was heralded with great rejoicing by the Mormon community, has since turned into a nightmare for their scholars and has been responsible for some learned Mormons coming to reject the Book of Abraham and even renounce all the claims of their Prophet . . .

It is no wonder that some Mormons have come recently to reject Joseph’s claim to a knowledge of Egyptian, . . . not even the best scholarship can save a sinking ship, and Mormons of integrity such as Dee Jay Nelson, whose competence in Egyptian is granted by all, have sorrowfully admitted that the Book of Abraham was not at all a divine production, but purely the work of Joseph Smith’s imagination.

Wesley P. Walters gives a very good summary of the evidence against the Book of Abraham. He deals with Dr. Nibley’s attempts to defend it and shows that he is in a “state of confusion” on almost every important issue. All of our readers should have a copy of Walters’ new work, Joseph Smith Among the Egyptians.

HIDDEN REVELATION REVEALED

Just as we were preparing the last page of the Messenger, Michael Marquardt brought to light an extremely important revelation which the Mormon leaders have suppressed since 1842. This revelation is concerning polygamy and is dated a year earlier than the one published in the Doctrine and Covenants. It sanctions Joseph Smith’s secret marriage to Sarah Ann Whitney. (The reader will remember that Sarah Ann Whitney was secretly married to Smith, but that she had a “pretended” marriage to Joseph C. Kingsbury to cover up this relationship.) This revelation is dated July 27, 1842, and reads as follows:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto my servant N. K. Whitney, the thing that my servant Joseph Smith has made known unto you and your family and which you have agreed upon is right in mine eyes and shall be rewarded upon your heads with honor and immortality and eternal life to all your house, both old and young because of the lineage of my Priesthood, saith the Lord, it shall be upon you and upon your children after you from generation to generation, by virtue of the holy promise which I shall now make unto you, saith the Lord. These are the words which you shall pronounce upon my servant Joseph and your daughter S. A. Whitney. They shall take each other by the hand and you shall say, You both mutually agree, calling them by name, to be each other’s companion so long as you both shall live, preserving yourselves for each other and from all others and also throughout eternity, reserving only those rights which have been given to my servant Joseph by revelation and commandment and by legal authority in times passed. If you both agree to covenant and do this, I then give you, S. A. Whitney, my daughter, to Joseph Smith, to be his wife, to observe all the rights between you both that belong to that condition.

I do it in my own name and in the name of my wife, your mother, and in the name of my holy progenitors, by the right of birth which is of priesthood, vested in me by revelation and commandment and promise of the living God, obtained by the holy Melchisedek Gethrow [Jethro?] and others of the Holy Fathers, commanding in the name of the Lord all those powers to concentrate in you and through you to your posterity forever. All these things I do in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that through this order he may be glorified and that through the power of anointing David may reign King over Israel, which shall hereafter be revealed. Let immortality and eternal life hereafter be sealed upon your heads forever and ever. (Revelation given by Joseph Smith, July 27, 1842, typed copy; original in the LDS Church Historian’s Office)

In The Strange Marriages of Sarah Ann Whitney . . . Michael Marquardt shows that the Mormon historian Orson F. Whitney mentioned this revelation in 1885 but stated that “it has never been published.” Mr. Marquardt has also found that the Mormon scholar Larry Neil Poulson claims to have “seen and read it several times in the Church Historian’s Office in Salt Lake City.” Although he did not include a copy of the revelation in his thesis written at Brigham Young University, Mr. Poulson did include a description of it which seems to verify the copy we have printed above:

In the ceremony uniting the Prophet Joseph Smith and Sarah Ann in celestial marriage, the ceremony having been given to the Prophet by revelation, Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, is mentioned as one of Bishop’s Whitney’s ancestors. (“The Life and Contributions of Newel Kimball Whitney,” Brigham Young University, 1966, pages 113-114, typed copy)
A TREMENDOUS SUCCESS

In 1963 we published our most important work on Mormonism. A major publishing company predicted that it wouldn’t sell over 250 or 300 copies, but by 1965 Wallace Turner reported that we had sold “about 3000 copies” (The Mormon Establishment, page, 157). It was not long after this that our metal plates for printing began to break down, and the book went out of print for a number of years. In 1972, however, we issued a new enlarged and revised edition which has become a tremendous success. We have now sold almost 2,000 copies of the new printing, and this brings the total sales to over 7,000 copies. Dr. Jennings G. Olson, of the Department of Philosophy at Weber College, made these comments concerning it:

...there is now in existence a book which every Mormon and interested non-Mormon should study and ponder. . . . it is called Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? . . . it is tightly packed with serious, responsible research which no one can deny is the most comprehensive and thorough analysis and evaluation of Mormonism ever produced in the history of the Church.

Any Mormon of Elemental identification who wants to “answer” the Tanners will have his hands full for a long time to come because the Tanners have the microfilm sources from the early Mormon Church which no one before has had in such abundance. . . . I seriously doubt Dr. Nibley will take this new revised book on, because he is quoted often enough in it to be identifiable as one of the major contributors to Mormonism’s obfuscation of issues; and he has actually contributed (unknowingly perhaps) to the growing painful dilemmas now facing the Elemental Mormonism I have previously identified . . .

But if Dr. Nibley or anyone else decides to “answer” the Tanners’ book point for point I certainly promise to study that book carefully and review it in public. In the mean time I will state publically this book of the Tanners is a major contribution in the search for integrity and truth about Mormonism, and I shall quote from it a number of times. (“The Uniqueness of Mormonism: An Evaluation.”) by Dr. Jennings G. Olson, October 7, 1972, pages 22-23

The following are some other comments concerning the new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

...the original was good—the new edition is a marvel. (The Utah Evang., Sept.-Oct. 1972, page 1)

We must admit it is the greatest thing yet written on the subject . . . (The Utah Evang., November-December 1972, page 4)

The most comprehensive and revealing work on Mormonism in print today . . . a must for all students of Mormonism. (Utah Christian Tract Society Newsletter, September-October, 1972, page 2)

Perhaps the most exhaustive expose of Mormonism between two covers . . . Based largely on primary sources. (Mormonia—a Quarterly Bibliography of Works on Mormonism, Fall 1972, page 89)

May this find you all well and busy shipping out the greatest compendium that ever existed on a most intriguing subject concerning the greatest religious hoax of all time . . . please prepare another 50 copies . . . (Letter from California)

We believe “Shadow or Reality” to be the best book available in refuting Mormonism. I showed it to more of the students & I now place an order for you for (55) more copies of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (Letter from Texas)

...I must say that your new work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is a lulu! I have read it from cover to cover—much to the neglect of my other duties, but can & should become familiar with what you have found. It is interesting that so much of what you have printed I have found to be so in my own independent study . . . I sincerely need to know how you go about making a commitment to Christ, and I feel a real need to do so, . . . (Letter from Illinois)

Our customers seem to be well pleased with the new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and it is taking a good deal of our time just to fill the orders. In our spare time we are working on a book about Creation which we hope to complete in about a year. This is a project we have worked on for many years.

Recently we decided to put a hard-backed binding on all copies of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Though this costs us more money, we feel that it gives the book a much better appearance and will make it last a great deal longer. The reader will notice that we are having a special offer on Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? The regular price is $8.95, but if it is ordered before September 30, 1973, the price will be only $7.95 (see special offer below). Considering the size of this book and the fact that it is hard bound this is a real bargain. As one customer expressed it: “It never ceases to amaze me how for the price of two hours work I can buy a book such as your new enlarged edition.”

Now — Hard bound! Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

MORMONISM and WATERGATE

Mormon Credibility Gap Widens as Joseph Smith’s Suppressed 1831 Polygamy Revelation Comes to Light. This Revelation Commands Mormons to Marry Indians to Make Them “White” and “Delightsome.”

Recently a revelation given by Joseph Smith, which has been suppressed for over 140 years, has come to light. Although Mormon leaders have never published this revelation, they have referred to it and admitted that it was given to Joseph Smith in 1831. They maintain that it supports the doctrine of polygamy and that it is a forerunner to the revelation on polygamy—given July 12, 1843—which still appears in the Doctrine and Covenants as Section 132. Joseph Fielding Smith, who was the Mormon Church Historian and later became the tenth President of the Church, made this statement in a letter written to J. W. A. Bailey in 1935:

...I care not to enter into any argument with you in relation to the origin of plural marriage. ...I do know that there was a revelation given in July 1831, in the presence of Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps and others in Missouri, in which the Lord made this principle known through the Prophet Joseph Smith. (Letter from Joseph Fielding Smith, dated September 5, 1935, typed copy)

In 1943 Joseph Fielding Smith told Fawn Brodie about this revelation, but he would not allow her to see it:

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., the present historian of the Utah Church, asserted to me in 1943 that a revelation foreshadowing polygamy had been written in 1831, but that it had never been published. In conformity with the church policy, however, he would not permit the manuscript, which he acknowledged to be in possession of the church library, to be examined. (No Man Knows My History, New York, 1971, page 84, footnote)

H. Michael Marquardt, a young Mormon scholar who became very disturbed with the Church’s policy of suppressing important records, became interested in this revelation. He began to do research and found that some Mormon scholars had copies of the 1831 revelation, but they had promised not to make any copies. Finally, Mr. Marquardt learned what appears to be the real reason why the revelation has been suppressed. This is that the revelation commanded the Mormons to marry the Indians to make them a “white” and “delightsome” people.

Now, to a Christian who is familiar with the teachings of the Bible, the color of a man’s skin makes no difference. In Mormon theology, however, a dark skin is a sign of God’s displeasure. In the Mormon publication Juvenile Instructor we read:

We will first inquire into the results of the approbation or displeasure of God upon a people, starting with the belief that a black skin is a mark of the curse of heaven placed upon some portions of mankind. ... when God made man in his own image and pronounced him very good, ... he made him white. We have no record of any of God’s favored servants being of a black race. (Juvenile Instructor, vol. 3, page 157)

The teaching that a dark skin is the result of God’s displeasure comes directly out of Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon teaches that about 600 B.C. a prophet named Lehi brought his family to America. Those who were righteous (the Nephites) had a white skin, but those who rebelled against God (the Lamanites) were cursed with a dark skin. The Lamanites eventually destroyed the Nephites; therefore, the Indians living today are referred to as Lamanites. The following verses from the Book of Mormon explain the curse on the Lamanites:

And it came to pass that I beheld, after they had dwoundled in unbelief they became a dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people, full of idleness and all manner of abominations. (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 12:23)

And he had caused the cursing to come upon them, yea, even a sore cursing, because of their iniquity ... wherefore, as they were white, and exceeding fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them. ...
While Spencer W. Kimball seems to feel that the Indians are to be made white by the power of God, Michael Marquardt learned that Joseph Smith's 1831 revelation says they are to be made white through intermarriage with the Mormons. Because of this fact, the Mormon leaders seemed to feel that it was necessary to keep the revelation from their people. Only the most trusted men, such as Dr. Hyrum Andrus, were allowed a copy of it. It was only after a great deal of research that Mr. Marquardt was able to obtain a typed copy of the revelation. In our new book Mormonism Like Watergate? we reproduce this revelation in its entirety, but in this study we only have room for the most important portions: of a revelation by Joseph Smith Jr., given over the boundary, west of Jackson County, Missouri, on Sunday morning, July 17, 1831, when seven Elders: viz., Joseph Smith Jr., Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, Martin Harris, Joseph Coe, Ziba Peterson, and Joshua Lewis united their hearts in prayer, in a private place, to inquire of the Lord who should preach the first sermon to the remnant of the Lamanites and Nephites and the people of that section, that should assemble that day in the Indian country, to hear the Gospel and the revelations according to the Book of Mormon.

Part Substance

Among the company, there being neither pen, ink nor paper, Joseph remarked that the Lord could preserve his words, as he had ever done, till the time appointed, and proceeded:

1 Verily, Verily, saith the Lord, your Redeemer, even Jesus Christ, the light and the life of the world, . . .
2 Verily, I say unto you, that the wisdom of man, in his fallen state, knoweth not the purposes and the privileges of my holy priesthood, but ye shall know when ye receive a fulness by reason of the anointing: For it is my will, that in time, ye should take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightfulsome and just, for even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles. . . .
3 Be patient, therefore, possessing your souls in peace and love, . . .

Reported by W.W.P.

About three years after this was given, I asked brother Joseph, privately, how “we” that were mentioned in the revelation could take wives from the “natives” as we were all married men? He replied, instantly “In the same manner that Abraham took Hagar and Keturah; and Jacob took Rachel, Bilhah and Zilpah; by revelation—the saints of the Lord are always directed by revelation.

The letters “W.W.P.” stand for William Wine Phelps, who served as a scribe for the Mormon leaders.

According to what Mr. Marquardt could learn, the original revelation is preserved in a vault in the LDS Church Historical Department. The paper on which it is written has the appearance of being very old.

There is a second copy of the revelation in the Historical Department. This appears in a letter from W. W. Phelps to Brigham Young. The letter is dated August 12, 1861. Michael Marquardt has been able to obtain a copy of this letter, and we have reproduced it in its entirety in our booklet Mormonism Like Watergate? Except for the opening and closing lines, this letter is almost identical to the other document.

In this new book Doctrines of the Kingdom, Dr. Hyrum L. Andrus of Brigham Young University, actually quotes part of this revelation as it appears in the letter, but he is very careful to suppress the fact that the wives to be taken were Lamanites:

The Prophet understood the principle of plural marriage as early as 1831. William W. Phelps stated that on Sunday morning, July 17, 1831, he and others were with Joseph Smith over the border west of Jackson County, Missouri, when the latter-day Seer received a revelation, the substance of which said in part: “Verily I say unto you, that the wisdom of man in his fallen state knoweth not the purposes and the privileges of my Holy Priesthood, but ye shall know when ye receive a fulness.” According to Elder Phelps, the revelation then indicated that in due time the brethren would be required to take plural wives.

In footnote 37 on the same page, Dr. Andrus gives his source for this information as “Letter of William W. Phelps to Brigham Young, August 12, 1861, Church Historian’s Library, Salt Lake City, Utah” (Ibid., page 450).

The reader will notice that in his quotation from the revelation, Dr. Andrus suppressed the important portion concerning the Indians. His quotation ended with “… ye shall know when ye receive a fulness.” The revelation itself, and the copy in Phelps’ letter, goes on to mention the Lamanites. We quote the following from the letter:

… ye shall know when ye receive a fulness by reason of the anointing: For it is my will, that in time, ye should take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightfulsome and just for even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles.

BOOTH CONFIRMS REVELATION

Since we are unable to examine the original revelation, it is very difficult to determine when it was actually recorded. From W. W. Phelps’ letter to Brigham Young we know that the revelation had to have been recorded by 1861. As we understand it, the first document—containing only the revelation and Phelps’ comment—appears to be older than the letter dated August 12, 1861. It is possible that it could have been recorded any time between 1831 and 1861. If the revelation and the note at the bottom were written at the same time, then obviously the revelation could not have been written until some time after 1834. It could be, however, that the note was added at a later time. It will not be possible to decide this vital question unless the Mormon leaders allow scholars to closely examine the document itself or allow photographs of it to be printed.

Regardless of when the revelation was actually written down on paper, however, we have found definite historical proof that it was given in 1831. The proof is derived from a letter written by Ezra Booth and published in the Ohio Star only five months after the revelation was given! In this letter Ezra Booth stated:

In addition to this, and to co-operate with it, it has been made known by revelation, that it will be pleasing to the Lord, should they form a matrimonial alliance with the Natives; and by this means the Elders, who comply with the things so pleasing to the Lord, and for which the Lord has promised to bless those who do it abundantly, gain a residence in the Indian territory, independent of the agent. It has been made known to one, who has left his wife in the state of N.Y. that he is entirely free from his wife, and he is at liberty to take a wife from among the Lamanites. It was easily perceived that this permission, was perfectly suited to his desires. I have frequently heard him state, that the Lord had made it known to him, that he is as free from his wife as from any other woman; and the only crime that I have ever heard alleged against her is, she is violently opposed to Mormonism. But before this contemplated marriage can be carried into effect, he must return to the state of N.Y. and settle his business, for fear, should he return, after that affair had taken place, the civil authority would apprehend him as a criminal. (Ohio Star, December 8, 1831)

We had originally discovered Booth’s statement in an 1834 reprint of his letters, but Michael Marquardt found a microfilm copy of the original paper in the Mormon Church’s Genealogical Library in Salt Lake City.

Since Ezra Booth did go to Missouri and was well acquainted with the Elders, his letter furnishes irrefutable proof that Joseph Smith gave the revelation commanding the Mormons to marry Lamanite women.

“BLEACHING” THE LAMANITES

Like Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, taught that “the curse will be removed” from off the Indians and “they will become “a white and delightfulsome people.”” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 143)

While Brigham Young suppressed the 1831 revelation, there is evidence that he was familiar with its teaching that the Indians should be made white through intermarriage. William Hall said that just after the Mormons left Nauvoo, Brigham Young gave a speech which “was in substance as follows”:

“… We are now going to the Lamanites, to whom we intend to be messengers of instruction. . . . We will show them that in consequence of their transgressions a curse has been inflicted upon them—in the darkness of their skins. We will have intermarriages with them, they marrying our young women, and we taking their young squaws to wife. By these means it is the will of the Lord that the curse of their color shall be removed and they restored to their pristine beauty. . . .” (The Abominations of Mormonism Exposed, Cincinnati, 1852, page 59)

Juanita Brooks gives the following information concerning the Salmon River Mission:

Very early, some of the Mormon leaders recommended that the missionaries marry Indian women as a means of cementing the friendship between the races. . . .

The Elders who were sent to the Salmon River Mission were given similar instructions by Brigham Young and his party, who visited them in May, 1857. At least three different missionaries tell of them, . . . Milton G. Hammond says simply, “The president and members of the Twelve all spoke. Pres. Young spoke to Elders marrying natives.” William H. D. . . . wrote in his journal: “Meeting was held . . . Young men might take squaws to wife. . . .” The mission clerk, David Moore, gave a somewhat more detailed account: “Sunday, May 10, [1857]. . . Pres. H. C. Kimball & Wells addressed Missionaries . . . on the importance of the Missionaries being faithful . . . and for them to marry the Native women. . . Pres. B. Young said, . . . when the Lord opened they [sic] way before them so that they Could Marry Girls they would be very likely to be enabled to keep them. . . .”

As a result of these teachings, at least three of the brethren married Indian women. . . . As to the Indian women whom they had taken as wives the “L.D.S. Journal History” of April 9, 1858, records: “Two squaws who had married the brethren refused to come, fearing the soldiers would kill all the Mormons.”

(Utah Historical Quarterly, vol. 12, pages 28-30)

T. B. H. Stenhouse gives the following information concerning the Salmon River Mission:

Before any of the married brethren could make love to a maiden with the view of making her a second, third, or tenth wife, he was expected to go and obtain Brigham’s permission. He sent at one time a mission to Fort Limhi, Salmon River, to civilize the Indians. The brethren were counselled not to take their families with them, but they were to live with the Indians, to educate and civilize them, and to teach them various trades and farming. When Brigham and Heber afterwards visited the missionaries to see how they were succeeding, Heber, in his quaint way, told them that he did not see how the modern predictions could well be fulfilled about the Indians becoming “a white and delightsome people” without extending polygamy to the natives. The approach of the United States army, in 1857, contributed to break up that mission, but not before Heber’s hint had been clearly understood, and the prophecy half fulfilled! Heber was very practical, and believed that the people should never ask “the Lord” to do for them what they could do themselves, and, as all “Israel” had long prayed that the Indians might speedily become a “white and delightsome people,” he thought it was the duty of the missionaries to assist “the Lord” in fulfilling his promises. This was not the first time that a Mormon prophet attempted to aid in bringing to pass the prophecies of “the Lord.” More than one missionary appears to have thoroughly understood him! (The Rocky Mountain Saints, pages 657-659)

In a footnote on page 659 of the same book, Mr. Stenhouse stated:

One young man replied to Brother Heber that it was the teaching of the Church that the elders should always follow their “file-leaders,” and that “if President Young and he should each take a squaw to wife and thus set the example, they would certainly follow suit.” That ended the “bleaching” of the “Lamanites.”

William Hall claimed that Brigham Young was married “to two young squaws,” but so far we have been unable to find any documentation for this statement. According to John D. Lee, on May 12, 1849, Brigham Young said that he did not want to take the Indians “in his arms until the curse is removed from off[!] them. . . But we will take their children & s[co]hool them & teach them to be cleanly & to love morality & then raise up seed among them & in this way they will be brought back into the presence & knowledge of God. . . .” (A Mormon Chronicle, The Diaries of John D. Lee, vol. 1, page 108)

It would appear, then, that Brigham Young would not follow Joseph Smith’s revelation to take “wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightful and just, . . .” Even though the revelation said that “their females are more virtuous than the gentiles,” Brigham Young built up his “kingdom” with women who were already “white and delightful.”

If Brigham Young did not follow the 1831 revelation to marry the Lamanites, we must remember that he was only following the example of Joseph Smith, for Smith also married “white” women. Though Young suppressed Smith’s 1831 revelation and chose “white” women in preference to the Lamanites, he did at least encourage others to marry them “that the curse of their color shall be removed and they restored to their pristine beauty.”

After Brigham Young’s death the idea that the Indians should be made “white and delightful” through intermarriage began to fall into disrepute. The Mormon leaders have tended to frown upon interracial marriage with the Indians, even though there is no written rule against the practice.

The Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen made these comments in an address delivered at Brigham Young University:

What should be our attitude as Latter-day Saints toward negro and other dark races? . . . We cannot escape the conclusion that because of performance in our pre-existence some of us are born as Chinese, some as Japanese, some as Indians, some as Negroes, some as Americans, some as Latter-day Saints. These are rewards and punishments, . . .

Now let’s talk segregation again for a few moments. . . . When the Lord chose the nations to which the spirits were to come, . . . He engaged in an act of segregation. . . In placing a curse on Laman and Lemuel, He engaged in segregation. . . .

The Lord segregated the people both as to blood and place of residence. At least in the cases of the Lamanites and the Negroes we have the definite word of the Lord Himself that He places a dark skin upon them as a curse—as a punishment and as a sign to all others. He forbade intermarriage with them under threat of extension of the curse. (2 Nephi 5:21) . . .

What is our advice with respect to intermarriage with Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiians and so on? I will tell you what advice I give personally. If a boy or girl comes to me claiming to be in love with a Chinese or Japanese or a Hawaiian or a person of any other dark race, I do my best to talk them out of it. I tell them that I think the Hawaiians should marry Hawaiians, the Japanese ought to marry Japanese, and the Chinese ought to marry Chinese, and the Caucasians should marry Caucasians. . . I teach against inter-marriage of all kinds. (Race Problems—As They Affect The Church, Address by Mark E. Petersen, Brigham Young University, August 27, 1954)

Mark E. Petersen is second in line to become President of the Mormon Church. The Apostle Petersen and other Mormon leaders who are opposed to intermarriage will probably be very embarrassed now that the 1831 revelation

A STRANGER TO HUNGER

I am a stranger to hunger. My mind can’t comprehend starvation. Yet millions of people today are learning the meaning of “famine” by personal experience. Do I care? Is my Christian concern real? Christ said:

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matthew 25:35 & 40)

World Vision Magazine reports:

For five years the rains have been inadequate across West Africa, and last year they did not come at all. Rivers failed to flood the plains, and crops died. There are 25 million people living in the Sahel (Arabic for “fringe,” meaning here the edge of the Sahara Desert). Some 14 million were directly affected by the five-year drought which brought severe famine this year to an area about one-fourth the size of the United States.

Some have said that this drought and famine bordering the Sahara are the worst recorded since biblical times. . . and we through World Vision can help the starving of the Sahel both physically and spiritually. . . . (World Vision, February 1974)

This area of Africa is less than 10% Christian. What a great opportunity to demonstrate the love of Christ by reaching out to these suffering ones and sharing our abundance, in His name.

NEGRO DOCTRINE COST 20,000 CONVERTS

Although the Bible teaches that the Gospel is to be carried to all people, the Mormon Church has tried to avoid doing missionary work among the Negro people. Bruce R. McConkie, who recently became an Apostle, stated: “Negroes in this life are denied the priesthood; . . . The gospel message of salvation is not carried affirmatively to them.” (Mormon Doctrine, 1966, page 527).

Lester E. Bush, Jr. says that “As early as 1946, Council minutes report correspondence from Nigeria which ‘pleads for missionaries to be sent . . . and asks for literature regarding the Church’ ” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1973, page 67, footnote 204). Finally, after seventeen years the Mormon Church decided they would send a mission to Nigeria. President McKay made the announcement on January 11, 1963.

A few months after the mission was announced it became apparent that something was wrong. On August 7, 1963, we called the Mormon Church offices asking if there was still going to be a mission to Nigeria. The woman in the Missionary department said that conditions were “unsettled.” Then she stated: “We have been asked not to give out any information about it.”

Eleven years have passed and it now appears that the Nigerian Mission is a complete failure. Lester E. Bush says that “the Nigerian government became more fully aware of the scope of Mormon teachings on the blacks, and denied the Church resident visas . . . Estimates for the number of ‘Nigerian Mormons’ who would have been involved ranged from 10,000 to 25,000, nearly all of whom were Biafrans” (Dialogue, Spring 1973, page 45).

Because the Nigerian government refused to give resident visas to the Mormon missionaries, the Nigerians decided “to organize their own branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints” (Time Magazine, June 18, 1965, page 56).

Even though the Negroes in Nigeria were converted to Mormonism, the Mormon leaders in Utah could not accept them because of the belief that a Negro church cannot function without men holding the Priesthood to direct it. On February 10, 1966, Hugh B. Brown, David O. McKay’s First Counselor, wrote a letter in which he stated:

We are just now wrestling with the problems in Nigeria, where some five thousand people have applied for baptism unto the Church but where the government officials are opposing us and where, if we should baptize them, we would involve ourselves in financial problems which could very well bankrupt the Church . . . Conditions in the Southern part of the United States, in fact, all over the United States, affecting the Negro are such that for us to take positive action might involve us in controversies to which as yet seems to be no definite inspired answer. (Letter by Hugh B. Brown, dated February 10, 1966)

By 1972 the number of Nigerians converted to the doctrines of the Mormon Church had grown to over 20,000. Anie Dick Obot was the leader of this group. In a letter dated July 1, 1972, Obot stated:

I am the Bishop in charge [of the] Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints in Nigeria, and we are 48 congregations with the total membership of 20,698.

Not long after Obot wrote this letter he became disillusioned with Mormonism. In a letter dated December 21, 1972, Obot stated:

. . . I am no more with the Organisation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and I will never go back to that group.

Obot claimed that he learned the truth about Mormonism after “Dr. O. J. Udo who was at BYU, Provo, Utah” returned to Nigeria. After that he decided to leave the group he had directed.

Lamar S. Williams had been set apart by the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City to direct the missionary work in Nigeria. His work turned out to be a complete failure. In a letter to Williams dated January 23, 1973, E. E. Akpan of Nigeria told that the Nigerians were rapidly defecting from Mormon teachings: “Praise the Lord, greetings to you in Jesus Christ precious Name. We are the group Bishop E. A. Attah led to join with you, but now seeing the truth revealed to us about the mormon teachings we have decided in our General Conference of 18th–21st Jan., 1973, to adopt the name above.” The name which they adopted was “Grace and Truth Church.”

In the same letter, E. E. Akpan went on to explain that they had been reading our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and that this had raised questions in their minds concerning the truthfulness of Mormonism. He went on to state that they were no longer “called Church of Jesus Christ of LDS, and we are no more with your organisation please. All the 25 congregations have withdrawn from [the] Mormon organisation.”

COVER-UP ON NEGRO DOCTRINE

While the Indians are considered to be under a curse, they can still hold the Priesthood. Negroes, on the other hand, are denied the Priesthood and cannot be married in the temple. According to Mormon leaders, the curse on the Negro cannot be removed through intermarriage. The Apostle Mark E. Peterson stated:

We must not intermarry with the Negro. Why? If I were to marry a Negro woman and have children by her, my children would all be cursed as to the priesthood. Do I want my children cursed as to the priesthood? If there is one drop of Negro blood in my children, as I have read to you, they receive the curse. (Race Problems—As They Affect The Church)

The Mormon leaders have suppressed some very important documents on the development of the anti-Negro doctrine. For instance, in our new book Mormonism Like Watergate? we reproduce an important address by Brigham Young which has been suppressed since 1852. Another important document which has been suppressed is the patriarchal blessing given to Elijah Abel. Elijah Abel was a Negro who was ordained to the Priesthood during Joseph Smith’s lifetime. Some Mormons claim that Abel was “light of color” and that Joseph Smith was not aware of the fact that he had Negro blood when he allowed him to be ordained. Abel’s patriarchal blessing proves that these apologists are mistaken. This blessing was given by Joseph Smith’s father, who was Patriarch to the Church and was “sustained by the Saints as a prophet, seer, and revelator” (Doctrines of the Kingdom, page 191).

Lester E. Bush, Jr., cites portions of this blessing in his article in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1973, but it has never been published in its entirety. Fortunately, Michael Marquardt obtained a copy and we have printed it in Mormonism Like Watergate? Since we do not have much room here, we will only print a few important extracts:

A blessing under the hands of Joseph Smith, Sen., upon Elijah Abel, . . . Thou has been ordained an Elder and annointed to secure thee against the power of the destroyer. . . . Thou shalt travel in the East, and visit foreign countries, speak in various tongues, and shalt be able to teach different languages. . . . Thou shalt be made equal to thy brethren, and thy soul be white in eternity and thy robes glittering: thou shalt receive these blessings because of the covenants of thy fathers. Thou shalt save thy thousands, . . . These and all the blessings which thou canst receive the curse. If there is one drop of Negro blood in my children, as I have read to you, they receive the curse. (Race Problems—As They Affect The Church)

Now, if this patriarchal blessing was given by revelation, then it proves that God himself was unaware of the fact that the Negro should not hold the priesthood. It says plainly that Elijah Abel had “been ordained and Eldered,” and the promise that Abel’s soul would “be white in eternity” shows that it was obvious that he was black. The reader will note that the blessing also states that Abel was to be “made equal” to his brethren. This blessing seems to show that neither the early Mormons nor their God were aware that the Negro could not hold the Priesthood.

There are reports of another early patriarchal blessing which may be even more important than the blessing given to Elijah Abel. Michael Marquardt reports that in April of 1965 he obtained permission from the Church Historian Joseph Fielding Smith to examine a microfilm which contained the first three volumes of patriarchal blessings given during Joseph Smith’s lifetime. As he was going through the microfilm he discovered a blessing given to a descendant of “Ham” — i.e., a Negro according to Mormon theology. The blessing went on to state that through the blood of Christ the “curse” has been removed. Unfortunately, Mr. Marquardt was not allowed to make any notes at the time he was looking at this film, and now even the top Mormon scholars are denied access to the early patriarchal blessing books. The Mormon leaders apparently realize that if the patriarchal blessing which tells of the “curse” being removed from a descendant of “Ham” were to be made public, it might entirely destroy all basis for the anti-Negro doctrine.
In his reply to E. E. Akpan, LaMar S. Williams made these comments:

I am sorry to hear that you have changed your mind regarding your affiliation with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. . . .

I am sorry to learn that you were unfortunate enough to read such unfavorable literature as Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. They have done much to discredit the church by the material they have published . . . I would disregard any literature printed by them. (Letter dated February 27, 1973)

We have photographically printed all four of these important letters in our book Mormonism Like Watergate?

From the information we have presented, the reader can see that the Nigerian Mission was a complete failure. On October 24, 1974, Michael Marquardt did some research with regard to this mission and found that the Mormon Church only claims to have 25 members in Nigeria, and there is some question as to how many of these are whites.

It is very obvious, then, that the Mormon Church has decided to sacrifice over 20,000 converts rather than change their anti-Negro doctrine!

On June 22, 1968, the Ogden Standard-Examiner quoted Sterling McMurrin as saying that the "Church will completely lose tens of thousands of its members" if it does not “come to grips” with the Negro problem. So far there is no real evidence that the Mormon leaders are going to make a change. In fact, Bruce R. McConkie, a defender of the anti-Negro doctrine, was recently elevated to the Council of Twelve Apostles.

Spencer W. Kimball, the new President of the Church, feels that a dark skin is a curse from God and has stated that he does not anticipate any change in the Negro doctrine. The next two in line for the Presidency of the Church—i.e., Ezra Taft Benson and Mark E. Petersen—seen to be even more outspoken in their defense of the anti-Negro doctrine.

It would appear, then, that those who choose to remain in the Mormon Church face a gloomy future. The Mormon leaders seem determined in their effort to cover up the past and to run the Church after the manner of Watergate. For more information concerning this matter see our new publication Mormonism Like Watergate?

INDIANS DISTURBED

Just as we were preparing to bring the 1831 revelation concerning the Indians to light the Salt Lake Tribune published the following:

About 20 representatives of the American Indian Movement (AIM) Thursday demanded the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints “recall all your missionaries from the reservations and the areas where native Americans frequent.” . . .

In a declaration to LDS Church President Spencer W. Kimball, AIM leaders said the church has a “racist attitude regarding our skin color” and “you have a divisive practice of putting Indian against Indian.” (Salt Lake Tribune, April 12, 1974)

Gov. Rampton claims that AIM does not represent any substantial group of Utah Indians, but it will be interesting to see what develops.

IMPEACHMENT?

As a general rule we have tried to keep the Messenger out of political controversies. The situation with regard to President Nixon, however, is so serious that we feel that it would be wrong to keep silent. Before the Watergate investigation began we felt that the charges against President Nixon were without foundation in fact. As the investigation proceeded we became convinced that there was a serious problem involved, and in July, 1973, we wrote a letter which was published in the Salt Lake Tribune:

Editor, Tribune: One disturbing thing about Watergate is that many people do not seem to realize the serious implications of the whole matter. Some people, for instance, say that even if President Nixon is involved, he should not be impeached or resign. While I feel that we should wait until more evidence is in before judging the President, it would seem to me that even if he was only involved in the cover-up, this would be a serious crime and should be punished by impeachment. The cover-up, of course, involved the obstruction of justice and the encouragement of perjury. If we were to allow a president to continue leading us after becoming involved in such serious crimes, we would be stamping our approval on this type of behavior and would be accessories to the crimes in the eyes of the world. Even if it is very embarrassing and painful for our country, we cannot sweep this under the rug. If we love liberty and justice we must apply the same rules to everyone, and even the President of the United States should not be exempt from these rules. Jerald Tanner (Salt Lake Tribune, July 8, 1973)

After we learned of the tapes we felt that they would either prove or disprove the charges against the President. We knew, however, that if they contained evidence against the President this evidence would probably be destroyed before the tapes were turned over for inspection. We were shocked... to learn that two of the tapes did not exist, but when we found that there was an 18 minutes gap in another tape we lost all faith in President Nixon. We feel, therefore, that it is our Christian obligation to call for his impeachment.

REPUDIATES BOOK OF MORMON

After we found serious problems with the Utah Mormon Church, we joined a group known as the Church of Christ—sometimes called the “Luftikes.” This is a small group which is not to be confused with the large Church of Christ nor the Church of Christ—Temple Lot. Although this group rejected Joseph Smith’s revelations as printed in the Doctrine and Covenants, it still accepted the Book of Mormon. At any rate, these people had discovered the true message of Christ, and the love of God certainly showed forth in their lives. Their lives were so strikingly different that it pointed out our own need of Christ.

When we decided that the Book of Mormon was not true, it was very hard to let this group know. Fortunately, these people did not become bitter towards us, and in all of their correspondence with us they continued to show the love of Christ. We, of course, wanted to see them come to a knowledge of the truth concerning the Book of Mormon. We prayed concerning this matter, but we could hardly believe that a Church so committed to the Book of Mormon could give it up as a group. We are now happy to report that a miracle has happened! On November 24, 1973, this group published an advertisement telling that they had repudiated the Book of Mormon. In this document we find these interesting statements:

Do you know that on July 28, 1971, among some old Chenango County bills, the bills of Justice Neely and Constable Philip DeZeng for the year 1826 were found and among the items listed on them were the costs for the arrest and trial of “Joseph Smith, The Glass Looker,” as the case is listed on Justice Neely’s bill? . . .

Many anti-Mormon authors have written about this March 20, 1826 trial, using it to prove that the Book of Mormon was not of divine origin, but a product of Joseph Smith’s fraud and deceit—a continuation of the principles manifested in his money-digging activities. . . .

When Fawn Brodie published her book, No Man Knows My History (this was before these documents were found by Mr. Wesley P. Walters, a Presbyterian minister from Marissa, Illinois and Mr. Fred Poofarl, of Ardsley, Pennsylvania), she wrote of Joseph Smith’s money digging activities and his 1826 trial. This was answered by Mormon writers with statements like, “This alleged court record . . . seems to be a literal attempt of an enemy to ridicule Joseph Smith . . . no existing proof that such a trial was ever held” (Apostle John A. Widtsoe of the Utah Church). “If this court record is authentic it is the most damning evidence in existence against Joseph Smith” (Dr. Hugh Nibley). Book of Mormon believers, do you realize proof of the 1826 trial has now been found, so what about the claim that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin???

Until recently we were believers in the Book of Mormon and felt that the 1826 trial was just a fabrication of anti-Mormon origin to discredit the Book of Mormon. But after we learned of the discovery of these two original county bills, we realized that our beliefs needed examination. In the investigation and search for the truth which followed we found that we were the ones who had been deceived. After several letters and a trip to Norwich, Chenango County, New York, we knew that the bills were authentic. We have obtained photo copies both from the County Historian and the County’s acting Deputy Clerk. . . .

This is a small group which is not to be confused with the large Church of Christ—Temple Lot. Although this group rejected Joseph Smith’s revelations as printed in the Doctrine and Covenants, it still accepted the Book of Mormon. At any rate, these people had discovered the true message of Christ, and the love of God certainly showed forth in their lives. Their lives were so strikingly different that it pointed out our own need of Christ. We are happy to announce that Walters has now prepared a complete copy will be sent free upon request.

WALTERS WRITES ON 1826 TRIAL

From the article above the reader will notice that Wesley P. Walters’ discovery of the 1826 bills convinced the Church of Christ that the Book of Mormon is untrue. We are happy to announce that Walters has now prepared an article in which he discusses this important discovery as well as other aspects of Joseph Smith’s 1826 trial. Wesley Walters has also discovered Joseph Chamberlain’s bill for a trial of Joseph Smith which occurred in 1830. He deals with this matter in his new work Joseph Smith’s Bainbridge, N.Y., Court Trials. Price: $50 — 3 for $1.00 — 10 for $3.00 — 20 for $5.00

MORMONS and the WATERGATE SCANDAL
Justice Dept. Warns Church About Illegal Taping

During 1973, as the details of the Watergate cover-up began to unfold, we were struck with the many parallels to Mormon history. Since that time we have found more parallels. Even more important, however, has been the discovery that Mormons were involved with Howard Hunt in his plans for wiretapping and burglary.

A very important clue came from former President Nixon’s tapes. The reader will of course remember that Nixon fought desperately to keep his tapes from becoming public. When he was finally forced to yield them, transcripts were printed by the U.S. Government and the New York Times. These tapes not only proved to be embarrassing for Richard Nixon but for the Mormon leaders as well. On pages 292-293 of The White House Transcripts, Nixon, Haldeman and Ehrlichman discuss an alleged attempt to break into the safe of Hank Greenspun. During the course of the conversation it was suggested that “Senator Bennett’s son, for whom Hunt worked,” may have been involved in the planning of the break-in. The transcript reads as follows:

E: . . . McCord volunteered this Hank Greenspun thing, gratuitously apparently not—
P: Can you tell me is that a serious thing? Did they really try to get into Hank Greenspun?
E: I guess they actually got in.
P: What in the name of (expletive deleted) though has Hank Greenspun got with anything to do with Mitchell or anybody else?
E: Nothing. Well, now, Mitchell, Here’s—Hughes. And these two fellows, Colson and Shapiro, Colson threw that out.
P: Hughes on whom?
E: Well, you know the Hughes thing is cut into two factions—
P: I don’t even know—but they’re fighting.
P: Yeah.
E: Bennett, Senator Bennett’s son, for whom Hunt worked.

Before reading the White House Transcripts we were not aware of the fact that Howard Hunt worked for “Senator Bennett’s son,” nor did we know that the two of them had been involved in planning a break-in at Mr. Greenspun’s office. When we told Michael Marquardt about this, he did some research and found that Robert Bennett (son of the Mormon Senator Wallace F. Bennett) is the man spoken of in The White House Transcripts. Mr. Marquardt also learned that Robert Bennett worked for the Robert R. Mullen & Company. Later we discovered that Robert Bennett was the actual owner of the Mullen Co. and that this company handled international public relations for the Mormon Church. Howard Hunt, who was involved in the Ellsberg break-in and the Watergate affair, worked for Robert Bennett and was at one time Vice President of the Mullen Co. Further research led us to the discovery that plans for the Watergate break-in and other illegal activities were actually discussed in Bennett’s company—i.e., the Mullen Company. James Mc Cord, who was involved in the Watergate break-in, gave this testimony at the Senate Watergate Hearings:

Photographs from pages 1-2 of the Priesthood Bulletin—printed for Mormon priesthood leaders. The reader will notice that item 3 acknowledges that the Justice Dept. has warned the Church against illegal interception of oral communications for use in Church courts.

Mr. Mc Cord. The meetings, as best I recall in which these references by Mr. Hunt took place, took place in Mr. Hunt’s office in the Robert F. Mullen Co. offices at 1700 Pennsylvania Avenue. They took place in April and May of 1972. To the best of my recollection, Mr. Liddy was present in all of the discussions.

Mr. Liddy, during those discussions, as best I recall, would raise the topic that the planning and the progress of the operation itself was going forward, comments about what Mr. Mitchell was saying to him about what could be done in terms of the priorities of the operation; that is, which ones were to be done first and second . . .

Mr. Thompson. Do you recall anything that Mr. Hunt said to you about Mr. Colson’s involvement or did you just get the general impression that Mr. Colson was involved in some way from what Mr. Hunt told you?

Mr. Mc Cord. I believe my previous testimony . . . was to the effect that when I had met Mr. Hunt in his office at 1700 Pennsylvania Avenue with Mr. Liddy that he referred to his previous work at the White House for Mr. Colson . . . Mr. Hunt had a typed plan that he had typed himself, step-by-step, for the entry of the Democratic National Committee headquarters . . . (Hearings Before The Select Committee On Presidential Campaign Activities of the United States Senate . . . U.S. Government Printing Office, 1973, Book 1, pages 142-143)

MULLEN, MORMONS AND THE C.I.A.

The Mullen Company—the company which Bennett bought—was originally founded by Robert R. Mullen. Mr. Mullen handled world-wide public relations for the Mormon Church and is the same man who wrote the book The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today. Mr. Mullen’s book was apparently written to bring converts into the Mormon Church and to cover-up the truth about Mormon history. In the Salt
Robert Mullen’s association with the Mormons began when his public relations firm was hired to publicize the first European tour of the famous Mormon Tabernacle Choir. He now runs a world-wide public relations agency with headquarters in Washington, D.C.

When Mr. Mullen’s book came out, the Mormon Church’s Deseret News printed these statements:

A great new book about the Mormons will be in the bookstores of the nation beginning Oct. 1. . . . the author is Robert P. Mullen of Washington, D.C., . . .

The new book is one of the most complete, objective, and friendly treatments of the Mormon story ever done by an “outsider.” (Deseret News, Church Section, Sept. 24, 1966)

To any reader who is well informed on Mormon history it is plain to see that Robert Mullen’s book is a cover-up of the true facts.

Newsweek for July 15, 1974, reported the following about the Mullen Company:

Washington was buzzing again last week with talk that the Central Intelligence Agency was involved in the scandals of the Nixon Administration—and this time the source was a 43-page report prepared by Howard Baker, . . . of the Senate Watergate committee. . . .

The report had further questions about Robert R. Mullen & Co., the Washington public-relations firm that Hunt joined after he left the White House. According to the report the firm had been used as an overseas cover for CIA activities from 1959 to mid-1972. (Newsweek, July 15, 1974, page 29)

Senator Baker has provided us with a copy of his report, but it has also been printed at the back of The Senate Watergate Report, vol. 1. On page 7 of “The Baker Report” we find this statement:

The Mullen Company has maintained a relationship with the Central Intelligence Agency since its incorporation in 1959. It provided cover for an agent in Europe and an agent in the Far East at the time of the Watergate break-in.

A SURPRISING DISCOVERY

After we learned of the involvement of Robert Bennett and the Mormon Church with the Mullen Company, we tried to find more material about the matter. Progress was very slow until September, 1974, when we made a most interesting discovery. We felt that there may be something in our files showing that the Mullen Company had contacted us several years ago. After a long and diligent search we found a letter from James A. Everett who was an employee of the Mullen Company in Sweden. This letter was dated January 20, 1965, and contains a request for books. Since the letter seemed to be written in a friendly spirit, we decided to try to locate Mr. Everett. We found that he had returned to Washington D.C. and then moved to Missouri. On October 7, 1974, we were able to have a long telephone conversation with him, and on October 15, 1974, Mr. Everett sent us a letter in which he answered many questions we had about the relationship between the Mormon Church and the Mullen Company. We found Mr. Everett to be very open and willing to discuss this matter. The information which he has provided has really increased our knowledge of this relationship.

Mr. Everett worked in Europe for the Mullen Company for a number of years. Incredible as it may seem, he returned to America to work at the offices in Washington, D.C. on the night of the Watergate break-in. In his letter Mr. Everett stated:

I returned from Europe on the night of the break-in, i.e. 17th June 1972. I went to the office on Monday the 19th and for the first time met Howard Hunt who had been hired during my absence in Europe. We spoke of the days newspaper headlines concerning the break-in and I remarked that it certainly was a stupid caper and I hoped that no responsible Republican had been involved. I assumed at the time that he was in full agreement. Only about an hour after that conversation the first call came from Woodard (or Bernstein) concerning the fact that Hunt’s private telephone number at the White House (Executive Office Building) had been discovered in two of the persons who were apprehended at Watergate. Hunt was asked if he knew how this could be and he exclaimed loudly, “My God, No!” Hung up and left the office. I met him about a half hour later coming back from 1701 Pennsylvania Ave. where he undoubtedly had gone to confer with his friend Liddy. He returned to the office, removed a few things and left and I have never met him in person since. (Letter from James A. Everett, dated October 15, 1974)

In our telephone conversation with Mr. Everett, he told us that the Mullen Company handled public relations for the Mormon Church from 1957 to 1973. One of the more important projects that the Mullen Company handled for the Church was the Hill Cumorah pageant. Mr. Everett felt that they did a great deal toward making it the tremendous success it is today. In the telephone conversation, Mr. Everett told us that the Mullen Company handled a good deal of work for the Church. In a letter dated October 11, 1974, we asked Mr. Everett if he could remember some of the projects which were handled by the Mullen Company. He replied:

4. Earl Minderman of Robert R. Mullen & Co. has through the years done a most commendable job for the Mormon Church, including the publicity for the Cumorah Pageant. There have been many, many others such as answering critical media reports, placing of radio programs on Radio Free Europe, Armed Forces Radio, etc.

The Mullen Company also handled public relations for the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. We must remember, too that Mr. Mullen wrote a book about the Church which was printed in a number of different languages.

ROBERT BENNETT BUYS MULLEN COMPANY

As we indicated earlier, Robert Bennett is the son of Wallace F. Bennett. Wallace F. Bennett has served for twenty-four years as a Senator from Utah. He is considered one of the real “pillars” of the Mormon Church and his book Why I Am A Mormon, published in 1958, has been widely used to bring converts into the Mormon Church. On page 53 of his book, Senator Bennett speaks of his “faith that Joseph’s story is true.” He claims to have an “unshakeable assurance” that Mormonism is true. In relation to politics Senator Bennett had a very strong faith in Richard Nixon. Even after the fiving of Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox, Bennett still expressed his faith in Nixon:

Thank you for your letter regarding recent developments relating to the “Watergate” affair. I still have complete faith in the President. (Letter from Senator Bennett)

Senator Bennett’s strong faith in Mormonism and Richard Nixon was shared by his son Robert. On page 7 of his book Why I Am A Mormon, Senator Bennett indicated that Robert Bennett and his other sons have served on missions for the Mormon Church. According to James A. Everett, Robert Bennett served his “mission in England” (Letter dated October 15, 1974). Mr. Everett also stated that “Mr. Bennett has maintained a most respected position in the Mormon Church and I believe has been a Stake President. I know he was active as Counselor to the Stake President and has served in setting up the P.R. activity in the Eastern States” (Letter dated October 15, 1974).

If Robert Bennett was a Stake President it would have been some time before 1973, because Michael Marquardt found him listed as 1st Counselor in the Bishopric of the Arlington Ward, Oakton Virginia Stake, in 1973-74 (see The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Directory, General Authorities and Officers 1973-74, page 225).

We do not know exactly when Robert Bennett and Robert Mullen met, but we do know that they worked together in Nixon’s 1968 campaign. Who’s Who In America, 1972-73, vol. 2, page 2273, informs us that Robert Mullen served as “Chmn Pub. relations Nixon-Agnew 1968.” In The Senate Watergate Report, vol. 2, page 251 we read:

Robert Bennett had served as Vice Chairman for Public Relations (under Robert Mullen) in the 1968 campaign (when he met Colson and Evans), and then became Congressional liaison in the Department of Transportation, where he was Colson’s “political contact.” When he left the Department in 1970, he joined Mullen’s Washington public relations firm.

In the “Baker Report,” page 8, we learn that Robert Bennett became President of the Mullen Co. in 1971:

Robert Bennett, who is Senator Bennett’s son, joined Mullen and Company and became its President in 1971. He was introduced to the Mullen CIA case officer in April of that year. Bennett brought the Hughes Tool account! with him to Mullen.
The planning of this operation: before the Senate Watergate Hearings, Hunt implicated Robert Bennett in about breaking into Hank Greenspun’s safe was discussed. In testimony given

Robert Bennett purchased Robert R. Mullen & Co. in 1971 as near as I can recall. I was in Amsterdam at the time. Mr. Mullen remained on as Chairman of the Board and Bob Bennett took the position of President. The purchase agreement went over an extended period of time.

BURGLARY AND BUGGING

In Senator Bakers Report, page 7, we learn that Hunt joined the Mullen Company in 1970: “Hunt left the CIA in 1970 and joined Mullen and Company with what founder Robert Mullen understood to be Director Helms’ blessing. Hunt’s covert security clearance was extended by the CIA; he was witting of the Mullen cover; and, on occasion he undertook negotiations with the Agency with respect to that cover . . .”

While Hunt was working with Bennett at the Mullen Company, an idea about breaking into Hank Greenspun’s safe was discussed. In testimony given before the Senate Watergate Hearings, Hunt implicated Robert Bennett in the planning of this operation:

Mr. Dash. During this same period and prior to the Watergate break-in, Mr. Hunt, did you and Mr. Liddy work on a political espionage plan involving a target in Las Vegas?

Mr. Hunt. Apart from Gemstone?

Mr. Dash. Yes.

Mr. Hunt. . . . my employer, Mr. Robert Bennett, informed me that he had heard a rumor around Las Vegas to the effect that a publisher named Hank Greenspun had information which would “blow Muskie out of the water” . . . I reported by very brief memo this information to Mr. Liddy. Mr. Liddy responded enthusiastically seeing in it initially an opportunity for us to travel at company expense as it were, to Las Vegas . . . Mr. Liddy informed me . . . that there was a disposition on the part of his principals to pursue it.

I reported this matter back to Mr. Bennett and within a short period of time Mr. Bennett introduced me to a Mr. Ralph Winte who was then the head of security for either Hughes Tool Co. or one of its many subsidiaries. At our initial discussion Mr. Bennett, Mr. Winte, and I discussed Las Vegas, . . . this discussion reached the point where Mr. Bennett suggested that there was a commonality of interest between the Hughes Tool Co. and Mr. Liddy and myself.

Mr. Winte and I withdrew to my office . . . he said he would attempt to produce a floor diagram of the Greenspun office and I asked him whether his firm . . . could provide us with support facilities. Mr. Dash. Did that include an airplane or an escape plane should that be necessary?

Mr. Hunt. That came later, Mr. Dash! (Hearings, Book 9, pp. 3686-3687)

The White House Transcripts, which we have previously quoted, seem to indicate that the operation might have been actually carried out:

E: Bennett, Senator Bennett’s son, for whom Hunt worked.

P: Oh?

E: Represents one of those factions.

P: So he ordered the burgling?

E: I don’t know. I know the (unintelligible) say’s it’s a bag job. The: They busted his safe to get something out of it. Wain’t that it?

E: No. They flew out, broke his safe, got something out (unintelligible) . . . (The White House Transcripts, page 293)

According to the New York Times, Robert Bennett admitted that he did discuss the break-in with Hunt and with a Las Vegas company, but he claimed it never actually took place:

Robert F. Bennett, president of a Washington public relations firm that once employed Hunt, who is one of the Watergate conspirators, said Hunt in 1971 discussed with him possibly breaking into the safe of a Las Vegas, Nev., publisher . . .

Mr. Bennett, president of the company . . . said that Hunt told him he heard through underground channels that Hank Greenspun . . . had papers in his safe that would be “very damaging” to Senator Muskie.

He said the safe might also contain papers sought by a Las Vegas company and that the company might be interested in the break-in. Mr. Bennett said he checked it with the company involved and told him “No way.” . . . Later when I asked Hunt if it came off, he said, “Oh, no, but Muskie’s not going to be the candidate, so it doesn’t matter anyway.” (New York Times, April 28, 1973)

On May 23, 1973 the New York Times reported the following:

Mr. Greenspun said that he had learned . . . that Robert Bennett, . . . had testified in a “secret hearing” that he had presented a blank check from the Hughes interests to the Nixon campaign fund and that it had been cashed for a very large sum, . . .

He said that he was not certain when the burglary attempt occurred. He said that he had noticed that the aluminum sills of his office window, which are concealed behind heavy curtains, had been jimmied and that the safe bore the marks of heavy tools having been used on it when he returned from a vacation trip last September. (New York Times, May 23, 1973, page 30)

In the White House Transcripts, Nixon seemed to suggest that “bugging” might have been involved in the Greenspun affair. We have no other evidence for this; however, we do know that Robert Bennett had an interest in bugging devices. In a deposition given in DNC v. McCord, April 19, 1973, Bennett testified as follows:

A. He [Hunt] said a friend of his had developed a device, which, as he described it, was very, very sophisticated in the realm of electronic surveillance. He said it could be attached to a piece of furniture, that it was voice actuated so that the batteries or whatever power source it had would be preserved and that it was invulnerable to an electronic sweep and suggested that maybe some of our clients would be interested in knowing about the existence of this device. If they were, he said he could introduce them to the individual who had developed it. I checked and none of our clients had any interest in it. (Robert Bennett Deposition, April 19, 1973, DNC v. McCord, page 25)

Senator Howard Baker claims that Robert Bennett was actually involved in a plan to bug Clifford Irving:

Bennett asked for and received from Hunt a price estimate for bugging Clifford Irving for Hughes; . . . (“The Baker Report,” pp. 8-9)

The testimony by Howard Hunt and Robert F. Bennett concerning this “estimate for bugging” was taken in Executive Session before the Senate Watergate Committee, and therefore is not available to the public.

HUNT’S B.Y.U. SPY

In his report Senator Baker said: “. . . Bennett coordinated the employment of political spy Tom Gregory by Hunt and discussed the latter’s refusal to proceed with bugging plans on or about June 16, 1972” (“The Baker Report,” page 9).

Thomas Gregory was a student at the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University at the time he was hired by Howard Hunt to spy on Democratic candidates. Gregory’s decision to engage in this type of activity may have been influenced by his experience at Brigham Young University. According to the University’s newspaper, Daily Universe, Jan. 11, 1973, Gregory “attended BYU from 1966-1968. He served in the South Brazil Mission until 1970 and has been registered at BYU since then.”

Since Gregory was attending BYU “from 1966-1968,” he would have been there at the time that a scandal concerning a spy ring rocked the campus. It was in February, 1967, when the existence of this spy ring was first revealed. The following appeared in The Daily Utah Chronicle, a newspaper published at the University of Utah:

Brigham Young University is in the calm of a hurricane’s eye after being rocked with student charges of an administration-instigated spy ring. . . .

Two political science students, Ronald Hankin and Colleen Stone, described the “spy ring” to BYU student body Tuesday during a “free forum” speech. Hankin claims to have been asked by Steven Russell, senior political scientist, to “check up on a reaction to Pres. Ernest Wilkinson’s April 21 speech” . . .

In a Chronicle interview, Hankin said 15 students were offered the “spy task” authorized by Vice President Joseph T. Bentley. “We were to check up on eight teachers: . . .” (The Daily Utah Chronicle, March 6, 1967)

At first Ernest L. Wilkinson, who was President of BYU, evidently tried to deny the charges: “According to an Associated Press story, Wilkinson said the students were ‘misinformed’ and that he had no knowledge of the alleged spy ring.” (Ibid.) Even though BYU officials denied the existence of the spy ring, an investigation showed that such a ring did exist. Finally Ernest L. Wilkinson was forced to admit that there was such a group:

PROVO (AP)—Brigham Young University President Ernest L. Wilkinson acknowledged Tuesday that a student investigation team had existed on campus to check on so-called liberal professors. . . . In his letter Dr. Wilkinson said:

Although there is misinformation in the charges, there was such a group, reports were made and students were under impression they were acting with the sanction of the administration.

He did not say who the students were reporting, but added:

“As president I must accept responsibility and I regret the misunderstanding and uneasiness which had been engendered.”

Brigham Young University is owned and operated by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church. (Salt Lake Tribune, March 15, 1967)

On March 6, 1967, the Daily Utah Chronicle reported the following:

In the same Chronicle interview, Miss Stone said she and Hankin could not be “ousted” from school for the speech because the activity was authorized by the administration since it was sponsored by the student government committee. However, she said, “I have been tailed since 1 p.m. Wednesday and they’re trying to find us doing something wrong so they can oust us.”

On March 28, 1967, “two of the BYU spies,” Mr. Hankin and Mr. Sisin, were guests in the Caucus Room at the University of Utah. They stated that they “had been subjected to a good deal of harassment. BYU people seemed to resent them as ‘squealers.’” They also stated that one of the administrators at the BYU “told them he wished they would leave, that he wished he had had their telephones bugged.” Two weeks later Ronald Hankin was “dismissed from school.” The Mormon paper, Deseret News, claimed that there was no connection between his dismissal and his part in exposing the spy ring:

PROVO—Student Ronald Hankin, 24, was dismissed from school for multiple violations of BYU standards all separate from his part in disclosing a student “spy” ring, a statement, printed in the university’s weekly Faculty Bulletin, said Thursday.

It emphasized there was no connection with the fact that Mr. Hankin was the student who charged that classmates were being used to spy on so-called “liberal” professors.

Mr. Hankin also wrote Thursday in a letter to the BYU Daily Universe that his dismissal was unrelated to his allegations regarding the spy ring. . . .

Dr. Ernest Wilkinson, BYU president, acknowledged the existence of the spy ring and said the administration would not permit such conditions in the future. (Deseret News, April 13, 1967, page 14B)

As we indicated earlier, Thomas Gregory was attending BYU at the time the spy scandal came to light. He then “served in the South Brazil mission until 1970 and has been registered at BYU since then.” (Daily Universe, Jan.11, 1973)

In the Senate Watergate Report, we find the following information about the recruitment of Gregory for spying activities:

D. Ruby II. In February 1972, Howard Hunt hired Thomas Gregory, a student at Brigham Young University, to infiltrate the Muskie campaign. Hunt met Gregory through Robert Fletcher, the nephew of Robert Bennett, Hunt’s employer at the Mullen Company.

Using the alias Ed Warren, Hunt called Gregory in Utah and asked him to come to Washington for an expense-paid job interview. About a week later Hunt and Gregory met at the Park Central Hotel in Washington, where Hunt explained that he wanted information from the Muskie campaign, including schedules, internal memoranda, and general observations of the campaign. Gregory was to work as a volunteer for Muskie, report to Hunt once a week, and receive $175 a week for his services. Gregory accepted the offer. (The Senate Watergate Report, vol.1, page 297)

The BYU’s newspaper, Daily Universe, published an article entitled “Student is witness” on January 9, 1973. In this article we read:

A BYU student has been called as one of the key government witnesses in the Watergate trial which began Monday. . . .

Gregory, a history major, became involved with the Muskie campaign through an “Independent Learning Experience” sponsored by the BYU Honors program. After the Muskie campaign folded, Gregory went to work for McGovern. J. Keith Melville, Professor of Political Science, who supervised Gregory, said that he worked on foreign policy for Muskie and was a student coordinator for McGovern.

Melville said that in his talks “there was nothing that Gregory ever related to me that would have connected him with the Watergate case.”

He noted that Gregory was “very diligent in his particular political area and very perceptive about his work.” Early in his progress reports, Gregory related to Melville that Muskie was on a downward trend—before this was recognized by the press.

On January 12, 1973, BYU’s Daily Universe reported the following:

BYU student Thomas Gregory testified late Thursday that he was paid to spy on the campaigns of Democratic presidential contenders . . .

Gregory, a 25-year old history major at BYU, testified that Hunt paid his fare to Washington and induced him to work in Muskie’s office and then for Sen. George McGovern.

Gregory testified his assignment in both offices was to get as much information as possible on the candidates’ schedules, the names of their contributors and such physical details of their headquarters as locations of heating ducts, pictures on the walls and light fixtures. . . .

Gregory said he and Hunt met once a week in a drug store and exchanged envelopes, Gregory giving typewritten notes and Hunt returning his pay, $175.

Earlier Thursday, . . . BYU President Dallin Oaks issued a statement . . .

Pres. Oaks said, “I am satisfied that no Brigham Young University teacher or official had any knowledge of the alleged spying. If the spying took place, we deplore it.”

The president issued the statement after conferring with Dr. Keith Melville, the political science professor who was supervising Gregory’s “Independent Learning Experience” project as intern with the Edmund Muskie and George McGovern campaigns.

Melville said he was first contacted last February by Gregory.

“He proposed the program and gave me a list of books he was to read,” said Melville. “It seemed to be a noteworthy program.”

On January 17, 1973, the Daily Universe printed this information:

BYU student Thomas Gregory testified yesterday in Washington, D.C. that he was paid $3400 for spying and quit after a “close call” in an effort to bug Sen. George McGovern’s headquarters.

Gregory testified in the Watergate bugging trial that he met with E. Howard Hunt, G. Gordon Liddy, James W. McCord Jr., and four other defendants in a Washington hotel room early last May.

He said McCord expressed interest in planting electronic listening devices in the offices of McGovern campaign officials, according to Associated Press reports. On a visit to McGovern headquarters, Gregory said, McCord went through the building observing the burglar-alarm system and the location of exits. He said he later was introduced to Liddy, who went along on a night-time reconnaissance of the area around McGovern headquarters.

Gregory said he was asked to provide keys to the McGovern headquarters but refused. He did agree to remain in the building late on May 28 and leave some locks open when he departed. However, another man working in the headquarters discovered him and wanted to know why he was there. He then left and called to warn Hunt and the bugging operation scheduled for that night was called off . . .

During a final meeting with Hunt on June 15, Gregory said he wanted out of the operation. (Daily Universe, January 17, 1973)

In the Senate Watergate Report, we find the following:

At about this same time, Hunt asked Gregory to transfer to the McGovern campaign as a volunteer, which he did . . . he was now to prepare and assist Hunt and Liddy in their plans to place electronic surveillance on McGovern headquarters.

Gregory gave Hunt a floor plan and office description of the McGovern headquarters at Hunt’s request. Hunt then introduced Gregory to James McCord, in late April or early May 1972. In a meeting . . . Hunt and McCord told Gregory they were planning to place a “bug” in the McGovern headquarters and would need assistance.

In late May 1972, Gregory took McCord through the McGovern headquarters to familiarize McCord with the physical layout. On a second occasion (May 27, 1972) Gregory again took McCord through the McGovern headquarters; on that visit McCord unsuccessfully attempted to plant a bug in Frank Mankiewicz’s office.
Sometime in late May-early June 1972 Gregory met Gordon Liddy for the first time, during an automobile ride in which Hunt drove Liddy and Gregory around the McGovern headquarters while Liddy told Gregory that he, too, was interested in getting into the McGovern offices.

Hunt, Liddy, McCord, and Gregory met at a Washington hotel to discuss breaking into McGovern headquarters to copy documents and to go over a physical layout of offices and the location of alarm systems. (The Senate Watergate Report, vol. 1, page 298)

In a chart published in the Senate Watergate Hearings, vol. 11, page 4,637, Thomas Gregory is listed as being part of the “Gemstone” operation; Mr. Lackritz says that “Thomas Gregory was known as Rudy 2. . . .” (Ibid., page 4,638)

Although Gregory was deeply involved with the Watergate burglars, he was fortunate enough to get out of the conspiracy before he was caught. In The Senate Watergate Report, vol. 1, page 298, we find that “By early June, Gregory had serious questions about the propriety of his activities,” and that he discussed the matter with “Robert Bennett.” The report goes on to state: “On or about June 15 or 16, 1972, Gregory met with Hunt to tell him that he no longer wished to continue with his work. After terminating his employment with Hunt, Gregory also contacted the McGovern headquarters to discontinue his volunteer work. Gregory received approximately $3,400 for his services.”

Thomas Gregory confessed his role in the spying activities and appeared as a witness at the Watergate Trial in January 1973. It is interesting to note that at least 3 other Mormons appeared as witnesses at the trial—i.e., Senator Wallace Bennett, his son Douglass, and Robert Bennett Fletcher (Daily Universe, January 11-12, 1973). The Senate Watergate Report, vol. 1, page 297, says that “when Hunt was not available, Gregory gave this material to Robert Fletcher to pass on to Hunt.” Although Fletcher was aware of the fact that Gregory was spying on the Democrats and had recommended him for this work, we have not found any evidence that he was aware of the plans for bugging and burglary.

*Note Added—The BYU Daily Universe for January 11, 1973 said Wallace and Douglas Bennett were “Listed among the witnesses,” but Official Court Reporter Nicholas Sokal has been unable to locate any testimony given by these two men. At any rate, at least three Mormons gave testimony—i.e., Robert Bennett, Thomas Gregory and Robert B. Fletcher.

BENNETT’S COMPANY IN TROUBLE

In our telephone conversation with James A. Everett, he admitted that a good share of the planning of the Watergate caper took place in Howard Hunt’s office at the Mullen Co. In his letter to us, Mr. Everett stated:

13. Howard Hunt’s office was the only room in the RRM & Co. suite, which could be entered from the outside hall without going through the central reception room. When Hunt would have visits from McCord, Liddy, Barker, et.al. he would have them use his outside entrance and then close the inner reception room door. In this manner they could conduct their extraneous activities and plantings without having it known to the other members of the R.R.M. & Co. staff. Liddy had his own offices across the street and I would imagine all the confidential charts used in the infamous briefing to Mitchell were done there where he would have greater security in the preparation.

Notice that Mr. Everett stated that “Liddy had his own offices across the street” from the Mullen Company This is a very revealing statement concerning the location of the Mullen Company. Actually, the address for the Mullen Company was 1700 Pennsylvania Ave., and the Committee to Re-elect the President was located at 1701 Pennsylvania Ave., which is of course right across the street. Both the Mullen Company and the Committee to Re-elect the President were within a block of the White House—the White House is located at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

As we have already shown, James McCord told of attending meetings where the Watergate conspirators discussed their plans “in Mr. Hunt’s office, in the Robert R. Mullen offices. . . .” (Hearings, vol. 1, page 142). Bernard Baker also told of meeting with the conspirators at the “Mullins [sic] headquarters.”

After it was discovered that Howard Hunt was involved in the Watergate break-in, Robert Bennett found his company under investigation. James A. Everett states: “After the initial telephone call from the Washington Post there was a veritable deluge of calls all seeking leads” (Letter dated October 15, 1974). The New York Times for June 21, 1972, reported the following:

Robert F. Bennett, president of the Robert R. Mullen Company, . . . said in an interview this afternoon that Mr. Hunt could not be found. Mr. Bennett said that F.B.I. agents came to the offices of his company, at 1700 Pennsylvania Avenue, yesterday morning looking for Mr. Hunt. Mr. Bennett said that he found a message from Mr. Hunt this morning saying he had gone to New York for the day in connection with a television project in which the company is engaged. But, Mr. Bennett said, he could not reach him there. . . .

Howard Hunt hid from the FBI for about two weeks. Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward state:

Meanwhile, Howard Hunt had not been seen since the day he had spoken briefly on the telephone to Woodward. The FBI assigned 150 agents to the search. On July 7, . . . Hunt came in from the cold. (All The President’s Men, page 34)

On page 9 of his report, Senator Baker claimed that “Bennett served as the point of contact between Hunt and Liddy during the two weeks following the Watergate break-in.”

Since Hunt worked for Robert Bennett, it did not take the FBI long to suspect that all was not well at the Mullen Company. James A. Everett, who had just arrived from Europe, felt that the FBI bugged the phones of the Mullen Co. after the Watergate break-in. This, of course, cannot be proven, but there can be no doubt that the Mullen Company was under investigation. On July 7, 1972, the New York Times reported: “The Mullen Company’s records have been subpoenaed in connection with the current Federal grand jury investigation into the Watergate matter.”

The Mullen Company’s records proved very fruitful to investigators. For instance, the records showed that more than a dozen phone calls had been placed to Donald Segretti, who had “directed a campaign of political espionage and sabotage against the Democrats.” This, of course, linked Segretti’s activities to Howard Hunt.

BENNETT’S COVER-UP

After the Watergate break-in was discovered, Robert Bennett found himself faced with the possibility that his activities would bring embarrassment to both the Mormon Church and the CIA. Therefore, he did his best to cover-up the BYU spy and the relationship of his company with the CIA.

Bennett’s attempt to suppress the involvement of the BYU spy did not last long. Jack Anderson, who is himself a Mormon stated:

Bennett was called in for questioning six times by the original Watergate prosecutors. He held back Gregory’s vital information out of loyalty to the youth, Bennett claims.

But the prosecutors traced Bennett’s long-distance telephone calls to Gregory. When Bennett learned this, he called the prosecutors and said: “Look, you’ve found Tommy. I’ll tell you about Tommy.” (Deseret News, June 25, 1974)

Bennett’s attempt to suppress the involvement with the CIA was successful for a while, but the truth eventually came out anyway. In Senator Baker’s Report we find the following:

The true nature of Bennett’s relationship to the CIA was not known to us until late November of 1973 when, at Senator Baker’s request, the CIA produced another volume of CIA documents (Volume IV). The following information was added from this volume.

On July 10, 1972, Bennett reported detailed knowledge of the Watergate incident to his CIA case officer. The case officer’s report of this meeting was handwritten and carried to Director Helms on or before July 14, 1972, in this form because of the sensitivity of the information. It revealed that Bennett had established a “back door entry” to E. B. Williams, the attorney for the DNC, in order to “kill off” revelations of the Agency’s relationship with the Mullen and Company in the course of the DNC lawsuit. He agreed to check with the CIA prior to contacting Williams. Our staff has confirmed that Bennett did funnel information to Williams via attorney Hobart Taylor and that this information was more extensive than the information Bennett had previously provided the Grand Jury. The CIA has acknowledged paying one-half of Bennett’s attorney fee for his Grand Jury appearance.

Although Bennett was supplying information to the CIA about many aspects of the Watergate incident and was at that time serving as liaison between Hunt and Liddy, there is no indication that these facts were disclosed to the FBI . . .
A memorandum drafted by the Chief of the Central Cover Staff, CIA, on March 1, 1973, notes that Bennett felt he could handle the Ervin Committee if the Agency could handle Hunt. Bennett even stated that he had a friend who had intervened with Ervin on the matter. ("The Baker Report," pp. 9, 10 and 12)

Robert Bennett publicly stated that he knew nothing about the Watergate break-in. He claimed, in fact, that Hunt had lied to him (see New York Times, April 28, 1973). Now that more information has come out, it has become apparent that Bennett knew about Hunt’s illegal activities prior to the Watergate break-in. Jack Anderson has published the fact that Bennett knew of the “White House burglary-bugging team” before the Watergate break-in:

WASHINGTON—CIA front man Robert Bennett, son of veteran Sen. Wallace Bennett, R-Utah, has conceded that he knew a White House burglary-bugging team was on the prowl in advance of the celebrated Watergate break-in.

A secret memorandum written by his CIA case officer, states that the senator’s son withheld vital information from the authorities.

In an interview with my associate Les Whitten, Bennett acknowledged he knew at least three days before the Watergate burglary that White House aide E. Howard Hunt and his second-story crew had plotted to break into the campaign headquarters of Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., and bug the place.

Instead of reporting the conspiracy to the police, Bennett kept his mouth shut. At the same time, he told his CIA contact that he had held back information from the original Watergate prosecutors when they later questioned him about the Watergate break-in.

This episode is another link in the mysterious CIA involvement in Watergate. . . . the full story still hasn’t been told.

The CIA used Bennett’s public relations firm, Mullen and Company, as a spy front. On its payroll was none other than Howard Hunt, the Watergate conspirator.

Bennett’s nephew referred a Brigham Young University student, named Thomas Gregory, to Hunt who recruited the young man as a political spy. . . .

As Bennett related it Gregory had been told by Hunt to work late one night at McGovern headquarters and leave a door open so the White House burglars could sneak in. (Deseret News, June 25, 1974)

From documents which we have examined, it appears that Robert Bennett was able to offer Mullen clients not only public relations but burglary services as well. Bennett’s own testimony plainly shows that he was trying to interest his clients in equipment for electronic surveillance. The fact that Bennett was offering burglary service is very plain from Senator Baker’s statement that “Bennett asked for and received from Hunt a price estimate for bugging Clifford Irving for Hughes; . . . .” (“The Baker Report,” pp. 8-9) Senator Baker links Robert Bennett’s name to a number of illegal or questionable activities:

. . . Bennett suggested and coordinated the Demont interview regarding Chappaquiddick; Bennett coordinated the release of Dita Beard’s statement from Denver, after contacting Beard’s attorneys at the suggestion of a Hughes executive; Bennett suggested that Greenspun’s safe contained information of interest to both Hughes and the CRP . . . Bennett coordinated the employment of political spy Tom Gregory by Hunt and discussed with Gregory the latter’s refusal to proceed with bugging plans on or about June 16, 1972. Bennett served as the point of contact between Hunt and Liddy during the two weeks following the Watergate break-in. (“The Baker Report,” pages 8-9)

At one time Robert Bennett assigned Howard Hunt to the Hughes account. Hunt not only asked for help from the CIA in his work for the White House but also for his work on the Hughes account. Senator Baker states: “. . . he actually contacted the CIA’s External Employment Assistance Branch (EEAB) and approached active CIA personnel regarding several operations including e.g., Hunt’s requests to the CIA for person(s) skilled in lockpicking, electronic sweeping, and entry operations.” (Ibid., pages 26-27) In a footnote on page 27 of the same report, Senator Baker gives this interesting information:

a. Hunt was referred to [Former CIA employee] [Chief EEAB] of the CIA’s EEAB, . . . when Hunt requested a “retired lockpicker” and entry man in the time period of March-May 1972. CIA Supplemental Materials, Volume 1, Tab 4, Memorandum of June 19, 1972.

b. Hunt, in late 1971, requested some “security types to check physical security and monitor telephones in Las Vegas” in connection with Hunt’s work on the Hughes account with Mullen and Company.

The evidence indicates that Robert Bennett was especially interested in providing a burglary and bugging service for Hughes. He may have wanted his other clients to also receive these services. As we have already shown, Bennett did admit discussing a bugging device with his “clients,” but he claimed that “none of our clients had any interest in it.” We do not know whether the Mormon Church was one of the “clients” Bennett was referring to.

In his relationship with the Mormon Church Robert Bennett seems to have dealt with the Mormon Apostle Mark E. Petersen. Petersen is now second in line to be President of the Mormon Church. James A. Everett made this statement in his letter to us: “9. It is my understanding that Mark E. Petersen was head of the Public Relations effort at the level which was served by Robert R. Mullen & Co.” (Letter dated October 15, 1974) Mr. Everett also stated that Bennett and Petersen are “good friends.”

The reader may remember that Mark E. Petersen is the same man who threatened to sue us because we published his anti-Negro speech. Since the speech was in the public domain, and since we accurately reproduced it, Mr. Petersen had no grounds for any legal action and the matter was dropped (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pp. 12-13).

One of Mark E. Petersen’s most important responsibilities is to investigate and order the excommunication of those Mormons who deviate from the teachings and doctrines of the Mormon Church. At the present time the Apostle Petersen seems to be after Michael Marquardt. Mr. Marquardt is the Mormon scholar who brought to light Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation on polygamy. This revelation had been suppressed for over 140 years because it commanded the Mormons to marry Indians to make them a “white” and “delightsome” people. About a month after we published this revelation in the Messenger and in the book Mormonism Like Watergate? Mark E. Petersen had Mr. Marquardt’s Stake Presidency call him in for questioning. It was June 9, 1974, when Mr. Marquardt appeared before the Stake Presidency. The same day Mr. Marquardt wrote a report of the meeting from which we extract the following:

President Reed Brown said that he had received a letter from Mark E. Petersen of the Council of the Twelve asking about my name being mentioned in publication by the Tanners who were apostates. He asked a few questions which I answered and then his counselor Calvin broadband asked a few questions which I also answered.

I then told them that in 1971 I had been called in by my previous Stake President because of a letter from Mark E. Petersen . . .

I then asked if I could read the letter. The letter was dated June 3, 1974 and written to President Reed Brown and signed by Mark E. Petersen. Mention was made that reports of Brother Michael Marquardt were being received by Mark E. Petersen . . . Reports that they have in the office goes back to rumors in 1971 . . . Mention was made that my name had appeared in a publication by the Tanners who were apostate, reference was made to the Salt Lake City Messenger published by Modern Microfilm Company . . . The Historian’s Office was upset about my research as it related to the Church. Mark E. Petersen wanted to make sure that I was not teaching false doctrine in the Elders’ Quorum.”

Since Mr. Marquardt is more interested in getting out the truth than in his membership in the Church, Mark E. Petersen has not been able to silence him. Unfortunately, however, many members of the Church are afraid of Petersen’s investigations and are intimidated when he has them called in for examination.

MORMONS IN THE C.I.A.

Since the Mullen Company was used as a cover for the CIA, a question concerning the involvement of the Mormon Church with the CIA naturally arises. An examination of the evidence has led us to the belief that at least some of the clients of the Mullen Company were used as cover for CIA agents. In his report Senator Baker states: “CIA records indicate that Agency consideration was given to utilizing Mullen’s Hughes relationship for a matter relating to a cover arrangement in [South America] and to garner information on Robert Maheu” (“The Baker Report,” page 8). There is good reason to believe that at least two other clients of the Mullen Company had some involvement with the CIA.
The Mormon Church’s world-wide activities and mission program could provide a perfect cover for CIA agents, but at the present time we have no evidence that this is actually the case. We do know, however, that the Church provides many men for the CIA. Writing in the New York Times for September 16, 1974, Wallace Turner states: “Many Mormon scholars work on contracts for the C.I.A.” We recently asked a man who had taught at Brigham Young University if he had any reason to believe that the Mormon missionary program was used as a cover for CIA agents. He replied that he did not, but he went on to state that many missionaries are later recruited to CIA work. He felt that the missionary program provided good training for CIA agents. The missionaries are taught absolute obedience to authority and many of them learn foreign languages as well. He also stated that the Church’s educational system contains a large number of men who have been involved in the CIA or FBI.

There can be little doubt that the Church’s Brigham Young University provides many men for the CIA. One man told us that he was recruited while working in the language department at BYU. Another man has written a letter in which he stated:

. . . I did have a professor at BYU who had been first a member of U.S. Army Intelligence (Korean War), and later an employee of the CIA . . . and he never made any secret of it . . . I also had a roommate at BYU who is now and has been for some time a covert agent (a "007") for the CIA, . . .

The Brigham Young University’s Daily Universe reported the following on November 7, 1974:

An expense paid trip to the nation’s capital and a monthly salary of $780 from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), provided BYU law student Dale Storer with an “interesting experience” last summer. . . . Storer spent the summer in Washington D.C., doing research for the CIA.

Storer, a graduate in economics, who served a two-year mission for the church in Indonesia, did research in the areas of economy and industrialization. . . .

He said there are many opportunities to work with the CIA and urged students wishing to gain more information to contact Dr. Lawrence G. Woodward, coordinator for cooperative programs.

We are rather alarmed that so many Mormons are involved with the CIA. The Watergate investigation has clearly demonstrated that there is a tendency for some of those trained in covert operations to return and use them on their own people. Any group with a large proportion of their members trained in spying activities could become a serious threat to freedom. The Mormon Church could prove to be exceptionally dangerous, however, because it has a secret “Council of Fifty” in its history (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pp. 414-421).

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT WARNS CHURCH

In 1972 a man we had known for a number of years complained that the Apostle Mark E. Petersen was investigating him in order to find evidence that he was out of harmony with the teachings of the Church. After about eight months he was excommunicated from the Church. Later we heard that this man was claiming his telephone was bugged and his private journal stolen at the time he was under investigation. On March 5, 1974, we checked with him and found that he was making these charges. He claimed, in fact, that both his home phone and his phone at the Dugway Proving Ground had been bugged. These charges alarmed us for two reasons: First, the bugging of a U.S. Government phone on which national security matters might be discussed would be a very serious matter. Second, we knew that this man had called us in 1972, and if his phone was wiretapped then any conversations we had with him might have been intercepted also.

After we learned that Mormons like Robert Bennett and Thomas Gregory had been involved in the planning of bugging operations, we became very interested in this man’s charges. In June 1974 Attorney General William B. Saxbe called on the American people to report any information they might have about illegal wiretapping. On July 1, 1974, we sent all the material that could be gathered about this alleged wiretapping to the Justice Department. A man who was well informed on legal matters told us that he felt the charges should be investigated but that he doubted the FBI would touch the matter if it involved the Mormon Church. At any rate, the Justice Department acknowledged receiving the material on July 3, 1974. Over two months past and to our knowledge no investigation was begun. On September 15, 1974, we wrote to the Attorney General and asked if he was serious about the matter. Finally, after about three months from the time we first contacted the Justice Department an agent from the FBI visited our house. He said that the Government had no record of any legal wiretapping of the man, and therefore if there was any wiretapping it had to be illegal. He assured us that a thorough investigation would be made, and that the investigation would begin the next day. After a week had passed however, we learned that the victim of the alleged wiretapping had still not been interviewed. We called the FBI to find out what they were doing, and within a few hours the man was interviewed. Another month passed and we assumed that the FBI had contacted the important witnesses. To our dismay, however, we learned that by November 5, 1974, some of the most important persons had still not been interviewed. Now it could be that the FBI is doing something we do not know about, but we cannot help but have the depressing feeling that the claim of a thorough investigation and the few interviews actually made were only for the purpose of pacifying us. In a book which we are now working on we may have more to report on this matter.

However this may be, the victim of the alleged wiretapping claimed that his wife told him that a counselor to his Stake President had listened to 4 1/2 hours of taped conversation which was supposed to have been derived from the bugging. His wife, however, denies that she said this—the counselor also vigorously denies the allegation. Nevertheless, she does support her husband’s story that their phone was monitored and claims to have some important evidence on the subject. This is especially interesting since she is still a loyal member of the Church and does not go along with her husband’s religious views. This woman feels that her husband’s excommunication was engineered from above, and that local leaders were pressured into taking action against him. She supports her husband’s claim that the Apostle Petersen had been gathering information against him. At any rate, unless the FBI makes a good thorough investigation of this matter, we may never know who is telling the truth.

Although we can make no definite conclusions about this alleged case of wiretapping, the research concerning it has brought to light some important information. After we informed a man who has good connections in the Church of the case, he watched carefully for any material relating to it. Sometime around the middle of November he made a very important discovery in The Priesthood Bulletin. This publication is printed by the Mormon Church for priesthood leaders and is not for the general membership of the Church. The important item is found in Vol. 10, No. 3, Third Quarter, 1974, p. 2, and reads as follows (see photograph on page 1):

The United States Department of Justice has notified the Church that federal law can be violated by the illegal use of an oral communication in connection with a Church court. The law is violated when anyone willfully and knowingly uses a recorded communication when he knows or has reason to believe that the recording was obtained by interception without the consent of the parties involved in the conversation.

All priesthood authorities are advised to refrain from using any tape-recorded communication unless the party whose conversation was recorded clearly has given express consent in writing to its use.

After reading The Priesthood Bulletin, we felt that it must certainly relate to the alleged wiretapping case. We called the FBI and asked if it did relate to this case. The FBI claimed the statement in The Priesthood Bulletin did not relate to this particular case. It was concerning another matter which the FBI had investigated. From what we could gather it involved the illegal use of a concealed tape recorder to gain evidence against a Church member to be used in a Church court. The FBI had investigated the matter, and the Department of Justice had sent the Church a letter warning them against the illegal interception of oral communications. This whole matter seems to have been handled in secret and probably would not have come to our attention if it had not been for the unusual circumstances we have related.

The Mormon Church is probably very lucky to receive only a private letter of warning from the Justice Department. A car dealer in Ogden, Utah, was recently indicted for “intercepting oral communications.” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 21, 1974) While the offense is serious, the car dealer could only take monetary advantage of people. The Church, on the other hand, could easily ruin a person’s reputation through the misuse of the excommunication process. A person who has been excommunicated could lose his job, family or friends.
The U.S. Government has dismissed many cases where the prosecution has used illegal means to obtain evidence. Mormon Church courts are not subject to the same rules as legal courts, but anyone who can prove he was illegally bugged to obtain information for a Church court could undoubtedly win a lawsuit against the Church. Therefore, although the Mormon Church may have escaped action by the Justice Department, it may still face serious legal problems.

INFORMATION NEEDED FOR BOOK

The material we have presented in this issue of the Messenger is only a preliminary and brief report. We are now in the process of writing a book about these matters. Some of our readers may have vital information which could help us. We are looking for information on the following subjects: wiretapping or bugging in the Mormon Church, the theft of personal papers or journals before excommunication, Apostle Petersen’s methods of gaining information against those suspected of apostasy, the Church’s Law Observance and Enforcement Committee, any evidence of the existence of the secret Council of 50 after 1900, the BYU spy ring, Robert Bennett and the Mullen Co., the CIA and Mormonism, and Howard Hughes’s relationship with the Mormons.

If the reader has any accurate information or leads on any of the subjects above we would appreciate knowing about it.

THE BOOK THAT CAN NOT EXIST!

Psychiatrists tell us that the inability to face reality leads to many serious emotional problems. Those who are honest with themselves must admit that at sometime during their life they have had difficulty facing reality. Some of Richard Nixon’s greatest problems seem to stem from his inability to face reality. Even churches can have this problem. The Mormon Church, for instance has some serious problems which the leaders have failed to come to grips with. We have detailed a large number of these problems in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Now, instead of facing these problems the Mormon leaders have turned their backs and pretended that they do not exist. As early as October 1966, we made this comment in the Messenger:

Many people have commented that it is very strange that the Mormon leaders have not made a rebuttal to this book. We feel the reason that they have not openly denounced it is because they know it would draw attention to the very things they want to hide from their people and that this would work to our advantage.

In 1972 we enlarged Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and brought it completely up to date. We are now happy to announce that over 10,000 copies have been sold. During the last month alone we sold about 300 copies. Even though sales are mounting and many people are leaving the Church, Mormon scholars continue to keep silent concerning this book. Neither Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought nor Brigham Young University Studies have carried a review. This is really incredible since these publications have reviewed many books that have been critical of the Church. For instance, the BYU Studies published a 4 1/2 page review of the book Latter-day Saints and the Sabbath.

It seems to be almost unwritten rule among Mormon scholars that they must never mention Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? in print. They apparently feel that they must not allow their people to know of its existence. Fortunately there are a few exceptions. Samuel W. Taylor mentions it in his book Nightfall at Nauvoo, and in Mormonia—A Quarterly Bibliography of Works on Mormonism, Fall 1972, page 89. Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is referred to as “Perhaps the most exhaustive expose of Mormonism between two covers.” It seems almost beyond belief that Mormon writers will write long reviews of many books and even small pamphlets critical of the Church and yet fail to mention the book which Mormonia calls “Perhaps the most exhaustive expose of Mormonism between two covers.” We feel that there can be only one explanation for this silence by Mormon writers, and that is that they know that the charges we make are basically correct and cannot be refuted. We do not claim, of course, that Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is a perfect book. Any book of this size would have a few errors in it and unless Mormon writers can discover substantial defects in this book they would do well to keep silent. One Mormon writer attempted to write a rebuttal to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? He found, however, that he could not deal with the issues raised in the book. He admitted that the truth concerning the Church was even worse than what we had presented. Finally, this man was excommunicated from the Church.

Since we are more interested in getting the truth out than in making a lot of money, we sell Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? at a very reasonable price—many publishers would charge twice as much for a book this size.

AN ETERNAL COVER-UP

Although the Watergate scandal has really hurt our country, there is a real lesson that we all can learn from it—that is, that it does not pay to try and cover up our sins. The Bible warns: “. . . be sure your sin will find you out” (Numbers 32:23). It is true that we can often hide our sins from men, but Jesus tells us that we cannot hide them from God: “. . . there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known” (Matthew 10:26).

Our former President must have firmly believed that his tapes would never come to light, but through some very strange circumstances they did become public and caused his downfall. This is certainly a tragic example, and we cannot help but feel sorry for him and for his family. Nevertheless, it teaches us that even the President of the United States does not have the power to cover up his sins.

It is certainly ironical that Richard Nixon should be trapped by his own tapes. The Bible, however, tells us that we all stand in jeopardy of being convicted by our own words at the judgment:

> But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. (Matthew 12:36-37)

Although we do not feel that God has a secret tape recorder which he uses to bug us with, we do believe He has knowledge of everything through his Holy Spirit. The Bible says that God not only knows our every word and action but also the “thoughts and intents” of our heart:

> For the word of God is quick, and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. (Hebrews 4:12 -13)

In 1 Corinthians 4:5 we read that the Lord “will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: . . .” Romans 2:16 tells us that “God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.”

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus it is clear that after death our memory will be restored and that if we have continued in sin and selfishness it will condemn us (see Luke 16:25). The Bible tells us that we are all sinners and in need of God’s forgiveness. To refuse to face this fact is to live a life which is founded on cover-up, and this will eventually prove disastrous to our souls. In the story of the Pharisee and the publican Jesus shows that we can appear to be very religious, but if we have not acknowledged that we are sinners in need of God’s grace we are still under condemnation.

Now, while the Bible teaches that it is impossible for us to cover up our own sins, it does state that God Himself can cover them up if we will turn to him and ask for forgiveness:

> But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. (1 John 1:7-9)

In Psalms 32:1 we read: “Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.” This is a cover-up that really works. In Psalms 103:12 we find this statement: “As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.” Isaiah 43:25 gives this assurance: “. . . and will not remember thy sins.” Those who have received the Lord into their hearts know the great joy and peace that comes from accepting God’s forgiveness. The Bible says:

> Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: Old things are passed away; Behold, all things are become new. (2 Corinthians 5:17)
In our last issue of the _Salt Lake City Messenger_ we pointed out some interesting facts that seem to point to a relationship between the Mormon Church and the CIA. For one thing, we proved that a company which handled international public relations for the Mormon Church was used as "an overseas cover for CIA activities" (Newsweek, July 15, 1974, page 29). This was the Robert R. Mullen and Company. Mr. Mullen is the same man who wrote a book entitled _The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today_. This book is obviously written in defense of the Mormon Church.

Robert Bennett, a prominent Mormon who is the son of Wallace F. Bennett, bought the Mullen Company in 1971. The notorious Howard Hunt worked under Bennett at the Mullen Company at the very time the Watergate break-in took place. In fact, the Watergate conspirators met and discussed plans for the burglary in the Mullen Company.

Since the publication of our last _Messenger_, the Rockefeller Report on the CIA has been issued. It tends to confirm much of our research. The following is taken from that report:

In April 1970, E. Howard Hunt retired from the Central Intelligence Agency after having served in it for over twenty years. With the help of the Agency's External Employment Affairs Branch, he obtained a job with Robert R. Mullen and Company, a Washington, D.C., public relations firm. The Mullen Company itself had for years cooperated with the Agency by providing cover abroad for Agency officers, carrying them as ostensible employees of its offices overseas.

Hunt, while employed by Mullen, orchestrated and led the Fielding and Watergate break-ins and participated in other questionable activities. The Mullen Company had tangential associations with some activities of the White House staff... Robert Mullen had, however, for many years cooperated with the CIA by making some of his overseas offices available at different times as a cover for Agency employees operating abroad. The existence of Mullen's relationship with the CIA was, of course, kept secret to protect the secrecy of the cover arrangements and this led to complications when, after Watergate, the Mullen Company came under investigation...

Eight months after Hunt was hired by the Mullen Company, Robert Bennett joined the company. Bennett, the son of Senator Wallace Bennett (R-Utah), had been active in Republican Party affairs... His political connections led him to be involved in some of Hunt’s later activities, discussed below...

Bennett brought Hughes Tool Company (now Summa Corporation) as a client to Mullen. He had met Hughes representatives while at the Department of Transportation. Later in 1971, he introduced Hunt to representatives of Hughes and various contacts occurred which are discussed further below. (Report to the President by the Commission on CIA Activities Within the United States, U.S. Government Printing Office, June 1975, pages 173-176)

On pages 193-197 of the Rockefeller Report we find the following:

Hunt had dealings with the Agency in the summer and fall of 1971 in connection with the White House projects previously discussed. And he continued to be employed by Mullen, which had a CIA relationship, and to be associated with Bennett in several projects with political or espionage overtones. . . .

During the period preceding Watergate, Hunt continued to be employed by Mullen Co. and was in regular contact with Robert Bennett, its president. Mullen continued to provide cover for CIA officers abroad and Bennett and Hunt had a few meetings with the case officer respecting these arrangements. . . .

At one time Hunt approached Bennett with a proposal to obtain the assistance of the Hughes organization for a burglary in Las Vegas to secure purported information about Senator Muskie. . . .

MISSIONARIES AND THE C.I.A.

Almost from its inception in 1947, the CIA has used religious groups both as a source of information and as a conduit for funds. CIA spokesmen declined to discuss the CIA-church connection in any detail... Sources said the CIA dealt with religious groups in Latin America, Africa, Asia and elsewhere.

A spokesman for the Senate select intelligence committee said the panel’s staff is investigating complaints that the CIA has had improper dealings with missionaries.

In the _Salt Lake City Messenger_ for January 1975, we suggested that the Mormon Church could provide a perfect cover for the CIA agents:

Since the Mullen Company [the firm which handled the Mormon Church’s public relations] was used as a cover for the CIA, a question concerning the involvement of the Mormon Church with the CIA naturally arises... The Mormon Church’s world-wide activities and mission program could provide a perfect cover for CIA agents, but at the present time we have no evidence that this is actually the case. We do know, however, that the Church provides many men for the CIA. Writing in the _New York Times_ for September 16, 1974, Wallace Turner states: “Many Mormon scholars work on contracts for the C.I.A.” We recently asked a man who had taught at Brigham Young University if he had any reason to believe that the Mormon missionary program is used as a cover for CIA agents. He replied that he did not, but he went on to state that many missionaries are later recruited to CIA work. He felt that the missionary program provided good training for CIA agents. The missionaries are taught absolute obedience to authority and many of them learn foreign languages as well.

On February 22, 1975, an employee of the CIA sent us a letter in which he stated:

Thank you for your current “Messenger.” As usual it is very informative. I am currently employed with the Central Intelligence Agency and can attest to the fact that the Agency has been very fruitful in hiring Mormons, especially former missionaries.

In my section they are four . . .

I’m sorry I do not have any vital information other than what I just told you. I would appreciate it if you would keep the above information in your confidence as to not using my name. I do not feel that I have given you any secret information but people can sometimes make something out of nothing.

We tried to get this CIA employee to tell us how large his “section” is, but he would not answer.

While this letter confirms the hiring of “former missionaries,” it does not answer the question as to whether the missionary program itself is ever useful as a cover for CIA agents. There is, however, a book which may throw important light on this subject. It is written by Patrick J. McGarvey, a man who worked for the CIA for a number of years. This book is entitled C.I.A.: The Myth and The Madness. On page 57 of Mr. McGarvey’s book we find this very revealing information:

Lastly, CIA uses what they call “deep cover.” Men usually accept such tours for seven-to-nine-year periods, and all traces of American governmental or commercial connections are kept to an absolute minimum. They blend into the local landscape and perform only discreet tasks for the Agency. . . . Deep cover knows few bounds. CIA has a surprising number of Mormon Church members in its employ, and the fact that many of these men had spent two years in a Mormon mission in Latin America or the Far East is not overlooked by CIA.

A friend found himself back in the Mormon mission in Hong Kong after his training. (C.I.A.: The Myth and The Madness, Maryland, 1974, page 57)

According to the Salt Lake Tribune for June 28, 1975, Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball said there are now 20,160 missionaries in 133 missions. It is very unlikely, however, that the CIA would use a large number of Mormon missionaries while they were still serving on their missions. For one thing, most missionaries would be too young to be trusted with such important responsibilities. Then, too, if very many were used, it would soon become generally known and the cover would not be effective.

The CIA would naturally be drawn to the Mormon missionary who has learned a foreign language and has had some experience in a foreign country. If the CIA already has a “surprising number” of Mormons in its employ, they will probably have a great many more in the future because the Church plans to have the “language center of the world” to train missionaries at Brigham Young University. In the BYU alumni paper we read:

It’s a profound combination: take BYU and add a multi-million dollar language center designed to teach at least 20 languages to 22,250 missionaries each year. The result is, as one observer conjured, the “language center of the world.” (Brigham Young University Today, August, 1974)

Speaking of the CIA, Tad Szule states:

An enormous sense of loyalty develops within this elite corps, and this also leads to an unquestioning acceptance of orders from above. (Compulsive Spy, page 33)

The Mormon missionary is certainly trained in this type of absolute obedience to authority. In the ward teacher’s message for June 1945 we find these statements:

Any Latter-day Saint who denounces or opposes, whether actively or otherwise, any plan or doctrine advocated by the “prophets, seers, and revelators” of the Church is cultivating the spirit of apostasy. . . . Lucifer . . . wins a great victory when he can get members of the Church to speak against their leaders and to “do their own thinking.” . . .

When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they propose a plan—it is God’s plan. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. (Improvement Era, June 1945, page 354)

Heber C. Kimball, First Councillor to Brigham Young, made these statements:

. . . learn to do as you are told, . . . if you are told by your leader to do a thing, do it, none of your business whether it is right or wrong. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 6, page 32)

If you do things according to counsel and they are wrong, the consequences will fall on the heads of those who counseled you, so don’t be troubled. (William Clayton’s Journal, page 334)

It would certainly be easy for a Mormon to extend this type of thinking from Church leaders to government leaders.

CIA & the Church’s Educational System

In the last Messenger we reported that a man who had taught at the Brigham Young University told us that the Church’s educational system contains a large number of men who have been involved in the CIA or FBI. We now have evidence that even the Church’s commissioner of education, Dr. Neal A. Maxwell, has been connected with the CIA. In the Brigham Young University’s paper The Daily Universe we found the following:

Dr. Neal A. Maxwell, Church commissioner of education and regional representative to the Council of the Twelve, . . . was a legislative assistant to Senator Wallace F. Bennett and served for two years with the United States Central Intelligence Agency. (Daily Universe, Feb. 23, 1971)

Dr. Maxwell not only serves as Church commissioner of education but as an assistant to the Twelve Apostles. The Salt Lake Tribune for June 7, 1975, said that “He is commissioner of the educational system of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and an assistant to the Council of Twelve Apostles.” Dr. Maxwell worked at the University of Utah sometime between leaving the CIA and accepting his call from the Mormon Church. Some people at the University of Utah seem to have been suspicious that Dr. Maxwell had not completely severed his contact with the CIA. We do not know whether there is any truth to this accusation, however.

In the last issue of the Messenger we stated:

There can be little doubt that the Church’s Brigham Young University provides many men for the CIA. . . .

The Brigham Young University’s Daily Universe reported the following on November 7, 1974:

An expense paid trip to the nation’s capital and a monthly salary of $780 from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), provided BYU law student Dale Storer with an “interesting experience” last summer. . . . Storer spent the summer in Washington D.C., doing research for the CIA. . . .

He said there are many opportunities to work with the CIA and urged students wishing to gain more information to contact Dr. Lawrence G. Woodward, coordinator for cooperative programs.

In the same issue of the Messenger, we cited the following from a letter:

. . . I did have a professor at BYU who had been first a member of U.S. Army Intelligence (Korean War), and later an employee of the CIA . . . and he never made any secret of it. . . . I also had a roommate at BYU who is now and has been for some time a covert agent (“007”) for the CIA, . . .

After publishing this information we had a very interesting thing happen. The very man who was a “covert agent” for the CIA visited our bookstore. After conversing for some time, he made some statements concerning his friends and travels which led us to suspect that he was the “covert agent” mentioned in the letter cited above. We confronted him with these facts, and he frankly admitted that he was the man. He stated that he had served on a mission for the Mormon Church. Later he worked in the language department at Brigham Young University where he was recruited by the CIA. He served as a covert agent for the CIA, but he was unable to adjust to the double life. He claimed that he finally left the CIA altogether, and he asked us not to reveal his name. He seemed to be disillusioned with both the CIA and the Mormon Church.

HUGHES AND MORMONS

Although the Rockefeller Report says that the Mullen Co. had “a number of clients having no known relationship to the CIA,” it does concede that “various companies who were clients of the Mullen firm may in turn have had relationships with the CIA. . . . (Report to the President by the Commission on CIA Activities Within the United States, pp. 174, 176). In our last issue of the Messenger we stated the belief that at least three clients (continued on page 5)
In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 413, we said that “LaMar Petersen has prepared a manuscript entitled Hearts Made Glad. When this manuscript is published it will throw a great deal of light on the Word of Wisdom and Joseph Smith’s attitude towards it.” We are now happy to announce that Mr. Petersen’s book has been printed and is available at Modern Microfilm Company.

The “Word of Wisdom” is a revelation which was given to Joseph Smith on February 27, 1833 (see Doctrines and Covenants, Sec. 89). It forbids the use of hot drinks (tea and coffee), strong drinks and tobacco.

The Word of Wisdom is considered to be one of the most important revelations in the Mormon Church. A Mormon who continues to break the Word of Wisdom is considered to be weak in the faith. Breaking the Word of Wisdom is considered a sin which can bar a person from the Temple. In order to get a Temple Recommend a person is required to answer this question: “4. Do you keep the Word of Wisdom?” (Temple Recommend Book).

Joseph Fielding Smith, tenth President of the Mormon Church, claimed that the habit of drinking tea can “bar” a person from the “celestial Kingdom of God” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 16).

The Mormon writer John J. Stewart claims that the Prophet Joseph Smith “carefully observed the Word of Wisdom, and insisted upon its observance by other men in high Church positions, . . .” (Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet, page 90).

Although most members of the Church feel that Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon religion, “carefully observed the Word of Wisdom,” research reveals just the opposite. In fact, Joseph Smith, the man who introduced the Temple Ceremony into the Mormon Church, would not be able to go through the Temple if he were living today because of his frequent use of alcoholic beverages.

On page 92 of his book Sounding Brass, Dr. Hugh Nibley asks where the evidence is that Joseph Smith drank. We would answer Dr. Nibley by saying that this evidence is found throughout Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. Under the date of May 2, 1843, the following statement is recorded in his history:

Wednesday, 3.—Called at the office and drank a glass of wine with Sister Jenetta Richards, made by her mother in England, and reviewed a portion of the conference minutes. (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 380)

The title for LaMar Petersen’s new book Hearts Made Glad seems to come from some references recorded in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church for January, 1836:

We then partook of some refreshments, and our hearts were made glad with the fruit of the vine. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 369)

Elders Orson Hyde, Luke S. Johnson, and Warren Parrish, then presented the Presidency with three servers of glasses filled with wine to bless. And it fell to my lot to attend to this duty, which I cheerfully discharges. It was then passed round in order, then the cake in the same order; and suffice it to say, our hearts were made glad while partaking of the bounty of earth which was presented, until we had taken our fill, . . . (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 378)

Joseph Smith continued to disobey the Word of Wisdom until the day of his death. The History of the Church records that just before his murder in the Carthage jail, Joseph Smith gave the guards money to buy a “bottle of wine.” When the bottle arrived, “Dr. Richards uncorked the bottle, and presented a glass to Joseph, who tasted, as also brother Taylor and the doctor, and the bottle was then given to the guard, who turned to go out” (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 616).

Joseph Smith’s History of the Church certainly provides evidence that he continually broke the Word of Wisdom. Although a number of references concerning Smith’s disregard for the Word of Wisdom have remained uncensored, the Mormon leaders have made three important changes in Joseph Smith’s History of the Church (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pp. 6-8). In one instance, Joseph Smith asked “Brother Markam” to get “a pipe and some tobacco” for the Apostle Willard Richards. These words have been replaced with the word “medicine” in recent editions of the History of the Church. At another time Joseph Smith related that he gave some of the brethren “a couple of dollars, with directions to replenish” their supply of “whisky.” In modern editions of the History of the Church, twenty-three words have been deleted from this reference to cover up the fact Joseph Smith encouraged the “brethren” to disobey the Word of Wisdom. In the third instance, Joseph Smith frankly admitted that he had “drank a glass of beer at Moessers.” These words have been omitted in recent editions of the History.

LaMar Petersen adds some interesting background to the change concerning the “glass of beer at Moessers”:

On another day he [Joseph Smith] recommended that Jacob Zundall and Frederick Moosere, who were known to drink ale, wine, and other spirits, be called on missions to Germany. Brother Moeser was held responsible for the disturbance of a crowd in front of his combination grogshop and grocery. A foreign mission would strengthen his testimony. But before departing he was fined $3 for breach of the temperance ordinance.

With the above facts in mind some may find it puzzling that Joseph was not shy about recording: “At one p.m. I rode out with Dr. Richards and O. P. Rockwell . . . drank a glass of beer at Mooser’s.” This entry of June 1, 1844 was altered by prudent historians when reprinting the history, the phrase “drank a glass of beer at Moeser’s” being deleted. (Hearts Made Glad, page 187)

On page 165-166 of Hearts Made Glad, Mr. Petersen gives this interesting information:

To his varied roles of restorationist, revelator, seer, prophet, translator, elder, high priest, apostle, president, editor, Bible redactor, temple-builder, and the more mundane roles of land-agent, merchant, and banker, Joseph now added innkeeper, lieutenant-general, Mason, judge, mayor, candidate for President of the United States, and husband of more than two score wives. Did such a man have time to drink? The sophisticate might well ask: Under the weight of such unlikely banners how could he desist?

But the larger question persists: Was Joseph’s conduct exemplary? Being so constantly exposed before his people how could he have fooled them? Apostle Amasa Lyman thought perhaps not all were fooled. He told fellow-Apostle Abraham H. Cannon: “Joseph Smith tried the faith of the Saints many times by his peculiarities. At one time, he had preached a powerful sermon on the Word of Wisdom, and immediately there after, he rode through the streets of Nauvoo smoking a cigar. Some of the brethren were tried as was Abraham of old.”

After presenting overwhelming evidence that Joseph Smith drank “strong drinks” in violation of his Word of Wisdom, Mr. Petersen goes on to deal with the question of whether he drank to excess. On pages 205-207 we find the following:

William [Law], Joseph’s counselor in the First Presidency from 1841 to 1844, broke with his leader in opposition to polygamy . . . Dr. Wyl obtained this succinct statement from Law . . . in 1887: “I only saw him drunk once. I found Joseph and Hyrum at a place where they kept quantities of wine . . . I remember that Joseph drank heavily, and that I talked to Hyrum, begging him to take his brother away, but that was the only time I saw the prophet drunk.” . . .

Joseph’s associates sometimes spoke of his paleness when “in vision” or when receiving a revelation. A daughter of Adaline Knight Belnap recorded her mother’s impression of the Prophet in an instance of spiritual (spirituous?) passivity. “How well she remembers one day before her father died (Vinson Knight) of a little excitement in school. The children were busy when the school room door was carefully opened and two gentlemen entered, carrying the limp form of Joseph Smith. The children all sprang to their feet, for Brother Joseph lay helpless in their arms, his head resting on his brother’s shoulder, his face pale as death, but his eyes were open, though he seemed not to see things earthly. The teacher quieted them by telling them that Brother Joseph was in a revelation, and they were carrying him to his office above the school room.” . . .

Most critics were less charitable than Adaline and unwilling to attribute paleness to revelation.

WINE AND VISIONS

We feel that one of LaMar Petersen’s most important contributions is his work on the visions in the Kirtland Temple. He presents very strong evidence to show that wine was used to excess in the Kirtland Temple at the very time the Mormons were claiming to receive their important visions:
When he awoke from his wine, commenced to curse their enemies as righteous Noah did prophesied, and bore testimony and continued so to do until some of the and views. It was this, after the people had fasted all day, they went out and one principle was apparently so simple, and so foolish in their eyes, that a Salt Lake: “The Lord did actually reveal one principle to us there, and that meat for some of the neophyte priests. “The Entablature of Truth” [George A. jubilee, and time of rejoicing to the Saints of the Most High God.” . . . This was but a prelude to the great jubilee and time of rejoicing during the dedication week of March 27. . . Elder George A. Smith. . . arose and began to prophesy . . . Suddenly a noise was heard like the sound of a mighty rushing wind filling the Temple. The congregation simultaneously arose as though moved by an invisible power and began to prophesy and speak in tongues. . . . “And I beheld the Temple was filled with angels,” reported the Seer, “which fact I declared to the congregation.” . . . The fever and excitement mounted as the services moved toward midweek. Joseph had promised the Saints a veritable Pentecost, and by Wednesday, when attendance was restricted to the male membership of the Church, nearly five hundred Melchizedek and Aaronic priests cloathed themselves in a session that lasted throughout the night. . . Joseph recorded that “it was expedient for us to prepare bread and wine sufficient to make our hearts glad, as we should not, probably leave this house until morning.” The stewards passed round and took up a liberal contribution, and messengers were despatched for bread and wine.” . . . “The brethren began to prophesy upon each other’s heads,” continued the Prophet, “and cursings upon the enemies of Christ, who inhabited Jackson county, Missouri; . . . “The brethren continued exhorting, prophesying, and speaking in tongues until five o’clock in the morning,” the Prophet reported. . . It was a Pentecost and an endowment indeed, . . . the occurrences of this day shall be handed down upon the pages of sacred history, to all generations; as the day of Pentecost, so shall this day be numbered and celebrated as a year of jubilee, and time of rejoicing to the Saints of the Most High God.” . . . The cursing of the ungodly at the Kirtland Temple dedication was strong meat for some of the neophyte priests. “The Entablature of Truth” [George A. Smith] had something to say about it nineteen years later in the Tabernacle at Salt Lake: “The Lord did actually reveal one principle to us there, and that one principle was apparently so simple, and so foolish in their eyes, that a great many apostatized over it, because it was so contrary to their notions and views. It was this, after the people had fasted all day, they went out and got wine and bread, and blessed them, and distributed them to the multitude, that is, to the whole assembly of the brethren, and they ate and drank, and prophesied, and bore testimony and continued so to do until some of the High Council of Missouri stepped into the stand, and as righteous Noah did when he awoke from his wine, commenced to curse their enemies. . . You never felt such a shock go through any house or company in the world. . . .” Addressed, in a half a pint of wine. . . .” . . . Professor Turner, . . . wrote in 1842: “In 1836, an endowment meeting, or solemn assembly, was held in the temple, . . . The day was spent in fasting, prayer, and other ceremonial preparation . . . They first broke their fast, by eating a little light bread and drinking freely of pure wine, which they were assured would not hurt them, since it had been consecrated to the Lord. . . . A marvellous spirit of prophecy soon ensued, as might have been expected, which vended itself mainly in blessing their friends and cursing their enemies, in which latter class, the clergy of the day and the Missouri mob received their full share. An eye-witness informed the author that he never imagined that language more awful could be used in the world of despair. . . For several days, and even for weeks, they went from house to house, feasting and prophesying, blessing and cursing, as the occasion might require, until the ‘triumphs of faith’ were fully achieved, . . . others thought it the spirit of delusion, darkness, and error.” . . . Two former high-ranking Churchmen, Benjamin Winchester and the contumacious Apostle, W. E. M’Lellin, offered striking details in their discourses of the Temple raptures. . . Winchester visited Utah in 1889 and gave a candid two-column report on early Church history to the Salt Lake Tribune. Regarding the Kirtland affair he was unsparing: “That ceremony ended in a drunken frolic, one of the worst I ever saw. . . Joseph Smith became beastly intoxicated, and his father and his brother Hyrum begged that the wine should be taken away, so that the carousal might be stopped as soon as possible. I did not know Joseph to be what is termed ‘a common sot,’ but that was not the last time I saw him intoxicated.” . . . Apostle M’Lellin, . . . had been numbered among the Twelve. . . His remembrance of the Temple was detailed and unvarnished: “About five hundred ministers entered the great temple about sunrise and remained fasting until next morning sunrise, except a little bread and wine in the evening. The Twelve were required to take large servers and set glasses of wine and jamps of bread and go through the house and serve the brethren. . . . I did my part of the serving. During the night a purse was made up and a wagon sent to Painesville and a barrel of wine procured. . . All the latter part of the night I took care of Samuel H. Smith, perfectly unable to help himself. . . And I had others removed from the house because they were unfit to be in decent company.” . . . In a statement published in the True Latter-Day Saints’ Herald, official organ of the Reorganized L.D.S. Church M’Lellin reiterated his protest: “As to the endowment in Kirtland, I state positively, it was no endowment from God. Not only myself was not endowed, but no other man of the five hundred who was present—except it was with wine.” . . . M’Lellin’s disquisition was paralleled by David Whitmer’s. . . The longest-lived of the eleven men who testified to the sacred origin of the Book of Mormon, Whitmer remained true to his original testimony even though abandoning the faith. . . Whitmer . . . made this statement when he was eighty-one: “The great heavenly visitation . . . was a great fizzle. The elders were assembled on the appointed day, which it was promised would be a veritable day of Pentecost, but there was no visitation. No Peter, James and John, no Moses and Elias put in appearance. I was in my seat on that occasion and I know that the story sensationally circulated, and which is now on the record of the Utah Mormons as an actual happening, was nothing but a tramped-up yarn. I saw a great many of these things which I knew were not right, but I clung on in patience, trusting everything eventually would be put right.” That the appearance of Heavenly beings at the Temple may have been purely subjective is suggested not only in Whitmer’s statement but from others who, though present, did not attain that effulgence of spirit necessary for celestial sight. . . . Milo Andrus, a faithful Seventy who had been a member of the ill-starred Zion’s Camp, despaired of seeing the celestial visitors until Joseph told him to continue to fast and pray. “When we had fasted for 24 hours,” marvelled Milo, “and partaken of the Lord’s supper, namely a piece of bread as big as your double fist and a half a pint of wine in the temple, I was there and saw the Holy Ghost descend upon the heads of those present like cloven tongues of fire. I said it is enough, Father, and I will bear a faithful testimony of it while I live.” . . . In the one hundred thirty-eight years of Temple activity that followed, the charge of drunkenness was not again hurled. Complete observance of the Word of Wisdom came to be a requirement for the thousands of zealous workers in the seventeen Temples built between 1841 and 1974. Other than some allusions to wine-drinking in the Nauvoo Temple there of zealous workers in the seventeen Temples built between 1841 and 1974. Other than some allusions to wine-drinking in the Nauvoo Temple there seems to be no reference to intoxication in the score of exposes of Temple procedure that came from the pens of Saints and Apostates willing to break the vows of secrecy. (Hearts Made Glad, pp. 121-127, 133-141) The reader will find more on the subject of drinking in the Kirtland Temple in Chapter IV of Hearts Made Glad. On pages 200-201 of the same book, Mr. Petersen gives this information about the Nauvoo Temple: Wine and dancing parties were not all confined to the Masonic Hall; at Nauvoo some were held in the nearly completed Temple. A week before the dedication on April 23, 1846 Samuel Richards, another faithful diarist, noted that after the carpenters swept up their shavings “It was voted that Bro. Angel go and inform the Trustees that the hands were ready to drink the Barrell of Wine which had been reserved for them.” The painters continued their work until the evening of April 29, when a group of the workers and their wives met in the attic and “had a feast of cakes, pies, wine &c, where we enjoyed our[ ] selves with prayer, preaching, administering for healing, blessing children, and music and Dancing until near Midnight. The other hands completed the painting in the lower room.”

Elder Mosiah Hancock wrote in his journal: “After the death of the Prophet, the mob spent their fury on the Twelve and a few others. The Brethren pushed the work on the Temple... Although I was very young [Mosiah was twelve at the time] I was on guard many a night, and gladly did I hail with many of the Saints, the completion of the Temple. On about January 10, 1846, I was privileged to go in the Temple and receive my Washings and Anointings. I was sealed to a lovely young girl named Mary, who was about my age; but it was with the understanding that we were not to live together as man and wife until we were sixteen years of age. The reason that some were sealed so young was because we knew that we would have to go West and wait many a long time for another Temple. My mother had a little son that we called Leivson. There was a man who would get drunk in the Temple; and once when mother was giving endowments to the women, a voice said to her, “Go to your baby.” She went and found that drunkard lying on her child. She grabbed the fellow up and threw him on the floor by main strength, although his weight was about 240 pounds. The baby did not live long.” (Hearts Made Glad, pp. 200-201)

In Hearts Made Glad, LaMar Petersen presents a great deal of revealing information concerning Joseph Smith’s “barroom” sale of “spirituous liquors” and the question of his own excessive use of alcoholic beverages. Mr. Petersen has a very scholarly and honest way of dealing with his materials. We have a great deal of respect for him, and we must admit that his constant help and encouragement have had much to do with the success of Modern Microfilm Co. The research he has done has had a real effect upon our lives and upon our work. Mr. Petersen’s earlier booklet, Problems in Mormon Text, is certainly one of the best works on the subject of Mormonism. In a letter dated February 24, 1958, John Blackmore, who was General Church Historian of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, made this comment: “I thank you for the two books Problems in Mormon Text. I find that the contents of your book and the interpretations of the text, demand a re-evaluation of the incidents of our religious theories and practices.”

We feel that all those who are interested in Mormon history should have a copy of LaMar Petersen’s new book Hearts Made Glad. This paperback book has 258 pages and is beautifully printed and illustrated. The normal price for Hearts Made Glad will be $7.50, but if it is ordered before June 30, 1976, the price will be only $6.95.

MORMONS, HUGHES & CIA—continued from page 2 of the Mullen Company had some involvement with the CIA. (We feel that this list can be increased to six, and we have deep suspicions about some of the other clients.) Two clients which we mentioned in the last issue were the Mormon Church and Howard Hughes. The relationship between these two clients is a story in itself, but when we add the involvement of the CIA it becomes even more intriguing.

Robert Bennett, the Mormon who bought the Mullen Company, is the same man who brought the Hughes account to that firm. On page 176 of the Rockefeller Report we read: “Bennett brought Hughes Tool Company (now Summa Corporation) as a client to Mullen... Later in 1971, he introduced Hunt to representatives of Hughes...”

After the Watergate break-in was discovered, Robert Bennett found himself faced with the possibility that his activities would bring embarrassment to both the Mormon Church and the CIA. Therefore, he did his best to cover-up the relationship between his company and the CIA and the fact that a Brigham Young University student had been involved with Howard Hunt in his conspiracy to bug the Democrats (see Salt Lake City Messenger, January 1975). Bennett’s cover-up proved unsuccessful and the Mullen Company was brought to ruin. It is interesting to note, however, that Robert Bennett is now working for Hughes:

Robert Bennett . . . said that the Mullen Company went out of business last June and three months later he moved to California to become director of pr for the Sum[ma] Corp., wholly owned by Howard Hughes, to handle his corporate activities. (Advertising Age, February 3, 1975, page 1)

We first began to suspect Hughes’ relationship with the CIA when we read the following statement in Senator Baker’s Report:

CIA records indicate that Agency consideration was given to utilizing Mullen’s Hughes relationship for a matter relating to a cover arrangement in [South America], and to garner information on Robert Maheu. (“The Baker Report,” page 8)

The depth of Hughes’ involvement with the CIA really began to come to light sometime after a burglary was reported at the Hughes’ headquarters. As the story unfolded it became apparent that the recovery of a Russian submarine was involved:

The Times early last month was the first to report that the CIA, using a revolutionary ocean mining craft purportedly owned by Howard Hughes, had recovered a Russian submarine. . . .

The CIA obtained Hughes’ permission to use the billionaire’s ongoing ocean mining venture as a front to cloak the true nature of the operation. (Salt Lake Tribune, March 19, 1975)

Howard Hughes has had two objectives which are of particular interest to us here: First, to establish a relationship with the CIA. Second, to staff his organization with a large number of Mormons. Mr. Hughes seems to have succeeded very well in both areas.

Noah Dietrich, the man who “took control of Hughes Tool and who guided the destiny of the entire empire for over thirty years,” has written the following:

The early years of the 7000 Romaine message center brought the Advent of the Mormons.

“I think Mormons as a whole have the most integrity of any group of people in the country,” Howard told me. “They take care of their own people, and they won’t accept help from charity or the government. And I like the idea that they don’t drink liquor. You can trust them.”

Howard began staffing the message center and the fleet of Chevrolets exclusively with Mormons. (Howard: The Amazing Mr. Hughes, page 218)

SO-CALLED “MORMON MAFIA”

Some of Hughes’ closest aides are sometimes referred to as the “Mormon Mafia.” In his secret executive session testimony before the Senate Watergate Committee, page 68, Howard Hunt spoke of the “Mormon Mafia.” In an article published in Time on Jan. 24, 1972, we read of “the ‘Mormon Mafia’”—the secretary-nurse-assistants who attend Hughes round the clock . . . .” Wallace Turner give the following information concerning the so-called “Mormon Mafia”:

The guys you have to talk to are the five who live with him and are the only ones who ever see him. You might as well have a chat with the Sphinx. These guys are hired and paid by Frank W. (Bill) Gay, who was a young Mormon student at U.C.L.A. when Hughes hired him... It was Gay who built up the security capsule that still surrounds Hughes... .

Hughes is supposed to prefer Mormon employees in key spots in his security network because they don’t drink or smoke. Further, their religion includes strong drives for submission to authority. Besides, Bill Gay, a Mormon likes to hire Mormons. . . . Three of the five executive assistants are Mormons and a fourth is married to a Mormon. . . . Only the insiders knew all five of these men, who shuttled mysteriously around Las Vegas for four years. . . . One, Howard Eckersley, commuted from Salt Lake City where he kept his family. Before the big flight, their names were known only to a handful. Now Eckersley and Myler have been photographed and their pictures are in the files of every major news agency in the world. They are both Mormons. So is George Francom. Roy Crawford is Presbyterian, married to a Mormon. John Holmes is a Catholic. . . . I wondered how these fellows could serve a demanding boss like Hughes and still find time for the work load of being a Mormon Church official. Myler and I talked about it and he said it took a lot of doing. (Esquire, July, 1971, pp. 65, 67 and 73)

In his book The Real Howard Hughes Story, Stanton O’Keefe gives this interesting information:

Hughes remained isolated on the ninth floor of the Desert Inn throughout everything that went on. The only members of his staff with whom he had personal face-to-face contact were the five secretary-nurses of his so-called “Mormon Mafia.”

They tended to all his needs and maintained the sophisticated communications center. Although Hughes obviously watched television and read newspapers to keep abreast of developments, the “Mormon Mafia” were literally his only real contact with the outside world. (The Real Howard Hughes Story, page 189)
The headquarters, message center and general command post of Hughes' spy network and secret empire is an unimposing two-story beige stucco building in downtown Los Angeles. . . .

The Romaine Street headquarters is a nerve center of the finest and most sophisticated electronic equipment available in the espionage field. Various warning devices can spot any attempt to intrude anywhere in the building. . . .

The selection of employees to work in the building involves more screening and investigation that [than?] the CIA uses in selecting its agents. . . .

An asphalt parking lot on one side of the building is Stafford by expressionless young Mormon men. There are noticeable bulges under the arms of their jackets. . . .

Like his own living quarters, the Romaine Street building is staffed primarily by Mormons. (Ibid., pp. 205-207)

Stanton O'Keefe goes on to state that “All of the members of the ‘Mormon Mafia’ were hired and paid by Frank W. Gay, the Hughes Tool executive. . . .” (Ibid., page 209). Fortune Magazine for Dec. 1973, page 175, gives this information: “Since the sale of Toolco, Summa has been run by Frank W. Gay, a long-time Hughes aide, who operates out of an office in Los Angeles.” The Washington Post for April 1, 1975, carried this information:

Summa Corp. is the financial umbrella under which most of Hughes’ worth is contained. . . .

Most recently, another Summa “asset” hit the news: the $350 million Glimar Explorer vessel that Hughes built at the behest (and the expense of) the Central Intelligence Agency . . .

Nearly all of Hughes’ holdings are under the Summa Corp. umbrella. . . . Its board of directors (Hughes is not a member) consists of Frank W. (Bill) Gay, . . . Chestor Davis, . . . Nadine Henley and Lester Mylar, two of Hughes personal assistants who remain with him and who are among the few individuals who see him face to face.

The Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University has honored Frank W. Gay for “distinguished service to the University” and to his fellowmen (see Brigham Young University Today, October 1974, page 16). On March 19, 1975, the BYU paper Daily Universe reported:

A native Provoan who works in top positions in the Howard Hughes organization will speak on campus Thursday.

Frank William Gay, executive vice president and chief executive officer, director and chairman of the executive committee of the Summa Corp., will be the guest speaker at the Executive Lecture Series, . . .

An active Latter-day Saint, Gay has served as a stake high councilman, member of the General Sunday School Board, and officer, director and chairman of the executive committee of the Summa Corp. . . , is presently on the board of directors and vice-chairman of the executive committee of the Polynesian Cultural Center in Hawaii. . . . he serves on the BYU National Advisory Council and its executive committee associated with the College of Business. (Daily Universe, March 19, 1975)

The reader will notice that Mr. Gay is “on the board of directors and vice-chairman of the executive committee of the Polynesian Cultural Center in Hawaii.” This is very interesting because the Salt Lake Tribune for November 15, 1970, states that the Mormon Church’s “Zions Security Corp. . . . is owner and manager of the Village of Laie in Hawaii, . . . and the Polynesian Cultural Center.”

Kay Glenn, whom Time Magazine for January 24, 1972, identified as one of the “Mormon Mafia,” now serves as “a vice president of the Summa Corp.” (Salt Lake Tribune, April 4, 1975). According to the New York Times for March 27, 1975, it was Mr. Glenn who had custody of the memo which told of the CIA’s involvement in the Glimar Explorer project.

IS HUGHES DEAD?

It is a well-known fact that Howard Hughes obtained a large interest in the gambling industry in Nevada. Robert Maheu, who has acknowledged being part of a CIA-Mafia plot to assassinate Castro, became Chief Executive of Hughes Nevada operations. Although Maheu rose to great power in the gambling industry in Nevada. Robert Maheu, who has acknowledged, April 4, 1975). According to the New York Times, Salt Lake Tribune.

Corp. . . . is owner and manager of the Village of Laie in Hawaii, . . . and for November 15, 1970, states that the Mormon Church’s “Zions Security Center in Hawaii.” This is very interesting because the

The contention that the billionaire is dead was denied by Hughes spokesman Richard Hanna in Los Angeles. . . .

“The man—as far as we know—has no children. We don’t even know if there is a will,” Bader said. “Nobody has seen him for 10 years or more. Unless it can be proved otherwise, he is either dead or incompetent and the burden of proof must rest with Mr. Hughes or those acting in his behalf.”

On September 5, 1975, the Tribune printed the following: “A State Supreme Court justice has signed an order requiring billionaire Howard R. Hughes to appear personally in court or face the prospect of being declared legally dead.” On September 18 the Tribune reported that “billionaire recluse Howard Hughes did not show up in court Wednesday to prove he is still alive.” Finally, on September 20 the following appeared in the Tribune:

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge on Friday dismissed as “an exercise in futility” a suit calling upon billionaire recluse Howard Hughes to prove he is alive or be declared legally dead.

Now that the close ties between Howard Hughes and the CIA have been revealed, there will probably be even more speculation that he is “either dead or incompetent” and that his empire has fallen into the hands of the “Mormon Mafia” or the CIA.

We have almost completed our new book, Mormon Spies, Hughes and the CIA. In this book we will deal extensively with such subjects as: the Mullen Company and the Watergate break-in, the BYU spying operations, the prostitution conspiracy and the Church, wiretapping and bugging, Mullen and the Mormons, Mormons and the CIA, Robert Bennett’s involvement with Hunt, Hunt’s BYU spy, Bennett’s cover-up, Mormons and Hughes, assassination plots, Intertel, Interprogres, the possible existence of the secret Council of 50 in the Church, Bennett’s dummy milk committees, and many other important subjects.

We are now taking orders for Mormon Spies, Hughes and the CIA. It should be ready sometime around the first of April. Price: $2.95.
NIBLEY FAILS TO SAVE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

In our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Chapter 22, we show that the original papyrus from which Joseph Smith “translated” the Book of Abraham was rediscovered in 1967 in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Egyptologists translated this papyrus and found that it was an Egyptian funerary text known as the “Book of Breathings.” This is a pagan text which has absolutely nothing to do with Abraham or his religion.

Since the Mormon Church is supposed to be led by a “Prophet, Seer, and Revelator,” we might have expected the President of the Church to make a translation of the rediscovered Joseph Smith Papyri. Instead, however, the papyri were turned over to Dr. Hugh Nibley of the Church’s Brigham Young University to be translated by “the wisdom of the world.” The Mormon writer Jay M. Todd stated:

One major remaining issue remains still undiscussed in this background study, and that is the meaning of the papyri themselves. . . . The import and the significance of the papyri recently rediscovered will be told Latter-day Saints by Dr. Hugh Nibley, to whom the First Presidency has given the assignment. Surely his mind and hand will be blessed, and his report will be one of immense interest and significance to members of the Church. (The Saga of the Book of Abraham, pages 387-388)

Dr. Nibley wrote a series of articles which lasted for over two years in the Improvement Era—from January 1968 to May 1970. Although he used almost 2,000 footnotes, he never did translate the papyri. In the Salt Lake Tribune for November 11, 1973 we criticized Dr. Nibley for not producing a translation of the papyri. He replied that he had prepared a book which was 800 pages long: “It is all about the ‘Book of Breathings’ and is 800 pages long, but that is not enough to account for keeping the impatient Tanners waiting for six years. What took up all that time was having to find out about a lot of things” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 25, 1973). This book, which many people believed would answer the objections of the critics and save the Book of Abraham, was finally published by the Church’s Deseret Book Co. in 1975. Dr. Nibley’s book, The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment, will certainly prove to be a disappointment for those who hoped he could save the Book of Abraham.

Although the First Presidency of the Church assigned Dr. Nibley to work on the papyri, they seem unwilling to give his work any real official endorsement. When John L. Smith asked about Dr. Nibley’s new book, Francis M. Gibbs, Secretary to the First Presidency, replied:

Answering your letter dated August 19, 1975, the writings of Dr. Hugh Nibley concerning the papyri scrolls have been done entirely on his own responsibility and do not have the official approval and sanction of the Church. The brethren appreciate your interest and asked me to extend to you your best wishes.

At any rate, the reader may order Dr. Nibley’s new book from the Deseret Book Store, 60 East South Temple, Salt Lake City, Utah. Although this book is nicely printed and bound, the contents are very disappointing. Of the eleven fragments of papyri which were discovered, ten of them contain significant Egyptian messages which can be translated. We would expect that any book about the papyri would at least have a translation of all ten pieces. Dr. Nibley’s book, however, only contains a translation of two fragments! Dr. Nibley has now had photographs of the papyri for almost ten years, and yet he has only provided a translation of two fragments. Among the fragments which Dr. Nibley has not translated is the original of Fac. No. 1 in the Book of Abraham. This fragment contains a number of lines of hieroglyphics which tell what the drawing is about. The reason Dr. Nibley has not translated these lines is obvious: they show that Fac. No. 1 is not a picture of “Abraham fastened upon an altar” as Joseph Smith proclaimed, but rather a picture of an Egyptian by the name of Hor being prepared for burial (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 347).

Those of us who have purchased Dr. Nibley’s writings in the Improvement Era, the BYU Studies and now his new book have spent at least $30.00. What do we have to show for this investment? We have hundreds of pages of material with thousands of footnotes, but we have a translation of only two of the fragments of papyri and no answer to the main problems about the Book of Abraham.

After the Joseph Smith Papyri were first located it was pointed out that the papyrus labeled “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated)” contained the very Egyptian characters which Joseph Smith “translated” into the Book of Abraham. In a speech given at the University of Utah on May 20, 1968, Dr. Nibley admitted that it was a “definite fact that, one of the fragments seemed to supply all of the symbols for the Book of Abraham. This is the little ‘Sensen’ scroll. Here are the symbols. The symbols are arranged here, and the interpretation goes along here and this interpretation turns out to be the Book of Abraham” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 314).

At first Dr. Nibley toyed with the idea that the papyrus might have a second or hidden message. Now, he apparently believes that this idea cannot be successfully maintained and has decided to take the position that Papyrus XI was not the source Book of Abraham. He states:

Is the Book of Abraham a correct translation of Joseph Smith Papyri X and XI? No, the Book of Breathings is not the Book of Abraham! . . .

Doesn’t the text of the Book of Abraham appear in a number of manuscripts in columns running parallel with characters from the Book of Breathings? Yes, the brethren at Kirtland were invited to try their skill at translation; in 1835 the Prophet’s associates, miffed by his superior knowledge and determined to show him up, made determined efforts to match up the finished text of the Book of Abraham with characters from the J.S. Papyrus No. XI. . . .

Whatever exercises, discreet or indiscreet, the brethren in Kirtland may have engaged in, the Prophet Joseph himself has supplied us with the most conclusive evidence that the manuscript today identified as the Book of Breathings, J.S. Papyri X and XI, was not in his opinion the source of the Book of Abraham. For he has furnished a clear and specific description of the latter: “The record of Abraham and Joseph, found with the mummies, is (1) beautifully written on papyrus, with black, and (2) a small part red, ink or paint, (3) in perfect preservation.” (The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri, page 2)

Dr. Nibley says that Papyrus XI could not be the source of the Book of Abraham because he feels it is not as beautifully written or well preserved as the other fragments of papyri and does not contain writing in red ink. Now, besides making the baseless assumption that Joseph Smith allowed his scribes to add the wrong Egyptian characters to the original translation manuscripts, Dr. Nibley does not seem to understand that the statement he cites from Joseph Smith’s History about “The record of Abraham and Joseph” is a statement about Joseph Smith’s Papyri collection in general, not just the one roll which Joseph Smith called the Book of Abraham. This is made very clear in another entry in Joseph Smith’s History:

On the 3rd of July, Michael H. Chandler came to Kirtland to exhibit some Egyptian mummies. There were four human figures, together with some two or more rolls of papyri . . . some of the Saints at Kirtland purchased the mummies and papyrus, . . . I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt, etc., . . . (History of the Church, vol. 2, pp. 235-236)

Now, when we understand that Joseph Smith believed the Book of Abraham was written on a different roll of papyrus than the Book of Joseph, it becomes clear that he was referring to the collection of papyri in general and not specifically to the Book of Abraham. That Joseph Smith did in fact choose the papyrus identified as the Book of Breathings as the source for his Book of Abraham is established by irreparable evidence. To begin with, Joseph Smith used the drawing at the beginning of the Book of Breathings roll as Facsimile No. 1 for his Book of Abraham. It does not contain red ink and the workmanship appears to be no better or well-preserved than that found on Papyrus XI. This in itself would completely destroy Dr. Nibley’s argument, but the evidence becomes even stronger as we look into the matter. The writing in the columns to the side of the fragment used for Fac. No. 1, which Dr. Nibley does not dare to translate, mentions that the papyrus was made for Hor, and this is the same name mentioned in the Book of Breathings text which follows on Papyrus XI. Second, even Dr. Nibley has to admit that before the papyrus was cut Papyrus XI followed immediately after Fac. No. 1 on the roll: “It can be easily shown by matching up the cut edges and fibers of the papyri that the text of the Joseph Smith ‘Breathing’ Papyrus
(No. XI) was written on the same strip of material as Facsimile No. 1 and immediately adjoining it” (The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri, page 13). On page 3 of the same book Dr. Nibley has to admit that even Joseph Smith’s own scribes felt that the text of the Book of Abraham followed right after Fac. No. 1: “Since this is an illustration to the Book of Abraham, it has naturally been assumed that the text that follows the drawing could only be that of Abraham—even the brethren at Kirtland assumed that.”

The strongest evidence that Joseph Smith believed that Papyrus XI was the Book of Abraham is found in the fact that the characters from this fragment were used in the translation manuscripts. Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that this was only the work of his scribes is absolutely preposterous. That Joseph Smith would allow his scribes to copy the characters from the wrong papyrus into three different manuscripts of the Book of Abraham is really beyond belief. A person might almost as reasonably conclude that the Book of Abraham itself was made up by Joseph Smith’s scribes.

All evidence, then, points to the unmistakable conclusion that Joseph Smith believed that Papyrus No. XI was the Book of Abraham. This papyrus has been translated by qualified Egyptologists and found to be nothing but the Book of Breathings—a pagan text. Even Dr. Nibley has to admit that Papyrus XI contains “the directions for wrapping up the Joseph Smith papyri with the mummy. . . .” (Ibid., page 6). Fortunately, Dr. Nibley has included a translation of this fragment in his new book. His work agrees in substance with the translations we have published in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 317. In fact, Dr. Nibley includes the names of many pagan gods in his translation of the Book of Breathings. Dr. Nibley cannot find anything about Abraham in this text, but to soften the disappointment he tries to relate it to the Mormon temple ceremony. Why he would want to equate the Egyptian religion with Mormonism is really a mystery to us. The Egyptian religion is so filled with magic and other pagan practices.

At any rate, Dr. Nibley’s book contains some very serious errors. We may find time to point these out in the future, but in the meantime, Michael Marquardt has prepared a good rebuttal entitled, The Book of Abraham Papyrus Found: An Answer to Dr. Hugh Nibley’s Book The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment. The Mormon Egyptologist Dee Jay Nelson made these comments in an Introduction to Mr. Marquardt’s new work:

In this book Mr. Marquardt’s research has been meticulous and the evidence of his contention infallibly documented. . . . The original ancient Egyptian papyrus from which Joseph Smith claimed to have “translated” the Book of Abraham in the The Pearl of Great Price, has been found and is now in the possession of the Latter-day Saint Church. From my own translation of the hieratic text, substantiated by the translations of other responsible Egyptologists, the fraudulent nature of the Book of Abraham is obvious. . . . Dr. Hugh Nibley, . . . has recently published a book . . . in which he denies that the Hor Sensen Papyrus is the original from which Smith made his so-called translation. The L.D.S. Church has in its possession three separate “translations” written by two of Smith’s scribes, at his dictation, which prove that these are the documents Smith used. Mr. Marquardt effectively proves the reality of this fact.

Mr. Marquardt’s new book, The Book of Abraham Papyrus Found, is available from Modern Microfilm Co. for $2.00 per copy.

15,000 BOOKS MET WITH SILENCE

In the last issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we announced that we had sold over 10,000 copies of our major work Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? We are now happy to report that almost 15,000 copies have been sold. Mormon leaders seem to feel that it is best to ignore this book. This silent treatment, however, has proved to be completely ineffective and our sales have continued to increase at a rapid rate. As a result many people are leaving the Mormon Church, and many others are beginning to wonder if the Church has any answers to the serious charges contained in this book.

One woman wrote us the following:

I am a convert to the LDS Church, joining when I was 19 years old . . . My husband joined the church a year later, in 1961. I have been a member of the Church now for 15 years and I am presently a visiting teacher and Primary secretary.

Over those 15 years I have had to admit to a lot of unhappiness and lack of fulfillment. There were, of course, weeks at a time when I felt close to the Lord and got a lot out of Church; but for the most part I have to admit to a growing restlessness and a feeling of frustration.

In 1966 . . . we were sealed in the Oakland temple, along with our three daughters. I was disappointed in the temple ceremonies and left with a throbbing headache, several hours later. I have been to the temple four or five times since then.

One year ago a couple moved next door to us, . . . She was very religious and as we talked I expressed to her my prayer failure and general frustration at not being able to have the real power of the New Testament church in my life. And, yet I knew that I had the true church. This led to more frustration and confusion.

I went a few times with her to her church, . . . I loved their worship and saw how much they really did love the Lord.

Sitting in our own meetings, especially Sacrament Meeting, hearing talks of food storage, travels, etc., but never hardly hearing the word of God preached made me feel even worse. My neighbors had gone . . . for five months on a job . . .

Then, our neighbors returned . . . Again, I saw the glow in her face and wished that I could have what she had. Why did she have such happiness, and extraordinary answers to her prayers, etc. Here I had the true Gospel of Jesus Christ and she didn’t and she was getting all the blessings. I felt cold and dead inside.

I started going with her to her serv[i]ce[s] again once in a while. It was then that I really got desperate. I wanted to be happy so badly. I prayed to God that he would reveal the truth to me, reveal his will, in a manner that I could not mistake. I didn’t care how much it cost me or where the chips fell. I just wanted to be on His side, no matter what . . .

Nothing particular happened for about a week. I kept telling myself that I wasn’t going to worry about it because the Lord would take care of my problem. I kept telling myself that I had to learn to “wait patiently on the Lord.” Well, then my neighbor borrowed your book, “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?” from a friend of hers in her church, and I saw it laying on her bedroom bureau. She was embarrassed and said she wasn’t trying to offend me but just wanted to find out more about my religion. I told her she wasn’t going to find out much reading anti-Mormon books.

But, I did agree that I would be happy to discuss any of our religious doctrine with her husband. I knew I could ably defend my religion as I was well versed in it. I wasn’t worried at all. I decided to debate on a particular subject and started doing research. Then I decided I’d better know what the opposition was so I borrowed the book from her.

Well, I spent almost three days and nights reading. The adjectives used in the back of your book such as “devastating” and “utterly crushed” were so true!! My husband and I spent days discussing what the book had brought to light, at first not believing, then not wanting to believe. Could it be possible that what we had been deceived? Could it be true? I asked the Lord to confirm that this was, in fact, an answer to my prayer. . . . Within an hour, I received an unmistakable confirmation from a completely different source. I was scared and yet happy . . .

We are now in the position of having to face reality, but not knowing exactly what to do about it. I have resigned as Primary Secretary and both of us have thrown our garments away. . . . We know in our heart that what you have written is true.

1, of course, checked in all the books which we have in our home, on the correctness of your quotations. They were all correct. . . .

In the preface of your book, you quote a letter received from a member of the Church in Arizona dated July 28, 1965. He states that your book . . . would do more harm to the church than any other volume published in the last 50 to 75 years and that it could tear the church apart. We have to agree. We have read anti-Mormon books before without it having any effect on us. They were written by non-Mormons who obviously didn’t have anything going for them but opinions and statements from people who were enemies to the LDS church in its early history. Big deal! But . . . your book condemns the church by using our own history and statements from our own presidents . . . It is truly a startling revelation!

Please write and help us. We need to share with someone who’s been there. We know we must go and ask the Bishop to remove our names from the Chur[ch] rolls. And, our children are with us in that thinking. . . . (Letter dated October 29, 1975)

Blacks Receive LDS Priesthood

Pressure Forces Mormon President to Issue New “Revelation”

Bruce R. McConkie, who now serves as an Apostle in the Mormon Church, made these remarks concerning blacks in his book Mormon Doctrine:

Negroes in this life are denied the Priesthood; under no circumstances can they hold this delegation of authority from the Almighty. (Abra. 1:20-27.) The gospel message of salvation is not carried affirmatively to them . . . negroes are not equal with other races where the receipt of certain spiritual blessings are concerned, particularly the priesthood and the temple blessings that flow therefrom, but this inequality is not of man’s origin. It is the Lord’s doing, is based on his eternal laws of justice, and grows out of the lack of Spiritual valiance of those concerned in their first estate. (Mormon Doctrine, 1966, pages 527-528)

However, in a broad general sense, caste systems have their root and origin in the gospel itself, and when they operate according to the divine decree, the resultant restrictions and segregation are right and proper and have the approval of the Lord. To illustrate: Cain, Ham, and the whole negro race have been cursed with a black skin, the mark of Cain, so they can be identified as a caste apart, a people with whom the other descendants of Adam should not intermarry. (Ibid., page 114)

Because of these teachings the Los Angeles Times for August 27, 1967, referred to the Mormon Church as “one of the few uncracked fortresses of discrimination.” For eleven more years the Latter-day Saints continued to cling to a policy of discrimination. Church leaders claimed that the doctrine could only be changed by revelation from God. Finally, on June 9, 1978, the Mormon Church’s Deseret News carried a startling announcement by the First Presidency which said that a new revelation had been given and that blacks would be allowed to hold the priesthood:

. . . we have pleaded long and earnestly in behalf of these, our faithful brethren, spending many hours in the upper room of the Temple supplicating the Lord for divine guidance.

He has heard our prayers, and by revelation has confirmed that the long-promised day has come when every faithful, worthy man in the church may receive the holy priesthood, with power to exercise its divine authority, and enjoy with his loved ones every blessing that flows therefrom, including the blessings of the temple. Accordingly, all worthy male members of the church may be ordained to the priesthood without regard for race or color. (Deseret News, June 9, 1978, page 1A)

Since we have probably printed more material critical of the Mormon anti-black doctrine than any other publisher, the new revelation comes as a great victory and a vindication of our work. We printed our first criticism of this doctrine in 1959. This was certainly not a popular cause to espouse anti-black doctrine than any other publisher, the new revelation comes as a... this vital issue it could lead to violence or bloodshed. Because we felt that it was not right to put our trust in man, we separated our selves from the Mormon Church.”

As early as 1963 we printed a sheet entitled, “Will There Be a Revelation Regarding the Negro?” At the bottom of this sheet we predicted: “If the pressure continues to increase on the Negro question, the leaders of the Mormon Church will probably have another revelation which will allow the Negro to hold the priesthood.” In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 291-292, we pointed out:

If the Mormon Church should decide to change its policy and allow Negroes to hold the priesthood, it will not be the first time that Mormon doctrine has been revised to fit a changing world.

Twenty-five years before the Mormon Church gave up the practice of polygamy they were declaring that no such change could be made. In the Millennial Star, Oct. 28, 1865, the following appeared: “We have shown that in requiring the relinquishment of polygamy, they ask the renunciation of the entire faith of this people. . . . “There is no half way house. The childish babble about another revelation is only an evidence how half informed men can talk.”

As the pressure increased against polygamy, Wilford Woodruff issued the Manifesto (now claimed to be a revelation) which suspended the practice of polygamy.

THE BRIGHAM YOUNG MISREPRESENTED

We feel that the Mormon Church’s change on the doctrine concerning blacks is a very good move because it will undoubtedly help blacks obtain equality in Utah and will probably prevent much bloodshed and trouble. Nevertheless, we must point out that Brigham Young and other leaders have been misrepresented in order to make the change palatable to the Mormon people. For instance, the Church’s Deseret News would have us believe that the change was a fulfillment of a prophecy uttered by Brigham Young, the second President of the Church:

The announcement Friday fulfilled statements made by most LDS Church presidents since Joseph Smith that blacks would one day obtain the full blessings of the church, including the priesthood.

Speaking against slavery, Brigham Young once told the Utah Legislature, “. . . . the [sic] day will come when all that race (blacks) will be redeemed and possess all the blessings which we now have.” (Deseret News, June 10, 1978, page 1A)

While it is true that Brigham Young believed that blacks would eventually receive the priesthood, he made it clear that this was not to happen until after the resurrection. The context of the speech which the Deseret News cites reveals that Brigham Young believed it would be a sin for the Church to give blacks the priesthood before the “last of the posterity of Able” had received it. He went on to say that if the Church gave “all the blessings of God” to the blacks prematurely, the priesthood would be taken away and the Church would go to destruction. This address is preserved in the Church Historical Department. Michael Marquardt has provided a typed copy which retains the spelling errors of the original. We extract the following from Brigham Young’s speech:

What is that mark? you will see it on the countenance of every African you ever did see upon the face of the earth. . . . the Lord told Cain that he should not receive the blessings of the priesthood nor his seed, until the last of the posterity of Able had received the priesthood, until the redemption of the earth. If there never was a prophet, or apostle of Jesus Christ spoke it before, I tell you, this people that are commonly called negroes are the children of old Cain. . . . they cannot bear rule in the priesthood, for the curse on them was to remain upon them, until the resude of the posterity of Michal and his wife receive the blessings, . . . until the times of the restitution shall come, . . . Then Cain’s seed will be had in remembrance, and the time come when that curse should be wiped off. . . .

I am as much oposed to the principle of slavery as any man in the present acception or usage of the term, it is abused. I am opposed to abusing that which God has decreed, to take a blessing, and make a curse of it. It is a great blessing to the seed of Adam to have the seed of Cain for servants. . . . Let this Church which is called the kingdom of God on the earth; we will summons the first presidency, the twelve, the high counsel, the Bishoprick, and all the elders of Israel, suppose we summons them to appear here, and here declare that it is right to mingle our seed, with the black race of Cain, that they shall come in with us, and be partakers with us of all the blessings God has given to us. On that very day, and hour we should do so, the priesthood is taken from this Church and kingdom and God leaves us to our fate. The moment we consent to mingle with the seed of Cain the Church must go to destruction,—we should receive the curse which has been placed upon the seed of Cain, and never more be numbered with the children of Adam who are heirs to the priesthood until that curse be removed. (Brigham Young Addresses, Ms d 1234, Box 48, folder 3, dated February 5, 1852, located in the LDS Church Historical Dept.)

The Mormon people are now faced with a serious dilemma; if they really believe Brigham Young was a prophet, then it follows from his statement that the Church has lost the priesthood, been put under “the curse” and is going to destruction! In spite of Brigham Young’s emphatic warning against giving blacks “all the blessings God has given us,” the present leaders have announced that blacks will now receive “all of the privileges and blessings which the gospel affords” (Deseret News, June 9, 1978).

After the First Presidency made their statement, many people became confused over the Church’s position on interracial marriage. It soon became apparent, however, that the Church’s ban on marriage to blacks had been lifted. Joseph Freeman, the first black man ordained to the priesthood after the change, indicated that he wanted to be sealed in the Temple to his wife who was not of African descent. Church spokesman Don LeFevre said that such a marriage would be possible and that although the Church did not encourage interracial marriage, there was no longer a ban on whites marrying blacks:

That is entirely possible, said Mr. LeFevre. . . . “So there is no ban on interracial marriage.

“If a black partner contemplating marriage is worthy of going to the Temple, nobody’s going to stop him—if he’s marrying a white, an Oriental . . . if he’s ready to go to the Temple, obviously he may go with the blessings of the church.” (Salt Lake Tribune, June 14, 1978)

On June 24, 1978, the Tribune announced that Joseph Freeman, 26, the first black man to gain the priesthood in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Friday went in the Salt Lake Temple with his wife and 5 sons for sacred ordinances. . . Thomas S. Monson, member of the church’s Quorum of Twelve Apostles, conducted the marriage and sealing ceremonies [sic].

In allowing temple marriages between blacks and whites, the Church is completely disregarding what President Brigham Young referred to as “the law of God”:

Shall I tell you the law of God in regard to the African race? If the white man who belongs to the chosen seed mixes his blood with the seed of Cain, the penalty, under the law of God, is death on the spot. This will always be so. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 110)

The reader will notice that Brigham Young said that this “law of God” could never be changed. In 1967 the Mormon writer John L. Lund made these comments about Brigham Young’s statement:

Brigham Young made a very strong statement on this matter when he said, “. . . . Shall I tell you the law of God in regard to the African race? If the white man who belongs to the chosen seed mixes his blood with the seed of Cain, the penalty, the law of God, is death on the spot. This will always be so.” God has commanded Israel not to intermarry. To go against this commandment of God would be to sin. Those who willfully sin with their eyes open to this wrong will not be surprised to find that they will be separated from the presence of God in the world to come. This is spiritual death. . . . It does not matter if they are one-sixth Negro or one-one hundred and sixth, the curse of no Priesthood is still the same. . . . To intermarry with a Negro is to forfeit a “Nation of Priesthood holders.” (The Church and the Negro, 1967, pages 54-55)

The Church Section of the Deseret News for June 17, 1978, says that “Former presidents of the Church have spoken of the day when the blessings of the priesthood would come to the blacks.” A quotation from a sermon by Brigham Young which appeared in the Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, is cited, but when we go to the original book we find that it has been taken out of context. In this sermon Brigham Young plainly taught that blacks could not receive the priesthood until all of Adam’s other children receive it:

Cain slew his brother . . . and the Lord put a mark upon him, which is the flat nose and black skin. . . . How long is that race to endure the dreadful curse that is upon them? That curse will remain upon them, and they never can hold the Priesthood or share in it until all the other descendants of Adam have received the promises and enjoyed the blessings of the Priesthood and the keys thereof. Until the last one of the residue of Adam’s children are brought up to that favorable position, the children of Cain cannot receive the first ordinances of the Priesthood. They were the first that were cursed, and they will be the last from whom the curse will be removed. When the residue of the family of Adam come up and receive their blessings, then the curse will be removed from the seed of Cain, and they will receive blessings in like proportion. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, pages 290-291)

Brigham Young also taught this doctrine in other published sermons:

When all the other children of Adam have had the privilege of receiving the Priesthood, and of coming into the kingdom of God, and of being redeemed from the four quarters of the earth, and have received their resurrection from the dead, then it will be time enough to remove the curse from Cain and his posterity. . . . he is the last to share the joys of the kingdom of God. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 143)

And when all the rest of the children have received their blessings in the Holy Priesthood, then that curse will be removed from the seed of Cain, and they will then come up and possess the priesthood, and receive all the blessings which we now are entitled to. (Ibid., vol. 11, page 272)

In 1949 the First Presidency of the Mormon Church issued a statement in which they cited Brigham Young’s teaching that blacks cannot receive the priesthood until after the resurrection:

The prophets of the Lord have made several statements. . . . President Brigham Young said: “They will go down to death. And when all the rest of the children have received their blessings in the holy priesthood, then that curse will be removed from the seed of Cain, and they will then come up and possess the priesthood, . . .” (Statement by the First Presidency, as cited in Mormonism and the Negro, by John J. Stewart and William E. Berrett, 1960, Part 2, page 16)

Joseph Fielding Smith, who served as the tenth President of the Mormon Church in the early 1970s, taught that blacks would never hold the priesthood as long as “time endures”:

Not only was Cain called upon to suffer, but because of his wickedness he became the father of an inferior race. A curse was placed upon him and that curse has been continued through his lineage and must do so while time endures. Millions of souls have come into this world cursed with a black skin and have been denied the privilege of Priesthood and the fullness of the blessings of the Gospel. . . . they have been made to feel their inferiority and have been separated from the rest of mankind from the beginning. (The Way To Perfection, 1935, page 101)

In his book Answers to Gospel Questions, vol. 2, page 188, Joseph Fielding Smith said that the bestowal of priesthood on blacks was “in the far distant future,” and in a meeting held in Barratt Hall on October 11, 1958, he commented that “the Lord will, in due time, remove the restrictions. Not in this world but the time will come, . . .” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 586).

N. Eldon Tanner, a member of the First Presidency who finally signed the statement granting blacks the Priesthood, was completely opposed to the idea in 1967:

“The church has no intention of changing its doctrine on the Negro.” N. Eldon Tanner, counselor to the First President told Seattle during his recent visit here. “Throughout the history of the original Christian church, the Negro never held the priesthood. There’s really nothing we can do to change this. It’s a law of God.” (Seattle Magazine, December 1967, page 60)

Mormon writer John L. Lund claimed that if the President of the Mormon Church gave a revelation that blacks were to hold the priesthood, members of the Church would accept it, but he emphasized that such a revelation would not be forthcoming because the “present prophets are in complete agreement with Brigham Young and other past leaders on the question of the Negro and the Priesthood”:

Brigham Young revealed that the Negroes will not receive the Priesthood until a great while after the second advent of Jesus Christ whose coming will usher in a millennium of peace.

Revelation?

In view of what President Young and others have said, it would be foolish indeed to give anyone the false idea that a new revelation is immediately forthcoming on the issue of the Negroes receiving the Priesthood. . . . our present prophets are in complete agreement with Brigham Young and other past leaders on the question of the Negro and the Priesthood. President McKay was asked by a news reporter at the dedication of the Oakland Temple, “When will the Negroes receive the Priesthood?” He responded to the question over a national television network saying, “Not in my lifetime, young man, nor yours.”

Social pressure and even government sanctions cannot be expected to bring forth a new revelation. This point is mentioned because there are groups in the Church, as well as out, who feel that pressure on the Prophet will cause a revelation to come forth. It would be wise to emphasize that all the social pressure in the world will not change what the Lord has decreed to be. Let those who would presume to pressure the Prophet be reminded that it is God that inspires prophets, not social pressure. . . . It is not the responsibility nor the stewardship of any person on earth to dictate to the Lord or the Lord’s servants when a revelation should be given. . . .

The prophets have declared that there are at least two major stipulations that have to be met before the Negroes will be allowed to possess the Priesthood. The first requirement relates to time. The Negroes will not be allowed to hold the Priesthood during mortality, in fact, not until after the resurrection of all of Adam’s children. The other stipulation requires that Abel’s seed receive the first opportunity of having the Priesthood. . . . Negroes must first pass through mortality before they may possess the Priesthood (“they will go down to death”). Reference is also made to the condition that the Negroes will have to wait until after the resurrection of all of Adam’s children before receiving the Priesthood. . . . the last of Adam’s children will not be resurrected until the end of the millennium. Therefore, the Negroes will not receive the Priesthood until after that time. . . . this will not happen until after the thousand years of Christ’s reign on earth. . . .

The second major stipulation that needs to be met . . . is the requirement that Abel’s seed receive the opportunity of holding the Priesthood first. . . . The obvious question is, “When will Abel’s seed be redeemed?” It will first of all be necessary that Abel marry, and then be resurrected, and ultimately exalted in the highest degree of the Celestial Kingdom so that he can have a continuation of his seed. It will then be necessary for Abel to create an earth for his spirit children to come to and experience mortality. These children will have to be “redeemed” or resurrected. After the resurrection or redemption of Abel’s seed, Cain’s descendants, the Negroes, will then be allowed to possess the Priesthood. (The Church and the Negro, 1967, pages 45-49)

On pages 109-110 of the same book, John L. Lund reiterates:

First, all of Adam’s children will have to resurrec and secondly, the seed of Abel must have an opportunity to possess the Priesthood. These events will not occur until sometime after the end of the millennium. As late as 1974 Apostle Bruce R. McConkie questioned the spirituality of Church members who believed it was time for a new revelation on the blacks. In a conference message delivered Oct. 4, 1974, Apostle McConkie said:

Am I valiant in the testimony of Jesus if my chief interest and concern in life is laying up in store the treasures of the earth, rather than the building up of the kingdom? . . .

Am I valiant if I am deeply concerned about the Church’s stand on who can or who cannot receive the priesthood and think it is time for a new revelation on this doctrine? . . .

Am I valiant if I engage in gambling, play cards, go to pornographic movies, . . . (The Ensign, November 1974, page 35)
Writing in the New York Times, June 11, 1978, Mario S. DePillis observed: “For Mormonism’s anti-black policy a revelation was the only way out, and many students of Mormonism were puzzled only at the lateness of the hour.” As far back as 1963, Donald Ira French, Jr., wrote a letter in which he remarked:

Sir: As an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, it has long seemed incredible to me that a church with so much forward vision in social welfare and higher education can be so backward in its outlook on a segment of the human race that is also supposed to be among our brothers. . . .

The revelation that the church is talking about with respect to the Negro and the priesthood should have been sought 50 years ago—not now when we are forced into looking for one. Even if a revelation should come now, we have compromised our position because it looks as if we have been forced into seeking it, which will be true. (Time, November 1, 1963)

That the Mormon Church was forced into the revelation is obvious to anyone who seriously examines the evidence. In the books Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and Mormons and Negroes we show that there has been a great deal of pressure exerted against the Church. For instance, athletic teams from the Church’s Brigham Young University have been the target of very serious protests.

In 1974 the Mormon doctrine of discrimination against blacks brought the Boy Scouts into a serious confrontation with the NAACP. The Boy Scouts of America do not discriminate because of religion or race, but Mormon-sponsored troops did have a policy of discrimination. On July 18, 1974, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

A 12-year-old boy scout has been denied a senior patrol leadership in his troop because he is black, Don L. Cope, black ombudsman for the state, said Wednesday. . . .

The ombudsman said Mormon “troop policy is that in order for a scout to become a patrol leader, he must be a deacon’s quorum president in the LDS Church. Since the boy cannot hold the priesthood, he cannot become a patrol leader.”

The Mormon leaders apparently realized that they could never prevail in this matter and a compromise was worked out:

Shortly before Boy Scout officials were to appear in Federal Court Friday morning on charges of discrimination, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints issued a policy change which will allow black youths to be senior patrol leaders, a position formerly reserved for white LDS youths in troops sponsored by the church. . . .

An LDS Church spokesman said Friday under the “guidelines set forth in the statement, a young man other than president of the deacons quorum could (now) become the senior patrol leader if he is better qualified.” (Salt Lake Tribune, August 3, 1974)

Mormon President Spencer W. Kimball “had been subpoenaed to testify” in the suit (Ibid., October 23), but on November 7, 1974, the Tribune reported:

A suit claiming discrimination against blacks by the Boy Scouts of America was dismissed Wednesday in federal court . . . all parties to the suit . . . signed an agreement stating the alleged discrimination “has been discontinued.”

Since 1976 the Mormon Church has been repeatedly embarrassed by one of its own members who became alienated over the anti-black doctrine and decided to take matters into his own hands. On April 3, 1976, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

PORTLAND, Ore.—A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints ordained a black into the priesthood Friday, saying he did so in an attempt to force a revision in Mormon doctrine about the Negro race.

Douglas A. Wallace, . . . first baptized Larry Lester, . . . in the swimming pool of a motel in northeast Portland. He then ordained Lester to the office of priest in the Aaronic Priesthood of the LDS Church. . . .

The rite was preceded by a news conference at which Wallace said he has long been bothered by the Mormon Church’s bias against blacks and he feels the time has come to challenge it. He said often all that is required to change a policy is for someone to break out of tradition. . . .

The president of the Portland-Oregon Mission of the church, Robert Seamons, said of Wallace’s actions:

“He is using the priesthood in an unrighteous manner and his action will have no validity because the president of the church has said that blacks are not to hold the priesthood.”

Wallace said he hopes there are no recriminations against him for his action, such as excommunication.

On April 13, 1976, the Salt Lake Tribune revealed that “Douglas A. Wallace was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Sunday for ordaining a black man into the church’s priesthood.”

After a confrontation with Church personnel at an April conference session, Mr. Wallace was ejected from the Tabernacle. Later he was served with “a court order barring him from attending conference” (Ibid., October 4, 1976). Although we did not agree with some of Mr. Wallace’s ideas on religion, we did not consider him to be dangerous and we were rather surprised to notice the close surveillance the police kept him under when he walked along the public sidewalk outside of Temple Square. We were rather startled to see such a thing in Salt Lake City.

SHOOTING OF OFFICER OLSON

The Mormon leaders’ fear of the threat Mr. Wallace presented to the Church seems to have led to a tragic incident where a policeman was accidentally shot and permanently paralyzed. This occurred about the time of the Church’s conference held in April, 1977. On April 5, 1977, the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

Mormon dissident Douglas A. Wallace charged Monday that a Salt Lake City police officer, shot early Sunday was keeping surveillance on him in a nearby residence.

Acting Police Chief Edgar A. Bryan Jr. denied it. He said his men were not keeping surveillance on Mr. Wallace, an excommunicated member of the Church . . . but he would not say what the stakeout’s purpose was.

Officer David W. Olson remained in critical condition Monday at St. Mark’s Hospital, where personnel said he suffered a severed spinal cord from a single shot in the neck. The policeman was shot accidentally by his partner, . . . Wallace was staying at the home of a friend, Dr. John W. Fitzgerald, 2177 Carriage Ln. (4600 South).

He was in Salt Lake City to try to make an appearance at the LDS World Conference last weekend. Attorneys for the church, however, obtained a temporary restraining order . . . which prevented the dissident from visiting Temple Square.

“I have not committed any crime, and I don’t intend to commit any crime. I have been raised in the Mormon faith and I am a man of peace . . . . This is not Russia; this is not Nazi Germany; there is no reason why I should be under surveillance of the police,” Mr. Wallace said.

The following day the Salt Lake Tribune related:

Ex-Mormon Douglas Wallace, who claims the wounding of an undercover police officer was done while police held surveillance on him, Tuesday afternoon said he will subpoena various high ranking police and sheriff’s deputies to establish the fact.

Mr. Wallace said also, “It is clear from the evidence that we have uncovered that I was under surveillance. The police department’s denial of that simply compounds the wrong. Is this going to be Salt Lake’s sequel to the Watergate scandal?” (Salt Lake Tribune, April 6, 1977)

With Mr. Wallace and his attorney pressing them hard, the police were finally forced to admit the truth about the matter:

Salt Lake City police officers admitted Thursday that the accidental wounding of an undercover officer occurred during surveillance of Mormon dissident Douglas A. Wallace. . . .

Reports released Thursday by both the county sheriff’s office and the county attorney show that six officers were on stakeout around the John W. Fitzgerald home . . . where Mr. Wallace was staying.

The lawmen were paired up in three police vehicles and two of those were parked close together in opposite directions . . . (Salt Lake Tribune, April 8, 1977)

Those who know Mr. Wallace find it strange that there should have be so many policemen on the surveillance crew watching him at 4:20 a.m. A subsequent story in the newspaper reported that the “lawmen . . . had been on duty for 16 straight hours, Chief Willoughby said” (Ibid., April 15, 1977). At any rate, Wallace claimed the Mormon Church was behind the whole affair: “Ex-Mormon Douglas Wallace Friday renewed his assertion that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was behind April police surveillance of Mr. Wallace that led to the accidental shooting of a Salt Lake City police officer” (Ibid., September 17, 1977). Finally, David Olson, the disabled police officer, took exception to a press release issued by the Church. In a letter to the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, January 18, 1978, Mr. Olson made a direct attack on the President of the Church:
I would also like to thank Spencer W. Kimball for his incorrect press release concerning the police involvement combined with the LDS church’s efforts to restrict Douglas A. Wallace from the temple grounds, specifically the Tabernacle, on April 3, 1977.

His denial of these actions is wrong. Any man who can take such actions and still call himself a prophet deserves more than I to be confined to this wheelchair.

Douglas Wallace filed lawsuits amounting to millions of dollars against the Mormon Church, and although he has not been able to prevail against the Church in the courts, the publicity surrounding the suits has caused the Church no end of trouble. We feel that his actions and the embarrassment they have caused the Church have played a part in bringing about the decision to have a new “revelation.”

Another Mormon who has put a great deal of pressure on the Church is Byron Marchant. Mr. Marchant took a very strong stand against racism in the Church. The Dallas Morning News for October 20, 1977, reported:

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—The man who cast the first vote in modern history against a leader of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been excommunicated and fired as church janitor.

Byron Marchant, 35, of Salt Lake, is the second opponent of the church policy withholding the priesthood from blacks to be excommunicated in the last two years.

When Mr. Marchant tried to distribute literature at Temple Square at the next conference he was arrested:

Byron Marchant, excommunicated member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was arrested Sunday at 1:45 p.m. at Temple Square of charges of trespassing, . . . Marchant was requested to leave the church grounds after he offered literature to people waiting in line for admission to the 2 p.m. session of general conference, Mr. Gibbs said. J. Earl Jones, director of security for the Mormon church reportedly advised Mr. Marchant he was on private property and asked him to leave. When Mr. Marchant refused, Mr. Gibbs said police officers were contacted and Mr. Marchant was placed under arrest at approximately 1:45 p.m. (Salt Lake Tribune, April 3, 1978)

Mr. Marchant published a sheet in which he called for demonstrations against the Church’s policy:

Next October Conference (1978) I will join all interested in a march on Temple Square in Salt Lake City. In the event that the Mormon Church decides to ordain worthy Afro-Americans to the priesthood this demonstration will be a sort of celebration. A demonstration of support. In the meantime, every person and/or group concerned about Utah Racism is encouraged to speak out and attend the October protest.

Mr. Marchant’s threat of a demonstration at the next conference may have caused Mormon leaders to think more seriously about having a new revelation. The general authorities seem to have a real fear of demonstrations around Temple Square. Although Mr. Marchant is probably a peaceful man, the issue concerning blacks in the Mormon Church was so explosive that the slightest incident could have touched off a riot where innocent people could have been injured. We think that the Church was wise to change its policy before the demonstration.

However this may be, when the Mormon Church yielded Mr. Marchant dropped a civil suit:

Following Friday’s announcement that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will allow blacks to receive the priesthood, BYU President Spencer W. Kimball Wednesday.

Marchant was suing President Kimball for not appearing as a witness in a case currently pending against Marchant. . . . Marchant was suing the Mormon Church president for $100 for not appearing after being subpoenaed to testify in the case. Marchant’s subpoena was quashed Thursday. (Salt Lake Tribune, June 10, 1978)

Another article in the same issue of the Tribune observed that “The last three years have also seen repeated attempts by church dissidents to subpoena Mormon leaders into court proceedings, with the central issue often related to the church’s belief about blacks.”

PROBLEM IN BRAZIL

Besides all the problems the Church was having with dissidents, it was faced with an impossible situation in Brazil. Even the Church’s own Deseret News admitted that “A major problem the church has faced with its policy regarding blacks was in Brazil, where the church is building a temple. Many people there are mixed [mixed?] racially, and it is often impossible to determine whether church members have black ancestry” (Deseret News, June 10, 1978).

Mormon leaders have been aware of this problem for some time. Lester Bush, Jr., gave this revealing information in an article published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1973, page 41:

The decision to deny the priesthood to anyone with Negro ancestry (“no matter how remote”), had resolved the theoretical problem of priesthood eligibility, but did not help with the practical problem of identifying the “blood of Cain” in those not already known to have Negro ancestry. . . .

The growth of the international Church was clearly bringing new problems. Brazil was particularly difficult. Later that year J. Ruben Clark, First Counselor to George Albert Smith, reported that the Church was entering “into a situation in doing missionary work . . . where it is very difficult if not impossible to tell who has negro blood and who has not. He said that if we are baptizing Brazilians, we are almost certainly baptizing people of negro blood, and that if the Priesthood is conferred upon them, which it no doubt is, we are facing a very serious problem.”

In a letter published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn, 1967, page 8, Gary Lobb observed:

My studies currently in Brazil. . . have led me to conclude that most Brazilians who are not second or third generation descendants of German, Italian, Polish, or Japanese immigrants, are probably descendants of Negroes. This is especially true among the lower and lower-middle classes which make up a large portion of L.D.S. membership in this land. . . . In some of the branches of the Church which my wife and I have attended here in Brazil, there appear to be priesthood bearers who possess the essential characteristics of the Negro race.

The hypocrisy of the situation in South America was pointed out in 1966 by Wallace Turner:

A different thing is going on in South America where Mormon missionaries are pushing ahead full throttle. There the former careful selection to keep out “white Negroes” has been allowed to slide a little. . . .

“There is no question but that in Brazil they have been ordaining priests who are part Negro,” said one careful observer. (The Mormon Establishment, 1966, page 261)

With the opening of the new temple in Brazil the situation would have turned into a real nightmare. Actually, the Mormon Church has the same problem in the United States. Patriarch Eldred G. Smith remarked:

“I had a young lady who was blond, and no sign or indications visibly of the Negro line at all, but yet she was deprived of going to the Temple . . . . We have these conditions by the thousands in the United States today and are getting more of them. If they have any blood of the Negro at all in their veins at all, they are not entitled to the blessings of the Priesthood. . . . No limit as to how far back so far as I know. (Patriarchal Blessings, Institute of Religion, January 17, 1964, page 8)

Time Magazine for June 30, 1958, page 47, pointed out Dr. Robert P. Stuckert researched the “conclusion that of 135 million Americans classified as white in 1950, about 28 million (21%) had some African ancestry.” The Church’s stress on genealogical research placed many members of the Church in a very embarrassing position. Many members of the Church discovered they had black ancestors and attempted to cover it up. Some however, faced the issue and yielded up all rights to the priesthood. The Deseret News Church Section for July 11, 1970, told of an interesting case:

Mr. and Mrs. John Lono Pea are an amazing couple. . . . he was set apart as genealogy secretary.

“I found out through my family telling me and in genealogy work that a grandparent was an offspring of one of the Negroes who migrated to Hawaii in 1820, through the slave trade.

“I have a sure testimony that what the Lord has said regarding the priesthood is true. I sent my genealogy to the First Presidency so there upon them, which it no doubt is, we are facing a very serious problem.”
REVELATION EVADES REAL ISSUE

O. Kendall White, Jr., made these interesting observations six years before the revelation was given:

Since they believe in “continuing revelation,” Mormons have a mechanism that enables them to reverse previous positions without repudiating the past. This is illustrated in the resolution of the conflict over polygamy. Mormons never disavowed their belief in polygamy, but they discontinued the practice on the grounds that it conflicted with another belief involving support for “the law of the land.” That the church will invoke such a mechanism to resolve the racial issue is not too unlikely.

However, this approach has a serious drawback. It is the tendency not to acknowledge the errors of the past. While revelation could be used to legitimate a new racial policy and to redefine Mormon relations with black people, Mormons might still be unwilling to condemn the racism involved in their history. They might be inclined to argue that Mormons in earlier periods were under a different mandate than the one binding them. This obviously implies that the church is never wrong. Thus, change may come through the notion of continuing revelation, but the racist aspects of Mormon history will not necessarily be condemned. (The Journal of Religious Thought, Autumn-Winter, 1973, pages 57-58)

It would appear that the Church leaders have done exactly what Mr. White warned against—i.e., they have used revelation as a means of sidestepping the real issues involved. Mario S. DePillis pointed out that “the revelation leaves unsolved other racist implications of the Book of Mormon and the Pearl of Great Price—scriptures that are both cornerstones and contradictions” (New York Times, June 11, 1978).

One issue that the Mormon leaders now seem to be dodging is that concerning skin color. From the beginning Mormon theology has taught that a black skin is a mark upon a people, starting with the belief that dark skins are cursed: “Conceived in filth and will remain so.” (New York Times, October 29, 1936: “The revelation leaves unsolved other racist implications of the Book of Mormon and the Pearl of Great Price—scriptures that are both cornerstones and contradictions” (New York Times, June 11, 1978).)

The Book of Mormon is filled with the teaching that people with dark skins are cursed:

- the Lord God did cause a curse upon them because... (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 15:21)
- And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because at their transgression... (Ibid., Alma 3:6)

In Mormon 5:15 of the Book of Mormon the following statement is made concerning the Indians:

... for this people shall be scattered, and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people, beyond the description of that which ever hath been amongst us, ...

The Book of Mormon, however, predicts that the Indians will repent of their sins and become white:

... and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightsome people. (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 30:6)

Spencer W. Kimball, who gave the new revelation which allows blacks to hold the priesthood, seems to be a real believer in the teaching that God makes righteous people become “white and delightsome”:

I saw a striking contrast in the progress of the Indian people today as against that of only fifteen years ago... (Improvement Era, December 1960, pages 922-923)

It is interesting to note that while Spencer W. Kimball believes that the Indians are to become “white and delightsome,” he has suppressed Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation on polygamy which commanded the Mormons to marry the Indians to make them white. We published this revelation in full in the book Mormonism Like Watergate? in 1974. The most important verse of this revelation reads as follows:

4. Verily, I say unto you, that the wisdom of man, in his fallen state, knoweth not the purposes and the privileges of my holy priesthood, but ye shall know when ye receive a fulness by reason of the anointing: For it is my will, that in time, ye should take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightsome and just, and even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles.

We seriously doubt that President Kimball will ever allow this revelation to be canonized in the Doctrine and Covenants since he feels that the Indians are being made “white and delightsome” through the power of God and has in the past discouraged intermarriage with the Indians. The Church Section of the Desert News for June 17, 1978, gave this information:

In an address to seminary and institute teachers at Brigham Young University on June 27, 1958, President Kimball, then a member of the Council of the Twelve, said:

“...there is one thing that I must mention, and that is interracial marriages. When I said you must teach your young people to overcome their prejudices and accept the Indians, I did not mean that you would encourage intermarriage.”

Although the Mormon Church is now opening the door to temple marriages between blacks and whites, President Kimball is probably not too enthused about the matter. An endorsement of Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation encouraging intermarriage with Indians could now lead white members to seek marriages with blacks. Since blacks are no longer cursed as to the priesthood, the revelation might just as logically be interpreted as Mormons should “take unto you wives” of the Ethiopians or Nigerians “that their posterity may become white, delightsome and just, ...”

For more documentation and verification of the 1831 revelation on polygamy see our book Mormonism Like Watergate? pages 6-14.

Another matter which the new revelation allowing blacks to hold the priesthood does not resolve is the teaching concerning pre-existence. In the past Mormon leaders have stressed that blacks were cursed as to the priesthood because of “unchristianness in the spirit—or pre-existence” (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 263-264). Should a faithful Mormon continue to believe that blacks were unrighteous in a pre-existent state? The Mormon leaders are silent concerning this matter. It will be especially interesting to see how Church leaders explain this matter to blacks in the Church. Monroe Fleming, far instance, was converted to the Church over 25 years ago. President Joseph Fielding Smith explained to him why he could not hold the priesthood, but since the new “revelation” he is being encouraged to be ordained. Now, was Mr. Fleming really unfaithful in a pre-existent state or did the Church leaders just make a mistake in the past when they said he could not hold the priesthood? Church leaders should explain if they believe black babies born after the new “revelation” were inferior spirits in a pre-existent state. Now that they have abandoned the idea that blacks cannot hold the priesthood, they should explain if they are giving up some of their teachings on the pre-existence. They should also explain whether they are repudiating the Book of Mormon teaching that a dark skin is given by God as a “curse.”

By giving a “revelation” on the matter without explaining its implications, the Mormon leaders are leaving their people in a dense doctrinal fog. They should take a lesson from the situation that has developed since the Church gave up polygamy. Instead of actually repudiating the doctrine, President Woodruff said he received a revelation and issued the Manifesto which was supposed to put a stop to the practice. The Church retained Joseph Smith’s 1843 revelation on polygamy in the Doctrine and Covenants Section 132. Church leaders continued to teach that polygamy was a righteous doctrine, but since it was against the law, it should not actually be practiced. Because of their reluctance to come to grips with the real issue and repudiate the doctrine, the Mormon leaders left their people in confused state. Many Mormons have reasoned that since the Church teaches plural marriage will be practiced in heaven, they should practice it on earth. Therefore, in disregard to the Church’s Manifesto, thousands of people in Utah are living in polygamy today. The Church excommunicates those who are caught living in the practice, but since it retains the revelation on plural marriage in the Doctrine and Covenants, the number of dissidents continues to grow.

Now, if the Church continues to hide behind a purported revelation on the blacks and fails to come to grips with its racist doctrines, thousands of people are going to continue believing these doctrines and the Church will be plagued with racism for many years to come. In 1960, Sterling McMurrin predicted:

. . . I really believe, if I don’t die in the very near future, I will live to see the time when this doctrine is dissolved. I don’t mean repudiated. The Mormon Church is like the Catholic Church, it doesn’t repudiate doctrine that at one time or another were held to be revelation or absolute truth. They didn’t repudiate the doctrine of Polygamy. I use the word dissolve, and I imagine by some technique they will dissolve the doctrine on the Negro, rather than repudiate it. (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 287)

Dr. McMurrin’s prediction seems to be coming true. The Mormon Church now appears to be in the process of trying to dissolve the doctrine through new “revelation.” This is the very thing which we warned against in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 293:

The honest solution to the problem facing the Mormon leaders is not to have another “revelation,” but to repudiate the doctrine. They should admit that Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and other Mormon leaders taught doctrines that cannot be accepted as coming from God.

The reader will remember that Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, said that slavery was a “divine institution,” and that the Civil War could not free the slaves (see Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 250); however, the Civil War did free the slaves, and Brigham Young was wrong . . .

Brigham Young said that if a person who belongs to the chosen seed mixes his blood with the Negro the penalty is “death on the spot” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 10, page 110). Obviously, the Mormons do not believe this statement by Brigham Young or they would be putting many people to death. Brigham Young called this the "law of God" and said that "This will always be so." Now, if Brigham Young was wrong about this, what assurance have we that he was right when he said that the Negro could not hold the Priesthood? Why should we disregard this teaching, which Brigham Young called the "law of God," and yet hold to his teaching that the Negro can not have the Priesthood?

Instead of continuing to cling to Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham, the Mormon leaders should come to grips with the matter and acknowledge that it is a false translation of the Egyptian Book of Breaths. To come forth with a new “revelation” only compounds the problem.

One thing that should be noted about the new “revelation” is that the Church has failed to produce a copy of it. All we have is a statement by the First Presidency that says a revelation was received. Joseph Smith scribbled many of his revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants and other Church publications, and the Apostle Orson Pratt mocked the Catholics for not adding revelations to the canon:

. . . strange to say, none of their revelations are permitted to enter the sacred canon . . . Here, indeed, is a strange inconsistency! Even the Catholic church herself, evidently places no confidence in the popes and bishops, . . . if she did, she would have canonized their revelations along with the rest of the revelations of the New Testament. . . . We can but conclude that it is all an imposition . . . (Orson Pratt’s Works, “The Bible Alone An Insufficient Guide,” page 39)

It appears that the Mormon Church does not intend to canonize or even make public the new revelation on the blacks. The Salt Lake Tribune for June 13, 1978 reported:

Kimball refused to discuss the revelation that changed the church’s 148-year-old policy against ordination of blacks, saying it was “a personal thing.”

Kimball said the revelation came at this time because conditions and people have changed.

“It’s a different world than it was 20 or 25 years ago. The world is ready for it,” he said.

We seriously doubt that President Kimball will put forth a written revelation on the bestowal of priesthood on blacks. We doubt, in fact, that any such document exists. What probably happened was that the leaders of the Church finally realized that they could no longer retain the anti-black doctrine without doing irreparable damage to the Church. Under these circumstances they were impressed with the fact that this doctrine had to be changed and this impression was referred to as a revelation from God. In a letter to the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, June 24, 1978 Eugene Wagner observed:

. . . was this change of doctrine really a revelation from the Lord, or did the church leaders act on their own? Why don’t they publish that revelation and let the Lord speak in his own words? All we saw was a statement of the First Presidency, and that is not how a revelation looks.

When God speaks the revelation starts with the words: “Thus saith the Lord…”. It seems when the Lord decides to change a doctrine of such great importance he will talk himself to the people of his church. If such a revelation cannot be presented to the members it is obvious that the first presidency acted on its own, most likely under fear of public pressure to avoid problems of serious consequences and to maintain peace and popularity with the world.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 281, we included an account of an interview Michael Marquardt had with a member of the Genesis Group. According to Mr. Marquardt’s notes, “June 24, 1971 was the first time that the First Presidency and Twelve have prayed in this Temple about whether Black members of the Church should hold the Priesthood. The First Presidency and Twelve were not in agreement on the question. But they did agree that the Genesis Group should be formed.”

We will probably never know whether the First Presidency and Twelve reached a unanimous decision in June, 1978, but it is logical to believe that the majority had come to believe that the doctrine had to be changed.

Be this as it may, we feel that it is wrong to attribute such a revelation to God. It makes it appear that God has been a real racist for thousands of years, and that the Mormon leaders by “pleading long and earnestly in behalf of these, our faithful brethren, spending many hours in the upper room of the Temple” have finally persuaded God to give blacks the priesthood. The truth of the matter, however, is that “God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him” (Acts 10: 34-35). It is the Mormon leaders who have kept blacks under a curse. They have continually and stubbornly opposed the advancement of black people, threatening and excommunicating those who differed with them on the matter. Finally, when their backs are to the wall, the Mormon leaders are forced to change their position. We would think that at this time they would fall down before God and acknowledge their wrong doing, but instead they proudly stand up as heroes and proclaim that because of their “pleading long and earnestly” on behalf of the blacks, God has changed the doctrine and decided to give them the priesthood. To claim a “revelation” at this point seems almost like mockery to God. Less than four years ago Apostle McConkie was claiming that it was unspiritual people who were “deeply concerned about the Church’s stand on who can or who cannot receive the priesthood and think it is time for a new revelation. . . .” Now members of the First Presidency admit that they have been “pleading long and earnestly” concerning the question. Dr. Hugh Nibley once claimed that “of all churches in the world” only the Mormon Church “has not found it necessary to adjust any part of its doctrine in the last hundred years” (No Man’s, That’s Not History, page 46). The new revelation on the blacks is just another evidence of how Dr. Nibley has misrepresented the situation.
Sterling McMurrin made some interesting observations ten years ago:

He expressed belief the time would come when “the Mormon people for the most part will have to abandon their crude superstitions about Negroes because their children forced them to.”

But he said there will be those who will remember “with sadness and moral embarrassment the day when their Church could have done great things to hasten the achievement, but failed.” (Ogden Standard-Examiner, June 22, 1968)

IS THE PRIESTHOOD LOST?

The reader will remember that President Brigham Young once said that if the blacks were given all the blessings of the Gospel, the priesthood would be taken from the Church and it would go to destruction. Our research leads us to believe that the Mormon Church never had any priesthood to lose. Even David Whitmer, one of the Three Witnesses to the Book of Mormon, seems to have had some real reservations about the “priesthood”:

This matter of “priesthood,” since the days of Sydney Rigdon, has been the great hobby and stumbling-block of the Latter Day Saints. . . . Authority is the word we used for the first two years in the church — until Sydney Rigdon’s days in Ohio. This matter of the two orders of priesthood in the Church of Christ, and lineal priesthood of the old law being in the church, all originated in the mind of Sydney Rigdon. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, page 64)

The question might well be asked, “If what David Whitmer says is true, how can Section 27 and other sections of the Doctrine and Covenants be accounted for?” Actually, these revelatory were have been changed from the way they originally read when they were first printed. David Whitmer charged: “You have changed the revelations from the way they were first given . . . to support the error of high priests. You have changed the revelations to support the error of a President of the high priesthood, high counselors, etc.” (Ibid., page 49).

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 19, 22-25, we show through photographs of the first printing of Joseph Smith’s revelations that Whitmer was right when he charged that serious changes were made concerning priesthood, and on pages 177-182 we demonstrate that the Mormon idea of “priesthood” is unscriptural. The Bible teaches that the old order of priesthood was fulfilled and that Christ Himself is our High Priest. It indicates that Jesus has “an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them” (Hebrews 7:24-25).

The Bible also indicates that all Christians (not just men) are a “royal priesthood” (1 Peter 2:9). In 1 Peter 2:5 we read that “Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.” The priesthood of the Old Testament has been fulfilled and now “as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name (John 1:12).

IMPACT OF REVELATION

Some people believe that the Mormon Church is not sincere in opening the priesthood to blacks. We feel however, that even though the Mormon leaders have failed to face some important issues, they have made a major concession which will gradually weaken racism throughout the Church.

We feel that one of the important reasons the Church decided to confer the priesthood on blacks was that the anti-black doctrine was hurting missionary work. With the change in this policy, we anticipate that the Church will make many more converts. On the other hand, many members of the Church have become disillusioned because of the Church’s handling of the racial issue, and the new “revelation” has tended to confirm in their minds that the Lord had nothing to do with the whole matter. For those Christians working with Mormons, this may really prove to be an opening for effective witnessing.

For those who are interested in the subject of the anti-black doctrine we highly recommend our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? In this book we have devoted over 100 pages to the doctrine and Joseph Smith’s false translation of the Book of Abraham. In addition to this, on pages 582-85 we have printed the “Excerpts from the Weekly Council Meetings of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, Dealing with the Rights of Negroes in the Church, 1849-1940.” This important document throws a great deal of light on why the Church was finally forced to have a new “revelation.”

AMBUSHING THE TANNERS

So far we have been unable to trace exactly how Zion Bookstore received the pamphlets. According to one report, the books were first mailed anonymously to a post office box. From there they were transported to a publishing company near Redwood Road and were subsequently picked up by an employee from Zion Bookstore. Willfrid Clark, who works for Sam Weller, maintained that he did not know anything about a publishing company picking up the books from a post office box. He said that all he knew about the matter was that Zion Bookstore received an anonymous letter containing a key to a room in a self storage company on Redwood Road. He claimed that he personally went to the company and picked up the booklets.

As we followed the tracks of this conspiracy to destroy our work, we found that they led right into the Mormon Church Office Building. Actually, it was more than a year ago when we first heard that something was afoot. We had a visit with a young Mormon singer who had some questions regarding Church history. He told us he held an appointment with a woman or the Church Office Building who claimed she had been part of a committee which was organized to evaluate our research. The committee worked on our material until they received an order From the Prophet — i.e., the President of the Church — that they were to desist from the project. We were unable to learn anything more about this purported committee, but one of the top Mormon historians did tell us in a telephone conversation in Dec. 1976 that a manuscript had been prepared to refute the allegations contained in our work. He was not sure if the Church would actually publish it, but the writing had been done.

One of the major clues which led to the discovery of the source of the pamphlet Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism was an unpublished thesis by Richard Stephen Marshall. We were absolutely amazed at its contents. Three of the top historians in the Mormon Church are cited as making very candid statements concerning our work and other matters relating to the history of the Church. These three men were all assigned to write volumes in the Church’s new “sixteen-volume sesquicentennial history of the Latter-day Saints.” Two of them subsequently found themselves in trouble with the Church and were called in to answer for the statements attributed to them. At any rate, one of these historians really “spilled the beans” when he told that the Mormon Church Historical Dept. had assigned a scholar to answer our work and that his manuscript would probably have to be published anonymously. We cite the following from Mr. Marshall’s paper:

Recent years have seen the emergence of a new kind of anti-Mormon literature which uses Mormon historical records . . . to try to show that the Church was more human than divine. This new kind of literature is best typified by Jerald and Sandra Tanner and their Modern Microfilm Publishing Company. . . . They have been prolific since 1961 and have, at present, a world-wide reputation. This writer encountered materials published by them while living in Australia several years ago. Max Parkin, of the LDS institute of Religion at the University of Utah calls them “publishers extraordinary,” and notes that one of their most recent volumes, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is the finest, most comprehensive and hard-hitting anti-Mormon book in history. . . .

Many prominent Mormons have expressed a high regard for the work the Tanners have done. . . . T. Edgar Lyon, a Mormon historian and long-time teacher at the Institute of Religion at the University of Utah told this writer he thought the Church should subsidize the Tanners, although he said it tongue-in cheek.

Reed Durham using virtually the same words as Lyon said that he thought the Church should subsidize the Tanners because of all the historical research they do for it. He teaches a class at the Institute of Religion at the University of Utah on the problems of Mormon history called “Special Studies in Mormon History.” He uses the Tanner’s book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? as the text for the class. Formerly he would purchase copies of the book in quantity from Modern Microfilm through the Institute. Because it did not look very good for the Institute to be carrying quantities of an anti-Mormon work, he now encourages his students to go down to Modern Microfilm and buy the book on their own.

Durham said he would like to write a book answering the accusations of the Tanners point by point. To do so, however, would require certain admissions that Mormon history is not exactly as the Church has taught it was, that there were things taught and practiced in the nineteenth century of which the general Church membership is unaware. He said that the Church is not ready to admit that yet. He also said that due to the large number of letters the Church Historian’s Office is receiving asking for answers to the things the Tanners have published, a certain scholar (name deliberately withheld) was appointed to write a general answer to the Tanners including advice on how to read anti-Mormon literature. This unnamed person solicited the help of Reed Durham on the project. The work is finished but its publication is delayed, according to what Leonard Arrington told Durham, because they can not decide how or where to publish it. Because the article is an open and honest approach to the problem, although it by no means answers all of the questions raised by the Tanners, it will be published anonymously, to avoid any difficulties which could result were such an article connected with an official Church agency. (The New Mormon History, by Richard Stephen Marshall, A Senior Honors Project Summary, University of Utah, May 1, 1977, pages 57, 61 and 62)

The fact that an anonymous rebuttal appeared just seven months from the time Mr. Marshall wrote his paper seems like more than just a coincidence.

Unfortunately, Mr. Marshall’s paper does not give the name of the author, referring to him only as “a certain scholar (name deliberately withheld) . . .” We did, however, remember our telephone conversation with the Mormon scholar (see above) and thought that he might have told us that D. Michael Quinn was the historian assigned to write the rebuttal. We began to do research in Dr. Quinn’s writings and found a number of things in his M.A. thesis which led us to believe he was the author of the rebuttal. We thought that in light of the evidence he would surely confess his involvement. To our great surprise, however, he emphatically denied any connection with it. We were somewhat taken back by his firm and unyielding denial, and therefore decided to do further research. We spent some time examining Quinn’s dissertation written at Yale University, a copy of which is found at the University of Utah library.

STONEWALLING

After examining Dr. Quinn’s writings, we were rather certain that he wrote the rebuttal. Still, we did not want to be too hasty in rushing into print. His vigorous denials were still ringing in our ears, and we felt that it was unfair to accuse a man of such a cowardly act unless we had very good evidence.

The reader will remember that Richard Steven Marshall’s paper gave information that indicated Leonard Arrington, Mormon Church Historian, was involved in the project even before May 1, 1977. We had a number of phone conversations with Dr. Arrington, and in every conversation he emphatically declared he did not know who the author of the rebuttal was and had absolutely no foreknowledge of the matter.

Everywhere we turned we met with the same response—an absolute stonewall. We knew that we had circumstantial evidence that Quinn was the author and that the project came through the Mormon Church Historical Department, but since everyone contacted denied the accusation our confidence was somewhat shaken. Then an unbelievable thing happened: while searching through a drawer for some samples of typewritten material we came upon a handwritten note we had made over a year before concerning the phone conversation we had with the Mormon scholar. Our note, written on or before December 12, 1976, confirmed that the author was “Michael Quinn[n] and that the work was written “For Historians Office.” The note also indicated that the Church “May not publish it.”

The handwritten note also contained what proved to be a very significant item—i.e., a statement that a man by the name of “David Mayfield” said the paper “had been done.” We decided to call Mr. Mayfield and ask him concerning the matter. After all the stonewalling we had encountered we really expected to learn very little from Mr. Mayfield. To our great surprise, however, he turned out to be very honest about the matter.

Our first question to Mr. Mayfield was whether he worked for the Mormon Historical Department. He replied that he had worked there but was not working there at the present time Then we asked him if he had seen Michael Quinn’s paper in the typed form before it was published as Jerald and Sandra Distorted View of Mormonism. After hesitating slightly, he replied: “Yes.” Then we asked if he was sure that it was the typed copy he had seen. The reply: “Yes.” The third question we asked was whether it was about a year ago when he saw it. Mr. Mayfield also replied “yes” to that question. Then he began to get uneasy and asked to whom he was speaking. (He apparently thought he was talking to a Mormon who had been initiated into the secret.) Needless to say, he was not too happy when he learned who it was, although he was still very polite. He went on to say that he was told not to reveal the identity of the author because it was supposed to be an anonymous publication. We reminded him, however, that in his answer to an earlier question, he had already revealed the identity of the author. He had replied “yes” to the question of whether he had seen the typed copy of Michael Quinn’s paper before it was published.

As soon as we had terminated the conversation with Mr. Mayfield, we called Dr. Arrington, Church Historian, and asked him if he was still going to stand by his story in the light of David Mayfield’s admission. He emphatically replied that he knew absolutely nothing about the project and that the charges were completely untrue. Later that day Dr. Arrington called us and said he had checked with Mayfield, and that Mayfield told him he had made a mistake; it was another document that he had seen. We, of course, could hardly believe that Mr. Mayfield could have made such a serious mistake. In light of the handwritten note and the telephone conversation confirming the note, we could only believe that the Historical Department was behind the whole project. Nevertheless, Dr. Arrington continued to deny the whole matter. Later we called David Mayfield and asked him if he held told Dr. Arrington that he had made a mistake about the document. Mr. Mayfield did not support Dr. Arrington; he simply replied that he was “not going to comment” about the matter.

With this new evidence in hand, we called Michael Quinn. The reader will remember that Dr. Quinn had strongly denied the accusation when we first called him. This conversation was entirely different from the first. When we asked him if he was the author of Jerald and Sandra Tanners Distorted View of Mormonism, he replied that he would “neither affirm nor deny” the allegation. He explained that only a small number of Mormon historians were capable of writing the rebuttal. To affirm or deny the allegation would help us to limit the field, and since the author wished to remain anonymous he would not help us in any way. This, of course, was a long step from his original position. He had moved from an absolute “no” to the compromised position that he would “neither affirm nor deny” authorship. Now, if he had taken the position of refusing to affirm or deny at the first, he would have been in far better shape. As it is, Dr. Quinn has put himself and the Church in a very embarrassing position.
In an article entitled, “Doctrinal Cloak and Dagger,” David Merrill told of talking to Michael Quinn about the rebuttal. He claimed that Mr. Quinn would “neither confirm, nor deny involvement or knowledge of the manuscript’s origins” (Utah Holiday, February 1978, page 7). Gary James Bergera also talked to Quinn about the matter:

While neither affirming nor denying the charge that he wrote the attack, Quinn adds, “If they want to attribute [attribute?] me as the author, they’re free to, just as long as they spell my name right.” (“Jerald and Sandra Tanner,” unpublished paper by Gary James Bergera, page 7)

The Utah Historical Quarterly for Winter 1973, page 70, informs us that Dr. Quinn has served as “a historical assistant with the Historical Department, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.” The Ensign for August 1977, page 37, says that Quinn is “an assistant professor of history at Brigham Young University.” BYU is of course owned by the Church. Since the whole operation was carried out in such a clandestine manner, we were not surprised to learn that Quinn has served as a “Special Agent, U.S. Military Intelligence, Washington, D.C. and Munich, Germany, 1968-1971.” (“Organizational Development and Social Origins of he Mormon Hierarchy, 1832-1932: A Prosopographical Study,” M.A. thesis, University of Utah, 1973, page 311)

Although we are convinced that Michael Quinn played the major role in preparing the rebuttal, others could have contributed. The reader will remember it was reported that a committee had been set up to examine our work. One Mormon scholar told us he was informed that an answer to anti-Mormon criticism was being prepared by the Church. He was taken into a room where “they picked my brain” for answers to the problems. He admitted that Dr. Quinn was involved in the project but did not identify the others.

Be this as it may, the fact that the rebuttal was published anonymously tends to destroy its credibility. We do not believe that most Mormons would approve of such a cowardly method of attack. In 1903, the noted Mormon scholar told us he was informed that an answer to anti-Mormon criticism was being prepared by the Church. He was taken into a room where “they picked my brain” for answers to the problems. He admitted that Dr. Quinn was involved in the project but did not identify the others.

Like B. H. Roberts, we feel that any challenge to our work “should be otherwise than from ambush.” Chad Flake, a longstanding critic of our work, seems to agree about the matter:

“Here’s a man who’s writing to evaluate the Tanners, yet he doesn’t have enough gumption to put his name on it. The credibility of the pamphlet, as far as I’m concerned, is nil,” remarks Chad Flake, associate professor of library science and Director of Special Collections, Harold B. Lee Library, BYU. (“Jerald and Sandra Tanner,” unpublished paper by Gary James Bergera, pages 6-7)

That the Church Historical Department would publish the rebuttal anonymously is bad enough, but even worse is the fact that those responsible (Church Historian Leon Arrington and Michael Quinn) would emphatically deny any connection with it. In the rebuttal we have been accused of dishonesty, yet those responsible for its publication will not admit their connection with it. In February, 1978, we challenged “Leonard Arrington, D. Michael Quinn and everyone else who was involved in this surreptitious plot to come forth and meet us in a public debate. We will even pay to rent the hall.” So far all of the participants have remained silent about the matter.

Not only has the rebuttal been put forth in a dishonest manner, but also it contains serious errors and misrepresentations. We have written a response to it entitled, Answering Dr. Clandestine: A Response to the Anonymous LDS Historian. This 22-page pamphlet demonstrates how Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism was traced back to Michael Quinn and the Church Historical Department and shows some of the glaring errors that it contains. We feel that our pamphlet has completely destroyed the credibility of the LDS Church Historical Department’s response to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

One man who read the rebuttal to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? wrote us a letter in which he stated: “If that pamphlet is the best the church has been able to come up with in the 6 years since Shadow or Reality was published, the church must be really desperate.” The Mormon historians apparently believed they were going to deal us a serious blow with this rebuttal, but it has turned out to be an incredible blunder. In fact, if they were to have sat down and planned a method to promote our work they could have hardly come up with a better idea. It has only tended to increase sales of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and now that we have sold over 27,000 copies many people are asking why the Church has not prepared an official rebuttal. We believe it is because the Church leaders have no real answers to the problems and that any publicity that they give would only work to their disadvantage. In a letter written January 19, 1977, a spokesman for Deseret Bookstore wrote: “We do not plan a specific written response to the Tanner book. Perhaps it does not deserve the dignity of a response.” In a letter dated November 2, 1977, Francis M. Gibbons, Secretary to the First Presidency, dismissed Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? with this terse comment: “I have been asked to acknowledge your letter to Church Headquarters received October 27, 1977, and to explain that the book by Jerald and Sandra Tanner referred to in your letter is apocryphal material and has no basis in fact.”

We feel that the Mormon leaders will eventually be forced to come to grips with Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? In the pamphlet Answering Dr. Clandestine, we pointed out that “a representative of a major publishing company has written us a letter in which he said his firm is “vitally interested in being the publisher of your materials.” If an arrangement is worked out, we should have a distribution which is almost beyond our imagination.” Since that time we have signed a contract with Moody Press to publish a condensed version of our book. Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Although it may take a year or two to actually get the book into production, it should get our work into the hands of thousands of people who would otherwise never hear about it.

At any rate, we feel that all of our readers should have both the unabridged edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and Answering Dr. Clandestine. A Response to the Anonymous LDS Historian.:

NOTICE: One free copy of Answering Dr. Clandestine will be sent with every order for Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? which sells for $7.95 ($9.95 in hardback). Special ends October 31, 1978.

HONESTY WITH MORMONS ON SPALDING

On June 25, 1977, the Los Angeles Times reported a very sensational story relating to the origin of the Book of Mormon:

Three Southern California researchers say they have new evidence that challenges the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, . . . Based on the opinions of three handwriting experts, the researchers have declared that portions of the Book of Mormon were written by a Congregationalist minister and novelist who died more than 10 years before Joseph Smith is said to have received the revelations from God through golden plates.

Since we do not believe in the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, nothing could have pleased us more than to have seen the conclusion of the Californian researchers verified. Nevertheless, we had grave doubts about the new find, and after an examination of the documents we were forced to the conclusion that the discovery would not stand up under rigorous examination. In an article published in the Ogden Standard-Examiner, David Briscoe wrote the following:

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — One of Mormonism’s longstanding critics has joined the church in discounting conclusions of California researchers that the Book of Mormon was pirated from the writings of a 19th Century novelist.

Jerald Tanner, a Salt Lake City anti-Mormon publisher, says he was allowed by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) on Thursday to see documents that convinced him novelist Solomon Spaulding could not have written part of the Book of Mormon manuscript. . . .

Tanner accompanied one of the Californian handwriting experts, William Kays, to church headquarters Thursday, where they were allowed to see the original Book of Mormon manuscripts held by the church.
Church spokesman Don LeFevre said Kaye also examined a document which is the basis of part of another Mormon scripture, The Doctrine and Covenants.

That manuscript is clearly dated 15 years after Spaulding’s death in 1816 and appears to have been written in the same hand as the disputed Book of Mormon manuscript, Tanner said.

He acknowledged not being a handwriting expert but said there are significant differences in the handwriting between the Book of Mormon manuscript and the Spaulding document that a layman can spot. . . . (Ogden Standard-Examiner, July 8, 1977)

After publishing Did Spalding Write the Book of Mormon? in July, 1977, we received a great deal of criticism for not waiting until the California researchers finished their book before making an attack on the new theory. It was felt that after we examined all their evidence we might change our minds about the matter. The book was delayed for some time but finally appeared in November, 1977 under the title, Who Really Wrote the Book Of Mormon? After reading this book carefully, we must report that our feelings have not changed. In fact, we are more convinced than ever that we made the right decision. The evidence against the new Spalding theory now seems to be overwhelming, and the California researcher’s failure to deal with some of the basic criticisms leads us to the conclusion that they have no real answers to the objections raised. Although we have received some sharp criticism because of our stand on the Spalding matter, we feel that it is based on very strong evidence and that it would be dishonest for us to compromise our position just to discredit the Mormons. We feel that all work against Mormonism should be based on reliable evidence which will meet the test of time.

When we made our first statement on the Spalding matter, we felt almost like we were alone. The researchers were claiming their three noted handwriting experts had examined photocopies of the documents and all three agreed that twelve pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript were actually written by Solomon Spalding. We felt better, however, on July 9, 1977, when the Salt Lake Tribune reported that

One of three handwriting experts hired to check authenticity of the Book of Mormon has withdrawn from the assignment. . . .

He said he decided to withdraw after published reports that he agreed 12 pages of the Book of Mormon were written by . . . Spalding, . . .

“That is not true,” Mr. Silver said. “I have told news representatives that I could not say that without examining the original writings of Solomon Spalding, not just the photocopies . . .”

The researchers have implied that Henry Silver withdrew from the case because he feared for his life, but in a letter dated January 12, 1978, Silver himself stated:

As far as I am concerned I have never had any threat what-so-ever thrown at me in connection with the case, nor have I ever had a threat against me any time in my life. I never made at any time or any place any statement or even suggested a fear of being killed, in connection with the case, . . .

William Kaye, the second handwriting expert, supported the researchers in his letter of September 8, 1997, but one week after Mr. Kaye issued his statement, a big blow fell on the researcher’s case. This was the final opinion of the third handwriting expert, Howard C. Doulter. In a letter dated September 15, 1977, Mr. Doulter stated: “It is my conclusion the handwriting in the name of Solomon Spalding is NOT the author of the unidentified pages, . . . of the Book of Mormon.” The Los Angeles Times, September 24, 1977, reported that when Howard A. Davis, one of the three researchers, was asked about Doulter’s statement, he said:

“I kind of expected he (Doulter) would go negative on the thing because there have been so many death threats.”

Asked if his life had been threatened during his investigation of the Mormon manuscripts, Doulter replied: “Not at all.”

The researchers claim that Doulter’s “second opinion contradicted his own first report” (Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon? page 175). Now while it is true that Mr. Doulter gave an opinion supporting the Spalding theory before his final report, we must remember that he had only examined photocopies of the documents and had made it clear that this was not a final verdict. In a report dated March 4, 1977, Doulter stated:

Because I have examined machine copies and photographic enlargements and NOT the originals, I can only render a qualified opinion. . . .

A positive conclusion can be rendered only after an examination of all the original documents. (Ibid., page 80)

The researchers have used the statements of the handwriting experts in a very clever way. They have photographically printed both the preliminary statements and the later statements. To the uncritical reader it would appear that they have five statements supporting their conclusion and only one against it. Actually, what they have is four preliminary statements (Henry Silver gave two preliminary opinions) and only two later opinions by those who have examined the original documents. What it boils down to, then, is that they have only one favorable statement by a handwriting expert made after he had seen all the documents. Two of the three handwriting experts no longer support their conclusions, yet in the face of this the researchers boldly assert that the “overwhelming weight” of the handwriting evidence supports their conclusion (Ibid., page 176). Although we do not profess to be handwriting experts, we certainly cannot agree with the researchers on this matter. We feel that the evidence is strongly against their theory.

In their book the California researchers try to show that Sidney Rigdon stole Spalding’s manuscript from Patterson’s Print Shop in Pittsburgh and that Rigdon visited Joseph Smith in Palmyra, New York, before the Book of Mormon was printed. Although Fawn Brodie feels that “The tenuous chain of evidence accumulated to support the Spalding-Rigdon theory breaks altogether when it tries to prove that Rigdon met Joseph Smith before 1830” (No Man Knows My History, page 453), the California researchers claim to have new evidence on this matter. On page 119 of Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon? we find a very surprising assertion:

1829 (June/July) Gap in Rigdon’s o.i.

David Whitmer (founding Mormon) testifies that Smith and Rigdon were together.

As soon as we read this statement we became suspicious that the researchers had nothing to back it up. When an inquiry was made, one of the researchers claimed that this statement had appeared in the book by mistake and that it would be corrected in the next printing. David Whitmer had not actually said Rigdon was present, but in a book by Preston Nibley, Whitmer had described a stranger and the description seemed to fit Rigdon.

This story is found in The Witnesses of the Book of Mormon, pages 70-71:

When I was returning to Fayette, . . . all of us riding in the wagon, a very pleasant, nice-looking old man suddenly appeared by the side of our wagon and saluted us with, “Good morning,” . . . We returned the salutation, and, by a sign from Joseph, I invited him to ride if he was going our way. But he said very pleasantly, “No, I am going to Cumorah.” . . . as I looked around inquiringly of Joseph, the old man instantly disappeared, . . . He was, I should think, about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches tall and heavy set, about such a man as James Vancleave there, but heavier; his face was as large, he was dressed in a suit of brown woolen clothes, his hair and beard were white, like Brother Pratt’s, but his beard was not so heavy. . . . It was the messenger who held the plates, who had taken them from Joseph just prior to our starting from Harmony.

Since Sidney Rigdon was only 36 years old at the time, we do not think that he could be described as an “old man.” At any rate, David Whitmer (one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon) would never have testified that Smith and Rigdon were together in 1829. In his booklet, An Address to All Believers in Christ, page 11, David Whitmer plainly stated:

Neither Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris or myself ever met Sydney Rigdon until after the Book of Mormon was in print. I know this of my own personal knowledge being with Joseph Smith, in Seneca County, N.Y., in the winter of 1830, when Sydney Rigdon and Edward Partridge came from Kirtland, Ohio, to see Joseph Smith, and where Rigdon and Partridge saw Smith for the first time in their lives.

The Spaulding manuscript story is a myth; there being no direct testimony on record in regard to Rigdon’s connection with the manuscript of Solomon Spaulding.

If the researchers had been able to back up their assertion that David Whitmer testified Smith and Rigdon were together in 1829, we would have been very impressed. As it is, however, we are only left with statements which were made by other people many years after the events described. We do not think that this testimony is of any real value.
On pages 190-199 of their book Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon, the California researchers use Dee Jay Nelson and Wesley P. Walters as witnesses against the truthfulness of Mormonism. It is interesting to note, however, that both these men reject the idea that Spalding actually penned 12 pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript. In fact, Wesley P. Walters, one of the most noted researchers on Mormonism, has come out with a very critical review of Who Really Wrote the Book of Mormon? He has provided us with a copy, a version of which is published in Contemporary Christianity, Winter 1977-78. We extract the following from Wesley Walter’s review of the California researchers’ book:

This work brings together a great deal of painstaking research, collecting evidence from hard-to-find books and old newspapers to build a circumstantial case for the 140 year-old theory that the Book of Mormon is traceable to a now-missing manuscript written by a Congregational minister named Solomon Spalding. ... The case is built entirely upon circumstantial evidence from testimonies of persons who had knowledge of events at various stages in the supposed chain linking Spalding to Rigdon to Smith. In general, the later the testimony, the more detailed and specific it becomes in affirming these connections, the witnesses’ memory apparently improving with age.

A new feature in the research team’s presentation of the theory is that there were two lost manuscripts of Spalding’s novel instead of one. According to the older theory it was thought that Rigdon had simply copied the manuscript left by Spalding to the printer’s and that subsequently been returned to the Spalding household where his wife and daughter reported seeing it in the family trunk after his death in 1816. On the basis of a very late testimony ... the authors of this book maintain that there was a second copy of Spalding’s work, one which had been prepared for the printer and which, according to Miller, needed only a title page and a possible preface to ready it for publication. They further maintain that Rigdon actually stole this copy from the printer’s office and gave it to Joseph Smith who used it to produce the Book of Mormon. ... This theory seems apparently confirmed with the sensational discovery by the researchers that twelve pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript appear to be in the handwriting of Spalding himself. ... When looked at carefully, however, this discovery raises so many knotty problems and conflicts in regard to the theoretical reconstruction in the first part of their book, that it actually tends to discredit it. ... While the handwriting appears quite similar to Spalding’s there seem to be some obvious differences to anyone who looks at it carefully. Furthermore, the manuscript of one of Joseph’s revelations is in the handwriting of a scribe whose writing, to the layman’s eye, looks more like the Book of Mormon portion attributed to Spalding than the undisputed samples of Spalding’s handwriting itself. This shows that someone whose handwriting was very much like Spalding’s was one of Joseph’s scribes in the 1830 period, .... If not, followed by twelve pages of manuscript which contain the actual handwriting of Spalding, then the facts preclude identifying that manuscript with the printer’s copy stolen by Rigdon. This is evident from the fact that the twelve manuscript pages attributed to Spalding are part of twenty pages on identical paper stock. The four pages that precede the “Spalding” block of material and the four that follow are in the known handwriting of identified scribes of Joseph Smith, Jr. This would mean that at least eight pages without any printer’s copy, by Spalding alone, in his manuscript. What is even more inexplicable is that two of the four pages immediately before the twelve “Spalding” pages have page-titles, summarizing the page’s content, in the same apparent “Spalding” hand, while the content of the pages themselves is written in the known handwriting of those serving as Joseph’s scribes in 1829. Why would Spalding send a printer blank pages with page-titles at the top of two of these, followed by twelve pages of manuscript, the first page of which starts in the middle of a sentence (viz., “and I commanded him in the voice of Laban...” ¡= Ne. 4:20c)? This makes no sense at all and can hardly be regarded as a printer’s copy. Moreover, Joseph Smith must be regarded as having composed and dictated the material on the blank pages sent by Spalding, and or having done this in the same vocabulary and style as the Spalding portion. Furthermore he succeeded in filling these blank pages with no indication of either crowding or coming up short and even connected smoothly into the incomplete sentence of Spalding without a hint of discontinuity. Anyone that clever could just as easily have composed the entire content himself. In any event, the fragmentary nature of the alleged Spalding material makes it impossible to connect this with any printer’s copy that might have been stolen by Rigdon. There is one final consideration that is really fatal to the identification of the twelve pages of the Book of Mormon manuscript as being the actual writings of Spalding himself. When Joseph was producing the Book of Mormon he met with a very disastrous event. Mrs. Harris, the wife of his financial backer, managed to get hold of 116 pages of the opening portion of the Book of Mormon manuscript and never returned them to Joseph Smith. Had Joseph been dictating from a manuscript provided for him by Rigdon, he would have been able to have read off the same portion again. Likewise, even if he had read his translation from the words God had caused to appear on his Seer Stone ... it should also have been no problem for God to restore the lost pages in identical words. However, it seems more likely that Joseph had simply dictated his material as it came to his mind. This meant that he could not reproduce word-for-word what he had already dictated on those 116 missing pages. The way out of this embarrassing predicament was given in a very curious statement in which he was informed that there was a second set of plates and that the Lord knew that those who had taken the 116 pages had altered the words so that, even if Joseph had been able to give the identical wording, they now would not agree with his original copy (it is not explained how such changes could be made on a pen and ink page of that period without being detected). Therefore, the Lord instructed him to take the second set of plates that had been provided for just that situation and translate the material covering the same period from them. References to that second set of plates appear, therefore, in the part of the Book of Mormon which replaced the purloined manuscript, explaining that it was for “a wise purpose” that this second set was being made. One of the passages mentioning this second set of plates that rescues Smith from his problem occurs right in the middle of the section said to be in the handwriting of Spalding ( ¡= Ne. 4:17), in which he made the observation that there was a second set of plates and that the “Spalding” portion of the Book of Mormon had been altered, and that Smith dictated it, but there is no explanation why Spalding should introduce a second set of plates into his story where it serves no purpose.

The writers have failed to explain how these facts correlate with the theory they present in the first part of their book. How can the preoccupation with religious topics in these twelve pages be explained when Spalding’s novel was said by the earliest witnesses to have had little religious content? How can twelve manuscript pages preceded by blank pages with only page-titles over two of them be considered a part of a completed printer’s copy? ... Why should Spalding introduce, with no apparent need for it in the plot, a second set of plates, just where Joseph would need so badly a second set of plates to avoid being discredited by his inability to reproduce the identical words of the missing 116 pages? Until the researchers can provide some reasonable and satisfying correlations, backed by some kind of dependable evidence, their book will continue to make interesting reading but their proof must be regarded as highly questionable.

Wesley P. Walters

We feel that Wesley Walters’ arguments against the new Spalding theory are irrefutable, and we cannot understand how the California researchers could continue to cling to their idea in the face of Walters’ arguments. We feel that the evidence was sufficient to write Did Spalding Write The Book Of Mormon? We feel that all those who are using the new Spalding theory in dealing with Mormons should be open-minded enough to examine the other side of the question. In Did Spalding Write The Book Of Mormon? we not only provide photographic evidence that Spalding did not pen twelve pages of the Book of Mormon, but we also reprint Spalding’s only extant manuscript so that the reader can compare its style and story with the Book of Mormon.

THE “MORMON WILL”

In our publication Howard Hughes and the “Mormon Will” written in May 1976, we demonstrated that in spite of the fact that several prominent handwriting experts endorsed the so-called “Mormon Will,” the internal evidence proved it was a forgery. Two years after we wrote this pamphlet the Salt Lake Tribune (June 9, 1978) reported: “A district court jury Thursday rejected the ‘Mormon Will’ of Howard Hughes as a fraud, . . . .” Although we knew that the Mormon Church had called a press conference to announce the discovery of the will, we were surprised to learn that it was paying part of the court costs for the trial of this bogus document. The Salt Lake Tribune for June 7, 1978, revealed: “The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints issued a statement Tuesday saying is [it?] is ‘neutral’ concerning validity of the purported Howard Hughes will, but is sharing court costs in Nevada.”

On the subject of the “Mormon Will” it is also interesting to note that Henry Silver, the handwriting expert who was certain the will was genuine, is the same man that the Spalding researchers first contacted.
In our last issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we made some very serious charges concerning the pamphlet Jerald and Sandra Tanner's Distorted View of Mormonism: A Response to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? by an anonymous Mormon historian. We stated that the secret production of this booklet "had all the earmarks of an intelligence operation mounted by the CIA or the KGB." We asserted that Michael Quinn, of the Mormon Church's Brigham Young University, was involved in the project. We presented evidence showing that the response came out of the Church Historical Department and that Church Historian Leonard Arrington was deeply entangled in its production. We indicated that there was a real cover-up involved and that Dr. Arrington emphatically denied any connection with the rebuttal. In spite of his denials we maintained that Arrington was involved. Some of our readers felt we were going out on a limb in making this accusation. Finally, on August 3, 1978, we received a letter that completely shattered Dr. Arrington's entire defense. In this letter we found this startling information:

I have a typewritten copy of "Jerald and Sandra Tanner's Distorted View of Mormonism: A Response to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?" by a Latter-day Saint Historian. It was sent to me with a cover letter from Leonard Arrington dated Sept 6, 1977. If this means anything to you I would appreciate my name not being used . . . Leonard showed an interest in keeping me in the Church. I must say the arguments he and other historians used actually pushed me out faster. I was amazed that such scholars as these men would resort to the illogical arguments and untenable positions they presented to me . . . I could not maintain membership in an organization assuming the position the Church is in now. I . . . wrote a letter asking to have my membership removed.

Since the rebuttal was not published until December, 1977, we knew that if Dr. Arrington sent a typed copy of the article together with a "cover letter" on Sept. 6, 1977, he would have had to have been implicated in the project. We asked the person who made this accusation to furnish us with photographs of the documents. We received a copy of both the typewritten manuscript and Arrington's cover letter. The reader will find a photograph of Dr. Arrington's letter in the new "Enlarged Edition" of our book, Answering Dr. Clandestine: A Response to the Anonymous LDS Historian, page 24. In this letter Arrington stated:

A historian friend of mine the other day brought me this copy of a letter he had sent to one of his friends who had been reading some of the Tanner materials. I thought you might be interested in reading this as well, and I asked him for permission to xerox a copy for you. He kindly consented. I thought this would be particularly appropriate for you to read because it helps to put some perspective on the principal publication of the Tanners.

This letter proves beyond all doubt that Leonard Arrington was deeply involved in the whole matter and tends to confirm the statement in Richard Steven Marshall's paper that "Durham . . . said that due to the large number of letters the Church Historian's Office, is receiving asking for answers to the things the Tanners have published, a certain scholar, (name deliberately withheld) was appointed to write a general answer to the Tanners . . . The work is finished but its publication is delayed, according to what Leonard Arrington told Durham, because they can not decide how or where to publish it. Because the article is an open and honest approach to the problem, although it by no means answers all of the questions raised by the Tanners, it will probably be published anonymously, to avoid any difficulties which could result were such an article connected with an official Church agency" ("The New Mormon History," pages 61-62).

REBUTTAL ALTERED

The typed copy of the rebuttal tends to verify the accusations we made in the first edition of Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 6. The reader may remember that Jerald and Sandra Tanner's Distorted View of Mormonism purports to be a copy of a letter written by an anonymous Mormon historian to a friend. We pointed out, however, that since the printed version contains information which was not published until September or October of 1977, it could not be identical to a copy seen by a Mormon scholar in the later part of 1976. We demonstrated for instance, that a footnote on page 61 of the rebuttal which refers to the September 1977 issue of The Ensign would have to be an interpolation. The typed copy reveals that we were correct in this assumption. Not only was the footnote added, but 19 words were inserted into the text of the purported letter just before the footnote number appears.

In Answering Dr. Clandestine we also noted that in Footnote 67 (page 58 of the published rebuttal) BYU Studies, Spring 1971, is cited. We pointed out, however, that the distribution of this issue was delayed until October 1977. The typed copy again confirms our allegation. It does not refer to BYU Studies but only to “a paper” by Michael Rhodes which was “delivered at the Welch Lecture Series.” The footnote goes on to state that “hopefully . . . Rhode’s work will become available in print.”

A very interesting change in the text of the letter appears just above the footnote number. In the earlier typed copy, it is claimed that Dr. Hugh Nibley (probably the most well-known Church apologist) has only “limited experience” in the Egyptian language, whereas Michael Rhodes and Eric Olson have “extensive experience”:

... the work of Hugh Nibley (who has limited experience in the Egyptian language), Michael Rhodes, and Eric Olsen (both of whom have had extensive experience with the Egyptian language) on the Joseph Smith papyri have indicated some valuable insights . . .

In the published version, page 58, nineteen words have been deleted so that Dr. Nibley seems to achieve equal status:

... the work of Hugh Nibley, Michael Rhodes, and Eric Olson on the Joseph Smith papyri have indicated some valuable insights . . .

In comparing the typed copy of Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism with the printed version we find many changes have been made. We estimate that at least 400 words were deleted and over 600 added. These changes were made in spite of the fact that Dr. Clandestine claims to be a “professionally trained historian.” On page 42 of his booklet, Clandestine charges that “James Madison made extensive changes in his own notes of the Constitutional Convention twenty years after they were originally written, and his ‘contemporary’ Notes were published as he had changed them rather than as he had originally written them; . . . He goes on, however, to tell of the “present standards concerning plagiarizing, footnoting, and editorial adherence to the original manuscript . . . if Dr. Clandestine is really a “professionally trained historian” and is familiar with the present standards in professional historical writing, why did he fail to follow them in this piece of work? He purports to give us a copy of a letter which apparently saved a Mormon convert from apostasy, yet extensive changes have been made in the text of the “letter” without any indication. While most of the changes are not very important, some of them are significant. For instance, in one place in the typed copy (page 22) Dr. Clandestine charged that we used incessant repetition and that this characteristic of our work reminded him of “hypnotism, the Nazi approach to propaganda, and other mind-control efforts.”

In the published version this has been entirely deleted without any indication. For a study of other changes see the enlarged edition of Answering Dr. Clandestine, pages 25-26.

As we pointed out earlier, we estimated that over 1,000 words were either added or deleted from Dr. Clandestine’s booklet. Now, if it were not for the fact that he put his work forth as a copy of a “letter” which he prepared “for a friend” who was troubled after reading our book, we would have no objection to the changes. Every author has the right to change his own manuscript. We certainly do not feel, however, that a “professionally trained historian” should make changes in the contents of a letter. It appears, then, that Mormon apologists who would defend the rebuttal are faced with a serious dilemma. If the letter was genuine, then the printed version is a falsified copy. On the other hand, if they admit that it was never really a “letter,” they will have to explain why it was published as such. Neither alternative seems very attractive.

When we first published our response to the anonymous rebuttal, some people accused us of making too much of the Watergate-like way it was produced. They felt we did not spend enough time answering the specific charges which it contained. In the enlarged edition of Answering Dr. Clandestine more space is devoted to answering the allegations. In addition, Wesley P. Walters, a scholar noted for his work on Mormon history, has also written an attack on the anonymous historian’s rebuttal which we have included in Answering Dr. Clandestine.

BENSON VS ARRINGTON

One thing we deal with at some length in our new edition is the growing rift between Mormon scholars and some of the General Authorities. Ezra Taft Benson, for instance, is very opposed to some of the things that Church Historian Leonard Arrington is doing. (Benson is President of the Twelve Apostles and is next in line to become President of the Church.) Arrington’s problems began just after his appointment to the office of Church Historian when he announced the formation of a group known as “Friends of Church History.” When about 500 people showed up for the first meeting, the General Authorities apparently became fearful that such a large group studying history might uncover things which would prove embarrassing to the Church. Orders were given to hold up the project, and no meetings have been held since November 30, 1972 (see, Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 41). Although no official announcement has been made, it is reasonable to assume that “Friends of Church History” is now defunct.

Some of Dr. Arrington’s other projects seem to be endangered by the attitude of the General Authorities. One of Arrington’s dreams was to have the Church publish a one-volume history. This dream seemed to become a reality in 1976 when James B. Allen and Glen M. Leonard produced the book The Story of the Latter-day Saints. In the Foreword to this book, Dr. Arrington said that “two of our finest historians” had been assigned to the project—James B. Allen is, of course, Assistant Church Historian. Dr. Arrington went on to state that he had personally approved the manuscript for publication. Although most Mormons would consider this a harmless publication, President Benson felt that it was too humanistic and it is rumored that he wanted it shredded. In a letter dated June 23, 1978, President Benson stated: “The book, The Story of the Latter-day Saints, will not be republished.” It appears, therefore, that as far as Mormon history is concerned, the views of Leonard Arrington and Ezra Taft Benson are diametrically opposed. While Benson seems to believe that anything unfavorable to the Church should be suppressed, Arrington seems to be somewhat more scholarly in his approach. Although the rebuttal to our work is disappointing in many respects, it does make some admissions that tend to verify our accusations. It seems, in fact, to contain a thinly-disguised attack on Benson’s view of Mormon history (see Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 43), and some scholars feel that it was published anonymously to hide its true origin from President Benson and other conservatives in the Church. One Mormon historian asked us not to expose the role of the Historical Department in the rebuttal lest it cause unsurmountable problems for Leonard Arrington. We feel, however, that Benson was probably aware of Arrington’s involvement before we brought it to the public’s attention. There is reason to believe that Benson wants to remove Arrington from his position as Church Historian. Some feel that he will gradually be “phased out.” It is also reported that it is becoming increasingly difficult for Mormon scholars to get access to documents in the Historical Dept. If Dr. Arrington should survive under the leadership of President Spencer W. Kimball, it is very unlikely that he will remain Church Historian if Ezra Taft Benson becomes President.

In any case, in the enlarged edition of Answering Dr. Clandestine we have some interesting information concerning the confrontation between Mormon scholars and the General Authorities of the Church. We also deal with the Nag Hammadi texts. Mormon scholars contend that these ancient documents support the Church’s doctrines. Our examination of these texts, however, reveals that although they are important documents, they are of little value when it comes to supporting the unique claims of the Mormon Church. We deal with many other important issues in the new enlarged edition of Answering Dr. Clandestine. The price of this book is $2.00. The quantity prices are: 2 for $3.50 — 5 for $7.00 — 10 for $12.00.

JOSEPH SMITH’S DIARIES
DEAL FATAL BLOW TO HISTORY OF CHURCH

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 126-135, we demonstrated that the History of the Church which Church leaders always attributed to Joseph Smith himself was mostly compiled after his death. The evidence clearly shows that less than 40% was compiled during his lifetime. The remainder was not compiled until after Smith’s death in 1844. It was not completed, in fact, until 1856, and many important changes were made after that date. The fact that more than 60% of the History was not compiled until after Joseph Smith’s death invalidates the statement which appears on the title page of all six volumes: “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet BY HIMSELF.”

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we gave evidence which clearly showed that the writings of other people were changed to the first person to make it appear that they were the very words of Joseph Smith himself. This evidence has forced Mormon apologists into a very compromised position. Dr. Clandestine, for instance, has to admit that our charges are true:

They criticize the fact that deletions and additions were introduced into the original texts without acknowledgments in the printed history, that Joseph Smith’s autobiographical “History” was written in large part after his death, by clerks and “historians” who transformed third-person accounts by others than Joseph Smith into first-person autobiography of Joseph Smith, and that between the first serialized publication of the history (1840s-1860s) and the seven-volume edition of the History of the Church in the twentieth century, there have been thousands of deletions and additions not noted in the text or footnotes. This is certainly all true, and as an historian I regret the confusion that such editorial practices have caused. (Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism: A Response to Mormonism-Shadow or Reality? page 42)

Since we now know that more than 60% of Joseph Smith’s History was not compiled until after his death, the question arises as to what were the sources which Mormon historians used to create the purported history. We know that they used newspapers and journals of other Mormon leaders and that much of the material came only from memory. (It was, of course, written in the first person to make it appear that Joseph Smith was the author.) We have always felt that Joseph Smith’s private diaries were used as a source in preparing the history, but we were denied access to them. Finally, in August, 1976, we were able to examine microfilm copies of these important documents. We can now see some of the reasons why the Mormon leaders suppressed Joseph Smith is diaries.

The first thing we notice is that there are large periods of Joseph Smith’s life that are not covered by extant diaries—unless some of the diaries are still being suppressed. Only three of the last six years of Smith’s lifetime as it appears in the History of the Church can be checked against his diaries. The famous Rocky Mountain Prophecy, for instance, appears in the printed history under a date when Joseph Smith did not keep a diary. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we demonstrated that this prophecy was not written in the original manuscript of the History of the Church until after Joseph Smith’s death (see also Answering Dr. Clandestine, pages 29-31). Dr. Clandestine has to admit that “the exact source for the account of Joseph Smith’s prophecy of August 6, 1842, is not clear” (Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s, Distorted View of Mormonism, page 15).

Unfortunately, Joseph Smith’s diaries do not contain the important information that we would expect to find about his life. Many pages are left blank or only contain information on the weather or some other trivial matters. The value of the diaries decreases even more when we learn that a large portion of the entries were not written in the first person, but rather by Joseph Smith’s Nauvoo scribe Willard Richards. For instance, under the date of October 20, 1843, we read this entry in Joseph Smith’s Diary: “heard that Joseph went to Ramus yesterday has not returned.”

Our brief examination of the diaries reveals that although they were used as one of the sources for “Joseph Smith’s History,” there was no attempt to follow them faithfully. The Mormon leaders chose only the portions of the journals which served their purposes. For instance, in his diary Joseph Smith related a dream and its interpretation which tended to discredit his famous prophecy about the Civil War. This material was simply omitted in Joseph Smith’s History. We will have more to say about this matter in the chapter on false prophecy in the book which will be published by Moody Press.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we show that Joseph Smith frequently broke the Word of Wisdom—i.e., a revelation which forbids the use of tea, coffee, tobacco or alcoholic beverages (see Doctrine and Covenants, Section 89). Dr. Clandestine was unable to refute our evidence and had to admit that Joseph Smith had an “occasional glass of... beer or wine” (Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism, page 9, note 2). On page 7 of the same booklet he speaks of “Joseph Smith’s polygamy, smoking and drinking, . . . He maintains, however, that the Mormon leaders have not tried to suppress the fact that Smith broke the Word of Wisdom. In Answering Dr. Clandestine, pages 28-29, we prove beyond any doubt that there was a deliberate cover-up on this matter. Joseph Smith’s diaries provide additional evidence concerning his disregard for the Word of Wisdom and the attempt to cover-up the matter in the History of the Church. Under the date of January 20, 1843, the following was recorded in Joseph Smith’s Diary:

    Elder Hyde told of the excellent white wine he drank in the east. Joseph prophesied in the name of the Lord—that he would drink wine with him in that country.

These words were suppressed in the printed History of the Church.

The Mormon Church forbids the use of tea, but according to Joseph Smith’s Diary, March 11, 1843, Smith was fond of strong tea:

    . . . in the office Joseph said he had tea, with his breakfast his wife asked him if it was good, he said if it was a little stronger he should like it better, when Mother Granger remarked, “It is so strong, and good, I should think it would answer both for drink, and food.”

This was entirely omitted in the History of the Church (see vol. 5, page 302).

Another statement which was probably embarrassing to the Mormon leaders appeared in Joseph Smith’s Diary under the date of May 19, 1844: “Ive I talked a long time in the bar Room . . .” in the History of the Church, vol. 6, page 398, this has been modified to read: “In the evening I talked to the brethren at my house, . . .”

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 408, we show that Joseph Smith sold liquor in Nauvoo, and that his wife Emma almost moved out when he installed a bar in the Nauvoo Mansion.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we show that on many occasions the Mormon leaders emphatically denied polygamy at the very time they were living in it. Some of Joseph and Hyrum Smith’s denials were so embarrassing to later Mormon leaders that they were altered in the History of the Church. Since publishing our book, we have learned that a statement in Joseph Smith’s History, which sanctions plural marriage was actually a condemnation of the practice before it was falsified. This statement was used by Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the tenth president of the Mormon Church, in rebuttal to a member of the Reorganized LDS Church who claimed that Joseph Smith never endorsed the doctrine of plurality of wives:

    Whether any such statement was ever printed in his lifetime or not I am not prepared to say. But I know of such evidence being recorded during his lifetime, for I have seen it.

    I have copied the following from the Prophet’s manuscript record of Oct. 5, 1843, and know it is genuine:

    “Gave instructions to try those persons who were preaching, teaching or practicing the doctrine of plurality of wives or this law—Joseph forbids it, and the practice thereof. No man shall have but one wife. (Joseph Smith Diary, October 5, 1843, Church Historical Department)

The reader will notice how this has been changed in the History of the Church, to make it appear that Joseph Smith has the “keys of power” to perform plural marriages if the Lord “directs otherwise”:

    Gave instructions to try those persons who were preaching teaching or practicing the doctrine of plurality of wives or this law—Joseph forbids it, and the practice thereof. No man shall have but one wife. (Joseph Smith Diary, October 5, 1843, Church Historical Department)

As we indicated before, in compiling the History of the Church, the Mormon leaders used only the parts of Joseph Smith’s diaries which suited their purposes. Where a portion did not say what they wanted, they altered it or ignored it completely, sometimes using an entirely different source. The diaries of Joseph Smith, then, tend only to deal another heavy blow to the credibility of “Joseph Smith’s History of the Church.” No wonder the Mormon leaders suppressed these diaries for about 130 years.

PUBLISHING SMITH’S DIARIES

When we first started our work we became acquainted with M. Wilford Poulson who had taught at the Mormon Church’s Brigham Young University for many years. Professor Poulson sometimes boasted that he was one of a very limited number of people who had examined Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary. He claimed that he was only allowed access to it because of his very special connections in the Historian’s Office. During the 1960s we exerted a great deal of pressure on the Mormon leaders to make the diaries of Joseph Smith available. The General Authorities, of course, resisted our efforts, but some of the Mormon scholars agreed with us on this issue and began to speak out against the suppression of important Church documents. Strange as it may seem, even Dr. Leonard Arrington spoke out against suppression before he was chosen as Church Historian:

It is unfortunate for the cause of Mormon history that the Church Historian’s Library, which is in the possession of virtually all of the diaries of leading Mormons, has not seen fit to publish these diaries or to permit qualified historians to use them without restriction. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1966, pages 25-26)

When Dr. Arrington was appointed Church Historian it was reported that the diaries of Joseph Smith would finally be published. Dean C. Jessee was assigned to begin making the transcripts of these documents. Unfortunately, however, almost seven years have passed since Dr. Arrington took office and nothing has appeared in print—not even Joseph Smith’s first “1832-34 Diary. We understand that when Dean Jessee was asked if he planned to have something in print by 1980, he replied that he hoped to have it out by the turn of the century. We do not know how serious Mr. Jessee was in making this statement, but as we pointed out before, it is a fact that Ezra Taft Benson and some of the other General Authorities are trying to stop Dr. Arrington’s projects. We believe that these men would be especially opposed to the publication of the diaries of Joseph Smith. Although we have had access to a microfilm of the diaries since 1976 (as yet we do not have our own copy), we have waited to see if the Church would begin publication. We do not feel that members of the Church should have to wait until the millennium to find out the truth about these diaries. Therefore, we decided to begin by printing Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary. H. Michael Marquardt freely volunteered his services and provided us with a typescript of this early diary. Although we were reluctant to do it, we have completed the project and it is now available at Modern Microfilm Co. We felt that the Mormon Church itself should have printed the diaries for its members. After all, they have the original volumes and it would have been much better to make a typescript from them. Mr. Marquardt, who does not have any access to records in the Church Historical Department, had to work from a microfilm and photocopies of Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary. Although he has been very careful in his work, the original documents probably would have thrown much light on some portions that were hard to decipher. Mr. Marquardt does not put his work forth as a perfect transcript, but we feel that he has done a very good job. In printing the diary we have included a number of photographs of the original handwritten pages.

We feel that it is a very sad indictment on the Mormon leaders that we have to publish their own foundational documents and books. For instance, the Church suppressed Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar for 130 years and it was not available to scholars until we published it in 1966. Joseph Smith’s first handwritten account of the First Vision was likewise suppressed until we printed it in 1965. Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation on plural marriage as a means to make the Indians a “white” and “delightsome” people was kept hidden from the Mormon people until we published it in 1974. Many other examples could be cited, but the ones we have presented should be sufficient to convince the reader that the General Authorities do not want their people to become acquainted with the real Joseph Smith.

While Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary is not as important as the diaries he wrote later in his life, Professor Poulson felt that it was useful in showing that Joseph Smith had the ability to write the Book of Mormon. He was certainly not the ignorant man that some have represented him to be. In any case, while Michael Marquardt is preparing the very revealing 1835-36 Diary, we can offer the reader Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary for $2.00 a copy. In this publication we have also included the first photographs of all six pages of the document which contains Joseph Smith’s “strange account” of the First Vision. Mr. Marquardt has done a line-for-line transcription of this important document.

MODERN MICROFILM & THE FUTURE

It was about fourteen years ago when we began a full-time operation at Modern Microfilm Company. Our object was to produce accurate literature on Mormonism. It was only by faith that we launched out on this project, and it has been through faith that we have been able to carry on. Although we have passed through some deep waters during these fourteen years, it seems that the Lord has always provided us with the strength and resources to continue the work. Our lowest point was probably 1966 when we decided we would have to sell out all of our reprints and possibly go back to only a part-time work on Mormonism. Fortunately, however, our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? began to sell so fast that we were able to survive the crisis and even enlarge our operations. In 1977 we were able to purchase a printing press that is about three times as fast as the one which we had for over a decade. This has made it possible for us to reprint many of our publications and to do some new books as well. The reader should consult our new book list to find out what we have available.

Within the next month or two our sales on Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? will probably have mounted to over 30,000 copies, and there is no evidence that interest is declining. Since we feel that our work is really a missionary effort, we have tried to charge the lowest price possible for the literature and still stay in business. While many books have doubled in price, the 1972 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? actually declined from $8.50 to $7.95. We find, however, that with the mounting price of paper and other costs we can no longer continue at such a low margin of profit. We have held the line as long as we possibly can; therefore, we have decided that we must raise the price to $9.95 ($11.95 for hard-back binding). We feel that this is still a real bargain because most publishers would charge 15 or 20 dollars for a book of this size.

We have previously paid postage on mail orders, but since postage on books has more than doubled we will have to ask our customers to send an additional 10% for postage and handling.

We are temporarily short on funds, but when we consider the circumstances it is amazing that we have done as well as we have. It took about a year to prepare the manuscript for Moody Press and we will not receive any royalties until some time after it appears in print. The publication will probably be somewhat delayed because of the change in the Mormon doctrine on blacks. This change has made it necessary for us to rewrite the chapter concerning Mormon theology and blacks.
Although the future looks very bright, at the present time we are functioning with a limited amount of capital. This, of course, makes our work less effective. For instance, we are forced to print very limited quantities of the works listed on our booklist. This wastes a great deal of time because we are forced to jump back and forth from one project to another. This time could be better spent getting out new material. With more capital we could run things a lot smoother and have far better results in getting the truth out. A number of people have sent us gifts and these have been greatly appreciated. Unfortunately, however, these gifts cannot be deducted from a person’s income tax because we are not a nonprofit organization.

In the past some of our friends have helped us with loans which we have been able to repay. If anyone is interested in loaning some money at the present time we could pay 10% interest. A loan of $1,000 would return $100 interest within a year (12 monthly payments of $91.67) or $200 if loaned for two years, and $5,000 would bring $1,000 interest if loaned for two years. We could use any amount between $500 and $5,000 and would sign a promissory note to make the matter legally binding. We feel that this would be a good investment, and it would help us to make our work more effective.

While most people will not be able to help this work in a financial way, all of our Christian friends are able to pray for us and for the Mormon people. The scriptures say that the “effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16). We feel that the Lord has really blessed our work and that it is being widely used as a tool to bring Mormons to the knowledge of the true Gospel. We believe that with the Lord’s help we can weather the present storm and that thousands of Mormons will come to a knowledge of the truth.

NEW BOOK

An article which we wrote on Mormonism has been published as Chapter 10 of a new book entitled, Dynamic Religious Movements, edited by David J. Hesselgrave. It was published by Baker Book House in 1978 and sells for $9.95. We will not be handling this book, but it can be ordered from your local bookstore.

Tape Embarrassing

While it is easy for a person to criticize an adversary, it is always hard to blow the whistle when something goes wrong in one’s own camp. It is with some difficulty, therefore, that we report the following: About two months after the Mormon President Spencer W. Kimball gave the famous revelation concerning blacks holding the Priesthood, a friend of ours met with the Apostle LeGrand Richards. Although Apostle Richards was not aware of it, a tape-recorder inside the man’s brief case was recording the conversation. Apostle Richards was very frank in the discussion and uttered statements that seemed to confirm some observations in the last issue of the Messenger. However this may be, we were rather concerned that a tape-recording had been made. We knew, of course, that this was not illegal because one party had consented to the recording. Nevertheless, we felt that Apostle Richards should have been aware of the fact that his voice was being preserved on tape. In any case, someone later borrowed the tape and made a transcription. Subsequently the tape fell into the hands of a man who decided to publish it. Another man has even been playing portions of the tape on radio stations.

We became so concerned about these developments that we discussed the matter at length with the individual who had made the original recording. After thinking the matter over, he decided to send a letter to Apostle Richards in which he apologized for his indiscretion in allowing such a situation to develop. Also he has sent a message asking the man who has been playing portions of the tape over the radio to desist. In addition to this, he has contacted the man who published it, and the plates from which it was printed have been destroyed. We think these actions are to be commended, and we hope that no one else will attempt to publish or duplicate this tape. We also hope that in the future both sides will refrain from the use of secret recordings. Such recordings will only tend to cause distrust and unnecessary dissension. For a discussion of the problems involved in secret tape-recordings see our book Mormons, Spies, Hughes and the CIA, pages 59-62.

As to the question of whether the President of the Church really received a “revelation” on the blacks, the report of the 148th Semiannual General Conference throws some light upon the subject (see The Ensign, November 1978, page 16). Members of the Church were asked to “accept this revelation as the word and will of the Lord, but the only document presented to the people was the letter of the First Presidency, dated June 8, 1978 (see the Salt Lake City Messenger, July 1978). We feel that it is becoming increasingly clear that there is no written “revelation” on the subject.

THE THINKING HAS BEEN DONE:
THE MOUNTAIN MEADOWS TO GUYANA

Since the recent massacre in Guyana there has been a great deal of discussion concerning what constitutes a cult and the process of brainwashing used by such a group. The Salt Lake Tribune for November 26, 1978 reported:

The brainwashing, said the experts, was just as subtle as the charismatic tune played by the Pied Piper. Brainwashing, they point out, doesn’t require a dungeon, bright lights, or physical torture.

The Guyana victims, they said, probably lost their will and substituted blind obedience months and years before they even went to the “Peoples Temple” complex in Guyana, long before their suicides . . .

Ultimately they had to turn possessions over to the temple, follow orders without question as they fell in line behind the charismatic leader Jones. . . . Dr. Calvin Frederick, chief of emergency mental health and disaster assistance at the National Institute of Mental Health, commented on how to avoid brainwashing:

“Unless you are aware ahead of time of some of the dangers you cannot help yourself. For psychological ‘immunization’ to work it must take place prior to exposure . . . .

“There is nothing wrong in wanting to belong to a group, to do good through that group, to get swept up by the activity—but without losing control over your will. . . . You do their thing but you still do your own thing. You are still the master.”

The difference is that the dangerous groups reduce participants to dependent, childlike states as part of the brainwashing, Frederick says.

“New members are told . . . ‘You do not need to think. I will do the thinking for you.’ A lot of worries are taken a-way. The group promises to take care of you forever and remove all stress.”

The next step is blind obedience in which people might follow an order to jump off a cliff.
For a number of years we have tried to point out that Mormonism encourages blind obedience. For instance, the ward teacher’s message for June 1945 contained these statements:

> "... no man or woman in this dispensation will ever enter into the celestial kingdom of God without the consent of Joseph..." (Joseph Smith’s secret practice of polygamy together with his political ambitions and the destruction of an opposition press (The Nauvoo Expositor) eventually led to his murder in a jail at Carthage, Illinois (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 252-59). After Smith’s death relations between the Mormons and their neighbors deteriorated to the point where the Mormon people were forced to leave the city of Nauvoo. Brigham Young, the second leader of the Mormon people, blamed the U.S. Government for his troubles. Apostle Orson Pratt wrote the following in 1845: “Brethren awake! — be determined to get out from this evil notion next spring. We do not want one saint to be left in the United States after that time...” (Times and Seasons, vol. 6, page 1043).

Like Jim Jones, Brigham Young decided to take his people “beyond the boundaries of the United States, but the Mexican War “changed these calculations” (Quest for Empire, page 115). It is claimed that Jim Jones “viewed anyone who criticised or defected from the Temple as part of a conspiracy, aimed at destroying him and his movement” (Salt Lake Tribune, December 5, 1978). President Brigham Young had a similar attitude toward dissenters:

> "I say, rather than that apostates should flourish here, I will unsheath my bowie knife, and conquer or die. (Great commotion in the congregation, and a simultaneous burst of feeling, assenting to the declaration.) Now, you nasty apostates, clear out, or judgment will be put to the line, and righteousness to the plummet. (Voices, generally, “go it, go it.”) If you say it is right, raise your hands. (All hands up.) Let us call upon the Lord to assist us in this, and every good work. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 83)

During his reign over the people of Utah, Brigham Young preached the doctrine of Blood Atonement. According to this doctrine, a person who committed certain sins such as murder, adultery, stealing, apostasy or marriage to an African had to make atonement by sacrificing his own life so that his blood would be spilled upon the ground. In a sermon given in 1857, Brigham Young taught:

> "Now take a person in this congregation who has knowledge with regard to being saved in the kingdom of God... and suppose that he is overtaken in a gross fault, that he has committed a sin that he knows will deprive him of that exaltation which he desires, and that he cannot attain to it without the shedding of his blood, and also knows that by having his blood shed he will atone for that sin, and be saved and exalted with the Gods, is there a man or woman in this house but what would say, “shed my blood that I may be saved and exalted with the Gods?” All mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves, even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers or sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that can not be atoned for without the shedding of their blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood?"

Although the Bible warns: “Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, ...” (Jeremiah 17:5), President Brigham Young claimed that “The Lord Almighty leads this Church, and he will never suffer you to be led astray if you are found doing your duty. You may go home and sleep as sweetly as a babe in its mother’s arms, to any danger of your feeders leading you astray, ...” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 9, page 289).

> "... teach the convert that “You do not need to worry about the church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, ..." (Ibid., vol. 6, page 32)

The reader will notice that at least to some extent Mormonism encourages the very thing Dr. Frederick warned against—i.e., teaching the convert that “You do not need to worry about the church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, ...” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 106)

Although we do not find anything in present-day Mormonism to compare with the tragedy in Guyana, when we examine Mormon history we find some interesting parallels to the religion of Jim Jones. For instance, Joseph Smith was certainly a charismatic leader who had a powerful influence on his followers. Brigham Young, the second President of the Church, emphasized:

> "he was our Prophet, our Seer, and Revelator; He was our dictator in the things of God, and it was for us to listen to him, and do just as he told us. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, page 3 page 334)

Heber C. Kimball, First Councillor to President Brigham Young, made these statements about obedience to the leaders of the Church:

> "... learn to do as you are told, ... if you are told by your leader to do a thing, do it, Lone of your business whether it is right or wrong. (Ibid., vol. 6, page 32) for them, the wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle’s being in full force, but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation and it is necessary to spill his blood on the earth in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire.

That is the way to love mankind. (Sermon by Brigham Young, printed in the Deseret News, February 18, 1857)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 398-413, we give a great deal of information concerning the doctrine of Blood Atonement. Gustive O. Larson, Professor of Church History, at the Church’s Brigham Young University, made this comment about Brigham Young’s suicide-murder doctrine:

To whatever extent the preaching on blood atonement, may have influenced action, it would have been in relation to Mormon disciplinary action among its own members. In point would be a verbally reported case of a Mr. Johnson in Cedar City who was found guilty of adultery with his step-daughter by a bishop’s court a sentenced to death for atonement of his sin. According to the report of reputable eye witnesses, judgment was executed with consent of the offender who went to his unconsecrated grave in full confidence of salvation through the shedding of his blood. Such a case, however primitive, is understandable within the meaning of the doctrine and the emotional extremes of the Reformation. (Utah Historical Quarterly, January 1958, page 62, note 39)

Conditions in Utah became so intolerable under Brigham Young that the U.S. Government finally had to send a small army to restore order. Like Jim Jones, the Mormon leaders stirred up their people to the point of bloodshed. They misrepresented the intentions of the U.S. Government by stating that the troops were going to kill them and steal the women. On September 27, 1857, Heber C. Kimball claimed that the troops “exulted over us . . . telling how they were going to kill brother Brigham and all those who would uphold ‘Mormonism,’ . . . They swore that they would use every woman in this place at their own pleasure—that they would slay old Brigham and old Heber; . . .” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 274). Charles L. Walker recorded the following in his diary “Sunday, Jan. 24, 1858 . . . Went to the Tabernacle. Bro. E. T. Benson . . . said the U.S. were all gaping full of fear about the Mormons and wereshipping troops around by California. Said it was their intention to destroy all the Mormons.”

Brigham Young issued a “proclamation” which stated that he intended to resist the U.S. troops when they tried to enter the territory of Utah. This document also stated that “no person shall be allowed to pass or repass into, or through, or from this territory, without a permit from the proper officer” (A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 4, page 274). This “proclamation” virtually made the inhabitants of Utah prisoners of Brigham Young. Heber C. Kimball boldly asserted:

We have declared our independence . . . that man and that woman who cannot stand up to the test, I ask you to leave as quick as you can; for when the time of the test comes, as the Lord God Almighty lives, if you then leave us or betray us, that is the end of you. . . .

This year’s trouble . . . will amount to this—a collision between this people and the United States; and the gate will be shut down between us and them . . .

When the United States have done their best, then other nations will tackle us, and so things will go on, until every nation is brought into subjection to the kingdom of God. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 275)

The conflict which followed is known as the “Utah War.” The historian Hubert Howe Bancroft says that “the Mormons lived on the troops, stampeding their cattle, plundering or destroying their provision trains, and only after all fear of active hostilities had been removed, selling them surplus grain at exorbitant rates” (History of Utah, page 499).

THE MASSACRE

The Mormon historian B.H. Roberts called the Mountain Meadows Massacre “the most lamentable episode in Utah history, and in the history of the church” (A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 4, page 139). This massacre took place when a company of emigrants tried to pass through the territory of Utah at the time of the “Utah War.” Since the Mormon leaders had been fervently preaching the doctrine of Blood Atonement and stirring up their people with the spirit of war, the emigrants could not have picked a worse time to try to pass through Mormon country. As they went south the Mormons refused to sell them grain. When the emigrants arrived at Mountain Meadows, about 325 miles south of Salt Lake City, the Mormons encouraged the Indians to attack them. The Indians could not overcome the emigrants, however, and the Mormons were forced to directly participate in the massacre which followed. Mormon historian B. H. Roberts admits that the number of “whites” at the Mountain Meadows had swelled to “between fifty and sixty” by September 10, 1857 (A Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 4, page 153). Another Mormon writer, William E. Berrett, gives this description of the massacre:

It was a deliberately planned massacre, treacherously carried into execution. On the morning of September 11, flag of truce was sent to the emigrant camp and terms of surrender proposed. The emigrants were to give up their arms. The wounded were to be loaded into wagons, followed by the women and children, and the men to bring up the rear, single file. Thus they were to be conducted by the whites to Cedar City. This was agreed to, and the march began.

A short distance from the encampment, the white men at a given signal, fell the unarmed emigrant men. At the same time hundreds of Indians, who had lain in ambush, rushed upon the hapless party. In five minutes the terrible tragedy was enacted. . . . Only the smallest children were spared. (The Restored Church, 1956, page 468-469)

A monument at Mountain Meadows contains this statement: “A company of about 140 Arkansans and Missouri emigrants led by Captain Charles Fancher, on route to California, was attacked by white men and Indians. All but 17, being small children, were killed.” Juanita Brooks, a Mormon scholar who is considered to be a real authority on the massacre, says that “While Brigham Young and George A. Smith, the church authorities chiefly responsible, did not specifically order the massacre, they did preach sermons and set up social conditions which made it possible” (The Mountain Meadows Massacre, 1970, page 219). Mrs. Brooks goes so far as to admit that “Brigham Young was accessory after the fact, in that he knew what had happened, and how and why it happened. Evidence of this is abundant and unmistakable, and from the most impeccable Mormon sources” (Ibid.). In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 493-515, we give a detailed account of the Mountain Meadows Massacre and the cover-up and obstruction of justice which followed.

The historian Bancroft says that the army that came to Utah passed “the winter of 1857-8 amid privations no less severe than those endured at Valley Forge . . .” He claimed that the Utah War “cost several hundred lives.” It would, of course, be hard to determine just how many of these men would have lived if the Mormons had not spent their time destroying and stealing their provisions. While the Mormons were reluctant to fire upon the U. S. troops, they killed a large number of innocent civilians in Utah at this time. The Mountain Meadows Massacre, the Aiken Massacre and a number of other cruel murders were committed during this period of rebellion. We feel that hundreds of people probably lost their lives because of the teachings and foolish orders of Brigham Young. In the case of the Aiken massacre we feel that there is very good evidence linking Brigham Young directly to the crime (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 448-450).

SPIRITUAL SUICIDE

During the last year our minds have been impressed with the danger of cults. For instance, just a few months ago a man by the name of Immanuel David committed suicide in a canyon near Salt Lake City. David, who had served as a Mormon missionary, broke away from the Church and formed his own cult. After his death his wife and children jumped (some of the children were apparently pushed) from a tall building on West Temple—just 12 blocks north of our company. The reader will remember that Dr. Frederick said that when people allow someone else to do their thinking the “next step is blind obedience in which people might follow an order to jump off a cliff.” In November Jim Jones induced his followers to commit suicide.

Brigham Young’s teaching concerning Blood Atonement (i.e., suicide or murder for atonement of sin) is almost as bizarre as Jim Jones’ order that his followers kill themselves. Although Blood Atonement is not practiced by Mormons today, some of the polygamous cults which have broken off from the Mormon Church still strongly advocate Brigham Young’s doctrine of killing sinners. The Deseret News for September 29, 1977, reported that a “polygamist cult leader” by the name of Ervil Lebaron “has been linked to more than a dozen deaths and disappearances in the West, . . .” Mormons, of course, claim that Brigham Young was a prophet but tend to ignore his teaching on Blood Atonement. Nevertheless, we feel that people should be very cautious about a religion which teaches “When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done.” Since the Bible warns against trusting in an arm of flesh, we feel that it is possible to commit spiritual suicide if we allow others to do our thinking. Jesus Himself warned that “false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall spew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect” (Mark 13:21). Notwithstanding the fact that Mormonism has many attractive things to offer, the evidence clearly shows that it is based upon a false foundation. We urge all of those who are Mormons or are thinking of joining the Church to take the time to consider the evidence we have compiled in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

EXCERPTS

FROM SOME OF THE MANY LETTERS RECEIVED

Thank you, Thank you, Thank you for Mormonism Shadow or Reality. We have always had our doubts in the Mormon Church, but had nothing but our feelings to base it on.

1. We simply never had the courage to turn away, but after reading your book we decided there was one Book we knew little about, yes the Bible, and that’s where its at. We became baptized for Christ at ages 35 and 28, . . . Thank you for bringing out the truth, for people have a right to know. (Letter from Colorado)

2. I want to thank you for the work you have done in documenting the Mormon fraud. I was also raised in the LDS Church and became a new person in n Jesus Christ only three years ago. My family dates back more than 100 years in the Church and I’ve been unable to offer any effective presentation of God’s plan to them because of their lack of trust in the Bible as God’s Word where it is not in agreement with Joseph Smith. I believe God is using your efforts to open a crack in the armor . . . (Letter from Texas)

Recently bought your book, Mormonism, Shadow or Reality . . .

3. Both my husband & myself just Praise the Lord for it! We were both raised Mormons & married in the temple in 1961 . . . the Good News, that Jesus died for our sins has been the most important thing that has ever happened to us! . . . your book has helped us so much. We’re studying it & trust that the Lord will help us in some way to reach our family & childhood friends. . . I will pray for your work daily. (Letter from California)

We continue our personal witnessing and just last week, a Mormon couple who we had given a copy of S or R [Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?] last year were saved.

That makes 23 Mormons here in Cambridge since last April. And they are all active in good Christian Churches. Praise God! (Letter from Massachusetts)

With the deepest gratitude I write and thank you for sharing your research in Mormonism Shadow or Reality? with all readers. I joined the LDS Church in November of 1975 and have since then had spiritual as well as marital problems [problems?]. I focused myself on my own self exaltation and not that of God and found myself, as you mentioned, going down further in sin after sin. Your work has forced me to look for the TRUTH . . .

I have discovered that we are here to glorify God and not ourselves and that the only way we can do so is through Jesus Christ. I have found a personal relationship with Christ and I recognize a completeness I never experienced before. (Letter from California)

I’m writing you to thank you for your publication Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. I’ve been a converted Mormon for 23 years now & 6 months ago my husband finally joined the church. Our Son . . . came home & brought his new conversion to Christ into our home. Saying the Mormons were very wrong, I fought him tooth & nail with my Book of Mormon, D&C, & testimony. Then he went to the library with me & sighted your book & insisted we check it out. We read it for 7 nights straight & yesterday I told them I was quitting the church. . . . the Joseph Smith Papyri really clinched it for me. . . . I know Joseph just made it [the Book of Abraham] up & the statement he translated it from a papyri written in Abraham’s own hand was his big mistake. . . . I just want you to see you saved another family. . . . I’ve excepted Christ into my heart & with this finally came joy & peace. (Letter from California)

Mormonism, Shadow or Reality has been a blessing to me and to our home.

I have been a Mormon since 1947, . . . but finally last week I accepted the Lord . . .
Your work has been an inspiration to me . . . (Letter from New Mexico)

I am in the process of reading your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality and must say you are a God Send! Being a Mormon myself, with many questions no one seems to be able to answer for me—was answered in your book. (Letter from Idaho)

I am reading your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. I am extremely interested in the part concerning the Temple ceremony. I have been LDS for 40 years but always disliked going to the Temple. I have felt guilty for this feeling—but I just felt something was wrong. . . . I’ve never read anti-Mormonism literature before but I find this book fascinating. (Letter from California)

Praise the Lord for your Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? . . . I came out of Mormonism due to my brother. . . . How I tried to hang onto my lies. My husband was a “jack-Mormon” and we know now the real Lord Jesus. Our lives are his . . . We’re being baptized Sunday! Now we know the joy of the Lord!!

I have a burden & calling for the Mormons. I’m studying my beat-up “Shadow.” It’s fascinating and can hardly wait to take it to the LDS here. . . . I want to really know what I’m doing & prayed & fasted to be right in tune with the Holy Spirit. . . . We’ve seen soldiers give their lives to the Lord. One was a Mormon & now wants to take friends & family out of the mess. (Letter from California)

I have read your excellent book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? . . . All who read it are impressed with the devastating evidence it contains.

For much of my life I was a member of the Reorganized CDJ Church. I am convinced now that it is a heresy, but I find myself almost a stranger to Christianity. . . . I have much to learn, but to have come at last to the Lord Jesus is great happiness. (Letter from Canada)

I used to belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of latter day Saints. But Thank God I started reading the Bible and studying history and Books like Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (Letter from California)

I was the sixth generation from my family to be blinded by the L.D.S. With the help and prayers of Christian friends I accepted Jesus Christ. As I read the Bible I also read your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality.

My husband and I and our son asked for and received excommunication from the Mormon church . . . I pray for the Mormon people and for your work to continue.” (Letter from Arizona)

Just read your book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Thank you for helping me make a decision I just couldn’t bring myself to make on my own. I will probably leave the L.D.S. Church soon. (Letter from California)

Because of the truth in your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? I have requested my excommunication from the Mormon Church. Thank you for helping me find Jesus Christ and recognize the false doctrines of the Church. (Letter from Virginia)

I was excommunicated from the Mormon church . . . at my own request. . . . I became a REBORN CHRISTIAN praise the Lord!! Your books were a great help at getting my brain “un-brainwashed” . . . I am out of bondage, after 28 years . . . (Letter from Minnesota)

After I read your book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? I gave away all my LDS books . . . and we wrote a letter to our Bishop asking for termination of our membership. . . . now I know the truth and I’m grateful to you both for your efforts to help those of us who are trapped & held bound by the Mormon Church. (Letter from Oregon)

I have been a Christian for about five months. . . . I was almost converted to Mormonism myself but God answered my prayer about Joseph Smith by leading me to your research efforts, and I thank Him for it. (Letter from California)

A personal “thanks” for writing and putting together all of your research in your Book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. Boy was that book Very badly needed. You have done a magnificent job with it.

We have been excommunicated from the Mormon Church upon our own request. And in so doing we have broken the chains that bound us to a standardized & crystalized belief. And in so doing we are finding out in the world so many new & exciting things of Jesus Christ & our great eternal God. Thank you. (Letter from Idaho)

I had been a member of LDS Ch. for 71/2 yrs, but something bothered me and the more I read the Bible the more I knew that J.S. was a fraud. . . . my husband was called in and told we were not to delve into the mysteries of the Church but all we had to do was concern ourselves with 1. Faith 2. Repentance and 3. Baptism

Of course this made us mad and we kept on researching. That was when we got hold of a copy of your book — Mormonism—Shadow or Reality.

Yes, we have left the Church after much prayer and thought and we really feel good about our decision. (Letter from Kansas)
I have discovered your volume quite by accident. Mormanism, Shadow or Reality.

It may be interesting to know I became a convert to the Mormon Church in Dec. of ’67. Before that I was a minister for the Church of Christ or Christian Church. . . . I left the ministry . . . met Mormon people & became a member . . .

Recently I have taken a very strong — objective look at religion — particularly Mormonism . . . I commend you for your work . . .

I’m very much interested in obtaining all you have printed & made available in the way of research . . . I feel I can be of use & make a contribution.

The Church—(Morman) has made use of me—They published a “propaganda” article in a Church newspaper a few years ago—”Former Minister, Now Elder”—I can reference this article if you wish. (Letter from Arizona)

I was recently given a copy of your Mormonism: Shadow or Reality. I have of late been very interested in Mormonism, as last October I was baptized into that church . . . I thought I had adequately researched the Mormon church before I allowed myself to be baptised, but I see now that I barely scratched the surface.

What bothers me most is that I possessed God’s greatest gift—a faith in Christ as personal savior—but that I traded that for the conditional salvation of Mormonism. . . . I have come to love many people within the Mormon church, but I feel a hesitancy to go on being a member, . . . I must do what is right first, then perhaps in love share that knowledge with them. I want to return my life to Jesus, not to an inanimate organization, first, then perhaps in love share that knowledge with them. I realize I have turned my back on Jesus since I joined the LDS church, for although I repeat His name each Sunday, the true meaning has fled from my heart. I earnestly want that back, for the conditional salvation of Mormonism. . . . I have come of late been very interested in Mormonism, as last October I was baptized into that church . . . I thank you both for your publication, as it has helped me re-open my eyes, as I’m also sure the prayers of my “pre-Mormon days” friends have also aided in this decision. I pray that I, too, may in God’s

ALEX JOSEPH

On November 11, 1978, the Salt Lake Tribune, printed a very sensational story relating to Joseph Smith’s Pearl of Great Price:

Claiming the “biggest breakthrough since the discovery of the Rosetta Stone,” Utah polygamist Alex Joseph said Friday he has worked out a mathematical formula proving a link between the writings of Moses and the writings of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints prophet Joseph Smith.

Mr. Joseph said in a press conference . . . that his complex formula “demonstrates that both Moses and Smith were working from the same manuscript when the former wrote Genesis and the latter, the ‘Pearl of Great Price.’” . . .

Using as a guide a burial head plate found in Egyptian pyramids, a facsimile of which also appears in the Book of Abraham in the “Pearl of Great Price,” Mr. Joseph claims to have worked out an “irrefutable” mathematical formula with which he translated part of the plate into the first words of the Bible, “In the beginning . . .”

“My formula will stand any test,” Mr. Joseph said. “It’s a very complex machine, but it is also a mathematical certainty.”

The manuscript is “a rebuttal to anti-Mormon writer Gerald Tanner’s arguments against the validity of the translations made by Joseph Smith of the ancient Egyptian manuscripts which appear in the ‘Pearl of Great Price.’” Joseph begins with a refutation of Tanner’s claim that because Smith derived 76 English words from a single Egyptian character, his efforts at translation are thereby rendered fraudulent,” according to an editor’s note in the beginning of the 24-page Joseph manuscript.

Mr. Joseph said he had been working on the project for about 10 years, and a full book is expected within a year.

We would probably not mention Mr. Joseph’s work if it were not for the fact that the newspapers and television stations gave him so much publicity. Even the Associated Press carried a story on its wire:

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Polygamist Alex Joseph says he has “just saved the Mormon Church’s bacon” by proving that Egyptian hieroglyphics Mormon founder Joseph Smith claimed to have translated “were the basis of the Old Testament writings of Moses.” . . . The 24-page booklet purports to be a refutation of attacks made on Smith’s work by Gerald Tanner of Salt Lake City in his book, Mormonism: Shadow or Reality.? (Ogden Standard-Examiner, November 12, 1978)

Mr. Joseph’s 24-page booklet is entitled, The Bones: The Key to Facsimile No. 2. In this pamphlet he is very critical of our work:

This entire approach to the translation of anything is asinine. Asiminity is, however, the main element in Tanner’s prolixic intellectualism.

I shall now leave Tanner and his pin-headed scholarship and freely translate BRASHITH, . . . (page 2)

Joseph Smith’s expertise in these matters is forever established by Gerald Tanner’s ignorant parroting of these ancient words on page 471 of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality. The title of Tanner’s book is more properly The Shadow of Tanner and the Reality of Smith.” (page 10)
Mr. Joseph’s work cannot be tested by Hebrew scholars because it does not come from any known method of translation. The Associated Press release claims that “Joseph . . . says he knows no Hebrew . . .” (Ogden Standard-Examiner, November 12, 1978) It is also obvious from his work on Facsimile No. 2 of the Book of Abraham that he knows nothing about the Egyptian language. He claims “The facsimile is the very plate from which Moses wrote the Book of Genesis” (The Bones, page 24). Although Facsimile No. 2 contains no Hebrew letters, Alex Joseph derives the word Bereshith from Figures 5-6 of that facsimile (see, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 343, Part E). What Egyptologists would see as “The goddess Hathor in the form of the Divine Cow Ahait” facing the four sons of Horus, is in Alex Joseph’s thinking the Hebrew word Bereshith. If we are correctly following his reasoning, he believes the scene takes place in a house; and since a house is Beth in Hebrew, we have the first letter in Bereshith. His method of deriving the rest of the letters is just as bizarre. It reminds us of Wells Jakeman’s attempt to read the words Lehi, Sariah and Nephi from the so-called Lehi Tree of Life Stone.

Although Alex Joseph’s work is of no scientific value, it helps us to understand Joseph Smith’s way of thinking. We feel that Alex Joseph and Joseph Smith used the same system in their “translation”—i.e., an over-worked imagination. Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, vol. 2, page 238, contains this statement under the date of July, 1835: “The remainder of this month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham, and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian language as practiced by the ancients.” Egyptologist I.E.S. Edwards, Keeper of Dept. of Egyptian Antiquities, British Museum, wrote the following in a letter dated December 22, 1966: “Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar . . . is largely a piece of imagination and lacking in any kind of scientific value . . . The whole document reminds me of the writings of psychic practitioners which are sometimes sent to me” (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 360). Mormon scholars have worked for many years on Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar, but so far no one has been able to make any sense out of it. Alex Joseph’s work certainly reminds us of this purported “Alphabet and Grammar.” Both, for instance, believed that a large number of words could be translated from one Egyptian or Hebrew word. As we have already pointed out, Alex Joseph “translated” over 870 words from Bereshith. After performing this incredible feat, he commented: “Again, I apologize for the brevity of this translation, but time and space do not allow for a fuller exposition.” Fortunately, the original translation manuscripts for Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham are still in existence (see photographs in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 312-313). These manuscripts show that like Alex Joseph and Joseph Smith used the same system in their translation—i.e., an over-worked imagination. Joseph Smith’s way of thinking. We feel that Alex Joseph and Joseph Smith used the same system in their “translation”—i.e., an over-worked imagination. Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, vol. 2, page 238, contains this statement under the date of July, 1835: “The remainder of this month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham, and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian language as practiced by the ancients.” Egyptologist I.E.S. The whole document reminds me of the writings of psychic practitioners which are sometimes sent to me” (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 360). Mormon scholars have worked for many years on Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar, but so far no one has been able to make any sense out of it. Alex Joseph’s work certainly reminds us of this purported “Alphabet and Grammar.” Both, for instance, believed that a large number of words could be translated from one Egyptian or Hebrew word. As we have already pointed out, Alex Joseph “translated” over 870 words from Bereshith. After performing this incredible feat, he commented: “Again, I apologize for the brevity of this translation, but time and space do not allow for a fuller exposition.” Fortunately, the original translation manuscripts for Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham are still in existence (see photographs in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 312-313). These manuscripts show that like Alex Joseph, Joseph Smith felt he could squeeze an extraordinarily large number of English words out of just one ancient word. For instance, in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 323, we show that Joseph Smith derived 177 words from one Egyptian word. These words are published in the Pearl of Great Price, Book of Abraham 1:16-19. The Egyptian word which Joseph Smith pretended to translate 177 words from is “Khons”—the name of an Egyptian moon-god.

Because of Joseph Smith’s mistranslation of the Egyptian papyrus we have been calling upon the Mormon leaders to repudiate the Book of Abraham and the anti-black doctrine contained in its pages. They have finally yielded to pressure and allowed black to hold the Priesthood. We feel, however, that they should go one step further and admit the Book of Abraham is a work of Joseph Smith’s imagination.
January is a month we are anxiously awaiting, for this is when Moody Press plans to release our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism. This is a condensed and updated version of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?—a book which has sold over 32,000 copies and which Bible scholar Norman L. Geisler claims has “shaken” the “historical and theological foundations” of Mormonism.

The title, The Changing World of Mormonism, is especially fitting for this work because even while we were in the process of preparing it, the Mormon Church made a major revision of its doctrine concerning blacks.

DEATH OF THE ANTI-BLACK DOCTRINE

David Briscoe and George Buck refer to June 9, 1978, as “Black Friday” because this was the day that Mormon leaders announced the death of the anti-black doctrine (see Utah Holiday, July 1978, page 33). Prior to that time blacks of African lineage were not allowed to hold the Priesthood nor go through the temple even though they lived exemplary lives.

The Mormon position concerning blacks was clearly stated in a letter written by the First Presidency on July 17, 1947:

> From the days of the Prophet Joseph even until now, it has been the doctrine of the Church, never questioned by any of the Church leaders that the Negroes are not entitled to the full blessings of the Gospel. (Letter from the First Presidency, quoted in Mormonism and the Negro, by John J. Stewart and William E. Berrett, pages 46-47)

Bruce R. McConkie, who now serves as an Apostle in the Mormon Church, wrote the following in a book published in 1958:

> Negroes in this life are denied the priesthood; under no circumstances can they hold this delegation of authority from the Almighty. The gospel message of salvation is not carried affirmatively to them . . .

> Negroes are not equal with other races where the receipt of certain spiritual blessings are concerned . . . (Mormon Doctrine, 1958, page 477)

In the July 1978 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we pointed out that in the past Mormon leaders have taught that the doctrine could not be changed. President Brigham Young, for instance, emphatically affirmed that blacks could not hold the Priesthood until AFTER the resurrection:

> Cain slew his brother . . . and the Lord put a mark upon him, which is the flat nose and black skin. . . . How long is that race to endure the dreadful curse that is upon them? That curse will remain upon them, and they never can hold the Priesthood or share in it until all the other descendants of Adam have received the promises and enjoyed the blessings of the Priesthood and the keys thereof. Until the last ones of the residue of Adam’s children are brought up to that favourable position, the children of Cain cannot receive the first ordinances of the Priesthood. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 7, pages 290-291)

When all the other children of Adam have had the privilege of receiving the Priesthood, and of coming into the kingdom of God, and of being redeemed from the four quarters of the earth, and have received their resurrection from the dead, then it will be time enough to remove the curse from Cain and his posterity. . . . he is the last to share the joys of the kingdom of God. (Ibid., vol. 2, page 143)

The First Presidency of the Church reaffirmed Brigham Young’s teaching in 1949 (see Mormonism and the Negro, Part 2, page 16), and in 1967, N. Eldon Tanner, was quoted as saying:

> “The church has no intention of changing its doctrine on the Negro,” N. Eldon Tanner, counselor to the First President told Seattle during his recent visit here. “Throughout the history of the original Christian church, the Negro never held the priesthood. There’s really nothing we can do to change this. It’s a law of God.” (Seattle Magazine, December 1967, page 60)

The Mormon apologist John L. Lund wrote the following:

> Brigham Young revealed that the Negroes will not receive the Priesthood until a great while after the second advent of Jesus Christ, . . . our present prophets are in complete agreement with Brigham Young and other past leaders on the question of the Negro and the Priesthood. . . .

> Social pressure and even government sanctions cannot be expected to bring forth a new revelation . . . all the social pressure in the world will not change what the Lord has decreed to be. . . .

The prophets have declared that there are at least two major stipulations that have to be met before the Negroes will be allowed to possess the Priesthood. The first requirement relates to time. The Negroes will not be allowed to hold the Priesthood during mortality, in fact, not until after the resurrection of all of Adam’s children. The other stipulation requires that Abel’s seed receive the first opportunity of having the Priesthood. . . . Negroes must first pass through mortality before they may possess the Priesthood (“they will go down to death”). Reference is also made to the condition that the Negroes will have to wait until after the resurrection of all of Adam’s children before receiving the Priesthood. . . . the last of Adam’s children will not be resurrected until the end of the millennium. Therefore, the Negroes will not receive the Priesthood until after that time . . . this will not happen until after the thousand years of Christ’s reign on earth. . . .

The second major stipulation that needs to be met . . . is the requirement that Abel’s seed receive the opportunity of holding the Priesthood first. (The Church and the Negro, 1967, pages 45-48)

Because Church leaders stressed for over a hundred years that blacks would never be able to hold the Priesthood DURING MORTALITY, the Mormon people were surprised when they learned of the death of the anti-black doctrine. They were aware of the fact that the change tended to undermine the concept that they were led by a “living prophet” who could not yield to the pressures of the world. Even though most Mormons claim they are happy with the doctrinal change regarding blacks, there is evidence that the “revelation” came as a real shock. A class at Brigham Young University which conducted a “random telephone survey” of Utah County residents found that 79 percent of those interviewed did not expect a change at this time. Furthermore, many people compared the news to an announcement of some kind of disaster or death:

Some 45 percent of those who heard of the doctrine from personal sources expressed doubt that the news was true. This compares with only 25 percent of those who learned from media sources. Sixty-two percent of the former group expressed shock, compared with 52 percent of the latter. . . .

Those surveyed appeared surprised by the announcement, Haroldsen said. Thirty-nine percent said they did not think “it would ever happen” that the priesthood would ever be given to blacks.

Another 44 percent expected it years in the future, after Christ’s return, during the Millennium, or “not in my lifetime.” . . .

In trying to explain how they reacted to the news, 14 persons compared its impact with that of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Another 13 compared it to the news of the death of an LDS Church president. Eight compared it to a natural disaster, especially the Teton dam break.

Others compared the news with the death of a family member or friend, with a declaration of war, or other major political event. (The Daily Universe, June 22, 1978)

The Mormon people apparently realized the deep doctrinal implications this change involved, and therefore they associated it with death or disaster. If they were really pleased with the change, why did they not relate it with a happy event like marriage, the birth of a child or the end of a war? We feel that this survey unwittingly reveals what Church members really thought of the change.

OLD TEACHINGS BECOME INOPERATIVE

The reader will remember that when the public began to find out the real truth about Watergate, President Nixon’s press secretary Ron Ziegler said that statements which had previously been made were now “inoperative.” What he really meant, of course, was that the past denials were untrue.

Like the early statements concerning Watergate, the pronouncements and revelations that Mormon leaders used to support the anti-black doctrine have now become “inoperative.” Although he did not use this word, the Apostle Bruce R. McConkie recently conceded that the old teachings concerning blacks were given “without the light and knowledge that now has come into the world”:

I would like to say something about the new revelation relative to our taking the priesthood to those of all nations and races. . . . There are statements in our literature by the early brethren which we have interpreted to mean that the Negroes would not receive the priesthood in mortality. I have said the same things, and people write me letters and say, “You said such and such, and how is it now that we do such and such?” And all I can say to that is that it is time disbelieving people repented and got in line and believed in a living, modern prophet. Forget everything that I have said, or what President Brigham Young or President George Q. Cannon or whomever has said in days past that is contrary to the present revelation. We spoke with a limited understanding and without the light and knowledge that now has come into the world.

We get our truth and our light upon line and precept upon precept. We have now had added a new flood of intelligence and light on this particular subject, and it erases all the darkness and all the views and all the thoughts of the past. They don’t matter any more.

It doesn’t make a particle of difference what anybody ever said about the Negro matter before the first day of June of this year (1978). It is a new day and a new arrangement, and the Lord has now given the revelation that sheds light into the world on this subject. As to any slivers of light or any particles of darkness of the past, we forget about them. (“All Are Alike Unto God,” by Apostle Bruce R. McConkie of the Council of the Twelve, pages 1-2)

Because of the new revelation concerning blacks, Bruce R. McConkie has had to make a number of changes in his “best-seller,” Mormon Doctrine. This is not the first time that Apostle McConkie has been forced to revise his book. The original 1958 edition was suppressed because it contained anti-Catholic material (see The Case Against Mormonism, vol. I, pages 8-9). When a new edition appeared in 1966, Apostle McConkie wrote that “experience has shown the wisdom of making some changes, clarifications, and additions.” At any rate, when the “25th Printing” of Apostle McConkie’s book appeared in 1979, the majority of the anti-black material was deleted or changed. For instance, the section on “NEGROES” (pages 526-528 of the new printing) was completely rewritten and no longer contains McConkie’s statement that “Negroes are not equal with other races where the receipt of certain spiritual blessings are concerned . . .” Nor does it contain McConkie’s long explanation of how blacks were “less valiant” in the pre-existence and therefore had “spiritual restrictions imposed upon them during mortality . . .” In another section, RACES OF MEN, McConkie originally wrote:

We know the circumstances under which the posterity of Cain (and later of Ham) were cursed with what we call negroid racial characteristics. (Mormon Doctrine, 1958, page 554)

This has been softened to read:

We know the circumstances under which the posterity of Cain (and later of Ham) were born with the characteristics of the black race. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 616)
In the 1958 edition, page 314, Apostle McConkie had written that “Negroes are thus descendants of Ham, who himself also was cursed, apparently for marrying into the forbidden lineage.” This was shortened to: “Ham was cursed, apparently for marrying into the forbidden lineage…” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979 printing, page 343).

On page 102 of the 1958 printing, Apostle McConkie wrote the following:

As a result of his rebellion, Cain was cursed with a dark skin; he became the father of the Negroes, and those spirits who are not worthy to receive the priesthood are born through his lineage. He became the first mortal to be cursed as a son of perdition.

In the 1979 printing of McConkie’s Mormon Doctrine, page 109, this has been changed to read:

As a result of his rebellion, Cain was cursed and told that “the earth” would not thereafter yield him its abundance as previously. In addition he became the first mortal to be cursed as a son of perdition.

The reader will notice that Apostle McConkie has changed the statement so that it no longer reads that “Negroes” are cursed with a black skin. In the 1979 printing McConkie does go on to talk of the “dark skin,” but he calls it a “mark” rather than a “curse”: “The Lord placed on Cain a mark of a dark skin, and he became the ancestor of the black race.”

Although we believe that Apostle McConkie has the right to change his own writings, we feel that these changes tend to undermine his claim to have “all of the keys of the kingdom of God on earth” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979 printing, page 45). In any case, we feel that McConkie’s book may have to undergo even more revision. Although he apparently tried to remove all material unfavorable to blacks, he seems to have missed the following in his section entitled, CASTE SYSTEM:

However, in a broad general sense, caste systems have their root and origin in the gospel itself, and when they operate according to the divine decree, the resultant restrictions and segregation are right and proper and have the approval of the Lord. To illustrate; Cain, Ham, and the whole negro race have been cursed with a black skin, the mark of Cain, so they can be identified as a caste apart, a people with whom the other descendants of Adam should not intermarry. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 114)

EXISTENCE OF NEW REVELATION QUESTIONED

In the July 1978 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger we observed: “One thing that should be noted about the new ‘revelation’ is that the Church has failed to produce a copy of it. All we have is a statement by the First Presidency which says a revelation was received.” We went on to say:

We seriously doubt that President Kimball will put forth a written revelation on the bestowal of priesthood on blacks. We doubt, in fact, that any such document exists. What probably happened was that the leaders of the Church finally realized that they could no longer retain the anti-black doctrine without doing irreparable damage to the Church. Under these circumstances they were impressed with the fact that the doctrine had to be changed and this impression was referred to as a revelation from God. In a letter to the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, June 24, 1978, Eugene Wagner observed:

... was this change of doctrine really a revelation from the Lord, or did the church leaders act on their own? Why don’t they publish that revelation and let the Lord speak in his own words? All we saw was a statement of the First Presidency, and that is not how a revelation looks.

When God speaks the revelation starts with the words: “Thus saith the Lord.” It seems when the Lord decides to change a doctrine of such great importance he will talk himself to the people of his church. If such a revelation cannot be presented to the members it is obvious that the first presidency acted on its own, most likely under fear of public pressure to avoid problems of serious consequences and to maintain peace and popularity with the world.

At the 148th Semiannual Conference of the Mormon Church, members of the church were asked to “accept this revelation as the word and will of the Lord,” but the only document presented to the people was the letter of the First Presidency, dated June 8, 1978 (see The Ensign, November 1978, page 16).

On June 2, 1979, the Church Section of the Deseret News announced that “The statement of the First Presidency telling of the revelation extending the priesthood to ‘all worthy male members of the Church’ released June 9, 1978, will also be added to the Doctrine and Covenants.” The reader will notice that it is only the “statement...telling of the revelation” that will be added to the Doctrine and Covenants.

Some Mormons have put forth the rumor that the power of God was manifested as on the day of Pentecost when President Kimball gave the “revelation.” Kimball himself seems to be trying to dispel this idea. The following statement about the “revelation” appeared in Time on August 7, 1978, page 55:

In other renditions it came complete with a visitation from Joseph Smith. ... In an interview, his first since the announcement, Kimball described it much more matter of factly to Time staff writer Richard Ostling: “I spent a good deal of time in the temple alone, praying for guidance, and there was a gradual and general development of the whole program, in connection with the Apostles.”

For some time after the anti-black doctrine was changed, Mormon leaders were reluctant to inform their own people of the details surrounding the giving of the “revelation.” Finally, six months after the event, the Church News staff asked President Kimball if he would “care to share with the readers of the church news any more of the circumstances under which that was given?” President Kimball’s answer is very revealing. He makes no reference to a voice or any written revelation. In fact, his statement gives the impression that it was only a feeling or an assurance that he received:

President: ... It went on for some time as I was searching for this, because I wanted to be sure. We held a meeting of the Council of the Twelve in the temple on the regular day. We considered this very seriously and thoughtfully and prayerfully. I asked the Twelve not to go home when the time came. I said, “now would you be willing to remain in the temple with us?” And they were. I offered the final prayer and I told the Lord if it wasn’t right, if He didn’t want this change to come in the Church that I would be true to it all the rest of my life, and I’d fight the world against it if that’s what He wanted.

We had this special prayer circle, then I knew that the time had come. I had a great deal to fight, of course, myself largely, because I had grown up with this thought that Negroes should not have the priesthood and I was prepared to go all the rest of my life till my death and fight for it and defend it as it was. But this revelation and assurance came to me so clearly that there was no question about it. (Deseret News, Church Section, January 6, 1979, page 19)
In his speech, “All Are Alike Unto God,” pages 2-3, Apostle Bruce R. McConkie told how the “revelation” was received. His description indicates that there was no spoken or written revelation—only a very good “feeling”:

The result was that President Kimball knew, and each one of us knew, independent of any other person, by direct and personal revelation to us, that the time had now come to extend the gospel and all its blessings . . . to those of every nation, . . . including the black race . . . it was a revelation of such tremendous significance and import; one which would reverse the whole direction of the Church, . . . The Lord could have sent messengers from the other side to deliver it, but he did not. He gave the revelation by the power of the Holy Ghost. Latter-day Saints have a complex: many of them desire to magnify and build upon what has occurred, and they delight to think of miraculous things. And maybe some of them would like to believe that the Lord himself was there, or that the Prophet Joseph Smith came to deliver the revelation . . . which was one of the possibilities. Well, these things did not happen. The stories that go around to the contrary are not factual or realistic or true, . . . I cannot describe in words what happened; I can only say that it happened and that it can be known and understood only by the feeling that can come into the heart of man. You cannot describe a testimony to someone.

Because of the circumstances under which the revelation on blacks came, many people have referred to it as “a revelation of convenience.” We may never know all the details which led President Kimball to seek this revelation, but it is obvious that it was the result of pressure from many sources. In the July 1978 issue of the Messenger we pointed out that the Church was faced with an almost impossible situation in Brazil where so many of its members had black ancestry. Since that time we have learned from a source within the Church that Church leaders were very concerned that they were going to lose their tax exempt status on property they own in the United States. In the months just prior to the revelation, Church leaders were carefully watching developments in a case in Wisconsin in which an organization was about to lose its tax exempt status because of racial discrimination. The Church leaders finally became convinced that the tide was turning against them and that they would lose their tax exempt status in Wisconsin and eventually throughout the United States because of their doctrine of discrimination against blacks. This was probably only one of many factors which entered into the decision to admit blacks into the priesthood, but it may very well have been the “straw that broke the camel’s back.”

ADDING OLD REVELATIONS

On April 3, 1976, the Church Section of the Deseret News announced that “Two revelations received by former Presidents of the Church, were accepted as scripture Saturday afternoon, April 3, by vote of Church membership.”

This was certainly a surprising move for the Mormon leaders to make. Since one of the revelations which was canonized was given by Joseph F. Smith, we feel that it is possible this move was made to counter some statements which we printed in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? We cite the following from that book:

> Although the Mormon Church claims to be led by revelation, Joseph F. Smith, the sixth President of the Mormon Church, testified as follows in the Reed Smoot Investigation:

> Senator Dubois. — Have you received any revelations from God, which has been submitted by you and the apostles to the body of the church in their semiannual conference, which revelation has been sustained by that conference, through the upholding of their hands?

> Senator Dubois. — Since you became President of the Church.

> Senator Dubois. — Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became President of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?

> Senator Dubois. — Do you say that you have not?

> Senator Dubois. — Then you do not know whether you have received any such revelation as you have described or whether you have not?

> Mr. Smith. — Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but they are not in the sense of revelations. (Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pages 483-484)

> On page 99 of the same volume Joseph F. Smith stated:

> “I have never pretended to nor do I profess to have received revelations.” From this it is plain to see that just because a man is ordained a “Prophet, Seer, and Revelator,” it does not necessarily mean that he is. If Joseph F. Smith was only as susceptible to the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord as “any good Methodist,” then why should his word be trusted above that of a good Methodist?

> Although the Mormon Church is supposed to be led by revelation, the evidence of this revelation is very hard to find. The Manifesto of 1890 is the last revelation, if it can be termed a revelation, that has been added to the Doctrine and Covenants. So we can see that the last revelation that was added . . . is eighty years old. . . .

> The Reorganized LDS Church has continued to add new revelations to their Doctrine and Covenants, but the Utah Mormon Church has not added a new revelation since . . . 1890. It is interesting to note that during the last century, when new revelations were being added to the Doctrine and Covenants, the Mormon leaders were condemning the Catholics for not adding new revelations to their “sacred canon.” The Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt stated:

> That the Romanists have continued in their apostacy until the present day is demonstrated from the fact that they have not added one single book to their canon since they first formed it. Now, if there had been any prophet or apostle among them, during the last seventeen centuries, they certainly would have canonized his epistles, revelations, and prophecies, as being equally sacred with those of the first century. As they have not done this, it shows most clearly, that even they, themselves, do not consider that they have had apostles, prophets, and revelation among them, during that long period of time. . . . since the first century, the Catholics must have had many tens of thousands of revelators, and yet, strange to say, none of their revelations are permitted to enter the sacred canon . . . Here, indeed, is a strange inconsistency! Even the Catholic church herself, evidently places no confidence in the popes and bishops, the pretended successors of St. Peter and the rest of the apostles; if she did, she would have canonized their revelations along with the rest of the revelations of the New Testament. What must we conclude then, as to her bishops holding “the rank and functions of apostles?”

> We can but conclude that it is all an imposition—a wicked soul-destroying imposition, practiced upon the nations by a corrupt apostate church . . . Well might the revelator John,
The very words used by Orson Pratt concerning the Catholics could now be applied to the Mormon Church, for “if there had been any prophet or apostle among them,” during the past eighty years, “they certainly would have canonized his epistles, revelations, and prophecies, . . . .” The Church “evidently places no confidence” in the last six Presidents; “if she did, she would have canonized their revelations along with the rest of the revelations” in the Doctrine and Covenants. (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? 1972, page 184)

It is difficult to resist the idea that the Mormon leaders decided to canonize the “new” revelations to offset the criticism found in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? That they would choose a revelation given to Joseph F. Smith is especially interesting. This purported revelation was given less than two months before Joseph F. Smith’s death in 1918 at a time when he “was very ill.” He had served as “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” for some seventeen years before receiving this revelation. The reader will remember that Joseph F. Smith had previously admitted he had served as “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” for some time without receiving any revelation: “I have never pretended to nor do I profess to have received revelations.”

The other revelation which the Mormons canonized was given to Joseph Smith on January 21, 1836. As we will show later, this revelation was falsified when printed by the Church to avoid a major contradiction.

In the manuscript for our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism, we wrote the following: “Joseph F. Smith once stated that any new revelations would be added to the Doctrine and Covenants, but Mormon leaders have decided that these two revelations should be added to the Pearl of Great Price instead (Deseret News, Church Section, April 3, 1976).” President Smith’s statement appears as follows in The Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, page 489:

. . . if the Lord should reveal His mind to His people and it should be accepted by His people in the way that He has appointed, it would then become a matter to be added to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The Mormon leaders now seem to realize that they made a mistake when they added the revelations into the Pearl of Great Price. The Church Section of the Deseret News for June 2, 1979, reported that these revelations will be transferred to the Doctrine and Covenants: Joseph Smith’s Vision of the Celestial Kingdom and Joseph F. Smith’s Vision of the Redemption of the Dead have been transferred from the Pearl of Great Price to become Sections 137 and 138, respectively, in the Doctrine and Covenants. . . .

The decision to place these revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants has been made by the First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve.

The fumbling around with these “new” revelations only tends to emphasize that the Mormon Church is led by fallible men rather than by direct revelation from God.

IMPORTANT CHANGE IN CANONIZED REVELATION

After the two revelations mentioned above were canonized by the Mormon Church, H. Michael Marquardt, a student of Mormon history, discovered that the one concerning Joseph Smith’s vision of the Celestial Kingdom had been altered. Mr. Marquardt found that this revelation was recorded in Joseph Smith’s own diary under the date of January 21, 1836. In Joseph Smith’s diary the revelation read as follows:

The heavens were opened upon us and I beheld the celestial Kingdom of God. . . . I saw father Adam and Abraham and Michael and my father and mother, my brother Alvin, . . . (Joseph Smith’s 1835-36 Diary, January 21, 1836; printed by Modern Microfilm Co.)

When the Mormon leaders printed this revelation they deleted the words “and Michael” without any indication. It reads as follows in the new edition of the Pearl of Great Price:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God. . . . I saw Father Adam and Abraham; and my father and my mother; my brother Alvin, . . . (Pearl of Great Price, 1976, page 63, verses 1, 5)

At first glance the deletion of the words “and Michael” does not appear too important. In Mormon theology, however, a serious problem is created by the statement, “I saw father Adam and Abraham and Michael.” According to Joseph Smith’s other revelations, Adam is Michael. In the Doctrine and Covenants 107:54 we read: “And the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam, and called him Michael, the prince, the archangel.” In 27:11 we read: “And also with Michael, or Adam, the father of all, the prince of all, the ancient of days.” Thus it is clear that if Adam is Michael, Joseph Smith could not have seen “Adam, and Abraham and Michael.” Mormon leaders must have been aware that this would create a problem in Mormon theology, and therefore they deleted the words “and Michael” from the revelation.

This change was apparently made sometime while the Church was under Brigham Young’s leadership. The fact that the change was made after Joseph Smith’s death is evident from Mr. Marquardt’s research. He found that the revelation was copied into the handwritten manuscript of the History of the Church (Book B-1, page 695), with the words “and Michael” still included. Mr. Marquardt also found that the words were in the duplicate copy of the “Manuscript History,” (Book B-2, page 618). This is significant because the Mormon leaders did not even start the duplicate copy until almost a year after Joseph Smith’s death (see Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, page 469). This would mean that the change had to have been made after Smith’s death. By the time the revelation was published in the Deseret News, September 4, 1852, the words “and Michael” had been deleted. Thus it appears that the change took place sometime between 1845 and 1852 and that current Mormon leaders have canonized a falsified revelation.

With regard to the vision of the Celestial Kingdom, it is also interesting to note that the Mormon leaders have only canonized the first part of the vision. Over 200 words which appear in Joseph Smith’s diary are not included. (The History of the Church 2:380-81 also bears witness to this fact.) Among the words missing from the canonized revelation, we find the following:

. . . I also beheld Elder McLellin in the South, standing upon a hill surrounded with a vast multitude preaching to them and a lame man standing before him supported by his crutches, he threw them down at his word and leaped as a heart, by the mighty power of God. . . .

It would probably prove to be embarrassing if the Mormon leaders canonized this prophecy about McLellin, because the History of the Church informs us that he was “excommunicated from the Church at Far West. Thence forward he took an active part in the persecution of the Saints in Missouri, and at one time expressed the desire to do violence to the person of Joseph Smith. . . . Subsequently he attempted what he called a reorganization of the Church, . . .” (vol. 3, pages 31-32).

In the same revelation Joseph Smith claimed that he “saw the 12 apostles of the Lamb who are now upon the earth who hold the keys of this last ministry in foreign lands standing together in a circle . . . and I finally saw the 12 in the celestial Kingdom of God . . .”

In the Bible, Jesus predicted that the Apostle Judas would fall; Joseph Smith, however, seemed to be oblivious to what was about to happen to his Apostles. At least half of the Apostles were eventually excommunicated, and four of them apparently died out of the church (see Essentials in Church History, 1942, pages 663-665). Since Apostles William E. McLellin and William Smith (Joseph Smith’s own brother) tried very hard to destroy the Mormon Church, we wonder how Joseph Smith could have seen “the 12 in the celestial Kingdom of God.” In any case, the present-day leaders of the Mormon Church did not seem to feel that it would be wise to canonize this part of the revelation.

CRITICISM STILL VALID

Even though the leaders of the Mormon Church have decided to make three additions to the Doctrine and Covenants, our criticism that the Church does not fulfill its claim to present-day revelation still stands. To begin with, the revelations which are to appear as Sections 137 and 138 of the Doctrine and Covenants can hardly be considered as “new” revelations. The one given to Joseph F. Smith is sixty-one years old, and the revelation given to the Prophet Joseph Smith is 143 years old.

The fact that the statement on blacks is to be added to the Doctrine and Covenants also fails to show the Church is led by revelation. The June 1978 declaration on blacks is not a revelation, but only a statement that a revelation has been received. Furthermore, President Kimball himself made a statement that gives the impression that it was only a feeling or assurance that he received. The reader will remember that President Joseph F. Smith admitted that “any good Methodist or any other church member” is susceptible to “impressions of the Spirit of the Lord.”

That Mormon leaders do not give the declaration on blacks the same status as the “visions” of Joseph Smith and Joseph F. Smith is obvious from the fact that they are not going to give it a section number in the new Doctrine and Covenants. The Church’s magazine, The Ensign, for August 1979, page 75, explained:

... yet-to-be printed copies of the Doctrine and Covenants will contain three new additions...

The two visions to be transferred from the Pearl of Great Price to the Doctrine and Covenants are Joseph Smith’s Vision of the Celestial Kingdom and Joseph F. Smith’s Vision of the Redemption of the Dead. These two additions will become Sections 137 and 138 in the Doctrine and Covenants. . . .

The third addition will be the proclamation of 9 June 1978 . . . The proclamation will be known as Official Declaration—2. Official Declaration—1 will be the title of the announcements discontinuing plural marriage that are already part of the Doctrine and Covenants.

SUPPRESSED REVELATIONS

While present Mormon leaders are canonizing two revelations given by former Presidents of the Church, they are suppressing others. For instance, on September 27, 1886, President John Taylor gave a revelation in which the Lord was supposed to have told him that plural marriage would always be a part of the Church:

My son John . . . how can I revoke an everlasting covenant; for I the Lord am everlasting & my everlasting covenants cannot be abrogated nor done away with; but they stand for ever . . . I have not revoked this law nor will I for it is everlasting & those who will enter into my glory must obey the conditions thereof, even so Amen.

The reader will find a discussion of this matter in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 242-243.

Another revelation which Mormon leaders have suppressed is one given by Joseph Smith in 1831 on the practice of polygamy. We first published this revelation in 1974 in the book Mormonism Like Watergate? pages 7-8. The reason it was suppressed was that it commanded the Mormons to “take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites, that their posterity may become white, delightful and just, for even now their females are most [sic] virtuous than the gentiles.”

In Mormon theology the Lamanites and Nephites are the Indians. The Book of Mormon teaches that the Indians were cursed with a dark skin:

And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which is a curse upon them because of their transgression . . . (Book of Mormon, Alma 3:6)

The Book of Mormon states, however, that in the last days the Indians will repent and “many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightful people” (Ibid., 2 Nephi 34:5-6).

Even after we published this important revelation on marriage to the Indians, Mormon writers failed to come to grips with its existence. Donna Hill did mention it in her book, Joseph Smith: The First Mormon, published in 1977, but it was 1979 before Church Historian Leonard J. Arrington and his assistant Davis Bitton publicly acknowledged its existence. In their new book, The Mormon Experience, page 195, we find the following:

A recently discovered document is a copy of a purported revelation of 1831 that instructed seven missionaries in Missouri as follows: “For it is my will, that in time, ye should take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites that their posterity may become white, delightful and just, for even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles.”

Although we are glad to see the Church Historian acknowledge the reality of this revelation, the statement that it was “recently discovered” does not square with the facts. Joseph Fielding Smith, who was LDS Church Historian and later became the tenth President of the Church, told of the revelation’s existence in a letter written in 1935:

... I do know that there was a revelation given in July 1831, in the presence of Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps and others in Missouri, in which the Lord made this principle known through the Prophet Joseph Smith. (Letter from Joseph Fielding Smith to J.W.A. Bailey, dated September 5, 1935, typed copy)

Fawn Brodie wrote that “Joseph F. Smith, Jr., the present historian of the Utah Church, asserted to me in 1943 that a revelation foreshadowing polygamy had been written in 1831, but that it had never been published. In conformity with the church policy, however, he would not permit the manuscript, which he acknowledged to be in possession of the church library, to be examined” (No Man Knows My History, 1971, page 184, footnote).
In the light of this evidence, it would have been better for Arrington and Bitton to have stated that the revelation had been suppressed for a long time rather than to have stated that it was “recently discovered.”

At any rate, a speech given by Mormon President Spencer W. Kimball at the LDS General Conference, October of 1960, might mislead one into believing that he would rejoice over Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation about marrying Indians to turn them white:

I saw a striking contrast in the progress of the Indian people today as against that of only fifteen years ago. Truly the scales of darkness are falling from their eyes, and they are fast becoming a white and delightful people. . . .

The day of the Lamanites is nigh. For years they have been growing delightful, and they are now becoming white and delightful, as they were promised. In this picture of the twenty Lamanite missionaries, fifteen of the twenty were as light as Anglos; . . . The children in the home placement program in Utah are often lighter than their brothers and sisters in the hogan on the reservation.

At one meeting a father and mother and their sixteen-year-old daughter were present, the little member girl . . . was several shades lighter than her parents . . . There was the doctor in a Utah city who for two years had had an Indian boy in his home who stated that he was some shades lighter than the younger brother just coming into the program from the reservation. These young members of the Church are changing to whiteness and to delightfulness. One white elder jokingly said that he and his companion were donating blood regularly to the hospital in the hope that the process might be accelerated.

The day of the Lamanites has come . . . today the dark clouds are dissipating. (Improvement Era, December 1960, pages 922-923)

Now while it is true that President Kimball is very concerned about the fulfillment of the Book of Mormon prophesy that the Indians will become a “white and delightful people,” he is apparently unable to accept Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation because he believes that Indians are to be turned white by the power of God and is opposed to intermarriage with them. In 1958 he gave an address which touched on this subject. President Kimball’s statement was reprinted in the Church Section of the Deseret News on June 17, 1978:

“. . . there is one thing that I must mention, and that is interracial marriages. When I said you must teach your young people to overcome their prejudices and accept the Indians, I did not mean that you would encourage intermarriage.”

President Kimball’s teaching on intermarriage with the Indians appears to be diametrically opposed to Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation. In view of President Kimball’s feelings, we seriously doubt that he will ever allow this revelation on marrying Indians to be canonized in the Doctrine and Covenants. The fact that the Mormon leaders have suppressed this revelation seems to indicate that they do not really believe that it came from God. It is obvious, then, that they have been involved in a cover-up to protect the image of Joseph Smith.

If the Mormon leaders had canonized Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation on the Indians instead of his 1836 revelation on the Celestial Kingdom, it would have caused many people to lose faith in President Kimball, and if they had canonized John Taylor’s revelation that Mormons should continue to practice polygamy instead of Joseph F. Smith’s vision, it would have caused serious problems in the Church. Mormon apologists cannot explain why some revelations are canonized and others suppressed, but it is obvious to anyone who seriously studies the matter that Mormon authorities have often given false revelations. David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, frankly admitted that Joseph Smith himself gave a false revelation:

. . . that some of the brethren should go to Toronto, Canada, and that they would sell the copy-right of the Book of Mormon. Hiram page and Oliver Cowdery went to Toronto on this mission, but they failed entirely to sell the copy-right, returning without any money. Joseph was at my father’s house when they returned. I was there also, and am an eye witness to these facts. . . . Well, we were all in great trouble; and we asked Joseph how it was that he had received a revelation from the Lord for some brethren to go to Toronto and sell the copy-right, and the brethren had utterly failed in their undertaking. Joseph did not know how it was, so he enquired of the Lord about it, and behold the following revelation came through the stone: “Some revelations are of God: some revelations are of man: and some revelations are of the devil.” So we see that the revelation to go to Toronto and sell the copy-right was not of God, but was of the devil or of the heart of man. . . . I will say here, that I could tell you other false revelations that came through Brother Joseph. . . . Many of Brother Joseph’s revelations were never printed. The revelation to go to Canada was written down on paper, but was never printed. (An Address to All Believers in Christ, by David Whitmer, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, page 31)

The Mormon leaders complain that the Catholics withheld the scriptures from the common people, and yet they keep some of Joseph Smith’s revelations hidden from their own people.

APOSTLE PETERSEN AND THE ADAM-GOD DOCTRINE

On April 9, 1852, Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, publicly preached his famous Adam-God doctrine. In this sermon he stated:

Now hear it, 0 inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken — He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later. . . . When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family; . . . Jesus, our elder brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character that was in the garden of Eden, and who is our Father in Heaven. Now, let all who may hear these doctrines, pause before they make light of them, or treat them with indifference, for they will prove their salvation or damnation. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pages 50-51)

After Brigham Young’s death, his Adam-God doctrine fell into disrepute. In 1976 the Mormon Apostle Mark E. Peterson wrote a book in which he attacked this doctrine as unscriptural:

To say that Adam is God is, of course, opposed utterly and completely to the scriptures as well as to our Articles of Faith, . . . to say that we have nothing to do with “any God but Adam,” . . . violates all the teachings of the gospel of Christ, who taught us to pray to the Father in the name of Christ, . . . (Adam: Who Is He? page 14)
Apostle Petersen claimed that Brigham Young was misquoted and brought forth some new information which he maintained would establish his case:

Elder Charles C. Rich, of the Council of the Twelve, was present on a day when President Young gave an address that was wrongly reported as saying Adam was Deity. In the copy of the Journal of Discourses that he had, Elder Rich referred to the misquotation as it appears in the Journal of Discourses, and in his own hand he wrote the following as the correct statement made by President Young: “Jesus our elder Brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character who talked with Adam in the Garden of Eden, and who is our Heavenly Father.” (This signed statement is in the hands of the Church Historian.)

On the face of it the mistake is obvious and was quickly noted by Elder Rich, who was present and heard the sermon. Hence the correction that he made. (Adam: Who Is He? pages 16-17)

After Adam: Who Is He? appeared in print, Bob Witte marshaled evidence to show that Apostle Petersen was inaccurate in his statement about Apostle Rich correcting Brigham Young’s statement (see the enlarged edition of Where Does It Say That?). Chris Vlachos has recently written an article which completely smashes Apostle Petersen’s whole thesis:

What seems to be a good case made by Mr. Petersen crumbles, however upon cross-examination. C. C. Rich, who Petersen claims “was present and heard the sermon,” was in reality not even in Salt Lake City on that day! Rich left San Bernardino, California, on March 24, 1852, for the Great Salt Lake. He did not reach his destination until April 21. Under this date, the LDS Journal History records:

April 21, 1852:
Elder Chas. C. Rich and thirteen others arrived today in G.S.L. from California.

In the May 1, 1852 issue of the Mormon Deseret Weekly the following announcement was made:

Elder C. C. Rich arrived on Wednesday, the 21 of April, in company with 13 others . . . direct from San Bernardino.

Hosea Stout, in his journal, also noted the event:

Wednesday 21st April 1852 . . . Gen. Rich and some 15 others arrived today from California by the South rout all well.

Furthermore, not only was C. C. Rich absent on the ninth, but the reference Petersen claims was written by C. C. Rich “in his own hand” was in reality written and signed by his son, Ben E. Rich, many years after the sermon was delivered!

Whether Mr. Petersen was deliberately seeking to suppress the facts or not, the truth is that there is no evidence whatsoever that Brigham Young was misquoted. As we shall see, Young came under much criticism from outside and from within the Mormon Church for teaching that Adam was God the Father. If he had merely been misquoted, Brigham simply could have corrected his hearers and accusers. Instead, however, Young continued to affirm and preach this doctrine against all opposition. (The Journal of Pastoral Practice, vol. III, no. 2, 1979, pages 99-100)

Although Apostle Petersen does not acknowledge making a mistake with regard to this important matter, he has made some very revealing changes in the 1979 printing of his book. He admits, in fact, that Charles Rich was not present and that the statement was in reality written by his son, Ben E. Rich:

Elder Charles C. Rich was not present on the day when President Young gave an address that was wrongly reported as saying Adam was our Father in heaven. [See JD 1:51.1] The sermon was delivered April 9, 1852, and Elder Rich returned April 21. In a copy of the Journal of Discourses Elder Ben E. Rich, son of Elder Charles C. Rich, referred to the misquotation as it appears in the Journal of Discourses, and in his own hand corrected the statement to read as follows: “Jesus our Elder Brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character who talked with Adam in the Garden of Eden, and who is our Father in heaven.” In this same statement Ben E. Rich wrote “As corrected above is what Prest. Young said, as testified to me by my father, C. C. Rich.” (This signed statement is in the hands of the Church Historical Department.)

On the face of it the mistake is obvious. We find in Genesis 2:15-16 and 3:8-9 that God walked and talked with Adam in the Garden of Eden. (Adam: Who Is He? 1979 printing, pages 16-17)

The reader will notice that in the 1976 printing, Apostle Petersen asserted: “Elder Charles C. Rich, of the Council of the Twelve, was present on a day when President Young gave an address that was wrongly reported . . .” In the 1979 printing this was changed to read: “Elder Charles C. Rich was not present on the day when President Young gave an address that was wrongly reported . . .” The 1976 printing assured us that “Elder Rich referred to the misquotation as it appears in the Journal of Discourses, and in his own hand he wrote the following . . .” This was changed to read that “Elder Ben E. Rich, son of Elder Charles C. Rich, referred to the misquotation as it appears in the Journal of Discourses, and in his own hand corrected the statement . . .” Apostle Petersen originally stated: “On the face of it the mistake is obvious and was quickly noted by Elder Rich, who was present and heard the sermon. Hence the correction that he made.” In the 1979 printing this was altered to read: “On the face of it the mistake is obvious. We find in Genesis 2:15-16 and 3:8-9 that God walked and talked with Adam in the Garden of Eden.”

It is very difficult to understand how Apostle Petersen could make such a serious mistake. We wonder, too, why he continues to use this material when it is of no real value. Since Charles C. Rich was not present, and since his son, Ben E. Rich, who recorded the material, had not even been born, we cannot see that it provides any substantial help to Apostle Petersen’s thesis. In fact, that he would even use such material shows that he is totally unprepared to deal with the issue of the Adam-God doctrine.

If Apostle Petersen had taken the time to carefully examine the thesis written by Rodney Turner, who now teaches religion at the Church’s own Brigham Young University, he could never have made the mistake of claiming that Brigham Young was misquoted. After presenting a great deal of evidence to prove that Brigham Young believed Adam was God, Rodney Turner observed:

Was Brigham Young Misquoted?

It is the writer’s opinion that the answer to this question is a categorical no. There is not the slightest evidence from Brigham Young, or any other source, that either his original remarks on April 9, 1852, or any of his subsequent statements were ever misquoted in the official publications of the Church. . .
In the light of Brigham Young’s attitude toward the errors of others, and in view of the division created by his remarks concerning Adam, it would be stretching one’s credulity to the breaking point to believe that he would have remained silent had he been misquoted. . . . Brigham Young would surely have referred to those misquotations at sometime or other—he never did. . . . The complete absence of any real evidence to the contrary obliges the writer to conclude that Brigham Young has not been misquoted in the official publications of the Church. (“The Position of Adam in Latter-day Saint Scripture and Theology,” M.A. thesis, Brigham Young University, August, 1953, pages 45-47)

On page 58 of the same thesis, Rodney Turner states:

A careful, detached study of his available statements, as found in the official publications of the Church, will admit of no other conclusion than that the identification of Adam with God the Father by President Brigham Young is an irrefutable fact.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and in The Changing World of Mormonism—we show that Brigham Young continued to teach the Adam-God doctrine until the time of his death. In fact, in 1873 President Young was quoted by the Church’s Deseret News as saying that God Himself revealed this doctrine to him:

How much unbelief exists in the minds of the Latter-day Saints in regard to one particular doctrine which I revealed to them, and which God revealed to me — namely that Adam is our Father and God — . . . (Deseret News, June 18, 1873)

Chris Vlachos, of the Utah Christian Mission, has gleaned a great deal of new evidence from manuscript sources to prove that Brigham Young vigorously defended his Adam-God doctrine:

During a discourse given on Sunday night, February 19, 1854, Brigham Young again addressed the question of who begot Jesus Christ in the flesh. Speaking of Christ, he asked:

Who did beget him? His Father, and his father is our God, and the Father of our spirits, and he is the framer of the body, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who is he. He is Father Adam; Michael; the Ancient of days . . .

While Brigham in his discourse of 1852 may have been unclear, in this 1854 address there is no question about his meaning. Here Brigham distinctly names Adam as God the Father. Wilford Woodruff, Mormon Apostle and later Church President, had no doubt about what Brigham meant. Referring to this discourse under the date of February 19, 1854, in his journal, Woodruff recorded:

He [Brigham Young] said that our God was Father Adam. He was the Father of the Savior Jesus Christ—Our God was no more or less than ADAM, Michael the Arkangel.

It should be noted that Brigham identifies Adam as the “Father of our spirits.” . . . By referring to Adam as the Father of our spirits, Brigham was clearly identifying him as the being whom Mormons address as “Heavenly Father.” . . .

Though Richards and most of the other Church authorities accepted their prophet’s declaration as the word of God, there was one member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles who openly opposed Brigham in his views. That man was Orson Pratt. Under the date of September 17, 1854, LDS Apostle Wilford Woodruff recorded in his journal the details of a confrontation between Young and Pratt. . . . When Young declared some of Orson’s doctrines to be false, Pratt retaliated against the prophet by voicing his disbelief in the Adam-God doctrine:

Brother Pratt also thought that Adam was made of the dust of the Earth Could not believe that Adam was our God or the Father of Jesus Christ President Young said that He was that He came from another world . . . He told Brother Pratt to lay aside his Philosophical reasoning & get revelation from God to govern him & enlighten his mind more. . . .

This dispute between the Mormon Prophet and his Apostle continued for several years. Because of his disbelief in the Adam-God teaching and in other doctrines of Young, Pratt was for years upon the point of being severed from the Church. (The Journal of Pastoral Practice, vol. III, no. 2, 1979, pages 101-104)

In his article, Chris Vlachos not only presents a great deal of evidence to prove that Brigham Young taught the Adam-God doctrine, but he shows clearly that this was a serious violation of the commandment, “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Exodus 20:3) and the grave implications for present-day Mormons:

While throughout the flow of Bible history we see God proclaiming that He alone is to be worshiped, at the same time we find prophets who were not of God taught the contrary. True prophets would never be found teaching the people to worship another god—whether it was a stone idol, an imaginary god dwelling in heaven, or a deified man. . . . when these living oracles of God spoke as prophets, they were moved to proclaim, “Thou shalt worship the LORD thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve.” . . .

Holding fast to these truths let us turn now to Brigham Young, a man who claimed for himself the station and office of prophet of God. Recent history records the lives of few men who have possessed the leadership qualities that Young exhibited. For thirty years he presided as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator over the Mormon Church, a people claiming to be led by prophets of God as in the days of ancient Israel. . . . Their priesthood claims sole possession of the authority or power needed to act on behalf of God, and they consider all other “Christian churches” to be in a state of apostasy, who at best teach a partial truth about the gospel of Christ. Now if Brigham Young, Mormon prophet from 1847 to 1877, were a false prophet all along, then the claims of those who have sought to derive their priesthood authority through him are empty and void. If Brigham taught false doctrine, that cuts the ground from under Mormonism’s claim of latter-day prophetic revelation and the Mormon Church is not divinely led. . . .

The Mormon Church must base the truth of her claims on the authenticity of Brigham’s calling. Yet, we shall see that Brigham Young, who presided over the Mormon Church longer than any other man, did indeed advance false doctrine that focused worship on a god other than the Lord God of Israel. . . .

An examination of the evidence, however, will admit to no other conclusion than that Brigham Young did teach that Adam was Heavenly Father, the Father of men’s spirits as well as the Father of Jesus Christ in the flesh. . . . The doctrine that he taught for over 25 years was false doctrine and the LDS Church admits this today. It has, in effect, sided with Orson Pratt and has adopted his arguments and views as being right. However, in doing this it has unknowingly admitted that Brigham was not an inspired prophet of God. . . .

The implications certainly are obvious. The claims of Utah LDS Church utterly collapse when they claim to be the only true church and the sole possessor of God’s authority.
The Mormon, furthermore, faces the dilemma of being unable to be certain that his present prophet is advancing true doctrine. Perhaps the present teachings of the living prophet will be tomorrow’s false teachings of a dead prophet. Perhaps the present revelations which the modern President claims to have received will be swept under the carpet as was the revelation concerning Adam that Brigham Young claimed to have received from God.

Today’s Mormon cannot hide behind a testimony that the living prophet is advancing correct doctrine. His testimony holds no more weight than the strong testimonies which past members had concerning the truth of Brigham’s Adam-God teaching. . . .

This frightening dilemma in which the Mormon finds himself is not peculiar to him or to his people, but is the snare in which all men find themselves when they put their trust in men. To trust in the arm of flesh is really to have no hope at all. . . .

Bob Witte, of Ex-Mormons for Jesus, has reprinted Chris Vlachos article under the title, Adam is God?!!! It is available from Modern MicroFilm Company for $0.95. We highly recommend this excellent study of the Adam-God doctrine.

A LIVING PROPHET?

As Mormonism continues to change its doctrines apologists for the Church are stressing that Mormons are led by “living prophets” and are not bound by the teachings of the past. This is certainly very poor reasoning. As Chris Vlachos points out, “Perhaps the present teachings of the living prophet will be tomorrow’s false teachings of a dead prophet.” The people in Brigham Young’s day firmly believed that he was a “living prophet,” and when he said that “Adam” is “our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do,” they accepted the doctrine. Elder James A. Little explained: “I believe in the principle of obedience; and if I am told that Adam is our Father and God, I just believe it” (Millennial Star, vol. 16, page 530).

Today, the “living prophet” Spencer W. Kimball denounces the Adam-God teaching as false doctrine:

“We warn you against the dissemination of doctrines which are not according to the scriptures and which are alleged to have been taught by some of the General Authorities of past generations. Such, for instance is the Adam-God theory.

“We denounce that theory and hope that everyone will be cautioned against this and other kinds of false doctrine.” (Deseret News, Church Section, October 9, 1976)

We believe that President Kimball is right in denouncing the Adam-God doctrine, but does this not mean that Brigham Young was a false prophet?

Joseph Smith claimed that God revealed to him that plural marriage was an essential part of the doctrine of the Church (see Doctrine and Covenants, Section 132). President Brigham Young said that “The only men who become Gods, even the Sons of God, are those who enter into polygamy” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 11, page 269). John Taylor, who became the third President of the Mormon Church, once declared: “. . . we are not ashamed . . . to declare that we are polygamists. . . . that we are firm, conscientious believers in polygamy, and that it is part and parcel of our religious creed” (Life of John Taylor, page 255).

Today, the Mormon leaders are firmly opposed to the practice of polygamy. Assistant Church Historian Davis Bitton says: “Today probably no modern people is more antipolygamtist than the orthodox Mormons, . . .” (Journal of Mormon History, vol. 4, 1977, page 101). While early Mormon leaders taught that polygamy was absolutely essential to exaltation, the Apostle Bruce R. McConkie proclaimed just the opposite: “Plural marriage is not essential to salvation or exaltation” (Mormon Doctrine, 1958, page 523). The Apostle McConkie also stated: “Any who pretend or assume to engage in plural marriage in this day, when the one holding the keys has withdrawn the power by which they are performed, are guilty of gross wickedness. They are living in adultery, have already sold their souls to Satan, and (whether their acts are based on ignorance or lust or both) they will be damned in eternity” (Ibid.).

While McConkie maintained that those practicing polygamy today will be “damned in eternity,” the early Mormon leaders declared that the Church would be “damned” if it ever gave up the practice. Heber C. Kimball, First Counselor to Brigham Young, warned:

Some quietly listen to those who speak against the Lord’s servants, against his anointed, against the plurality of wives, and against almost every principle that God has revealed. Such persons have half-a-dozen devils with them all the time. You might as well deny “Mormonism,” and turn away from it, as to oppose the plurality of wives. Let the Presidency of this Church, and the Twelve Apostles, and all the authorities unite and say with one voice that they will oppose that doctrine, and the whole of them would be damned. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 203)

The Mormon authorities have not only “united” against the practice of polygamy, but they have decided to give blacks the Priesthood and “all of the privileges and blessings which the gospel affords” (Deseret News, June 9, 1978). According to Brigham Young, if the Church ever did this, it would lose the Priesthood and go to destruction. The following is taken from a typed copy of a speech given by Brigham Young in 1852 (the spelling errors of the original are retained in this copy):

It is a great blessing to the seed of Adam to have the seed of Cain for servants, . . . Let this Church which is called the kingdom of God on the earth [say]; we will summons the first presidency, the twelve, the high counsel, the Bishoprick, and all the elders of Isreal, suppose we summons them to apear here, and here declare that it is right to mingle our seed, with the black race of Cain, that they shall come in with us and be pertakers with us of all the blessings God has given us. On that very day, and hour we should do so, the priesthood is taken from this Church and kingdom and God leaves us to our fate. The moment we consent to mingle with the seed of Cain the Church must go to destruction,—we should receive the curse which has been place upon the seed of Cain, and never more be numbered with the children of Adam who are heirs to the priesthood until that curse be removed. (Brigham Young Addresses, Ms d 1234, Box 48, folder 3, dated Feb. 5, 1852, located in the LDS Historical Dept.)

The Mormon people are now faced with a serious dilemma; if they really believe Brigham Young was a prophet, then it follows from his statement that the Church has lost the Priesthood, been put under “the curse” and is going to destruction! Apostle Bruce R. McConkie would like us to completely forget what was taught in the past. We have previously quoted him as saying:

. . . it is time disbelieving people repented and got in line and believed in a living, modern prophet. Forget everything that I have said, or what President Brigham Young or President George Q. Cannon or whomsoever has said in days past that is contrary to the present revelation. ("All Are Alike Unto God," page 11)

We feel that it would be very difficult to forget what has been taught in the past. We cannot help but remember that as recently as 1974 Apostle McConkie questioned the spirituality of Church members who believed it was time for a new revelation on the blacks. In a conference message delivered October 4, 1974, he stated:

"Am I valiant in the testimony of Jesus if my chief interest and concern in life is laying up in store the treasures of the earth, rather than the building up of the kingdom? . . .

"Am I valiant if I am deeply concerned about the Church’s stand on who can or who cannot receive the priesthood and think it is time for a new revelation on this doctrine? . . .

"Am I valiant if I engage in gambling, play cards, go to pornographic movies, . . . (The Ensign, November 1974, page 35)

In 1974 Apostle McConkie was reproving his people for even suggesting that there should be a “new revelation” on the blacks, but now that the “revelation” has come, he says that it is “time disbeliefing people repent” and got in line and believed in a living, modern prophet.” It appears to us that the people Apostle McConkie accused of not being valiant are the ones who were right all along. We feel that the Church leaders should be the ones to “repent” for teaching false doctrine.

BYU COMPUTER STUDY

During the last two or three years the newspapers have carried some sensational stories concerning the Book of Mormon. On June 25, 1977, the Los Angeles Times reported that three handwriting experts had declared that portions of the Book of Mormon were written by Solomon Spalding. Now that the controversy over this issue has somewhat subsided, the Mormon Church has countered with the startling claim that a computer study has yielded evidence favorable to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The Provo Herald for October 7, 1979, contained this information:

Statisticians, using modern computer techniques to digest and analyze the Book of Mormon word by word, are debunking the 150-year-old claims that the book is the work of just one man.

Utilizing a computer to identify “wordprints” or word use patterns that scientifically differentiate between individual writing styles, researchers have uncovered what they claim is conclusive evidence that the Book of Mormon is the work of many authors.

This is in direct contradiction to critics who claim the book is a fictional work written in the 1820s by Joseph Smith, the prophet-founder of the LDS Church, or by Solomon Spalding, . . .

The research was done by Dr. Alvin C. Rencher, a professor of statistics at Brigham Young University, and Dr. Wayne A. Larsen, a statistician for the Eyring Research Center, both located in Provo.

“The overwhelming evidence given here should permanently lay to rest the alternative theories that Joseph Smith or Solomon Spalding wrote the Book of Mormon,” a report on the study says. . . .

Wordprint comparisons between the Book of Mormon and the known 19th century writings of Joseph Smith and Mr. Spalding show conclusively that neither of these persons, authored the book, the statisticians say.

In fact, their research indicates that the book was authored by at least 24 different writers, and possibly more, whose styles bear no resemblance to that of Joseph Smith, Mr. Spalding or other 19th century writers whom they examined . . .

One of the tests went so far as to indicate that “odds against a single author exceeded 100 billion to one,” the statisticians noted in the report.

Are the conclusions of the study final? “I don’t think the last word is in yet,” Dr. Rencher says. But he also says he is confident the research is valid and the statistical methods used in the study are sound. . . .

Wordprints are developed by feeding passages of 1,000 word minimum for each author into a computer and analyzing the frequency of what Dr. Rencher calls “non-contextual words” such as and, for, it, as, be and which.

Different authors develop different patterns in the frequency of use of such words—patterns not related to the context of the material but constant throughout the individual’s writing.

That makes the wordprint a useful tool for identification of authorship, much like a fingerprint or voiceprint can be used to identify an individual, Dr. Rencher said.

While we certainly do not profess to be computer experts, we can make a few preliminary comments about the study and wait for a response by non-Mormon authorities in the field.

To begin with, the list of “24 Major Book of Mormon Authors Used in the Study,” seems to be somewhat padded (see The New Era, November 1979, page 11). For instance, we find Isaiah listed as one of the authors. Since Isaiah is a book in the Bible and since the Book of Mormon itself acknowledges that it is quoting from Isaiah, we do not feel that it should be included in this study. If we are going to include Bible authors as part of the list of “Book of Mormon Authors,” we might as well add Moses, Matthew and Malachi (see Book of Mormon, pages 161, 423-429, 446-448).

The BYU researchers stretch the matter even further by including the “Lord” as “quoted by Isaiah” as part of the “24 Major Book of Mormon Authors.” Also included in this list are the “Lord,” “Jesus” and the “Father.” It would appear, then, that the BYU researchers have created four “Book of Mormon Authors” out of the Father and the Son! On page 11 of their study in The New Era, the researchers admit: “Since the term Lord can refer either to the Father or the Son, we separated the words attributed to the Lord from those attributed to the Father or to Christ.” From this it would appear that the list of “24 Major Book of Mormon Authors,” is a preconceived listing of authors rather than the results actually obtained from a computer.

Actually, we are very much in favor of computer studies with regard to the Book of Mormon. We would especially like to see a study showing the parallels between the King James Version and the Book of Mormon. We feel that such a study could provide some very important evidence regarding the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. As to the use of a computer in the analysis of different styles we are not certain that the results would be as conclusive. We feel that there are many factors that could affect such a study. Just as in the analysis of handwriting, we are concerned that the interpretation of the data can be affected by the person who studies it. We remember that many years ago a computer expert declared that all of the letters of Paul in the Bible were forgeries except for the book of Romans! Of course we were not willing to accept such a startling claim just on the basis of a computer study, and we doubt that a Mormon would receive it without additional evidence.

In 1972 Herbert Guerry began a computer study on the Book of Mormon to determine authorship. When information about the study was published in a tract by an individual belonging to the Reorganized Church, Dr. Guerry felt he had been “grossly” misrepresented. The tract had stated that “Authentic authorship of books and papers can apparently be established by computer comparisons of grammar and language usage peculiar to each individual.” Dr. Guerry’s reply to this statement was as follows: “False. Or, rather, we simply do not know enough yet to be able to make such claims. Moreover, it just might turn out that writers’ styles are not sufficiently unique to allow us to make positive identifications” (Saint’s Herald, August 1975, page 16).

The tract said that “Apparently one’s language is unique much like one’s fingerprints.” Dr. Guerry replied that “This is a paraphrase of a speculation I made often at Idaho State University: what I usually said was that I wanted to find out whether or not one’s prose style was as unique as one’s fingerprints.”

The tract alleged that “The government believes in the method and recently granted $200,000 for a computer analysis of the Federalist Papers to determine authorship.” Dr. Guerry protested: “False again . . . or at best misleading. The federal government funds much research, but to do so does not mean that the government ‘believes in’ a particular method. When the government funds a research project of this type it, in effect, is only saying that the project has sufficient merit to deserve support. . . . Many people have done authorship determination studies, and they use many different methods. My methods differ from those of the two recent studies of the Federalist Papers [these latter two studies, incidentally, reached differing conclusions].”

The tract stated that “There was no match between the Book of Mormon and any contemporary author of that period.” The reply to this was as follows: “False, since no clear results about the authorship of the Book of Mormon have yet emerged from the study except perhaps, that it was not written by Solomon Spaulding or Sidney Rigdon, but this is hardly an amazing result.” Dr. Guerry went on to state that “The study has shown nothing yet about Smith’s relationship to the Book of Mormon, . . .”

The Mormon scholar Elinore H. Partridge made these observations on the analysis of a person’s style of writing:

A stylistic analysis, even an objective, statistical analysis, is not as certain a means of establishing authorship as handwriting . . .

Some of the linguists who have done stylistic studies have suggested that the style of a person is as unique as his fingerprints. If one could adequately describe a person’s style, he would then have a stylistic “register” unique to that person. Unfortunately, things are not quite that simple. A person’s fingerprints do not change, but his style often does. Furthermore, everyone adjusts his style to suit various occasions. The language we use in speaking to a colleague or a friend differs from the language we use in a formal speech or paper. However, a careful analysis of someone’s style can usually identify certain features which that person uses on a variety of occasions. Even when a person’s style changes, as it often does, during his lifetime, a trained observer can usually trace the changes and identify continuing characteristics. (“Characteristics of Joseph Smith’s Style and Notes on the Authorship of the Lectures on Faith,” Task Papers in LDS History, no. 14, December 1976, pages 1-2)

On page 23 of the same study we find the following:

Joseph Smith’s writing is characteristically marked by series of related ideas joined by simple conjunctions: and, but, for. In his handwritten manuscripts, he used neither punctuation nor capitalization as sentence markers. When his writing has been edited, or when someone else wrote words which he dictated, the result is an unusually large number of sentences beginning with for, and, or but [almost three out of five sentences].

After reading these statements by Elinore H. Partridge, we decided to see how Joseph Smith’s style with regard to these words compared to the Book of Mormon. We picked at random Alma, Chapter 2, and found that about 62 percent of the sentences begin with and, for or but. This compared well with the statement that “almost three out of five sentences” (about 60 percent) of Smith’s sentences begin with these three words. We applied the same test to Joseph Smith’s “strange” account of the First Vision, which we have photographically reproduced in the book Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary. We found that 61 percent of the sentences tested began with these words. We also made a study of a portion of Solomon Spalding’s printed manuscript, but found that he only used these three words about 10 percent of the time. Elinore H. Partridge claims that Rigdon only used these words about 5 percent of the time in the material she studied.

In any case, we feel that there are some very serious problems with regard to the text of the Book of Mormon which will make it very difficult to examine with a computer. One thing that presents a real challenge is that the Book of Mormon is filled with material which has been plagiarized from the Bible and other sources. For instance, it is very obvious that 1 Nephi, Chapter 18, borrows from Mark, Chapter 4. The reader will notice the identical material in the two extracts which follows:

. . . there arose a great storm . . . the wind ceased, and there was a great calm. (Mark 4: 37,39)

. . . there arose a great storm . . . the winds did cease, . . . and there was a great calm. (1 Nephi 18:13,21)

The storm in the book of Nephi was supposed to have occurred about 600 years before the one recorded in Mark. The only logical conclusion for this similarity is that the author of the Book of Mormon lived in the 19th century and borrowed from the King James Version of the Bible. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and The Changing World of Mormonism, we show a large number of passages that have been lifted from the King James Version without any indication. In another study which we made (The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 2), we listed 400 parallels between the New Testament and the Book of Mormon. H. Michael Marquardt has also made a good summary of the issue in his pamphlet The Use of the Bible in the Book of Mormon and Early Nineteenth Century Events Reflected in the Book of Mormon.

It seems that almost every time we carefully examine a portion of the Book of Mormon we find more parallels. We feel, however, that a computer would reveal many more. This would be in addition to the large amount of material which is acknowledged to have been included from the Old Testament.

We feel, therefore, that if a computer could actually be programmed to sort out writing styles, it would, no doubt, show more than 24 different authors. We would probably find Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Job, David, Solomon, Ezekiel, Daniel, Jonah, Micah, Malachi, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, James, Peter, Jude, etc. The Book of Mormon also seems to have parallels to the Apocalypse, the Westminster Confession, and other publications (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?). We feel that it will be very difficult to make an accurate stylistic analysis of a book which plagiarizes from so many different sources.

Even if a researcher were able to struggle through this pitfall, there is another problem when it comes to comparing Joseph Smith’s style to that found in the Book of Mormon. This is that Joseph Smith (or his scribes) continued to borrow from other authors in his later writings. For instance, we find this statement attributed to Joseph Smith in his History of the Church 2:349-50:

I was then unknown to Mr. Chandler, neither did he know that such a book or work as the record of the Nephites, had been brought before the public. From New York, he took his collection on to Philadelphia, . . .
Research has revealed that these are really the words of Oliver Cowdery and are taken from a letter which was published in the Messenger and Advocate, December 1835, vol. 2, page 235:

Bro. Smith was then unknown to Mr. Chandler, neither did he know that such a book or work as the record of the Nephites had been brought before the public. From New York he took his collection to Philadelphia, . . .

This is just a brief example. Actually, hundreds of words have been taken from this letter by Cowdery and inserted into the History of the Church as if Joseph Smith was the author. We could cite many other examples of this process. What started out as harmless plagiarism turned into out-and-out falsification after Joseph Smith’s death. He had completed less than 40 percent of the History of the Church before passing away, but the Mormon leaders tried to make it appear that he had written all six volumes. They did use some original documents which Smith was responsible for, but they altered the words to suit their purposes. In many places they had nothing to follow and had to falsify material from sources such as other people’s diaries and newspapers to fill in the void. For example, on August 13, 1842, the local newspaper, The Wasp, reported:

. . . Joseph Smith was arrested upon a requisition of Gov. Carlin, . . . Mr. Rockwell was arrested at the same time as principal. . . they left them in care of the Marshal, without the original writ by which they were arrested, and by which only they could be retained, and returned back to Gov. Carlin for further instruction,—and Messrs. Smith and Rockwell went about their business. . . .

As to Mr. Smith, we have yet to learn by what rule of right he was arrested to be transported to Missouri for a trial of the kind stated.

When this was republished in the History of the Church it was changed to the first person to make it appear that Joseph Smith had written it:

. . . I was arrested . . . on a warrant issued by Governor Carlin, . . . Brother Rockwell was arrested at the same time as principal. . . they left us in the care of the Marshal, without the original writ by which we were arrested, and by which only we could be retained, and returned to Governor Carlin for further instructions, and myself and Rockwell went about our business.

I have yet to learn by what rule of right I was arrested to be transported to Missouri for a trial of the kind stated. (History of the Church, vol. 5, pages 86-87)

Even Joseph Smith’s famous Rocky Mountain Prophecy was interpolated into the History of the Church as if he had written it (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 133-34).

In 1965 we published a book entitled, Changes in Joseph Smith’s History, in which we charged that most of Joseph Smith’s History was not written until after his death. For some time the Mormon historians kept silent about this serious charge, but finally they had to admit that the History of the Church had been falsified. Dean C. Jesse, of the Church Historical Department, conceded that “At the time of Joseph Smith’s death, the narrative was written to August 5, 1838” (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, page 466). On page 472 of the same article, Dean Jesse admitted that “The Joseph Smith History was finished in August 1856, seventeen years after it was begun.” Since Joseph Smith died in 1844, this would mean that the History was not finished until 12 years after his death. The Church’s 1978 printing of the History of the Church still claims on the title page of each volume that it is the “History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, BY HIMSELF.”

The Mormon scholar Hugh Nibley says that “A forgery is defined by specialists in ancient documents as ‘any document which was not produced in the time, place, and manner claimed by it or its publishers’” (Since Cumorah, page 160). Under this definition the History of the Church must be classed as a forgery. While it does contain some very important information about Joseph Smith, most of it “was not produced in the time, place, and manner claimed by it or its publishers.”

Although the History of the Church contains hundreds of pages of material attributed to Joseph Smith, it is of little value to those who seek to find his style of writing. Even one of the Assistant Church Historians, Davis Bitton, has had to admit that “for researchers in early Mormon history Rule Number One is ‘Do not rely on the DHC; never use a quotation from it without comparing the earlier versions’” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1968, page 32).

Mormon scholar Marvin S. Hill made this observation about the History of the Church:

One reason that Brodie concluded that Joseph had veiled his personality behind a “perpetual flow of words” in his history may be that he assumed he had dictated most of it. We now know that large portions of that history were not dictated but were written by scribes and later transferred into the first person to read as though the words were Joseph’s. That fact makes what few things Joseph Smith wrote himself of great significance. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Winter 1972, page 76)

We would challenge the BYU researchers to make a computer study of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. We feel that they would find far more than 24 authors involved in the production of that work.

We assume that the BYU computer experts used authentic specimens from Joseph Smith’s writings to compare with the Book of Mormon. We asked Dr. Alvin C. Rencher about this matter on the phone. He replied that he could not specifically remember just what sources they had used for Joseph Smith, but he claimed that they had been verified as authentic by historians in the Church. In any case, anyone who attempts this type of research in the future should be aware of the fact that Joseph Smith’s History of the Church is not a dependable source for the study of his style of writing. Elinore H. Partridge felt that the Church’s published sources were not reliable for stylistic analysis. For this reason she used some of Joseph Smith’s own letters and early diaries for her study. She says that the manuscripts she “found most useful included ten letters and parts of a letterbook, and small sections of two diaries. . . . I studied the parts of the Letterbook, dated 1832-33, the 1832-34 Diary, and the 1835-36 Diary which were in Joseph Smith’s handwriting” (“Characteristics of Joseph Smith’s Style . . .” page 4).

The Mormon leaders suppressed Joseph Smith’s diaries for many years, but recently we obtained copies of and printed both the 1832-34 and the 1835-36 diaries. We feel that they are very valuable in showing that Joseph Smith had the ability to write the Book of Mormon and that they are very important when it comes to stylistic analysis. As we indicated before, we have also included a photographic copy of Joseph Smith’s 1832 account of the First Vision in the publication Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary. We feel that the style of this writing agrees very well with that found in the Book of Mormon. For instance, the account begins, “I was born . . . of goodly parents . . .” This reminds us of 1 Nephi 1:1: “I Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, . . .” Joseph Smith’s “strange” account of the First Vision sounds very much like the conversion of Enos in the forest. In the “strange” account we read: “. . . I cried unto the Lord . . . and he spake unto me saying Joseph my Son thy Sins are forgiven thee.” The Book of Mormon account says: “. . . I cried unto him . . . And there came a voice unto me, saying: Enos, thy sins are forgiven thee, . . .” (Enos, verses 4-5).
When the Book of Mormon was first published, some people ridiculed it because it was filled with the expression, “And it came to pass.” Joseph Smith was bothered by this criticism and in later years tried to not use this expression. If we examine the 1832 account, however, we find that it was really a part of his early style. For instance, at one place in the manuscript he stated: “. . . and it came to pass when I was seventeen years of Age . . .”

If we had the time and space, we could cite a number of other things that tend to make us believe that the two works came from the same pen.

In trying to determine the value of the BYU computer study we have been hindered because of the unavailability of material. Alvin Rencher told us that a larger study would appear in a forthcoming book, but he said he had been “asked not to release copies until the editorial process is complete” (Letter dated November 14, 1979). In the same letter he said that “The New Era article is the only thing available so far.” He did enclose a copy of a letter written on November 6, 1979, and while it does not add much to our knowledge of the study, it does show that the first edition of the Book of Mormon was not used: “We are, of course, aware that there have been many changes since the first edition, (mostly minor). Someday we may repeat the study using the 1830 edition. Our experience with this present study would indicate that no new conclusions would be reached. Two different linguists have told us that the many minor changes from the 1830 edition really attest to the fact that the translation is from a Hebrew-like language. That is, the present edition is much better English. The 1830 edition is better Hebrew.”

While we do not really know how much difference it would make, we do feel that the use of a later edition would have a definite affect on stylistic analysis (see our study 3.913 Changes in the Book of Mormon). We would be especially interested in seeing a study comparing the “strange” account of the First Vision with the unchanged text of the 1830 Book of Mormon.

As to the claim that the grammatical errors in the Book of Mormon tend to prove it was translated from “a Hebrew-like language,” we feel that this is only wishful thinking. Joseph Smith’s other documents and letters have the same type of grammatical errors in them. We do not feel that anyone would argue that a letter to his wife Emma came from a Hebrew-like language just because it contains grammatical errors. We tend to agree with the Mormon historian B. H. Roberts when he wrote:

. . . such errors in grammar and diction as occur in the translation are just such errors as might reasonably be looked for in the work of one unlearned in the English language. . . . it cannot be claimed that the Nephite original is responsible for verbal inaccuracies and grammatical errors. . . . Are these flagrant errors in grammar chargeable to the Lord? To say so is to invite ridicule. The thoughts, the doctrines, are well enough; but the awkward, ungrammatical expression of the thoughts is, doubtless, the result of the translator’s imperfect knowledge of the English language. . . . (Defense of the Faith, pages 278-308)

B. H. ROBERTS’ SECRET MANUSCRIPT

We are often asked how a young man like Joseph Smith could produce a work like the Book of Mormon. As we have already indicated, we feel that the Bible was the main source. Many of the stories found in the Bible were simply rewritten and inserted into the Book of Mormon. Hundreds of passages have been lifted from the New Testament and appear in the Book of Mormon in the style of the King James Version.

Besides the Bible, however, Joseph Smith had access to a great deal of source material. One of the most interesting books which was published prior to the Book of Mormon was Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews. The first edition was printed in 1823; it was soon sold out and an enlarged edition appeared in 1825. The Mormon historian B. H. Roberts read View of the Hebrews and evidently became concerned because of the many parallels between it and the Book of Mormon. He prepared a manuscript in which these parallels are listed. Copies of Roberts’ list of parallels were “privately distributed among a restricted group of Mormon scholars,” and in January 1956 Mervin B. Hogan had them published in The Rocky Mountain Mason. A careful reading of B. H. Roberts’ work leads one to believe that he had serious doubts about the Book of Mormon. Roberts listed eighteen parallels between View of the Hebrews and the Book of Mormon. In his fourth parallel he stated: “It is often represented by Mormon speakers and writers, that the Book of Mormon was the first to represent the American Indians as the descendants of the Hebrews; holding that the Book of Mormon is unique in this. The claim is sometimes still ignorantly made” (page 18).

Some new evidence concerning B. H. Roberts’ interest in View of the Hebrews has recently come to light. It has been discovered that Roberts wrote a manuscript of 291 pages entitled, “A Book of Mormon Study.” In this manuscript 176 pages were devoted to the relationship of View of the Hebrews to the Book of Mormon. The manuscript was never published and remained in the family after his death.

A false rumor concerning this suppressed manuscript has recently been circulated—i.e., that B. H. Roberts tried to answer the objections which he himself had raised in his shorter work of eighteen parallels. This idea is certainly far from the truth. We have recently had the privilege of studying Roberts’ work and have found that it not only fails to answer the objections to the Book of Mormon mentioned in the shorter work, but that it raises many new problems as well.

Truman G. Madsen, professor of philosophy at Brigham Young University, concedes that B. H. Roberts did prepare a manuscript entitled, “Book of Mormon Study,” but he maintains that Roberts was merely using “the ‘Devil’s Advocate’ approach to stimulate thought”.

Later, in March of 1922, Roberts prepared a draft of a written report to the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve. It included a further discussion of the linguistic problems and other points as well. The study of such books as those of Josiah Priest, Ethan Smith, and others led him to examine such questions as: What literary and historical speculations were abroad in the nineteenth century? Could Joseph Smith have absorbed them in his youth and could these influences have provided the ground plan for such a work as the Book of Mormon? Did Joseph Smith have a mind “sufficiently creative” to have written it? And what internal problems and parallels within the Book of Mormon called for explanation? In confronting such questions Roberts prepared a series of “parallels” with Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews; a summary of this analysis excerpted passages from Ethan Smith’s work and lined them up in columns with comparable ideas in the Book of Mormon. Examination of such questions was contained in a typewritten manuscript entitled “Book of Mormon Study.”

About this particular study, certain points must be kept in mind if it is not to be gravely misunderstood. First, it was not intended for general dissemination but was to be presented to the General Authorities to identify for them certain criticisms that might be made against the Book of Mormon. . . .

Second, the report was not intended to be balanced. A kind of lawyer’s brief of one side of a case written to stimulate discussion in preparation of the defense of a work, already accepted as true, the manuscript was anything but a careful presentation of Robert’s thoughts about the Book of Mormon or of his own convictions. . . .

Teachers who have used the “Devil’s Advocate” approach to stimulate thought among their students, lawyers who in preparation of their cases have brought up what they consider the points likely to be made by their worthy opponents—all such people will recognize the unfairness of taking such statements out of context and offering them as their own mature, balanced conclusions. For ill-wishers to resurrect Roberts’s similar “Devil’s Advocate” probings is not a service to scholarship, for they are manifestly dated. And it is a travesty to take such working papers as a fair statement of B. H. Roberts’s own appraisal of the Book of Mormon, for, as this paper abundantly demonstrates, his conviction of its truth was unshaken and frequently expressed down to the time of his death. (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1979, pages 440-442)

While there is no evidence that B. H. Roberts publicly repudiated the Book of Mormon, a careful reading of his manuscript, “A Book of Mormon Study,” leads one to believe that he was in the process of losing faith in its divine origin. Although he may have started out merely playing the part of the “Devil’s Advocate,” we feel that he played the role so well that he developed grave doubts about the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. The following quotations from Roberts’ manuscript should be of interest to the reader. In Part I, Chapter 14, of his study B. H. Roberts summarized:

...was Joseph Smith possessed of a sufficiently vivid and creative imagination as to produce such a work as the Book of Mormon from such materials as have been indicated in the preceding chapters—from such common knowledge as was extant in the communities where he lived in his boyhood and young manhood; from the Bible, and more especially from the “View of the Hebrews,” by Ethan Smith? That such power of imagination would have to be of a high order is conceded; that Joseph Smith possessed such a gift of mind there can be no question....

A superabundance of evidence of Joseph Smith’s power of imagination exists outside of the Book of Mormon. If the Book of Mormon be regarded as of merely human origin, then, of course, to those so regarding it, the rest of Joseph Smith’s work falls to the same plane. ...

In the light of this evidence, there can be no doubt as to the possession of a vividly strong, creative imagination by Joseph Smith, the Prophet, An imagination, it could with reason be urged, which, given the suggestions that are to be found in the “common knowledge” of accepted American Antiquities of the times, supplemented by such a work as Ethan Smith’s “View of the Hebrews,” would make it possible for him to create a book such as the Book of Mormon is.

In Part II, Chapter 1, of B. H. Roberts’ manuscript “A Book of Mormon Study,” we find this surprising observation:

If from all that has gone before in part I, the view be taken that the Book of Mormon is merely of human origin; that a person of Joseph Smith’s limitations in experience and in education; who was of the vicinage and of the period that produced the book—if it be assumed that he is the author of it, then it could be said that there is much internal evidence in the book itself to sustain such a view.

In the first place there is a certain lack of perspective in the things the book relates as history that points quite clearly to an undeveloped mind as their origin. The narrative proceeds in characteristic disregard of conditions necessary to its reasonableness, as if it were a tale told by a child, with utter disregard for consistency.

These are not the words of an “anti-Mormon” writer, but the words of the Mormon historian B. H. Roberts—one of the greatest scholars the Church has ever known. Roberts not only prepared the “Introduction and Notes” for Joseph Smith’s History of the Church, but he also wrote the six-volume work, A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He is also noted for his many works defending the Book of Mormon.

The following is found in Part II, Chapter 2, of Roberts’ manuscript:

The same lack of perspective and of consistency is also manifest in the early movements of both Jaredite and Nephite colonies after arriving “to the promised land.” Also the same tendency to parallel incidents and characteristics as we have noted in the formation of the two colonies, and the incidents of their wilderness journey and sea voyage. It may be asked, what of this parallelism? What does it amount to? If such a question should be asked the opponent of the Book of Mormon would answer with emphasize—‘This of it. It supplies the evidence that the Book of Mormon is the product of one mind, and that, a very limited mind, unconsciously reproducing with only slight variation its visions.” And the answer will be accepted as significant at least, if not conclusive.

In Part II, Chapter 3, Roberts wrote:

There were other anti-Christians among the Nephites, but they were more military leaders than religious innovators, yet much of the same character in spirit with these dissenters here passed in review; but I shall hold that what is here presented illustrates sufficiently the matter taken in hand by referring to them, namely that they are all of one breed and brand; so nearly alike that one mind is the author of them, and that a young and undeveloped, but piously inclined mind. The evidence, I sorrowfully submit, points some will contend to Joseph Smith as their creator. It is difficult to believe that they are the product of history, that they come upon the scene separated by long periods of time, and among a race which was the ancestral race of the red man of America.

In the next chapter B. H. Roberts maintains:

The allusions here to absurdities of expressions and incidents in the Book of Mormon, are not made for the purpose of ridiculing the book, or casting any aspersions upon it; but they are made to indicate what may be fairly regarded as just objects of criticism under the assumption that the Book of Mormon is of human origin, and that Joseph Smith is its author. For these absurdities in expression; these miraculous incidents in warfare; these almost mock—and certainly extravagant—heroes; ... are certainly just such absurdities and lapses as would be looked for if a person of such limitations as bounded Joseph Smith undertook to put forth a book dealing with the history and civilization of ancient and unknown peoples.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 84-85, we show that “Another book which Joseph Smith may have read before ‘translating’ the Book of Mormon was written by Josiah Priest. It was entitled The Wonders of Nature and Providence Displayed, and was published in 1825 at Albany, New York.” It is interesting to note that B. H. Roberts also felt that this book could have furnished structural material for the Book of Mormon:

A number of years ago in my treatises on the Book of Mormon under the general title “A New Witness for God.” I discussed the subject “Did the Book of Mormon antedate works in English on American antiquities, accessible to Joseph Smith and his associates?” ... it was insisted upon that books sufficient for a ground plan of the Book of Mormon, and accessible to Joseph Smith, did not exist.

The writer at the time being considered did not take sufficiently into account the work of Josiah Priest’s ... Priest himself, indeed, published a book ... The Wonders of Nature and Providence, copyrighted by him June 2nd, 1824, and printed soon afterwards in Rochester, New York, only some twenty miles distant from Palmyra, near which place the Smith family then began to reside. It will be observed that this book precended the publication of the Book of Mormon by about six years. At the time I made for my “New Witnesses” the survey of the literature on American Antiquities, traditions, origins, etc., available to Joseph Smith and his associates, this work of Priest’s was unknown to me; as was also the work by Ethan Smith, View of the Hebrews—except by report of it, and as being in my hands but a few minutes.

In this book The Wonders of Nature and Providence, . . . Mr. Priest begins to argue at length that the Indians may be descendants of the Israelites. . . . he quotes in all about forty writers, . . . who advocated in one way or another, that the American Indians are Israelites. . . . it is altogether probable that these two books, Priest’s Wonders of Nature and Providence, 1824; and Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews, 1820, were either possessed by Joseph Smith or certainly known by him, for they were surely available to him, and of course, with all the collection of quoted matter . . . some forty or fifty earlier authors in all being quoted. . . .

Moreover, on subjects widely discussed, . . . there is built up in course of years, a community knowledge of such subjects, usually referred to as matters of common knowledge . . . Such “common” knowledge existed throughout New England and New York . . . the prevailing ideas respecting the American Indians throughout the regions named; a favorable to the notion that they were of Hebrew origin, . . . And with the existence of such a body of knowledge, or that which was accepted as “knowledge,” and a person of vivid and constructive imaginative power in contact with it, there is little room for doubt but that it might be possible for Joseph Smith to construe “a theory of origin for his Book of Mormon, in harmony with these prevailing notions; and more especially since this common knowledge” is set forth in almost hand-book form in the little work of Ethan Smith, . . . It will appear in what is to follow that such “common knowledge” did exist in New England; that Joseph Smith was in contact with it; that one book, at least, with which he was most likely acquainted, could well have furnished structural outlines for the Book of Mormon; and that Joseph Smith was possessed of such creative imaginative powers as would make it quite within the lines of possibility that the Book of Mormon could have been produced in that way. (“A Book of Mormon Study,” Part I, Chapter 1)

In Part I, Chapter 7, of the same manuscript B. H. Roberts asked this question:

Could an investigator of the Book of Mormon be much blamed if be were to decide that Ethan Smith’s book with its suggestion as to the division of his Israelites into two peoples; with its suggestion of “tremendous wars” between them; and of the savages overcoming the civilized division—led to the fashioning of these same chief things in the Book of Mormon?

B. H. Roberts made this comment in Part I, Chapter 13:

As to the first consideration, in this case, priority of production of Ethan Smith’s book, and priority of sufficient duration for it to become generally known in the vicinity where both books were produced—there is absolute certainty. For Ethan Smith’s book ran through two editions in New England before the Book of Mormon was published. As to the second consideration, in this case, the likelihood of Joseph Smith coming in contact with Ethan Smith’s book is not only very great, but amounts to a very close certainty. For being published in an adjoining county to the one in which their home had been for so long, and the interest in the subject being very general, not only in New England but in New York also, it would be little short of miraculous if they did not know of Ethan Smith’s book.

Further on in the same chapter Roberts made these observations:

But now to return from this momentary divergence to the main theme of this writing—viz, did Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews furnish structural material for Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon? It has been pointed out in these pages that there are many things in the former book that might well have suggested many major things in the other. Not a few things merely, one or two, or a half dozen, but many; and it is this fact of many things of similarity and the cumulative force of them, that makes them so serious a menace to Joseph Smith’s story of the Book of Mormon’s origin. . . .

The material in Ethan Smith’s book is of a character and quantity to make a ground plan for the Book of Mormon: . . . Can such numerous and startling points of resemblance and suggestive contact, be merely coincidence?

B. H. Roberts also felt that the Bible could have provided seeds for Joseph Smith’s fruitful imagination:

Matthew and Zechariah, then, could well be thought of as furnishing material for the Book of Mormon signs of the Birth of Messiah.

So also as to the Book of Mormon signs of Messiah’s death and resurrection . . . The three hours darkness, expanded to three days of darkness; the evidently momentary earthquake of Matthew, to three hours of earth quaking; the local rending of rocks in Matthew, to the rending of a continent; and the fear of a Roman Centurion and those that were with him, to the terror of a whole people.

With these things as suggestions as to signs for Messiah’s birth and death and resurrection, and one of conceded vivid, and strong and constructive imaginative powers to work them all out, need not be regarded as an unthinkable procedure and achievement. (Ibid.)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 64-65, we demonstrated that the great revivals which swept New York in the 1820s are reflected in the Book of Mormon. B. H. Roberts also considered this to be a possibility:

It is clearly established now that these scenes of religion frenzy, were common in the vicinage where Joseph Smith resided in his youth and early manhood. . . . Joseph Smith himself came in contact with these emotional phenomena in his own experience after their rebirth in the early decades of the 19th century.

The Question is, did his knowledge of these things, lead to the introduction of similar ones into the Book of Mormon narrative? I think it cannot be questioned but what there is sufficient resemblance . . . to justify the thought that the latter might well have suggested, and indeed become the source of the former. (Ibid., Part U, Chapter 5)

In Part II, Chapter 6, of his manuscript, B. H. Roberts observed:

There can be no doubt but what the style of preaching, exhortation, warning, praying, admonition together with the things emphasized and the ends aimed at in such work of the Christian ministry as came to the attention of Joseph Smith, was all largely and deeply influenced by those first and greatest evangelical popular preachers of Protestant Christianity, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Jonathan Edwards, and Dr. Thomas Coke, et al.

Roberts gives lengthy extracts from some of the religious writings that would have been available to Joseph Smith. One quotation from the “Eighteen Sermons” by George Whitefield, published in 1808, contains this statement: “. . . Methinks I see . . . the Judge sitting on his throne, . . .” This reminds us of Alma’s statement in the Book of Mormon, Alma 36:22: “. . . me thought I saw . . . God sitting upon his throne, . . .”

After a careful examination of B. H. Roberts’ manuscript, “A Book of Mormon Study,” we have come to the conclusion that he has done an excellent job of compiling the evidence to show that Joseph Smith could have written the Book of Mormon from the material available to him. Although Roberts’ study has not been published, we are happy to report that Wesley P. Walters has prepared an article analyzing this manuscript for The Journal of Pastoral Practice, vol. III, no. 3. We felt that Walters’ article was so important that we reproduced it in its entirety. Also we have included some very revealing photographs taken from Roberts’ original manuscript. This reprint of Wesley P. Walters’ article is now available from Modern Microfilm Co. for $2.00 a copy.
WILL BENSON BE KING?
MORMON LEADER STRIVES FOR POLITICAL POWER

On February 24, 1980, the Salt Lake Tribune carried a full-page advertisement concerning our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism. In this ad we demonstrated that many important changes have been made in Mormon doctrine. Two days after this was published, Ezra Taft Benson, who is President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles and next in line to lead the Mormon Church, spoke at Brigham Young University. In this speech he claimed that the “Living Prophet” is “More Vital to Us Than the Standard Works”—i.e., the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. He went on to warn: “Beware of those who would pit the dead prophets against the living prophets, for the living prophets always take precedence.” Using this type of reasoning a Mormon could set aside the teachings of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young when they disagree with the “Living Prophet.”

It would appear from President Benson’s speech that he wants his people to allow the “Living Prophet” to do their thinking in temporal as well as spiritual matters. This is reminiscent of the ward teacher’s message for June, 1945:

> When our leaders speak, the thinking has been done. When they point the way, there is no other which is safe. When they give direction, it should mark the end of controversy. (Improvement Era, June 1945, page 354)

Ezra Taft Benson’s speech has caused great consternation among Mormons who want to “do their own thinking.” One thing they really fear is his attempt to mix politics with religion. He indicates that the Prophet has a right to dictate to his people on political matters and even to “lead them in government. Alma was the head of the Church and of the government in the Book of Mormon; Joseph Smith was mayor of Nauvoo and Brigham Young was governor of Utah . . . Those who would remove prophets from politics would take God out of government.” Those who know of President Benson’s previous attempts to involve the Church in politics realize the danger that lies ahead if he should become the “Living Prophet.” This is a very real possibility because Spencer W. Kimball, the present leader, is four years older than Benson and now in poor health (during the last several months Kimball has undergone surgery twice to drain “an accumulation of fluid between his brain and skull” (The Ensign, January 1980, page 80).

The Mormon Kingdom

From the very beginning Mormon Church leaders were inclined to meddle in politics. Joseph Smith himself set up a secret “Council of Fifty” and had himself ordained to be a king. In 1853 William Marks, who had been a member of the Council of Fifty, revealed: “I was also witness of the introduction (secretly,) of a kingly form of government, in which Joseph suffered himself to be ordained a king, to reign over the house of Israel forever, . . .” (Zion’s Harbinger and Baneemy’s Organ, St. Louis, July, 1853, page 53).

In his master’s thesis for Brigham Young University, Klaus J. Hansen tells that George Miller, who had been a member of the Council of Fifty, admitted that Joseph Smith was ordained to be a king: “Rumors implying that the Prophet assumed royal pretensions are somewhat substantiated by George Miller who stated on one occasion that ‘In this council we ordained Joseph Smith as King on earth’” (“The Theory and Practice of the Political Kingdom of God in Mormon History, 1829-1890,” master’s thesis, BYU, 1959, typed copy, page 114).

In Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1966, page 104, Mr. Hansen frankly admitted that “Joseph Smith did start a political kingdom of God and a Council of Fifty; he was made king over that organization. . . .”

When Fawn Brodie stated that Joseph Smith was anointed king, Dr. Hugh Nibley claimed that there was not enough evidence to support this accusation. Since that time, however, a great deal of new evidence has come to light, and now many Mormon scholars are willing to concede that Joseph Smith was made king. For instance, Kenneth W. Godfrey, who was director of the LDS Institute at Stanford University, admitted that Joseph Smith was “Ordained ‘King over the Immediate House of Israel’ by the Council of Fifty” (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1968, pages 212-213). Among other things, Dr. Godfrey’s footnote refers us to the “Diary of George A. Smith, May 9, 1844,” which is in the “Library of the Church Historian.” In a dissertation written at Brigham Young University, Dr. Godfrey observed:

Davidson states that Joseph Smith had himself anointed King and Priest . . . in a revelation dated 1886 given to President John Taylor, mention is made of Joseph Smith being crowned a king in Nauvoo. Not only was he ordained a king but the leading members of the Church were assigned governmental responsibilities. Brigham Young was to be president, John Taylor vice president, members of the Church were assigned to represent different states in the house and senate of the United States, and a full cabinet was appointed. (“Causes of Mormon Non-Mormon Conflict in Hancock County, Illinois, 1839-1846,” Ph.D. dissertation, BYU, 1967, pages 63-65)

In his book, Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, page 204, Mormon writer John J. Stewart related that “(The Prophet established a confidential Council of Fifty, or ‘Ytfif,’ comprised of both Mormons and non-Mormons, to help attend to temporal matters, including the eventual development of a government, in harmony with preparatory plans for the second advent of the Saviour.)”

Joseph Smith For President

In 1844 the Council of Fifty decided to run Joseph Smith for the presidency of the United States. Klaus J. Hansen said that “the Council of Fifty, while seriously contemplating the possibility of emigration, also considered a rather spectacular alternative, namely, to run its leader for the presidency of the United States in the campaign of 1844. . . . Smith and the Council of Fifty seems to have taken the election quite seriously, much more so, indeed, than both Mormons and anti-Mormons have heretofore suspected” (Quest for Empire, page 74).

The elders of the church were actually called to “electioneer” for Joseph Smith (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 322). Mormon writer John J. Stewart refers to those who were sent to campaign as a “vast force of political missionaries” (Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, page 209).

Under the date of January 29, 1844, this statement is attributed to Joseph Smith in the History of the Church: “If you attempt to accomplish this, you must send every man in the city who is able to speak in public throughout the land to electioneer. . . . There is oratory enough in the Church to carry me into the presidential chair the first slide” (vol. 6, page 188).

The fact that Joseph Smith would allow himself to be crowned king shows that he was driven by the idea of gaining power. It is very possible that Smith seriously believed that he would become president and that he would rule as king over the people of the United States. The attempt by Joseph Smith to become president seems to have been a treasonous plot to bring the United States Government under the rule of the priesthood. George Miller, who had been a member of the Council of Fifty, recorded in a letter dated June 28, 1855:

It was further determined in Council that all the elders should set out on missions . . . and do everything in our power to have Joseph elected president. If we succeeded in making a majority of the voters converts to our faith, and elected Joseph president, in such an event the dominion of the Kingdom would be forever established in the United States; and if not successful, we could fall back on Texas, and be a kingdom notwithstanding. (Letter by George Miller, as quoted in Joseph Smith and World Government, by Hyrum Andrus, 1963, page 54)

The Living Prophet Is King

The practice of ordaining the President of the Mormon Church as “king on earth” did not cease with the death of Joseph Smith. It is reported that Brigham Young, the second president, was ordained king, and the Mormon Apostle Abraham H. Cannon states that there was a discussion in the Council of Fifty as to whether John Taylor, the third president, should be ordained king:

Father [George Q. Cannon, a member of the First Presidency] said Moses Thatcher’s drawing away from his brethren commenced as far as his knowledge concerning it went, at a time when the Council of Fifty met in the old City Hall, and Moses opposed the proposition to anoint John Taylor as Prophet Priest and King, and Moses’ opposition prevailed at that time. (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” December 2, 1895, page 198; original at Brigham Young University Library)

The journal of Franklin D. Richards seems to show that Taylor was anointed king on February 4, 1885, (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 418). While we do not know whether the President of the Mormon Church is still anointed king, Apostle Bruce R. McConkie makes it plain that he is in reality “the earthly king”:

1. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as it is now constituted is the kingdom of God on earth. . . . The Church and kingdom are one and the same.

The Church (or kingdom) is not a democracy; . . . The Church is a kingdom. The Lord Jesus Christ is the Eternal King, and the President of the Church, the mouthpiece of God on earth, is the earthly king. All things come to the Church from the King of the kingdom in heaven, through the king of the kingdom on earth. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, pages 415-416)

Benson’s Political Involvements

While most scholars believe that the Council of Fifty died out sometime around the turn of the century, in the book Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A., page 51, we explored the possibility that it may have continued to exist in this century. We noted that on September 13, 1967, we received a letter from a man who had come to Utah to do research on Mormonism. In this letter he asserted:

Concerning the present status of the Council of the Fifty, I was told by an instructor at BYU that the Council exists today. Both Apostle Benson & a son (the John Bircher) are on it. I will write him and see if he will talk with you. He is in a very precarious situation, having apostacized but not having been excommunicated or fired from the “Y.” When he discovered this evidence on the 50, he was called into the Vice President office & sworn to secrecy. (I believe there was a mild threat used-at least he implied this. . . . (Letter dated September 13, 1967; for more information on this see Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A., pages 51-52)

While this is certainly “hear-say information” which cannot be checked unless the Church releases all of the secret records of the Council of Fifty, there is a great deal of evidence showing that Apostle Benson would like to involve the Church deeply in politics. In other words, his goals are consistent with those of the Council of Fifty. If the Council of Fifty is not in existence at the present time, it seems reasonable to believe that Benson might want to reestablish it. He would certainly have the power to do this if he became the “Living Prophet.”

In any case, at one time Benson served as Secretary of Agriculture under President Eisenhower. Although he is not a member of the John Birch Society, his activities on its behalf have caused other Church leaders a great deal of embarrassment. On January 4, 1964, Drew Pearson made the following comment concerning Ezra Taft Benson: “Benson has become so extreme in his views that the Mormon Church, of which he is one of the Twelve Apostles, has quietly transferred him abroad to head the church’s European mission” (San Francisco Chronicle, January 4, 1964).

President David O. McKay denied the accusation, but the newspapers let the “cat out of the bag” when they published two letters written to Rep. Ralph R. Harding. One of them was written by Joseph Fielding Smith, who became the tenth president of the Church:

“I am glad to report to you that it will be some time before we hear anything from Brother Benson, who is now on his way to Great Britain where I suppose he will be at least for the next two years. When he returns, I hope his blood will be purified.” (Salt Lake Tribune, February 21, 1964)

On September 25, 1968, a newsmen sent us a letter which contained this information about Benson:

Had an interesting telephone conversation with Elder Benson the other day. He said he could have had the American Independent Party vice presidential nomination, but turned it down after consultation with President McKay.

Since the death of Joseph Fielding Smith, the Apostle Benson has risen to great power in the Mormon Church. On February 25, 1974, the Brigham Young University’s Daily Universe reported the following:

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—President Ezra Taft Benson, . . . said, in an interview this week, it is “entirely possible” the president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints
Some have speculated that the Freemen Institute may be in some way connected with the Mormon Kingdom. While we have no way of knowing whether this is true, the Institute was founded by Benson’s friend W. Cleon Skousen, a former F.B.I. agent who was devoted to J. Edgar Hoover. Mr. Skousen also served as Chief of Police in Salt Lake City and as professor of ancient scriptures at the Church’s BYU. Ezra Taft Benson seems to be deeply committed to the purposes of the Institute. In 1976 a “Special Invitation” to the grand opening of the new national headquarters building stated that “President Ezra T. Benson will be the featured speaker.” The Ogden Standard Examiner for February 25, 1980, reported that Benson spoke at a gathering of the Institute in Scottsdale, Arizona. Utah Holiday magazine for February 1980, gave this information:

Generally the impact of the far-right is discounted. An exception is the Benson/Skousen following. Representative Irvine considers Skousen’s Freeman Institute the most cohesive and influential conservative group in the state. They reportedly claim 5,000 members in the Salt Lake area which would make them a rather formidable organization, especially in light of their ability to control the nominating process. By heavy mass meeting participation it is relatively easy for a well organized minority to push through their candidate, which is what frequently happens. . . . Ezra Taft Benson, has the most instantly recognizable conservative image of any Utahn, and it extends nationwide. (pages 29-30)

According to Sunstone:

Mark A. Benson, a regional representative of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, has been appointed Vice-president and Director of Development for the Freeman Institute. . . . The new vice-president is the son of Ezra Taft Benson, President of the Council of Twelve Apostles. (Jan.-Feb. 1980, page 50)

The Freeman Institute is growing rapidly in America and is spreading to other countries as well. In any case, Ezra Taft Benson realizes that he is very close to the position of “Prophet, Seer and Revelator,” or as Apostle McConkie would phrase it, “king of the kingdom on earth.” It would appear from some of his statements that he is now polishing the crown in anticipation of the day he becomes President. The following extracts from his speech of February 26, 1980, make this very plain:

My beloved brothers and sisters. I am honored to be in your presence today. . . . As a Church we sing the song, “We Thank Thee, Oh God, For A Prophet.” Here then is the grand key—Follow The Prophet—and here now are Fourteen Fundamentals In Following the Prophet, the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

FIRST: The Prophet is the only man who speaks for the Lord in Everything. . . . Did you hear what the Lord said about the words of the Prophet? We are to “give heed unto all his words”—as if from the Lord’s “own mouth.”

SECOND: The Living Prophet is More Vital to Us Than the Standard Works. . . .

THIRD: The Living Prophet is More Important to Us Than a Dead Prophet. . . . the most important prophet so far as you and I are concerned is the one living in our day and age to whom the Lord is currently revealing His will for us. Therefore the most important reading we can do is any of the words of the Prophet contained each week in the Church Section of the Deseret News, and any words of the Prophet contained each month in our Church magazines. Our marching orders for each six months are found in the General Conference addresses which are printed in the Ensign magazine. . . . Beware of those who would pit the dead prophets against the living prophets, for the living prophets always take precedence.

FOURTH: The Prophet Will Never Lead the Church Astray. . . .

President Marion G. Romney tells of this incident which happened to him: I remember years ago when I was a Bishop I had President (Heber J.) Grant talk to our ward . . . . he put his arm over my shoulder and said: “My boy, you always keep your eye on the President of the Church, and if he ever tells you to do anything, and it is wrong, and you do it, the Lord will bless you for it.” Then with a twinkle in his eye, he said, “But you don’t need to worry. The Lord will never let his mouthpiece lead the people astray.” (CR, October 1960, page 78.)

FIFTH: The Prophet is Not Required to Have Any Particular Earthly Training or Credentials to Speak on Any Subject or Act on Any Matter at Any Time. . . . We haven’t yet had a prophet who earned a doctorate degree in any subject, but as someone said, “A prophet may not have his PhD but he certainly has his LDS.” . . .

SIXTH: The Prophet Does Not Have to Say “Thus Saith the Lord” to Give Us Scripture.

Sometimes there are those who haggle over words. They might say the prophet gave us counsel but that we are not obligated to follow it unless he says it is a commandment. But the Lord says of the Prophet, “Thou shall give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you.” (D&C 21:4.) . . . Said Brigham Young, “I have never yet preached a sermon and sent it out to the children of men, that they many not call scripture.” (JD 13:95.)

SEVENTH: The Prophet Tells Us What We Need to Know, Not Always What We Want to Know. . . .

Sometimes there are those who haggle over words. They might say the prophet gave us counsel but that we are not obligated to follow it unless he says it is a commandment. But the Lord says of the Prophet, “Thou shall give heed unto all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you.” (D&C 21:4.) . . . Said Brigham Young, “I have never yet preached a sermon and sent it out to the children of men, that they many not call scripture.” (JD 13:95.)

EIGHTH: The Prophet is Not Limited by Men’s Reasoning.

There will be times when you will have to choose between the revelations of God and reasoning of men—between the prophet and the politician or professor. . . .

NINTH: The Prophet Can Receive Revelation on Any Matter-Temporal or Spiritual. . . .

TENTH: The Prophet May be Involved in Civic Matters.

When a people are righteous they want the best to lead them in government. Alma was the head of the Church and of the government in the Book of Mormon; Joseph Smith was mayor of Nauvoo and Brigham Young was governor of Utah. . . . Those who would remove prophets from politics would take God out of government.
Although Young promoted the sealing of women and men in temple marriage for eternity, he seemed to feel that the sealing of men to men (one man would be adopted to another as his son) was even a more solemn ordinance. In a speech given September 4, 1873, Brigham Young maintained: “But we can seal women to men, but not men to men, without a Temple” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 16, page 186). Kimball Young observed:

To understand the role and status and the accompanying self-images of men and women in polygamy, we must recall that Mormonism was a male-dominated society. The priesthood which only men could hold—was in complete control and celestial marriage, either monogamous or polygamous, exemplified the higher status of men. Women were viewed as of lesser worth, to be saved only through men holding the priesthood. . . .

That this masculine principle went deep, and far more fantastically that the Saints could comprehend, is shown in a sermon by Brigham Young, reported by John Read. In a letter to one of his wives Read said that Brigham referred to some future time “when men would be sealed to men in the priesthood in a more solemn ordinance than that by which women were sealed to man, and in a room over that in which women were sealed to man in the temple of the Lord.” (Isn’t One Wife Enough? pages 279-280)

For more information on the sealing of men to men, see our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, pages 480-483.

While Brigham Young did not care much for the “private society of women,” he taught that a man’s place in heaven depended to a great extent on the size of his family. His wife, therefore, should bear as many children as possible:

Sisters, do you wish to make yourselves happy? Then what is your duty? It is for you to bear children, in the name of the Lord . . . bring forth in the name of Israel’s God, that you may have the honour of being the mothers of great and good men . . . are you tormenting yourselves by thinking that your husbands do not love you? I would not care whether they loved a particle or not; but I would cry out, like one of old, in the joy of my heart, “I have got a man from the Lord!” . . . “I have borne an image of God!” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 9, page 37)

On another occasion Brigham Young admonished:

. . . I am going to set every woman at liberty and say to them, Now go your way, my women with the rest, go your way And my wives have got to do one of two things; either round up their shoulders to endure the afflictions of this world, and live their religion, or they may leave, for I will not have them about me. I will go into heaven alone, rather than have scratching and fighting around me. I will set all at liberty. “What, first wife too?” Yes, I will liberate you all . . .

I wish my women, and brother Kimball’s and brother Grant’s to leave, and every woman in this Territory, or else say in their hearts that they will embrace the Gospel—the whole of it. . . . say to your wives, “Take all that I have and be set at liberty; but if you stay with me you shall comply with the law of God, and that too without any murmuring and whining. You must fulfil the law of God in every respect, and round up your shoulders to walk up to the mark without any grunting.”

Now recollect that two weeks from to morrow I am going to set you at liberty. But the first wife will say, “It is hard, for I have lived with my husband twenty years, or thirty, and have raised a family of children for him, and it is a great trial to me for him to have more women;” then I say it is time that you gave him up to other women who will bear children. If my wife had borne me all the children that she ever would bare, the celestial law would teach me to take young women that would have children. (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pages 55-57)
Fanny Stenhouse, who left the Church in Brigham Young’s day, made these interesting observations:

In my unhappy condition, I thought that perhaps I might derive some consolation from the sermons in the Tabernacle . . . But instead of obtaining consolation, I heard that which aroused every feeling of my soul to rebellion. . . . I heard that woman was an inferior being, designed by the Lord for the special glory and exaltation of man, that she was a creature that should feel herself honored if he would only make her the mother of his children—a creature who if very obedient and faithful through all the trials and tribulations in life, might some day be rewarded by becoming one of her husband’s queens, but should even then shine only by virtue of the reflected light derived from the glory of her spouse and lord. He was to be her “saviour,” for he was all in all to her, and it was through him alone and at his will that she could obtain salvation. We were informed that man was the crowning glory of creation, for whom all things—woman included—were brought into being; and that the chief object of woman’s existence was to help man to his great destiny.

Not a sentence—indeed, not a word—did we ever hear as to the possibility of womanly perfection and exaltation in her own right. . . . The great object of marriage, we were told, was the increase of children. . . . if some woman was found objecting to polygamy on account of its crushing and degrading effects upon women generally, then, . . . she was told in the coarse language of Brigham Young himself, that “Such women had no business to complain; it was quite enough honour for them to be permitted to bear children to God’s holy Priesthood.” . . . It was painfully clear to my understanding, then as now, that in Mormonism woman was to lose her personal identity. All that Christianity had done to elevate her was to be ruthlessly set aside and trampled under foot, and she was instantly to return to the position which she occupied in the darkest ages of the world’s existence. (Tell It All, pages 181-182)

Although the Church no longer allows the practice of polygamy, some of the teachings concerning the inferiority of women persist in its theology. Mormon apologist John J. Stewart proclaims:

The Church has never, and certainly will never, renounce this doctrine. The revelation on plural marriage is still an integral part of LDS scripture, and always will be. If a woman, sealed to her husband for time and eternity, preceeds her husband in death, it is his privilege to marry another also for time and eternity, providing that he is worthy of doing so. Consider, for instance, the case of President Joseph Fielding Smith of the Council of the Twelve, one of the greatest men upon earth. . . . After the death of his first wife President Joseph Fielding Smith married another, and each of these good women are sealed to him for time and all eternity. (Brigham Young And His Wives, Salt Lake City, 1961, page 14)

In his book Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 67, President Smith remarked: “. . . my wives will be mine in eternity. I don’t know how some other people feel, but that is a glorious thought to me. That helps to keep me sober.”

Every Mormon woman, therefore, faces the possibility of living in a polygamous relationship in heaven if she dies first and her husband decides to be sealed to another woman. A woman, of course, cannot be sealed for eternity to more than one husband. Because a woman is not granted the same privilege as a man a problem has arisen for those doing work for the dead. In a newsletter published by Sandy First Ward we find the following:

. . . Brother Christiansen talked about new rulings concerning sealings for the dead. It is now possible for a woman that was married more than once to be sealed to ALL her husbands, providing that in life she had not been sealed to any of her husbands.

The First Presidency of the Church has ruled that rather than try to decide which husband a deceased woman should be sealed to, she can be sealed to all of them. However, only one sealing will be valid and accepted before God. God and the woman will decide which one of the sealings will be accepted on Judgment Day. (Tele-Ward, Sandy First Ward, January 25, 1976, vol. V, no. 2, page 5)

In 1976 the First Presidency announced a new rule which discriminates against a woman who wishes to obtain her endowments in the temple after marriage:

A wife whose husband is not endowed should not be given a recommend to receive her endowments. . . . A worthy man whose wife has not received her endowments may be given a recommend to receive his own endowments. (General Handbook of Instructions, Number 21, 1976, page 54)

Christian theology teaches that males and females will be equal in the resurrection:

But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. (Luke 20:35-36)

Mormon Church leaders teach that both men and women can attain Godhood. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie says that “Godhood is not for men only; it is for men and women together” (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, page 844).

While at first glance it appears that this would make men and women equal, a more careful examination of the doctrine reveals just the opposite. According to Mormon theology, Church members follow the same plan of eternal progression as God the Father. Mormon leaders claim God is just an exalted man who has a wife known as the “Eternal Mother.” Apostle McConkie explains:

Implicit in the Christian verity that all men are the spirit children of an Eternal Father is the usually unspoken truth that they are also the offspring of an Eternal Mother.

This doctrine that there is a Mother in Heaven was affirmed in plainness by the First Presidency of the Church . . .

Mortal persons who overcome all things and gain an ultimate exaltation will live eternally in the family unit and have spirit children, thus becoming Eternal Fathers and Eternal Mothers. (Mormon Doctrine, 1979, pages 516-517)

Now, if the “Eternal Mother” really had gained equality with her husband, we would expect the Mormons to pray to her. The Apostle Orson Pratt, however, made it plain that the “Eternal Mother’s” Godhood does not really amount to much since she is in “the most perfect obedience” to her “great head”:

But if we have a heavenly Mother as well as a heavenly Father, is it not right that we should worship the Mother of our spirits as well as the Father? No; for the Father of our spirits is at the head of His household, and His wives and children are required to yield the most perfect obedience to their great Head. It is lawful for the children to worship the King of Heaven, but not the “Queen of heaven.” . . . Jesus prayed to His Father, and taught His disciples to do likewise; but we are nowhere taught that Jesus prayed to His heavenly Mother. . . . (The Seek, page 157)

It would appear, then, that in Mormon theology the claim that a woman can obtain “Godhood” amounts to very little. Like the present “Heavenly Mother,” she will be required to yield the most perfect obedience to her “great Head”—i.e., her husband, while she continues to give birth to “many millions” of spirit children.
Apostle Pratt explained:

In the Heaven where our spirits were born, there are many Gods, each one of whom has his own wife or wives which were given to him previous to his redemption, while yet in his mortal state. Each God, through his wife or Wives, raises up a numerous family of sons and daughters; . . . As soon as each God has begotten many millions of male and female spirits, . . . he, in connection with his sons, organizes a new world, . . . where he sends both the male and female spirits to inhabit tabernacles of flesh and bones. . . . The number of the sons and daughters of God, born in Heaven before this earth was formed, is not known by us . . . Seventy thousand million, therefore, is a rough approximation to the number . . . Add to seventy thousand million, the third part which fell, namely, thirty-five thousand million, and the sum amounts to one hundred and five thousand million which was the approximate number of the sons and daughters of God in Heaven before the rebellion which broke out among them.

31. If we admit that one personage was the Father of all this great family, and that they were all born of the same Mother, the period of time intervening between the birth of the oldest and the youngest spirit must have been immense. If we suppose, as an average, that only one year intervened between each birth, then it would have required, over one hundred thousand million of years for the same Mother to have given birth to this vast family. . . . if it required one hundred thousand million of years to people a world like this, as above stated, it is evident that, with a hundred wives, this period would be reduced to only one thousand million of years. (Ibid., pages 37-39)

Since the Mormon Church changed the anti-black doctrine, many Mormon women have come to see that they are the ones who will be “second class” citizens in heaven. Mormon leaders used to explain that blacks could not hold the priesthood because they were not ‘‘valiant in the pre-existence, but no reason has been given for the inferiority of women in Mormon theology.

AN UPDATE ON

FALL of the BOOK of ABRAHAM

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March 1968, we announced the “FALL OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM.” Subsequently we published a number of books showing that Joseph Smith’s “Book of Abraham” had been proven untrue (see especially Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 294-369). During the past few years we have received a number of inquiries as to whether there has been any change in the situation with regard to the Book of Abraham. Our reply is that although there have been a few new developments, the case against the Book of Abraham stands as firm as it did over a decade ago.

In our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism, we give this information about the “Fall of the Book of Abraham”:

The Book of Abraham was supposed to have been written on papyrus by Abraham about 4,000 years ago. According to Mormon writers, this same papyrus fell into Joseph Smith’s hands in 1835. He translated the papyrus and published it under the title, “The Book of Abraham.” The Book of Abraham was accepted by the Mormon Church as Scripture and is now published as part of the Pearl of Great Price—one of the four standard works of the church. . . .

For many years Joseph Smith’s collection of papyri was lost, but on November 27, 1967, the Mormon owned Deseret News announced:

NEW YORK—A collection of pa[p]yrus manuscripts, long believed to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871, was presented to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints here Monday by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. . . .

Included in the papyri is a manuscript identified as the original document from which Joseph Smith had copied the drawing which he called “Facsimile No. 1” and published with the Book of Abraham.

The importance of this find cannot be overemphasized, for now Joseph Smith’s ability as a translator of ancient Egyptian writing can be put to an absolute test. . . .

After receiving the papyri from the Metropolitan Museum, Mormon leaders turned them over to “Dr. Hugh Nibley, scholar, linguist at Brigham Young University, . . . for further research and study” . . .

Dr. Nibley began a series of articles for the Improvement Era in January, 1968. This series ran for over two years, and was finally brought to a conclusion with the issue published May, 1970. Although Dr. Nibley was supposed to unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics” in this series of articles, no translation of the Joseph Smith Papyri ever appeared in this series. It would appear that Dr. Nibley’s main objective in this series was to blind the eyes of his fellow church members so that they could not see the real issues involved in this matter.

Although he used almost 2,000 footnotes, he never did deal with the main problem.

Dr. Nibley gave this excuse for not translating the papyri in an article published in Brigham Young University Studies, (Spring 1968, page 251): “We have often been asked during the past months why we did not proceed with all haste to produce a translation of the papyri the moment they came into our possession. Well, for one thing others are far better equipped to do the job than we are, and some of those early expressed a willingness to undertake it. But, more important, it is doubtful whether any translation could do as much good as harm.”

In the Salt Lake Tribune for November 11, 1973, we criticized Dr. Nibley for not producing a translation of the papyri. He replied that he had prepared a book which “is 800 pages long, but that is not enough to account for keeping the impatient Tanners waiting for six years. What took up all that time was having to find out about a lot of things” (Salt Lake Tribune, November 25, 1973). This book, which many people believed would answer the objections of the critics and save the “Book of Abraham,” was finally published by the church’s Deseret Book Company in 1975 under the title, The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment. . . .

Although Dr. Nibley’s book is nicely printed and bound, the contents are very disappointing. Of the eleven fragments of papyrus which were discovered, ten of them contain significant Egyptian messages which can be translated. We would expect that any book about the papyri would at least have a translation of all these pieces. Dr. Nibley’s book, however, only contains a translation of two fragments! Among the fragments which Dr. Nibley has not translated is the original of “Facsimile No. 1” in the “Book of Abraham.” This fragment contains a number of lines of hieroglyphs which relate to the meaning of the drawing. The reason Dr. Nibley has not translated these lines seems obvious: they show that “Facsimile No. 1” is not a picture of “Abraham fastened upon an altar” as Joseph Smith proclaimed, but rather a picture of an Egyptian by the name of Hor being prepared for burial. We will have more to say about this later. (The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 329, 330, 334-336)
In the Salt Lake City Messenger for April 1976 we pointed out that Dr. Nibley’s book contains some very serious errors. H. Michael Marquardt has prepared a good rebuttal entitled, The Book of Abraham Papyrus Found: An Answer to Dr. Hugh Nibley’s Book “The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: An Egyptian Endowment.”

As we have already shown, Dr. Nibley’s book was published in 1975. In 1979, however, he spoke at the Sunstone Theological Symposium and his statements seem to discredit his own book:

“I refuse to be held responsible for anything I wrote more than three years ago. For heaven’s sake, I hope we are moving forward here. After all, the implication that one mistake and it is all over with—how flattering to think in forty years I have not made one slip and I am still in business! I would say that about four fifths of everything I put down has changed, of course.” (Sunstone, December 1979, page 49)

Dr. Nibley would have us believe that the science of Egyptology is in a constant state of upheaval. Now, while it is true that there will always be refinements, the basic principles remain the same. We feel that the constant state of confusion that Dr. Nibley finds himself in is caused by his attempt to defend a work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination—i.e., the Book of Abraham. While our case against the Book of Abraham stands on the same unshakeable foundation it did 12 years ago, Dr. Nibley has to constantly change his ideas. First, he was going to answer the critics in the Improvement Era. When this did not work, he prepared a book which “is 800 pages long”—actually 305 large printed pages. Four years later, however, he says that “I refuse to be held responsible for anything I wrote more than three years ago.” After all this one would think that Dr. Nibley would give up, but instead he threatens the critics with the possibility of still another book: “Of these things and much, much more we speak in what is a forthcoming book” (ibid., page 51).

Dr. Nelson?

Although Dr. Nibley was not able to translate the papyri at the time it came to light, there was an elder in the church who was qualified—Dee Jay Nelson. When Nibley learned of Nelson’s ability as an Egyptologist, he wanted him to help defend the church. In a letter dated June 27, 1967, he told Nelson that he could “see no reason in the world why you should not be taken into the confidence of the Brethren if this thing ever comes out into the open; in fact, you should be enormously useful to the Church . . . there are parties in Salt Lake who are howling for a showdown on the P.P.G.; if they have their way we may have to get together.”

On January 4, 1968, Dee Jay Nelson visited with Dr. Nibley at Brigham Young University and examined the original papyri. Dr. Nibley agreed that Nelson should translate the papyri, and he sent a note to N. Eldon Tanner, a member of the First Presidency, stating that “it would be a good idea to let Prof. Dee J. Nelson have copies” of the papyri. Mr. Nelson translated the papyri, but he was unable to find any mention of Abraham or his religion in any portion of the papyri. He found the names of many pagan gods who were worshiped by the Egyptians but nothing concerning the God of Abraham. After completing his translation, Mr. Nelson contacted us and asked if we wanted to print it. Since the translation proved unfavorable to the church, it was obvious that the church would not print it. When we completed the publication we tried to advertise it in the Deseret News but church leaders would not allow the ad to be run.

Unfortunately, about ten years after completing his translation of the Joseph Smith Papyri, Dee Jay Nelson put forth the claim that he had a doctor’s degree from an institution he later identified as Pacific Northwestern University. On February 13, 1980, we attended a lecture in Brigham City, Utah, where we heard Mr. Nelson proclaim he had a Ph.D. in anthropology. We became a little suspicious, however, when he failed to give the name of the school. A few weeks later a woman called us from Arizona and said that Nelson had claimed the school he had attended was in Seattle. When she called information, however, she was unable to locate it. We tried the same thing and obtained a similar result. On March 11-12, 1980, we wrote to Nelson asking for documentation which would prove he had a doctor’s degree. Mr. Nelson did send us a photograph of what purported to be his diploma from Pacific Northwestern University. After examining this document and another paper he sent, we became very suspicious that Pacific Northwestern University was not a legitimate university. We contacted a noted educator from the University of Utah who checked with Dr. James Bemis, Executive Director of the Higher Commission of the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges, and found that Pacific Northwestern University was only a “diploma mill of the worst kind.” We confirmed this report by calling the U.S. Postal Department in Seattle and the King County Attorney’s Office. (More information concerning this matter will be sent to the reader free upon request.)

In the letter of March 11-12, 1980, we made it clear to Mr. Nelson what we would do if his claim concerning a doctor’s degree could not be substantiated:

It is with great sorrow that I sit down to write this letter to you. I feel, however, as the publisher of four of your booklets I am obligated to find out the truth about certain matters that have recently come to my attention. . . . While it is true that I have never published anything about you having a Dr.’s degree, any statements you have made about this matter subsequent to the translation of the Joseph Smith Papyri could have a tendency to reflect upon my integrity in the eyes of many people.

If I were to overlook misrepresentation on the part of non-Mormon writers I would be operating on a double standard. You will no doubt remember what we wrote about “Dr. Webb”—the great defender of the Mormon faith. It is summed up in our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism, page 333:

The other Egyptologists whom Spalding contacted rendered a similar verdict—i.e., the “Book of Abraham” was a work of Joseph Smith’s own imagination and had no basis in fact. . . . Mormon historian B. H. Roberts admitted that there “were no Egyptian scholars in the church of the Latter-day Saints who could make an effective answer to the conclusions of the eight scholars who in various ways pronounced against the correctness of Joseph Smith’s translation . . . .” (A Comprehensive History of [sic] the Church, vol. 2, page 139).

The Mormons, however, did receive help from a writer who called himself “Robert C. Webb, Ph.D.” Fawn M. Brodie claimed that Robert C. Webb’s real name was “J. E. Homans,” and that he was “neither an Egyptologist nor a Ph.D.” (No Man Knows My History, 1957, page 175). From this it is rather obvious that the Mormon leaders were guilty of deception.

Strange as it may seem, Dr. Sidney B. Sperry, of Brigham Young University, confirmed the fact that Robert C. Webb was no Ph.D.: “He wrote a wonderful book, . . . under the name of Robert C. Webb, Ph.D. I regret that the brethren let him put down Robert C. Webb, Ph.D., because he was no Ph.D.” (Pearl of Great Price Conference, December 10, 1960, 1964 ed., page 9). On page 6 of the same publication, Dr. Sperry stated that Dr. Webb’s “real name was J. C. Homans.”

At any rate, the Mormon church was able to survive Spalding’s attack on the “Book of Abraham” with very little injury because church members felt that “Dr. Webb” had answered the critics. Writing in the Improvement Era, April 1913, N. L. Nelson stated: “Dr. Webb has, indeed, vindicated the prophet better than he knew himself.” (The Changing World of Mormonism, page 333)
If it turns out that you do not have a Dr.’s degree, honesty would demand that I make a public statement to that effect. Otherwise, I would find myself in the same position as the Mormon leaders who concealed the true identity of “Dr. Webb.” It is my firm belief that “there is nothing covered; that shall not be revealed, and hid, that shall not be known” (Matthew 10:26). I feel that the Lord wants Christians to be honest even though it costs us a great deal.

I doubt that the Mormon Church leaders will ever have the courage to directly attack you concerning the issue of credentials because of their use and support of “Dr. Webb.” Even Dr. Hugh Nibley defended “Dr. Webb” in the Church’s own publication, Improvement Era:

Thus reassured, Bishop Spalding proceeded to demolish R. C. Webb: “We feel that we should be in a better position to judge the value of the opinions of Robert C. Webb, PhD . . . if we were told definitely who he is . . . . If Dr. Talmage . . . would inform us what the author’s real name is, where he received his degree, and what academic position he holds, we should be better able to estimate the value of his opinions.” Here it is again: The bishop is not interested in Webb’s arguments and evidence, but in his status and rank—considerations that are supposed to bear no weight whatever with honest searchers after truth—Nullus in verbis! What on earth have a man’s name, degree, academic position, and, of all things, opinions, to do with whether a thing is true or not? (Improvement Era, January 1968, page 22)

At any rate, even though the Mormon Church will probably remain officially silent concerning your credentials, I feel that my conscience will not allow me to keep silent if there is a problem. I realize, of course, that the question of your credentials does not affect the validity of your translation, and that the Church is in a bind with regard to the matter since its chief defender, Dr. Hugh Nibley, has written that your work is reliable:

The publication of the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri has now begun to bear fruit. Two efforts at translation and commentary have already appeared, the one an example of pitfalls to be avoided, the other a conscientious piece of work for which the Latter-day Saints owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Dee Jay Nelson . . . . This is a conscientious and courageous piece of work—. . . . Nelson has been careful to consult top-ranking scholars where he has found himself in doubt. He has taken the first step in a serious study of the Facsimiles of the Pearl of Great Price, supplying students with a usable and reliable translation of the available papyri that once belonged to Joseph Smith. (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1968, pages 245 & 247)

Although we have used your translation of the Joseph Smith Papyri in a number of publications, we do not feel that our case against the Book of Abraham rests upon it. We have the testimony of some of the world’s greatest Egyptologists—i.e., Professor Richard Parker of Brown University and Professors Klaus Baer and John A. Wilson (now deceased) of the University of Chicago’s Oriental Institute. Even before you came on the scene our friend Grant Heward had identified the papyrus Joseph Smith used in the production of the Book of Abraham as the “Book of Breathing”—a pagan funerary document (see Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1968). I had studied the Egyptian language on my own before you came to Salt Lake and was able to test your work at various points. I knew therefore that it was generally a “reliable translation” as Dr. Nibley has admitted. . . .

Now, concerning your work at Rocky Mountain College: I have called the school and confirmed that you teach “Egyptology” in the “New Horizons” continuing education program. Lorri Keck, the director of this program, informs me that no credit is given for these classes. (I do not accuse you of hiding this fact, because you previously sent me a “Course Schedule” for Spring, 1976, which said the classes were “non-credit.”) Mrs. Keck, however, is disturbed because you have been calling yourself a Professor of Egyptology at Rocky Mountain College . . . . Since the classes you teach are “non-credit,” this appears to be somewhat misleading. . . . I must confess that I feel disappointed and sad because of this whole matter—somewhat like the feeling I had when I realized the Book of Mormon was not an authentic ancient document but rather a product of the 19th century. In any case, I feel it is my obligation to make this information available to the public. . . . I am convinced that our case against the Book of Abraham is absolutely devastating, and I would not want to weaken it in any way by trying to cover up or remain silent concerning such an important matter. (Letter from Jerald Tanner to Dee Jay Nelson, March 11-12, 1980)

On March 29, 1980, the Ogden Standard-Examiner printed an article by Charles F. Trentelman which contains the following:

An investigation of the credentials of Dee Jay Nelson . . . shows he does not hold a doctor’s degree from a university . . . . The discovery has caused considerable consternation among his supporters in Salt Lake City. . . . Jerald and Sandra Tanner, publishers of numerous books and papers attacking the LDS Church, say they are concerned by claims made by Nelson in recent months.

Mrs. Tanner said they investigated the claims and found Nelson’s diploma was from . . . a diploma mill, an operation that sells diplomas without requiring any schooling. . . .

Efforts by the Standard-Examiner to contact Nelson have been unsuccessful. His wife says Nelson is in Egypt doing more study. She declined to comment on her husband’s credentials except to say Nelson had written a letter to the Tanners, explaining the whole situation . . . .

The Standard-Examiner . . . was referred to Dr. Klaus Baer, University of Chicago Oriental Institute, as the leading Egyptologist in the country and the man who, if anyone, would know of Nelson. . . .

Baer said that, so far as he knew, Nelson had no formal education in Egyptian, although “he has certainly learned Egyptian somewhere.”

As to the papyri in question, Baer said Nelson’s translation is “essentially” correct.

Baer said he prepared a translation of the same papyrus. . . . and the translations say basically the same thing. . . .

In his letter to the Tanners, Nelson describes contacting Pacific Northwestern University in 1977 and inquiring about obtaining a doctorate. . . .

Mrs. Tanner told the Standard-Examiner she and her husband tried to find out about Pacific Northwestern University and learned from federal authorities in Seattle that it had been ordered to shut down, although no charges were brought against it.

Source of Book of Abraham

When the original papyri were located in 1967, many members of the Mormon Church felt that Joseph Smith’s work would be vindicated. As it turned out, however, just the opposite occurred. Within six months from the time the Metropolitan Museum gave the papyri to the Church, the “Book of Abraham” had been proven untrue! The fall of the Book of Abraham has been brought about by the identification of the actual fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith ‘translated’ the book. The identification of this fragment has been made possible by a comparison with Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar—handwritten documents we photographically reproduced in 1966. Dr. James R. Clark, of Brigham Young University, gives this information:
When the Mormon magazine, Improvement Era, printed sepia photographs of the papyri, the fragment of papyrus from which Joseph Smith translated the “Book of Abraham” was printed as the very last photograph. It is found on page 41 of the February 1968 issue, and is labeled: “XI. Small ‘Sensen’ text (unillustrated).”

All of the first two rows of characters on the papyrus fragment can be found in the manuscript of the “Book of Abraham” that is published in Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar.

Dr. James R. Clark reveals that there is another handwritten manuscript “in the Church Historian’s Office in Salt Lake City. The characters from which our present book of Abraham was translated are down the left-hand column and Joseph Smith’s translation opposite, so we know approximately how much material was translated from each character” (Pearl of Great Price Conference, December 10, 1960, 1964 ed., pages 60-61).

The Brigham Young University had photographs of this manuscript which Mr. Grant Heward was able to examine. This manuscript goes further than the one in the Alphabet and Grammar, and Mr. Heward found that the characters on this manuscript continue in consecutive order into the fourth line of the papyrus. This brings the text to Abraham 2:18. (For a photographic reproduction of four pages of this manuscript and a comparison of the characters on it with those found on the papyrus, see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 312-313.) A careful examination of this manuscript reveals that Joseph Smith used less than four lines from the papyrus to make forty-nine verses in the “Book of Abraham.” These forty-nine verses are composed of more than 2,000 English words! After a thorough examination of the evidence, Mormon scholar Richley Crapo had to concede “the startling fact that one of the papyri of the Church collection, known as the Small Sen-Sen Papyrus, contained the same series of hieratic symbols, which had been copied, in the same order, into the Book of Abraham manuscript next to verses of that book! In other words, there was every indication that the collection of papyri in the hands of the Church contained the source which led to a production of the Book of Abraham. It was naturally this document which I immediately began to translate” (Book of Abraham Symposium, LDS Institute of Religion, Salt Lake City, April 3, 1970, page 27).

Although Dr. Hugh Nibley later reversed his position in an attempt to save the Book of Abraham, in 1968 he frankly admitted that the papyrus Joseph Smith used for the text of the Book of Abraham had been located (see Improvement Era, May, 1968, page 54). At a meeting held at the University of Utah, Dr. Nibley declared:

Within a week of the publication of the papyri students calling my attention . . . to the fact that, the very definite fact that, one of the fragments seemed to supply all of the symbols for the Book of Abraham. This was the little “Sensen” scroll. Here are the symbols. The symbols are arranged here, and the interpretation goes along here and this interpretation turns out to be the Book of Abraham. Well, what about that? Here is the little “Sensen,” because that name occurs frequently in it, the papyrus, in which a handful of Egyptian symbols was apparently expanded in translation to the whole Book of Abraham. This raises a lot of questions. It doesn’t answer any questions, unless we’re mind readers. (Speech given by Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968; see also Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Summer 1968, page 102).

As we indicated earlier, Grant Heward examined the papyrus which has been identified as the source of the Book of Abraham and concluded that “it is probably a part of the Egyptian “Book of Breathings” (Salt Lake City Messenger, March 1968). This identification was soon confirmed by several prominent Egyptologists. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 317, we reproduced three different translations of the papyrus Joseph Smith used as the basis for his Book of Abraham. To save space here we will only include Professor Richard Parker’s translation. This translation was published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought—a periodical published by a group of liberal Mormons but not controlled by the Church leaders. In Dialogue, Richard Parker was listed as “Wilbour Professor of Egyptology and Chairman of the Department of Egyptology at Brown University.” Mormon apologist Hugh Nibley said that Professor Parker is “the best man in America for this particular period and style of writing.” His translation reads as follows:

1. [. . . . . .] this great pool of Khonsu
2. [Osiris Hor, justified], born of Taykhebyt, a man likewise.
3. After (his) two arms are [fastened] to his breast, one wraps the Book of Breathings, which is
4. with writing both inside and outside of it, with royal linen, it being placed (at) his left arm
5. near his heart, this having been done at his
6. wrapping and outside it. If this book be recited for him, then
7. he will breathe like the soul[s of the gods] for ever and

Except for a few minor variations, the other two renditions of the text are essentially in agreement with Professor Parker’s. The “Book of Abraham,” therefore, has been proven to be a spurious work. The Egyptologists find no mention of Abraham or his religion in this text. The average number of words that the three Egyptologists used to convey the message in this text is ninety-two, whereas Joseph Smith’s rendition contains thousands of words. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that the Book of Abraham is a false translation.

After the publication of the papyri it became very obvious that Dr. Nibley was unprepared to deal with the problems related to the translation of the Book of Abraham and that he had no real answers to give his people. At one point he became so desperate to save the Book of Abraham that he suggested that the “Sensen” text may have a second meaning unknown to Egyptologists:

. . . you very often have texts of double meaning . . . it’s quite possible, say, that this “Sensen” papyrus, telling a straight forward innocent little story or something like that, should contain also a totally different text concealed within it . . . they [the Egyptians] know what they’re doing, but we don’t. We don’t have the key. (Speech by Hugh Nibley, University of Utah, May 20, 1968)

When Marvin Cowan asked Professor Richard Parker if the papyri could have a second meaning, he replied that he knew of “no Egyptologist who would support such a claim” (Letter dated January 9, 1968).

Although Dr. Nibley gave some support to the theory that the papyrus might have a second or hidden meaning, he seems to have come to his senses and now realizes that such an idea cannot be successfully maintained. Unfortunately, however, he has come up with another theory which is as fantastic as the first: that the Book of Abraham is still lost and the “Sensen” papyrus has no relationship to it. It is, in fact, “the directions for wrapping up the Joseph Smith papyri with the mummy” (The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri: . . . , page 6). According to Dr. Nibley’s theory, Joseph Smith’s scribes mistakenly copied the characters from the “Sensen” papyrus into the three handwritten manuscripts of the Book of Abraham:
Is the Book of Abraham a correct translation of Joseph Smith Papyri X and XI? No, the Book of Breathings is not the Book of Abraham! . . . Doesn’t the text of the Book of Abraham appear in a number of manuscripts in columns running parallel with characters from the Book of Breathings? Yes, the brethren at Kirtland were invited to try their skill at translation; in 1835 the Prophet’s associates, . . . made determined efforts to match up the finished text of the Book of Abraham with characters from the J.S. Papyrus No. XI . . . (Ibid., page 2)

Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that Joseph Smith’s scribes added the wrong characters in the translation manuscripts is absolutely preposterous. That Joseph Smith would allow his scribes to copy the characters from the wrong papyrus into three different manuscripts of the Book of Abraham is really beyond belief. A person might almost as reasonably conclude that the Book of Abraham itself was made up by Joseph Smith’s scribes. Dr. Nibley’s attempt to separate the “Sensen” papyrus from the Book of Abraham cannot be accepted by those who honestly examine the evidence. The reader should remember that Nibley himself originally accepted the “Sensen” text as the source of the Book of Abraham.

Nibley, of course, has to maintain that the rediscovered papyri do not contain the portion which Joseph Smith translated as the Book of Abraham. A number of Mormon apologists have blindly followed Dr. Nibley into this grave error. Caleb A. Shreeve, Sr., for instance, wrote the following in an advertisement which appeared in the Ogden Standard-Examiner on March 24, 1980:

Joseph Smith (Dec. 31, 1835) describes the writing of Abraham Papyri as, “Beautifully written on papyrus, with black, and small part red, ink or paint, in perfect preservation” (HC. 2:348). To date, (1980) a papyrus fitting Joseph’s description has not been found.

If Mr. Shreeve had cited the first part of the quotation from the History of the Church, vol. 2, page 348, it would have changed the whole meaning of the statement:

The record of Abraham and Joseph, found with the mummies [sic], is beautifully written on papyrus, with black, and a small part red, ink or paint, in perfect preservation.

The reader will notice that when the entire statement is quoted it becomes plain that it is referring to the records of both Joseph and Abraham. In other words, it is a statement about Joseph Smith’s Papyri collection in general, not just the one roll which Joseph Smith called the Book of Abraham. This is made very clear in another entry in Joseph Smith’s History:

. . . I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham, another the writings of Joseph of Egypt, etc. (History of the Church, vol. 2, page 236)

Now, when we understand that Joseph Smith believed the Book of Abraham was written on a different roll of papyrus than the Book of Joseph, it becomes clear that he was referring to the collection of papyri in general and not specifically to the Book of Abraham. Among the papyri that were rediscovered in 1967 there are pieces which contain rubrics—i.e., portions written in red ink. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 354-355, we prove conclusively that they are from the roll of papyrus the early Mormons designated as the “Book of Joseph.” When they are translated, however, they turn out to be nothing but portions of the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

At any rate, the fact that Joseph Smith chose the papyrus identified as the Book of Breathings as the source for his Book of Abraham is established by irrefutable evidence. To begin with, Joseph Smith used the drawing at the beginning of the Book of Breathings roll as Facsimile No. 1 for his Book of Abraham. It does not contain red ink and the workmanship appears to be no better or well-preserved than that found on Papyrus XI. This in itself would completely destroy the argument advanced by Shreeve and Nibley, but the evidence becomes even stronger as we look into the matter. The writing in the columns to the side of the fragment used for Fac. No. 1, which Dr. Nibley does not dare to translate, mentions that the papyrus was made for Hor, and this is the same name mentioned in the Book of Breathings text which follows on Papyrus XI. Second, even Dr. Nibley has to admit that before the papyrus was cut up by the early Mormons, Papyrus XI followed immediately after Fac. No. 1 on the roll: “It can be easily shown by matching up the cut edges and fibres of the papyri that the text of the Joseph Smith ‘Breathing’ Papyrus (No. XI) was written on the same strip of material as Facsimile No. 1 and immediately adjoining it” (The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri, page 13). On page 3 of the same book, Dr. Nibley has to admit that even Joseph Smith’s own scribes felt that the text of the Book of Abraham followed right after Fac. No. 1: “Since this is an illustration to the Book of Abraham, it has naturally been assumed that the text that follows the drawing could only be that of Abraham—even the brethren at Kirtland assumed that.”

The strongest evidence that Joseph Smith believed that Papyrus XI was the Book of Abraham is found in the fact that the characters from this fragment were used in the translation manuscripts. Dr. Nibley’s suggestion that this was only the work of his scribes cannot be accepted. All evidence, then, points to one unmistakable conclusion: Joseph Smith believed that Papyrus No. XI was the Book of Abraham. Although Dr. Nibley does not dare give a translation of the writing on the papyrus fragment used as Fac. No. 1 in the Book of Abraham, he has published a translation of Papyrus XI. His work agrees in substance with the translations we have published in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 317. In fact, Dr. Nibley includes the names of many pagan gods in his translation of the Book of Breathings (see The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri, pages 19-23). Dr. Nibley cannot find anything about Abraham in this text, but to soften the disappointment he tries to relate it to the Mormon temple ceremony. Why he would want to equate the Egyptian religion with Mormonism is really a mystery to us. The Egyptian religion is so filled with magic and other pagan practices.

Egyptian Study Hurts Church

Just after the rediscovered Joseph Smith Papyri were turned over to the Church, Dr. Hugh Nibley lamented the fact that Mormon scholars were not prepared to deal with the issue. He went so far as to say that “LDS scholars are caught flat-footed by this discovery” (Daily Universe, BYU, December 1, 1967). Since that time some Mormons have taken a serious interest in the study of Egyptology. This research, however, has only tended to increase the problems facing the Church. Michael Dennis Rhodes, for instance, has made a study and translation of Fac. No. 2 in the Book of Abraham which has been published in Brigham Young University Studies. Joseph Smith claimed that Fac. No. 2 was “A Fac-simile From The Book of Abraham,” but in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 334-346, we demonstrate it is in reality a hypocephalus—a disk which was placed under the head of the mummy. We show, in fact, that Egyptologists can even read the name of the mummy from the disk. Michael Dennis Rhodes confirms that it is indeed a “hypocephalus” and that “The text of the hypocephalus itself seems to be an address to Osiris, the god of the Dead, on behalf of the deceased, Sheshonk” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1977, page 274). Rhodes translation of Fac. No. 2 contains absolutely nothing about Abraham. It only mentions the pagan gods of the Egyptians. For instance, on the edge of the disc he reads:
“Edge: I am Djabty in the House of the Benben in Heliopolis, so exalted and glorious. [I am] a copulating bull without equal. [I am] that Mighty God in the House of the Benben in Heliopolis ... that Mighty God ...” On page 260 of the same article, Michael Dennis Rhodes says that “the meaning of the hypocephalus is intimately connected with chapter 162 of the Book of the Dead, ...”. This is certainly an astonishing statement to find in a publication printed by the Mormon Church’s own university. One would think that if it is a “Fac-simile From the Book of Abraham,” it would be “intimately connected” with the Book of Abraham—not the Book of the Dead. In any case, Rhodes goes on to point out that the cow found in Fac. No. 2 is in reality a pagan goddess:

This is the cow Ihet, mentioned in chapter 162 of the Book of the Dead, which should be drawn on a piece of new papyrus. This picture of a cow is common to almost all hypocephali. Ihet is a form of Hathor, the personification of the power of nature. She is also connected with Mehwert (Greek Methytr), another cow goddess who symbolized the sky. (Ibid., page 272)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 341-343, we show that one of the scenes shown in Fac. No. 2 of the Book of Abraham is actually a pornographic representation of an ithyphallic god known as Min which was altered to cover up this fact in current printings of the Pearl of Great Price. Joseph Smith claimed that the scene “Represents God sitting upon his throne, . . .” While it is easy to believe a pagan deity might be represented in such a way, it would be hard to believe that Abraham would draw an obscene picture of God.

It is interesting to note that Michael Dennis Rhodes agrees that an ithyphallic god is shown in Fac. No. 2:

7. A seated ithyphallic god with a hawk’s tail, holding aloft the divine flail. ...

The seated god is clearly a form of Min, the god of the regenerative, procreative forces of nature, perhaps combined with Horus as the hawk’s tail would seem to indicate. ... The procreative forces, receiving unusual accentuation throughout the representation, may stand for many divine generative powers, not least of which might be conjointed with the blessings of the priesthood in one’s posterity eternally. (Ibid., page 273)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 335-344, we prove that portions of the original hypocephalus from which Joseph Smith prepared Facsimile No. 2 were either missing or damaged when he obtained it and that he falsely inserted material from both the Book of the Dead and the Book of Breathings papyri to fill in the blank spaces. The fact that he did not know what he was doing is very obvious because he inserted hieratic characters from the Book of Breathings where hieroglyphic characters should appear. To make matters even worse, he inserted characters upside down to the rest of the text. In plain language, then, Fac. No. 2 is a falsified reconstruction of the original disc. Michael Dennis Rhodes confirms this on page 263 of his article in Brigham Young University Studies:

When persuing Facsimile 2, one is immediately struck by the contrast between most of the hieroglyphic signs, which are readily recognizable, and the signs of the right third of the figure on the outer edge as well as the outer portions of the sections numbered 12-15. On closer examination, these prove to be hieratic and inverted (that is, upside down to the rest of the text). And, most surprising of all, these hieratic characters are recognizable as a fairly faithfully rendered copy of lines 2, 3, and 4 of the Church papyrus XI, which contains a portion of the Sensen papyrus or Book of Breathings. Especially clear is the actual word, ssn, in section 14, and part of the name of the possessor of the papyrus, ... repeated twice. Why this was done I am not sure. I can only postulate that these portions of the hypocephalus were damaged (a common enough occurrence because of the extremely fragile condition of these documents) and someone (the printer, one of the Prophet’s associates, or Joseph Smith himself) copied these characters off the Sensen papyrus so that the facsimile would look complete. In support of this view is an ink drawing of Facsimile 2 in the Church Historian’s Office which shows blanks in these sections.

One of the best articles published on the Book of Abraham facsimiles appears in Sunstone for December 1979. It is written by Edward A. Ashment of the Translation Department of the Mormon Church. Mr. Ashment is at present working on his Ph.D. in Egyptology from the University of Chicago. While we cannot agree with Ashment when he maintains that Joseph Smith “can yet be a prophet” even though he gave false restorations of the facsimiles, we do feel that his—especially the footnotes—will find that it is actually a devastating attack on the work of Hugh Nibley. For example, in BYU Studies, Autumn 1968, page 95, Dr. Nibley claims that “no clear instances” of restoration have been demonstrated in Fac. No. 1. To this Ashment responds:

In relation to the lion-couch scene of Facsimile 1 (Plate 1) it has been claimed that “no clear instances” of restoration “have been demonstrated.” However, close examination of the evidence leads to the conclusion that such instances indeed are demonstrable. (Sunstone, December 1979, page 33)

Joseph Smith maintained that Fac. No. 1 shows the “priest of Elkenah attempting to offer up Abraham as a sacrifice.” In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 348-350, we show that it is really the Egyptian god of the dead Anubis and that he should have the head of a jackal. This portion of the papyrus where the head should appear had broken off and Joseph Smith falsely restored a human head. On page 36 of his article, Ashment declared: “With high probability, Fig. 3 should be restored as Anubis and not as a human-headed individual.”

With regard to Fac. No. 2, Edward Ashment freely admits that it has been incorrectly restored:

Finally, attention must be given to the hieroglyphic texts of Facsimile 2 ... they are very important in that they help to conclusively identify the damaged areas ... as well as to provide information about the “instruction [Joseph Smith gave to Reuben Hedlock] concerning the arrangement of the writing on the large cut, illustrating the principles of astronomy [i.e., Facsimile 2].”

It comes as no surprise then, that the areas in which the Prophet conceivably could have given “instruction” to Reuben Hedlock “concerning the arrangement of the writing” are those where lacunae [i.e., gaps] exist in the CH document but in which the Hedlock version has material, mostly written upside down and backwards in a different script, the subject matter of which radically differs from that of the rest of the texts on the hypocephalus. ...

The basic document with all of the conjecturally restored material reveals, in addition to the vignettes already discussed, many signs that have come from the small snn text (or Papyrus Joseph Smith XI, which was originally attached to Papyrus Joseph Smith I—see Plate 8); ... As already noted, these texts are part of a different contextual unit, written upside down and backwards in the hypocephalus, and are in a different script from the rest of its texts. Why those characters were chosen, apparently by the prophet, to fill in the lacunae is not exactly known, for other signs written in hieroglyphic instead of hieratic were available and their style would have more closely approximated that of the hypocephalus. One possibility may be that those particular signs may have been well-known to the prophet in relation to the Book of Abraham manuscripts (Plate 9), with the result that he “gave instruction” to Hedlock to arrange them within the hypocephalus. (Sunstone, December 1979, page 42)
In his attempt to save the Book of Abraham, Dr. Hugh Nibley has tried to separate Joseph Smith as far as possible from the Kirtland Egyptian Papers—i.e., the papers we published as Joseph Smith’s Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar. Edward Ashment, however, feels that Dr. Nibley is in error on this matter:

Consequently, the fact that the prophet “gave instruction concerning the writing on the large cut,” together with the fact that that same writing is connected with the Book of Abraham manuscripts, implies that the prophet had some positive connection with the production of the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papers. Therefore, even though involvement with them on his part has been disputed, thoughtful reexamination of the evidence leads to the conclusion that the prophet was connected with the entire project. (Ibid., page 42)

It seems that Ashment has demolished Dr. Nibley’s arguments at every turn. In his reply to Ashment Nibley conceded:

Since hearing Brother Ashment I have to make some changes in what I have said already. Do I have to hang my head and go hide or something like that because I have been discredited? These things are being found out all the time. There are lots of things that Brother Ashment pointed out that I should have noticed; but I notice I could point out a lot of things that he has not noticed.

But who can do all that stuff? . . . the main thing is to move on into unexplored territory, and go into it with the careful, meticulous examination that he has. (Sunstone, December 1979, page 51)

Those who have carefully followed this controversy since the discovery of the papyri in 1967 are aware of the fact that Dr. Nibley, the Church’s chief defender, has stubbornly fought against the truth with regard to the Book of Abraham. Although he has put up many smoke screens to try to divert attention from the real problems, he has not been successful in silencing the opposition. Many Mormons, in fact, have lost confidence in him because of his inability to fulfill his promises about saving the Book of Abraham. Now that one of the Mormon Church’s own scholars has attacked him, Dr. Nibley replies: “I refuse to be held responsible for anything I wrote more than three years ago” (Ibid., page 49).

While the whole foundation for Dr. Nibley’s arguments seems to be crumbling, we can point with confidence to the case we have prepared against the Book of Abraham. Our arguments are just as good as when we first advanced them twelve years ago. Our case is not based on any one man or any wild speculation, but rather on the science of Egyptology, original documents and careful research. We feel, in fact, that the case against the Book of Abraham is irrefutable. Those who are interested will find the evidence clearly presented in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? A condensed version appears in our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism.

Over a year ago our daughter April decided she was interested in the possibility of full-time Christian service. She has attended Simpson College (a Bible school in San Francisco) this past year and has really grown in her Christian commitment. Instead of working this summer, April has decided to take a step of faith and become involved in a difficult missionary project. In her prayer letter she says:

I have been accepted as a team member on the Teen Missions Tamboboan, Philippines Team. The team of 30 teens plus leaders will build a church for the nationals . . . On Sundays we will be sharing our love for the Lord in surrounding villages through personal testimonies and song. . . . This experience will give me a first-hand look at and involvement with missions. I am asking my friends to contribute to Teen Missions International, Inc., to enable them to cover my expenses as a summer missionary . . .

April’s expenses will amount to over $1,700. So far she has raised about half this amount. Perhaps some of our readers will be interested in helping her (all gifts are tax-deductible). Checks must be made out to TEEN MISSIONS INTERNATIONAL, INC., and mailed to April Tanner, 1350 South West Temple, Salt Lake City, Utah 84115.
Joseph Smith’s “Caractors” Found!
Important Discovery Puts President Kimball on the Spot

On May 3, 1980, the Church Section of the Mormon newspaper, Deseret News, reported that an amazing discovery had been made:

A hand-written sheet of paper with characters supposedly copied directly from the gold plates in 1828, and also bearing other writing and the signature of Joseph Smith, has been found in an old Bible by a Utah State University student.

This would make it the oldest known Mormon document as well as the earliest sample of the Prophet’s handwriting.

Experts believe the paper may be the original one copied by Joseph Smith from the plates and given to Martin Harris in February 1828 to take to New York City for examination by linguistic experts.

The paper, written in faded brown ink, was discovered by Mark William Hofmann. Written on the back, apparently after Harris brought the paper back from his encounter with Professor Anthon, are the following words (and spellings):

“...these curators were diligently copiyed by my own hand from the plates of gold and given to Martin Harris who took them to New York City but the learned could not translate it because the Lord would not open it to them in fulfilment of the prophecy of Isaiah written in the 29th chapter and 11th verse. [signed] Joseph Smith Jr.”

“In my judgment, this writing is that of Joseph Smith,” said Dean C. Jessee, senior historical associate in the Church Historical Department. He is a recognized authority on the handwriting of the Prophet. Brother Jessee said that after a preliminary examination, the paper and ink also give every appearance of being authentic materials of the 1828 period.

The discovery of the historic paper by Brother Hofmann was quite accidental.

In March he purchased...a Bible once owned by members of Joseph Smith’s family. Handwriting in the Bible is signed by Samuel Smith, either the great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather of Joseph Smith. While leafing through the book, he noticed two pages stuck together. He carefully pulled them apart and saw a folded paper. “I couldn’t tell what it was, but I saw the signature of Joseph Smith. I wasn’t sure it was genuine, but I got rather excited,” he said.

According to a newspaper report, Dr. Richard L. Anderson, of Brigham Young University, claimed that “This new discovery is sort of a Dead Sea School [sic] Equivalent of the Book of Mormon.” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, May 1, 1980). Dr. Hugh Nibley was quoted as saying, “This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get as to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.” (Ibid.)

The reader will find a photograph of this significant document below on page 3 of this paper.

NO GIFT TO TRANSLATE

In the book, The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 334-335, we pointed out that when the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri were rediscovered in 1967, the Mormon leaders turned them over “to Dr. Hugh Nibley, scholar, linguist at Brigham Young University...for further research and study.” This turned out to be a very serious mistake. To begin with, the fact that the papyri were turned over to Dr. Nibley is almost an admission that church leaders are not guided by revelation as they claim. The Mormon church is led by a man who is sustained by the people as “Prophet, Seer, and Revelator.” The Book of Mormon says that a “seer” can “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Mosiah 8:13). Apostle John A. Widtsoe stated that if “records appear needing translation, the President of the Church may at any time be called, through revelation, to the special labor of translation” (Evidences and Reconciliations, vol. I, page 203).

Since the church claims to have the “seer stone” and is supposed to be led by a “Prophet, Seer, and Revelator,” we might expect a translation by this means. Instead, however, the papyri were sent to Dr. Nibley to be translated by “the wisdom of the world.” Thus, it appears that the prophet does not have the gift to translate languages as has been previously claimed.

Because Dr. Nibley was not really qualified to translate the papyri and because he felt that it was “doubtful whether any translation could do as much good as harm” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1968, page 25), he stalled around until other Egyptologists produced translations. When their works were published, it was discovered that the roll of papyrus Joseph Smith “translated” as the Book of Abraham was only a pagan funerary text known as the Book of Breathings. The roll identified by the Mormons as the Book of Joseph turned out to be nothing but the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

The new discovery of characters supposedly taken from the gold plates puts the Mormon Prophet in an embarrassing position. Instead of using the “seer stone” to translate the characters, President Kimball examined them with a magnifying glass (see photograph in Deseret News, Church Section, May 3, 1980). In a statement published in The Herald, May 1, 1980, Dr. Nibley makes it very plain that he is looking to a computer rather than to the “seer” for a translation of the characters:

“Of course it’s translatable. There are enough characters to strongly suggest a sequence so that you can determine the fingerprint of a language. There are 220 characters which could give a computer plenty to work with.”
VINDICATES SMITH?

The Herald, May 1, 1980, quotes Richard L. Anderson as saying:

“Joseph Smith’s story is really vindicated by the finding of the document because he mentioned that he sent Harris to the East to show the characters on the gold plates to the learned.

“We have Anthon’s story in letters explaining exactly what Harris showed to him. What Anthon describes is quite remarkably like what is on the new transcript.”

Since we have never questioned the fact that Joseph Smith sent Martin Harris to Professor Anthon, we fail to see how the discovery of this document vindicates Smith. We feel, in fact, that if anyone is vindicated it is Anthon. The story of the visit Martin Harris had with Professor Anthon is found in the Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:62-65:

... I commenced copying the characters off the plates. I copied a considerable number of them, and by means of the Urim and Thummim I translated some of them, ... Mr. Martin Harris came to our place, got the characters which I had drawn off the plates, and started with them to the city of New York. For what took place relative to him and the characters, I refer to his own account of the circumstances, as he related them to me after his return, which was as follows:

I went to the city of New York, and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Charles Anthon, ... (Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said that they were Egyptian, Chaldaic, Assyric, and Arabic; and he said they were true characters. He gave me a certificate, certifying to the people of Palmyra that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been translated was also correct. I ... was just leaving the house, when Mr. Anthon called me back, and asked me how the young man found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it unto him.

He then said to me, “Let me see that certificate.” I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces. ... Upon examining the paper in question, I soon came to the conclusion that it was all a trick, perhaps a hoax. ... This paper was in fact a singular scrawl. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters disposed in columns, and had evidently been prepared by some person who had before him at the time a book containing various alphabets. Greek and Hebrew letters, crosses and flourishes, Roman letters inverted or placed sideways, were arranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks, and evidently copied after the Mexican Calendar given by Humboldt, but copied in such a way as not to betray the source whence it was derived. I ... well remember that the paper contained anything else but “Egyptian Hieroglyphics.”... (Letter written by Charles Anthon, as published in Mormonism Unvailed, 1834, pages 270-272)

B. H. Roberts admitted that the “statements of Professor Anthon and Martin Harris are very contradictory,” but he stated that Professor Anthon wrote another letter in 1841 which contains some statements that are not in harmony with the earlier letter (see Comprehensive History of the Church, vol. 1, pages 100-109).

Some Mormon writers are willing to admit that Anthon could not have claimed that the characters were correctly translated. John M. Lundquist, an instructor at Brigham Young University, conceded that “Charles Anthon ... was not trained in ancient languages. In addition, Demotic Egyptian and other ancient near eastern languages were not deciphered in his day” (The Herald, May 1, 1980). Stanley B. Kimball commented concerning this matter:

... in 1828 neither Anthon, Mitchell (nor anyone else in the world for that matter) had seen much translated from the Egyptian. ... Perhaps Harris was so intent on fulfilling a scriptural prophecy that he heard only what he wanted to hear. ... As far as the truthfulness of the Harris statements concerning what occurred, we have no evidence whatsoever beyond his character. ... this author does not think the incident had any great practical value—especially when we conclude, as we must, that the opinions of Anthon and Mitchell were not conclusive in any way. (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1970, pages 335, 336, 339-340)

The Mormon scholar Sidney B. Sperry maintained that some minor matters relating to Martin Harris’ interview with Professor Anthon might not have been correctly reported. We must also keep in mind that Martin Harris was no linguist, and in his report to the prophet he might have unwittingly misrepresented some of Professor Anthon’s statements concerning translation. (The Problems of the Book of Mormon, 1964, page 56)

Speaking of Joseph Smith’s account of the Harris-Anthon meeting—i.e., the account which appears in the Pearl of Great Price, Curt H. Seeman observed:

Unfortunately, this account has led people to claim that the Book of Mormon has been “proven” to be translated correctly, for Professor Anthon certified to this effect. Actually, nothing could be farther from the truth! At the time of the above incident, the study of Egyptian was in its beginning stage. ... He was in no position to vouch for the correctness of the translation. (Fourteenth Annual Symposium on the Archaeology of the Scriptures, April 13, 1963, page 20)

The idea that Professor Anthon endorsed the translation of the Egyptian characters was undoubtedly an after-thought, for when Joseph Smith first wrote an account of his early life in 1832, he said nothing about Anthon endorsing his translation. On the contrary, he claimed that when the “learned” were asked to read the characters they replied, “I cannot” (Joseph Smith’s 1832-34 Diary, pages 10-11). The newly discovered document tends to verify Anthon’s own statement that he did NOT certify that the characters were “true characters, and that the translation ... was also correct.” The back side of this sheet contains Joseph Smith’s own signed statement that “the learned could not translate it because the Lord would not open it to them in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah ...” In this case we feel that the new discovery vindicates Anthon rather than the account published in Joseph Smith’s story in the Pearl of Great Price.

Long before Mark W. Hofmann made his discovery, the Mormon Church published photographs of another document known as the “Anthon Transcript.” This document had been preserved by Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer and is now in the possession of the Reorganized LDS Church. In a booklet published in 1887, Whitmer wrote: “I have in my possession the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon... also the original paper containing some of the characters transcribed from one of the golden plates, which paper Martin Harris took to Professor Anthon...” (An Address to All Believers in Christ, page 11). Although this document contains “caractors” from the gold plates, they are printed horizontally (the new document has the characters running in vertical columns). A photograph of this transcript is found on page one.

Dean Jesse, of the Church Historical Department, feels that Joseph Smith penned both the vertical and the horizontal transcript (see The Herald, May 1, 1980). He points out, for instance, that both documents have the same misspelling of the word character. The letter h is omitted and the letter o is used instead of e toward the end of the word—“Caractor.”

Since the transcript preserved by David Whitmer is written horizontally and does not contain the circular object, most Mormon scholars have felt Anthon’s description of the document was in error. John L. Sorenson believed that Anthon’s statement carried some weight, but he observed that “No Mormon student apparently ever took Anthon seriously in his statement that they were vertical, ...” (Newsletter and Proceedings of the S.E.H.A., Brigham Young University, no. 139, December 1976, page 2).

The Mormon writer Janne M. Sjodahl attacked Anthon’s credibility because his statement did not agree with the copy preserved by David Whitmer:

...the paper which the professor repudiates could not possibly have been the one submitted by the “plain farmer.” Read the description again. Professor Anthon says the “singular scroll” had characters copied from Hebrew, Greek, Roman, etc., alphabets, by someone who had the book containing such alphabets before him. That lets the young boy, Joseph Smith, and his associates at that time out of the case; for neither of them had, at that time, any such literature before them. He says the characters were arranged in “perpendicular columns.” That is evidently not the case in the published facsimiles. Finally, he says the whole ended in a rude delineation of Humbolt’s reproduction of the Mexican calendar. That proves positively that the paper Professor Anthon is talking about is not the one Martin Harris exhibited. For neither Joseph nor any of his friends at that time was a student of Humbolt, and there is no picture, crude or otherwise, of the Mexican (Aztec) calendar stone on the facsimiles of Book of Mormon characters, now extant in print, ... Is it possible that someone had perpetrated a hoax on the professor, and, under an assumed name, submitted a paper such as that described in the Howe letter, just to accommodate Mr. Howe? Or was Professor Anthon’s memory so treacherous that it made him give a totally fictitious description of the paper Martin Harris presented? The latter of these alternatives is the more probable; the first is not altogether impossible. (An Introduction to the Study of the Book of Mormon, pages 11-12).

Now that the vertical transcript has come to light, Anthon’s description can no longer be discounted. It does contain characters in “perpendicular columns,” and it does end in a “circle divided into various compartments, decked with various strange marks, ...” In another letter written in 1841, Anthon maintained the “characters were arranged in columns, like the Chinese mode of writing, ... the whole ended in a rude representation of the Mexican zodiac” (Gleanings by the Way, page 233).

Mormon scholars seem to have accepted the new find as authentic. We are inclined to agree because it not only fits Anthon’s description, but it also contains very distinctive characters which were omitted on the horizontal transcript. It was pointed out at a meeting of the Mormon History Association that these very characters appeared in the Mormon newspaper, The Prophet, on December 21, 1844, and in a placard printed about this same time (see photographs in About the Book of Mormon, by Ariel L. Crowley, pages 11 and 17).

Reformed Egyptian or Deformed English?

There are a number of theories as to what the characters on the transcript sent to Anthon actually represent. Joseph Smith, of course, maintained they were “reformed Egyptian.” Charles A. Shook, on the other hand, felt that

Instead of “Reformed Egyptian” many of the “Caractors” are deformed English, as any one will observe who will compare them with English letters, figures and signs. I have counted thirty-six different characters in the fac-simile, some of them occurring more than once, which are either identical with, or which closely resemble, the English. ... Latter-day Saints are very quick to see a resemblance between the “Caractors” and the letters in the Maya and Egyptian alphabets of Le Plongeon; will they be as quick to see the similarity between the “Caractors” and the English? If similarity proves anything, it proves that the transcript is a bold, bare forgery and one not above the ability of a Smith or a Harris to execute. (Cumorah Revisited, 1910, pages 538-539)

After the discovery of the vertical transcript was announced, Grant Heward suggested that it would be interesting to see if an English message could be conveyed with Joseph Smith’s characters. It did not take us too long to find characters on the transcript which could represent every letter and every number in the English language. Below the reader will find the English alphabet, numbers up to ten and an English message written in “reformed Egyptian” characters. As early as 1834 Professor Anthon suggested that the letters appearing on the transcript had been “inverted or placed sideways.” We have taken the liberty, therefore, of turning some characters around and in some cases have used the same character to represent more than one letter or number. Nevertheless, all the characters are taken from photographs of the original document and have not been recopied by hand.

While we do not feel that our experiment actually proves that the transcript is composed of “deformed English,” we think that it should serve as a warning to those overzealous scholars who cannot refrain from making dubious parallels between Egyptian characters and those penned by Joseph Smith.

MAGIC CHARACTERS?

A former Brigham Young University professor has maintained for a number of years that the characters on the Anthon Transcript are taken from works on magic and astrology. Although we felt that he could demonstrate a few parallels, we have never taken this idea too seriously. In recent years some evidence has come forth which definitely proves that Joseph Smith was involved in magical practices. For instance, in 1971 Wesley P. Walters discovered an original document which proves that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, New York, in 1826 (see The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 67-75). Three years after Walters made this startling discover (1974), Dr. Reed Durham, who was director of the LDS Institute of Religion at the University of Utah and president of the Mormon History Association, discovered that what had previously been identified as the “Masonic jewel of the Prophet Joseph Smith” was in reality a “Jupiter talisman.” This is a medallion which contains material relating to astrology and magic. Dr. Durham, apparently not realizing the devastating implications of his discovery, announced this important find in his presidential address before the Mormon History Association on April 20, 1974:

...I should like to initiate all of you into what is perhaps the strangest, the most mysterious, occult-like esoteric, and yet Masonically oriented practice ever adopted by Joseph Smith... All available evidence suggests that Joseph Smith the Prophet possessed a magical, Masonic medallion, or talisman, which he worked during his lifetime and which was evidently on his person when he was martyred. His talisman is in the shape of a silver dollar and is probably made of silver or tin. It is exactly one and nine-sixteenths in diameter, the talisman, originally purchased from the Emma Smith Bidamon family, fully notarized by that family to be authentic and to have belonged to Joseph Smith, can now be identified as a Jupiter talisman. It carries the sign and image of Jupiter and should more appropriately be referred to as the Table of Jupiter. And in some very real and quite mysterious sense, this particular Table of Jupiter was the most appropriate talisman for Joseph Smith to possess. Indeed, it seemed meant for Reed Durham was severely criticized by Mormon scholars and officials for giving this speech. He was even called in by Mormon President Spencer W. Kimball, and finally found it necessary to issue a letter in which he reaffirmed his faith in Joseph Smith and said that he was sorry for the “concerns, and misunderstandings” that the speech had caused. We feel that Dr. Durham’s identification of Joseph Smith’s magic talisman is one of the most significant discoveries in Mormon history and that he should be commended for his research. In The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 90-91, we show that the possession of a magic talisman by Joseph Smith fits well with evidence presented in his 1826 trial.

In any case, the recent discovery of the vertical transcript which Martin Harris took to Professor Anthon has revived interest in magic characters and Joseph Smith’s talisman. The reader will notice that in the lower right hand corner of the transcript there appears a circular object which bears some resemblance to Joseph Smith’s talisman. In both cases we have a circle drawn within another circle with characters running around the edge and within the center circle. While there does not appear to be as many characters on the talisman as on the transcript, a magic work known as The Sixth & Seventh Books of Moses contains “over One Hundred and Twenty-Five Seals, Signs, Emblems, etc.” which have magical characters and discs which could furnish ideas for creating a document like the Anthon-Harris manuscript. Francis Barrett’s book The Magus also contains “Misterious Characters” and material relating to magical circles. As Dr. Durham pointed out, Joseph Smith’s magic talisman is shown in this book.

Now, although we could make many parallels to magical characters, we do not feel that the case has been proven.

Will Nibley Translate It?

We have previously quoted Dr. Hugh Nibley as making this comment concerning the recently discovered vertical transcript:

“Of course it’s translatable” (The Herald, May 1, 1980). According to The Herald, Nibley also said he counted at least two dozen out of 47 characters in the Demotic alphabet that could be given phonetic value.

“This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get. Nobody could have faked those characters. It would take 10 minutes to see that this is fake.”

For many years Dr. Nibley has maintained that the “Reformed Egyptian” spoken of in the Book of Mormon was derived from the Egyptian script known as Demotic. Just why the Nephites would have such a system of writing is certainly a mystery, for Nibley himself feels that Demotic was “the most awkward, difficult, and impractical system of writing ever devised by man!” (Lehi in the Desert and the World of the Jaredites, 1952, page 16).

For many years Mormon scholars have been trying desperately to link the horizontal “Anthon Transcript” to the Egyptian language. Ariel Crowley, for instance, photographically compared characters from the Anthon Transcript with those found in “Recognized Egyptian Works.” Although his parallels appear rather impressive at first glance, Wesley P. Walters has pointed out that they really do not amount to much:

The one serious attempt to find similarities with Egyptian characters (A. Crowley, Improvement Era, February 1942, pp. 76 ff) had to hunt among scripts separated from each other by a thousand years and in some instances much later than the period from which the alleged “Reformed Egyptian” is supposed to date. In addition, Mr. Crowley sought correlations with the Sinai proto-Semitic script . . . rendering the entire attempt a linguist[sic] impossibility, a sort of alphabetic smorgasbord (Joseph Smith Among the Egyptians, page 26, footnote).

In the Improvement Era, October 1960, Stanley B. Kimball wrote the following:

Several efforts have been made to demonstrate that the Book of Mormon characters are in fact Egyptian. Honorable as such attempts are and fascinating though they may be, the net result is generally a striking comparison of the similar characters and an ignoring of the dissimilar characters. By this very method it may be “proved” that we speak Russian in this country.

In 1971 Stanley B. Kimball prepared another article on the Anthon Transcript. At the end of this article he stated:

In conclusion, I am forced to say that the research done on the Anthon Transcript to date has accomplished little more than to define the problems connected with it . . . (Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology, BYU, August 1971, page 4)

Two Mormon scholars tried to make a translation of the Anthon Transcript in 1973, but the results proved to be disastrous. While one translator felt he found the word “Mormon” in the first line, the other scholar believed it contained “Zarahemla.” John Buenger tells about this matter in Appendix I of his unpublished paper, “A Preliminary Approach to Linguistic Aspects of the Anthon Transcript.”

Edward H. Ashment, who has studied Egyptology at the University of Chicago and is now working with the Translation Department of the LDS Church, has been much more cautious with regard to the Anthon Transcript. He worked on it with the noted Egyptologist George Hughes, of the University of Chicago, but was unable to come up with anything concrete.

Dr. Hugh Nibley now claims that the transcript preserved by David Whitmer looks like it was copied by a baby: “The first was a sloppy transcript and badly copied, . . . In the earlier transcript, it was copied horizontally which would confuse anybody’’” (The Herald, May 1, 1980). While Dr. Nibley maintains that the newly discovered document is “translatable,” so far he has not provided any evidence to verify this statement. If the vertical transcript could be translated, we really wonder what Mormon scholars would do should the results turn out to be a copy of a pagan document. As we pointed out earlier, this very thing happened with regard to Joseph Smith’s Book of Abraham. Mormon apologists, however, would not accept this devastating evidence and came up with all kinds of excuses as to why Joseph Smith’s translation did not agree with that given by Egyptologists. At one time Dr. Nibley even supported the fantastic idea that the papyrus had a secret message unknown... to Egyptologists. In more recent studies Nibley has come up with other explanations which are just as far-fetched. The Mormon scholar Dr. Henry Eyring went so far as to say:

... the essential ingredient in the Book of Abraham is whatever the Prophet was inspired to write down. ... it wouldn't make a bit of difference to me if the scholars, studying the scrolls that led the Prophet to think about the problem of Abraham and write about it — it wouldn't make a bit of difference to me if they discovered that it was a bill of lading for wheat in the Lower Nile. (Book of Abraham Symposium, Salt Lake Institute of Religion, April 3, 1970, page 3)

John L. Speer, a reporter for the Provo Herald, asked Dr. Nibley what would happen if the transcript which was supposed to have been copied from the gold plates turned out to be something other than the Book of Mormon:

What if, when it is translated, it turns out to be just an Egyptian shopping list?

Countered Nibley, “Then the question still remains—where did Joseph Smith get it? Demotic Egyptian wasn’t discovered until the 1850s and there was no grammar until the 20th century.” (The Herald, May 1, 1980)

It would appear from this that Nibley would maintain faith in Joseph Smith even if the document contained nothing about the Book of Mormon. The statement that “Demotic Egyptian wasn’t discovered until the 1850s” is so far from the truth that we wonder if Nibley has been misquoting. The Rosetta Stone, for instance, was discovered before Joseph Smith was even born. In his monumental work, Egyptian Grammar, page 12, Sir Alan Gardiner gives this information:

Such a clue was at last provided when some French soldiers, working on the foundations of a fortress at Rosetta, came across a trilingual inscription in Greek, demotic, and hieroglyphic (1799) ... scholars first directed their attention towards the demotic section.

Stanley B. Kimball says that “Many books had been published by 1828 containing facsimiles of Egyptian characters, ..." (Improvement Era, Feb. 1957, page 106; see also BYU Studies, Spring 1970, page 335).

In our book Archaeology and the Book of Mormon, we suggested that it was possible that Joseph Smith copied his characters from some book available at that time. Even if this were the case, however, the characters might still be impossible to read. Those who have studied our work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? know that when Joseph Smith made copies of the characters from the Egyptian papyrus he obtained in 1835, the reproductions were so badly done that they were hardly recognizable. We must remember, too, about Joseph Smith’s method of working with ancient documents. Take, for instance, Facsimile No. 2 of his Book of Abraham, which is published in the Pearl of Great Price. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 337-341, we graphically demonstrate that while Facsimile No. 2 is published as one circular disc, it is in reality a combination of three documents. The first document was an Egyptian hypocephalus. This is a magical disc which was placed under the head of the mummy. Because it was damaged portions were missing. Joseph Smith proceeded to fill in these areas with material from two other documents—i.e., the Book of Breathings and the Book of the Dead. Hieroglyphic characters were mixed with hieratic, and as if this was not bad enough, portions of the script were actually inserted upside down and backwards to the rest of the writing! Joseph Smith’s methods with regard to the Book of Abraham make us very cautious about accepting his Book of Mormon characters at face value. It could very well be that the newly discovered transcript is a composite of several documents. It is true that some of the characters look like Egyptian, but it is also true that they bear a resemblance to magic characters and an even stronger resemblance to the English alphabet. It should also be kept in mind that while the English alphabet is composed of only 26 letters, the Egyptian language has hundreds of characters from which one could draw parallels.

Stanley B. Kimball is one of the best authorities on the Anthon Transcript—i.e., the horizontal copy. Writing in Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1970, page 350, he cautions:

... suggestions and attempts have been made to indicate and prove that the characters are some form of Egyptian, Meso-American, or even Phoenician. The strongest argument that can be made for the ingenious and pioneering efforts of those who favor Egyptian origin of the characters is the definite resemblance of the RLDS transcript characters to Egyptian characters. But this does not prove that the transcript is authentic, that the characters make connected thought, or are Egyptian. (Indeed, twelve, almost half of our English-Latin characters, appear in the Cyrillic alphabet, but this fact never has given and never will give anyone insight whatsoever into or understanding of Russian, Serbian, or Bulgarian.) Also it must be pointed out that there are so many variant, hieratic, and demotic characters that the affinity of many other writing systems with Egyptian could probably be proved.

If the case for the transcript characters being Egyptian in origin appears less than absolute, it is, nonetheless, infinitely stronger than any of the other arguments.

We would suspect that if any part of the newly discovered document is genuine it would be the circular object in the lower right hand corner. We have previously pointed out that in form it is somewhat like Joseph Smith’s own magic talisman, but the reader will also notice that it bears some resemblance to Facsimile No. 2 in the Book of Abraham (see the Pearl of Great Price). As we have already stated, this is a magic disk known as a hypocephalus. The Mormon scholar Michael Dennis Rhodes confirms this when he writes the following: “The text of the hypocephalus itself seems to be an address to Osiris, the god of the Dead, on behalf of the deceased, Sheshonk” (Brigham Young University Studies, Spring 1977, page 274).

All of the photographs of hypocephali we have examined have a good deal of their area devoted to drawings, but Claudia Veteto says that “The last stage in the development of the hypocephalus, the Roman epoch, is characterized by the lack of any one scene on the disk, the field being occupied almost entirely by inscriptions” (Newsletter and Proceedings of the S. E. H. A., May 1, 1967, page 6). More study in this area might be worth-while.

In any case, Edward Ashment, the Mormon scholar who worked with George Hughes in an unsuccessful attempt to translate the horizontal transcript, feels that Hugh Nibley jumped the gun when he stated that the newly discovered vertical transcript could be translated. The Provo Herald reported:

Will the translation of the new “Anthon Transcript” meet with the same fate as the translation of the Joseph Smith Papyri? Jerald Tanner, author of “Shadows or Reality?” [Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?] an expose on early Mormonism believes it will. ... Tannem maintains that there is no connection between the Book of Abraham in the Pearl of Great Price and the Joseph Smith papyri from which the book is supposedly translated.

Hugh W. Nibley, agrees with Tanner that, on the surface, there is no relationship between the two. However he holds to the theory that the Joseph Smith papyri is a prompt sheet where each word is a clue to what is written in the original Book of Abraham.
Edward H. Ashment, LDS Church Supervisor of Scripture Translation Research, disagrees with both men.

“I would tend to be more cautious than Nibley and I certainly don’t hold to Tanner’s views,” he said.

“The important thing to realize when discussing both the Anthon transcript and the Joseph Smith Papyri is that Smith was not necessarily interested in historical accuracy as much as he was in getting what the Lord wanted him to get.

“We cannot judge Joseph Smith’s work from the viewpoint of twentieth century theory and methodology.”

Ashment warned also against making rash statements or drawing early conclusions that could trap the church into an embarrassing position.

What if the transcript is a translation of Mormon’s abridgement of the Book of Lehi (the 116 lost pages)?

“We’ve got to slow down and take it easy. We can’t have contradictions. There are people like Tanner and ‘Former Mormons for Jesus’ in California who are just waiting to catch us slipping up.”

Ashment said that Tanner had called him recently to verify Hugh Nibley’s assessment that the Anthon transcript could be translated.

“I told him I wasn’t as convinced as Nibley although I did discuss the characters with Dr. George A. Hughes of the University of Chicago. We agreed that there are some characters that look like demotic Egyptian.”

The Herald called Hugh Nibley to see if he was still confident about his earlier assessments.

“I still say just what I said before. It can be translated. I will take a couple of years to complete though. These things take time” (The Herald, May 12, 1980).

It would now appear that Dr. Hugh Nibley is going into the same type of stall that he used with regard to the Book of Abraham papyrus. In 1968 we were told that Dr. Nibley was going to unfold “the meaning of the hieroglyphics and illustrations on these valuable manuscripts” (Improvement Era, January 1968, page 40-H). Twelve years have now past and he has still not translated the hieroglyphic writing which is found on the important fragment of papyrus printed as Facsimile No. 1 in the Book of Abraham. Other Egyptologists were able to translate all of the Joseph Smith Papyri in just a short time.

In the case of the recently found transcript which is purported to contain Book of Mormon characters, Hugh Nibley immediately asserted that “Of course its translatable.” He claimed, in fact, that he had counted at least two dozen out of 47 characters in the Demotic alphabet that could be given a phonetic value. We would expect, however, that a translation might come forth at any time. Dr. Nibley now tells us, however, that it “will take a couple of years” to complete the translation. It would appear to us that Hugh Nibley has made a claim that he cannot back up and that he is now stalling for time.

Klaus Baer, Professor of Egyptology at the University of Chicago’s Oriental Institute, was one of “Hugh Nibley’s primary tutors in the art of reading Egyptian characters” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1968, page 109). Although Professor Baer is a good friend to Dr. Nibley, he does not share his views with regard to the recently-discovered transcript:

“What is it? Probably not Egyptian, even if here and there signs appear that could be interpreted as more or less awkwardly copied hieroglyphs or hieratic signs. . . . I suspect that one would have about the same batting average in comparing this with Chinese or Japanese or other systems that arrange signs in columns. (Letter dated May 10, 1980)

In a recent television interview the Mormon Egyptologist Edward H. Ashment said that the document “doesn’t come very close to being readable as demotic.” He went on to say that “it’s in a script that is entirely unique and it has no relationship, to my knowledge again, of Egyptian or to any American script.”

“I NEFI

As we were about to go to press with this issue of the Messenger, a very sensational story came to our attention. It was claimed that a non-Mormon scholar had translated the transcript and had found the name “Nefi” in the text. We decided that we would have to delay publication in order to check this matter out. We discovered that the scholar was Barry Fell, and after a great deal of trouble we were finally able to locate and converse with him on the telephone. He confirmed that he had made a translation which contains the name “Nefi.” This, of course, reminds one of “Nephi”—the first writer mentioned in the Book of Mormon. Mr. Fell claimed that he had originally been asked by a Mormon man if he could decipher the horizontal version of the Anthon Transcript. He felt that it was a very poor copy and was unable to translate it.

When the newspaper published a picture of the recently-discovered document, he examined it and immediately recognized that it contained scripts which he had encountered in North Africa. After translating the first four lines, he sent his work to the Mormon Church for publication. When we asked about obtaining a copy, Mr. Fell indicated that he was giving the Mormon Church first chance to purchase his work. Later, however, Mr. Fell became somewhat disturbed that the Church had not responded and began to release some of his material. We have been able to examine his translation of the first four lines plus a letter to Ali-Akbar Habeb Bushiri, dated May 27, 1980, which contains additional information.

Mr. Fell’s translation is remarkable in that it sounds very much like the first chapter of the Book of Mormon. For instance, in the first line he translates: “. . . I, Nefi, a son born of sagacious parents, . . .” This, of course, sounds like the first eight words of the Book of Mormon: “I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, . . .” (1 Nephi 1:1) In line three Fell finds the words, “My father, Lehi, was of Salem, . . .” This is similar to 1 Nephi 1:4: “. . . my father, Lehi, having dwelt at Jerusalem . . .” Mr. Fell claims that line two contains the words “Zedekiah” and “Judah.” These two names are also found in 1 Nephi 1:4.

While at first glance a person would be led to believe that Barry Fell has proven the Book of Mormon to be authentic, a closer examination reveals just the opposite. To begin with, Fell does not read the text as “Reformed Egyptian,” but rather as an “Arabic text” (Letter dated May 27, 1980). He claims the first line is “in Maghrabi script” and that lines 2-4 contain a text “enciphered in the Belinos alphabet” which he has “identified as cipher number 19 in the book of ancient alphabets prepared by Ahmed bin Abu-Bekr bin Washish, a Nabataean scholar who in A.H. 241 presented his work to the Egyptian Caliph Abdul Malik bin Manwan.” Notice the date given by Fell is not 241 A.D., but rather 241 A.H. In his book Arabic Coins And How To Read Them, page 7, Richard Plant informs us that “Dates are nearly always ‘Anno Hegirae’ . . . A.H. rather than A.D. The Hegira was the ‘Flight,’ Mohammed’s flight from Mecca on 16th July 622 A.D.” This would mean that the text could not have been written before the ninth century A.D.

Barry Fell’s interpretation, therefore, not only would give the wrong language but also a date centuries too late to fit Joseph Smith’s story of the Book of Mormon. Fell makes the matter even more difficult for the Mormons to accept, however, when he claims that the circular object in Joseph Smith’s document is “what purports to be a gold dirhem issued by the Al-Muwahid, or ‘Almohad’ . . . Dynasty in Andalusia . . . in Libyan (Numidian) script.” This would tend to date Joseph Smith’s “Caractors” to the 12th or 13th century A.D.! Barry Fell, then, would have us believe that instead of making a copy of “Reformed Egyptian” from gold plates, Joseph Smith copied a gold coin and characters from an old Arabic manuscript known as the “apocryphal book of Nefi.”

Mr. Fell’s thesis would lead a person to conclude that Joseph Smith saw a book or manuscript which contained a copy of a page from the “book of Nefi” together with a translation in English, and that this became the basis for his Book of Mormon. While we would really like to accept Barry Fell’s work, we feel that there are a number of things that cast considerable doubt upon it.

To begin with, Mr. Fell’s translation requires that the text of the manuscript be read sideways—i.e., according to his theory, the left side of the manuscript should be the top and the text reads from right to left. Since Joseph Smith copied some Egyptian characters upside down in his Book of Abraham, we could probably accept this idea without too much trouble. From that point, however, Mr. Fell’s work becomes more difficult to accept. Instead of working from just one language he claims that there are five different forms of writing on the document—i.e., Maghrabi, cipher number 19, Hebrew (one word), Egyptian (one word) and Numidian. While it could be true that there is more than one script involved, this claim could also be used to produce an inaccurate translation. If the script did not read as the translator wanted at some point, then it could be claimed that this portion was written in another language. Because Mr. Fell works from several different scripts and uses “cipher,” we feel that it makes his “translation” very questionable. His rendition of the very first character which appears on the transcript gives an interesting example of his questionable methods of operation. This character, which looks like a small bowl in a larger one, is supposed to be the $n$ in “Nefi.” We find this same character written seven times in the first four lines. Below is a photograph of the way it appears each time together with Mr. Fell’s transliteration and translation of the word in which it appears.

The reader will notice that in the first three examples Fell transliterates the character as $n$, but in example number four he has moved into “the Belinos alphabet” and transliterates it as $y$. (This character is separated by a break in the paper in the fourth example, but it is obvious that it is the same character.) In the fifth example Fell renders the same character as two letters, $u$ and $d$. In the sixth example he transliterates it as $f$, and in the seventh it makes two letters, $w$ and $m$. It would appear, then, that Mr. Fell can make almost anything he wants out of the same character. An examination of our examples shows that Fell uses the same character in making the names “Nefi,” “Zedekiah” and “Judah.” (As we have already indicated, the names “Zedekiah” and “Judah” appear in the Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 1:4). It is obvious, then, that much of Fell’s case is based only on his wishful-thinking with regard to one character. The reader will also notice that the second and third characters ($f$ and $i$) which Fell uses in making “Nefi” are almost completely different in examples one and two.

Because Mr. Fell claimed that those who knew how to read Arabic would support his translation of the first line, we decided to consult someone who was qualified to pass judgment. We were referred to Adel Allouche of the Department of Middle East Studies at the University of Utah. Mr. Allouche, who teaches Arabic and reads both ancient and modern script, examined photographs of Joseph Smith’s “Caractors” to see if Mr. Fell’s thesis is correct. He consulted others at the University concerning this matter, and after carefully comparing the characters with many ancient scripts came to the conclusion that it was no known form of Arabic nor any other language that he was aware of. He felt, in fact, that Barry Fell’s translation was only a work of the imagination.

Mr. Fell’s statement that he found “cipher number 19 in the book of ancient alphabets prepared by Ahmed bin Abu-Bekr bin Washish” has been questioned by at least one scholar who is critical of his work. David Persuite, however, has obtained access to a copy of this book and has made photocopies. It was printed in London in 1806 under the title, Ancient Alphabets and Hieroglyphic Characters Explained; With An Account of the Egyptian Priests, Their Classes, Initiation, and Sacrifices. It not only has Ahmad Bin AbuBekr Bin Wahshish’s work in the Arabic language, but also a translation into English by Joseph Hammer. We feel that this book furnishes devastating evidence against Fell’s work. The “alphabet of Belinos, the philosopher” (the alphabet which Fell claims is used in three lines of Joseph Smith’s translation) appears on page 23 of the Arabic section. As the reader can see in the photograph below, it bears little resemblance to the writing found in the recently-discovered transcript (under each character is its equivalent in the Arabic script).

While Barry Fell seems to be completely wrong in his identification of the script, it is interesting to note that according to the Translators Preface, this book contains “eighty alphabets.” In looking over the other alphabets we find some interesting parallels... to Joseph Smith’s “Caractors,” and we feel that more time should be spent in examining this matter. This is the type of book that would have really appealed to people like Joseph Smith who were involved with talismans, magic and money-digging. Pages 6 and 7, for instance, contain this information about some of the scripts:

Section XI. The alphabet of Costoodjis . . . He wrote in this alphabet, three hundred and sixty books on divinity, talismans, astrology, magic, influence of planets and fixed stars, and on the conjuration of spirits, . . .

Section XII. The alphabet of Hermes Abootat . . . He constructed in upper Egypt treasure chambers, and set up stones containing magic inscriptions, . . .

Section XIII. The alphabet of Colphotorios . . . He was deeply learned in the knowledge of spirits and cabalistic spells, in talismans, astrological aspects, and in the magic and black art . . .

Section XIV. The alphabet of Syourianos . . . He wrote in this alphabet on astronomy, and the secrets of the stars; on talismans, and their qualities; on magic alarm-posts; on the effects of planet-rings; and on the invocation and conjuration of spirits.

Section XV. The alphabet of Philaos . . . He invented miraculous fuminations, marvellous compounds, talismans, and astrological tables. (Ancient Alphabets and Hieroglyphic Characters Explained . . ., 1806, pages 6-7)

Although Mr. Fell is certainly incorrect about the Belinos script, his work has brought an interesting old book to light.

When speaking of Mr. Fell’s work, we should probably mention the fact that he has stirred up a great deal of controversy with the publication of the book, America B.C. in 1976, and this year he has come out with a new volume entitled Saga America. His work is of special interest to the Mormons because of his attempt to prove contacts between the Old World and America in ancient times. In his new book Saga America, page 83, he even includes a photograph of Professor Paul Cheesman of the Church’s Brigham Young University.

Newsweek, May 26, 1975, stated that while “Fell has his defenders,” his “translations bring snorts from some critics. . . . ‘He is doing too much cross-country running,’ argues Frank M. Cross, professor of Semitic languages at Harvard.” Ives Goddard and William W. Fitzhugh of the Department of Anthropology at the Smithsonian Institution wrote a criticism which was published in Biblical Archeologist, September, 1978, pages 85-88, which contains the following:

The Department of Anthropology of the Smithsonian Institution occasionally receives inquiries regarding the book America B.C. . . . The statement below has been prepared to explain briefly why Smithsonian specialists in linguistics and New World prehistory consider the conclusions reached in this book to be incorrect.

None of the inscriptions mentioned in America B.C. can be accepted as genuine ancient inscriptions carved in the New World. Some appear to be accidental or random markings, while others have been created by hoaxers. . . .

No prehistoric loanwords of Old World origin have been found in any North American Indian language. The contention is made in America B.C. that there are words of Egyptian, Semitic, Celtic, and Norse origin in certain Indian languages of the Algonquian family, but the alleged evidence is seriously flawed. The discussion does not distinguish clearly among the separate Algonquian languages; ignores basic facts of Algonquian grammar, linguistic history, and etymology; makes many errors on specific facts; misreads and misinterprets words [or impossible fragments of words] and their translations; and shows no awareness of the basic scientific linguistic procedures that have been used by specialists for over a hundred years to study the history of languages. . . . The claim is made in America B.C. that songs in the Pima dialect of Papago, a language of the Uto-Aztecan family spoken in southern Arizona, can be read using a “Semitic” dictionary. But the analysis that is presented (p. 172) is not consistent with the grammars of either Papago or any Semitic language: the Papago words have been arbitrarily divided or rearranged; the free translation given in the source used has been ignored; and some of the phonetic symbols in the original publication have been misinterpreted. . . .

In sum, it must be said that the discussions in America B.C. show no knowledge of the correct grammatical analysis of the American Indian languages considered. There is no understanding of the grammars of the Algonquian languages, Pima, or Zuni, and no conception of the existence of strict rules governing the permissible order and shape of elements in those languages. To Smithsonian linguists, the arguments presented in America B.C. are therefore of no value.

Mr. Fell’s work on Joseph Smith’s “Caractors” leads us to believe that he first read the Book of Mormon and then tried to slant his translation in that direction. He wanted the Mormon Church leaders to print it and was disappointed in their lack of response. We have been told that Mr. Fell finally submitted his work to BYU Studies but those in charge decided it should not be printed. The thing we cannot understand is why Fell did not try to derive the text from Egyptian since it is claimed that he has a working knowledge of “Egyptian hieroglyphics” (see Saga America, Foreword). This would certainly have been more enticing to the Mormons. In claiming that the text is from Arabic and Libyan writings dating from the ninth to the thirteenth century A.D., Mr. Fell will, no doubt, alienate his Mormon friends. While we would like to accept his thesis, we feel that his work on the first four lines is completely unconvincing.

MICMAC?

Some scholars have noticed a resemblance between some of Joseph Smith’s “Caractors” and a script used by the Micmac Indians. In his book America B.C., Barry Fell published photographs of Micmac and related it to the Egyptian language: “The Micmac language has evidently acquired much of its technical and astronomical vocabulary from ancient Egyptian, . . .” (page 278). Ives Goddard and William W. Fitzhugh criticized Mr. Fell for this conjecture:

The claim is made in America B.C. that the so-called hieroglyphics of the Micmac Indians are derived from Egyptian hieroglyphics. However, general resemblances between some individual signs, some of which have been misinterpreted or misread (pp. 254-58), do not prove a relationship between the two writing systems, because there is no explanation of their very different structures. The Micmac writing system is a purely mnemonic system used to aid in the reciting of Christian prayers; it cannot be used to write new messages. It was developed by Roman Catholic missionaries inspired by the use of pictographic mnemonics among the Indians, but its principles have never been explicated in detail. . . (Biblical Archeologist, September 1978, page 86)

In his latest book, Saga America, page 223, Fell seems to have changed his opinion somewhat:

In America B.C. the hieroglyphic system of writing used by the Micmac Indians of Nova Scotia was attributed to influence from Egypt, and the similarity of the signs to hieratic letters was illustrated in tables. . . this was taken as evidence of an ancient contact with Egyptian writers of the ancestors of the Micmacs of modern times. More recent studies have led to the conclusion that the Micmac contact was not so much with ancient Egyptian writers directly, as rather with eastern Libyans, from the border of Egypt. and Libya: ... Thus Micmac script is probably to be attributed to east Libyan influence.

In Saga America, pages 224-225, Barry Fell has reproduced two pages of “a handwritten copy of portions of the hieroglyphic version of the Catholic mass, translated by the Abbe Maillard in the eighteenth century.”

After making a superficial examination of Micmac characters, we were not too impressed with the idea that they are related to Joseph Smith’s work. Even if a case could be made, however, it would not provide evidence for the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Despite Barry Fell’s attempts to show that Micmac was an ancient written language, the evidence stems to show just the opposite. Garrick Mallery claimed that what has been “erroneously” called “Micmac hieroglyphics ... do not partake of the nature of hieroglyphics, and their origin is not Micmac” (Picture Writing of the American Indians, page 666). If any connection between Micmac and Joseph Smith’s work could be established, it would lead us to suspect that Smith had access to a copy of a Christian text produced in the 18th or 19th century A.D. It is possible, of course, that Joseph Smith could have acquired a sample of this writing. Wesley P. Walters has pointed out that Smith’s uncle, Jason Mack, lived in “New Brunswick” (Joseph Smith’s History by His Mother, page 52), and, according to Mallery, “the northern part of New Brunswick” was occupied by Micmacs. We tend to doubt, however, that there is any connection between the two scripts.

IMPORTANCE OF CIRCLE

We are inclined to believe that the circular object in Joseph Smith’s transcript could hold the key to its origin. We feel that this would be an excellent area of research for those interested in the origin of Mormonism. We are especially suspicious of the disk because Joseph Smith never published it. In the case of the Book of Abraham and the Kinderhook plates he proudly published facsimiles for the world to see. Why was he ashamed of the Book of Mormon disk? Was he afraid that its publication would give something away? It is true that he did allow Harris to take it to Anthon in February 1828, but after that incident he seems to have suppressed it. (The reader will remember that Anthon later suggested that it might be an altered copy of something that had been published.)

A second copy of the “Caracorts” was produced which does not contain the disk. Although the characters were copied from the circular object (see especially the last two lines in the photograph which appears on page one), they appear in straight horizontal lines. Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer came on the scene a year after Harris took the transcript to Anthon. From his statement we know that Harris took the manuscript entitled, “A Book of Mormon Study,” Part 1, Chapter 14, which is B. H. Roberts’ Manuscripts Revealed

We have had a number of inquiries about this matter. A man from a local television station contacted us to see if it was the same man, and another man from a Provo radio station wanted to know just what comment we had to make about Mr. Marquardt’s behavior. When we told him that he had the wrong Mr. Marquardt, it took all of the wind out of his sails. Actually, the Michael Marquardt we know is 35, lives in Sandy and does not have a pickup truck.

MICHAEL DIDN’T DO IT

On June 25, 1980 the Salt Lake Tribune reported:

A man who caused about $10,000 damage with his truck on Temple Square last Thursday was arraigned in 5th Circuit Court Tuesday Michael George Marquart, 29, 642 Spring Hill Dr., North Salt Lake, ... was arrested inside the temple grounds after a pickup truck crashed through south gate and ran over planters, water fountains and other fixtures. Officers said the driver attempted to run over several people as well ... Officers said the driver told them he was “ordered by God” to destroy the Mormon Temple. ... Marquart ... faces a possible prison sentence of up to five years if convicted. ... Marquart is being held in the Salt Lake City-County Jail in lieu of $2,000 bail.

Since the driver of the truck was named Michael Marquart, and since a man with a similar name has done a great deal of research for us, some members of the Mormon Church rejoiced thinking that at last they had a way to discredit our work. On the Sunday following the incident, an LDS Church security officer reported in priesthood meeting that he looked through the file the Church maintains on Mr. Marquardt and found that he is a “cohort of the Tanners.” When we called this officer he freely admitted that he had mistakenly linked the man arrested at Temple Square with the man who has helped us with our research. He said he realized his error Sunday afternoon when he found that Mr. Marquardt was working at the U.S. Post Office while the other man was in jail. The Mr. Marquardt who has given us a great deal of help is actually named “Henry Michael Marquardt.” He usually goes by “H. Michael Marquardt” in his publications, but we usually refer to him as just “Michael Marquardt.” The reader will notice that the Tribune identified the man who drove the pickup truck as “Michael George Marquart, 29, 642 Spring Hill Dr., North Salt Lake, ...” The Mr. Marquardt we know is 35, lives in Sandy and does not have a pickup truck.

B. H. ROBERTS’ MANUSCRIPTS REVEALED

In the December 1979 issue of the Messenger we pointed out that the famous Mormon historian and General Authority B. H. Roberts wrote some material concerning the Book of Mormon which is very embarrassing to the Church. For instance, in a manuscript entitled, “A Book of Mormon Study,” Part 1, Chapter 14, B. H. Roberts frankly admitted that Joseph Smith had a vivid enough imagination and the source material necessary to have produced the Book of Mormon without the aid of gold plates. Truman G. Madsen, of the Church’s Brigham Young University, maintains that B. H. Roberts was only playing the “Devil’s Advocate” in his unpublished material. We cannot agree with Professor Madsen concerning this matter and have come to the conclusion that the best way to settle the issue is to publish Roberts’ manuscripts so that our readers can make up their own minds concerning this important question. The Mormon Church’s Deseret News, April 14, 1980, said that “Roberts’ defense of the Book of Mormon is contained in two manuscripts titled ‘Book of Mormon Difficulties’ and ‘Book of Mormon Studies.’ To say that these manuscripts contain a “defense” of the Book of Mormon is certainly a serious error.

B. H. Roberts believed that his fellow Church leaders should come to grips with the problems of the Book of Mormon. He was very disturbed with Apostle Richard R. Lyman’s attitude of sweeping them under the rug. He mentioned this matter in a letter to President Heber J. Grant and the Council of Twelve Apostles, and four years later wrote directly to Apostle Lyman:

> You perhaps will recall our conversation of a few days ago in relation to the inquiry we had before the Council of the Twelve Apostles on some problems associated with the Book of Mormon, . . . and how I reminded you that on the former occasion here alluded to I announced that what I had presented did not constitute all our B. of M. problems, that there were others. You then asked, “Well, will these help solve our present problems or will it increase our difficulties?” to which I replied, “It would very greatly increase our problems.” At which you said (and I thought rather lightly) “Well, I don’t see why we should bother with them then. To this I answered that I should go on with my studies nevertheless. And the other day I told you, if you remember, that I had continued my investigations and had drawn up a somewhat lengthy report for the First Presidency [sic] and the Council of the Twelve. . . . I thought I would submit in sort of tabloid form a few pages of matter pointing out a possible theory of the Origin of the Book of Mormon that is quite unique . . . which in the hands of a skillful opponent could be made, in my judgment, very embarrassing.

> I submit it in the form of a Parallel between some main outline facts pertaining to the Book of Mormon and matter that was published in Ethan Smith’s “View of the Hebrews” which preceded the Book of Mormon, . . . It was published in Vermont and in the adjoining county in which the Smith Family lived in the Prophet Joseph’s boyhood days, so that it could be urged that the family doubtless had this book . . . the Parallel that I send to you is not one fourth part of what can be presented in this form, and the unpresented part is quite as striking as this that I submit. (Letter from B. H. Roberts to Richard R. Lyman, dated October 24, 1927, carbon copy of the original)

We hope to have Roberts’ Manuscripts Revealed printed in a month or two. The regular price for this publication will be $13.95, but those who send payment before August 31, 1980, will receive it for only $11.95.

APRIL’S NEEDS MET

In the last issue of the Messenger we reported that our daughter April was planning to do some missionary work with Teen Missions International and that her expenses would amount to over $1,700. Much to our surprise, the Lord met her needs before we could get the newsletter in the mail. She is now on her way to the Philippines, and we would ask you to remember her in prayer. We just want to thank the Lord who supplies all our needs “according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus” (Philippians 4:19).

THE CHANGING WORLD

We are happy to report that our new book, The Changing World of Mormonism, published by Moody Press, is selling very well throughout the nation. It is now in its second printing. The first printing sold out about four months after it was issued. Moody Monthly for June 1980 reviewed The Changing World of Mormonism and devoted about six pages to our work (see pages 30-32, 34-36 and 59). Since this is one of the most, widely circulated religious magazines, it is bound to significantly increase the sales of this book.

The Changing World of Mormonism is an updated and condensed version of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? It has 592 pages with an index and bibliography. In the Introduction to this book Wesley P. Walters writes:

> Their [the Tanners] major work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? has sold more than thirty thousand copies without any advertising campaign, simply because it is the most definitive work in print on the fallacies of Mormonism. This condensed version of that earlier work, though still of necessity lengthy, sets forth the heart of their extensive research.

OTHER NEW BOOKS

Following the Brethren. Contains the speech, “Fourteen Fundamentals in Following the Prophets,” by Ezra Taft Benson. In this address Benson maintains that the President of the Mormon Church has a right to dictate in both temporal and spiritual matters. Even political views are to be subjected to his control. This speech has caused a great deal of consternation because Benson is President of the Council of Twelve Apostles and next in line to lead the Mormon Church (see Salt Lake City Messenger, April 1980). This booklet also contains Apostle Bruce R. McConkie’s speech “All Are Alike Unto God.” This address relates to the new revelation giving blacks the priesthood. Price: $2.00

Joseph Smith’s 1835-56 Diary. Transcription by H. Michael Marquardt. This diary was suppressed by the Mormon leaders for 140 years. Includes a revealing introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner and some photographs of the original document. Price: $3.50

Joseph Smith’s Kirtland Revelation Book. Introduction by Jerald and Sandra Tanner showing some important changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations. Although a typescript is not provided, this publication contains photographs of the entire manuscript book which has been suppressed since the 1830s. Price: $4.50

The Use of the Bible in the Book of Mormon and Early Nineteenth Century Events Reflected in the Book of Mormon. By H. Michael Marquardt. A good summary of the evidence showing the Book of Mormon is a product of the 19th century. Price: $1.00

Confessions of John D. Lee. A photomechanical reprint of the original 1877 edition of Mormonism Unveiled: Or the Life and Confessions of the Late Mormon Bishop, John D. Lee. Contains very important material on the Mountain Meadows Massacre and the role of Danites in the church. Price: $7.00
UNMASKING A MORMON SPY

AN APPEAL FOR SUPPRESSED FBI DOCUMENTS

On March 5, 1974, we talked with a man who had been excommunicated from the Mormon Church who claimed that his telephone had been bugged and his private journal stolen at the time he was under Church investigation. In June of that year Attorney General William B. Saxbe called on the American people to report any information they might have about illegal wiretapping. On July 1, 1974, we sent all the material that could be gathered about this alleged wiretapping to the Justice Department. After a long delay the FBI finally investigated these charges and claimed that there was no “validity to the allegations” (Salt Lake Tribune, April 9, 1975).

During this period we were investigating to see if there was a connection between Mormonism and the intelligence world. We found, for instance, that the Watergate break-in and other illegal activities had been discussed in the Mullen Company, an organization which handled public relations for the Mormon Church. Robert Bennett, the son of Utah Senator Wallace F. Bennett, was president of the firm and the notorious spy Howard Hunt worked for Mr. Bennett. We also found that a student from Mormon-owned Brigham Young University helped Hunt with spying and bugging operations. Moreover, we discovered that James A. Everett, who worked for Bennett’s company in Europe, was doing public relations work for the Mormon Church at the very time he was serving as a secret agent for the CIA.

“THEY’RE TRYING TO CALL OUT”

On November 6, 1975, one of the authors of this article (Jerald Tanner) picked up the phone to call an ex-Mormon who claimed to have information on bugging operations. The phone rang a number of times without an answer. Between two of the rings, however, a woman’s voice softly but distinctly said, “They’re trying to call out.” Since both our phone and the number we were calling were private lines, we could only conclude that someone was monitoring our conversations.

While we are aware of the fact that much of the equipment used in bugging telephones is made in such a way that it does not produce any sound, on some occasions telephone equipment is used which can carry a voice back into the line. In his book, Undercover: Memoirs of an American Secret Agent, page 273, Howard Hunt alleges that

> On September 22 I was telephoning attorney Bittman from my home when I heard a whisper just after my attorney had spoken. The intruder voice said, “That’s Bittman,” as though to identify the person to whom I was talking. This slipup by the monitors convinced me—if I needed further convincing—that my telephone line continued to be tapped.

At any rate, after the strange voice came on the phone, we became fearful that we were uncovering something that could turn out to be like Pandora’s box. This was a very disturbing experience.

Not too long after this occurred (January 23, 1976) a man in California by the name of Steven L. Mayfield wrote Dr. John Fitzgerald a letter inquiring if he happened to “know anything” about the individual who claimed his phone had been bugged before he was excommunicated—the incident we reported in 1974:

> "I understand the FBI investigated possible illegal wiretapping against the church . . .” Steven L. Mayfield’s desire to know more about this man becomes rather interesting in light of the information which follows: According to Mr. Mayfield’s own admission (tape recorded interview, July 16, 1980), he was working for the FBI at the time he wrote this letter of inquiry. Even more important, however, is the fact that on October 11, 1976, Steven L. Mayfield assumed the alias of “Stan Fields” in a letter which he wrote to us:

> Dear Friends in Christ: I am a fellow [sic] Ex-Mormon for Jesus, and would like to be added to your mailing list, . . . What is it like being “Apostates” in the capitol of the “Saints”? It really fascinates me how anyone could survive as long as you have.

> Thank you in advance for answering my questions . . . God’s blessings on you as you do His work, Sincerely in Christ.

Mr. Mayfield not only assumed an alias, but he opened up a post office box in Pleasant Hill, California (P.O. Box 23114) for the purpose of deception. On the very day (October 11, 1976) that Mr. Mayfield wrote to us under the alias “Stan Fields,” he wrote a letter to John Fitzgerald in which he gave his address as 925 St. Louis Ct., Concord, California 94518. It is common practice, of course, for those who are engaged in spying operations to cover their tracks by assuming an alias and renting a post office box.

In any case, Mr. “Fields,” who has professed to be our Christian brother, has been spying on our operation for about four years and has also penetrated a number of groups of Ex-Mormons for Jesus. By dishonest means he has obtained the names of many Mormons who have questions about their religion. He has been diligently working to obtain photographs of critics of the Mormon Church and has gathered large files of information. He boasted, in fact, that he had the largest file on Sonia Johnson. We know that in one case he did research on a prominent non-Mormon and found that he had obtained a divorce several years ago. He also claims to have “tons of tapes.” One of his primary objects seemed to be gathering information concerning the scheduling of activities which were critical of the Mormon Church.
MAYFIELD’S CONFESSION

Mr. Fields’ nefarious career came to a sudden end in July, 1980, when we discovered his true identity. We also found that he was employed at the Mormon Church Office Building in the Genealogical Department. On July 16, 1980, Edward Decker of Saints Alive in Jesus (a group of ex-Mormons who share “the gospel of Jesus Christ with the Mormon people”) and Jerald Tanner directly confronted Steven L. Mayfield in the Mormon Church Office Building in Salt Lake City. We had abundant evidence of the spying activities and Mr. Mayfield made no attempt to deny the basic charges. He consented to an interview and we went to an area of the Church Office Building where we could have some privacy.

Although Mormon Church Security guards were patrolling the area, they made no attempt to stop the interview. Mr. Decker pulled out his tape recorder, set it on the table and asked Mr. Mayfield, “Do you mind if I record our conversation?” Mayfield replied: “You might as well, I kind of figured you would . . . Do you want to ask questions, or do you just want me to spill the beans here?”

Mayfield admitted that “by taking on an alias I made a mistake, an error, a sin. I was out of line . . .”

In this same interview Mr. Mayfield gave this revealing information about his activities:

I went on my mission to Colorado and Nebraska . . . 71 to 73 . . . I went back home . . . started working with the FBI in San Francisco as a file clerk . . .

Everything about Stan Fields is untrue, but I did work for the FBI. If you care to I’ve got, from the Freedom of Information, I’ve got my file which you can look at.

A lot of things happened down there that I wasn’t aware of . . . San Francisco . . . I think is the fifth largest FBI office . . . I served from July of 73 to June of 77 . . . I went over to Berkeley, this is in early 74, to be the clerk in Berkeley ______ on the Patty Hearst thing . . . then back . . . I went back to a security squad which were maintaining the file . . . upon various radicals . . . Then, from there . . . I accepted a job as the evidence enclosure clerk . . . and that is the job I had when I resigned. My letter, in . . . my file says . . . that I resigned to go back to school, which is true.

. . . what I was doing with you was spy, what I did with the bureau . . . was just a paper shuffle.

One of the biggest fears I had was some crazy person taking a pot shot at you or you. Why? Well, because the first thing they [the authorities] would do, they would probably want to get your mailing list . . . and try . . . contact people you’ve had contact with . . . and that would come right back to me, and then they find that Stan Fields is a non-existent person — let’s find out about it.

JERALD TANNER— . . . You were watching us— protecting us?

STEVEN MAYFIELD— Well, this was one of my concern[s], you know, . . . people would say, you know, I wish someone would take a pot shot. I’d say please, no, don’t think that.

Some time after giving this tape recorded interview, Steven Mayfield said he wished he had not consented to it. He was apparently concerned with some of the things he had revealed. However this may be, the FBI has confirmed the fact that Mayfield was an employee at the time he assumed his alias:

Steven L. Mayfield was employed by the FBI in a clerical capacity in our San Francisco Office from July 3, 1973, until June 3, 1977. (Letter from Roger S. Young, Inspector in Charge, Office of Congressional and Public Affairs, to Jerald Tanner, dated August 18, 1980)

MAYFIELD’S MASK COMES OFF

Although we were at times a little suspicious of Stan Fields, we did not realize what he was up to until July 1980. On the morning of the 10th a well-known Mormon, who works at the Church Office Building, called us on the phone and said he would be paying us a visit. Not too long after this Stan Fields showed up at our bookstore and began to engage in a conversation with Sandra and another man from California.

The man from the Church Office Building was delayed for sometime. When he finally arrived, we noticed that Mr. Fields turned his back to him and pretended to be looking at books.

This lasted for some time, but when the man finally left, Mr. Fields jumped right back into the conversation. His behavior led us to suspect that he might have been at our bookstore for the purpose of spying on this man.

After Mr. Fields had been in our bookstore for about three hours, Michael Marquardt came walking up the path. As soon as Fields saw who it was he made for the door. We thought that his sudden departure was rather strange, but it was not until two days later that we learned Mr. Marquardt knew the name Steven L. Mayfield. Mr. Marquardt had originally been introduced to him by a man who had known him before he took on the alias. Michael Marquardt, therefore, posed a real threat to him, and he was always afraid that Mr. Marquardt would run into him when he was using the alias. In his tape recorded confession, Mr. Mayfield said that, “My problem . . . was the fact that . . . I’m as scared of Church . . .”

Besides the problem with the alias, it would appear that Steven Mayfield had another reason for fearing an encounter with Marquardt. This stems from an incident that took place on March 18, 1980. (In an earlier “Statement on Mormon Spies” we erroneously gave the date as August 11, 1979. This was actually another occasion when Mr. Mayfield visited with Marquardt for over four hours.) On March 18, 1980, Mayfield came to Marquardt’s house and spent five hours visiting with him. During the course of the conversation, Mayfield desired the telephone number for a Mormon scholar at BYU. Mr. Marquardt got out his address book and gave him the number.

Later, however, when Marquardt went to put his papers away, he noticed that his address book had disappeared! Although we cannot actually prove that Mr. Mayfield took it, it is interesting to note that Mayfield subsequently compiled a long address list of critics of the Mormon Church and such a notebook would have been helpful in its production.

LINKED TO FBI?

The question as to whether Mr. Mayfield’s spying operation had anything to do with the FBI is one we are not prepared to answer at the present time. The FBI maintains that Mayfield’s work “was not connected to any FBI investigation. Mr. Mayfield has assured you that he acted on his own initiative, and his correspondence was in no way authorized or approved by the FBI” (Letter dated August 18, 1980).
A photograph of an FBI document which indicates that Mormon leaders tried to pressure the New York Times so that it would not print articles critical of the LDS Church.
According to Steven Mayfield’s tape recorded statement, he did go under cover—i.e., rent a post office box and assume an alias—while he was still employed with the FBI. He claimed that he did not stop working for the FBI until “June of 1977,” yet as we have already shown, he wrote to us under the name of Stan Fields on October 11, 1976. The letter from the FBI confirms that Mayfield was working for them “until June 3, 1977.”

Melaine Layton has sent us a copy of a letter which moves the date Mayfield took the alias back before October 11, 1976. He wrote a letter to her on September 22, 1976, in which he mentioned that he had “not yet received the tapes which I ordered two months ago,...” The letter is signed “Stan Fields,” and we would naturally assume that he would have used the same name when he wrote “two months ago.” This would bring the date back to July 1976—about a year before he left the FBI.

When we told Wallace Turner, a reporter for the New York Times, about Mayfield, he advised us to request the FBI to release any documents they have relating to us under the Freedom of Information Act. We did this and to our great surprise, one of the FBI documents had to do with Wallace Turner himself. It is dated December 19, 1974, and contains this revealing information (see photograph on page 3):

During the interview with [over one line blacked out] was advised Mr. JERALD TANNER had written numerous individuals concerning this inquiry, among them a newspaper man in San Francisco, California. [one-third line blacked out] he is acquainted with Mr. WALLACE TURNER as a “New York Times” representative at San Francisco, California, because Mr. TURNER on several occasions has written articles highly unfavorable to the LDS Church and its activities. [one-fourth line blacked out] said this became of so much concern to church authorities at Salt Lake City that they requested [two and one-half lines blacked out] to intercede with the editor of the “New York Times” at New York City to request that articles such as those written by Mr. TANNER [Turner?] be carefully examined.

[one-fourth line blacked out] said that shortly after [one-fourth line blacked out] contact with the editor of the “New York Times,” the “Times” began publishing articles favorable to the LDS Church and [one-fourth line blacked out] said he was not surprised that Mr. TANNER remained in contact with Mr. TURNER in view of their apparent mutual feelings about the activities of the LDS Church.

This document was apparently generated because of our call for an investigation into wiretapping allegations in 1974. We will have more to say about the document concerning Wallace Turner in another article in this newsletter.

Although the material concerning Turner is certainly revealing, the document which we are most interested in is dated October 4, 1974. In this document we find the following:

... TANNER then suggested he thought a complete investigation into this matter was called for. [a full page of material blacked out]

Salt Lake City files further disclose that on 4/30/70 [one and one-third lines blacked out] reported that JERALD J. [sic] TANNER and his wife, SANDRA LUCILLE TANNER, moved to Salt Lake City from California several years ago, that TANNER operates the Modern Microfilm Company and that [one-third line blacked out] had told [one-fourth line blacked out] that the TANNERS had been circulating petitions against the Church and had been “trouble makers.”

This report seems to indicate that the “Salt Lake City” Division of the FBI has a file or files concerning us with material dating back to at least April 30, 1970. Since almost all of page two and portions of page three have been blacked out (see photograph on page 5 of this newsletter), it is impossible to determine if this report mentions Steven Mayfield. Two reasons were given for the suppression of this material. It was claimed that these are “investigatory records compiled for law enforcement purposes, the disclosure of which would . . . constitute an unwarranted invasion of the personal privacy of another person; (D) reveal the identity of a confidential source or reveal confidential information furnished only by the confidential source; . . . ” In addition to the deletions made on these pages we have received, eighteen full pages were “withheld entirely” for the same reasons. On October 21, 1980, we appealed this decision to the Associate Attorney General in Washington, D.C. Even if we are able to obtain these pages, however, we will only have the information sent to the central records system in Washington, D.C. This would not give us the records stored in the Salt Lake City Division of the FBI. We have, however, requested these records under a separate Freedom of Information request. Until we are able to examine all the records, we will not be able to make a definite statement about this matter.

In any case, the facts as we now have them show that an employee of the FBI assumed an alias and began spying on us. About a year later he resigned his position. He then became an employee of the Mormon Church and was employed there at the time we became aware of his spying operations.

LINKED TO CHURCH SECURITY?

One of the most interesting aspects of the Mayfield affair is his association with Church Security Guard Brent Metcalfe. For over a year Mr. Metcalfe has been deeply involved in gathering information from critics of the Mormon Church. In fact, a Mormon scholar who knows him told us that Metcalfe feels it is his mission to destroy the Tanners and Ex-Mormons For Jesus. Our first contact with Metcalfe came when he sent a letter while serving on a mission to England.

After Mr. Metcalfe returned from his mission, he went to work for Mormon Church Security. He came to our bookstore on a number of occasions, but he did not tell us of his involvement with Church Security. We became very suspicious of him, however, and finally discovered that he worked for Church Security. When we confronted him with the matter, he frankly admitted the fact but claimed that his visits to our bookstore were prompted because of his own personal interest and had nothing to do with the Church.

The evidence now shows that all during this period Brent Metcalfe was closely associated with Steven Mayfield. In fact, on one occasion Metcalfe and Mayfield (posing under his alias of Stan Fields) came to our bookstore. When Paul Carden asked “Fields” about Brent Metcalfe, he responded:

Now as to BRENT METCALFE. He is a returned missionary from England who, while on his mission, began writing to out [sic] brothers and sisters in the ministry about their work and material. He became acquainted with Cromptons while in England. I meet [sic] him last summer at the Historical Dept. Tom Truitt . . . introduced me to him and he bragged about his apparent refuting and successful defense of mormonism . . . he knows a lot of the arguments used against Mormonism. But he is a little pest when ever I run into him. Always asking questions etc. about EMFJ [Ex-Mormons For Jesus] and what I know about others. (Letter from Stan Fields to Paul Carden, received March 81, 1980)

Edward Decker told us that “Stan Fields” and Brent Metcalfe came in Metcalfe’s car to a meeting at a Baptist church in Roy in January 1980. Moreover, he claims that they showed up together at meetings held at the Salt Palace in Salt Lake. Metcalfe and Mayfield have also been seen together in the Church Office Building on a number of occasions. One woman told us that while Mayfield was A photograph of page two and part of page three of an FBI document dated October 4, 1974. This document seems to indicate that the Salt Lake City Division of the FBI has a file or files containing information on the Tanners dating back to April 30, 1970. Notice that a full page of material has been blacked out.
posing as Stan Fields, he said that Metcalfe was a good friend whom he had known for a long time. In his interview, however, Mayfield claims that it was only about a year ago that he met Brent Metcalfe.

Last winter a group known as LDS Study Clubs of America sponsored a series of lectures by individuals who were critical of the Mormon Church. Brent Metcalfe and Steven Mayfield had a peculiar interest in these lectures. The activities of both these men made one woman suspicious, and on July 4, 1980, she wrote a letter to John Fitzgerald and told him she believed they were “spies” (like Michael Marquardt, she did not know at that time that Steven Mayfield went under the alias “Stan Fields”):

...You know, and I know that the church has its spies; ... I must tell you about one night at that series of lectures being held in S.L. last winter. I learned that the church has a file with my name, address, picture—and the devil knows what all—with information that I set up some lectures in Ogden to overthrow the church, that I am sending out hundreds of anti-Mormon tapes, etc. I don’t know if you were there the night that little fresh returned missionary with white bib overalls was jumping up and down after the lecture, spouting the words of the Lord. ... A bigger man was standing by him taking everything in. The next week this friend was there and came up to me after the meeting and asked—or stated—. . . “My friend told me last week who you are, that you live in Ogden, and that you set up lectures there to overthrow the church, and that you are sending out hundreds of anti-Mormon tapes.” “Wow,” I said, “what an accomplished lady I am. Pray tell, wasn’t your friend that newly returned missionary?” “Yes.” “Well, how could he possibly know who I am?” “Because he’s a security man from the church.” I started to stammer, “But he’s only been back a few months, and I’m sure he hadn’t seen me before. Or had he and where?” “They keep files with pictures and information.” “Why isn’t he here tonight?” “Well, the church officials told him not to come. He was making too much commotion last week which wasn’t good for the church.” “Well, bless him,” I said, “and thanks for the information. It’s good to know I’m so busy sending out tapes when I haven’t sent any and have only loaned them to two individuals. The one individual, I’ve come to believe, is also a spy.”

John, you remember that friendly young man from Kaysville that used to talk with you—Steve Mayfield. We both thought he was earnestly trying to find out what was right. ... When our lectures started in Ogden you remember Steve showed up. I think you introduced him to me. He was so interested to hear everything so he could understand things better, but he couldn’t be to all the lectures. Could he borrow the tapes?

Steve would call me from college where he attended school. Could he come down and, borrow the tapes he hadn’t already had? Then when he got there he wanted copies of all our flyers, asking for any other materials I could let him have. He was so-o-o interested in hearing what I could tell him. And when I would offer him a comfortable chair to sit in, if it wasn’t right next to me, he would always come and sit where I was, be it the dining table or whatever. I hope I’m not getting paranoid, but he would pump me with questions and he could have been recording. When a church sends out spies, I think that church is very sick, deceitful, and dangerous. (Letter dated July 4, 1980)

By cautioning people to beware of Brent Metcalfe’s questions, Stan Fields directed attention from himself. This is evident from a letter to Paul Carden, postmarked July 11, 1980:

...I’m sure our “buddy” Metcalfe has tried to contact Rick Graham—he told me he heard about what Rick said on the phone and was drooling to talk to him—I’m sure he would also like all the info on Dr. Martin—so I wouldn’t tell him you work there [at CRI]. ... Say, Paul could you do me a favor? Now that you work at CRI I would like copies of if possible, the following—... According to Edward Decker, Steven Mayfield went by the name “Stan Fields” in the presence of Brent Metcalfe as early as September 1979. In his tape recorded interview with us, Steven Mayfield affirmed that Metcalfe “knew that I had that name. I think I told him that I used that and he just didn’t want to know about it ...” When one of the authors of this article (Jerald) talked to Brent Metcalfe about this matter, he acknowledged that he knew about the alias and had told Mayfield that he should not use it. When Metcalfe was pressed as to the wisdom of a Church Security man going about with a man who was using an alias, he finally blurted out that he had reported this fact in a written statement he prepared for Church Security on Edward Decker’s first visit to the Church Office Building (apparently sometime in 1979).

It has been claimed that just after we found out about “Stan Fields,” Brent Metcalfe wrote him a note in which he dissociated himself from him and claimed that he would tell the Tanners all about his activities. Unfortunately, when we tried to reach Metcalfe at Church Security we were told that he was “apparently on vacation.” We later learned that he was visiting ex-Mormons in Los Angeles. After he came back he had changed his mind and stated he would not submit to a tape recorded interview. Mr. Metcalfe was later asked to appear on a radio show to give his side of the story, but he claimed he had been given instructions not to talk publicly about the matter and could only appear if approval was obtained from his superior.

Mr. Metcalfe now claims that a false rumor has been circulated about him—i.e., that he was hired by Church Security because of his knowledge of Ex-Mormons For Jesus. While we have no way of knowing about this, before the Stan Fields episode came to light, Metcalfe told us that he had been questioned about his association with Ex-Mormons For Jesus by Church Security before he was hired.

In making this statement about Brent Metcalfe, we should probably point out that to our knowledge he never used an alias nor represented himself to us as an ex-Mormon. If there is a connecting link between Church Security and Steven Mayfield it probably was forged long before Mr. Metcalfe came on the scene. We feel that Metcalfe was only one of many who knew of Mayfield’s alias and deceitful methods. We believe, in fact, that a number of Church Security men must have been aware of what was going on. To begin with, Metcalfe claimed that he reported this to Church Security in a written report. Then, too, on different occasions Mayfield helped (or at least claimed to help) pass out anti-Mormon literature around Temple Square. In a letter to Edward Decker, dated April 25, 1980, Stan Fields wrote:

Conference went off with nothing too earth shattering—... We had about 12 people handing out literature on Sat & Sun., Wally Tope, Paul Carden & friends, Einar & Ann Anderson, Rev. & Mrs. M’Gimsey — and yours truly. Brent M. was there, cocky as ever.

Brent Metcalfe later admitted to us that he had seen Mayfield standing with anti-Mormon literature in his hand at Temple Square. Church Security guards, of course, would have had a great deal of interest in knowing who was involved in this activity. Is it reasonable to assume that none of these guards (with the exception of Brent Metcalfe) recognized Steven Mayfield? It should be remembered that Mayfield worked in the Church Office Building which is close to Temple Square. It is rather hard to believe that Church Security guards or employees of the Church Office Building would not report that a fellow employee was helping the enemy. The fact that no discipline was administered may very well indicate that Mayfield had protection in his deceitful activities.
Not long after we obtained the taped interview with Steven Mayfield, John Harrington, a reporter for the Ogden Standard-Examiner phoned Mayfield at the Genealogical Department of the Church. According to Harrington, he asked Mayfield if he had been passing on the material he had obtained in his spying activities to the Church. At first Mayfield said he would not comment about the matter, but when he was pressed real hard, he replied, “Yes.” Mr. Harrington was to meet with him the next day to learn the details, but to his disappointment Mayfield disappeared. For a number of days he could not be found at home nor at work. After this we tried on many occasions to call Mayfield at his home or the Church Office Building. We were always told that he was either not there or too busy to talk. When we finally reached him on the phone on August 5, we told him circumstantial evidence indicated that he did not conduct this spying operation on his own. He replied that this was “not necessarily so,” but declined an invitation to meet again to discuss the matter.

We feel that the link between Steven L. Mayfield and Church Security needs to be investigated. We have asked for help from the FBI, but they feel that no federal law has been violated. The Utah Attorney General’s Office has also declined the invitation to investigate the matter.

“ENEMIES LIST”

As we mentioned earlier, Mr. “Fields” prepared a long list of critics of the Mormon Church. The list contains at least 165 names of organizations or individuals who oppose the Church in one way or another. This list includes not only the “Major functioning units of EMFJ [Ex-Mormons For Jesus],” but also organizations such as: Modern Microfilm Co., Mormons for Era, Affirmation/Gay Mormons, American Civil Liberties Union and even the New York Times reporter Wallace Turner. Mr. “Fields,” of course, did not represent this list as an enemies list, but rather gave the impression that he was providing a valuable service for those who were working with the Mormons—in other words, he was helping to unite us. In the copy of the list he provided for us the page which contains the names “Affirmation/Gay Mormons,” and the “American Atheist (Utah Chapter)” was not included, but we were able to obtain it through another source. On our copy he made a handwritten note which invited us to add more names: “Jerald & Sandra—Here is a list of Christian groups or individuals that I typed up, who actively witness or work with Mormons. There might be some errors or changes—if you know of anyone else or different addresses et al, please let me know. Thanks and God bless Stan”

Mr. Fields sent this list to others and invited them to add additional names. He probably found it amusing that he could get critics of the Church to help him prepare his “enemies list.” In any case, when we learned that Fields was a spy we were able to use the same list to gather information concerning his dishonest activities. All we had to do was cut out the names and addresses from the list, tape them on an envelope and mail it, together with a request for information on Fields, to the parties involved. We received a good response from the people on the list. He had contacted a number of them and some had saved correspondence and made photocopies or turned the originals over to us. We also received information by telephone which added pieces to this intriguing puzzle.

One of the organizations Stan Fields penetrated is found as No. 11 on his list: “Mission to Mormons P.O. Box 322, Roy, Utah 84067.” Mission to Mormons was founded by Harry L. Ropp, a brilliant young man who seemed to have great potential for organization. In less than two years after he arrived in Utah Mr. Ropp became one of the most noted critics of Mormonism. In 1977 Inter Varsity Press published his book, The Mormon Papers, and in a short time thousands of copies were distributed throughout the country. Steven Mayfield’s first contact with Mission to Mormons apparently occurred when he wrote a letter to Harry L. Ropp on March 31, 1978, under his alias “Stan Fields.” In this letter he stated:

Dear Brother in Christ — I am an ex-Mormon for Jesus living here in the Ogden area. Recently I acquired a copy of your book “The Mormon Papers,” and found it very interesting. I am writing to you, to inquire some information about your organization and work. . . . Do you lecture or offer classes on the study of Mormonism? What is your present feelings on the Spaulding theory? Do you have any connection with any of the other Christian groups that work with the Mormons?

I hope to be able to meet you in the near future—as time and work permit. I . . . use my spare time witnessing about Christ (mostly to Mormons).

A few months later Harry Ropp’s dreams concerning “Mission to Mormons” were almost completely wiped out when his plane “apparently ran out of gas an[d] plunged onto the freeway last Thursday” (Salt Lake Tribune, September 6, 1978). After Hr. Ropp’s death it appeared that Mission to Mormons would go under, but his father (also named Harry Ropp) and others kept the work going. A few months after Harry Ropp’s death, and while the Mission was still in a very precarious situation, “Stan Fields submitted an application to be an “Associate Staff-Member.” On the application he listed “Jerald and Sandra Tanner” in the section for “personal references.” In the same application Stan Fields wrote:

Being an ex-Mormon and part of a group called “Ex-Mormons for Jesus” I feel that I can share my experiences, my knowledge and enormous material with others in witnessing to Mormons and guarding Christians against its falsehoods. I can also help with answering letters, filling orders etc.

Mr. Fields interest in “answering letters” and “filling orders” becomes especially important now that we know of his spying activities.

On March 20, 1979, Mr. “Fields” was accepted as an Associate Staff-Member, and at the time we interviewed him in the Church Office Building (July 16, 1980) he said: “. . . I’m on the staff of that [Mission to Mormons] . . .” Mr. Fields apparently did not get the acceptance with Mission to Mormons that he had hoped for because he was unable to list a phone number where he could be contacted.

Another organization found on the “enemies list” is Mormons For ERA. We asked Mr. Fields about this organization and he freely admitted that he was a member of the group. He went so far as to produce a card showing that he was a member and allowed us to obtain a photocopy of the document.
The President of Mormons For ERA is Sonia Johnson, an excommunicated Mormon who vigorously opposed the Church’s stand against ERA. The battle between Sonia Johnson and the Mormon Church has received a great deal of coverage in the national news media. It is little wonder, therefore, that Stan Fields would try to infiltrate her organization. According to Edward Decker, Stan Fields has a massive collection of material on Sonia Johnson. In a letter to Maurice Barnett, dated December 27, 1979, Stan Fields wrote: “P.S. You interested in the SONIA JOHNSON THING?? got a ton of articles on Her. It’s BIG NEWS Here in ZION!!”

Although Mr. Fields tried to penetrate a number of groups, his greatest effort seems to have been directed against J. Edward Decker, whose organization appears on the “enemies list” as “Saints Alive In Jesus P.O. Box 1076 Issaquah, Washington 98027.” In a letter to Paul Carden, written in the fall of 1979, Fields stated that he “visited Ed in July.” Fields apparently spent over a week at Decker’s home in Washington, and was able to obtain at least some of his mailing list by posing as an “Ex-Mormon For Jesus” who wanted to help enlighten the Mormon people.

At the time of the Mormon Conference in April, 1980, Mr. Decker published a two page article in the Home Section of the Salt Lake Tribune. It was entitled, To Moroni With Love. This article was published in a tract, but the Mormon Church leaders threatened to sue him because the picture of Moroni on the front resembled the cover of the Book of Mormon. Mr. Decker felt he could win the suit, but his publisher received a phone call stating that the Church was willing to pay $100,000 or more to stop publication.

Edward Decker, of course, capitulated and modified the cover. He now feels, however, that Stan Fields was in some way involved in relaying information to and from Church leaders about this matter. That Stan Fields wanted to be closely involved with Decker’s operations is evident from the following: On September 13, 1979, Decker was to speak at the Ascension Lutheran Church in Ogden. According to Claudette Bingham, Stan Fields prepared a rather large number of advertisements for Decker’s meeting and mailed them out. Mr. Fields told Claudette Bingham that it cost him $50.00 to mail out the advertisements—which would amount to over 300 copies at 15¢ each. There is no way to know whether he actually mailed out all of these, but one thing seems certain, he was trying to make an impression with Decker and his fellow workers. It is hardly any coincidence, then, that “Stan Fields” requested permission to set up a chapter of Decker’s organization in Utah. Since it was apparent that eventually a branch would be set up, Fields wanted to be in on the ground floor. This type of thing reminds us of tactics used by the FBI with regard to the Ku Klux Klan: “Covert techniques used in this COINTELPRO included creating new Klan chapters to be controlled by Bureau informants . . .” (Intelligence Activities and the Rights of Americans, Book II, page 87)

Mr. Fields had an interest in many other groups and individuals and would go to great lengths to try to demonstrate how opposed he was to Mormonism. In a letter to Laytane Colvett Scott, dated July 22, 1978, he wrote:

Not too long ago I read a copy of the Ex-Mormons for Jesus REPORT, and it mentioned your letter seeking information from ex-Mormons. So I am taking this time to respond and help in any way, your proposed book.

My name is STAN FIELD, I am 24 years old and presently live in Ogden, Utah . . .

When I started to attend college (U.C. Berkeley) I became social involved with the growing protest against society. I tried drugs, and all those things related with the “hippie” element. During this time I gave up my church activity, and denounced Mormonism, mainly due to the Negro priesthood denial, and what I believed was church involvement in politics and business fraud.

While at Cal Berkeley, I came across some students involved with the Campus Crusade for Christ who shared Jesus with me. Their testimonies of Christ’s love and their patience with me enabled me to come to Christ, and claim him as my personal Lord and Savior. After this I became involved on Campus with various Christian groups and began studying my original faith. I read some of the Tanner’s material and became thoroughly convinced that the Mormon cult the church of my youth, the church of my ancestors was wrong, false, and Satan inspired . . . the love and patience of some Christians and the quiet workings of the Lord touched my heart and made me realize I was [a] sinner before God and needed Christ as my Savior. I realized that good works and faithful church attendance were not going to save me from hell and eternal damnation. Finding the Lord was the greatest thing that has ever happened to me. It gave me the most happiness that any man could ever receive, and it enabled me to see the falseness of man-made religion (like Mormonism) which leads men to hell.

In another letter addressed, “Dear Brother in Christ,” Fields said that his eyes were opened “to see that I was involved in a godless—false religion—”

USING CHURCH EQUIPMENT

To carry out his diabolical plan to obtain information, Stan Fields used a type of bait which he referred to as his “goodies.” He would do research in newspapers and magazines to find articles critical of Mormonism. Then he would make photocopies of these articles and send them to critics of the Mormon Church in various parts of the country. Fields apparently began this practice while he was still working for the FBI in California. In a letter to Melaine Layton, whom he refers to as, “Dear Sweet Sister in Christ,” Stan Fields wrote:

I make it a practice to go to the San Francisco library at least once a week to get articles from the Salt Lake Tribune and other papers about the Mormon cult. Perhaps you would be interested in copies of some of these articles? Let me know and I will send you some. (Letter dated October 11, 1976)

The following year (October 6, 1977) Fields wrote to Mrs. Layton:

I still spend any of my spare time in the libraries going thru newspapers and magazines . . . (If you want articles on any matter, I [will] send them to you, since I probably have them or can get them.). . . Let me know [if] I can send you anything or do anything for you . . .

After Fields moved to Utah, his base of operations became the Church Office Building and he used both the Historical Department and the Genealogical Department. In a letter to Wally Tope, dated December 19, 1978, Fields commented: “If you’d like, I can provide you with material from L.D.S. Historical Dept or articles . . .” In a letter to Paul Carden, apparently written in September or October 1979, Stan Fields made these statements:

When I first started requesting things out of the archives, I had an hour interview with Don Schmidt (1977) at which time he was told by me, that I had been excommunicated. I have not been restricted or denied anything (so far) But have been watched closely and given BIG HINTS that if I do anything “against” the church, I will be banned from the library . . . I have been carefully watched—but not yet “kicked out.”

The reader will remember that in a letter dated March 31, 1980, Fields claimed that he met Brent Metcalfe “last summer at the Historical Dept. Tom Truitt . . . introduced me to him . . .”
However this may be, Fields used the Historical Department as well as the Genealogical Department to carry out his deceitful work. In a letter to Paul Carden, postmarked July 15, 1979, Fields indicated he would send “some clippings once a month . . ." In another letter he commented: “Hope you got my package of clippings ok. I’ll try to send you some each month — if I’m in town and can get copies made.” In still another letter, postmarked July 11, 1980, Fields wrote: “Greetings and Salutations in the name of Jesus! Here are some more goodies for you . . .” Fields was providing without charge packets of photocopies on a regular basis to a number of people. John L. Smith, who is also on the “enemies list,” claims that Fields “sent clippings perhaps half a dozen times in recent months” (Letter dated August 6, 1980). On July 11, 1980, Fields mailed Wally Tope a package containing 24 pages of photocopies, a letter and an order for $10 worth of material. The postage alone for this package was 93¢. A question, of course, arises as to who was paying for all the photocopying and mailing. Was Steven Mayfield or the Mormon Church paying the bill? Since we found that Steven Mayfield’s job in the Genealogical Department was in “Copy Supplies,” it would have been very hard for him to deny that the packets of “goodies were photocopied on Mormon Church equipment. In the taped interview, Mayfield acknowledged that he was not paying for all the photocopies he was making at the Church Office Building:

MAYFIELD — Sometimes I would copy up there and not pay for it, which means I’m in heck with them . . .
TANNER — On this copying without paying, you could . . . do probably as much of that as you wanted couldn’t ya?
MAYFIELD — Yea, unless they caught you at it.
TANNER — So we could almost infer, though you say they [the Church] didn’t pay for it that—
MAYFIELD — I paid for some of it . . . (Taped Recorded Interview, July 16, 1980)

It is interesting to note that almost a month after Mayfield was caught red-handed in his spying activities, he was observed making photocopies of letters from Mormon critics in the Historical Department of the Church. Church Security guard Brent Metcalfe was also present with him in the Historical Department, but we have no evidence that he gave him photocopies.

In any case, Mayfield must have incurred numerous other expenses in his deceitful activities. Besides the money spent on his vast collection of anti-Mormon materials and the mailing out of packets of “goodies,” Fields seems to have made long distance phone calls and traveled to see different ex-Mormons. For instance, according to Kurt Salfrank, Fields spent at least ten days visiting Edward Decker in Issaquah, Washington. In a letter to Wally Tope, postmarked July 11, 1980, Fields indicated he was planning another trip to Washington:

Are you going to be at the Seattle Wash. temple dedication??
I’m thinking of going up there & be with the Deckers in whatever they do — haven’t heard if Ed has anything planned. I’m sure Mormons for ERA will be there with their plane & Banners.

In the application Fields filled out for Mission to Mormons the question was asked: “How many miles from home would it be possible for you to travel to Meet with someone who needs help with Mormonism?” Fields answered as follows:

I travel throughout Idaho, Nevada into Calif, and parts of Utah, as part of job

The question that comes to our mind is this: how could a man who works only 30 hours a week at the Genealogical Department of the Church and goes to school at Weber State College afford to travel in these states to “Meet with someone who needs help with Mormonism”?

We do not have the room in this issue of the Messenger to deal at length with Stan Fields’ spying activities, but we have prepared a new booklet entitled, Unmasking A Mormon Spy: The Story of Stan Fields. In this booklet we show that Steven Mayfield not only spied on ex-Mormons, but he also tried to cause dissension. This booklet also presents new evidence that the Council of Fifty actually anointed Joseph Smith as King on Earth, and that Heber J. Grant, the seventh President of the Church who lived until 1945, was initiated into this secret organization. Unmasking a Mormon Spy: The Story of Stan Fields sells for only $1.00 a copy. The quantity prices are 5 for $4.00 — 10 for $6.00.

SOMETHING TO HIDE?

Some of those who would defend the tactics used by Steven Mayfield assert that we would not make such a big issue over the matter unless we have something to hide. Actually, just the opposite is true, if we really had something to hide, we would want to remain quiet about the matter and just let the whole thing blow over. After all, we believe that we have been victims of electronic surveillance and other forms of spying, and if we were involved in any wrongdoing we would certainly be afraid that would come out as we bring this whole matter to light. Now, while it would be untrue to say we have no fear of a direct confrontation with the Church, this anxiety does not come because of any wrong doing on our part, but simply from the knowledge that the Church has a great deal of power that could be directed against us. On the other hand, we know that God is greater than all and we have great comfort in that fact. Almost a year before the strange voice came on our telephone, we wrote the following:

Although the Watergate scandal has really hurt our country, there is a real lesson that we all can learn from it—that is, that it does not pay to try and cover up our sins. The Bible warns: “ . . . be sure your sin will find you out” (Numbers 32:23). It is true that we can often hide our sins from men, but Jesus tells us that we cannot hide them from God: “ . . . there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known” (Matthew 10:26).

Our former President must have firmly believed that his tapes would never come to light, but through some very strange circumstances they did become public and caused his downfall. This is certainly a tragic example, and we cannot help but feel sorry for him and for his family. Nevertheless, it teaches us that even the President of the United States does not have the power to cover up his sins. It is certainly ironical that Richard Nixon should be trapped by his own tapes. The Bible, however, tells us that we all stand in jeopardy of being convicted by our own words at the judgment: “But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. “ For by thy words thou shalt be condemned” (Matthew 12:36-37).

Although we do not feel that God has a secret tape recorder which he uses to bug us with, we do believe He has knowledge of everything through his Holy Spirit. The Bible says that God not only knows our every word and action but also the “thoughts and intents” of our heart:

“For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.”
“Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do” (Hebrews 4:12-13).

In 1 Corinthians 4:5 we read that the Lord “will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: . . .” Romans 2:16 tells us that “God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.”

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus it is clear that after death our memory will be restored and that if we have continued in sin and selfishness it will condemn us (see Luke 16:25). The Bible tells us that we are all sinners and in need of God’s forgiveness. To refuse to face this fact is to live a life which is founded on cover-up, and this will eventually prove disastrous to our souls. In the story of the Pharisee and the publican Jesus shows that we can appear to be very religious, but if we have not acknowledged that we are sinners in need of God’s grace we are still under condemnation.

Now, while the Bible teaches that it is impossible for us to cover up our own sins, it does state that God Himself can cover them up if we will turn to him and ask for forgiveness: . . .

In Psalms 32:1 we read: “Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.” This is a cover-up that really works. In Psalms 103:12 we find this statement: “As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.” . . . Those who have received the Lord into their hearts know the great joy and peace that comes from accepting God’s forgiveness. The Bible says:

“Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away: Behold, all things are become new.” (2 Corinthians 5:17)

(Turner, Mormons and the C.I.A.)

As we indicated earlier in this issue, Wallace Turner was included on Stan Fields’ “enemies list.” Mr. Turner is a former Pulitzer Prize winning reporter who works for the New York Times. Ever since Turner began criticizing the Mormon Church for its anti-black doctrine, Church leaders have been very concerned about him. The FBI document which appears on page 3 of this issue reveals that Turner’s articles “became of so much concern to church authorities at Salt Lake City that they requested” some undisclosed person or persons to “intercede with the editor of the ‘New York Times’” so that articles unfavorable to the Church would not be printed. Mr. Turner has told us that he believes that pressure was exerted on the Times, but he feels that it did not affect the policy of the newspaper as the FBI document indicates.

In any case, the Mormon leaders have considered Wallace Turner to be a serious threat. In 1966 Turner published his book The Mormon Establishment. Right after this book came out, another book by a non-Mormon appeared which many people feel was written in an attempt to counter the influence of The Mormon Establishment. This book was written by Robert Mullen and was entitled, The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today. Writing in the Book Review Section of the New York Times for October 23, 1966, John Cogley observed:

Forty-eight pages of the Turner book, for example, are devoted to what the author terms the Mormons’ “anti-Negro doctrine.” Mr. Mullen glides past the same doctrine in one-half of a compound sentence: . . . Mr. Mullen is too obvious about avoiding the “back corners” of Mormonism to put the Gentile reader wholly at ease. . . . It is known that Mr. Turner’s earlier newspaper accounts of the Mormon dilemmas upset some in the Church’s hierarchy. It does seem not altogether coincidental, then, that these two books should be turning up at the same time.

Although it is true that Mr. Mullen was a non-Mormon, he was hardly an unbiased observer. As a matter of fact his company handled public relations for the Mormon Church. As we indicated earlier, the notorious spy Howard Hunt worked for the Mullen Company while Robert Bennett served as president, and the Watergate break-in and other illegal surveillance activities were discussed there. The fact that the Mormon Church would use the Mullen Company to handle public relations becomes extremely interesting when we learn that this company provided cover for CIA agents. J. Anthony Lukas wrote:

. . . when Mullen established its “own” office in Stockholm in 1962, it was staffed by two CIA men—James Everett and Jack Kindschi—who pretended to be working on a study for General Foods. . . . while they were actually debriefing Soviet and Chinese defectors. . . . Kindschi moved for a time to Mexico, City, again under Mullen cover, while Everett established a Mullen office in Amsterdam. . . . there is evidence that Mullen & Company may have served a similar role at home. (Nightmare: The Underside of the Nixon Years, New York, 1976, page 38)

It is interesting to note that we had corresponded with CIA agent James Everett for a number of years. In fact, he had written to us from Sweden on January 20, 1965, on Mullen & Company stationary (see photograph in Mormon Spies, Hughes, and the C.I.A., page 14) and had requested copies of our publications on Mormonism. When we first confronted James Everett with the question of whether he had worked for the CIA, he denied any involvement. Later, however, we found evidence that Everett had served as an agent. On May 29, 1976, we decided that we would confront Mr. Everett again with this important question. This time we had the evidence and Mr. Everett frankly confessed that he had been under “deep cover” while he was with the Mullen Co. and that this fact had come out in testimony before the Nedzi committee. The findings of the Nedzi committee have been published under the title, Inquiry into the Alleged Involvement of the Central Intelligence Agency in the Watergate and Ellsberg Matters: Hearings Before the Special Subcommittee on Intelligence of the Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Ninety-Fourth Congress, First Session. These hearings not only throw light on James Everett, but they also show the cover-up which Robert Mullen and Robert Bennett engaged in after the Watergate break-in when they tried to keep their company’s relationship with the CIA a secret. One CIA memo, written March 1, 1973, contains some enlightening information:

1. Mr. Robert R. Mullen . . . telephoned CCS on the morning of February 28 to advise us that Sandy Smith, a reporter from Time Magazine, was in the Mullen office late on February 27. Smith started off by saying that “a source in the Justice Department” had informed him that the company “is a front for CIA.” Mr. Mullen denied the allegation stoutly, said the company clients are all legitimate and offered to let Smith inspect the company books. . . .

3. Mullen told Smith that Bob Bennett, partner of Mr. Mullen who was on a business trip to California, really knew most about Hunt’s later period of Mullen employment. . . .

It was agreed that Mr. Colby would recommend to the DCI Mr. Schlesinger, that Messrs. Mullen and Bennett be allowed to read the June 21, 1972 memorandum to the FBI and that they be asked to continue to deny any allegation of association with the Agency, and state in effect that there was no relationship, and if there were, it, of course, would not be admitted. . . .
12. Mr. [deleted] and Mr. Mullen met near the Watergate and proceeded to Mr. Mullen’s apartment in The Watergate through a rear entrance to the Watergate. Mr. Bennett joined them shortly and both read the memorandum. . . . They said they would continue to deny any association with the Agency other than the already acknowledged relationship with the Cuban Freedom Committee.

13. . . . Mr. Bennett said that he recently spent four hours in Los Angeles being interviewed by a Newsweek reporter and had convinced him that the Mullen Company was not involved with the Watergate Affair. Mr. Bennett rather proudly related that he is responsible for the article “Whispers about Colson” in the March 5 issue of Newsweek. Mr. Bennett does not believe the company will be bothered much more by the news media . . . Mr. Bennett said also that he has been feeding stories to Bob Woodward of the Washington Post with the understanding that there be no attribution to Bennett. Woodward is suitably grateful for the fine stories and by-lines which he gets and protects Bennett (and the Mullen Company). . . . Mr. Bennett mentioned the February 12, 1973 meeting among himself, Mullen and [deleted], when he stated his opinion that the Ervin Committee investigating the Watergate incident would not involve the company. He said that, if necessary, he could have his father, Senator Bennett of Utah, intercede with Senator Ervin. His conclusion then was that he could handle the Ervin Committee if the Agency can handle Howard Hunt. . . .

14. . . . Bennett believes he and his Agency affiliations will not be raised again. He has the Ervin Committee shut off and feels the Agency has the responsibility to persuade Howard Hunt to avoid revealing what he knows of the history of cover arrangements with the company. Bennett and Mullen further suggested that the Agency “plug the leak” in the FBI and/or Department of Justice. (CIA memo, dated March 1, 1973, as cited in Inquiry into the Alleged Involvement of the Central Intelligence Agency in the Watergate and Ellsberg Matters, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1975, pages 1073-1075)

In his testimony before the Nedzi committee, Robert Bennett gave this information:

Mr. Nedzi. When was your last contact with the CIA on any matter prior to July 10?

Mr. Bennett. The last one?

Mr. Nedzi. Yes; prior to then?

Mr. Bennett. I cannot recall.

Mr. Nedzi. Had you any general idea prior to the Watergate break-in, for instance, Mr. Bennett?

Mr. Bennett. Oh, indeed, yes. We were having discussions with Mr. Lukoskie about the transfer of Mr. Everett. The suggestion had been made to us that it might be necessary for the CIA to transfer him to [deleted]. . . .

Mr. Nedzi. Did you ever receive any instructions from anyone in the CIA to misrepresent or to refuse to represent the truth to the press?

Mr. Bennett. In the July 10 meeting with Mr. Lukoskie when I told him that I denied to the press that Mullen had any CIA ties, he expressed approval of that. He urged me to continue to take that posture. . . .

Mr. Bennett. Although we did not make any money out of our relationship with the CIA, . . . it was of some value to us as a firm to be able to say to our clients that we had an office in Europe and that we had an office in Asia. This gave a little extra stature to the firm.

On occasion, Mr. Everett, while in [deleted] did perform services for some of our clients. The CIA was very happy to have him do that. It added to the legitimacy of his cover. . . . during the 9 years that Mr. Everett was on our payroll, we formed a close personal bond with him. We felt that he was not being given the amount of personal consideration by the Agency that he deserves. . . .

Mr. Fisher. You are an innocent victim. You happened to hire this man [Hunt?] and you became involved in that respect. I would be interested to know what effect during this time period that has occurred since the Watergate break in, as to what effect this has had on your public relations business?

Mr. Bennett. It has destroyed it. The Mullen Co. does not exist anymore. All of the clients that we had at the time of the break in, they are gone with one exception. That is the Hughes organization. . . .

Mr. Nedzi. At one point Mr. Eisenstadt, in his memo, makes reference to a statement allegedly made by you, “*  that they take care of Hunt and you take care of Ervin.” Would you comment on that statement?

Mr. Bennett. That is an accurate statement. I am not sure the way it appeared in the paper is accurate. There have been other phrases.

Mr. Nedzi. The statement in the memorandum was, “His conclusion then was that he could handle the Ervin committee if the Agency can handle Howard Hunt.”

Mr. Bennett. Yes, that is accurate. The reference to the newspaper to my father was not accurate. We are talking about a coverup, Mr. Chairman. We are talking about a coverup of the Mullen Co.'s relationship with the CIA overseas. As I explained this morning, I have consistently attempted, prior to the time that it was blown by CBS News, to keep this relationship dark. I was convinced that the Ervin committee would not expose that relationship. I was not convinced that Howard would—that Howard might, very easily, get on the stand and, for some purpose connected with his own defense, expose Mr. Everett in [deleted.]

I was saying to the Agency . . . I am satisfied that the Ervin committee can be handled in terms of covering up the relationship between the Mullen Co. and the CIA. I said, “I cannot handle Howard. That is your responsibility.” That is the message that I was giving the CIA. (Inquiry into the Alleged Involvement of the Central Intelligence Agency in the Watergate and Ellsberg Matters, pages 1081-1084, 1105, 1106)

Robert Bennett, of course, knew that if the whole story came out it would bring embarrassment to both the Mormon Church and the CIA. In spite of his efforts to cover up the matter, the truth became known, and Jack Anderson, who is himself a member of the Mormon Church, revealed that Bennett knew of the “White House burglary-bugging team” before the Watergate break-in was discovered. For a more complete statement about Bennett’s cover-up see Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A., pages 35-39.

At any rate, we think the most significant thing about James A. Everett’s confession that he was a secret agent for the CIA is the new light it throws on Robert R. Mullen’s book about the Mormons, The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today. This is the book which the Mormon newspaper, Deseret News, called “one of the most complete, objective and friendly treatments of the Mormon story every done by an ‘outsider’” (Church Section, September 24, 1966). After we found that the Mullen Co. provided cover for the CIA, we began to suspect that Mr. Mullen’s book might have some connection to the CIA. Since the investigation by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the connection between the CIA and the publishing world has become known. The New York Times for April 27, 1976, reported that “Prior to 1967, the Central Intelligence Agency sponsored, subsidized or produced over 1,000 books: approximately 25 percent of them in English. In 1967 alone, the C.I.A. published or subsidized over 200 books, . . .”

The Mullen book on the Mormons appeared in the fall of 1966, and was printed by “Doubleday & Company.” It is interesting to note that the Senate Select Committee found that another book “actually written by C.I.A. agents” was unwittingly published by Doubleday.
This, of course, does not prove, that the CIA had anything to do with Mullen’s book about the Mormons, but when we remember that Mullen provided cover for the CIA, we cannot help but be a little suspicious of any book which came from his public relations firm. Now, when we add to this the fact that CIA agent James Everett worked on foreign editions of the book on the Mormons the whole thing becomes even more intriguing. We became aware of Mr. Everett’s involvement with the Mullen book when we first talked to him on the telephone October 7, 1974. At that time, of course, he was denying any connection between himself and the CIA. Now that we learn that Mr. Everett was really a secret agent, this takes on new significance. Why would a CIA spy be working on a book for the Mormons? Mr. Everett later explained that this work was just part of his cover and that he had no connection with the CIA. In other words, he needed a legitimate project to work on so that he could cover up his secret activities. This could very well be true, but then how can we be certain that it was not also a part of his CIA role? How do we know where to draw the line? In a conversation on May 29, 1976, Mr. Everett made a very revealing statement concerning his work on the Mullen book. He said that before the various translations were made, it was necessary to make certain changes to make the book fit each country and that he helped make these revisions. In other words, he had a part in the decision making process as to what should appear in each translation of the book. These revisions were then approved by Mr. Mullen.

The situation we have, then, is this: Robert Mullen, whose company provided cover for the CIA and helped to prepare literature for groups connected with the CIA, wrote a book promoting the interests of the Mormon Church. It was published by a company which had previously been unwittingly used by the CIA to print a book written by CIA agents. After Mr. Mullen’s book about the Mormons appeared in English, it was translated into foreign languages and a secret agent of the CIA, James A. Everett, helped to make revisions in the text to fit the various countries. Because of these strange circumstances, we cannot help but raise the question as to whether the CIA has some interest in the programs of the Mormon Church. In the book Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A., pages 55 and 68, we pointed out that some former CIA agents believe that the Mormon missionary system is sometimes used to provide cover. Mr. Everett claims that this is “a lot of hogwash.” He indicated that the CIA would never use such young men. We, of course, agree that most missionaries would be too young, but there are certainly many that are old enough. Then, too, there are mission presidents who serve for a longer period. Patrick J. McGarvey, who used to work for the CIA, gave this information in his book, C.I.A.: The Myth and the Madness, page 57: “Deep cover knows few bounds. . . . A friend found himself back in the Mormon mission in Hong Kong after his training.” The Church’s educational system and genealogical program could also be very useful to the CIA. In our book Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A., we explored the possibility of a relationship between Mormonism and the CIA. Jim Kostman, of the Assassination Information Bureau, an organization which has done research on the murder of John F. Kennedy, became so interested in this possibility that he flew out from Massachusetts to talk with us. Mr. Kostman told us he interviewed a man who had been involved with the CIA. This man claimed that when he was trying to locate a piece of equipment belonging to the CIA, he was told that it was on loan to the Mormon Church Genealogical Library, and that the Church did a great deal for the CIA. Although we have no information linking Steven Mayfield with the CIA, it is interesting to note that he worked with the Genealogical Department when he was caught in his spying activities.

However this may be, we feel that the publication of Mullen’s book was probably an attempt to offset Wallace Turner’s criticism of the Church in the New York Times and The Mormon Establishment. Mr. Turner, for instance, stressed the great wealth of the Church. In the “Author’s Forward” to his book, Mr. Mullen talks of “the world’s press” giving “a somewhat overblown idea of the Church’s business activities, . . .” Mr. Everett denied there was any connection between the two books, but he did say that Mr. Mullen’s book grew out of an attempt to counter criticism of the Church. He also stated in a letter written October 15, 1974, that Earl Minderman of the Mullen Company had been “answering critical media reports, . . .”

Since the book The Latter-day Saints: The Mormons Yesterday and Today was written by a man who prepared material for organizations linked to the CIA, and since a secret agent worked on foreign editions, we cannot help but suspect that it is in some way connected with the interests of the CIA.

We feel that this whole matter needs further investigation to determine if there has been a secret attempt to link church and state through the CIA. For more information on this important subject we recommend our book, Mormon Spies, Hughes and the C.I.A. This book sells for $2.95 a copy.
Communists In Zion?
FBI DOCUMENTS TO BE SOUGHT IN COURT

In the last issue of the Messenger (November 1980) we pointed out that an employee of the Mormon Church by the name of Steven Mayfield was caught spying on us under the alias “Stan Fields.” After some investigation we learned that Mr. Mayfield was an employee of the FBI at the time he originally assumed the alias. Because of Mayfield’s involvement with the FBI, we requested under the Freedom of Information Act that the FBI provide us with all records relating to us or Modern Microfilm Company. After a long delay, FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C., provided us with some documents. A great deal of material, however, had been blacked out and eighteen full pages were “withheld entirely.” In one of the documents, dated October 4, 1974, a full page of material has been blacked out. This revealing information appeared just after the suppressed portion:

Salt Lake City files further disclose that on 4/30/70 [one and one-third lines blacked out] reported that JERALD J. [sic] TANNER and his wife, SANDRA LUCILLE TANNER, moved to Salt Lake City from California several years ago, that TANNER operates the Modern Microfilm Company and that [one-third line blacked out] had told [one-fourth line blacked out] that the TANNERS had been circulating petitions against the Church and had been “trouble makers.”

This report indicated that the “Salt Lake City” Division of the FBI had a file or files concerning us with material dating back to at least April 30, 1970. We requested this information under the Freedom of Information Act. The Salt Lake City Division did provide us with a document, with a number of items blacked out, which seems to be the original source for material found in the Washington, D.C. records (see photograph of this document on page 3). This document throws an eerie light on the whole situation, for it reveals that we had been secretly accused of being communists:

On [material suppressed] telephonically advised that captioned individuals, husband and wife, who reside at 1350 South West Temple, Salt Lake City, Utah, are allegedly communists. [material suppressed] stated [material suppressed] had been advised the TANNERS moved to Salt Lake City from California several years ago and that JERALD J. TANNER operates the Modern Microfilm Company. [material suppressed] also stated [material suppressed] had told the TANNERS have been circulating petitions against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and that they have been “trouble-makers” in that respect. [material suppressed] had been contacted by one of the [material suppressed] and that [material suppressed] did not know the source of the original information [material suppressed] could furnish no further pertinent information in this regard.

SKOUSEN’S PARANOIA

The malicious charge that we were communists was probably the result of scare tactics used by W. Cleon Skousen, author of the book, The Naked Communist. Mr. Skousen was at one time an agent for the FBI and was devoted to J. Edgar Hoover. On January 25, 1981, the Salt Lake Tribune reported that FBI records concerning

A picture of W. Cleon Skousen, who said communists were behind criticism of Church.

Mormon Church President David O. McKay were obtained under the Freedom of Information Act:

[material suppressed] file shows that in March 1956, McKay wanted to award Hoover an honorary doctor’s degree from church-owned Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah. McKay decided Skousen should first call Hoover informally.

According to the same article, Hoover was too busy at the time, and “Skousen says now . . . Hoover had told him ‘he would retire the next year and then accept the (BYU) degree. . . .’ ”

After Skousen left the FBI he served as Chief of Police in Salt Lake City and as professor of ancient scriptures at the Church’s Brigham Young University. He now directs the Freeman Institute—an organization which many people believe is set up to obtain political power for the Mormon Church. Ezra Taft Benson, next in line to be President of the Mormon Church, is one of Skousen’s chief supporters.

In any case, about six months prior to the time we were reported to the FBI, a communist newspaper launched an attack on the Mormon Church. A photographic reprint of this article was distributed by members of the Mormon Church together with a response written by W. Cleon Skousen. (Incidentally, this is the only communist article we can ever remember reading. It is certainly ironic that it was circulated by members of the Mormon Church.) Skousen’s response was entitled, “Communist Press Calls For Attack On LDS Church,” and contained an emotional appeal to resist “the attack”:

Attached hereto is a reprint of an article from an official Communist Paper called the World Magazine which is the Sunday Supplement to the Daily World and the People’s World. This article appeared in the issue of October 18, 1969 . . .

Anyone familiar with Communist tactics will recognize that this is no ordinary article. It is a signal to the Communist “transmission belt” to go to work. There are people strategically placed in the bulk of the opinion-molding facilities of the United States who watch for signals like this in the Communist press. . . . Communist signals are therefore accepted by the entire cadre of left-wing collectivists as the logical targets for a united attack. The Communists refer to this large group of fellow-travelers as their “transmission belt.” . . .

For several months the volume and intensity of criticism against the LDS Church has been mounting. The Communist Party has apparently decided to take over the leadership of this agitation and give it financial and institutional support. If the pattern follows past incidents of this kind, we may expect to see the so-called legitimate press, radio and TV begin a whole series of “reports” on all types of subjects related to the LDS Church. It will be explained that the LDS Church has suddenly become “news.” All of these “reports” will be handled in a way which makes the Church look rich, priest-ridden, racist, super-authoritarian and conservative to the point of being archaically reactionary.

In the past, organizations selected for this kind of assault have usually attempted to ignore the attack until the damage has become practically irreparable. A more responsive approach such as that followed by J. Edgar Hoover when the FBI is attacked has proven more effective in blunting the impact of such campaigns.

Since we had been questioning the LDS Church’s policy with regard to blacks not being allowed the priesthood and had criticized the church for many years because of its attempt to become rich, it is only logical to conclude that Skousen and many of his uncritical followers would suspect we were communists. At any rate, in the March 1970 issue of the Messenger we published an article, concerning the racist doctrines of the Mormon Church. Although we also printed an article condemning violence in the same issue, this newsletter may very well have led to the charge that there is reason to believe that we were communists. The FBI received its information concerning us on April 30, 1970.

DANGEROUS SITUATION

To be reported as a communist during the late 1960s and early 1970s was a very serious matter. At that time the FBI had a secret program known as COINTELPRO. This program was investigated by Frank Church’s “Senate Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations With Respect to Intelligence Activities.” In the Final Report, we find this information:

> The abusive techniques used by the FBI in COINTELPRO from 1956 to 1971 included violations of both federal and state statutes prohibiting mail fraud, wire fraud, incitement to violence, sending obscene material through the mail, and extortion. More fundamentally, the harassment of innocent citizens engaged in lawful forms of political expression did serious injury to the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of speech and the right of the people to assemble peaceably and to petition the government for a redress of grievances. (Intelligence Activities and the Rights of Americans, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1976, Book II, page 139)

The FBI, CIA and IRS were all involved in some very questionable activities at the time we were reported to be communists. The Senate Select Committee reported:

> United States intelligence agencies have investigated a vast number of American citizens and domestic organizations. FBI headquarters alone has developed over 500,000 domestic intelligence files, and these have been augmented by additional files at FBI Field Offices. . . . Nearly a quarter of a million first class letters were opened and photographed in the United States by the CIA between 1953–1973, producing a CIA computerized index of nearly one and one-half million names. . . . 300,000 individuals were indexed to a CIA computer system and separate files were created on approximately 7,200 Americans and over 100 domestic groups during the course of CIA’s Operation CHAOS (1967–1975). . . . Intelligence files on more than 11,000 individuals and groups were created by the Internal Revenue Service between 1969 and 1973 and tax investigations were started on the basis of political rather than tax criteria. . . .

> Intelligence agencies have collected vast amounts of information about the intimate details of citizens’ lives and about their participation in legal and peaceful political activities. Targets of intelligence activity have included political adherents of the right and the left, ranging from activist to casual supporters. Investigations have been directed against proponents of racial causes and women’s rights, outspoken apostles of nonviolence and racial harmony; establishment politicians; religious groups; and advocates of new life-styles . . .

> (b) Illegal or Improper Means. — The surveillance which we investigated was not only vastly excessive in breadth and a basis for degrading counterintelligence actions, but was also often conducted by illegal or improper means. . . .

> (3) Since the early 1930’s, intelligence agencies have frequently wiretapped and bugged American citizens without the benefit of judicial warrant . . . .

> (5) Warrentless break-ins have been conducted by intelligence agencies since World War II. During the 1960’s alone the FBI and CIA conducted hundreds of break-ins, many against American citizens and domestic organizations. In some cases, these break-ins were to install microphones; in other cases, they were to steal such items as membership lists from organizations considered “subversive” by the Bureau. (Ibid, pages 6, 7, 12 and 13)

In the November 1980 issue of the Messenger we indicated that there is very good reason to believe that we were subjected to electronic surveillance on November 6, 1975. We do not know, however, if the intelligence world had anything to do with this. The FBI has refused to investigate this matter.

CIA DELAYS RESPONSE

In the November 1980 issue of the Messenger we demonstrated that there is reason to believe that there is a close relationship between the CIA and the Mormon Church. The Church’s public relations were handled by a firm connected with the CIA at the time of the Watergate break-in, and CIA agent James Everett actually helped in preparing foreign editions of a book which was favorable to the Church. Because of the CIA’s obvious interest in those thought to be communists and because of its relationship with the Mormon Church, we suspected that it might also have records concerning us. Our attempt to find out has been extremely frustrating. Although the Freedom of Information Act was supposed to prevent long delays in obtaining information, the CIA has stalled for months. On October 23, 1980, the CIA indicated that “before we may begin processing your request, we must receive from you a notarized statement as explained above.” This was provided and on November 16, 1980, the CIA said it was “processing your request and will provide you with the results under the Privacy Act as soon as possible.” On December 8, 1980, we were sent another letter which stated that “it is not possible to give you a firm estimate of when your request will be completed. . . . We also regret to inform you that your request for information on the Modern Microfilm Company was inadvertently overlooked . . . We will first need same verification from you indicating that you indeed represent Modern Microfilm Company.” Finally, on January 21, 1981, we were sent a letter which said: “Since we will be unable to respond within the 10 working days stipulated by the Act, it is your right to construe this as a denial, subject to appeal to the CIA Information Review Committee. It would seem more reasonable, however, for us to continue processing your request and to respond as soon as feasible. Any denials of records could be appealed at that time.”

Since this appeared to be another means of stalling, we have appealed the matter and will take it into the United States District Court if we do not obtain results within a reasonable period.

COURT ACTION

As we indicated earlier, the FBI blacked out many portions of the documents concerning us and has “withheld entirely” eighteen full pages. We felt this was an unwarranted suppression of material and appealed the decision. On November 19, 1980, the Office of Privacy and Information Appeals sent us a letter denying the appeal and stating that “None of the information being withheld is appropriate for discretionary release.” Because we question the right of the FBI to withhold this information and since it is our only recourse, we have decided to take the matter into the United States District Court.

In taking this action we do not want our motives to be misunderstood. We believe that both the FBI and the CIA are necessary for the good of our nation. We also feel that these organizations should have power to conduct legitimate investigations against criminals and subversives. Our only complaint is that in some instances they have gone beyond the power granted to them under the law. We feel that the FBI and CIA should be exemplary in their conduct and should not be used by any individual, church or group to promote their own objectives.

However this may be, the attempt to link us to communism or any other subversive or illegal activities has been a complete failure. We can boldly demand the records because we know that we have nothing to hide.

STAND BY US!

Over the years we have found that one of the greatest weapons the Mormon Church has is fear. Because of the size and power of the Church many people refuse to stand up and be counted. In revealing the story of Steven Mayfield’s spying activities and the relationship of the Church to the CIA, we know that we have caused many people to fear that they could also become targets for surveillance. This fear has probably led some people to back off and withhold support from the important work in which we are engaged. This is a time, however, when we really need support. If we lose many customers because of the spying situation it could prove fatal to the work. While it is probably true that some people would go to great lengths to stop our work, it is doubtful that they are going to pay much attention to those who support us. To become paranoid about the situation is to play right into the Church’s hands. Skousen would have people believe that the communists are behind those who oppose Mormonism, but we can fall into the same type of trap if we tend to see a Mormon spy behind every bush. This would have a tendency to greatly damage the progress of the work. The Bible admonishes: “For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, . . .” (2 Timothy 1:7-8).

Many false rumors have been started to counteract our work. Some Mormons, for instance, have put forth the story that the work we are engaged in is very profitable. One woman wrote: “. . . you are getting rich on poor people’s money . . . Someone needs to unmask you and your growing bank acct.” Strange as it may seem, the Mormons are not the only ones putting forth false rumors. It was reported to us that some Protestants believe that we have sold out to the Mormon Church for $2,000,000. The truth of the matter is that we have no savings account and have had to borrow several thousand dollars just to make it through the year. Our royalties from Moody Press for the sale of The Changing World of Mormonism during 1980 will probably all be used to pay back these loans. It should be obvious to anyone who examines the prices on our books that we are not in this work for the money. Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? could probably be sold for twice as much as we are now charging. We have always considered this to be a missionary work and have been content to receive enough money to pay our bills.

For many years people have encouraged us to form a non-profit organization. Although we realized that we could easily meet the qualifications, we have never taken any action on this matter. During the past few months, however, we have reconsidered this matter and have decided that we will try to form a non-profit corporation so that those who donate may receive a deduction from their income taxes. This will probably take a few months because the IRS must give its approval. In the meantime, we would be happy to receive donations, but we must caution that they will not be tax exempt.

In the January 1979 issue of the Messenger we printed an article entitled, “Modern Microfilm & The Future.” We feel that the last part of this article really fits our present situation:

Although the future looks very bright, at the present time we are functioning with a limited amount of capital. This, of course, makes our work less effective. For instance, we are forced to print very limited quantities of the works listed on our booklist. This wastes a great deal of time because we are forced to jump back and forth from one project to another. This time could be better spent in getting out new material. With more capital we could run things a lot smoother and have far better results in getting the truth out. . . .

In the past some of our friends have helped us with loans which we have been able to repay. If anyone is interested in loaning some money at the present time we could pay 10 percent interest. A loan of $1,000 would return $100 interest within a year (12 monthly payments of $91.67) or $200 if loaned for two years, and $5,000 would bring $1,000 interest if loaned for two years. We could use any amount between $500 and $5,000 and would sign a promissory note to make the matter legally binding. We feel that this would be a good investment, and it would help us to make our work more effective.

While most people will not be able to help this work in a financial way, all of our Christian friends are able to pray for us and for the Mormon people. The scriptures say that the “effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much” (James 5:16). We feel that the Lord has really blessed our work and that it is being widely used as a tool to bring Mormons to the knowledge of the true Gospel. We believe that with the Lord’s help we can weather the present storm and that thousands of Mormons will come to a knowledge of the truth.

APRIL HELPS NEEDY

In the April 1980 newsletter we announced that our daughter April had become interested in full-time Christian service. She had been attending Simpson College (a Bible school in San Francisco), and had decided to spend a summer in the Philippines with Teen Missions International. She had a very successful summer during which she became even more interested in full-time service. In January she came back to Salt Lake City to begin work as Family Coordinator for the Rescue Mission of Salt Lake. This is a very important ministry, for it involves helping to set up a work for both families and single women. Salt Lake really needs this type of service because many families and single women do not know where to turn in time of need. The Rescue Mission will be providing food, lodging, spiritual counseling and other services for these people. We are sending out a letter concerning April’s work in the first 7,000 copies of the Messenger. If it is not included in your copy, you can obtain it by writing to her at the following address: April Tanner, Rescue Mission of Salt Lake, Box 1431, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110. April is trying to raise her own support so that the Mission will have more money to put the new plans into effect. We hope that many people will support her with both prayers and contributions. All donations are tax deductible. For details read her letter.
EXCERPTS FROM RECENT LETTERS

...I talked with your wife on the telephone...I want to thank you also for your works, “The Changing World of Mormonism” and “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality.” Since reading these publications my husband and I & five of our children has asked for excommunication. I’m meeting with an Ex- Mormons for Jesus group. I feel that I’m on my way to really knowing Jesus Christ and letting him into my life.

After being a member for 15 years and having been sealed in the temple the church is not letting go very easily but I know we have the strength and conviction, thanks to you, to complete the task. K. M. (Oregon)

Thanks for unmasking Mormonism. I was born into the church, believed everything I was told, went on a mission, returned to BYU to finish school and met and married a non-Mormon (she converted for me but was never really converted). This was the best thing that could have happened as she slowly opened my eyes, along with a good friend that was learning about Mormon untruths himself. It was a shock. For years, the home teachers had threatened us with excommunication if we didn’t let them come for a visit. After reading about a number of changes in Mormonism, I realized it was fraud, pure and simple. However, this did not alleviate the severe guilt. Nevertheless, my wife and I asked to be removed from the church records. Of course there was a Bishops Court which we would not subject ourselves (Inquisition).

It’s been an emotional roller coaster up until about a year ago. Someone should write a book about how these false beliefs can keep you from learning the truth and the emotional scars that come with realizing that so many years were wasted. But I will say that many of my experiences were extremely gratifying and the basic Christian principles have been invaluable in my life. Nevertheless, fraud is fraud! R. S. (Texas)

I was particularly interested in your article “Bleaching the Lamanites.” I have a personal testimony concerning this subject that might shed light on this subject for you.

In South Carolina, near the town of Rock Hill, there is the Catawba Indian tribe. Many of these Indians are Mormons. In fact the Indian who is supposed to follow the footsteps of his father as chief is a Mormon, It is quite remarkable how this man is almost white and how the Indians who are active in the church are also that way.

This is a testimony unto the world that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God when he prophicied that this would come about...

You really must be jealous of the (Mormon) Lord’s true church... Of course your reason might be for filthy lucre. E. C. (Idaho)

I’m writting you to just thank-you for the work you are doing on Mormonism. I myself have just come out of it, about a year ago... I was born & raised in the church. I’m 26 now and I served a mission in England, the London mission, for the church. So it wasn’t that long ago I began reading your material. I started with “Mormonism—Shadow or Reality.” My wife showed it to me. She by the way read it first, and after only being in the church a few months, got out quick and knew it was a false religion. Of course all this devastated me at first. But after 2 years of prayer & study and other churches, I became a true Christian and left the church. I realize now that the Mormon Church can’t be what they claim it is... K.H. (Arizona)
43,000 BOOKS MET WITH SILENCE

We are happy to report that we have now sold over 35,000 copies of our major work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? A condensed version of this work entitled, The Changing World of Mormonism, has also been published by Moody Press. In less than a year 8,000 copies have been sold, and Moody Press is now preparing for a third printing. This means that 43,000 books have been distributed, and yet there has been no official response to this material by the Mormon Church leaders. Some have maintained that the reason for this silence is that the Church does not like to engage in controversy. This idea, however, has no basis in fact. In 1977 three researchers claimed that they had found proof that Solomon Spalding was the real author of the Book of Mormon. On August 20, 1977, the Mormon Church responded with a direct attack on this idea (see Deseret News, Church Section, pages 3-5). Since the Church leaders do respond to criticism when they feel they can win, their silence with regard to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? and The Changing World of Mormonism leads to the unescapable conclusion that they know that the charges made in these books are basically correct and cannot be refuted.

MORMONISM—SHADOW OR REALITY?

by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. This book has been called “Perhaps the most exhaustive expose of Mormonism between two covers.” It deals with such subjects as: the claims of Mormonism, changing doctrines, suppressing the records, book-burning, changes in Joseph Smith’s revelations, money-digging, Joseph Smith’s 1826 trial for engaging in “glass looking,” proof that the Book of Mormon is a product of the 19th century, changes in the Book of Mormon, archaeology and the Book of Mormon, changes in Joseph Smith’s History, the “strange” accounts of the First Vision, no revival in 1820, the Godhead, the Heavenly Mother, the Adam-God doctrine, the Priesthood, false prophecy, the missionary system, plural marriage, the anti-black doctrine, the rediscovery of the Joseph Smith Papyri and the fall of the Book of Abraham, Mormon scriptures and the Bible, Blood Atonement among the early Mormons, the Word of Wisdom, the secret Council of Fifty, Joseph Smith anointed king, the Danites, baptism for the dead, temple marriage, changes in the temple ceremony and its connection to Masonry, the Mountain Meadows Massacre, the Utah War, Mormonism and money, and hundreds of other important subjects. Contains 587 large pages with many photographs. About 35,000 copies of this book have been sold!

THE CHANGING WORLD OF MORMONISM

by Jerald and Sandra Tanner. An updated and condensed version of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? published by Moody Press. Almost 600 pages with an index and bibliography. In the introduction to this book, Wesley P. Walters writes:

“Oh, this stuff is dynamite,” exclaimed a prestigious director of a Mormon Institute of Religion,

“I tell you, though you may not believe it, I have seen people get utterly crushed, almost devastated with some of the material that the Tanners have reproduced.”

“I will tell you,” he continues, “there was an Institute teacher here, not long ago . . . who lost his testimony and went out of the church on the basis of this stuff.”

That description of the effects of Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s publishing efforts to unmask

Mormonism is hardly an overstatement . . .

Their major work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?, has sold more than thirty thousand copies without any advertising campaign, simply because it is the most definitive work in print on the fallacies of Mormonism. This condensed version of that earlier work, though still of necessity lengthy, sets forth the heart of their extensive research.

BOOK OF MORMON “CARACTORS” FOUND!

BY JERALD & SANDRA TANNER

A White Pure and Delightsome People

Since its beginning the Mormon Church has taught that a dark skin is a sign of God’s displeasure. This teaching comes directly from Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon. The Book of Mormon teaches that about 600 B.C. a prophet named Lehi brought his family to America. Those who were righteous (the Nephites) had a white skin, but those who rebelled against God (the Lamanites) were cursed with a dark skin. The Lamanites eventually destroyed the Nephites; therefore, the Indians living today are referred to as Lamanites. The following verses are found in the Book of Mormon and explain the curse on the Lamanites:

And it came to pass that I beheld, after they had dwindled in unbelief they became a dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people, full of idleness and all manner of abominations. (Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 12:23)

And he had caused the cursing to come upon them, yea, even a sore cursing, because of their iniquity . . . wherefore, as they were white, and exceeding fair and delightsome, that they might not be enticing unto my people the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them. (2 Nephi 5:21)

And the skins of the Lamanites were dark, according to the mark which was set upon their fathers, which was a curse upon them because of their transgression . . . (Alma 3:6)

The Book of Mormon stated that when the Lamanites repented of their sins “their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites” (3 Nephi 2:15). The Book of Mormon also promised that in the last days the Lamanites—i.e., the Indians—will repent and “many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightsome people” (2 Nephi 30:6).

While the Mormon Church leaders taught that Indians were cursed with a dark skin they went a step further with regard to blacks. They claimed that God would not even allow blacks to hold the priesthood. After a great deal of pressure was exerted against them, the Mormon leaders finally had a new revelation granting blacks the priesthood (Deseret News, June 9, 1978). In The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 324-325, we wrote:

One issue that Mormon leaders now seem to be dodging is that concerning skin color. As we pointed out earlier, Mormon theology has always taught that “a black skin is a mark of the curse of heaven placed upon some portions of mankind” (Juvenile Instructor, vol. 3, page 157). The Book of Mormon itself is filled with the teaching that people with dark skins are cursed . . .

Now that they [Church leaders] have abandoned the idea that blacks cannot hold the priesthood, they should explain . . . if they are repudiating the Book of Mormon teaching that a dark skin is given by God as a “curse.” By giving a “revelation” on the blacks without explaining its implications, the Mormon leaders are leaving their people in a dense doctrinal fog.

A photograph of one of the Kinderhook plates. Joseph Smith “translated” a portion of these plates and claimed they contained the history of a descendant of Ham. Recent tests, however, show they are forgeries.

One of the most embarrassing things about the doctrine concerning the Indians is that they are not becoming “white” as the Book of Mormon prophesied. The anti-Mormon writer Gordon H. Fraser claims that the “skin color” of the Indians converted to Mormonism “has not been altered in the least because of their adherence to the Mormon doctrines” (What Does the Book of Mormon Teach? page 46).

It now appears that the Mormon leaders are trying to “dissolve” the doctrine that the Indians will turn white after turning to Mormonism. The Church has just released its 1981 printing of the “triple combination” which contains the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price. This new publication contains a very important change. Previous editions of the Book of Mormon had said that in the last days the Indians “shall be a white and delightsome people” (2 Nephi 30:6). In the new edition this has been altered to read that the Indians “shall be a pure and delightsome people.”

The official Church magazine, The Ensign, tries to justify this change by stating:

Most students of latter-day scriptures are aware that from the very first printing typographical errors have crept into the Book of Mormon. . . .

The Prophet himself attempted to correct some of these kinds of errors, but his many duties prevented him from completing the project; and even so, some of his corrections
It should be noted that Church leaders are unable to produce any documentary evidence to support their claim that this was merely a correction by Joseph Smith of a typographical error. There were originally two handwritten manuscripts for the Book of Mormon—a copy which was written by Joseph Smith’s scribes as he dictated it and a second “emended” copy that was prepared for the printer. Unfortunately, most of the first manuscript was destroyed through water damage. The Mormon scholar Stanley R. Larson informs us that this manuscript “does not exist for this section of the text. . . .” (“A Study of Some Textual Variations in the Book of Mormon Comparing the Original and the Printer’s Manuscripts and the 1830, the 1837, and the 1840 Editions,” Unpublished M.A. thesis, Brigham Young University, April 1974, page 283)

Fortunately, the second handwritten manuscript—the copy given to the printer to use to set the type for the first printing of the Book of Mormon—was preserved by Book of Mormon witness Oliver Cowdery and is still in excellent shape. This handwritten manuscript does contain the portion printed as 2 Nephi 30:6. It uses the word “white,” and therefore does not support the claim that Joseph Smith was only correcting a typographical error (see Restoration Scriptures, by Richard P. Howard, Independence, Missouri, 1969, page 49). It should be remembered also that both the first two editions of the Book of Mormon (1830 and 1837) used the word “white.” It is especially significant that the 1837 edition retained this reading because the preface to this edition stated that “the whole has been carefully reexamined and compared with the original manuscripts, by elder Joseph Smith, Jr., the translator of the book of Mormon, assisted by the present printer, brother O. Cowdery, . . .” (Book of Mormon, 1837 edition, Preface, as cited in The Ensign, September 1976, page 79)

Besides all the evidence from the original Book of Mormon manuscript and the first two printed editions, there is another passage in the Book of Mormon which makes it very clear that Joseph Smith believed that the Lamanites’ skins could be turned “white” through repentance:

And their curse was taken from them, and their skin became white like unto the Nephites. (3 Nephi 2:15)

We have taken this quotation directly from the new “triple combination” to show that the Mormon Church is still bound by the belief that righteousness affects skin color even though they have changed the verse appearing as 2 Nephi 30:6.

The fact that Joseph Smith believed that the Indians’ skins would actually become white seems to also be verified by a revelation he gave in 1831. In The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 207-214, we discuss this revelation and show that it was suppressed until 1974 when we printed it in Mormonism Like Watergate? Since that time the Mormon Church Historian Leonard J. Arrington and his assistant Davis Bitton published the important portion of it in their book, The Mormon Experience, page 195:

“For it is my will, that in time, ye should take unto you wives of the Lamanites and Nephites that their posterity may become white, delightsome and just, for even now their females are more virtuous than the gentiles.”

Like Joseph Smith, President Brigham Young taught that the Indians would “become ‘a white and delightsome people’” (Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 143). While Brigham Young never released the 1831 revelation, there is evidence that he was familiar with its teaching that the Indians should be made white through intermarriage. In a book published in 1852, William Hall commented:

About the time of the breaking up of the camp at Sugar Creek, the people were called together and several speeches delivered to them by Brigham Young, and others. The speech of Young was in substance as follows:

“. . . We are now going to the Lamanites, to whom we intend to be messengers of instruction. . . . We will show them that in consequence of their transgressions a curse has been inflicted upon their race, in the darkness of their skins. We will have intermarriages with them, they marrying our young women, and we taking their young squaws to wife. By these means it is the will of the Lord that the curse of their color shall be removed and they restored to their pristine beauty . . .” (The Abominations of Mormonism Exposed, Cincinnati, 1852, pages 58-59)

T.B.H. Stenhouse related that Heber C. Kimball, a member of the First Presidency, spoke to some of the missionaries and told them that he did not see how the modern predictions could well be fulfilled about the Indians becoming “a white and delightsome people” without extending polygamy to the natives, . . . (The Rocky Mountain Saints, 1873, pages 657-659)

Although Joseph Smith’s 1831 revelation commanding Mormons to marry Indians to make them “white” was suppressed, recent leaders have continued to teach the Book of Mormon doctrine that the Indians become white when they turn to Mormonism. Spencer W. Kimball, who became the twelfth President of the Church on December 30, 1973, has strongly endorsed that teaching. In the LDS General Conference, October 1960, Mr. Kimball stated:

I saw a striking contrast in the progress of the Indian people today . . . they are fast becoming a white and delightsome people. . . . For years they have been growing delightsome, and they are now becoming white and delightsome, as they were promised. . . . The children in the home placement program in Utah are often lighter than their brothers and sisters in the hogans on the reservation.

At one meeting a father and mother and their sixteen-year-old daughter were present, the little member girl—sixteen—sitting between the dark father and mother, and it was evident she was several shades lighter than her parents—on the same reservation, in the same hogan, subject to the same sun and wind and weather. . . . These young members of the Church are changing to whiteness and to delightsomeness. One white elder jokingly said that he and his companion were donating blood regularly to the hospital in the hope that the process might be accelerated. (Improvement Era, December 1960, pages 922-923)

The reader will notice that Spencer W. Kimball used the Book of Mormon phrase, “a white and delightsome people.” This, of course, is the very phrase that has now been changed to read, “a pure and delightsome people.” It is very difficult to see any evidence of inspiration in this whole matter.

In any event, the Church now wants to suppress the Book of Mormon’s teaching concerning skin color. Ron Barker, of the Associated Press, questioned Church spokesman Jerry P. Cahill concerning the matter:

Asked whether church members should assume that faithful Mormon Indians would one day become light complexioned, Cahill said they should assume that they will become “a pure and delightsome people.” (Salt Lake Tribune, September 30, 1981)
We can probably expect more revisions in Mormon books to cover up this embarrassing doctrine. Apostle Bruce R. McConkie, who has recently had to revise his book Mormon Doctrine to conform to the change on the anti-black doctrine, will undoubtedly have to revise his section on the “LAMANITE CURSE.” On pages 428-29 of the 1979 printing of Mormon Doctrine we find the following:

... a twofold curse came upon the Lamanites: ... “they became a dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people, full of idleness and all manner of abominations.” (1 Ne. 12:23) So that they “might not be enticing” unto the Nephites, “the Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them.” (2 Ne. 5:20-25; Alma 3:14-16) ...

During periods of great righteousness, when groups of Lamanites accepted the gospel and turned to the Lord, the curse was removed from them ... the curse was removed from a group of Lamanite converts and they became white like the Nephites. (3 Ne. 2:15-16) ...

When the gospel is taken to the Lamanites in our day and they come to a knowledge of Christ and of their fathers, then the “scales of darkness” shall fall from their eyes; “and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and delightsome people.” (2 Ne. 30:6) Finally, before the judgment bar of God, all who have been righteous, Lamanites and Nephites alike, will be free from the curse of spiritual death and the skin of darkness. (Jac. 3:5-9)

We believe, of course, that Apostle McConkie has the right to alter his book in any way he desires. His changes concerning the anti-black doctrine are certainly a step in the right direction. When it comes to the Book of Mormon, however, we wonder how the Mormon leaders can justify altering words that were supposed to have been translated by the power of God.

Joseph As A Translator

The Browns Fail to Save the Book of Abraham

In 1912, F. S. Spalding published a booklet entitled, Joseph Smith, Jr., As a Translator. In this booklet Spalding questioned the authenticity of the Book of Abraham—a work which Joseph Smith claimed he translated from an ancient Egyptian papyrus. The Book of Abraham is published in the Pearl of Great Price, one of the four standard works of the Mormon Church. Although Spalding presented a very good case against the Book of Abraham, he was limited because he did not have the original papyrus or the handwritten manuscripts of the Book of Abraham. Since Spalding’s time a great deal of material has come to light which demonstrates conclusively that Joseph Smith failed in his attempt to translate the Book of Abraham, the Kinderhook plates and the Book of Mormon.

BOOK OF ABRAHAM

On November 27, 1967, the Mormon-owned Deseret News announced:

NEW YORK—A collection of papyrus manuscripts, long believed to have been destroyed in the Chicago fire of 1871, was presented to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints here Monday by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. ...

Included in the papyri is a manuscript identified as the original document from which Joseph Smith had copied the drawing which he called “Facsimile No. 1” and published with the Book of Abraham.

In the Salt Lake City Messenger for March 1968 we demonstrated photographically that one of the papyrus fragments in this collection was used by Joseph Smith in producing his “translation” of the Book of Abraham. Grant Heward, an amateur Egyptologist who had previously done missionary work for the Mormon Church, pointed this out to us and also demonstrated that what Joseph Smith believed was the Book of Abraham was in reality the pagan “Book of Breathings”—an Egyptian funerary document having nothing to do with Abraham or his religion. Some of the world’s top Egyptologists later confirmed that this is a copy of the “Book of Breathings.” Professor Klaus Baer, of the University of Chicago’s Oriental Institute, and Professor Richard A. Parker, of Brown University, published translations of the papyrus in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought—a periodical printed by a group of liberal Mormons but not controlled by the Church leaders. To save space here we will only include Professor Parker’s translation. In Dialogue, Richard Parker was listed as “Wilbour Professor of Egyptology and Chairman of the Department of Egyptology at Brown University.” Mormon apologist Hugh Nibley said that Professor Parker is “the best man in America for this particular period and style of writing.” His translation reads as follows:

1. […] this great pool of Khonsu
2. [Osiris Hor, justified], born of Taykhebyt, a man likewise.
3. After (his) two arms are [fastened] to his breast. one wraps the Book of Breathings, which is ...
4. with writing both inside and outside of it, with royal linen, it being placed (at) his left arm
5. near his heart, this having been done at his
6. wrapping and outside it. If this book be recited for him, then

Except for a few minor variations other renditions of the text are essentially in agreement with Professor Parker’s. The Book of Abraham, therefore, has been proven to be a spurious work. The Egyptologists find no mention of Abraham or his religion in this text. The average number of words that the Egyptologists used to convey the message in this text is eighty-seven, whereas Joseph Smith’s rendition contains thousands of words. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that the Book of Abraham is a false translation.

THE BROWNS’ ATTACK

In 1981 Robert L. and Rosemary Brown published the book, They Lie in Wait to Deceive. This book purports to tell “The amazing story of how “Dr.” or “Prof.” Dee Jay Nelson, Jerald and Sandra Tanner, and other anti-Mormons work to obstruct and distort the truth.” Actually, this book is nothing but a smoke screen to divert attention from the Book of Abraham problem to Dee Jay Nelson. In this work Mr. and Mrs. Brown make a devastating attack on Nelson, a man who translated the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri in 1968. The Browns demonstrate that in 1978—ten years after making his translation—Nelson made the false statement that he had obtained a doctor’s degree. After a careful examination of this book, we concluded that the Browns did an excellent job of exposing some false claims made by Dee Jay Nelson. Unfortunately, however, in their zeal to destroy Mr. Nelson they have made some very serious errors. Although they have made a number of false statements concerning Dee Jay Nelson, their most flagrant violation of the principle of honesty occurs when they accuse us of being part of a cover-up. Those who are acquainted with the facts about the situation know that nothing could be further from the truth.
The Browns claim that “in the latter part of 1980,” they “sent information about Dee Jay Nelson to Moody Press”—the publisher of our book The Changing World of Mormonism. They go on to state that we were given “instructions to revise the section concerning Dee Jay Nelson. At this time they were also informed that no more copies of their just printed book would be released for sale, and all future editions must also be revised. In 1981, the new revised edition was printed . . . Between the Moody Press and us, it looks like the Tanners had no choice but to come clean” (They Lie in Wait to Deceive, page 161).

While the Browns would have their readers believe that we covered up the situation until they and Moody Press forced us “to come clean,” the truth of the matter is that we commenced our own investigation into Nelson’s credentials as soon as we became convinced there was a problem. The results of that investigation were published immediately in the Salt Lake City Messenger.

By March 20, 1980, we had learned that Pacific Northwestern University (the school Nelson claimed he had received his doctor’s degree from) was really a diploma mill, and we wrote to Nelson that his “claim to a doctor’s degree in anthropology cannot be substantiated. Even though we have never made this claim, we feel that it would not be right for us to continue selling your booklets.” Just about one week after we wrote this letter to Nelson, we were contacted by Charles F. Trentelman of the Ogden Standard-Examiner. Mr. Trentelman had heard that Nelson’s credentials had been questioned and asked us if we could throw any light on the subject. We informed him of all we had learned about Pacific Northwestern University, and on March 29, 1980, he wrote the following: “Mrs. Tanner said they investigated the claims and found Nelson’s diploma was from a university that was shut down recently by the federal government as being a diploma mill, an operation that sells diplomas without requiring any schooling” (Ogden Standard-Examiner, March 29, 1980).

Immediately after Mr. Trentelman’s article appeared in the Ogden Standard-Examiner, we published the 42nd issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger. This was printed in April 1980 and fully exposed Nelson’s deception with regard to the doctor’s degree. A copy of this paper was mailed to the Moody Bible Library, and there was no attempt to hide the matter from anyone. As a matter of fact, we printed somewhere in the neighborhood of 10,000 copies of this issue!

In spite of these facts, the Browns try to make it appear that we were covering up the matter. To do this they had to entirely omit any reference to the fact that we published an exposure of Nelson in the April 1980 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger. Instead of telling the truth about the matter, they assert that “Between the Moody Press and us, it looks like the Tanners had no choice but to come clean” (They Lie in Wait to Deceive, page 161). On the same page the Browns admit that they “sent information about Dee Jay Nelson” to Moody Press “in the latter part of 1980.” It should be obvious, then, that the Browns are completely misrepresenting the situation. Since we had already exposed Nelson in the April 1980 issue of the Salt Lake City Messenger, how could the Browns and Moody Press force us “to come clean” in the “latter part” of the same year? This, of course, just doesn’t make any sense.

In a new booklet entitled, Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith? we deal with other false claims which the Browns have made concerning us and Dee Jay Nelson. We show, for instance, that the Browns were incorrect in stating that

Dr. Klaus Baer’s, Dr. Richard A. Parker’s, and Dr. John A. Wilson’s translations preceded Nelson’s!

Nelson, and his supporters, likes to make it sound as if . . . he was the first to translate and publish the Egyptian document. In reality, the first scholarly publications were by Dr. Klaus Baer, Dr. Richard Parker, and Dr. John A. Wilson. (Ibid., page 110)

Actually, Nelson’s work The Joseph Smith Papyri was advertised for sale in the Salt Lake Tribune on April 6, 1968, (see Salt Lake City Messenger, April, 1968), while the translations of Professors Baer, Parker and Wilson did not appear in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought until the Summer and Autumn issues. In fact, Klaus Baer refers to Nelson’s publication in his article:

So far as I know, Nelson, The Joseph Smith Papyri, page 42, was the first to point out that the bird above the head of Osiris clearly has a human head and therefore must be his ba. In “Facsimile No. 1,” it is drawn with a falcon’s head, and I must confess with some embarrassment that I also “saw” the falcon’s head before reading Nelson’s study. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Autumn 1968, page 118)

It would, of course, have been impossible for Professor Baer to refer to Nelson’s study unless it was already in print when he wrote his article.

The Browns accuse Nelson of lying when he said he went to President Tanner’s office to obtain photographs of the papyri which were being suppressed from the general public. In the booklet, Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith? we quote from a letter written by N. Eldon Tanner himself which supports Nelson’s claim. Furthermore, we reproduce a photograph of a memorandum from President Tanner’s office which verifies Nelson’s visit. Robert L. Brown has charged that “the Tanners are being deceitful” with regard to this matter. The evidence, however, completely supports our statements regarding this incident.

In our rebuttal to the Browns, we examine the charge that some of the information found in their book was obtained through secret tape recording of telephone conversations. We also show that they have cut out a paragraph from a photograph of a letter written by the Egyptologist Klaus Baer, and that the other parts of the letter have been pasted back together to make it appear that nothing is missing! The Browns have also suppressed over 900 words from a letter which we wrote. The reason for the suppression of these words is very obvious: we tell that the Mormon Church itself used a fake Ph.D. to defend the Book of Abraham at the time of Spalding’s attack. The noted Mormon scholar Dr. Sidney B. Sperry confirmed that deception was practiced in this regard:

He wrote a wonderful book . . . under the name Robert C. Webb, Ph.D. I regret that the brethren let him put down Robert C. Webb, Ph.D., because he was no Ph.D. (Pearl of Great Price Conference; December 10, 1960, 1964 ed., page 9)

In their book, the Browns main thesis appears to be that the critics of the Mormon Church have been discredited because one of them used a fake Ph.D. The Browns, however, completely suppressed the fact that the Church previously used a man with an assumed name as well as a fake doctor’s degree. We feel that Mr. and Mrs. Brown are operating under a double standard. They accuse us of deception, but the truth of the matter is that we were completely unaware of Nelson’s false claim to a Ph.D. As soon as we found out, we exposed him and quit selling his books. The Mormon Church leaders, on the other hand, allowed Mr. Homans to call himself “Robert C. Webb, Ph.D.” They engaged in a cover-up of this matter and continued to print his books for many years. As late as 1936 Church President Heber J. Grant took out a copyright on R. C. Webb’s book Joseph Smith as a Translator.

In any case, the Browns have tried to divert attention from the Book of Abraham problem. On the “Mormon Miscellaneous” radio program, August 3, 1981, we challenged Robert L. Brown to a public debate concerning the Book of Abraham, but he said he would only debate on the Dee Jay Nelson affair. We feel that this is just another attempt to avoid facing the real issue. As long as the Browns continue side-stepping the evidence against the Book of Abraham, their work will be of no real value.

While the whole foundation for the Book of Abraham seems to be crumbling, we can point with confidence to the case we have preparing against the Book of Abraham. Our arguments are just as good as when we first advanced them thirteen years ago. Our case is not based on any one man or any wild speculation, but rather on the science of Egyptology, original documents and careful research. We have the testimony of some of the world’s greatest Egyptologists—i.e., Professor Richard A. Parker of Brown University and Professors Klaus Baer and John A. Wilson (now deceased) of the University of Chicago’s Oriental Institute. We feel that the case against the Book of Abraham is irrefutable. If the Browns feel otherwise, they should be willing to meet us in a public debate in Salt Lake City.

KINDERHOOK PLATES

While we give a detailed report concerning Joseph Smith’s “translation” of the Kinderhook plates in our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? new and important information has recently come to light. The Mormon publication Times and Seasons for May 1, 1843, reported that these plates were found in a mound in Kinderhook, Illinois. In a letter written from Nauvoo, dated May 2, 1843, Charlotte Haven commented:

> ... Mr. Joshua Moore, ... brought with him half a dozen thin pieces of brass ... in the form of a bell. ... They were recently found, he said, in a mound ... When he showed them to Joseph, the latter said that the figures or writing on them was similar to that in which the Book of Mormon was written, and if Mr. Moore could leave them, he thought that by the help of revelation he would be able to translate them. So a sequel to that holy book may soon be expected. (Overland Monthly, December 1890, page 630)

According to the History of the Church, Joseph Smith did accept these plates as authentic and even claimed that he had translated a portion of them:

> Monday, May, 1. ... I insert fac-similes of the six brass plates found near Kinderhook, ... I have translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham, through the loins of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth. (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 372)

On January 15, 1844, this statement appeared in the Mormon publication Times and Seasons:

> Why does the circumstance of the plates recently found in a mound in Pike county, Ill., by Mr. Wiley, together with ethnology and a thousand other things, go to prove the Book of Mormon true?—Ans. Because it is true! (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 406)

A number of the citizens of Kinderhook certified that the plates were taken from the mound by R. Wiley. Unfortunately for the Mormon position, however, it was later discovered that the plates were forgeries, made for the purpose of tricking Joseph Smith. W. Fugate, one of those who signed the certificate, wrote the following in a letter to James T. Cobb: “Bridge Whitton cut them out of some pieces of copper; Wiley and I made the hieroglyphics by making impressions on beeswax and filling them with acid and putting it on the plates.”

At the time of the Civil War the Kinderhook plates were lost. M. Wilford Poulson, a retired teacher at Brigham Young University and a student of Mormon history, told us that he found one of the original Kinderhook plates in the Chicago Historical Society Museum, but it was mislabeled as one of the original gold plates of the Book of Mormon. The plate which he found has been identified as number 5 in the facsimiles found in the History of the Church. Except for an acid blotch on one side, the plate is in excellent condition. Mr. Poulson did a great deal of research concerning the Kinderhook plates and was convinced that they were made in the 1840s as W. Fugate claimed.

Welby W. Ricks, who was President of the BYU Archaeological Society, had another opinion concerning these plates. The official Mormon publication, Improvement Era, accepted his view and printed the following in September, 1962:

> A recent rediscovery of one of the Kinderhook plates which was examined by Joseph Smith, Jun., reaffirms his prophetic calling and reveals the false statements made by one of the finders. The plates are now back in their original category of genuine.

What scholars may learn from this ancient record in future years or what may be translated by divine power is an exciting thought to contemplate.

This much remains. Joseph Smith, Jun., stands as a true prophet and translator of ancient records by divine means and all the world is invited to investigate the truth which has sprung out of the earth not only of the Kinderhook plates, but of the Book of Mormon as well. (*The Kinderhook Plates, by Welby W. Ricks, reprinted from the Improvement Era, September 1962*)

In 1965 George M. Lawrence, a Mormon physicist, was given permission to examine and make “some non-destructive physical studies of the surviving plate.” Mr. Lawrence allowed us to quote from his study in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (page 113) as follows: “The dimensions, tolerances, composition and workmanship are consistent with the facilities of an 1843 blacksmith shop and with the fraud stories of the original participants.”

Since Mr. Lawrence was only allowed to make non-destructive tests, some Mormon scholars would not accept his work as conclusive.

In 1980 the Mormon scholar Stanley P. Kimball was able “to secure permission from the Chicago Historical Society for the recommended destructive tests. These tests, involving some very sophisticated analytical techniques, were performed by Professor D. Lynn Johnson of the Department of Materials Science and Engineering at Northwestern University” (The Ensign, August 1981, page 69).

Professor Kimball describes the results of the tests in the official Church publication The Ensign, August 1981:

> A recent electronic and chemical analysis of a metal plate (one of six original plates) brought in 1843 to the Prophet Joseph Smith in Nauvoo, Illinois, appears to solve a previously unanswered question in Church history, helping to further evidence that the plate is what its producers later said it was—a nineteenth-century attempt to lure Joseph Smith into making a translation of ancient-looking characters that had been etched into the plates.

As a result of these tests, we concluded that the plate owned by the Chicago Historical Society is not of ancient origin. We concluded that the plate was etched with acid; and as Paul Cheesman and other scholars have pointed out, ancient inhabitants would probably have engraved the plates rather than etched them with acid. Secondly, we concluded that the plate was made from a true brass alloy (copper and zinc) typical of the mid-nineteenth century; whereas the “brass” of ancient times was actually bronze, an alloy of copper and tin. (The Ensign, August 1981, pages 66 and 70)

Back in 1970, the Mormon scholar John A. Wittorf tried to come to grips with what would happen if the Kinderhook plates were proven to be forgeries:

> Accepting the find as genuine, Joseph had facsimile drawings of the plates made, presumably for future study. The brevity of his translation of “a portion of the plates” precludes the possibility that—if the plates are ultimately demonstrated to be fraudulent—his abilities as a translator of ancient scripts and languages can be called into question. (Newsletter and Proceedings of the Society for Early Historic Archaeology, BYU, October 1970, page 7)
In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 113, we observed:

Although we are happy to see John A. Witto’s honesty with regard to the Kinderhook plates, we cannot agree with him when he states that Joseph Smith’s reputation as a translator will not be affected. We feel that Joseph Smith’s work on the plates casts serious doubt upon his ability as a translator of “ancient scripts and languages.” He definitely stated that he “translated a portion of them, and find they contain the history of the person with whom they were found. He was a descendant of Ham through the loins of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth” (History of the Church, vol. 5, page 372). Now, in order to obtain this much information from the plates it would have been necessary to have translated quite a number of the characters, and a man who could make such a serious mistake with regard to the Kinderhook plates is just the type of man who would pretend to translate the Book of Abraham from Egyptian papyri which he knew nothing about.

The Mormon scholar Paul R. Cheesman opened the door for an entirely different approach to the problem in an article written in March, 1970. He suggested that Joseph Smith was not really the author of the statement about the translation which appeared in the History of the Church:

As of now, the original source of Joseph Smith’s statement, under the date of May 1, 1843, concerning the Kinderhook Plate, cannot be found. Much of Volume V of the Documentary History of the Church was recorded by Leo Hawkins in 1853, after the saints were in Utah, and was collected by Willard Richards from journals. . . . Liberty was taken by historians of those days to put the narrative in the first person, even though the source was not as such. Verification of the authenticity of Joseph Smith’s statement is still under study. In examining the diary of Willard Richards, the compiler of Volume V, the Kinderhook story is not found there. Our research has taken us through numerous diaries and letters written at this particular time, and the Kinderhook story is not mentioned. (‘An Analysis of the Kinderhook Plates,’ an unpublished paper by Paul R. Cheesman, page 2)

Some of our readers will remember that as early as 1965 we charged that Joseph Smith was not really the author of a large portion of the material attributed to him. This was finally confirmed by Dean C. Jessee of the Church Historical Department in an article published in Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971. According to Jessee’s research over 60% of Joseph Smith’s History was compiled after his death. In any case, the idea with regard to the Kinderhook plates seemed to be that if they turned out to be forgeries, a person could get the Church off the hook by arguing that the statement attributed to Joseph Smith concerning the translation was also a forgery. This is certainly a strange way of looking at the matter—almost as if “two wrongs” would make “a right.” Since the History of the Church was prepared by the highest officials of the Mormon Church and printed by the Church itself, to admit falsification in it is to undermine the entire foundation of Mormonism. Joseph Fielding Smith, the tenth President of the Church, claimed that the History of the Church “is the most accurate history in all the world; it must be so” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 199).

Since the recent tests on the Kinderhook plate, Mormon apologists find themselves facing a real dilemma, and there is no way out without doing serious injury to the Church. Stanley B. Kimball chose to discredit the accuracy of the History of the Church rather than admit that Joseph Smith “translated” bogus plates:

It has been well known that the serialized “History of Joseph Smith” consists largely of items from other persons’ personal journals and other sources, collected during Joseph Smith’s lifetime and continued after the Saints were in Utah, then edited and pieced together to form a history of the Prophet’s life “in his own words.” (The Ensign, August 1981, page 67)

Professor Kimball was apparently planning to advance the argument that since the part in Joseph Smith’s History concerning the Kinderhook plate was not recorded until after his death and since there seems to be nothing written in any journal during his lifetime, it must have been made up by later historians. Before Kimball printed his article, however, he was informed that the Church was suppressing a journal written by William Clayton which contained evidence that Joseph Smith did “translate” a portion of the plates. This journal was hidden in the First Presidency’s vault, but Kimball was able to obtain a copy of the important portion:

President J. has translated a portion and says they contain the history of the person with whom they were found, and he was a descendant of Ham through the loins of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and that he received his kingdom from the Ruler of heaven and earth. (Ibid., page 73)

Professor Kimball maintains that this is the original source for the entry in Joseph Smith’s History. Speaking of this History, Kimball writes:

Although this account appears to be the writing of Joseph Smith, it is actually an excerpt from a journal of William Clayton. . . . the words “I have translated a portion” originally read “President J. has translated a portion.” . . . this altered version of the extract from William Clayton’s journal was reprinted in the Millennial Star of 13 January 1859, and, unfortunately, was finally carried over into official Church history when the “History of Joseph Smith” was edited into book form as the History of the Church in 1909. (Ibid., pages 67-68)

Stanley Kimball is undoubtedly correct in assuming that Clayton’s journal is the source for the entry in Joseph Smith’s History. The two writings appear to be too similar to be coincidental. While this shows evidence of falsification on the part of Church leaders as far as the History of the Church goes, Clayton’s journal proves that Joseph Smith claimed he had “translated a portion” of the plates. This testimony by Clayton cannot be easily set aside. For one thing, Clayton’s account is contemporary with the event. According to Kimball, “in his journal entry of Monday, May 1, he included a tracing of one of the plates” (Ibid., page 71). Furthermore, Clayton was Joseph Smith’s scribe and was in constant contact with him. James B. Allen wrote:

Beginning in early 1842, then, William Clayton became involved in nearly every important activity in Nauvoo, including the private concerns of the Prophet. . . . He became an intimate friend and confidant of Joseph Smith, writing letters for him, recording revelations, and performing important errands. As a scribe he kept the sacred “Book of the Law of the Lord”; was officially designated to write the history of the Nauvoo Temple; helped prepare the official history of Joseph Smith (indeed, his personal journals become the source for many entries in that history); and kept various other books . . . for almost two and a half years, until Joseph’s death in 1844, they were in each other’s possession almost daily. (Journal of Mormon History, vol. 6, 1979, pages 42-43)

If anyone would be in a position to know what Joseph Smith really believed about the Kinderhook plates, it would be William Clayton.

Since Clayton’s journal was apparently used for the statement about the Kinderhook Plate in the History of the Church, it shows that the highest leaders of the Church at the time the History was compiled also believed that Joseph Smith “translated a portion” of the plates. Wilford Woodruff (who became the fourth President of the Church) and George A. Smith said that the History was “carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him” (History of the Church, vol. 1, Preface, page VI).

Besides the Clayton journal, there is other contemporary evidence that Joseph Smith “translated a portion” of the plates. On May 7, 1843, just six days after the entry appears in Clayton’s journal, the Apostle Parley P. Pratt wrote a letter containing the following:

“Six plates having the appearance of Brass have lately been dug out of a mound by a gentleman in Pike Co. Illinois. They are small and filled with engravings in Egyptian language and contain the genealogy of one of the ancient Jaredites back to Ham the son of Noah.” (The Ensign, August 1981, page 73)

If Joseph Smith had not been murdered in June of 1844, it is very possible that he might have published a “translation” of the Kinderhook plates. On May 22, 1844, just a month before his death, the Warsaw Signal published the following statement:

Jo. had a facsimile taken, and engraved on wood, and it now appears from the statement of a writer in the St. Louis Gazette, that he is busy in translating them. The new work which Jo. about to issue as a translation of these plates will be nothing more nor less than a sequel to the Book of Mormon; . . .

The fact that Joseph Smith was actually preparing a translation of the plates is verified by a broadside published by the Mormon newspaper, The Nauvoo Neighbor, in June 1843. On this broadside, containing facsimiles of the plates, we find the following: “The contents of the Plates, together with a Fac-Simile of the same, will be published in the Times and Seasons, as soon as the translation is completed.” It is certainly possible that the Church still has Joseph Smith’s unpublished work on the Kinderhook plates.

However this may be, Joseph Smith certainly fell into a trap when he claimed to translate a portion of the plates. James D. Bales brings the whole matter clearly into focus when he writes:

What does this all add up to? Does it merely mean that one of the “finds” which the Latter Day Saints believed supported the Book of Mormon does not support it, and that there is no real blow dealt to the prophethood of Joseph Smith? Not at all, for as Charles A. Shook well observed . . . “Only a bogus prophet translates bogus plates.” Where we can check up on Smith as a translator of plates, he is found guilty of deception. How can we trust him with reference to his claims about the Book of Mormon? If we cannot trust him where we can check him, we cannot trust him where we cannot check his translations. (The Book of Mormon? 1958, page 98)

BOOK OF MORMON

Although the original gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was supposed to have been translated were reported to have been taken away by an angel, Joseph Smith did make copies of some of the characters from the plates. According to the account given in the Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith claimed that Martin Harris came to our place, got the characters which I had drawn off the plates, and started with them to the city of New York . . . I refer to his own account of the circumstances, as he related them to me after his return, which was as follows:

I went to the city of New York, and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Charles Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith, 2:63-64)

Although Book of Mormon witness David Whitmer preserved a paper which contained Book of Mormon characters, it did not match the description given by Professor Anthon in a letter dated February 17, 1834:

This paper was in fact a singular scrawl. It consisted of all kinds of crooked characters . . . arranged in perpendicular columns, and the whole ended in a rude delineation of a circle divided into various compartments decked with various strange marks. . . . I . . . well remember that the paper contained any thing else but “Egyptian Hieroglyphics.”. . . (Letter written by Charles Anthon, as published in Mormonism Unvailed, 1834, pages 271-272)

On May 3, 1980, the Church Section of the Mormon Church’s newspaper, Deseret News, made the startling announcement that Mark William Hofmann had discovered the original document that Harris took to Professor Anthon. According to another newspaper report, Dr. Richard L. Anderson, of Brigham Young University, claimed that “This new discovery is sort of a Dead Sea School [sic] Equivalent of the Book of Mormon.” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, May 1, 1980). Dr. Hugh Nibley was quoted as saying, “This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get as to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon.” (Ibid.)

This new discovery has made it possible to decide whether Martin Harris or Professor Anthon told the truth. According to the account published in the Pearl of Great Price, “Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian.” In his letter, however, Professor Anthon charged that this report concerning him was incorrect and that “the paper contained any thing else but ‘Egyptian Hieroglyphics.’” To settle the matter a photograph of the original document was sent to Klaus Baer, Professor of Egyptology at the University of Chicago’s Oriental Institute. Dr. Baer replied:

What is it? Probably not Egyptian, even if here and there signs appear that could be interpreted as more or less awkwardly copied hieroglyphs or hieratic signs, . . . I suspect that one would have about the same batting average in comparing this with Chinese or Japanese or other systems that arrange signs in columns. (Letter dated May 10, 1980)

In a television interview the Mormon Egyptologist Edward H. Ashment said that the document “doesn’t come very close to being readable as demotic.” He went on to say that “it’s in a script that is entirely unique and it has no relationship, to my knowledge again, of Egyptian or to any American script.”

When the Mormon apologist Dr. Hugh Nibley was asked about the document just after its discovery, he proclaimed: “Of course it’s translatable” (The Herald, Provo, Utah, May 1, 1980). Almost a year and a half has passed, however, and no translation has been published. It appears that Mormon scholars have found it impossible to vindicate Joseph Smith’s claims concerning the Book of Mormon characters.

In The Changing World of Mormonism, pages 334-335, we pointed out that when the original Joseph Smith Papyri were rediscovered, the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator”—i.e. the President of the Church—was completely silent about the translation of the manuscripts. We also quoted the Book of Mormon as saying that a “seer” can “translate all records that are of ancient date” (Mosiah 8:13). We then stated that “it appears that the prophet does not have the gift to translate languages as has been previously claimed.” The Browns feel that they have a good answer to this accusation:

Why wasn’t the papyri given to the prophet and leader of the LDS church to translate? That the papyri was translated by several persons shows that such translation is humanly possible. Why would the prophet need to translate it?
Our Heavenly Father will not do for us what we can do for ourselves. Individually, or as a group, we grow and progress by solving our own problems. There was no need to have the papyri translated by the prophet . . . and it wasn’t! (They Lie in Wait to Deceive, page 113)

Although the Browns seem to feel that they have answered the criticism, the discovery of the paper containing Book of Mormon characters certainly weakens their argument and puts the President of the Church in an embarrassing position. The characters on this paper are as unintelligible to scholars as those on the Kinderhook plates, yet the President of the Church had refused to get involved in the matter. Instead of using the “seer stone,” which is in the Church’s possession, to translate the characters, he examined them with a magnifying glass (see photograph in Deseret News, Church Section, May 3, 1980).

CONCLUSION. While there has always been a question as to Joseph Smith’s ability as a translator, the recent tests on the Kinderhook plates, the translation of the Joseph Smith Egyptian Papyri by noted Egyptologists and the discovery of the sheet containing Book of Mormon characters all combine to show that Joseph Smith did not understand the Egyptian language. It is clear, therefore, that the “translations” he has produced are only the work of his own imagination. For more information on the question of Joseph Smith’s ability as a translator we recommend the following books: Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (dealing with the Book of Abraham and the Kinderhook plates), The Changing World of Mormonism (for an updated work on the Book of Abraham), Book of Mormon “Caractors” Found (for important information on the recently discovered sheet Harris took to Anthon) and Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith? Success In New Zealand

On January 30, 1981, we received a very encouraging letter from Ronald M. Rees, Manager of Beehive Books in New Zealand. Mr. Rees has given us permission to share extracts from this letter with our readers:

No doubt you have wondered if Beehive Books is an L.D.S. bookshop. Perhaps you may be interested to learn a little about us. Nine years ago my wife Roberta and I established New Zealand’s first privately owned bookshop for Latter-Day Saints. Our venture has met with success, and we now supply Mormons throughout both New Zealand and Australia with their book requirements . . . we also supply the Church owned bookshop at the Visitors’ Centre adjacent to the N.Z. Temple, also many Church units throughout New Zealand and Australia, and a steady flow of members calling at the shop to make their purchases . . .

Roberta and I are in our early thirties, and we both joined the L.D.S. Church about 17 years ago. Over the years, although we have always been fully active in the Church and have both held responsible leadership positions, we have both at times felt aware of the constant pressures. Also, working with L.D.S. publications, we have been keenly aware and disturbed by the unorthodox views expressed by many of the early Church authorities such as are found in the Journal of Discourses.

In September of last year together we agreed to quietly withdraw our fellowship from the Church. It caused some consternation and surprise amongst local Church leaders when both Roberta and I requested releases from our positions as High Priest’s Group Leader and Spiritual Living Leader in Relief Society, and quietly slipped into what is termed “inactivity” with our three children.

At this time a non-Member customer told us about your book “Mormonism, Shadow or Reality”—hence our letter to you of October 17. When your catalogue arrived, we noted that “Changing World of Mormonism” was a Moody Press publication, and obtained a copy from their local representatives. After reading this book we feel very relieved to be free from the Mormon Church, and grateful to you for the efforts you and Jerald are making to reveal the untruths, paradoxes, doctrinal conflicts and errors which most Mormons are totally unaware of. We have lent your book to seven of our friends, and all have withdrawn from the Church. These fine people were all faithful and fully active . . .

Now, as to our future . . . We have completely ceased ordering L.D.S. publications, and by the end of March hope to have cleared all stocks. At that stage we intend to formally request that our names and those of our three children be removed from the records of the Church. It is our intention to promote your publications at that time. We have a very extensive mailing list of the many hundreds of Latter-Day Saints who have purchased books from us over the years, and we will be mailing each of these customers a copy of a catalogue of your publications . . .

Naturally, you will appreciate that our decision to close down the very successful L.D.S. section of our business was a difficult one. However, we find that in conscience we can no longer promote L.D.S. Church literature . . .

Once again, Sandra and Jerald, may we thank you for the effort and research you both made in publishing “The Changing World of Mormonism.” We always found difficulty complying with the common Mormon attitude of “the thinking has been done,” and with continual access to Church literature we have been troubled by contradictions in doctrine. To read your fully documented and objective appraisal of all these various questions—plus many others which local members are totally unaware of—has been quite a traumatic and shattering experience. However, our family is very happy in our new-found freedom, and reaching out to understand what Christ would have us do. We feel a sense of mission in our future, and are keen to share our newly discovered knowledge with our Mormon friends and customers. We believe that we are in a truly unique position so to do.

By June 12, 1981, Mr. and Mrs. Rees reported that “nearly 70 Mormons” had come out of the Church:

By May 17th we sent to every Mormon Church leader and every Mormon on our mailing list in New Zealand a copy of our mailer . . .

The response has been amazing . . . The most wonderful thing is that we have been able to assist nearly 70 Mormons out of Mormonism and many of them to the real Lord Jesus Christ. We have a Mormon Bishop, 5 returned missionaries and two stake high councilmen now on our mailing list. Every day some one approaches us and we are able to show them that Mormon claims are false . . . It really touches us when a returned missionary who has just been shown all the evidence in your books that we have in our shop says with tears in his eyes “The Church is not true and I have wasted two years of my life and all that money for nothing.” Two days later he accepted the Lord and is being baptised at the end of this month. He is helping his mother and aunt out of the church. The aunt rang us earlier this week and we sent her a library copy of “Mormonism Shadow or Reality?” She phoned us back yesterday to say she had read it (must be a speed reader) and she now knows that the church is not true. She is a third generation Mormon!

Some people declare to us after seeing the truth and coming to know that Mormonism is not true . . . “It’s Me getting out of a prison.” One young man who said those exact words has now accepted Christ and was baptised earlier this week.

We are very pleased to learn of these dramatic developments in New Zealand, and we hope that our readers will remember these people in prayer.
The evidence we presented in another article in this issue of the Messenger shows that Joseph Smith failed as a translator. In this article we will show that the Mormon Church now faces a similar problem with regard to his role as a “Prophet.”

Church leaders maintain that Joseph Smith was appointed by God to be president of the true church and that there has been an unbroken chain of succession in the presidency ever since that time. According to Mormon apologists, any break in the chain of succession would throw the church into a state of apostasy. President Joseph Fielding Smith attacked the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—a group that broke off from the Utah Mormons—for failure to conform to the true plan of succession: “An ordination in the “Reorganized” church is of no more effect than is an ordination in the Methodist, Presbyterian, or Catholic church, for those officiating do not hold the priesthood, and are not recognized of God” (Succession in the Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Salt Lake City, 1975).

One of the chief differences between the Mormon Church and the RLDS Church centers around the question of who was the successor to Joseph Smith. While the Utah Mormons claim that Brigham Young was the true successor, the RLDS maintain that Joseph Smith had bestowed this right on his son Joseph Smith III. Although the Utah Church has always disputed this claim, a recent discovery proves that Joseph Smith actually did designate his son as successor. The Mormon Church’s own newspaper, Deseret News, confirmed the authenticity of the document:

A handwritten document thought to be a father’s blessing given by Joseph Smith Jr., first president and prophet of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to his son Joseph Smith III has been acquired by the Church Historical Department. . . .

Olson and other LDS officials said they are convinced the blessing is authentic. Handwriting and the paper were examined and compared with other documents . . .

The blessing document, dated Jan. 17, 1844, is thought to have been written by Thomas Bullock, one of several men who served as clerk to Joseph Smith Jr. . . .

Church officials obtained the document from Mark William Hofmann, a collector of historical documents and antiques. He said he received it from a descendant of Thomas Bullock. . . .

The document outlines a blessing given by Joseph Smith Jr. to his son, then age 11, and includes the possibility of the son succeeding his father “to the Presidency of the High Priesthood: A Seer, and a Revelator, and a Prophet, unto the Church.” (Deseret News, March 19, 1981)

A photograph of this important document is found above. The text of the blessing reads as follows:

A blessing given to Joseph Smith, 3rd, by his father, Joseph Smith, Jun., on Jan. 17, 1844.

Blessed of the Lord is my son Joseph, who is called the third, —for the Lord knows the integrity of his heart, and loves him, because of his faith, and righteous desires. And, for this cause, has the Lord raised him up; — that the promises made to the fathers might be fulfilled, even that the anointing of the progenitor shall be upon the head of my son, and his seed after him, from generation to generation. For he shall be my successor to the Presidency of the High Priesthood: a Seer, and a Revelator, and a Prophet, unto the Church; which appointment belongeth to him by blessing, and also by right.

Verily, thus saith the Lord: if he abides in me, his days shall be lengthened upon the earth, but if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant, unto myself.

When he is grown, he shall be a strength to his brethren, and a comfort to his mother. Angels will minister unto him, and he shall be wafted as on eagle’s wings, and be as wise as serpents, even a multiplicity of blessings shall be his. Amen.
For a number of years we have maintained that “After Joseph Smith’s death it was expected that his son would someday lead the Church” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? 1972, page 195). The recently discovered blessing, of course, confirms this statement.

The blessing not only fits very well with the historical evidence, but it even contains wording resembling that found in a revelation given to Joseph Smith on January 19, 1841. In the Doctrine and Covenants 124:57 and 59 we read:

... this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him. . . . let . . . his seed after him have place in that house, from generation to generation. . . .

In the blessing to Joseph Smith III we find this:

... the anointing of the progenitor shall be upon the head of my son, and his seed after him, from generation to generation.

If there is any truth to the claim that Joseph Smith was led by revelation, the blessing given to his son would seem to indicate that Joseph Smith III was the true successor and that Brigham Young wrongfully appropriated this right to himself. The idea that Joseph Smith III was the true successor and that Brigham Young should not have assumed the position of leader was clearly expressed by Joseph Smith in a blessing given to Joseph Smith III in the Tabernacle which gives support to Lee’s claim:

In a book published in 1877: Brigham Young had stolen Joseph Smith’s son’s right to be Young wrongfully appropriated this right to himself. The idea that Joseph Smith III was the true successor and that Brigham Young expected Joseph Smith III or his brother to lead the Church:

Brigham Young is also alleged to have acknowledged privately and publicly prior to 1860 that Joseph Smith III had a right to preside in the Church. Not only Brigham Young, but many Mormons in the Great Basin seem to have anticipated that one day Joseph Smith III would become a leader in the Church perpetuated by the apostles. It was with wonderment that they learned he had become the president, on 6 April 1860, of a church formed by dissidents from numerous sects established after the death of Joseph Smith. Jr. Joseph Smith III was ordained president of the RLDS Church . . . As Joseph Smith III demonstrated increasing hostility to the church in Utah, Brigham Young expressed hope that the martyred Prophet’s youngest son, David Hyrum Smith would one day merit his rightful place as president of the LDS Church. (Brigham Young University Studies, Winter 1976, pages 228-29)

As the RLDS Church continued to oppose the Utah Mormons, feelings became very bitter and a great deal of literature was printed by both sides. Finally, on April 10, 1898, President Wilford Woodruff completely denied that Joseph Smith had set his son apart to lead the Church:

“Joseph Smith never ordained his son Joseph, never blessed him nor set him apart to lead this Church and Kingdom on the face of the earth. When he or any other man says he did, they state that which is false before high heaven.” (Statement by President Woodruff, as cited in Priesthood and Presidency, by Charles W. Penrose, page 22)

It should be obvious that the discovery of the blessing completely destroys President Woodruff’s case.

A TRUE REVELATION?

The second paragraph of the recently discovered blessing is extremely interesting:

Verily, thus saith the Lord: if he abides in me, his days shall be lengthened upon the earth, but, if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant, unto myself.

Since this statement begins with the words, “Verily, thus saith the Lord,” the Utah Mormon Church will have a difficult time explaining it away. Notice that the blessing says that if Joseph Smith III “abides in me his days shall be lengthened.” While Brigham Young lived to be an old man, Joseph Smith III lived even longer. He was eighty-two years old when he died in 1914. In view of Joseph Smith III’s long life, those who believe Joseph Smith received his revelations from God are almost forced to the conclusion that his son lived a righteous life. If this is the case, why was he rejected by the Utah Mormon Church? Notice also that the revelation says that if he was not faithful, the Lord would “receive him, in an instant, unto myself.” According to Mormon belief, Joseph Smith III must have been one of the most evil men who ever lived, for he spent over fifty years of his life actively fighting the Utah Mormon Church. Now, if one were to assume that the Utah Mormon Church is really the true church, it would be difficult to understand why the Lord would allow Joseph Smith III to continue living. There could hardly be any sin worse than fighting against the Lord’s church. He certainly could not be abiding in the Lord and be actively opposing His work, and the blessing definitely states, “if he abides not in me, I, the Lord, will receive him, in an instant unto myself.”
Although the RLDS Church may proclaim that the new discovery is a victory over the Utah Church, a careful examination of all the evidence concerning succession leads one to conclude that Joseph Smith was never directed by revelation from God. It seems, in fact, that Smith had been groping in the dark for years trying to find a successor. According to David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith had so much confidence in me that in July, 1834, he ordained me his successor as “Prophet Seer and Revelator” to the Church. He did this of his own free will and not at any solicitation whatever on my part. I did not know what he was going to do until he laid his hands upon me and ordained me. (An Address To All Believers In Christ, by David Whitmer, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, page 55)

Neither Mormons nor members of the Reorganized Church can believe it was God who directed Joseph Smith to ordain David Whitmer because Whitmer later claimed that Smith was a fallen prophet and spent the last part of his life striving to build up another apostate church. Writing in 1887, Whitmer admonished:

If you believe my testimony to the Book of Mormon; if you believe that God spake to us three witnesses by his own voice, then I tell you that in June, 1838, God spake to me again by his own voice from the heavens, and told me to “separate myself from among the Latter Day Saints, for as they sought to do unto me, so should it be done unto them.” In the spring of 1838, the heads of the church and many of the members had gone deep into error and blindness. (Ibid., page 27)

According to Dr. Quinn, Whitmer was not the only one Joseph Smith appointed successor:

When Joseph Smith contemplated a successor, he made an appointment without seeking prior approval of the other governing bodies of the Church. He did this in 1834 with David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery, and in 1843 with Hyrum Smith. (BYU Studies, Winter 1976, page 219)

On page 232 of the same article, Quinn sadly observes:

Joseph Smith had at different times by preceptor or precedent established eight possible routes of legitimate succession to his place as President of the Church and of the High Priesthood on earth. As two recent analysts of LDS succession have observed: “In the first years of church government, the law of succession was in embryo stage. It seems that even in the Prophet Joseph Smith’s mind, just who would succeed him at any given moment was not always clear. There was a gradual evolution of succession principles.” Whether through oversight or as a means to test the faithful, Joseph Smith’s neglect to make explicit to the general membership an undisputed mode of succession caused thousands of his followers to falter, wander, and ultimately to reject the Church headquartered in Utah, . . .

We cannot believe that all this confusion could possibly come from the Lord. The Bible says that “God is not the author of confusion” (1 Corinthians 14:33). It would appear from the evidence presented that if the Mormon Church ever had any “priesthood,” it was lost when Brigham Young took the presidency unto himself. Our research, however, leads us to believe the Mormon Church never had any priesthood to lose. In The Changing World of Mormonism we show that serious changes were made in Joseph Smith’s revelations concerning priesthood, and we also demonstrate that the Mormon idea of “priesthood” is unscriptural. The Bible teaches that the Old Testament order of priesthood was fulfilled and that Christ Himself is our High Priest. It indicates that Jesus has “an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them” (Hebrews 7:24-25).

The Bible also indicates that all Christians (not just men) are a “royal priesthood” (1 Peter 2:9). In 1 Peter 2:5 we read that “Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.” The priesthood of the Old Testament has been fulfilled, and now “As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, . . .” (John 1:12). Instead of trusting in a church to save them, the Mormon people should turn directly to Christ for salvation. The Lord Himself has said: “. . . I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me” (John 14:6).

The work we have presented in the article concerning Joseph Smith’s ability as a translator is absolutely devastating, but if there is still any doubt in the reader’s mind, the recently discovered blessing should completely settle the matter. The blessing certainly disproves the claim that Joseph Smith was God’s true “Prophet” on the earth.

LISTEN TO HIS VOICE

Many people feel that if they have not committed any major sins they are in good standing with God and on their way to heaven. The Bible, however, makes it clear that we must believe on the Lord and receive Him into our hearts:

But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. (John 1:12-13)

Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3)

According to the Bible, there is no such thing as being neutral with regard to Jesus Christ. Jesus Himself said: “He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.” If we try to remain neutral we find ourselves continually resisting God’s Spirit. The Lord is speaking to us in thousands of different ways, urging us to commit our lives to Him. If we continue to say no, we become like the men in the parable who said, “We will not have this man to reign over us” (Luke 19:14). We may not openly say these words, but both our thoughts and actions will demonstrate that we are not really living for the Lord. In Matthew 7:21-23, Jesus shows that we can even do “many wonderful works” and yet not be in obedience to His Spirit:

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.
If we are going to do God’s will, we need to listen carefully to his voice. We read in John 10:27-28:

My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:
And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

It is through diligent prayer and reading His word that we hear the voice of God. We urge all of those who have never received the Lord to accept the wonderful gift of salvation. Those of us who already know Him should seek to listen carefully for His voice so that we will not stumble but walk in the path of His perfect will.

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. (Psalms 119:105)

FBI-CIA SUIT FILED

After the Mormon spy “Stan Fields” was exposed, we learned that he formerly had connections with the FBI. Because of this, we requested under the Freedom of Information Act that the FBI furnish all information that it had concerning us. FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C. provided us with some documents. A great deal of material, however, had been blacked out and eighteen pages were “withheld entirely.” About a year ago (October 1980) we also requested the CIA to send any information in their files. After a great deal of stalling, on December 8, 1980 we were informed that “your request for information on the Modern Microfilm Company was inadvertently overlooked due to an administrative error and was only recently surfaced. . .” Since the CIA had failed to comply with the Freedom of Information Act in the time allotted, we appealed to the CIA Information Review Committee. Finally, on February 5, 1981, we were told that no “information or record” pertaining to Jerald Tanner could be located, but they would not tell us whether anything about Modern Microfilm Company had been found: “You will be advised of the outcome as soon as our processing has been completed.” After waiting for the information for almost a year, we felt that it was time to take action. Therefore, on September 8, 1981 we filed a suit in the United States District Court for the District of Utah (Civil Action No. C81-0670J). We have named both the CIA and the FBI as defendants in this case. This is not a suit to obtain damages, but rather an attempt to try to force the FBI into releasing the suppressed documents and to make the CIA come into compliance with the law.

WARNING ON TAXES

In the February 1981 issue of the Messenger we informed our readers that we were planning on forming a non-profit corporation. Unfortunately, we have still not decided exactly how to proceed with the matter. While we are very happy to receive donations, we should warn the reader that they are still not tax exempt.

MORMONISM—Shadow or Reality?

A decade has passed since we published the 1972 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? Since that time a number of important discoveries have been made which strengthen our original thesis regarding the origin of Mormonism. There have also been some significant developments in the Church. For instance, on June 9, 1978, the Deseret News announced that the President of the Mormon Church received a revelation that the curse had been removed from the blacks and that they could now hold the priesthood. Because of the new discoveries and developments, we felt that it was time for a new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? We are now happy to announce that the work has been completed and that the new enlarged and revised 1982 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is available from Modern Microfilm Company. Although we had presented an extremely strong case against Mormonism in the earlier edition, the new material which we included in the 1982 edition makes the case even more devastating. Since the 1982 printing is about 90 pages longer than the old edition, we will have to increase the price from $10.95 to $11.95 ($14.95 for hardback). We are, however, having a special offer on all copies ordered before April 30, 1982. Instead of $11.95, the reader will pay ONLY $9.95 ($12.95 for hardback). We feel that all of our readers should have a copy of this new edition so that they will be right up to date on Mormon history and doctrine.

Historians Face Crisis

In the new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we deal with the serious problems Mormon historians are having with the leaders of the Church. We show that some of the top Mormon leaders are trying desperately to hide the truth about the origin of the Church from their own people. Since many of the Mormon historians want to “tell it like it is,” this has caused a real rift between the Apostles and the historians. For years we have been pointing out that Ezra Taft Benson, who is next in line to be President of the Church, has been trying to destroy the influence of the Mormon Church Historian Leonard Arrington and other prominent historians in the Church. During this last year the situation facing Mormon historians has turned from bad to worse. The big blow to the historians came on August 22, 1981, when Boyd K. Packer, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church, “criticized Church historians for ‘forsaking things of the Spirit’ in their histories” (Seventh East Press, An Independent Student Weekly, Provo, Utah, October 6, 1981). That Apostle Packer really meant business in this speech became evident when it appeared as the lead article in the Summer 1981 issue of Brigham Young University Studies. In this speech, Packer gave the following warning to Mormon historians:

There is a temptation for the writer or the teacher of Church history to want to tell everything, whether it is worthy or faith promoting or not.

Some things that are true are not very useful.

Historians seem to take great pride in publishing something new, particularly if it illustrates a weakness or mistake of a prominent historical figure.

The writer or the teacher who has an exaggerated loyalty to the theory that everything must be told is laying a foundation for his own judgment.

Some time ago a historian gave a lecture to an audience of college students on one of the past Presidents of the Church. It seemed to be his purpose to show that that President was a man subject to the foibles of men. He introduced many so-called facts that put that President in a very unfavorable light, particularly when they were taken out of the context of the historical period in which he lived.

Teaching some things that are true, prematurely or at the wrong time, can invite sorrow and heartbreak instead of the joy intended to accompany learning. The scriptures teach emphatically that we must give milk before meat. The Lord made it very clear that some things are to be taught selectively and some things are to be given only to those who are worthy.

It matters very much not only what we are told but when we are told it. Be careful that you build faith rather than destroy it.

President William E. Berrett has told us how grateful he is that a testimony that the past leaders of the Church were prophets of God was firmly fixed in his mind before he was exposed to some

On Being a Mormon Historian by D. Michael Quinn. One of the best speeches ever given by a Mormon historian. Newsweek called it a “stirring defense of intellectual integrity.” In this speech Dr. Quinn, Associate Professor of History at BYU, attacked the suppressive policies advocated by Apostles Benson and Packer. of the so-called facts that historians have put in their published writings. . . .

What that historian did with the reputation of the President of the Church was not worth doing. He seemed determined to convince everyone that the prophet was a man. We knew that already. All of the prophets and all of the Apostles have been men. It would have been much more worthwhile for him to have convinced us that the man was a prophet, a fact quite as true as the fact that he was a man. . . .

That historian or scholar who delights in pointing out the weaknesses and frailties of present or past leaders destroys faith. A destroyer of faith—particularly one within the Church, and more particularly one who is employed specifically to build faith—places himself in great spiritual jeopardy. He is serving the wrong master, and unless he repents, he will not be among the faithful in the eternities. . . .

In an effort to be objective, impartial, and scholarly, a writer or a teacher may unwittingly be giving equal time to the adversary. . . . The idea that we must be neutral and argue quite as much in favor of the adversary as we do in favor of righteousness is neither reasonable nor safe.

In the Church we are not neutral. We are one-sided. There is a war going on, and we are engaged in it. It is a war between good and evil, and we are belligerents defending the good. We are therefore obliged to give preference to and protect all that is represented in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and we have made covenants to do it. . . . I want to say in all seriousness that there is a limit to the patience of the Lord with respect to those who are under covenant to bless and protect His Church and kingdom upon the earth but do not do it. . . .

There is much in the scriptures and in our Church literature to convince us that we are at war with the adversary. We are not obliged as a church, nor are we as members obliged, to accommodate the enemy in this battle.

President Joseph Fielding Smith pointed out that it would be a foolish general who would give access to all of his intelligence to his enemy. It is neither expected nor necessary for us to accommodate those who seek to retrieve references from our sources, distort them, and use them against us. . . . Those of you who are employed by the Church have a special responsibility to build faith, not destroy it. If you do not do that, but in fact accommodate the enemy, who is the destroyer of faith, you become in that sense a traitor to the cause you have made covenants to protect. (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1981, pages 263-269)

To the Mormon scholar D. Michael Quinn, Apostle Packer’s words were a call to battle. In an emotionally charged speech, Dr. Quinn rebutted the charges made by Boyd K. Packer, Louis Midgley and Ezra Taft Benson, who is next in line to be President of the Church. The Seventh East Press reported:

Mormon apostles Ezra Taft Benson and Boyd K. Packer are advocating a kind of religious history which borders on idolatry, asserted D. Michael Quinn, associate professor of history at BYU in a recent lecture to the university’s student history association.

In an address entitled “On Being a Mormon Historian,” Quinn, who holds a Ph.D. in history from Yale University, addressed recent criticisms made against Mormon historians by Elders Benson and Packer and BYU Professor of Political Science Louis Midgley.

Stating that he was speaking only for himself, Quinn explained that by the time he was age fifteen he had read all the standard works except for part of the Old Testament . . . Quinn also briefly recounted his entrance into the field of LDS history and his prayerful approach to researching and writing that history.

Turning to Elder Packer’s caution that previously published material is not always suitable for re-publishing, Quinn described the “odd situation” created by General Authorities criticizing individuals for reprinting material that was viewed by General Authorities of an earlier era as faith-promoting and “appropriate for children and recent converts.”

Quinn expressed the opinion that for LDS historians to avoid what Elder Packer called “the unworthy, the unsavory, or the sensational” would be of questionable honesty and professional integrity and would do a “disservice to the cause of the Church,” and open the Church and its historians to justified criticisms.

Quinn also discussed Elder Benson’s counsel against “environmental explanations” of the background of revelations and Church history. Quinn stated that to ignore such backgrounds in a non-religious history is “inimet at best and dishonest at worst.” Quinn agreed with the sentiment expressed by Elder Benson that to use environmental observations as a basis for rejecting Joseph Smith’s inspiration would be inappropriate. Nevertheless, he continued, a discussion of such influences is important since “revelations come from specific questions that prophets ask God, and those questions arise because of conditions prophets experience.”

Quinn expressed the belief that such an approach demonstrates the “view that the official acts and pronouncements of the prophets are always the express will of God,” a position which Quinn sees as “the Mormon equivalent of the Roman Catholic doctrine of papal infallibility.” Such a doctrine of infallibility, Quinn explained, denies the principle of free agency and goes against Joseph Smith’s assertion that a prophet is only a prophet when he is acting as such. To ignore the limitations and errors of significant statements of the prophets, Quinn feels, would be as false as to ignore their visions, revelations and testimonies.

Quinn went on to state that to play down the human side of prophets would not be sacred history, for the sacred history of the scriptures portrays not only the “spiritual dimensions and achievements of God’s leaders” but also matter of factly demonstrates their weaknesses.

As examples, Quinn cited the scriptures’ treatment of Noah’s drunkenness, Lot’s incest, Moses’ arrogance, Jonah’s vacillation, Peter and Paul’s disagreements, Alma’s youthful iniquity, and “the Lord’s condemnations of Joseph Smith in the Doctrine and Covenants.” While sacred history shows God’s leaders as “understandable human beings with whom people can identify and still revere the prophetic mantle,” Elders Benson and Packer, Quinn asserted, expect a history which makes LDS leaders “flawless and benignly angelic.” Such a history of “demigod-like Church leaders,” Quinn stated, “borders on idolatry.”

While Quinn noted that Elder Packer accused Mormon historians of ignoring “fundamentals before presenting advanced information,” Quinn expressed the opinion that in reality Elder Packer “is not advocating a gradual exposure to historical truth, but excludes that possibility.” He further asserted that Elder Packer’s approach is not the same as Paul’s recommendation of milk before solid food, and goes against Joseph Smith’s assertion that to use environmental explanations of the background of revelations and Church history in approach and philosophy. (The Seventh East Press, November 18, 1981)
Since Ezra Taft Benson will probably become the next President of the Church, there has been some concern that D. Michael Quinn may have sacrificed his career as a Mormon historian when he made this rebuttal. Many Mormons would count this as a great loss because Dr. Quinn is probably one of the best historians the Church has ever produced. However this may be, Quinn certainly demonstrated a great deal of courage when he publicly challenged the suppressive policies advocated by Benson, Packer and Midgley.

We were so impressed with Dr. Quinn’s lecture that we decided to publish it in its entirety. It is now available from Modern Microfilm Company under the title, On Being a Mormon Historian. This is probably one of the most important speeches ever delivered by a Mormon Historian.

Dr. Arrington Demoted

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we demonstrated that the Mormon leaders suppressed important Church documents and that we exerted a great deal of pressure in an attempt to force the release of these documents. Some of the more liberal Mormon scholars became very aroused over the policy of suppression. A group of these scholars presented the Mormon leaders with a list of suggestions on how they should run the Historian’s Office. They wanted a trained historian to be appointed as the Church Historian. They also wanted the records to be made available to scholars and for the Church itself to start printing the rare documents. When we heard of these requests we could not see how the Church leaders could possibly comply with them without undermining the entire foundation of the Church. Take, for instance, the idea of appointing a qualified historian. A true historian, if he were honest with himself, could never approve of the methods used by Joseph Fielding Smith and other Church Historians in the past. Besides, it had become traditional for a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to fill this position. It seemed very unlikely, then, that the Church would appoint a trained historian, but on Jan. 15, 1972, we received a real surprise when we read the following in the Salt Lake Tribune:

Dr. Leonard J. Arrington, noted Utah educator and author, has been named historian of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, . . . Howard W. Hunter of the Council of Twelve Apostles will be released . . .

While Dr. Arrington is an active Mormon, many people consider him to be very liberal. At one time Arrington had openly criticized the Church for not publishing the diaries of the early Mormon leaders and for not permitting “qualified historians to use them without restriction” (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1966, page 26).

While the appointment of Leonard Arrington as Church Historian was certainly a surprise, the choice of James B. Allen and Davis Bitton as assistant historians made some wonder what direction the Church was headed in. Allen had previously published an article which undermined Joseph Smith’s story of the First Vision, and Bitton had written an article in which he made an attack on the accuracy of Joseph Smith’s History of the Church. Now, what could the Church leaders have had in mind when they appointed such liberals to the Church Historian’s Office? The only reasonable explanation is that the policy of suppressing the records had failed and that the Mormon leaders were trying to present a new image to the world. They were apparently going to try to make it appear that they were proud of the records they had suppressed for so many years.

In any case, after his appointment, Dr. Arrington announced great plans for the Historical Department. Many of them, however, have been thwarted by men who follow the philosophy of Ezra Taft Benson, President of the Council of the Twelve Apostles. Benson is a man who believes that it is wrong to tell the whole truth about Mormon history. He believes, in other words, that there should be a cover-up with regard to certain things that have occurred in the past. Arrington, on the other hand, is more open and scholarly in his approach.

Dr. Arrington’s problems began just after his appointment to the office of Church Historian when he announced the formation of a group known as “Friends of Church History.” When about 500 people showed up for the first meeting, the General Authorities apparently became fearful that such a large group studying history might uncover things which would prove embarrassing to the Church. Orders were given to hold up the project, and no meetings have been held since November 30, 1972 (see Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 41). Although no official announcement has ever been made, it is reasonable to assume that “Friends of Church History” is now defunct.

Some of Dr. Arrington’s other projects seem to be endangered by the attitude of the General Authorities. One of his dreams was to have the Church publish a one-volume history. This dream seemed to become a reality in 1976 when James B. Allen and Glen M. Leonard produced the book The Story of the Latter-day Saints. In the Foreword to this book, Dr. Arrington said that “two of our finest historians” had been assigned to the project—as we have already pointed out, James B. Allen is Assistant Church Historian. Dr. Arrington went on to state that he had personally approved the manuscript for publication. Although most Mormons would consider this a harmless publication, President Benson felt that it was too humanistic and it is rumored that he wanted it shredded. In a letter dated June 23, 1978, President Benson stated: “The book, The Story of the Latter-day Saints, will not be republished.” It appears, therefore, that as far as Mormon history is concerned, the views of Leonard Arrington and Ezra Taft Benson are diametrically opposed.

Leonard Arrington’s most important project was to oversee the production of a sixteen-volume sesquicentennial history of the Mormon Church. These volumes were to be authored by prominent Mormon scholars. The Salt Lake Tribune for April 26, 1975, quoted Dr. Arrington as saying:

“We have signed contracts with 16 persons, each of whom is writing one volume of the set,” said the church historian. “Each requires several years of intensive research and none will be available before 1978. We hope all 16 volumes will be ready by 1980.”

The original idea behind the project was to have the volumes ready for the 150th anniversary of the Church—the sesquicentennial celebration of 1980. While Dr. Arrington said he hoped “all 16 volumes will be ready by 1980,” 1982 has arrived and not a single volume has been published!

From what we have been able to determine, some of the scholars who were working on the volumes were too frank in their presentation and this caused great consternation among some of the Apostles. Since that time Church leaders have been dragging their feet in an effort to delay or even cancel publication of the volumes. The Church leaders find themselves in a difficult situation, however, since Deseret Book Company had signed an agreement with the sixteen authors which would be binding in court. In order to suppress the history without the possibility of lawsuits, the General Authorities decided to pay each author who had finished his work $20,000 (those who have not completed their volumes were to receive a smaller amount). Since there were sixteen authors to be paid off and other costs involved, the Church may have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars. That the General Authorities would approve this massive project and then abort it after some of the Church’s top scholars spent years working on it shows a total lack of inspiration.

In the Salt Lake City Messenger, January 1979, we observed:

There is reason to believe that Benson wants to remove Arrington from his position as Church Historian. Some feel that he will gradually be “phased out.” It is also reported that it is becoming increasingly difficult for Mormon scholars to get access to documents in the Historical Dept. If Dr. Arrington should survive under the leadership of President Spencer W. Kimball, it is very unlikely that he will remain Church Historian if Ezra Taft Benson becomes President.

It now appears that the Church has begun the process of “phasing out” Dr. Arrington. The Salt Lake Tribune for July 3, 1980, announced:

PROVO (AP) — The history research division of the Mormon church’s historical department will move to Brigham Young University, officials announced Wednesday.
The department’s library and archives division and arts and sites division will remain at the church’s Salt Lake City headquarters, said church President Spencer W. Kimball.

Director of the new institute will be Dr. Leonard J. Arrington, church historian.

Most of the division’s personnel will be transferred to BYU, where they will become part of the faculty and staff.

Although President Kimball tries to persuade members of the Church that “This transfer of the work of professional historians from a Church department to an institute in the university is a forward step,” (Deseret News, Church Section, July 5, 1980), it is obvious to anyone who really examines the situation that this is a real demotion for Church Historian Leonard Arrington. While he may remain Church Historian in name, it is clear now that Church leaders have removed the powers which used to go with this title. Before Arrington’s appointment, the Church Historian had charge of the records and would make decisions as to who could see these documents. Now it appears that there will be about a forty-five mile gap between the Church Historian and the church records—i.e., the distance between Provo and Salt Lake City:

Dr. Arrington and some History Division staff members eventually will move to the BYU campus but, the institute has not yet been assigned a particular building or office area in Provo. The Church’s library and archives will remain in Salt Lake City. (Deseret News, Church Section, July 5, 1980)

It is obvious, then, that Church leaders want to get Dr. Arrington as far away from the Church Office Building as possible and to reduce his influence with the Mormon people. It has been claimed that it will not be too long before Arrington retires, and planning the move and setting up operations in Provo will no doubt take up much of his remaining time.

There now seems to be a question as to whether Dr. Arrington can even be referred to as “Church Historian.” Sometime after he was installed as Church Historian he was given the title “Director of the History Division.” It is reported that when Dr. Arrington was asked about whether he was still “Church Historian,” he replied that he had been sustained in conference as the Church Historian and had never been released from that position; therefore, he still retained the title “Church Historian.” Although he was referred to as “the Church Historian” in the March 1979 issue of The Ensign (page 51), a recent advertisement for a book by Arrington and Bitton seems to indicate that he no longer claims the title:

For many years Leonard J. Arrington and Davis Bitton served as Church Historian and Assistant Church Historian for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Arrington is currently Director of the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History at Brigham Young University and Bitton is Professor of History at the University of Utah. (Sunstone Review, vol. 1, no. 3, page 23)

The reader will remember that Apostle Boyd K. Packer criticized a historian for trying to “convince everyone that the prophet was a man.” Interestingly enough, the new book by Arrington and Bitton, which deals with “two apostles” and other Mormons, is entitled Saints Without Halos: The Human Side of Mormon History. It is also interesting to note that this new book is NOT being published by the Church but rather by Signature Books in Salt Lake City.

Although Dr. Arrington is trying to be very gracious about the whole matter, it is obvious that the Church leaders have stubbornly opposed his plans to get out an accurate history of the Church. Nevertheless, many important documents have come out of the Historical Department since Dr. Arrington became Historian, and these documents have really helped us in the production of the new edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?

RESTRICTED CHURCH DOCUMENT LEAKS OUT

For 140 years the Mormon Church has been suppressing the Nauvoo diaries of Joseph Smith’s secretary William Clayton. These diaries have been hidden in the vault of the First Presidency. Recently, however, quotations from these diaries leaked out, and this has caused great consternation among the General authorities and officials at Brigham Young University. In an article entitled, RESTRICTED CHURCH DOCUMENT ‘STOLEN,’ the Seventh East Press reported the following (the names David Brown and Tom Wilson “are pseudonyms,” according to this paper):

A BYU graduate student has accused a member of a bishopric of stealing copies of materials which the student obtained from the vault of the First Presidency.

In doing research in LDS Church history, Andrew F. Ehat, . . . obtained permission to examine the restricted Nauvoo diaries of William Clayton and make notes. He gave a copy of his notes to BYU religion instructor Lyndon Cook, who kept them in his campus office. The notes were taken without permission and photocopied by David Brown, a member of a bishopric who uses Cook’s office. In September Brown lent his copy to Tom Wilson, a BYU religion instructor, who in turn lent them to a history student, Scott Faulring. Faulring had already made five copies for various individuals when Ehat discovered that his notes were being copied without his permission. Ehat spent much of the remainder of fall semester trying to recover all the copies that had been made.

The notes represent approximately 90 typed pages of excerpts from the personal diaries of William Clayton, . . .

Some time ago, Andrew (“Andy”) Ehat obtained permission through the Historical Department of the Church to examine the Clayton diaries. Ehat made a copy of his notes for Lyndon Cook, with whom he was working to produce the book The Words of Joseph Smith which appeared in early 1981. . . . In an interview, Ehat implied that he had made copies for others as well, but declined to mention any names. . . .

After borrowing the copy from religion instructor Tom Wilson, Scott Faulring made five copies for student and faculty acquaintances. A few days later, Faulring had the notes in a campus office when Andy Ehat, who was present, happened to recognize Lyndon Cook’s handwriting in the margins of the photocopy. Ehat bolted to his feet and demanded to know where the copy had come from. Faulring was reluctant to cooperate at first, but was willing to help when he learned the notes had been copied without permission. Individuals present report that Ehat was extremely upset and at one point said, “If this gets out it could destroy the Church.”

Ehat says he was able to obtain the five copies Faulring made within about 12 hours, but that three of the people who turned in copies had secretly made extra copies and kept them back for themselves and others. Another person to obtain a copy was Hal Palmer, a former student who dropped out of BYU near the end of fall semester.

Palmer reports that he was surprised to see Andy Ehat on his doorstep as he left for school early one morning last November. Ehat asked for Palmer’s copy and, according to Ehat, “reasoned with him from every possible way I could conceive of: ethically, morally, and so forth. And he was unwilling to cooperate.” Palmer states that Ehat followed him from his apartment to his class on campus and that the two were “screaming and yelling and I was swearing at him the whole way. People kept turning and looking at us.” According to Palmer, Ehat implied that he (Palmer) could be excommunicated if the notes weren’t returned.

Angry with Ehat’s approach, Palmer gave copies to Special Collections libraries at both BYU and the University of Utah. Ehat has since retrieved both of these copies. At one point, Ehat phoned Elder Boyd K. Packer of the Council of the Twelve Apostles to ask for advice on the situation. Ehat declined to comment on that conversation.

To this date, Palmer’s copy has not been returned, and it appears that other copies are still being circulated by various individuals, a situation which has left Ehat frustrated. Ehat explains that Brown’s actions “cost me getting a master’s degree here at the university in the sense that I lost twelve weeks of my life trying to track down all the people who had copies.”

While Ehat initially stated that information in the Clayton diaries “could destroy the Church,” he has since given very different explanations for wanting to keep the material confidential. Ehat told the Seventh East Press that his concern in this matter was “the fact that the diaries (i.e., his notes) were stolen and . . . that wide publicity of this matter would almost certainly prevent further access to any other materials.”

Ehat also believes that use of the diaries should be limited out of respect to William Clayton, who “in a different sphere is still living.”

Others, however, see different reasons for not wanting to see the diary made public. Lyndon Cook for example, says the diary contains some “very sensitive entries which may not do us too well if the anti-Mormons got a hold of them.”

Cook says the diary gives a lot of information concerning the secret practice of polygamy in Nauvoo and says that for a time Emma Smith was unaware that it was being practiced by her husband Joseph. He also feels that publishing the diary “may injure some who are of weaker faith.” (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982, pages 1 and 11)

This whole episode led BYU President Jeffery Holland to call for an investigation:

President Jeffery Holland has appointed Vice-president Noel Reynolds to investigate the recent unauthorized circulation of restricted research materials concerning Church history. Reynolds thinks that incidents such as those surrounding the circulation of the Clayton material may “destroy our credibility as a research institution with the Church archivists.”

Palmer . . . denies that he has acted irresponsibly, saying that he would never give information to anti-Mormons. Palmer asserts that he has “an undying testimony of the gospel” . . .

Bill Seavey, another student contacted by Reynolds, feels that while irresponsible students in the underground may contribute to the tightening of restrictions in the Church Historical Department, it is equally likely that the reverse is true: the tightening of restrictions encourages students to participate in the underground. (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982, pages 1, 10, 11)

If the General Authorities had taken Dr. Arrington’s advice and published “the diaries of leading Mormons,” they would not be faced with the embarrassing situation of having Clayton’s material leak out. It would appear, however, that the Mormon leaders feel that the contents of the early diaries and records are so shocking that their release would do irreparable damage to the Church.

Quinn Is “Clandestine”

In 1977 an anonymous Mormon historian launched an attack on our work in a pamphlet entitled, Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism: A Response to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? In our reply to this pamphlet we pointed out that we had a very difficult time tracing its source and that “the whole matter had all the earmarks of an intelligence operation mounted by the CIA or the KGB” (Answering Dr. Clandestine: A Response To The Anonymous LDS Historian, page 1). Zion Bookstore had “received an anonymous letter containing a key to a room in a self storage company on Redwood Road.” When an employee of the store went to the storage company, he found 1,800 copies of the pamphlet. These copies were given to Zion Bookstore without any charge, and the money obtained from their sale was supposed to be used to make a reprint. We, of course, immediately suspected that the Mormon Church had financed this attack “from ambush,” and evidence pointed directly to the Church Historical Department. In an unpublished thesis, Richard Steven Marshall told of an anonymous rebuttal that the Historical Department was preparing in 1977:

He [Reed Durham] also said that due to the large number of letters the Church Historian’s Office is receiving asking for answers to the things the Tanners have published, a certain scholar (name deliberately withheld) was appointed to write a general answer to the Tanners including advice on how to read anti-Mormon literature. This unnamed person solicited the help of Reed Durham on the project. The work is finished but its publication is delayed, according to what Leonard Arrington told Durham, because they can not decide how or where to publish it. Because the article is an open and honest approach to the problem, although it by no means answers all of the questions raised by the Tanners, it will probably be published anonymously, to avoid any difficulties which could result were such an article connected with an official Church agency. (“The New Mormon History,” A Senior Honors Project Summary, University of Utah, May 1, 1977, page 62)

After a great deal of investigation, we were able to obtain a copy of a letter from Church Historian Leonard Arrington which linked him to the distribution of the rebuttal (see photograph of his letter in Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 24). We also discovered that D. Michael Quinn, the historian who recently challenged the statements of Apostles Benson and Packer, was the author of the anonymous rebuttal. This identification was confirmed by David Mayfield, who worked for the Historical Department at the time the rebuttal was being prepared (Ibid., page 4).
In our book Answering Dr. Clandestine we suggested some of the possible reasons why the rebuttal to Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? was printed anonymously. We said that it was “likely that the Historical Department wanted the writer to remain anonymous for one of two reasons:

One, the Mormon leaders approved of a rebuttal being issued but only if it could be put out in such a way that it could not be traced back to the Church. They did not want to engage in a debate which could lead to any unfavorable publicity for the Church. Also, they did not want to give any respectability to our work by officially endorsing a rebuttal.

Two, the liberals in the Church published the pamphlet, and the elaborate cover-up operations are designed to hide the matter from conservatives like Ezra Taft Benson, who is next in line to be President of the Church. This theory presupposes a serious split between the Historical Department and at least some of the general authorities of the Church. . . . We certainly do not believe that Apostle Benson would approve of this rebuttal. It makes far too many admissions concerning historical problems in the Church. For instance, we do not think Benson would be pleased with Dr. Clandestine’s admission that the History of the Church, which was supposed to have been written by Joseph Smith himself, was really “written in large part after his death” and that there have been “thousands of deletions and additions” which have not been noted. (Answering Dr. Clandestine, page 7)

That there is a “serious split” between the Church historians and the Apostles has now become evident. Before Dr. Quinn gave his speech at BYU, he tried very hard to conceal this rift. In his rebuttal to our work, Quinn made it plain that he disagreed with the methods of most of the “apologist-defenders,” but he did not mention anyone by name. On page 43 of Answering Dr. Clandestine, we observed:

> . . . the pamphlet Jerald and Sandra Tanner’s Distorted View of Mormonism appeared at just about the time the General Authorities became so disturbed over how scholars like Arrington were affecting the Church. Anyone who reads this rebuttal can tell that it is a product of those who believe in “New Mormon History.” It seems, in fact, to contain a thinly disguised attack on Benson’s view of Mormon history: “It is regrettable that in our urbane, twentieth century experience as a church, many of our writers (including nearly all of our apologist-defenders) have found it necessary to ignore or even deny the weaknesses, fallibility, and humanity of our prophets and apostles. . . . In the short-run, glorifying our leaders may be good public relations, but in the long-run it makes Mormons vulnerable to shallow, muckraking ad hominem attacks on their leaders.” (page 11)

It is certainly too bad that Dr. Clandestine did not have the courage to give us the names of these “apologist-defenders.” Anyone who takes the time to study Mormon history, however, would know that he is referring to men like the Mormon Apostles Ezra Taft Benson, Mark E. Petersen and Bruce R. McConkie.

Now that Apostle Packer has come out with a condemnation of those who point out “the weaknesses and frailties of present or past leaders,” Dr. Quinn was unable to remain silent about the matter. As we have already pointed out, he has shown a great deal of courage in directly attacking the position of two of the highest officials in the Mormon Church.

Even though we disagreed with some of Dr. Quinn’s conclusions in our book Answering Dr. Clandestine, we had to admit “that he is probably one of the best historians in the Mormon Church. His dissertation from Yale University is a masterpiece” (page 5). After reading Quinn’s secret rebuttal, we felt that he was actually frustrated with the suppressive policies of his own Church and was taking much of his anger out on us. His BYU talk seemed to show that this was the case.

While Quinn accused us of having a “distorted view of Mormonism,” we felt that his view was colored by wishful thinking. Now that the Mormon leaders are becoming more aggressive in their attempt to control and distort the history of the Church, Quinn decided it was time to come out and make a public statement. In doing this, however, he finds himself labeled an adversary of the Church. It is certainly ironic that the man who attacked our work now finds himself “regarded as subversive” by his own Church leaders.

APOSTASY GERMS?

Apostle Boyd K. Packer has warned Church historians not to help apostates “spread disease germs!” (BYU Studies, Summer 1981, page 271). Dr. Quinn vigorously protested:

> In warning Mormon historians against objective history and against telling too much truth about the Mormon past, Boyd K. Packer says, “Do not spread disease germs!” To adopt the symbolism of Elder Packer, I suggest that it is apostates and anti-Mormons who seek to infect the Saints with disease germs of doubt, disloyalty, disaffection, and rebellion. These typhoid Marys of spiritual contagion obtain the materials of their assaults primarily from the readily available documents and publications created by former LDS leaders and members themselves. Historians have not created the problem areas of the Mormon past; they are trying to respond to them. Believing Mormon historians like myself seek to write candid Church history in a context of perspective in order to inoculate the Saints against the historical disease germs that apostates and anti-Mormons may thrust upon them. The criticism we have received in our efforts would be similar to leaders of eighteenth century towns trying to combat smallpox contagion by locking up Dr. Edward Jenner who tried to inoculate the people, and killing the cows he wanted to use for his vaccine.

The central argument of the enemies of the LDS Church is historical, and if we seek to build the Kingdom of God by ignoring or denying the problem areas of our past, we are leaving the Saints unprotected. As one who has received death threats from anti-Mormons because they perceive me as an enemy historian, it is discouraging to be regarded as subversive by men I sustain as prophets, seers, and revelators. (On Being A Mormon Historian, by D. Michael Quinn, page 23)

While the Apostles are blaming the historians for the epidemic of apostasy, the historians feel that it is the other way around. George Raine observed:

> Intellectuals and historians, all faithful members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for several months have had a vigorous but quiet dispute with influential church leaders who criticized so-called objective church history which includes very human dimensions.

The debate is now formal, as indicated in a speech last week by University of Utah historian James L. Clayton. He characterized “faith-promoting” history, as advocated by at least two LDS general authorities, as “intellectually and morally irresponsible.” . . .

Both sides of the debate over history say the point of view of the other can lead to the undermining of faith, that church members can be made vulnerable. (Salt Lake Tribune, February 28, 1982, page B-1)

If apostasy from the Mormon Church is really an illness, then it is obvious that the disease often begins when a person comes in contact with material preserved in the Church Historical Department. Instead of attacking the historians, Apostles Benson and Packer should ask themselves why the original records of the Church are so full of apostasy germs. If the Church were true, the writings of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young and other church leaders would be filled with good things which promote spiritual health. The fact that Benson and Packer want to keep these records hidden shows that they know the archives are really filled with dangerous germs which can infect their people. From our viewpoint, of course, what Apostle Packer calls disease germs are in reality historical facts which can open a person’s eyes to the truth about Mormonism. While it is sometimes painful to face these matters, it can lead a person to spiritual health.

In his speech at the University of Utah, James L. Clayton mentioned a dangerous anti-history trend which is growing in the Church. He indicated that Leonard Arrington had been removed as Church Historian and that the Church had gone back on its plans to print the 16-volume history. He also stated that he had just learned that the Church archivists were beginning to suppress a vast amount of material that had previously been available to Church scholars. In his article in the Tribune, George Raine claimed that the Church said the restriction of documents was only a temporary measure:

It was rumored, for example, that church archivists are barring access to diaries, journals and other private materials of church leaders back to the 1830s and that this was illustrative of a narrowing church attitude toward Mormonism’s past. But the church responded that these have been withdrawn temporarily for reclassification and reevaluation, and they are still available with permission from the managing director of the church historical department.

Since qualified historians had been working with these documents for ten years, we can see no legitimate reason why the Church would have to reclassify and reevaluate them at this time. We can only believe that this is a move to suppress the material from Church historians. Whether the Church can keep these things hidden remains to be seen. The bad publicity that this is bringing the Church could very well force the General Authorities to reconsider their decision.

STILL STRUGGLING

The present recession has really affected our work. Although we are doing our best to press forward, we are functioning with a limited amount of capital. This, of course, makes our work less effective. For instance, we are forced to print very limited quantities of the works listed on our booklist. This wastes a great deal of time because we are forced to jump back and forth from one project to another. With more capital we could run things a lot smoother and have far better results in getting out the truth. Last year our sales fell many thousands of dollars short of the amount we needed to cover expenses. Fortunately, however, some of our readers sent gifts and we were able to continue the work. Because the financial conditions of the country have caused a decrease in our sales, we find ourselves in a similar situation this year. We are trusting, however, that the Lord will in some way meet this need. Although we are not a non-profit corporation, we certainly welcome any donations that our readers are able to make. In the past some of our friends have helped us with loans which we have been able to repay. If anyone is interested in loaning money at the present time we could pay 10% interest. A loan of $1,000 would return $100 interest within a year (12 monthly payments of $91.67), and $5,000 would bring $500 interest if loaned for two years. We could use any amount between $500 and $5,000 and will sign a promissory note to make the matter legally binding. We feel that this would be a good investment, and it would help us to make our work more effective.

While most people will not be able to help this work in a financial way, all of our Christian friends are able to pray for us and for the Mormon people. We feel that the Lord has really blessed our work and that it is being widely used as a tool to bring Mormons to the knowledge of the true Gospel. We believe that thousands of Mormons will come to a knowledge of the truth through this work.

THE BEST MEDICINE

Karl Menninger, one of the world’s greatest psychiatrists, once stated that “love is the medicine for the sickness of the world.” Jesus certainly recognized this fact, for in the book of John we find that He made this statement to His disciples:

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. (John 13:34-35)

The scriptures tell us that God is love and that when we are “born again” our hearts are filled with love:

Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love. (1 John 4:7-8)

In verse 20 of the same chapter the Apostle John stated:

If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?”

In Ephesians 3:19 we are told that the love of Christ “passeth knowledge.”

The psychiatrist Karl Menninger made these observations concerning the importance of love:

...for the brief period that we love (others than ourselves) we live—which corresponds with astonishing precision to numerous sayings attributed to Jesus and Plato. (Man Against Himself, pages 62-63)

Nothing inhibits love so much as self-love...just as self-directed aggressions are harmful because of their immediate consequences, so the self-direction of love is harmful through its secondary consequences, the consequences of the emotional starvation resulting...Thus again psychoanalytic science comes to the support of an intuitive observation of a great religious leader who said, “He who seeketh his own life shall lose it but whosoever loseth his life for my sake shall find it.” We need only read in place of “for my sake” an expression meaning the investment of love in others, which is presumably what Jesus meant. (Ibid., pages 381-382)

The Apostle Paul maintained that love was the most important thing:

If I speak in the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. And if I have prophetic powers, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. If I give away all I have, and if I deliver my body to be burned, but have not love, I gain nothing.

Love is patient and kind; love is not jealous or boastful; it is not arrogant or rude. Love does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful; it does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right. (1 Corinthians 13:1-6, Revised Standard Version)
Myron Augsburger wrote:

True love cannot be expressed for things, for things only serve personal ends and affection for things is turned inward and is closed and selfish. Love for a person is outgoing and genuine as it cares to share relationship rather than to use the person. . . . Only the born-again person knows the transformation of divine love through the indwelling Spirit, and can express a measure of love that Jesus commanded toward both friends and enemies. . . .

The evidence that one has been delivered from the selfishness of sin is the expression of Christian love. (Plus Living, pages 25-27)

J. B. Phillips stated:

It is plain from the Gospels that Christ regarded the self-loving, self-regarding, self-seeking spirit as the direct antithesis of real living. His two fundamental rules for life were that the “love-energy,” instead of being turned in on itself, should go out first to God and then to other people. “If any man will come after me,” he said, “let him deny himself” . . . Now the moment a man does this . . . he finds himself in touch with something more real than he has known before. . . . In other words, the moment he begins really to love, he finds himself in touch with the life of God. (And, of course, if God is love, this is only to be expected.) He now knows beyond any doubting that this is real, happy, constructive living. He knows now that the teaching of Christ is not a merely human code of behaviour, but part of the stuff of reality. (Your God Is Too Small, pages 84-85)

Thomas a Kempis wrote: “Know that the love of yourself is more hurtful to you than anything else in the world” (Of the Imitation of Christ, page 42). Because the love of self is “more hurtful” to us than anything else, the Lord tells us to deny ourselves: “Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross, and fellow me” (Matthew 16:24). In John 12:25 Jesus said: “He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.”

Raymound L. Cramer made these observations:

Another effective method for helping the neurotic is in involving him in something outside himself. Jesus taught this principle—who would save his life would lose it. An individual wrapped up in himself is like a circle revolving inward. Losing his life in interest of others, turning the circle outward, giving himself away has the advantage of distracting the neurotic from his own worries and giving him something worthwhile to live for. Being loved by others is pleasant, but it may become boring, while loving the other person is absorbing and creative. (The Psychology of Jesus and Mental Health, page 126)

The phrase, “save his life,” refers to saving it for a selfish purpose, utilizing ability in terms of self-gratification—a self-possessed, self-centered life. Jesus was not talking here about some distant future, but physical, down-to-earth, everyday living. He claimed that anyone who used his life in this way would lose it. The word “lose” means to become empty, void, useless and destructive. That which is capable of being useful becomes a source of insecurity, greed, and a vehicle of hostility if it is used for selfish purposes. Fear and anxiety result when man tries to hang onto his life. He loses what he is trying to save—life itself. (Ibid., page 139)

Many people will not become Christians because they fear that the Lord will ask them to give up too much. The truth is, however, that the Lord only asks us to give up the things that will hurt us or make us unhappy in the long run. We are told that true happiness comes only when we submit ourselves to the Lord and that there is only misery in self-love.

For a more complete treatment of this subject and what it really means to be a Christian we recommend our book A Look At Christianity.
In the last issue of the Messenger we reported that

For 140 years the Mormon Church has been suppressing the Nauvoo diaries of Joseph Smith’s secretary William Clayton. These diaries have been hidden in the vault of the First Presidency. Recently, however, quotations from these diaries leaked out, and this has caused great consternation among the General authorities and officials at Brigham Young University.

The Seventh East Press, a student newspaper published just off the Brigham Young University campus, published the following:

A BYU graduate student has accused a member of a bishopric of stealing copies of materials which the student obtained from the vault of the First Presidency.

In doing research in LDS Church history, Andrew F. Ehat, . . . obtained permission to examine the restricted Nauvoo diaries of William Clayton and make notes. He gave a copy of his notes to BYU religion instructor Lyndon Cook, who kept them in his campus office. The notes were taken without permission and photocopied by . . . a member of a bishopric which uses Cook’s office. (Seventh East Press, January 18, 1982)

A religion instructor at BYU borrowed photocopies of these notes and subsequently lent them to a student who made five more copies. When Ehat discovered what had happened he became very upset and according to witnesses he declared, “If this gets out it could destroy the Church” (Ibid.). Ehat tried desperately to get all of the copies back. He went to “BYU security and the Provo Police Department,” but neither of these organizations were able to help him. BYU President Jeffery Holland “appointed Vice-president Noel Reynolds to investigate the matter,” but in spite of all the pressure “various individuals” continued to circulate and make copies of the material. Many copies have now been spread by the Mormon “underground” (a group composed mostly of liberal Mormon scholars) to different parts of the United States. Most of those who received copies were very careful to see that they did not fall into the hands of critics of the Church. The Seventh East Press reported that one man who refused to give up his copy of Ehat’s notes said that “he would never give information to anti-Mormons.” Finally, several months after Mormon scholars began circulating the typed excerpts, we were given access to a copy of them. These notes certainly tend to confirm our research concerning the deceitful way plural marriage was introduced by the Mormon Prophet Joseph Smith. For instance, in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 206-207, we quote Emily Dow Partridge (a faithful Mormon) as telling how Joseph Smith deceived his wife Emma:

. . . the Prophet Joseph and his wife Emma offered us a home in their family. . . . I was married to Joseph Smith on the 4th of March 1843, . . . My sister Eliza was also married to Joseph a few days later. This was done without the knowledge of Emma Smith. Two months afterward she consented to give her husband two wives, providing he would give her the privilege of choosing them. She accordingly chose my sister Eliza and myself, and to save family trouble brother Joseph thought it best to have another ceremony performed. Accordingly on the 11th of May, 1843, we were sealed to Joseph Smith a second time, in Emma’s presence.

... From that very hour, however, Emma was our bitter enemy... things went from bad to worse until we were obligated to leave the house and find another home. (Historical Record, page 240)

In William Clayton’s diary, he tells of Joseph Smith having a problem with Emma over the Partridge sisters. He indicates that Joseph deceived her by telling her he would “relinquish all” for her sake when he really didn’t intend to “relinquish anything”:

Wednesday 16. . . . This A.M. J. [Joseph] told me that since E. [Emma] came back fro St Louis she had resisted the P. [Priesthood?] in toto & he had to tell her he would relinquish all for her sake. She said she would [sic] given him E. & E. P [Emily and Eliza Partridge] but he knew if he took them she would pitch on him & obtain a divorce & leave him. He however told me that he should not relinquish anything O. God deliver thy servant from iniquity and bondage. (William Clayton’s Diary, August 16, 1843, typed excerpts, page 24)

On May 24, 1843, (page 43) William Clayton told of Joseph Smith holding the door shut when he was in a room with one of the Partridge girls and that this made Emma very “irritated”:

Prest. stated to me that he had had a little trouble with sis E. he was asking E. Partridge concerning Jackson conduct during Prest. absence & E came up stairs. he shut to the door not knowing who it was and held it. She came to the door & called Eliza 4 times & tried to force open the door. Prest. opened it & told her the cause &c. She seemed much irritated. He says Jackson is rotten hearted.

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 245, we show that while Joseph Smith secretly lived plural marriage, he denied it publicly and even published a statement that “Hiram Brown” had been “cut off from the church” for “preaching polygamy, and other false and corrupt doctrines, ...” (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 423). According to William Clayton, Joseph Smith was willing to go so far as to initiate a fake excommunication to cover up the practice of polygamy:

Thursday 19. . . . Prest. J. . . . began to tell me that E. was turned quite friendly & kind. she had been anointed & he also had been a K. He said that it was her advice that I should keep M [Clayton’s plural wife Margaret] at home and it was also his council. Says he just keep her at home and brook it and if they raise trouble about it and bring you before me I will give you an awful scourging & probably cut you off from the church and then I will baptise you & set you ahead as good as ever. (Ibid., October 19, 1843)

William Clayton’s diaries paint a very unattractive picture of polygamy in Nauvoo. Clayton was continually having family problems because of plural marriage. He tells, for instance, of a problem he encountered when he wanted to sleep with both of his wives at the same time:

Thursday 24. . . . At night I asked mother if M might sleep with Ruth & me she appeared very rebellious & would not consent but said we might do as we had a mind. (Ibid., August 24, 1843, page 25)

Clayton does not indicate how his wives felt about this situation, but it is obvious from the diary that Margaret was really in love with another man. She had been engaged to this man but had been counseled to marry Clayton instead. Clayton felt very bad and asked Joseph Smith if he had done wrong in taking Margaret away from the man she really loved. Smith “answered no you have a right to get all you can” (Ibid., August 11, 1843). Joseph Smith really seemed to believe in that philosophy. At one time he and Clayton were both interested in Lydia, the sister of two of Clayton’s wives. He claimed, therefore, that God gave him a special revelation showing it would be wrong for Clayton to have her:

Friday 15th. . . . Prest. J. told me he had lately had a new item of law revealed to him in relation to myself. He said the Lord had revealed to him that a man could only take 2 of a family except by express revelation and as I had said I intended to take Lydia he made this known for my benefit. to have more than two in a family was apt to cause wrangles and trouble. He finally asked if I would not give L to him I said I would so far as I had any thing to do in it. He requested me to talk to her. (Ibid., page 25)

William Clayton’s diaries certainly throw light on the bad relationship Joseph Smith had with his wife Emma. Most of the problems seemed to stem from the doctrine of plural marriage. Clayton records the following under the date of July 12, 1843:

Wednesday 12th This A.M. I wrote a Revelation consisting of 10 pages on the order of the priesthood, showing the designs in Moses, Abraham, David and Solomon having many wives & concubines &c. After it was wrote Presto. Joseph & Hyrum presented it and read it to E. who said she did not believe a word of it and appeared very rebellious. (Ibid., page 20)

On August 21, 1843, Emma was “vexed and angry” because of correspondence she found between Joseph and one of his plural wives. Two days later she treated Joseph so badly that “he had to use harsh measures to put a stop to her abuse but finally succeeded.” Joseph Smith feared that Emma would become involved in the same type of conduct in which he was engaged. At one time he even suspected William Clayton of using “familiarity” with her:

Monday 29 This A.M. prest J. told me that he felt as though I was not treating him exactly right & asked if I had used any familiarity with E. I told him by no means & explained to his satisfaction. (Ibid., May 29, 1843, page 44)

On June 23, 1843, William Clayton recorded this strange entry in his diary:

Friday June 23rd. This A.M. Prest J. took me and conversed considerable concerning some delicate matters. said [a mysterious character appears at this point in the manuscript which Mormon scholars interpret as “Emma”] wanted to lay a snare for me. He told me last night of this and said he had felt troubled. He said [the character representing “Emma” appears again at this point] had treated him coldly & badly since I came . . . and he knew she was disposed to be revenged on him for some things she thought that if he would indulge himself she would too. He cautioned me very kindly for which I felt thankful. He said Thompson professed great friendship for him but he gave way to temptation & he had to die. Also bro Knight he gave him one but he went to loose conduct and he could not save him. Also B.Y. [Brigham Young] had transgressed his covenant & he pled with the Lord to spare him this end & he did so, other wise he would have died. B. denied having transgressed. He said if I would do right by him & abide his council he would save my life while he lived. (pages 19-20)

Taken as a whole Ehat’s extracts from William Clayton’s diaries cast early Mormonism in a very bad light. In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 245, we quoted the Mormon Apostle John A. Widtsoe as saying: “The Church ever operates in full light. There is no secrecy about its doctrine, aim, or work.” Widtsoe further proclaimed that “From the beginning of its history the Church . . . has fought half-truth and untruth.” William Clayton’s diaries certainly show that Apostle Widtsoe was incorrect in these statements. The Church was certainly not operating in “full light” and there was a great deal of “secrecy about its doctrine.”
Furthermore, Clayton makes it clear that Joseph Smith used “untruth” as a tool to advance his work. Not only was he deceiving the outside world, but he was deceiving his own wife and other members of the Church.

Instead of coming to grips with these matters, Mormon Church leaders have been engaged in a cover-up. They kept the Clayton diaries locked in a safe for 140 years, and after extracts got out, they began to implement very repressive measures to see that no more sensitive material comes to light. In the last issue of the Messenger we gave a report concerning how the Mormon leaders clamped down on the Historical Department and even scrapped the 16-volume sesquicentennial history of the Church because it turned out to be too revealing. James L. Clayton, a historian from the University of Utah, became very disturbed about these matters, and in a speech delivered February 25, 1982, he protested:

More recently, indeed, just within the past few days, I understand that the archives of the LDS Church have been closed to all research in the diaries, the letter books and other sensitive materials of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve back to the 1830s—diaries and letters long open to and currently being used by scholars. Many projects of considerable worth are now stymied or will be finished with incomplete sources. The release of Leonard J. Arrington as Church Historian—the most significant Mormon historian since B. H. Roberts, in my judgment; the apparent refusal to complete already signed contracts with other historians working on a multi-volume history of the church; the movement of the Historical Department from the main source of manuscripts at Church Headquarters in Salt Lake City to BYU, these events raise serious questions regarding the nature and direction of historical enquiry on Mormonism.

The Apostles Ezra Taft Benson and Boyd K. Packer have been warning Mormon historians not to probe too deeply into the past and to concentrate on printing only material which is favorable to the Church. D. Michael Quinn, assistant professor of history at the Church’s Brigham Young University, felt that these Apostles had gone too far. In an emotionally charged speech, he commented that “the Mormon history of benignly angelic Church leaders apparently advocated by Elders Benson and Packer would border on idolatry” (On Being a Mormon Historian, pages 18-19).

Although Dr. Quinn has been the most courageous in opposing the suppressive moves of Church leaders, many Mormon scholars feel the same way. Just after we published the last issue of the Messenger, a researcher who had previously sided against us, wrote us a letter in which he stated:

Thank you for sending me your newest edition of the Messenger. As things are now, there is absolutely no reason to to be surprised at the overwhelming number of traditionally conservative, orthodox, sustaining LDS members who have expressed criticism of Elder McConkie’s presentation. People who we would never have suspected to say an unkind word about their delinquent home teacher have gone out of the way to state their distress over Elder McConkie’s “uncharitable rebuke” of George Pace, abrasive style of presentation, unneeded mocking of other religion’s rituals and saints, dogmatic approach, and condescending tone. . . . Many of the offended saints seem to be looking beyond the mark of learning truth from a great gospel scholar in the Church by going out of their way to find fault. Indeed some seem to be trying to position themselves so that Elder McConkie would be sure to knock off the chip on their shoulder. (Seventh East Press, March 14, 1982, p. 8)

The speech delivered on March 2, 1982, was not Apostle
McConkie’s first attack on those who stress a personal relationship with Christ. According to the Seventh East Press, November 18, 1981, he had warned students against this doctrine a few months before:

On the weekend of October 31, 1981 Elder Bruce R.
McConkie and other General Authorities presided over the 14
BYU Stake Conference. . . .

Elder McConkie counseled students against praying on dates, saying that this practice develops a relationship that should only exist in marriages. . . .

Elder McConkie believes that the Second Coming of Christ will not take place during his lifetime, nor the lifetime of his

Apostle Attacks Personal Relationship With Christ

At a Brigham Young University Devotional held March 2, 1982, the Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie delivered a very significant message. In this speech, Apostle McConkie emphatically declared that members of the Mormon Church “should not strive for a special and personal relationship with Christ.” McConkie maintained that he was expositions the “doctrine of the Church” and so on and said that “you have never heard one of the First Presidency or the Twelve . . . advocate this excessive zeal that calls for gaining a so-called special and personal relationship with Christ.” McConkie also admonished that “everyone who is sound spiritually and who has the guidance of the Holy Spirit will believe my words and follow my counsel.” In concluding his remarks, Apostle McConkie set himself up as one of the greatest living authorities on Christ: “It just may be that I have preached more sermons, taught more doctrine, and written more words about the Lord Jesus Christ than any man now living.”

Bruce R. McConkie seemed to be especially upset with “a current and unwise book” which he does not identify by name.
It is believed, however, that he was referring to the book What It Means To Know Christ, by George Pace, an associate professor at BYU. In the Foreword to this book, Dr. Pace maintained that people should “center their lives in Christ and . . . develop their own personal relationship with Him.” From an article published in the Seventh East Press, an independent student newspaper which is published just off campus of BYU, it would appear that George Pace has a number of supporters:

In any case, because the extracts from Clayton’s diaries throw so much light on early Mormonism we have published them under the title, Clayton’s Secret Writings Uncovered. For a complete treatment of the subject of Mormonism and truth we recommend our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? ◆ children, and maybe not during the lifetime of his grandchildren. He said that there is too much to be done before the Savior’s return can take place . . . as we measure time, it is a long way off.

He also spoke on a subject he said had been going around the church—developing a personal relationship with Christ. He said that those who preach this doctrine, that is, “take it as a goal in life and focus on it or single it out” become “unbalanced.” He discussed the fact that we worship God the Father in the name of Christ through the Holy Ghost, and that we don’t pick out one member of the Godhead to have a “special” relationship with, but should seek to obtain the spirit.

While Bruce R. McConkie claims to be one of the greatest authorities on the life of Christ, he is certainly out of step with the teachings of the Bible. From beginning to end the New Testament stresses the importance of a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. In Matthew 11:28 we find Jesus Himself saying: “Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.” This same theme continues right into the book of Revelation where Jesus says: “Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me” (Revelations 3:20). The Apostle Paul certainly taught a close personal relationship with Christ in his epistles. For instance, in Philippians 3:8-10 we read:

Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ,

And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith:

That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death.

Apostle McConkie’s teachings are not only out of harmony with the Bible, but they are contrary to the Book of Mormon as well. For example, McConkie claims that “We worship the Father and him only and no one else. We do not worship the Son . . .” He also warns that those who claim a personal relationship with Christ “often begin to pray directly to Christ because of some special friendship they feel has been developed. . . . Our prayers are addressed to the Father, and to him only.” The Book of Mormon, however, has the ancient Nephites both worshiping and praying to Jesus:

. . . they did cry out with one accord, saying:

Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him. (3 Nephi 11:16-17)

And behold, they began to pray; and they did pray unto Jesus, calling him their Lord and their God. (3 Nephi 19:18)

And when Jesus had spoken these words he came again unto his disciples; and behold they did pray steadfastly, without ceasing, unto him; and he did smile upon them again; and behold they were white, even as Jesus. (3 Nephi 19:30)

Actually, Apostle McConkie’s recent statement is only the last step on a long pathway leading away from Biblical teachings about Christ. This process began during Joseph Smith’s lifetime, although the Book of Mormon itself emphasized the importance of Jesus. The Book of Mormon, in fact, teaches that Jesus is God Himself manifest in the flesh (see Mosiah 15:1-5). Brigham Young, the second President of the Mormon Church, departed even further from Biblical doctrine in his teachings concerning the Godhead. For a complete treatment of the changing conception of God in Mormon theology we recommend our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 143-178.

In any case, we have found Apostle McConkie’s speech to be so extraordinary that we have reproduced it in its entirety. Our photographic reproduction of this speech was made directly from a copy acquired from McConkie’s office. It is entitled, Our Relationship With The Lord.

Danite Entry Crossed Out in Smith’s Diary

Although the Mormon leaders suppressed Joseph Smith’s private diaries for almost a century and a half, in the 1970s copies leaked out. In 1979 we were able to print his diaries for 1832-36, and just recently we completed his 1838-39 diaries. While these diaries are certainly not as sensational as the ones written in the 1840s, there is one entry that throws some important light on the secret band known as the Danites. David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, gave this information concerning the Danites:

In the spring of 1838, the heads of the church and many of the members had gone deep into error and blindness. . . . In June, 1838, at Far West, Mo., a secret organization was formed. Doctor Avard being put in as the leader of the band; a certain oath was to be administered to all the brethren to bind them to support the heads of the church in everything they should teach. All who refused to take this oath were considered dissenters from the church, and certain things were to be done concerning these dissenters, by Dr. Avard’s secret band. I make no farther statements now; but suffice it to say that my persecutions, for trying to show them their errors, became of such a nature that I had to leave the Latter Day Saints; . . . (An Address To All Believers In Christ, Richmond, Missouri, 1887, pages 27-28)

David Whitmer’s brother, John Whitmer (who was also a witness to the Book of Mormon) confirmed the allegation that there was a dangerous band formed in Far West to drive out dissenters:

Joseph Smith, Jr., S. Rigdon, and Hyrum Smith moved their families to this place. Far West, in the spring of 1838. As soon as they came here, they began to enforce their new organized plan, which caused dissensions and difficulties, threatenings and even murders. Smith called a council of the leaders together, in which council he stated that any person who said a word against the heads of the Church, should be driven over these prairies as a chased deer by a pack of hounds, having an illusion to the Gideonites, as they were termed, to justify themselves in their wicked designs. Thus on the 19th of June, 1838, they preached a sermon called the salt sermon, in which these Gideonites understood that they should drive the dissenters, as they termed those who believed not in their secret bands, in fornication, adultery or midnight machinations. . . . They had threatened us, to kill us, if we did not make restitutions to them, by upholding them in their wicked purposes and designs. . . . But to our great astonishment, when we were on our way home from Liberty, Clay County, we met the families of Oliver Cowdery and L.E. Johnson, whom they had driven from their homes, and robbed them of all their goods, save clothing, bedding, etc.

While we were gone Jo. and Rigdon and their band of Gadiatons kept up a guard, and watched our houses; and abused our families; and threatened them, if they were not gone by morning, they would be drove out, and threatened our lives, if they ever saw us in Far West. (John Whitmer’s History, page 22)
The Mormon writer William E. Berrett admitted that the Danite Band did exist, and that it was for the purpose of “plundering and murdering the enemies of the Saints,” he claimed that the Mormon leaders were not responsible for it being formed. According to the History of the Church, Joseph Smith made some very contradictory statements about this organization. On one occasion he said that it was organized but claimed that he did not have any knowledge of it at the time (see History of the Church, vol. 3, pages 178-182). On another occasion, however, Joseph Smith passed the whole thing off by saying, “The Danite system alluded to by Norton never had any existence” (History of the Church, vol. 6, page 165). Fortunately for the cause of truth, in 1838 Joseph Smith had his scribe George W. Robinson keep a diary which was called, “The Scriptory Book of Joseph Smith Jr President of The Church of Jesus Christ, of Latterday Saints in all the world.” This diary contains a very important entry under the date of July 27, 1838 which has been crossed out. H. Michael Marquardt, who made the transcription of the diary, worked very carefully with this portion of the record and was finally able to decipher most of the words that had been crossed out. He discovered that the entry related to the Danite Band. It not only confirmed the existence of the band but said it was organized for the purpose of making things right and cleansing the Church:

...according to the order of the Danites we have a company of Danites in these times, to put to right ... that which is not right, and to cleanse the Church of every great evil...

Mr. Marquardt points out that the account in Joseph Smith’s “Scriptory Book” agrees with other evidence about the Danites. For instance, he quotes Reed Peck as saying: “I heard Avid, on one occasion, say that the Danites were to consecrate their surplus property, and to come in by tens to do so. ...” Joseph Smith’s “Scriptory Book” agrees when it says that the Danites “came up to consecrate, by companies of tens,...”

While it is extremely interesting that Joseph Smith’s “Scriptory Book” would contain an entry concerning the Danites, the whole matter is made even more intriguing by the fact that there has been an attempt to obliterate the entry. Joseph Smith’s History of the Church relies on the “Scriptory Book” for the entries of July 26 and 28, but the entry for July 27—i.e., the portion concerning the Danites—has been omitted. We have included a photograph of the portion of the diary which was crossed out in our new publication, Joseph Smith’s 1838-39 Diaries. This book sells for $2.00 a copy.

For more information about the Danites see our book Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 428-450.

A PROPHET EMERITUS?

Joseph Smith became President of the Mormon Church before he reached his thirtieth birthday and Brigham Young, the second President, took over the reigns of leadership while he was still in his forties. The early Mormon Church was led by a group of men who were relatively young. In fact, seven of the original Twelve Apostles were only in their twenties when they were called to that ministry—four of them were only twenty-three years old. Today, things have completely charged. The Church is now led by a group of men who are very old. David O. McKay, the ninth President, lived to be ninety-six. The tenth President, Joseph Fielding Smith was ninety-five when he passed away. Harold B. Lee, the eleventh President, died at the age of seventy-four. The current President, Spencer W. Kimball, is now eighty-seven. He is in very poor health and is hardly able to function, yet he is still sustained as the “Prophet, Seer and Revelator” of the Mormon Church. It seems that there is no retirement for the Prophet nor for the members of the Council of the Twelve—Apostle LeGrand Richards is now ninety-six years old. A man could be completely senile and still be sustained as the “Living Prophet.”

While the Apostles and the First Presidency will not retire from their positions, they have placed seven members of the First Quorum of the Seventy on emeritus status since 1978. This means, of course, that these men have been “retired or honorably discharged from active duty because of age, infirmity, or long service, but retained on the rolls.”

The most interesting case of placing a Church leader on emeritus status occurred on October 6, 1979, when the Church Patriarch was released. In the afternoon session of general conference, President N. Eldon Tanner announced:

...we now designate Elder Eldred G. Smith as a Patriarch Emeritus, which means that he is honorably relieved of all duties and responsibilities pertaining to the office of Patriarch to the Church. (The Ensign, November 1979, page 18)

Since the Mormon leaders did not appoint anyone to replace Eldred G. Smith, it appears that they may be abolishing the office of Patriarch to the Church. This is an office which was supposed to be established by revelation. Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the tenth President of the Church said that “The office of Patriarch to the Church is one of two hereditary offices in the Church,...” (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 3, page 160). President Smith felt that this office would “last forever in the Church”:

It has always been understood, and so the revelations declare, that this office is hereditary...

It now appears, however, that the statement that the duty of Hyrum Smith was to the Church forever, because of his family, evidently conveys the thought that he would succeed to the office of Patriarch and that it should continue in his posteriority to the end of time, for, surely, it would have to continue in this way to last forever in the Church upon the earth among mortal men. (Ibid., page 164)

In any case, the following question comes to mind: If the Mormon Church can have a “Patriarch Emeritus,” why can’t it have a “Prophet Emeritus”? ◆

Kimball’s Journal Confirms Oath of Vengeance

We have recently printed one of Heber C. Kimball’s journals by the photomechanical method. Davis Bitton, formerly Assistant LDS Church Historian, described this journal as follows:

In this journal Heber C. Kimball, a well-known Mormon Apostle, gave some very important information concerning the “Oath of Vengeance” — an oath which used to be taken as part of the temple ritual. Although some members of the Mormon Church denied the existence of such an oath, just after the turn of the century the “Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate” investigated the matter and concluded:

In the protest signed and verified by the oath of Mr. Leilich it is claimed that Mr. Smoot has taken an oath as an apostle of the Mormon Church which is of such a nature as to render him incompetent to hold the office of Senator. From the testimony taken it appears that Mr. Smoot has taken an obligation which is prescribed by the Mormon Church and administered to those who go through a ceremony known as “taking the endowments.” It was testified by a number of witnesses who were examined during the investigation that one part of this obligation is expressed in substantially these words:

You and each of you do covenant and promise that you will pray and never cease to pray Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and to your children’s children unto the third and fourth generation.

The fact that an oath of vengeance is part of the endowment ceremonies and the nature and character of such oath was judicially determined in the third judicial court of Utah in the year 1889 in the matter of the application of John Moore and others to become citizens of the United States.

The obligation hereinafter set forth is an oath of disloyalty to the Government which the rules of the Mormon Church require, or at least encourage, every member of that organization to take. It is in harmony with the views and conduct of the leaders of the Mormon people in former days, when they openly defied the Government of the United States, and is also in harmony with the conduct of those who give the law to the Mormon Church today in their defiant disregard of the laws against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. It may be that many of those who take this obligation do so without realizing its reasonable import; but the fact that the first presidency and twelve apostles retain an obligation of that nature in the ceremonies of the church shows that at heart they are hostile to this nation and disloyal to its Government. (The Reed Smoot Case, vol. 4, pages 495-497)

Joseph Smith’s brother William publicly charged that the “Oath of Vengeance” was administered in Nauvoo. Heber C. Kimball’s journal confirms this accusation. On December 21, 1845, we find this report of remarks made in the temple:

Elder Kimball . . . said the Twelve would have to leave shortly, for a charge of treason would be brought against them far swearing us to avenge the blood of the anointed ones, and some one would reveal it, and we shall have to part some day between sundown and dark—. . . I have covenanted, and never will rest nor my posterity after me until those men who killed Joseph & Hyrum have been wiped out of the earth. (Heber C. Kimball’s Journal, December 21, 1845)

Below is a photograph of the portion of Heber C. Kimball’s Journal where he tells of the “Oath of Vengeance.”

As we have mentioned before, some Mormon apologists have maintained that there was no “Oath of Vengeance” in the temple ceremony. The journal of Heber C. Kimball, however, completely destroys their argument. The “Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon” also makes it very plain that there was such an oath. Under the date of December 6, 1889, the Apostle Cannon recorded the following in his dairy:

About 4:30 p.m. this meeting adjourned and was followed by a meeting of Presidents Woodruff, Cannon and Smith and Bros. Lyman and Grant. . . . In speaking of the recent examination before Judge Anderson Father said that he understood when he had his endowments in Nauvoo that he took an oath against the murderers of the Prophet Joseph as well as other prophets, and if he had ever met any of those who had taken a hand in that massacre he would undoubtedly have attempted to avenge the blood of the martyrs. The Prophet charged Stephen Markham to avenge his blood should he be slain. . . . (“Daily Journal of Abraham H. Cannon,” December 6, 1889, page 205)

The Apostle Cannon went on to relate that Joseph F. Smith, who later became the sixth President of the Mormon Church, was about to murder a man with his pocket knife if he even expressed approval of Joseph Smith’s death:

. . . Bro. Joseph F. Smith was traveling some years ago near Carthage when he met a man who said he had just arrived five minutes too late to see the Smiths killed. Instantly a dark cloud seemed to overshadow Bro. Smith and he asked how this man looked upon the deed. Bro. S. was oppressed by a most horrible feeling as he waited for a reply. After a brief pause the man answered, “Just as I have always looked upon it—that it was a d—d cold-blooded murder.” The cloud immediately lifted from Bro. Smith and he found that he had his open pocket knife grasped in his hand in his pocket, and he believes that had this man given his approval to that murder of the prophets he would have immediately struck him to the heart. (Ibid., pages 205-206)

In Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 475, we gave additional information on the “Oath of Vengeance” and speculated as to when it was actually removed from the temple ceremony. Recently we obtained a photograph of a letter written by George F. Richards to the President of the St. George Temple which shows that all vestiges of the oath had been removed by 1927:

We have the Temple ordinances written into the books for the Presidents of Temples and are preparing the Part books and will get them to you in the near future, or at conference time.

At request of President Grant we have already adopted some of the changes decided upon, and it will be in order for you to do the same.

In sealing for the dead wether one or both be dead, omit the kissing. Omit from the prayer in the circles all reference to avenging the blood of the Prophets. Omit from the ordinance and lecture all reference to retribution. This last change can be made with a day’s notice to those taking the parts that contain such reference.

This letter is written with the approval of the Presidency. (Letter from George F. Richards to the President of the St. George Temple, dated February 15, 1927)

The Reed Smoot Case, the diaries of Heber C. Kimball and Abraham H. Cannon and the letter of George F. Richards prove beyond all doubt that the Church had an “Oath of Vengeance” which finally had to be removed from the temple ceremony.
Those who are interested in collecting rare Mormon documents may be interested in obtaining our new publication, Heber C. Kimball’s Journal, November 21, 1845 to January 7, 1846. This book does not contain a transcript but does have photographs of this 370-page document. While this journal is marked as “Very Confidential” and has been “Restricted” by Church leaders, it is composed mostly of lists of names of people who participated in the temple rituals. It does tell of dances, meetings and other activities held in the Nauvoo Temple but is certainly not as sensational as many of the other journals written by early Mormons. ♦

ABSOLUTELY NO MIDDLE GROUND

Since we began our work in the early 1960s, a great deal of historical information has come to light which shows that Mormonism is not based upon a solid foundation. The General Authorities of the Church could not deal with the problems and called upon the historians hoping that they could provide some answers. Leonard J. Arrington was called to be Church Historian and a whole crew of professionally trained people began working with the documents. Unfortunately for the Church, however, the results were disastrous. As the historians began their work, they saw that the problems were much deeper than anyone had ever realized. Instead of providing additional evidence for the Church, the original foundational documents proved to be very embarrassing. Some of the prominent historians, therefore, began to lose faith in the Church and to search for some type of “middle ground.” At first the Mormon leaders seemed to be oblivious to what was happening, but as time went on they began to comprehend the gravity of the situation. As we indicated earlier, they finally suppressed the 16-volume sesquicentennial history, moved “the Historical Department from the main source of manuscripts at Church Headquarters in Salt Lake City to BYU,” and released Leonard J. Arrington as Church Historian. The Church leaders apparently realize that Dr. Arrington is too prominent a man to publically take issue with, but they hope that his influence will gradually be dissolved. On March 14, 1982, the Seventh East Press printed the following:

> Along one hall on the second floor [of] the Church Historical Department (LDS Church Office Building) hang portraits of LDS Church Historians from the beginning down to Elder G. Homer Durham. Interestingly, however, there is no portrait of Leonard J. Arrington.

The same issue of Seventh East Press reported:

> In a recent lecture . . . James L. Clayton . . . announced that Dr. Leonard J. Arrington has been dismissed as LDS Church Historian. . . . Reliable sources report that Elder G. Homer Durham, member of the presidency of the First Quorum of Seventies, has been set apart as the new Church Historian.

Although the Church has made no official announcement, the Sunstone Review for May 1982, asserted that “Elder G. Homer Durham . . . was called and set apart as Church Historian on February 2.” If this report is true, it is certainly a very strange procedure. Dr. Arrington was publicly “sustained in the April 1972 General Conference” (Ibid.), but no announcement was ever made by the Church that he had been released. Durham, on the other hand, apparently replaced Arrington without being publicly sustained in the April 1982 conference. This seems to be a rather underhanded way of removing Dr. Arrington from his position.

In any case, in “a draft of the first chapter of a manuscript for a book entitled No Middle Ground,” Professor Louis C. Midgley, of Brigham Young University, has accused some Mormon historians of “caving in” on the vital issues:

> I wish to show that what is behind the writing of at least some recent Mormon history is a rash and unnecessary caving in on crucial issues. . . . I would prefer to see Mormon history written with an eye to building and defending the Kingdom of God; it is a grave mistake for a Mormon to do otherwise. (“The Question of Faith and History,” pages 1 and 2)

Professor Midgley maintains that it is impossible for Mormon leaders to take a neutral position with regard to Joseph Smith:

> Mormon historians who attempt to account for Joseph and the restoration with one of the “countless options” of Professor Marty’s middle ground between genuine prophet and fraud will have invoked theories that necessarily entail a problematic competing “religious” faith . . . from the point of view of the Mormon faithful . . . any explanation of Joseph’s prophetic claims that does not accept him as a genuine prophet has in effect rejected him as a fraud: there is no real middle ground between those alternatives. All of the “countless options” available to explain what might have caused Joseph to claim prophetic revelations other than God end up being just different versions of the fraud thesis. To substitute illusion, delusion or madness for conscious fraud (or charlatan) is obviously destructive to the Mormon faith. For the Mormon historian to toy with one of these “countless options” is therefore tantamount to rejecting Joseph’s prophetic claims. To explain Joseph’s revelations (for example, the Book of Mormon, Book of Moses, Book of Abraham) as mere products of culture is an act of treason; it would amount to handing over the sacred texts to the enemy by treating these texts as somehow merely the invention of Joseph Smith. . . . The gentiles . . . have now offered what they believe is a choice different than that of prophet or fraud: they propose a choice between prophet and product of culture. As I will show, these product-of-culture explanations make it next to impossible for the historian, or those influenced by his explanations, to take the gospel seriously; they are also only nice ways of saying fraud.

> The Mormon position has always been to argue that on the decisive question of the veracity of Joseph’s prophetic revelations there are only two alternatives: he was either a genuine prophet or a base fraud. . . .

> But are Mormon historians now really tempted by the New Chicago Argument? Are Mormons really interested in reaching such an accommodation with secular and gentile historians? Are Mormon historians now busy grasping for a middle ground between prophet and fraud in their accounts of Joseph Smith and the Restored Gospel? The answer is yes! . . . Certain Mormon historians—the New Mormon Apologists, armed with the Chicago Argument—are busy attempting to discover a safe middle ground—a kind of neutral territory somewhere between divine revelation on the one hand and outrageous fraud on the other; . . . Clearly one would have no interest in such detachment or neutrality unless one began with a premise that in effect denied the possibility that the Saints have had access to genuine prophetic revelation . . . the history of the Mormon community would be, in the hands of the New Apologists, only the story of a people guided by an illusion, and the telling of that story would have as its end the utter disillusionment of that people. . . .

> The real challenge to the Restored Gospel is not with the findings; or theories of some special science, but with history . . . Is it not with historical questions or with an examination of historical documents or artifacts where the attack on the Restored Gospel always begins and where the greatest difficulties arise? The pressure of such questions has taken its toll on Mormon historians. The suggestion is currently being advanced, sometimes in a rather cautious and indirect manner by the New Mormon Apologists, that it is now both necessary and even quite proper to abandon the old notions such as the belief that the Book of Mormon and the special revelations of Joseph Smith are genuinely prophetic. . . . some have been quick to assume that the battle for the capital has been decided and that Mormon faith has finally lost the war. . . . The New Mormon Apologists have thus striven to show that there is nothing in the Book of Mormon or the early teachings of Joseph Smith that was not wholly typical of the sectarian religious background of New England and western New York. . . . Those who now toy with various so-called middle-ground alternative explanations of the restoration have probably not worked out the implications of their endeavor or sensed the grave risks involved in their project—that seems to be the common problem . . . There is no way around the fundamental controversy about his [Smith’s] claims to some neutral or middle ground somewhere between the traditional alternatives of prophet or fraud. A neutral or presumably “objective” explanation would not be a genuinely higher ground. To attempt such a maneuver is to enter the darkness of a night in which all cats are grey. (Ibid., pages 16-19, 21-23 and 28)

Davis Bitton, who used to serve as Assistant Church Historian under Leonard Arrington, commented on Midgley’s paper. Midgley responded by accusing Professor Bitton of defending the idea of a “middle ground between prophet and fraud.” He went on to stress that

The substantive arguments that propose to be “middle-ground” explanations have, up to this point, all turned out to be merely rather obvious variations on the fraud thesis. (“The San Antonio Discussion On Mormon Historiography,” page 8)

Jan Shipps also commented on Midgley’s paper. In reply, Midgley said that

Professor Shipps’ passion to defend the “club members” in the Mormon History Association from serious criticism has led her into the land of murky distinctions. . . . (Ibid., page 13)

On page 10 of the same paper, Midgley claimed that Shipps’ “hero is none other than Leonard J. Arrington”—the man who was recently released from his position as Church Historian. Midgley went to say that “Hugh Nibley is a hero and Fawn Brodie a villain in my plot. I think that Jan Shipps is somehow offended because she senses that my hero is not Leonard J. Arrington. I must have violated a club rule.” (Ibid., page 15)

While Professor Midgley finds it easy to condemn Mormon historians, he probably does not realize the serious problems they are facing. Most of them would probably be elated to find evidence that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. The documents, however, point in the opposite direction. Under these circumstances, we can understand why Mormon historians would try to find a neutral position. Midgley, of course, is correct in saying there is really no middle ground. As the Mormon Apostle Orson Pratt once said,

The Book of Mormon . . . must be either true or false. If true, it is one of the most important messages ever sent from God. . . . If false, it is one of the most cunning, wicked, bold, deep-laid impositions ever palmed upon the world, calculated to deceive and ruin millions. . . . (Orson Pratt’s Works, “Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon,” 1851, page 1)

Although some of the historians now agree with us that the Book of Mormon was not really translated from gold plates, they feel that we have been too harsh on Joseph Smith in our publications. Actually, the question of whether Joseph Smith was self-deceived, a deliberate impostor or a combination of both is one that is very difficult to answer. We do not pretend to know what was going on in his mind, and therefore we do not claim to have the final solution to this problem. If the historians prefer to believe that Joseph Smith was a “well-meaning but mistaken” man, we will not spend a great deal of time arguing about the matter. The important thing is whether Smith actually had gold plates written by the ancient Nephites. If he did not, then the whole foundation of Mormonism collapses.

In our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we deal at great length with the question of the origin of Mormonism. Through quotations and photographs from hundreds of printed sources and original documents, we prove conclusively that Mormonism is based on a sandy foundation. The 1972 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? was proclaimed by Wesley P. Walters to be “the most definitive work in print on the fallacies of Mormonism.” We feel that the new 1982 enlarged edition is even better, and we urge all those who have not yet obtained a copy to do so. The price for Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is $11.95 ($14.95 for hardback). Mail orders please include 10% for postage and handling.

Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum are considered by the Mormon people to have been two of the greatest men who ever lived. The Doctrine and Covenants says that “their names will be classed among the martyrs of religion; . . . From age to age shall their names go down to posterity as gems for the sanctified” (Doctrine and Covenants, Section 135, verse 6). Critics, on the other hand, charge that Joseph and Hyrum led the people astray from the true Gospel of Christ. Among other things, the Smiths were charged with being involved in money digging and magic practices. Recently some new evidence has been discovered which strengthens this charge.

The Smith family’s involvement with the occult goes back before the Book of Mormon was “translated.” In 1971 Wesley P. Walters found an original document which proves that Joseph Smith was a “glass looker” and that he was arrested, tried and found guilty by a justice of the peace in Bainbridge, N.Y. in 1826 (see photograph in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 33).

This trial proves that Joseph Smith used a stone which he placed in his hat to try to locate buried treasures. This was, of course, a common practice by magicians and individuals influenced by the occult. As soon as the Book of Mormon was published, there was an attempt to link Joseph Smith with “Walters the Magician, who has strange books, and deals with familiar spirits; . . .” (Palmyra Reflector, June 1830, as cited in A New Witness For Christ in America, vol. 1, page 273). Walters had been involved with money digging in Palmyra, and it was claimed that “his mantle fell upon the Prophet . . .” (Ibid., page 275).

In 1974 Dr. Reed Durham, who was director of the LDS Institute of Religion at the University of Utah and president of the Mormon History Association, made a discovery that was so startling that it caused great consternation among Mormon scholars and officials. Dr. Durham found that what had previously been identified as the “Masonic jewel of the Prophet Joseph Smith” was in reality a “Jupiter talisman.” This is a medallion which contains material relating to astrology and magic. Dr. Durham, apparently not realizing the devastating implications of his discovery, announced this important find in his presidential address before the Mormon History Association on April 20, 1974:

...I should like to initiate all of you into what is perhaps the strangest, the most mysterious, occult-like esoteric, and yet Masonically oriented practice ever adopted by Joseph Smith... All available evidence suggests that Joseph Smith the Prophet possessed a magical Masonic medallion, or talisman, which he worked during his lifetime and which was evidently on his person when he was martyred. ...I wasn’t able to find what this was, for—as I said—two months; and finally, in a magic book printed in England in 1801, published in America in 1804, and I traced it to Manchester, and to New York. It was a magic book by Francis Barrett and, to and behold, how thrilled I was when I saw in his list of magic seals the very talisman which Joseph Smith had in his possession at the time of his martyrdom (Mormon Miscellaneous, vol. 1, no. 1, October 1975, pages 14-15).

Recently we were given photocopies of some material which Mormon scholars say was in the possession of Joseph Smith’s brother, Hyrum. We have compared it with the same book Reed Durham used to identify Joseph Smith’s Jupiter talisman (The Magis, by Francis Barrett) and found that it is definitely magic material. Pearson H. Corbett describes these “Relics” of Hyrum Smith on page 453 of his book, Hyrum Smith—Patriarch:

Dagger, Masonic ten inch, stainless steel—wooden handle—Masonic symbols on blade.
Emblematic parchments—Masonic—three, original hand painted on heavy bodied paper—on border appears initials “I.H.S.”...
Pouch, Masonic cotton fabric 4” x 4” with draw string attached.

The reader will find a photograph of one of the parchments on the first page of this newsletter. Eldred G. Smith, Church Patriarch Emeritus, has possession of these relics at the present time. He is convinced that they belonged to his great-great grandfather, Hyrum Smith, and he freely admits that they may be “cabalistic” in origin—i.e., linked to occult or mystic writings. While he used to freely display these relics to groups, he is more cautious at the present time because he is not sure of what they really are. He apparently does not want to cause embarrassment to the Church.

At any rate, the photograph which appears after page 106 in Francis Barrett’s book, The Magis (facsimile reprint by University Books, Inc., 1967), proves beyond all doubt that the Hyrum Smith material comes from magic. For example, the following object appears on one of the parchments.

The reader will notice that the shape of this object is almost identical to a drawing found in Barrett’s book (originally printed in 1801).

The reader will also notice that the drawings in both the parchment and Barrett’s book contain the name “Raphael” written in the center. The name of this archangel comes from the Apocrypha and does not appear in most Protestant Bibles. Joseph Smith, however, does refer to “the voice of... Raphael” in a revelation published in the Doctrine and Covenants 128:21. In any case, in the book The Grimoire of Armadel, translated and edited by S. L. McGregor Mathers, New York, 1980, page 30, we read that “Raphael is a Spirit of Science who did teach unto Solomon Knowledge and Wisdom. He is to be invoked on a Sunday before Sunrise.”

The reader will notice that there are two circular objects which appear in the Hyrum Smith material. These same objects are repeated on another parchment.

Although these two circular objects are not found in Barrett’s book, they do appear in other books about magic. In fact, we have found them in a book which was printed in 1584. This book, The Discoverie of Witchcraft, by Reginald Scot, was photographically reprinted in 1971. The following is taken from page 401 of that book. The reader will notice that the round objects are just like the ones found in the Hyrum Smith parchments.
Under one of the objects we find this message (we have taken the liberty of converting it into modern English): “Whoso beareth this sign about him, all spirits shall do him homage.” These circular objects are apparently pentacles or talismans. It would probably be difficult for those not involved in magic to distinguish a pentacle from a talisman. In The Encyclopedia of Occult Sciences, page 332, we read:

There are two kinds of pentacles, some universal (for invocations and spells), the others personal.

Pentacles, says Pierre Fiobb, are not talismans. The latter assist in the polarisation of fluids, whereas pentacles curtain the polarised fluids. Talismans are intermediaries, pentacles generators. . . .

A pentacle must be engraved on metal corresponding to the planet whence it comes, or else on virgin parchment or china.

The books The Greater Key of Solomon and Raphael’s Ancient Manuscript of Talismanic Magic show quite a number of pentacles and talismans.

On one of the Hyrum Smith parchments we find the following object (a slightly different version appears on the parchment shown on the front of this newsletter). The reader will notice that the name of God, Tetragrammaton, is written around the edge of the object. It is broken up as follows: Tetra-gram-ma-ton. We have added some printed letters to help the reader locate the component parts of the name.

In the book, The Ancients Book of Magic, by Lewis de Claremont, page 11, we find an exact duplicate of the drawing on the Smith parchment.

The reader will notice that the word “Tetragrammaton” is written on this object in the same way it appears on the Smith parchment. This word is frequently used in books on magic. Another name which appears on one of the Smith parchments is “Agla.” This name is also used in magic. We find the words “Agla” and “Tetragrammaton” written on both a magic sword and a wand in Barrett’s book.

The reader will remember that when Pearson Corbett spoke of the Hyrum Smith “Relics,” he listed a “Dagger” with “Masonic symbols on blade.” We compared photocopies of this knife with Barrett’s book (the book Dr. Durham used to identify Joseph Smith’s Jupiter talisman) and found that the markings on it were also derived from magic. Some of the markings, in fact, are found on a Mars talisman which is right next to the Jupiter talisman (see drawings in The Magis, facing page 174). On the one side of the talisman we find the Hebrew characters forming the word Adonai (Lord). These same characters are found on the knife. On the second side of the talisman we find what is known as the Seal of Mars. This is also found on the second side of the knife. Below is a comparison of the Seal of Mars as it appears on the talisman (above) with the way it appears on the knife.

Knives play a very important part in magic rituals. A number of drawings of knives with mysterious markings on them are found in The Greater Key of Solomon, between pages 97 and 98.

Pearson Corbett refers to one of Hyrum Smith’s relics as a “Pouch, Masonic cotton fabric. . . .” It is believed that this pouch was used to hold the magic parchments.

In a new book we are preparing, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, we intend to have photographs of the parchments, both sides of the knife and the pouch.

Just after writing the above, we received photocopies from a manuscript entitled, “The Masonic Emblems & Parchments of Joseph & Hyrum Smith,” compiled by Arturo de Hoyos. With the exception of the knife, the author has linked the Hyrum Smith material to magic sources and has even found a great deal of additional material relating to the subject. The fact that we did our research completely independently and yet arrived at the same conclusions seems to show how strong the case is that the Hyrum Smith material was derived from magic. While we found the strange object with the name “Raphael” written on it in The Magis, Mr. de Hoyos located the same drawing in The Ancients Book of Magic (a book we also used to identify one of the other objects). The drawing in The Ancients Book of Magic, was apparently taken from The Magis (the word “Raphael” is illegible in The Ancients Book of Magic and in de Hoyos’ manuscript, whereas it is very readable in The Magis). While Mr. de Hoyos also used The Ancients Book of Magic to identify the pentacles or talismans on the Hyrum Smith parchments, we used The Discoverie of Witchcraft, a book originally published in 1584. The drawings in the two books appear to contain minor differences, although they are obviously representations of the same objects. In any case, we feel that Arturo de Hoyos has produced an excellent piece of work on the Hyrum Smith material. While he seems to be sympathetic to Joseph and Hyrum Smith, de Hoyos has to admit that it is puzzling that they would possess items linked to the occult:

. . . . the three parchments which belonged to the Patriarch Hyrum Smith will be discussed. These parchments are presently in the possession of [the] E.G. Smith family, and to my knowledge no interpretation of the figures found on them is to be found. . . .
These parchments have been termed “Masonic,” although they bear no direct relation to the Masonic ritual. There are however certain aspects of the parchments which do bear some relationship to Freemasonry.

It is very possible that Hyrum Smith learned about these charms from his fellow Masons, as Masons do attach importance to certain signs and emblems, and ascribe meanings to the same. . . . One cannot help but wonder the reason why the Prophet Joseph Smith, and his brother, Hyrum, the Patriarch would possess articles such as they did unless they actually believed that these items did possess some sort of supernatural power, or that they were a “key” to receiving power or protection. Is it possible that just as the Masonic ritual, which Joseph termed the “apostate endowment” retained principles of truth, that these Pentacles which have come down through the ages to be associated [sic] with witchcraft, black magic, and the occult as a whole yet contain elements of truth which were recognized by the Prophet? . . . Whatever the case may be both Joseph and Hyrum did possess these charms and it seems highly unlikely that there was not a legitimate reason for this (“The Masonic Emblem & Parchments of Joseph & Hyrum Smith,” Compiled by Arturo de Hoyos, 1982, pages 1 and 2).

Suppressed Document?

We have been told that there is a very important document being suppressed which may relate to the involvement of the early Mormon leaders in magic. This is a history of the Church written by Oliver Cowdery. Cowdery, of course, was one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. According to Joseph Fielding Smith, he was “appointed to assist Joseph in . . . keeping a history of the Church . . . .” Cowdery kept this record until 1831 when John Whitmer was commanded “to keep the church record and history continually; for Oliver Cowdery I have appointed to another office” (Doctrines and Covenants 47:3). In John Whitmer’s history of the Church, he wrote that “Oliver Cowdery has written the commencement of the church history, commencing at the time of the finding of the plates, up to June 12, 1831” (John Whitmer’s History, page 4). While Dean C. Jessee said that the Cowdery history “has not been found” (Brigham Young University Studies, Summer 1971, page 461), Church Historian Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the tenth President of the Church, indicated that it was in the Historian’s Office:

Oliver Cowdery was the first one appointed to assist Joseph in transcribing and keeping a history of the Church; John Whitmer took his place, when Oliver Cowdery was given something else to do. We have on file in the Historian’s Office the records written in the hand writing of Oliver Cowdery, the first historian, or recorder of the Church (Doctrines of Salvation, vol. 2, page 201).

We understand that a number of documents which were originally stored in the Church Historian’s Office were later moved to the vault of the First Presidency. This was undoubtedly done to keep them out of the hands of the public. The Mormon leaders were especially concerned about this matter when Dr. Leonard J. Arrington became Church Historian. In any case, we understand that the Cowdery history of the Church (not to be confused with the history that was published in the Messenger and Advocate) is now located in the First Presidency’s vault. At one time an inventory was made of what was contained in the vault. When the Cowdery history was opened, it was discovered that it contained magic characters!

A number of years ago, we tried to get the Church to make Cowdery’s history and other documents available. We were informed by the Assistant Church Historian, however, that Joseph Fielding Smith was “not interested in the project you have in mind” (Letter from A. William Lund, as cited in The Case Against Mormonism, vol. 1, page 77). Since Cowdery’s history is supposed to go back to the time Joseph Smith found the plates, it may contain many things that would be embarrassing to the Church. If any of our readers have any additional information on the contents of Cowdery’s history (especially with regard to the charge that it contains magic characters) we would appreciate hearing about it.

The Gold Plates and Magic Characters

On May 3, 1980, the Church Section of the Mormon newspaper, Deseret News, reported:

A hand-written sheet of paper with characters supposedly copied directly from the gold plates in 1828, and also bearing other writing and the signature of Joseph Smith, has been found. . . . Written on the back, apparently after Harris brought the paper back from his encounter with Professor Anthon, are the following words (and spellings):

> These caracters were diligently copied by my own hand from the plates of gold and given to Martin Harris who took them to New York City but the learned could not translate it because the Lord would not open it to them in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah written in the 29th chapter and 11th verse. [signed] Joseph Smith Jr.

> “In my judgment, this writing is that of Joseph Smith,” said Dean C. Jessee, senior historical associate in the Church Historical Department.

After the discovery of the transcript was announced, Church scholar Hugh Nibley triumphantly announced: “Of course it’s translatable” (Herald, Provo, Utah, May 1, 1980). According to the Herald, “Nibley also said he counted at least two dozen out of 47 characters in the Demotic alphabet that could be given phonetic value. This offers as good a test as we’ll ever get.”

Mormon scholars have now had the transcript for two and a half years, and all attempts to translate it have ended in failure. The Mormon Egyptologist Edward H. Ashment, who originally had a great interest in the document, has now given up the idea of trying to link it to Egyptian writing. This is very important because the Book of Mormon claims to have been written in “reformed Egyptian.” Since all efforts by Mormon scholars to decipher the transcript through Egyptology have failed, scholars must now look for other alternatives. Many people feel that the document is merely a product of Joseph Smith’s vivid imagination. While this may be the true explanation, there are still other theories that need investigation. For instance, a former Brigham Young University professor has maintained for a number of years that the characters on the Anthon Transcript are taken from works on magic and astrology. Although we felt that he could demonstrate a few parallels, we have never taken this idea too seriously. Recently, however, evidence linking Joseph Smith and his family to magical practices has mounted to the point where we feel we have to take a closer look at this idea. We must admit that there are many magic characters which bear a striking resemblance to those on the Joseph Smith transcript.
For instance, in a script found in The Greater Key of Solomon, Plate XIII, we find this character:

![Character Image]

The reader will notice how similar this appears to a character found in Smith’s transcript:

![Character Image]

Although a number of similarities have been noted, at this point we do not think they are sufficient to prove the case. In our book, Book of Mormon “Caractors” Found, we show that there are many similarities to common English characters.

One thing that makes us suspect that there may be a connection to magic is the circular object which appears in the lower right hand corner of Joseph Smith’s transcript. As we pointed out in Book of Mormon “Caractors” Found, page 11, the circular object bears some resemblance to Joseph Smith’s magic talisman. In both cases we have a circle drawn within another circle with characters running around the edge and within the center circle. In magic books it is claimed that a circle drawn within a circle has great power. In The Ancients Book of Magic, page 10, we learn that a person who wants to contact the spirits must draw a circle:

![Circled Image]

Once he enters into the circle with his books, wands, incense and all things he needs, he draws the outer circle about 3 inches away from the circle he has already drawn . . .

The operator must remember not to leave this circle during the whole invocation until the closing words have been said, for as long as he remains in the circle, no matter how fierce the demons may be they cannot break through the walls of the circle, . . . he is protected by the Legion of 72 who form a protecting ring around the circle whence no one can farce their way through, . . .

Like Joseph Smith’s Jupiter talisman, Hyrum Smith’s pentacles or talismans have a circle within a circle. Another thing that really interests us about Joseph Smith’s Book of Mormon transcript is that the writing between the two circles appears to be divided into four parts. It is a common practice by those making magic circles to divide the area between the two circles into four parts and write four names of God, names of angels or other messages in these sections. Above is a drawing of a magic circle compared with the drawing Joseph Smith took from the “gold plates” of the Book of Mormon. In the magic circle the four sections are divided by crosses. In Joseph Smith’s drawing the circle appears to be divided by a repeat of the same character.

If the area between the two circles in Joseph Smith’s transcript is divided into four sections, as we think the evidence seems to show, then it may be possible that names for God or angels are recorded in cipher in this area. Many of these names can be found in the following books: The Magis, Raphael’s Ancient Manuscript Of Talismanic Magic, The Greater Key of Solomon and The Grimoire of Armadel. While it could be possible that each character on Joseph Smith’s transcript has an English equivalent, many of the magic alphabets are cipher for Hebrew or Arabic writing. Anyone who wishes to seriously test the transcript to see if it is in cipher should also be aware of the following: the first four columns of characters which are found to the left of the circular object appear to show “an intentional grouping of symbols” (BYU Studies, Spring 1980, page 335). It could very well be that these groupings are supposed to represent words. If the manuscript is in cipher, this could be very important to a person trying to break the code. A computer, of course, would be an important tool for anyone trying to decipher Joseph Smith’s transcript. Below the reader will find a copy of the complete transcript with arrows marking the places where the words (if they are really words) may divide.

ENOCH’S GOLD PLATE

Since Joseph Smith was involved in magic and money-digging, he must have had a keen interest in legends relating to these matters. One legend that may have had a real influence on the Book of Mormon is that concerning Enoch. In the talk Reed Durham gave in 1974, he revealed that,

There is a famous legend which the grand orator elaborates in lecture form in the ceremonies of the 13th, 14th and 21st degrees of Masonry which has some very ancient roots, bearing remarkable similarity to Mormonism. . . . Enoch is the central figure in the legend. It is with Enoch that the remarkable resemblances with Joseph Smith and Mormon history become disconcertingly dear. . . .
A photograph of the recently discovered document which is supposed to contain characters from the gold plates of the Book of Mormon. To the left we have added arrows to show where words may divide in the first line. These divisions seem to appear throughout the first four lines.
The parallels of Joseph Smith and the history of Mormonism are so unmistakable, that to explain them only as coincidence would be ridiculous (Mormon Miscellaneous, October 1975, pages 15-16).

Jack Adamson had pointed out parallels between the legend of Enoch many years ago. He referred to two books from which he derived most of his material. One of them was Thomas S. Webb’s Freemason’s Monitor. Wesley P. Walters has furnished us with photocopies from the 1802 edition from which we quote the following:

Enoch, the son of Jared, was the sixth son in descent from Adam . . . God appeared to him in a vision, . . . a mountain seemed to rise to the heavens, and Enoch was transferred to the top thereof, where he beheld a triangular plate of gold, . . . upon which were some characters which he received a strict injunction never to pronounce. —Presently he seemed to be lowered perpendicularly into the bowels of the earth, through nine arches; in the ninth, or deepest of which, he saw the same brilliant plate which was shewn to him in the mountain.

Enoch, being inspired by the Most High, and in commemoration of this wonderful vision, built a temple under ground, . . .

This happened in that part of the world which was afterwards . . . known by the name of the Holy Land.

Enoch, in imitation of what he had seen, caused a triangular plate of gold to be made, . . . He then engraved upon it the same ineffable characters which God had shewn to him, and placed it on a triangular pedestal of white marble, which he deposited in the ninth, or deepest arch . . . .

Enoch perceiving that the knowledge of the arts was likely to be lost in the general destruction, and being desirous of preserving the principles of the sciences, . . . he built two great pillars on the top of the highest mountain, the one of brass, . . . the other of marble, . . . and he engraved on the marble pillar, hieroglyphics . . . he engraved on the pillar of brass the principles of the liberal arts, particularly of masonry . . . the pillar of brass withstood the water, by which means the ancient state of the liberal arts, and particularly masonry, has been handed down to us (Freemason’s Monitor, New York, 1802, pages 245, 246, 247 and 249).

The Freemason’s Monitor goes on to relate that God promised Moses that “some of his descendants” would find the “plate of Gold.” When Solomon decided to build the temple, he chose the very place where the plate was buried. In digging for the foundations “an ancient edifice” and a “Quantity of treasure” were discovered. Solomon thought it might be the remains of an idolatrous temple, and therefore “made choice of another place, where the temple was erected”—i.e., Mount Moriah. Later Solomon sent the “three grand master architects” back to the first place, where the temple was erected”—i.e., Mount Moriah. Later Solomon sent the “three grand master architects” back to the first location to hunt for more treasure. They found “a large stone, perfectly square. With much difficulty they raised it, when the mouth of a deep and dismal cavern appeared” (Ibid., page 252).

After some problems, they went into the cavern where they found the “golden plate” and “observed certain characters engraved thereon, of the meaning of which they were then ignorant; . . .” (page 254). The next morning the three men took the plate to Solomon. Solomon and the King of Tyre then “explained to them the sacred characters engraven upon the golden plate.” Solomon had previously “caused a cavern to be built under the temple” on Mount Moriah (Ibid., page 251), and the “golden plate” was concealed in this “secret vault” (page 256).

The parallels to the Book of Mormon should be obvious to all those who are acquainted with that book. To begin with, Enoch was supposed to have recorded the secrets of Masonry on a “plate of gold” and a “pillar of brass.” According to Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon was “written upon gold plates” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:34), and the Book of Mormon itself says that the ancient Nephites also had “plates of brass” (1 Nephi 3:3). It is interesting that in both cases the important messages would be recorded on “gold” and “brass.” Even more interesting, however, is the fact that both Mormons and Masons say the sacred writings were concealed in a hill. In addition, both maintain that the treasure was transferred from one underground location to another. Thomas Webb says that the gold plate was hidden in an underground cavern by Enoch and later transferred to a cavern which was dug under the temple on Mount Moriah. In the Book of Mormon, Ammoron originally hid the “sacred” records in the hill Shim (4 Nephi 1:48; Mormon 1:3), but Mormon later went “to the hill Shim, and did take up all the records which Ammoron had hid up unto the Lord” (Mormon 4:23). These records were later deposited in “the hill Cumorah” (Mormon 6:6). Even the name of the hill (Cumorah) reminds one of Moriah. In fact, if the first two letters are removed from Cumorah, we have MORAH, which is very close to MORIAH. In Masonic tradition, Solomon is the one who gives directions to transfer the gold plates to the cavern under the temple on Mount Moriah. In the Book of Mormon it is Mormon who brings the plates from the hill Shim to the hill Cumorah. Many years ago, before we even thought about the parallel between Solomon and Mormon, we suggested that the name Mormon “can be made by adding the first three letters of Moriah (MORIah), found in Genesis 22:2, with the last three letters of Solomon (solomon), found in 2 Samuel 5:14. Thus we would obtain MORMON” (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 95).

It is interesting to note that Joseph Smith’s own brother, Hyrum, became a member of the Mount Moriah Lodge before the Book of Mormon was written. Reed Durham says that “Masonry in the Church had its origin prior to the time Joseph Smith became a Mason. . . . Hyrum received the first degrees of Masonry in Mount Moriah Lodge No. 112 of Palmyra, New York, at about the same time that Joseph was being initiated into the presence of God and angels . . . .” (Mormon Miscellaneous, October 1975, page 11). Joseph Smith may have learned of the gold plate of Enoch and Mount Moriah from his brother, although this information was also published in an anti-Masonic book printed in 1828 (Free Masonry, by Henry Dana Ward).

In the Masonic legend concerning Enoch, the cavern which held the gold plate was covered with “a large stone.” In Joseph Smith’s story, he also claimed that the gold plates were buried “under a stone of considerable size” (Pearl of Great Price, Joseph Smith 2:54).

The Book of Mormon never mentions Enoch, but it does speak of “Zenock” (1 Nephi 19:10). In August 1832, the Church published an “Extract From The Prophecy of Enoch.” In this revelation (later printed in the Pearl of Great Price, Moses, Chapter 7) Joseph Smith claimed that Enoch saw that the world would be destroyed by the flood (verse 43). The Masonic legend also said that Enoch was told of “the universal destruction now impending.” Joseph Smith must have really identified with Enoch, for in some of his revelations he used the code name “Enoch” for himself (see Doctrine and Covenants, sections 78, 92, 96 and 104).

In our new book, Mormonism, Magic and Masonry, we will include actual photographs from the Freemason’s Monitor, which was published in 1802, and photographs of the Hyrum Smith magic material.
THE ULTIMATE CASE

The July 16, 1982 issue of Christianity Today carried an interesting article about the work of ex-Mormons who have “dedicated their lives to winning Mormons away from the faith that defines the culture of the entire state.” The following appears in that article:

Jerald and Sandra Tanner are easily the most respected (and, to the Mormon Church, the most threatening) ex-Mormons. They live in Salt Lake City, only miles away from the Mormon citadel. Sandra is the great-great-granddaughter of Brigham Young, the nineteenth-century Mormon leader second in importance only to founder Joseph Smith.

Jerald’s family heritage is also thoroughly Mormon. The Tanners met, married, and turned away from the church of their childhood in the late 1950s. Starting with a modest mimeographed effort to convince their families Mormonism was a fraud, the Tanners have written 30 books alleging flaws in Mormon history, archaeology, and Scripture. Their masterwork is the 600-page behemoth Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? which has the bulk of a metropolitan telephone book.

The Tanners not only write, but also print, bind, and distribute their books. The sheer size and unrelenting detail of the books have prevented major publishers from publishing them (Moody Press has published a condensed version of Shadow or Reality). Thus the Tanners’ work—appearing between cardboard and plastic covers—hardly looks professional or slick. But even critics within Mormonism agree the Tanners have succeeded in accomplishing what they set out to do. “We wanted to build the ultimate case against Mormonism,” said Mrs. Tanner.

It is difficult to imagine a case being nearer “ultimate.” Shadow or Reality includes 38 chapters touching on almost every facet of the Mormon faith. It explores the practice of polygamy, temple ceremonies, and Mormon prophecy. Six pages are devoted to a meticulous listing of parallels between the King James Bible and Joseph Smith’s “new revelation,” the Book of Mormon. Sources are not only quoted, but the original documents are photocopied so the Mormon reader can see discrepancies for himself. . . . Max Parkin, a Mormon historian, says the Tanners’ history is “pretty good—they have done their research.” Interpretation of history, however, is subjective, Parkin adds. He thinks the Tanner interpretation is “not nearly as reliable as their history.”

Parkin, in fact, is unafraid to share the Tanners’ work with Mormon students. “Ignorance hurts more than information,” he said. And Mormon students need not be threatened by alleged historical contradictions when they understand that Mormon theology is “progressive and developmental,” said Parkin.

The Tanners work and live in their home. Harassment, according to Mrs. Tanner, has been light. . . . Neither of the Tanners is a trained historian. They learned research by raw experience, a venture taken out of necessity. “When we first started studying Mormonism, we were dissatisfied with the quality of material on it,” Mrs. Tanner explains. Much of it was poorly researched and inaccurate. . . .

The Tanners often get suppressed documents from administrators and educators who have lost their faith in Mormonism but do not leave it because of family and business ties. . . . Some of the disenchanted Mormons feel guilt for staying in a church they do not believe in, Mrs. Tanner believes, and do their “silent missionary part” by letting the Tanners view suppressed documents (Christianity Today, July 16, 1982, pages 31, 47 and 48).

Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? is certainly one of the best tools for bringing Mormons to the knowledge of the truth. Unfortunately, some people are reluctant to show this book to their Mormon friends. One man told us that he had been dealing with a Mormon for many months, and although he had been using the material in Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? he had never actually shown him the book. We pointed out that this was a real mistake. Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? was designed to go right into the hands of the Mormon people. A good approach to use is to ask Mormons to read the book and point out any inaccuracies they might find. While some of them will refuse to even take it, there are others who will accept the challenge. In trying to find mistakes they will encounter historical problems which they never dreamed existed. Although they may become angry and make some very negative comments about the book, they will have a difficult time erasing from their minds what they have read. A person should not expect Mormons to immediately see they are wrong. In most cases this takes a great deal of time. During this period we need to show real love and patience with them.

Even though we have sold a large number of copies of the 1982 revised and enlarged edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? many of our customers are still using the 1972 edition. While the older edition is still an excellent book, a number of important discoveries have been made since 1972. There have also been some significant developments and studies which are discussed in the new edition. The 1982 edition contains about 90 pages of new material which is very important to have when dealing with Mormons. Because we feel so strongly that all of our supporters should have a copy of the new edition, we have decided to give a very special price to those who will donate their old edition to a local library, a pastor or one of their friends. We are already giving a $2 discount on copies of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? purchased before January 31, 1983, but we will give an additional discount of $2 to those who will donate their old copy to someone else. The hard bound copy regularly sells for $14.95, but it will be available for $10.95 to those who wish to take advantage of this special offer. The soft bound copy will be discounted from $11.95 to only $7.95. There will probably never be a better opportunity for our readers to get an updated copy of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality?.

SUPPORT NEEDED

In an article published in Christianity Today, Rodney Clapp says that some of our critics feel that we must be engaged in this work because we make “a great deal of money.” When he asked Sandra about this, she said that our 1981 tax return showed a net profit of $16,000 (the actual figure is $15,115). Since we had to pay $5,940 in payments on our printing press during 1981, this left only a little over $9,000. Trying to support a family on this amount of money would be very difficult in today’s economy. Fortunately, however, some of our friends gave very generous contributions to us, and we were able to make it through the year without any problem.

As we see the anti-Tanner movement growing (Robert Brown has recently formed a non-profit corporation), we realize that we only have a small company and it would be difficult to counter any major operation that might be mounted against us. At the present time, we are not set up to give tax-deductible receipts, but we certainly welcome any gifts to our work. Even more important than gifts, however, are the prayers of those who support our work. Although we are small and insignificant, through the power of prayer we can prevail against those who are conspiring to destroy our work.
On February 19, 1981, the Mormon Apostle Bruce R. McConkie wrote a letter to Eugene England which contains some remarkable statements concerning Brigham Young (the second President of the Mormon Church) and his Adam-God doctrine. In this 10-page letter Apostle McConkie frankly admitted, “Yes, President Young did teach that Adam was the father of our spirits and all the related things that the cultists ascribe to him.” Those who are acquainted with Mormon theology will recognize that this is an admission that Brigham Young taught that Adam was God the Father. Apostle McConkie’s revealing statements seem to mark the end of a cover-up which has lasted for over a hundred years.

When we began our research on Mormonism, the General Authorities of the Church emphatically denied that Brigham Young taught the Adam-God doctrine. On May 13, 1966, Hugh B. Brown, a member of the First Presidency, wrote a letter in which he claimed that Brigham Young was misquoted: “The Adam-God doctrine is not the doctrine of the Church, and the reports on that subject as published in the Journal of Discourses are not accurate.” In our book, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we demonstrated that it was ridiculous to claim that Brigham Young was misquoted in his Church’s own publications. Furthermore, we presented new evidence from the journals of early Mormon leaders which demonstrated conclusively that Brigham Young taught that Adam was God and that Jesus Christ was his son. A number of scholars did research on the subject and reached the same conclusion. In an article recently published in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, the Mormon scholar David John Buerger concluded that,

Young clearly believed that Adam was the father of the spirits of mankind in addition to being the first procurator of mankind’s physical bodies; . . . and that Adam was the spiritual and physical father of Jesus Christ. (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1982, page 45)

In the new enlarged 1982 edition of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? we observed:

As time goes on, more and more evidence that Brigham Young taught the Adam-God doctrine is coming to light. In the face of this material, an increasing number of Mormon scholars are now willing to concede that the doctrine was taught. Even Apostle Bruce R. McConkie appears to be weakening. In a letter to “Honest Truth Seekers,” Apostle McConkie declared:

Some prophets—I say it respectfully—know more and have greater inspiration than others. Thus, if Brigham Young, who was one of the greatest of the prophets, said something about Adam which is out of harmony with what is in the Book of Moses and in Section 78, it is the scripture that prevails (Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? page 178-C).

Although we felt Bruce R. McConkie was softening his position on the Adam-God doctrine, we never dreamed that he would completely cave in on the issue. We must admit, in fact, that we were astonished when we read his letter to Eugene England. Although the General Authorities of the Church had stubbornly fought against the ideas expressed in chapter 10 of Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? for many years, we suddenly found ourselves gazing on a letter written by a Mormon Apostle which verified almost everything we had written in that chapter. Apostle McConkie began his letter by stating: “This may well be the most important letter you have or will receive.” On page 4 he calls the Adam-God doctrine a false doctrine, but he admits that it is based on “plain and clear quotations” which are found in the Church’s own literature:

In that same devotional speech I said: “There are those who believe or say they believe that Adam is our father and our God, that he is the father of our spirits and our bodies, and that he is the one we worship.” I, of course, indicated the utter absurdity of this doctrine and said it was totally false.

Since then I have received violent reactions from Ogden Kraut and other cultists in which they have expounded upon the views of Brigham Young and others of the early Brethren relative to Adam. They have plain and clear quotations saying all of the things about Adam which I say are false. The quotations are in our literature and form the basis of a worship system followed by many of the cultists who have been excommunicated from the Church.

On the same page of this letter, Apostle McConkie goes on to quote from a speech he gave at Brigham Young University on June 1, 1980, in which he equates the Adam-God doctrine with the worship of idols or false gods. On pages 5 and 6, Bruce R. McConkie holds up Brigham Young as a great prophet, but then he has to concede that he taught false doctrine with regard to Adam:

... I am a great admirer of Brigham Young and a great believer in his doctrinal presentations. . . . He was a mighty prophet. . . . He completed his work and has gone on to eternal exaltation.

Nonetheless, as Joseph Smith so pointedly taught, a prophet is not always a prophet, only when he is acting as such. Prophets are men and they make mistakes. Sometimes they err in doctrine. Sometimes even wise and good men fall short in the accurate presentation of what is truth. Sometimes a prophet gives personal views which are not endorsed and approved by the Lord.

Yes, President Young did teach that Adam was the father of our spirits, and all the related things that the cultists ascribe to him. This [i.e., Brigham Young’s teaching on Adam], however, is not true. He expressed views that are out of harmony with the gospel. But, be it known, Brigham Young also taught accurately and correctly, the status and position of Adam in the eternal scheme of things. What I am saying is, that Brigham Young, contradicted Brigham Young, and the issue becomes one of which Brigham Young we will believe. The answer is we will believe the expressions that accord with the teachings in the Standard Works.

On page 7 of his letter, Apostle McConkie went so far as to say that if Mormons follow the “false portions” of Brigham Young’s doctrines, they are in danger of losing their souls:

This clearly means that people who teach false doctrines in the fundamental and basic things will lose their souls. The nature and kind of being that God is, is one of these fundamentals. I repeat: Brigham Young erred in some of his statements on the nature and kind of being that God is and as to the position of Adam in the plan of salvation, but Brigham Young also taught the truth in these fields on other occasions. And I repeat, that in his instance, he was a great prophet and has gone on to eternal reward. What he did is not a pattern for any of us. If we choose to believe and teach the false portions of his doctrines, we are making an election that will damn us.

According to Bruce R. McConkie’s reasoning, Brigham Young could teach the Adam-God doctrine and go “on to eternal reward,” but those who accept this doctrine today stand in danger of losing their souls. While Apostle McConkie refers to the Adam-God doctrine as “heresy” and says that the “devil” keeps it alive, President Brigham Young claimed that it came directly from God. Over twenty years after he first publicly proclaimed the Adam-God doctrine, Brigham Young emphasized that God Himself had revealed the doctrine to him:

How much unbelief exists in the minds of the Latter-day Saints in regard to one particular doctrine which I revealed to them, and which God revealed to me—namely that Adam is our father and God—. . . . (Deseret News Weekly, June 18, 1873)

On October 8, 1861, Brigham Young said:

Some years ago, I advanced a doctrine with regard to Adam being our father and God. . . . It is one of the most glorious revelations of the economy of heaven. . . . ("A Few Words of Doctrine," unpublished manuscript in the Brigham Young Collection, LDS Archives, as cited by David John Buerger in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1982, page 29).

The Mormon Church’s own publication, Latter-Day Saints’ Millennial Star, clearly stated that the Adam-God doctrine was the word of the Lord:

. . . Adam is our Father and God. . . . the prophet and Apostle Brigham Young has declared it. . . . it is the word of the Lord. (vol. 16, page 534)

Brigham Young was certainly not the only early Mormon leader who had a testimony to the doctrine. According to David John Buerger, Heber C. Kimball, a member of the First Presidency, claimed that,

"[T]he Lord told me that Adam was my father and that he was the God and father of all the inhabitants of this earth." (Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1982, page 27)

George Q. Cannon, who later became a member of the First Presidency, claimed that the doctrine was revealed to him. David John Buerger informs us that,

In an 1870 meeting, "Elder Geo[rge] Q. Cannon fully endorsed the doctrine that Father Adam was our God and Father. . . . Indeed, "the above doctrine had been revealed to him, so that he knew it was true." (Ibid., page 31)

Joseph Fielding Smith, who later became the sixth President of the Church, also endorsed the doctrine. Mr. Buerger points out that many Church leaders continued to believe the Adam-God doctrine after Brigham Young’s death. Even Lorenzo Snow, who became the fifth President of the Church, still maintained a belief in the doctrine a number of years after Brigham Young’s death:

Contrary to many later perceptions, Brigham Young’s death in late August 1877 did not mark the end of the Adam-God doctrine. . . . many of the Church’s leading authorities unquestionably retained a belief in Brigham’s teachings. . . . in the 1890s one also finds brief but supportive references to the doctrine by Apostles Brigham Young, Jr., Franklin D. Richards and Lorenzo Snow. Amidst discussions treated below, for example, Snow is reported as leading “out on Adam being our Father and God. How beautiful the thought it brot. God nearer to us.” To this Richards added that “it made him thrill through his whole body it was new & it was inspiring.” (Ibid., pages 33-34)

As time went on, of course, the Mormon leaders said less and less about Brigham Young’s teachings on Adam. In 1897, the Apostle Franklin D. Richards wrote a letter in which he remarked:

This, like many other points of more advanced doctrine, is too precious a pearl to be cast before swine. But when the swine get hold of them, let us rescue them by the help of the Spirit as best we can. Thinking it may be convenient to you to have President Youngs sayings on that subject, I enclose a copy from his sermon in the first Volume of the Journal of Discourses. (Letter from Apostle Franklin D. Richards to Ephraim H. Nye, dated Dec. 18, 1897, as cited in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought, Spring 1982, page 37)

If Bruce R. McConkie had lived in the days of Brigham Young, he would have found himself in hot water because of his opposition to the Adam-God doctrine. Apostle Orson Pratt, who was contemporary with Brigham Young, got into serious trouble because he made statements which are similar to those which have come from the pen of McConkie (see Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? pages 174, 175 and 178-B). Another doctrine which Brigham Young taught that Bruce R. McConkie opposes is the idea that God progresses in knowledge.

In his letter to Eugene England, Apostle McConkie wrote:

On Sunday, June 1, 1980, I spoke at one of the multi-stake firesides in the Marriott Center on the subject, “The Seven Deadly Heresies.” In that talk I said:

There are those who say that God is progressing in knowledge and is learning new truths.

This is false—utterly, totally, and completely. There is not one sliver of truth in it (page 2).

On page 5 of the same letter, McConkie cites a speech he gave in which he suggested that the idea of God progressing in knowledge “borders on blasphemy.” On pages 6 and 7, Apostle McConkie says that Brigham Young will “to account” for his teaching concerning God progressing in knowledge:

Yes, Brigham Young did say some things about God progressing in knowledge and understanding, but again, be it known, that Brigham Young taught emphatically and plainly, that God knows all things and has all power meaning in the infinite, eternal and ultimate and absolute sense of the word. Again, the issue is, which Brigham Young shall we believe and the answer is: We will take the one whose statements accord with what God has revealed in the Standard Works.

I think you can give me credit for having a knowledge of the quotations from Brigham Young relative to Adam. . . . I think you can also give me credit for knowing what Brigham Young said about God progressing. And again, that is something he will have to account for. As for me and my house, we will have the good sense to choose between the divergent teachings of the same man and come up with those that accord with what God has set forth in his eternal plan of salvation.

Apostle McConkie seems to be threatening Eugene England with some type of serious ecclesiastical action if he continues to disseminate Brigham Young’s doctrine concerning the progression of God. On page 2 he warns:

I want you to know that I am extending to you the hand of fellowship though I hold over you at the same time, the scepter of judgment.

On pages 8 and 9 of the same letter, McConkie gives this threatening admonition:

If it is true, as I am advised, that you speak on this subject of the progression of God at firesides and elsewhere, you should cease to do so. If you give other people copies of the material you sent me, with the quotations it contains, you should cease to do so. . . .

Now, I think I have said enough in this letter so that if you are receptive and pliable, you will get the message. . . . Perhaps I should tell you what one of the very astute and alert General Authorities said to me when I chanced to mention to him the subject of your letter to me. He said: “Oh dear, haven’t we rescued him enough times already.”
On pages 8 and 9 of his letter to Eugene England, McConkie makes these emphatic statements:

It is not in your province to set in order the Church or to determine what its doctrines shall be. . . . it is my province to teach to the Church what the doctrine is. It is your province to echo what I say or to remain silent. You do not have a divine commission to correct me or any of the Brethren. The Lord does not operate that way. If I lead the Church astray, that is my responsibility, but the fact still remains that I am the one appointed with all the rest involved so to do. The appointment is not given to the faculty at Brigham Young University or to any of the members of the Church. . . . those at the head of the Church have the obligation to teach that which is in harmony with the Standard Works. If they err then be silent on the point and leave the event in the hands of the Lord. . . .

I advise you to take my counsel on the matters here involved. If I err, that is my problem; but in your case if you single out some of these things and make them the center of your philosophy, and end up being wrong, you will lose your soul. . . .

Now I hope you will ponder and pray and come to a basic understanding of fundamental things and that unless and until you can on all points, you will remain silent on those where differences exist between you and the Brethren. This is the course of safety. I advise you to pursue it. If you do not, perils lie ahead.

Notice that Apostle McConkie would have members of the Church “remain silent” even if the General Authorities “lead the Church astray.” If some members of the Mormon Church who lived in Brigham Young’s day had not opposed the Adam-God doctrine, it would probably be the official doctrine of the Church today. This alone should be sufficient to show that McConkie’s reasoning is fallacious. The Bible warns against such a teaching: “Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh his arm...” (Jeremiah 17:5).

Now that Apostle McConkie has admitted that “President Young did teach” the Adam-God doctrine, Mormons should seriously consider the grave implications of the matter. This teaching is clearly a violation of the commandment, “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Exodus 20:3). In Deuteronomy, chapter 13, the Israelites were warned:

If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder,

And the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them;

Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul.

Ye shall walk after the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, and cleave unto him.

And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death; because he hath spoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the Lord thy God commanded thee to walk in. So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee (Deuteronomy 13:1-5).

In his book, _Mormon Doctrine_, page 270, Apostle McConkie says: “There is no salvation in the worship of false gods. For such false worship the Lord imposed the death penalty in ancient Israel. (Deut. 13:6-11.)” Since McConkie admits that Brigham Young taught the Adam-God doctrine and says that those who believe it today do “not deserve to be saved,” we do not see how he can still maintain that Brigham Young was “a mighty prophet.” We feel that there is only one conclusion that an unbiased person could possibly reach—i.e., Brigham Young was a false prophet who tried to lead his people into serving another God. In his booklet, _Adam Is God??_ Chris Vlachos points out that if Brigham Young, Mormon prophet from 1847 to 1877, were a false prophet all along, then the claims of those who have sought to derive their priesthood authority through him are empty and void. If Brigham taught false doctrine, that cuts the ground from under Mormonism’s claim of latter-day prophetic revelation and the Mormon Church is not divinely led.

When we first received Apostle McConkie’s letter we were only thinking of printing some quotations from it, but as we examined this remarkable document more closely, we became convinced that it should be in the hands of the public. Therefore, we have photographically printed this startling 10-page letter as Part 1 of a booklet entitled, _LDS Apostle Confesses Brigham Young Taught Adam-God Doctrine_. Some may feel that the publication of this letter will tend to stir up more trouble for Eugene England. (McConkie has already stated that he holds “the scepter of judgment” over England’s head, and this could possibly relate to the loss of his membership in the Church and/or his job as associate professor in the English Department at Brigham Young University.) We feel, however, that our publication of the letter will undoubtedly provide protection for England. Bruce R. McConkie will probably think twice about making a rash move if he knows many people are aware of the situation. This would be very bad public relations for the Church.

In Parts 2 and 3 of this new booklet we have photographs of manuscripts in the Church Archives which prove that Brigham Young taught that Adam was God and that Jesus Christ was his son. These documents, which were suppressed for a century, absolutely destroy the argument that Brigham Young was misquoted on the Adam-God doctrine. One manuscript throws a great deal of light on the dispute that Apostle Orson Pratt had with President Brigham Young over the nature of God and the Adam-God doctrine. ♦

FBI WINS SUIT

In the _Salt Lake City Messenger_ for November 1980 we told how we had learned that the FBI had material on us which dated back to at least April 30, 1970. Someone had reported that we were “allegedly communists” and had “been circulating petitions against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and that they have been ‘trouble-makers’ in that respect.” Under the Freedom of Information Act we sought access to the file or files which the FBI had concerning us. When we received the material, we found that portions were blacked out (see photograph on page 5 of the Nov. 1980 Messenger) and that eighteen full pages were “withheld entirely.” We felt that we should have access to the material that had been suppressed and filed a suit in Federal Court. (This was not a suit for damages, only a request for copies of the material.) On June 16, 1982, Judge Bruce S. Jenkins ruled in favor of the FBI. Although we lost the case with the FBI, we were able to force the CIA to come into compliance with the Freedom of Information Act. The CIA finally submitted an affidavit which said they had no records on Modern Microfilm Company. We had originally requested this information on Oct. 15, 1980, but the CIA delayed responding until Nov. 22, 1981, when they were forced to do so because of our suit. In any event, we will have to accept the decision of the court concerning the FBI documents. We could appeal, but we do not believe it would be worth the time and expense involved. We will probably never know what was contained in the eighteen missing pages or on the portions which were blacked out. ♦

MODERN MICROFILM CO.

PO BOX 1884

Salt Lake City, Utah  84110
Over twenty years ago we began publishing material relating to the Mormon Church. During this period we brought forth many important documents which were suppressed by the Mormon Church leaders. As early as 1968 Dr. Kenneth Kantzer, who later served as editor of Christianity Today, commented concerning our work:

. . . These books represent no ordinary polemic against Mormonism. This is the definitive, fully-documented, utterly devastating case against the divine authority and truthfulness of the foundational documents upon which the Mormon religion is based. Every evangelical pastor should have these books in his library . . . (Evangelical Beacon, Minneapolis, Minn., vol. 42, no. 1, October 8, 1968, page 7)

Since our work is entirely related to religion, we should have set up a non-profit corporation. Instead of this, however, we began operations as Modern Microfilm Company. We continued the work under this name until the end of 1982, when Modern Microfilm went out of business. On January 1, 1983, we began operations as a non-profit corporation—UTAH LIGHTHOUSE MINISTRY, INC.

There are a number of reasons for setting up this non-profit organization: 1. It will provide more finances which should greatly increase the effectiveness and outreach of the work. 2. It will give our supporters a chance to make tax-deductible donations. 3. It will help us to counteract the anti-Tanner movement—a growing attempt to derail our work which is being carried on to some extent by clandestine operations. 4. It will help us in our endeavor to provide support for Rescue Mission work. We have been interested in this work for many years, and at the present time our organization is able to provide 20 hours a week to this important ministry. We hope to increase this many times in the future. (Rescue Missions preach the Gospel to the unfortunate, the alcoholic and the drug addict. They are also involved with feeding, clothing and sleeping the poor.)

We have been approved by the State of Utah as a non-profit corporation and are awaiting final clearance from the Federal Government. Assuming that this is approved, all gifts given any time in 1983 will be tax-deductible. We are very optimistic that our application will be accepted. A lawyer who looked at the papers we prepared felt that there would probably be no major problem. If the Government has not made a determination within 270 days from the date we filed our application, we can ask for a “declaratory judgment.” Because our papers were filed in December 1982, we should have a ruling before the end of the year, and, as we indicated before, if we pass, any gifts given since the time we began operation will be tax-deductible. Our readers should be sure, however, that all checks are made out directly to Utah Lighthouse Ministry.

Since we are helping thousands of Mormons to come to a knowledge of the truth, we feel that our ministry is worthy of support. We hope, in fact, that many will support it on a regular monthly basis.

THE ANTI-TANNER MOVEMENT

During the time we operated as Modern Microfilm Company, we published our most important work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? This book was later condensed and published by Moody Press under the title, The Changing World of Mormonism. As sales on these two books have continued to mount to over 50,000 copies, some members of the Church have become very concerned that the Church itself has not published a rebuttal. They fear that we are going to win the battle by default.
Many people are leaving the Church, and others are beginning to wonder if the Church has any real answers to the serious charges we have printed. The Mormon leaders seem to feel that it is best to ignore our accusations. As a spokesman for the Church’s Deseret Bookstore wrote: “We do not have a specific written response to the Tanner book. Perhaps it does not deserve the dignity of a response” (Letter written January 19, 1977). In an article written in Utah Holiday, February 1978, David Merrill stated: “The official attitude of the Mormon hierarchy toward the Tanners has been one of silence and apparent unconcern. They have, however, actively discouraged LDS scholars and intellectuals from jousting with the Tanners . . .”

In 1982 Sandra Tanner appeared with Marvin Cowan on the John Ankerberg Show—a television show which is broadcast on the CBN and PTL networks as well as on other stations in different parts of the country. The series of four programs brought many complaints from Mormons throughout the United States. The Church’s public relations representative in Tennessee asked for equal time. The main public relations department in Salt Lake City, however, would not send out anyone to debate the issues—they only offered a pre-taped LDS presentation. (Ankerberg had offered to pay airfare and hotel costs for anyone they would send.) The local public relations men tried very hard to get someone to come. He contacted a professor at the Church’s Brigham Young University who agreed to come and bring another professor with him. Sandra Tanner and Wesley P. Walters consented to meet these two professors. The debate was scheduled for April 19, but the professor later called back to say that he had just remembered that he had a trip to Europe scheduled for that date. No future date was offered, and thus it appears that the great debate is off.

On September 17, 1982, Sandra and Dick Baer were interviewed by Mary Jane Pop for her television show on Channel 3 in Sacramento, California. A Mormon public relations representative and other Mormons were able to see a video tape of the show, and so much pressure was exerted that the station decided not to run the program. The television program was completely suppressed in spite of the fact that Mary Jane Pop had previously announced it on her radio program.

We understand that at one time the Church set up a committee to evaluate our research, but that President Spencer W. Kimball ordered the project discontinued. It seems, however, that there are a growing number of Mormons who feel they know more than the man they claim to accept as a “Prophet.” They believe they have the ability to answer the objections and vindicate the Church. The first scholar who attempted to write a rebuttal to our work ended up losing his faith and was excommunicated from the Church. In December 1977 another prominent Mormon scholar put out a rebuttal which was published anonymously. The whole project, however, turned into a nightmare for him when we discovered his identity. At first he strongly denied any connection with the booklet, but when more evidence was marshaled against him, he said he would “neither affirm nor deny” authorship of the pamphlet. The whole incident turned out to be very embarrassing to the Mormon Church, and the pamphlet fell into disrepute after we wrote a rebuttal entitled, Answering Dr. Clandestine: A Response to the Anonymous LDS Historian.

Robert L. and Rosemary Brown were the first to put their names to anything that could be called a rebuttal. Although they dealt mainly with Dee Jay Nelson in They Lie in Wait to Deceive, they claimed that “Jerald and Sandra Tanners . . . will be dealt with in depth in a future book; . . .” Because the Browns seem to be ungrounded in the critical issues of Mormonism and attack people rather than deal with the real issues, some Church scholars feel that they are going to cause the Church embarrassment if they continue to publish (see our answer to their book in Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith?).

According to the Arizona Republic, July 3, 1982, the Browns and others “have formed the Religious Research Association with the purpose of identifying and publicizing what they believe are false ideas, misconceptions and outright lies about the church. The association, which disavows any official connection with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, examines the credentials, statements and literature of various anti-Mormon groups and individuals with the intent of making these findings public through the media.

The same paper informs us that the Religious Research Association is a “Non-profit organization.” Robert L. Brown is “president” and Dr. Hugh Nibley (one of the best known Mormon scholars) serves on the board. While Mr. Brown is anxious to discredit “anti-Mormon groups,” he says that his organization will “not get into doctrinal debates.” We feel that this is a smoke screen to keep from facing the real issues. In Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith we pointed out that Mr. Brown would not debate the authenticity of the Book of Abraham with us, although he was willing to debate Dee Jay Nelson’s credentials. We feel that this is an attempt to side-step the real issues. In any case, it would appear that Mr. Brown is doing his best to find some type of scandalous material about his adversaries. He has even been in contact with the notorious Mormon spy Steven Mayfield. The reader will remember that Mr. Mayfield was at one time “employed by the FBI in a clerical capacity.” On October 11, 1976, he sent us a letter from California in which he assumed the alias “Stan Fields.” He claimed to be a fellow “Ex-
Mormon for Jesus.” Mr. Mayfield not only assumed an alias, but he opened up a post office box in Pleasant Hill, California (P.O. Box 23114) to carry on his deception. He later moved to Utah, and under the same alias, carried on an extensive spying operation through the mail and through personal contacts. (It is a common practice, of course, for those who are engaged in spying operations to cover their tracks by assuming an alias and renting a post office box.) In any case, Mr. “Fields,” who professed to be our Christian brother, spied on our operations for about four years and also penetrated a number of groups of Ex-Mormons For Jesus. By dishonest means he obtained the names of many Mormons who have questions about their religion. He diligently worked to obtain photographs of critics of the Mormon Church and gathered large files of information.

In his zeal to provide a good cover for himself, Mr. “Fields” went so far as to claim that his own Church was “Satan inspired” (Letter dated July 22, 1978), and even pretended to pass out material critical of the Church around Temple Square. (He claims now that he actually destroyed most of this material.) Mr. “Fields” nefarious career, however, came to a sudden end in July, 1980, when we discovered his true identity. We also found that he was employed at the Mormon Church Office Building in the Genealogical Department. When we directly confronted him in the Church Office Building with the evidence of his spying activities, he made no attempt to deny the basic charges. Although he claimed that he “was not spying for the Church,” he acknowledged he had used Church equipment to carry out his duplicity. (For a complete account of this matter see our publication Unmasking a Mormon Spy. The Story of Stan Fields.)

Although Mr. Mayfield remained out of the public eye for some time, in 1982 he attended meetings of the Mormon History Association. On May 6, 1982, Mayfield appeared on the KBBX radio program Mormon Miscellaneous and told of his contacts with Robert Brown:

> ... its been my hope to organize us in some way as kind of a counter to say ex-Mormons, ... I guess we have to go on the same policy as they go on ... that we all have to be independent ... I’ve been in contact with a couple down in the Phoenix, Arizona area called the Browns—Robert and Rosemary Brown. Well, I don’t approve of everything they do, but I have been in contact with them ... maybe someday we can be as productive as the ex-Mormons’ group ...

Mr. Mayfield went on to say that Robert Brown “contacted me after my leaving Utah in March of 1981, in fact, I think it was probably April.” When Mayfield was asked if he was still in contact with Robert Brown, he replied: “That’s what I said.”

Although Mr. Mayfield admitted that he has been secretly tape-recording some telephone conversations since “mid-April of this year (1982)” (Letter dated May 9, 1982), he insists that he has not been engaged in any illegal activities. In our book Can the Browns Save Joseph Smith, pages 20-21, we printed some evidence which shows that some of the information in the Browns’ book was obtained by the recording of telephone conversations without permission. In his radio interview, Steven Mayfield defended the Browns’ right to secretly record telephone conversations. However this may be, we cannot really blame Mr. Brown for seeking out Mr. Mayfield. Most reporters would have probably done the same thing. After all, if there is anything of bad report about critics of the Church, Mr. Mayfield is probably the man who knows about it.

A NEW SPYING OPERATION

While one would think that the exposure of Mr. Mayfield’s activities would completely discourage Mormons from entering into spying activities, recent developments prove just the opposite to be the case. In fact, in 1982 we discovered that there were a number of people using an alias who were trying to destroy our work. For instance, a spying operation involving two post office boxes was set up in Sacramento, California. Valerie Kuhn, a resident of that city, appears to be deeply involved in this operation. Valerie became very angry at us because of the number of people who have left the Mormon Church after reading our books. She was also extremely upset with Walter Martin, who has a radio program which is broadcast in Sacramento. She felt that the Church should answer our accusations and was puzzled as to why there was no official response. When the Browns made their discovery about Dee Jay Nelson’s credentials (see Salt Lake City Messenger, April 1980), Valerie was elated. We do not know when she first made contact with the Browns, but we have definite proof that she spoke with them on December 4, 1981, (Robert Brown was in Sacramento about that time for a debate with Walter Martin). In any case, the Browns confided in her and told her they were gathering a great deal of material on Walter Martin. In fact, they shared with her some of their most important information. Valerie apparently wanted to help the cause and decided to obtain information which would discredit the Tanners, Walter Martin and the three researchers who worked on the Spalding theory. Although we have
The name “Asenath Barry” also seemed very strange. The name “Asenath” comes from Genesis 41:45 and is the name of Joseph’s wife. It is also found in Walter Martin’s discussion of blacks and the priesthood (see The Maze of Mormonism, page 188). Although we know of one Mormon who had this name, it must be rather rare. In any case, since the letter came from a post office box (Box 20668) we began to suspect someone was pulling the same type of thing that Steven Mayfield did. When we looked at the zip code, we became even more suspicious; it was exactly the same as Valerie Kuhn’s zip code (95820). Valerie Kuhn’s address is given as 4719 Baker Avenue. Since Sacramento has over 60 zip codes, we found this to be an unusual coincidence.

Asenath Barry’s letter asked for a number of photocopies which would be important for someone writing a book dealing with the Spalding controversy. We did not believe that “Asenath Barry” was a real person, and therefore we decided to test the matter by sending the photocopies “RESTRICTED DELIVERY.” Under this method only the “Addressee” or an “Authorized agent” is allowed to sign for the mail. When we received the signed slip back from the Sacramento Post Office, we were startled at the dissimilarity between the signature that appeared on it and the one on the letter we had received. On the first page the reader will find a comparison of the two signatures. We called the Salt Lake City Post Office and informed them that the two signatures for “Asenath Barry” were entirely different. We were told that if the name were forged, it would be a violation of Federal mail laws and that an investigation would be made if we turned the documents over to the San Francisco Post Office. Since we were more interested in finding out the truth about the matter than getting the perpetrators of the deed into trouble, we decided not to ask for an investigation. We were able to learn, however, that the Post Office Box had been rented by “Valerie L. Kuhn.” Three names were listed to receive mail at the box: Barry, Nixon and Kuhn. A publication entitled, “Foolsgold & Quicksand” was also mentioned in connection with this box. We do not know whether this is an actual publication or part of a cover for getting the box. We also do not know whether “Nixon” is a real name or just another alias. The signature which appears on the “RESTRICTED DELIVERY” slip differs from both the signature on the “Asenath Barry” letter and the signature of Valerie Kuhn. To complicate the matter further, two of the signatures we have on letters purporting to be from Valerie Kuhn appear to have some dissimilarities. We do not know, however, whether the differences are striking enough to demand two separate writers. In any case, it is evident that the person who signed for the package addressed to “Asenath Barry” was not the same person who wrote the letter. The signature is clearly a forgery. It would appear from this that two or more people were involved in this scheme.

Our research on this matter led us to reexamine another letter we had received from Sacramento in 1982. It was written by a woman who claimed to be on our side. In this letter we find the following:

I am having a rather heated discussion with two Mormon friends of mine regarding Dee Jay Nelson. Can you help me out with some information:

According to my friends, Dee Jay Nelson has been proved to be a phony—he bought his so-called degrees from a fictitious college in Washington state. Is that true? When did you first become aware that he was a fraud? What were the exact circumstances of your discovery? Exactly when did you find all this out?

It is almost impossible to talk to a Mormon about Jesus, especially when they keep throwing questions like these at you! They love to divide and conquer, as it were. . . . They keep playing one group against another to ruin each others’ credibility!
The letter was signed, “S. Leone Todd,” and the return address was listed as “P.O. Box 2186.” In our research concerning Valerie Kuhn we learned that her middle name was also “LEONA.” While this appeared to be very suspicious, the fact that Valerie Leone Kuhn’s typewriter had the same peculiarities as S. Leone Todd’s led us to conclude that they were the same person. We later learned that Valerie Kuhn’s name was also listed to receive mail at “P.O. Box 2186.”

THE TOP SECRET TANNER PROJECT

In a letter dated August 3, 1981, “Elder Michael Griffith” wrote a promising young scholar a letter in which he stated:

____ gave me your address, so I thought I’d drop you a brief line and inquire about the possibility of you contributing to a work designed to rebut Mormonism—S or R?

As ____ may or may not have passed on to you, there is a group of “us” who feel that M—SR? has for far too long gone unanswered. Oh, there was the brief analysis of 77’, but that treatment, as well done and telling as it is, is far too incomplete. Something more is needed.

My question is simply this: Would you be interested in writing a chapter for the response to M—SR?

_____ tells me that your specialty is the Book of Abraham and that you are in the process of doing a report on the subject, i.e. you are doing a report on the Tanners distorted approach to the Book of Abraham. Please let me know if you would be interested on this long overdue project.

In the September-October 1981 issue of The Sunstone Review the following advertisement appeared:

FOR SOME time there has been concern about the impact of Sandra and Jerald Tanner’s Mormonism: Shadow or Reality (and its recent Moody Press version, The Changing World of Mormonism). No thorough, formal, direct response has been published, though a number of articles have been written dealing with specific aspects of their criticism. A project is now being organized to formulate an answer to the Tanners and to other prominent critics of Mormonism, such as Walter Martin and Wesley Walters. Anyone interested in contributing to this effort should outline his or her specialty and send the information to: The Tanner Project, P.O. Box 191, Calabasas, Cal. 91302-0191.

The reader will notice that only a number for a P.O. Box was given for “The Tanner Project.” Like the anonymous rebuttal, this move to destroy our work has been carried on with great secrecy. In fact, the “Elder” whose letter was cited above denied all connection with the project when we confronted him about the matter. The evidence seems to show that he was deeply involved. In any case, at first we could not learn from the Post Office who had rented the box, but we were told that a “pen name” was apparently being used. Shortly after the ad appeared in The Sunstone Review, we were told that a man by the name of Scott S. Smith was involved. Mr. Smith lives in Thousand Oaks, California, which seems to be within 10 miles of Calabasas where the P.O. Box was set up. Scott Smith is also involved in publishing. In fact, in the same issue of The Sunstone Review which mentions “The Tanner Project” we find the following advertisement:

ANIMALS AND THE GOSPEL. By Gerald Jones and Scott Smith. $2.00 at LDS bookstores or postpaid from Millennial Productions, 2455 Calle Roble, Thousand Oaks, Calif. 91360.

The address given for Millennial Productions is the same one that appears on Scott Smith’s stationary.

That Scott Smith has been opposed to our work is evident from a letter which is found in the Reader’s Forum of Sunstone, November/December 1980, page 3: “... the best critiques of Book of Mormon archaeology, by Frazer and the Tanners, are laughingstocks scientifically.” At any rate, sometime during 1982 we were told that Scott S. Smith was using the alias “Stephen Scott” to carry on his activities. This was very interesting to us because someone else had sent us a letter written by “Steven Scott” who was representing “The Tanner Project.” This letter spoke of our work on Book of Mormon archaeology as follows: “To a professional knowledgeable about both this field and the Book of Mormon this chapter is a laugh” (Letter dated April 9, [1982]). This, of course, reminded us of Scott S. Smith’s statement that the works of “Frazer and Tanner” on Book of Mormon archaeology “are laughingstocks scientifically.”

Later we were able to compare the signatures of “Steven Scott” and Scott S. Smith and concluded that they were written by the same person. The typewriter used by “Steven Scott” also appears to be the same as that used by Scott Smith. The only conclusion we could draw from all this was that Scott Smith was using the alias “Steven Scott.” When we told a man who had previously corresponded with Scott Smith that we believed Smith was using an alias, he decided to do some investigating on his own. He called Smith and told him of our accusation. Smith probably realized that we were gathering evidence against him and he did not try to deny the charge. In a letter reporting the conversation we find the following:
This night (Aug. 1, 1982) I personally talked to Scott Smith on the telephone about the Tanner project. . . . He says he was part of the first working group of people who started the project and opened the P.O. Box. Smith told me he did not want to say who was the main coordinator of the project, but Kirk Vestal may have been the main motivator in the beginning. Smith says he knows Vestal has a lot of the material in his files. Smith says there are about three dozen people who have access to the P.O. Box. . . . He also said Griffith had some stuff but had not heard from him for some time. Smith was clear about one thing though, he said he personally did not have very much time to devote to the project, adding that many of the others like Sorenson didn’t either and that it would be best if some young person headed the project like Vestal, Griffith, or perhaps Barber.

When asked if he used the name Steven Scott, he said: “I used the name, but so did others.” . . . He says there is a lot of switching and harrowing of names, and admits to using other peoples’ names. He says others have used his name. The reason for all this? To confuse the Tanners: He says they want to make the Tanners go off on wild goose chases trying to figure out who is who and who is doing what. Smith says the major reason for the name-switching is to keep the writers from being pestered by Anti-Mormons. I asked him if another reason could be because they feared the Mormon leaders could object, to which he replied that there was no reason to fear the leadership on this matter. (Letter dated August 1, 1982)
